PERSONAL RESPONSIBILITY AND WORK OPPORTUNITY RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1996 (PUBLIC LAW 104-193)

Volume I

Volume II

F. H.R. 1214, "Personal Responsibility Act of 1995," introduced March 13, 1995 (excerpts). This bill was developed by the three committees with primary jurisdiction (Committees on Ways and Means, Agriculture, and Economic and Educational Opportunities). In addition, the Committee on Commerce worked with Ways and Means staff to draft language for H.R. 1214 as it related to provisions within the Commerce Committee's jurisdiction including ineligibility of illegal aliens for certain public benefits, SSI cash benefits, and SSI service benefits. H.R. 1214 was considered as the base text for floor consideration of welfare reform legislation.

G. H.R. 1250, "Family Stability and Work Act of 1995," introduced March 15, 1995 (excerpts). This bill was offered as a Democratic substitute for H.R. 4/H.R. 1214. It failed to pass the House on March 23, 1995 by a vote of 96-336.

H. H.R. 1267, "Individual Responsibility Act of 1995" introduced March 21, 1995 (excerpts). This bill was offered as a Democratic substitute for H.R. 4/H.R. 1214 that maintained several key Republican welfare reform provisions while also keeping the Federal entitlement for cash benefits, school lunches and other social programs. It failed to pass the House on March 23, 1995 by a vote of 205-228.

1. H.Res. 117, Resolution providing for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4) to restore the American family, reduce illegitimacy, control welfare spending, and reduce welfare dependence as adopted March 22, 1995. The resolution provided that debate must be confined to H.R. 4 and the text of H.R. 1214.

THE RECONCILIATION BILL

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, 31 years ago this Friday, Ronald Reagan delivered a nationally televised speech that began his career in politics. The speech was called "A Time for Choosing."

Ronald Reagan made clear that the choice facing America was not one between right or left—rather it was one between up or down.

More than three decades later, this Congress now faces that same choice.

We can either go down the path of the status quo—a path that will lead America into a downward spiral of bigger government, higher deficits, more taxes, and a financially bankrupt Medicare system.

Or we can move America up to a brighter future, a future where our children and grandchildren are free from staggering deficits. A future where power flows from our States to Washington, and not the other way around. A future with a strong and secure Medicare Program.

Mr. President, I believe the choice is clear.

For this historic Republican Congress, the vote on the reconciliation bills will be a defining moment. It will be the moment when the American public will see that we are not business as usual. We are not the status quo. Rather, this Congress is one that keeps its promises to the American people.

There will be plenty of debate in the coming days, and I know the American people will be listening closely. Judging from what has been coming out of the Whit House lately, I know they will hear a lot of rhetoric, and a lot of scare tactics.

But I believe that in the end, they will see through this smokescreen, and they will see the truth.

And the truth is that the Republican budget contained in this bill is a realistic, thoughtful budget blueprint for America. The truth is that it will ratchet down the deficit by roughly $30 billion a year during the next 7 years. The truth is that it will balance the budget in the year 2002. And the truth is that it is the only real honest budget plan before the American people.

The truth also is that a balanced budget means a brighter future for our children and grandchildren. Our national debt is now so huge that a child born in 1995 will pay more than $187,000 in taxes over his or her lifetime just to pay their share of the debt. We owe our children a far better future.

A balanced budget will create lower interest rates, which means that more Americans will be able to own a house, buy a car, or go to college, or to borrow money. Lower interest rates also mean business will have more money to invest and hire workers.

The truth also is that the American people are more able to decide how to spend their hard earned money than are Government bureaucrats.

And with the $245 billion tax cut contained in this bill, millions of American families will have more money to spend. Our $500-per-child tax credit will mean that over the coming years, families will have thousands and thousands more dollars to spend on college tuition or braces for their kids.

We will include in the RECORD during the debate how such money will be coming to each State, such as my own State of Kansas. There are a lot of families with children. They are not rich. But a $500 tax credit—if you have two or three children, that is $1,500. They can spend it better on their families than any bureaucrat I know of in Washington, DC, or any Member of Congress, for that matter, on either side of the aisle.

By rewarding those who save and invest, our capital gains tax cut will also create jobs and opportunity.

There is an undeniable truth that the President has tried to ignore for months and months. And that is the fact that three of the President's own Cabinet members tell us that if no action is taken, Medicare will be completely broke by the year 2002.

This bill makes the tough decisions necessary to preserve, protect, and strengthen Medicare. And we have been aided a great deal in this effort by the Presiding Officer, the Senator from New Hamphsire, Senator GREGG.

We do it by slowing its rate of growth, and by giving seniors more options in selecting their health care.

And despite the phony talk you may hear of "cutting Medicare," the Republican plan will increase Medicare spending from $4,800 per beneficiary in 1995 to $6,700 per beneficiary in 2002.

Let me repeat: The Republican plan will increase Medicare spending from $4,800 per beneficiary in 1995 to $6,700 per beneficiary in 2002.

I know that during the next few days, some of my friends on the other side of the aisle will be painting horrible pictures. They will tell us that passage of this bill means we are turning our backs on children, on seniors, and on the disabled. They will repeat it again and again. But no matter how many times they repeat it, it does not make it true.

Mr. President, I wish all Americans could read the column by budget expert James Glassman that was printed in the October 17 edition of the Washington Post. Mr. Glassman's column—and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD following my remarks—makes clear the falsehoods contained in some of the emotional rhetoric we have been hearing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. Glassman writes that under the Republican plan, Federal spending will rise between 1995 and 2002 by $358 billion—or 24 percent. It is going to rise 24 percent over the next 7 years. Is that devastation? Is that cutting programs? No. Only in Washington would a $358 billion increase be called a cut.

The media bought onto the President's spin for the most part; they keep talking about it. Turn on NBC, and Katie Couric is talking about "big cuts, big cuts." She does not know anything about the budget. All she is picking up on is the liberal spin which the Democrats have been dishing out there with no facts, no effort to save Medicare, to balance the budget, or tax cuts; a lot of talk, but that is about all.

Mr. Glassman makes very clear that President Clinton was absolutely off the mark when he said—and I quote—"I will not let balancing the budget serve as a cover for destroying the social compact."

The truth is, as Mr. Glassman writes, if the budget becomes law, the social compact will actually be strengthened, for not only will the Government keep its commitments to the elderly and the poor, it will also meet an even more important obligation to the public—the obligation to spend no more than it takes in.

Throughout this process, on every major issue contained in this legislation, the Speaker and I have invited President Clinton to join with us in giving the American people the fundamental change they want. Instead of sitting down with us, however, the President has flown around the country making speeches, playing politics, taking polls, and avoiding the work and making policy decisions. The President apparently believes that the American people do not really want a balanced budget. He believes that the people are so dependent on the Federal Government that they will not tolerate slowing its rate of growth. He believes the American people are willing to sacrifice the future of their children and grandchildren so that the Government can continue its free spending ways, and he is wrong, and he will find out that he is wrong. And one of these days he is going to find out how to contact the majority leader in the Senate and the Speaker of the House, and when he does we are willing to sit down with the President of the United States.

But right now it is all rhetoric. It is all politics. It is all polls. It is all scaring seniors, scaring veterans, scaring children, and all a week before Halloween. Maybe by the time Halloween comes he will have everybody in a state of frenzy and we will be in that funk the President talked about. He said America is in a funk. America is not in a funk. They want fundamental change, and we are about to give them fundamental change. We would like to do it with the President's cooperation.

I am reminded of the words of Winston Churchill who said:

> We have not journeyed all the way across the centuries, across the oceans, across the mountains, across the prairies, because we are made of sugar candy.

I say to President Clinton: Mr. President, the American people are not made of sugar candy. They are far stronger and wiser than you think.

I also say that this Republican Congress is not made of sugar candy. We promised we would balance the budget, and we will. We promised we would cut taxes, and we will. We promised we would preserve and protect and strengthen Medicare, and we will. We promised we would have welfare reform, and we will. October 1995 is a time for choosing, and I invite all Senators on both sides of the aisle and all Americans, regardless of their party, regardless of their philosophy, to stand with us as we move our country up to a future of unlimited hope, freedom, and opportunity. That is what this debate is going to be all about.

There will be some policy differences, obviously—some legitimate policy differences, but there will also be a lot of politics, and we prepared for that. And I just urge my colleagues on this side of the aisle, this is the most historic moment in my memory in the Congress of the United States. And I have been here for some time. Never before have we tried to bring about such fundamental change. It is going to be up to us. We have the majority. It is our responsibility. And we need 53 Republicans standing together when the final vote comes.

So I urge my colleagues to pay attention. I know that both Senators DOMENICI and EXON will be explaining in detail all the different amendments and their opposition or support for the different amendments.

THE NO-CUT BUDGET

(By James K. Glassman)

Despite what you've read and heard, the Republican budget—now moving toward passage in its final, "reconciliation" form—does not cut total federal spending, nor does it cut tax revenues. Not by a long shot.

An illuminating way to look at this budget is to take what the government actually spent and raised over the past seven years and compare it to what Republicans propose to spend and raise over the next seven years. The results:

Spending will increase by $2.6 trillion.

Revenues will increase by $3.3 trillion.

These figures may surprise you: they run counter to what you've seen in the press, which continually uses the word "cuts" when referring to both spending and taxes. But in the misleading baseline-budgeting nomenclature of Washington, a cut is a reduction from a previously projected increase.

The real spending and revenue numbers show something quite different: that the Republican revolution is more modest than both Republicans and Democrats claim.

During the seven years from 1989 to 1995, federal spending totaled $9.5 trillion. During the next seven years, the congressional budget agreement calls for spending of $12.1 trillion.

As for revenues: During the seven years just past, the government collected $7.9 trillion in taxes. Over the next seven years, the Republican plan will raise $11.2 trillion in taxes—even taking into account the $500-per-child credit and GOP changes to capital gains that will reduce expected tax revenues by $245 billion.

If Congress did not make any changes to the budget, spending would rise by 37 percent and revenues by 44 percent, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) estimates. But under the GOP seven-year plan, spending will rise by 27 percent and tax revenues by 41 percent.

Stop and think about those numbers. They seem to represent a reasonable path toward an objective that most Americans share: a zero deficit.

In the fiscal year that ended on Sept. 30, 1995, the government ran a deficit of $161 billion. If nothing is done, CBO says the annual deficit will continue to rise in 1996 and each successive year, reaching $256 billion in 2002.

Any business or household facing such a prospect would quickly reduce its spending. But the federal government doesn't have to do that—mainly because the U.S. economy, even growing at a moderate 2.4 percent a year, is so powerful that it will generate vastly higher tax revenues.

The aggregate numbers I've just cited—1989-95 vs. 1996-2002—are probably the best way to look at budget changes. But, in case you think I'm pulling a fast one, let's look simply at two specific years: the one just past (fiscal 1995) and the one in which the congressional resolution requires a zero deficit (fiscal 2002).

In 1995, federal spending was $1.5 trillion. If current policies were to continue, spending, according to the CBO, would be $2.1 trillion in 2002. That's an increase of $600 billion, or 40 percent. Under the GOP plan, spending will rise between 1995 and 2002 by $358 billion, or 24 percent. (That's slightly ahead of inflation if prices increase 3 percent annually.)

Only in Washington would a $358 billion increase be called a "cut." In fact, Republicans who want to sound as if they're making big changes and Democrats who want to frighten the public both say that the GOP budget "cuts" total about $1 trillion. This absurd figure is derived by taking the difference between the CBO's projection and the Republicans' proposed spending for each year from 1996 to 2002, then adding all seven numbers up.

Consider Medicare. Politicians talk about $271 billion in cuts, but actually, under the GOP plan, spending in 2002 will be $86 billion higher than in 1995, an increase of more than 6 percent annually.

The real question for voters assessing the GOP budget is where the additional $358 billion in federal spending in 2002 is going. The answer is entitlements: Social Security will cost $146 billion more in 2002 than in 1995, Medicare (for the elderly) will cost $86 billion more and Medicaid (for the poor) will cost $35 billion more.

Miscellaneous entitlements (food stamps, the earned income tax credit, military retirement, etc.) will rise $63 billion. Add interest on the national debt (there's nothing we can do about that one), and the total additional spending exceeds $358 billion.

By deciding to preserve and increase these entitlements, Congress had nothing left for increasing the "discretionary" side of the budget, where outlays will total $515 billion in 2002, down from $548 billion in 1995.

Defense comprises most of discretionary spending, and it will be flat at roughly $270 billion. Transportation spending will fall from $39 billion to $32 billion; education and training will drop from $39 billion to $35 billion; foreign aid and other spending on international affairs from $21 billion to $15 billion.

Intelligent folks can differ on where to spend the government's money. Maybe defense should be cut and transportation increased.

But once the nation has decided to balance the budget, keep Social Security intact and pare back expected tax revenues slightly (and voters made those decisions last November), the choices are pretty limited.

President Clinton knows this very well, but with a devotion to the first-person singular exceeded only by Sen. Phil Gramm's, he said on Friday, "I will not let balancing the budget serve as a cover for destroying the social compact."

The truth is that, if Congress's budget becomes law, the social compact will actually be strengthened. Not only will the government keep its commitments to the elderly and the poor on health care, it will also meet an even more important obligation to the public that it abrogated 30 years ago—to spend no more than it takes in.

THE BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 1357, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1357) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 105 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1996.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that Senator DOMENICI be recognized for up to 60 minutes for debate only and Senator EXON for up to 30 minutes for debate only.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make a clarification on this, if I might, and I do not think we have a difference of opinion on this.

It is the desire of the majority to move as quickly as we can into the amendment process, and as Senator DOMENICI knows—and I suspect he has told the majority leader—we are working to try to cut these down to move this proposition along. However, since we are limited to 10 hours each, as I understand the unanimous-consent request that has just been offered by the majority leader, there would be 1 hour off of the Republican 10 hours, if we agree to this, and a half an hour on our side, which would mean that you are giving up an hour; we are giving up a half an hour of our 10. Is that right?

Mr. DOLE. We would like to have you give up more but we will settle for that.

Mr. EXON. Let us not press it at this time.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object.

Mr. DOLE. Let me just say—and I am going to depart here. I first want to say I hope we can work out some agreement so that we are not having 50 votes here before final passage when you do not have any time to debate the amendments. And I think I could speak for my colleagues on this side that we would be prepared, if there were a number of basic major amendments the Democrats wanted to offer period, we might be able to convince our colleagues not to second degree those amendments, if there were no other amendments following that. And I know that is being worked on, and we hope to reinvestigate that shortly after noon.

I now have to leave, but I would be happy to work with the Senator from Nebraska. We have in the past. Maybe we can this time around.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, we have no objection to Senator EXON's restatement of the proposition so long as it is not intended to in any way change the allocation other than this hour and this half-hour.

Mr. EXON. No, no.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are not agreeing on different allotments of time or different treatment of amendment times.

I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, would Senator EXON like to proceed with part of his time?

Mr. EXON. For clarification of all, I was advised the chairman of the Budget Committee, and Senator ROTH, the chairman of the Finance Committee, would be speaking, as I understand it, during part of the 1 hour that the Senator has reserved. As a result of that, I have alerted Senator MOYNIHAN, the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, and basically I would simply say that the opening remarks beginning on this side would be essentially 15 minutes for myself and 15 minutes for the ranking Democrat on the Finance Committee, which I think will basically take up most of the half hour. Then it is up to the Senator to allot the time on that side.

Is the chairman suggesting that he would like to have me proceed with my opening statement at this time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, I think so other than if the Senator would give me 3 minutes for a little kind of housecleaning work.

Mr. EXON. Yes. And I would ask unanimous consent that this housekeeping work not be charged to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following staff of both the majority and minority on the Budget Committee be permitted to remain on the Senate floor during consideration of S. 1357 and that the list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAJORITY STAFF

MINORITY STAFF

Amy Abraham, Annanias Blocker, Bill Dauster, Kelly Dimock, Tony Dresden, Jodi Grant, Matt Greenwald, Joan Huffer, Phil Karsting, Jim Klumpner, Daniela Mays, Sue Nelson, Jon Rosenwasser, Jerry Slominski, Barry Strumpf.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the presence and use of small electronic calculators, as we have done heretofore, be permitted in the Chamber during the consideration of this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, 1 minute off my time at this point and then I will yield. To Republican Senators, this is, as I understand it for the last few weeks, a very important couple of days. Many of you want to speak on subject matters before the Senate and some want to just speak about a balanced budget. I want to say to all the Republican Senators I am going to do my very best to accommodate you, but I would tell Senators that it is not easy to just give you a time when you want it. So I would hope that Senators would be flexible, and if we call on you, if you turn in your names, if you really want to speak and if we call on you, you be able to do it on a half-hour's notice or so because I just cannot arrange the floor in any other way.

Having said that, I yield the floor at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator in Nebraska.

Mr. DOMENICI. Before the Senator proceeds, will the Senator engage me in a little dialog about our efforts to see if we can better manage?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I believe, Senator EXON, we are going to have some time during this hour and a half, you and I, and perhaps your leader and I understand you have a small task force.

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I have asked our leader if we could use his office, so I wonder if maybe looking at the clock, if you could arrange a meeting at maybe 20 after, 25 after. You would be finished speaking. And we would have our side start going. Could we meet in the leader's office about trying to reduce the number of amendments and make some accommodation?

Mr. EXON. It sounds reasonable. Are you suggesting the timeframe of 11:20?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. I said 10 but let us say 11:20.

Mr. EXON. Agreed.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me make sure in this dialog, in this exchange that everybody understands——

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Will Senator ROTH have spoken by then?

Mr. DOMENICI. I hope so. We have sent word for him to come.

I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. Everybody knows hopefully that the Senator from New Mexico on most matters coming before the Senate that he has anything to do with tries to be fair, and I truly intend to do that. But I do want to state right up front that there are many Republican Senators, if not every one, who do not want to have the Senate go through 50 or 60 votes on single targeted issues.

I might just suggest right up front, for those who are going to do that and insist, with the Senator's leadership, that they are going to do that, they will not get a vote on their amendment. I mean, they can be assured that they will not, because we will indeed second degree those kinds of amendments. And we have as much stamina, I think—I do not know—as much stamina as the other side of the aisle.

Mr. EXON. And more votes.

Mr. DOMENICI. And more votes. The Senator got it. That is very important. We only need 50. Let us make sure that is understood on both sides.

On the other hand, we are meeting to try to see if we can accommodate a more amicable approach. And let us hope that we can. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague. I want to continue to work together. We have sharp differences on these things, but I think over the period of time for the 18 years that we have served on the committee together we have been accommodating to each other. I think that is the desire.

I will simply say that the chairman of the committee has indicated that people on that side are very much concerned about how we proceed on this. That is true on this side. Unfortunately, with the time constraints that we have, with the mammoth bill we have before us, the Senator from Nebraska is going to have to be an unpopular traffic cop, trying to direct traffic to say no, since we do not have time. But at this time I yield myself 15 minutes, and ask that I be notified if I exceed that time.

Mr. President, there was a marriage on Monday, a marriage that did not quite make the wedding notices. As my colleagues know, the Republican majority on the Budget Committee generously provided $224 to $245 billion in tax breaks for the wealthiest Americans and wedded it officially to the $270 billion in Medicare cuts. The seniors of America paid for that wedding, and they will pay and pay and pay again over the years. The Congressional Budget Office issued the marriage license. In an October 20 letter to me, CBO Director O'Neill wrote that without the drastic cuts in Medicare, the tax break for the wealthy would not have been possible.

I ask unanimous consent that her letter be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. The happy couple of tax breaks and Medicare cuts are now before the Senate in the form of the reconciliation bill. They are asking for our blessing. We should not give it. This marriage should be annulled. Had the question been asked, "Is there anyone present who objects to the joining of these two, speak now or forever hold your peace?" I would have objected.

Mr. President, it has been almost 4 months since the Senate passed the conference report on the budget resolution which begat this reconciliation bill, a bill that has now grown to grotesque proportions.

This reconciliation bill was created behind closed doors. It is the first of the illegitimate births of this union. By comparison, it makes "Rosemary's Baby" look like a dream child. They brought it out into the light of the day for the first time at midday last Friday. There were no hearings on Medicare. There were no hearings on Medicaid. There were no hearings on the cuts of the earned income tax credit. There were no hearings on the cuts in education. There were no hearings on how this budget cuts a huge swath like a tornado through rural America.

Last Friday, during the markup of this reconciliation bill, I asked if we could not hear from just four witnesses who could describe how this Republican budget would do great violence to their lives. I asked for an hour. That is just 1 minute for each $4.5 billion in Medicare cuts. But my offer was spurned.

Why the hurry, Mr. President? Why is the majority so breathless about sealing the deal on this budget? Why are they now moving in convoy fashion to pass this bill? The great pitcher, Satchel Paige, might have had the answer. He once said, "Don't look back. Something might be gaining on you." Something is gaining on the Republicans. They are hearing footsteps. They are hearing the American people gaining on them. More and more Americans are finding out what is in this monstrous bill. And they feel deceived and betrayed.

Mr. President, I will speak in a moment about the particulars of this reconciliation bill and the terrible hardships that it inflicts. But I would like to take a moment to discuss what I believe is the large picture here.

When we get into these debates about budget resolutions and budget reconciliation bills, Senators can all too easily lose sight—lose sight—of the ordinary Americans. The stage overshadows the people on it. In this same vein, my colleagues on the other side cannot see beyond the gesture of the moment. They cannot see beyond the scaffolding they have erected in this reconciliation bill. They cannot see the people that they will harm. They cannot see the Nation that they are tearing apart. This Republican budget does not speak to the American values that I know and the ones that I cherish, values that I see every day in my fellow Nebraskans. The greatest of these values are shared sacrifice, fairness, and compassion for our neighbors. That is the social fabric that runs through our great Nation. But this Republican budget is tugging at every thread to unravel it.

In spite of the inflated rhetoric, the Republican budget reached a shallow bottom in no time at all. Some have called it social Darwinism at its shabby worst. I say, where citizens are pitted against citizens, young against the old, rural Americans against urban Americans.

Last week Speaker GINGRICH feigned that he wants no class warfare. What nonsense. It is this bill that fires the first shot of class warfare. It is this bill that goes to war against the working people on behalf of the wealthy.

Mr. President, the more this budget is exposed to the sunlight, the more we are finding that this is not the right key to open a complicated problem which we all agree is necessary—balancing the budget.

I am one of the few Senators who has actually balanced budgets and used the line-item veto to do it. I did it for 8 years as Governor of Nebraska. But I say to my colleagues today, this Republican budget is not the way to do it. Tax breaks for the wealthy are writ large all over this reconciliation bill. Tax breaks for the wealthy have riveted the attention of the Republicans to the exclusion of everything else. Tax breaks for the wealthy have established primacy over time-honored commitments to provide a safety net for our fellow citizens.

Medicare became the most convenient laboratory for conducting these tax breaks. The Republican Medicare plan cuts the program three times more than necessary to keep it solvent through the year 2006, just to pay the freight for the tax breaks.

The Republican reconciliation bill doubles the premiums under part B Medicare. It doubles the deductibles under part B. It increases the Medicare eligibility age from 65 to 67, all for the tax breaks.

And on October 2, in an editorial in the New York Times, the Times states, and I quote:

> Right now, Medicare makes up less than 12 percent of the Federal budget. But Medicare cuts account for more than twice that percentage of the lower spending in the Republican approved budgets over the next 7 years. Not withstanding Mr. Gingrich's appeal, the facts clearly demonstrate that health programs for the elderly are bearing a disproportionate share of the austerity pushed by the Republicans.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full editorial that I have referenced in the New York Times be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the shocking truth is that more than 88 percent of the Republican mandatory cuts come from means-tested programs, those which serve predominantly low- and moderate-income Americans, and from Medicare, where three-quarters of the beneficiaries have annual incomes under $25,000.

A Joint Economic Committee study also concluded that the poorest fifth of Americans would shoulder fully half of the proposed program cuts, for an average loss of nearly $2,500 per family in the year 2002. There are no breaks for these folks in this Republican bag of tricks.

The Republicans trumpet that their tax breaks will benefit all Americans, especially the middle class. The truth, however, sounds a different note, and it is definitely sour.

Last week, the Joint Committee on Taxation confessed that families making up to $30,000 a year—and that is about half of all taxpayers—would actually see their taxes go up under the Republican tax plan. Yes, Mr. President, their taxes would go up. They would pay more for increased Medicare premiums and deductibles. They would pay more for new student loan fees. They would pay more for higher taxes on State and local employees. They would pay more for higher contributions for GI bill benefits.

What about the other side of the gilded reconciliation bill? The Treasury Department estimates that nearly half—nearly half—of the Senate's tax breaks would go to 12 percent of the American families making $100,000 a year or more.

The New York Times also said, and I quote:

> The Republicans are rushing through Congress the greatest attempt in modern history to reward the wealthy at the expense of the poor.

Earlier in my statement, I mentioned that the Republicans are not only pitting young against old and rich against the middle class, but our rural areas against urban industrialized centers throughout the many States of our great land.

This Republican reconciliation bill is a cruel joke, above everything else, upon rural America. More than 9 million rural Americans will pay higher out-of-pocket costs for second-class Medicare programs. The typical rural hospital could find its annual budget cut by a third, forcing many to close and causing many physicians to leave and to never return. Medicaid cuts will eliminate coverage for 2.2 million rural Americans, including 1 million children. Net farm income will decline by $9 billion over the next 7 years. And for what, Mr. President? Once again, for the almighty tax breaks for the wealthy.

The evidence clearly keeps mounting. It is compelling. It is heartwrenching. This reconciliation bill is wrong for our great Nation. For the good of our Nation, it should be defeated. At a time when we should be formulating a balanced budget that unites America and unites its people, this one only seeks to divide us.

We know that this reconciliation bill will be vetoed by the President. Those of us who reject the extremism of the day, both Republicans and Democrats, should be looking beyond this doomed reconciliation bill. We should be looking to a workable alternative, a compromise. We should be looking toward building on the structures and values of our great Nation, not tearing them down.

I have offered before, and I offer again now, to my Republican colleagues: Come, let us reason together and develop a true and workable compromise. If we can stop this Republican juggernaut and stop it now, we can get on with fashioning a reasonable formula to balance the budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used his time.

Mr. EXON. I allocate myself 2 additional minutes.

Mr. President, if we pass this bill, it will certainly receive a Presidential veto, and we will belatedly start all over again.

The American woman of letters, Lillian Hellman, once commented: "I cannot and will not cut my conscience to fit this year's fabric."

Nor will I, Mr. President. I will vote against this budget, and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

I reserve the remainder of my time, and I yield the floor.

EXHIBIT 1

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, October 20, 1995.

Hon. J. JAMES EXON,
Ranking Minority Member, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR: Pursuant to Section 205(a) of the budget resolution for fiscal year 1996 (H. Con. Res. 67), the Congressional Budget Office on October 18 provided the Chairman of the Senate Budget Committee with a projection of the budget deficits or surpluses that would result from enactment of the reconciliation legislation submitted to the Budget Committee as of that date. As stated in the letter to Chairman Domenici, CBO projected that there will be a total-budget surplus of $10 billion in 2002, using the economic and technical assumptions underlying the budget resolution, and assuming the level of discretionary spending specified in that resolution. If the estimated Medicare savings in 1996 through 2002 resulting from the legislation submitted by the Finance Committee were excluded from the calculation, CBO would project a deficit of $82 billion in 2002. Similarly, if any other savings submitted to the Budget Committee were excluded from the calculation, CBO would project a higher deficit.

CBO also stated in the letter to the Chairman that the estimated deficit reduction would likely reduce federal interest costs and increase revenues by an amount similar to the fiscal dividend that CBO discussed in its August report, The Economic and Budget Outlook: An Update. If deficit reduction in each year were lower by the amount of the estimated Medicare savings (and the associated debt service), the fiscal dividend would likely be lower than the estimated CBO published in August.

If you wish further details on this projection, we will be pleased to provide them. The staff contact is Jim Horney, who can be reached at 226-2880.

Sincerely,

JUNE E. O'NEILL.

EXHIBIT 2

CLASS CONFLICT IN WASHINGTON

How touching it was for House Speaker Newt Gingrich to appeal for brotherly love at the end of the titanic debate over Medicare last week. "We want no class warfare," he declared. "We want no conflict between generations." Even by Mr. Gingrich's standards, this was a remarkable statement. The Republicans are rushing through Congress the greatest attempt in modern history to reward the wealthy at the expense of the poor. They are also sacrificing the health needs of the elderly to pay for a tax cut for the affluent. Incredible. Mr. Gingrich was accusing the Democrats of formenting class and generational resentments by pointing this out. President Clinton can do no less than veto the Republican legislative package that is roaring toward passage in Congress.

We have long argued that Medicare, the health insurance program for elderly Americans, is in need of reform. Many Republican ideas for introducing competition into the health care system and forcing providers to deliver care more efficiently are sound. But the cuts being pushed through Congress are so big they threaten to dry up money for medical training, devastate nursing homes and drive hospitals and doctors away from taking care of Medicare patients. Right now, Medicare makes up less than 12 percent of the Federal budget. But Medicare cuts account for more than twice that percentage of the lower spending in the Republican-approved budgets over the next seven years. Notwithstanding Mr. Gingrich's appeal, the facts clearly demonstrate that health programs for the elderly are bearing a disproportionate share of the austerity pushed by the Republicans.

The charge that Democrats have been playing on American resentments has also been sounded by Bob Dole, the Senate majority leader, who recently accused Mr. Clinton of encouraging "envy and class warfare." He made it sound almost Marxist to discuss which classes gain and which lose in any legislation. True, the Democrats are playing the politics of winners and losers,but their criticisms are rooted in a certain reality.

It was the Republican-controlled Joint Taxation Committee that acknowledged last week that families making up to $30,000, about half of all taxpayers, would actually see their taxes go up under the tax package heading toward approval in the Senate. The reason is that the Republicans are insisting on scaling back the earned-income tax credit, which goes to low-income workers to keep them out of poverty. The Treasury Department estimates that nearly half the Senate's $43 billion in tax cuts, meanwhile, would go to the 12 percent of Americans in families earning $100,000 or more.

On the spending side, it takes ideological blinders to argue that Republicans are not waging their budget wars on the poor. The budget bills racing through Congress embody a gargantuan $1.1 trillion in spending cuts over the next seven years, according to the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office. Out of this sum, the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities, a liberal group, estimates that welfare, Medicaid, food stamps, housing and other programs for the poor are being cut by 37 to 47 percent. That is far more than seems fair given that only 21 percent of the Federal budget is spent on the poor.

Another way of looking at this is to see how the Republicans are approaching the two biggest health care programs in the country. Medicare is for everyone and Medicaid is for the poor. Both have been growing out of control and have to be reined in. But cost estimates of the Congressional Budget Office show that Medicare is being kept by Republican legislation at a 6.4 percent growth rate in the next several years and Medicaid is being kept as a 4 percent growth rate. There is no way to see this except as a deliberate effort to inflict greater hardship on those delivering health care to the poor.

The Republican Congressional handiwork of the last week provides a reminder of a grim truth. It is much easier to destroy something than it is to create it. Reform of many of these programs is surely in order.

But reform is certain to be undermined if it is coupled with a reactionary redistribution of government resources.

In the coming weeks and months, the House and Senate will be struggling to reconcile their differences and put them in one massive piece of legislation, possibly attaching it to a measure keeping the United States out of default. Mr. Clinton must not be rattled by the threat. If he stands firm, the Republicans will be forced to scale back their assault and confront the reality that a huge and regressive tax cut is inappropriate as a matter of social equity and fiscal common sense.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, under the unanimous-consent agreement, we have almost 1 hour on this side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-nine minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield myself 15 minutes, and then I am going to excuse myself for a half hour or so and see what we can negotiate with the Democrats in terms of a more orderly process than confronts us today.

Mr. President, to all those interested in today's debate, let me suggest the other side, including my good friend, Senator EXON, plays very loose with words like "truth" and "right." As a matter of fact, before this debate is finished, I believe most of the contentions about the poor and about the rich will be dispelled and be disposed of. I think the Joint Committee on Taxation will acknowledge before this day is out that their estimates of the tax bill were wrong and based on erroneous assumptions. I believe we will prove that this is a fair budget.

Frankly, for those who think only of 10 days and of the next election, obviously they can come up with something much easier. But we are not talking about 10 days and the next election; we are talking about 10 years, we are talking about 50 years, and we are talking about our children and grandchildren.

Anybody who does not want to do that and wants to just say to America, "Don't worry about it, seniors, don't worry about it; we have amendments that will leave everything status quo," just listen. That is how America will fall. That is how America's money will become worthless. That is how interest rates will skyrocket. That is how our standard of living, which is already in jeopardy for a lot of things, will come falling and tumbling down. Because if we do not tell the truth about the fact that we are incurring debt at such an outrageous amount, we are saying we are talking about only 10 days or 6 months, do not worry about 10 years, do not worry about the future, worry about politics.

I believe when we are finished and when the President of the United States finally agrees to a real budget, the seniors are going to say, "What was this argument all about?" Medicare will be intact. Seniors will be taken care of across the land and, yes, they may be even surprised. They may decide to join some institutions that will deliver services differently, and they may save money. As a matter of fact, they may find in the next 2 or 3 years that they get more care and better care than under the Medicare Program we have today.

Let me dispose of two items. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska says we are doing all these things to the poor people of the country. I assume he is suggesting that we are cutting food stamps, child nutrition, AFDC, and that he really means they are being cut.

I want to insert in the RECORD just one simple chart. Food stamps, AFDC, child care, child nutrition, SSI, Medicaid, and EITC. In the year 1996, we will spend $195 billion on those programs. The next year, $202 billion; the next year, $211 billion; the next year, $221 billion; the following year, $235 billion. In summary, by the year 2002, these programs, which today are at $195 billion, will be $253 billion. Now, that is not contending anything. It is merely stating the facts of this reconciliation bill, as found by the Congressional Budget Office.

How about hearings? Just one little statement about hearings. The last time the Democrats controlled this body, they did the President's bidding. I believe some of them are sorry they did because, of late, he has suggested they had been duped. He did not want all those taxes you all voted for—only $270 billion, the largest tax increase in history. He is suggesting that somebody made him do it. As an aside, I want to say to the Democrats in this institution that that is not only bunk, he actually asked for $360 billion; you reduced it to $270 billion, because he had the Btu tax in there.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Against my better judgment. We reduced it against my better judgment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator MOYNIHAN wanted to keep it higher. This is the chronology for the budget process. When they were in control, the number of hearings held by the then Democrat Budget Committee was 7; the number we held was 22. The number of witnesses who offered testimony in the Senate Budget Committee, throughout their hearings, was 10; we had 110. The number of days the Budget Committee spent in markup, they had 3; we had 4, giving them more opportunity to express themselves. The number of days spent in conference, they had 6; we had 18. We make no apologies with reference to hearings. We had plenty of hearings and the Budget Committee set the targets.

Mr. President, I want to suggest, by using just two quotes, what this issue is about. Thomas Jefferson said:

> The question of whether one generation has the right to bind another by the deficit it imposes is a question of such consequence as to place it among the fundamental principles of government. We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts and are morally bound to pay them ourselves.

That is what this debate is about. Do we want to pay our debts, or do we want our children and grandchildren to pay for the Government we want to give to people that we cannot afford?

To put it another way, a modern lawyer and thoughtful person on America's Constitution, Laurence Tribe, philosophically a liberal lawyer from Harvard, said:

> Given the centrality in our revolutionary origins of the precept that there should be no taxation without representation, it seems especially fitting in principle that we seek somehow to tie our hands so we cannot spend our children's legacy.

Now, we are bent today and tomorrow on this floor to decide what kind of legacy we are going to leave our children—a legacy of debt, of diminished standard of living, a legacy which says to them, "We want you to work perhaps 30 or 40 percent of your working lives to pay our bills," for they will have to do that. It is estimated, Mr. President, that every child born today will spend at least $100,000 in new income tax to pay just the interest on the national debt. What kind of legacy is that? Is that a legacy that should permit us to hide from reality and to say to our seniors and our young people and our veterans and our students—every American—"You do not have to worry about it, we are going to leave everything alone. Whatever you are getting from your Government, you can keep getting." The legacy for that kind of leadership is a bleak future for the greatest Nation on Earth—$4.7 trillion in debt, and rising at the rate of $420 million a day; $420 million a day, just tick it off, tick it off. We will be here for 2 days, so that is $420 million times two while we decide a Republican proposal that says we have to stop it.

Now, before you pass judgment, fellow Senators and fellow Americans, about the bill and the summaries that will be given from the other side, hear from those who put the package together and put the programs together on our side. Somewhere you can pass judgment upon whether we are being fair or unfair. I believe you will come down on the side of saying that this is fair to our children and to our children's future, and everybody has to be part of the change that will bring that into fruition a couple of nights from now.

I must say to the President of the United States that veto and veto threats, as you might want to issue them day by day, do not get you a balanced budget; nor does it get you close to eliminating a legacy for our children and grandchildren of servitude, or perhaps a partial servitude of that next generation to ours, for they will work to pay our bills. Mr. President, is that the kind of leader you want to be? Democrats on the other side, is that what you want to be? You are going to bring before us, one at a time, amendments to strike pieces of this, and each one is going to sound neat, sound worrisome. I hope every single one of them is defeated, and I hope we take this budget resolution to conference and then to the President of the United States and let us see what he does; let us see what he offers. Mr. President, we extend that to you now, and we say it is going to happen. So get ready, Mr. President. Be prepared for what you are going to do when we give you this package. Fellow Democrats, we understand you differ with us. We will try our best to be truthful and to point out where you are wrong. In many of the statements made to the American people you are wrong on the facts. We will try to get them before you.

Having said that, I assume I have used 15 minutes, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has used 11 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not want to reserve any of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. May I have 15 seconds for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am wondering when the Senator is going to explain the justification for the tax cuts. I have been on the floor listening to the justification that the Senator has given, without a single word about what the justification is in this bill for the tax cuts for the wealthiest individuals. I have not heard a discussion about the implications of that in those terms.

Mr. DOMENICI. You can rest assured that we will answer that. Many issues have been raised, and I am trying to give an overview. That will be answered a number of times.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Could it be that you delegated that joyous task to the chairman of the Finance Committee?

Mr. DOMENICI. My friend knows that each committee does their work. He is in charge of that work. I will not take a back seat to anybody on explaining the tax bill. I do not know it in detail, but I think it is a very good tax bill. When the American people understand where the tax cuts really go, they are going to find out that what we said we would do was get a balanced budget, and we did; and then the economic dividend that comes from that, we would use to give American people back some tax dollars so they could spend it themselves. We think the tax writing committee has come very close to doing that in a way that almost all of that money will go to middle-income Americans, making $110,000 and under. We will show that unequivocally, and I believe the Joint Tax Committee will be saying that, too.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] is recognized.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, point of inquiry: how much time does the Senator from Nebraska have under the unanimous-consent agreement in place now?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 14 minutes.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, upon his seeking recognition, I ask unanimous consent the Chair recognize the Senator from New York, and the remaining time under my discretion is allocated to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, one observation, please and then I yield the time that Senator BROWN desires, with the Senator from Michigan controlling our time after that.

Mr. President, I forgot to mention on the tax cuts, obviously the President thinks the taxes were raised too much last year under his proposal. One way of looking at it, we are getting set to right that wrong which the President complained about in Houston, about which he was beginning to say he should not be blamed for that tax increase.

We will accommodate and reduce some taxes so that maybe he can support us on that.

I yield to Senator BROWN.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise for just a short comment because I think it is important for the American people to keep this perspective in mind.

This package has been attacked by those opposed to it. That is the privilege and indeed the obligation of Members who find this unacceptable. No one should be fooled as to the contents of this package. This package ensures that Federal spending goes up 3 percent a year instead of 5 or 6 percent.

Now, some Members find that unacceptable, some find that cruel and inhumane. As a matter of fact, the description that was just given by the Democratic Budget Committee leader compared the package to " 'Rosemary's Baby'—a look-alike dream child."

Mr. President, indeed, there are some Americans, particularly in Congress, particularly on the spending side, who think that increasing spending only 3 percent a year is the worst thing that has ever happened in Western civilization. We will hear a lot about that in debate.

The American people ought to keep in mind what this is. This is a plan to increase spending 3 percent a year instead of 6 percent a year. The difference is our future. By controlling the increases to a moderate rate we are able to offer a future to our children and our grandchildren. We are able to focus on the deficit. Mr. President, without doing that we consume their future with debt, deficits, and economic stagnation.

Mr. President, I simply want to make one other point that I think is relevant to this debate and very important. I hope the American people who listen to this, who listen to the rhetoric that has been made about this budget plan, will understand that we are not talking about cuts in most programs. What we are talking about is slowing the rate of increase.

In the discussion of tax cuts, let me simply mention that I hope Members will be on guard, or Americans will be on guard, as they listen. I have heard the most incredible debate of the tax cuts that I have ever heard or I ever thought I would hear in my life. Pinocchio's nose would be a world-record length if he had to listen to the discussions that we have had put on.

Let me give an example. I have heard of tax credits that are not yet implemented as being called increases in taxes. That is ludicrous. I have heard welfare programs that are being controlled in the rate they spend money as being increases in taxes.

Mr. President, an increase in spending is an increase in spending. A cut in spending is a cut in spending. Frankly, the American people have the good judgment to see through this kind of rhetoric.

What we need are real valid estimates. What we need is a solid budget that gets us where we want to go.

Mr. President, there is only one budget that is considered here today that will do that. There is only one budget that has been certified by the Congressional Budget Office as meeting those targets. There is only one alternative that brings us to a real balanced budget. That is the budget before us. This is the only game in town.

Are there critics? Of course there are critics. Are there people who simply cannot live with limiting growth of Federal spending? Of course there are.

Everyone knows this country does not have a future if we do not do the kind of things that are in this budget.

The question is whether or not we will act for blue smoke and mirrors, for invalid assumptions that the President suggests, or whether we will opt for the real thing.

Mr. President, this is the real thing. It offers a future to Americans. I retain the balance of our time.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, we are awaiting the arrival of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee who will set forth the proposals of the tax cut in this measure.

I say to my friend from Colorado that it might surprise him, there are those on this side of the aisle who see the debt crisis in the same crisis terms that he does and have a feeling that we know when it arose in the 1980's, and it was not from this side of the aisle—and we want to get hold of it.

We do not think you can solve a deficit problem by cutting taxes.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I simply observe—and I greatly respect the distinguished Senator from New York, both his intellect and his integrity—from this Member's viewpoint, I believe an objective review of the programs that have risen in increased spending would indicate that the programs that are in question were not adopted during the 1980's.

I think any objective review of the question of the deficit will indicate that.

Second, I observe that there were valiant efforts made during the 1980's, a few by this Member. I am not sure I describe my efforts as valiant but they small farmers create income for one family. It is not like the economy does in an industrial job, one income for a family with $50,000 investment and somebody else is investing it, somebody else is managing it; or in a service job where the economy needs only $10,000 or $15,000.

We are also providing, in this bill, tax changes that are meaningful in ending the marriage penalty for nonitemizers. We are answering the pleas of a lot of young people everywhere who want to know why their Government is penalizing them for exchanging marriage vows.

This bill says we are not going to tax reasonable dues to farm organizations. This IRS ruling, as stupid as it is, creates a lot of problems for a lot of cooperatives and nonfarm organizations out there. Just like the President's tax increase last year—albeit in that instance it was something passed by a Democrat controlled Congress, and not some uninformed ruling by the Internal Revenue Service.

Finally, I would like to highlight that this bill also improves and expands IRA's. We are reinstating an IRA to which working people can make tax-deductible contributions. Even homemakers and even nonworking spouses will be able to make contributions for the first time ever. There will be penalty-free taxable withdrawals for qualified uses.

Everyone knows that we need to double the current savings rate of 4 percent. Young people in my State know that they will have to save for their own retirements while they are financing the retirements of baby boomers, and the IRA incentives in this bill will provide the opportunity. Expanding and strengthening the individual retirement accounts is something I supported for many years. I am glad to see those efforts bear fruit, and I compliment the new chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator ROTH, for getting that job done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 10 minutes of the Senator has expired.

Mr. GRASSLEY. I am going to yield the floor. I am not done, but I want to inform my colleagues I have spoken all I wanted to on the tax provisions. I do have something I want to say on the Medicare provisions, and I will get time on that later on.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I yield myself the balance of the opening Democratic time. I had hoped to speak in response to my good friend, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee. He is unavoidably detained. So I will go ahead as if in rebuttal.

But first to continue the exchange I was having with the Senator from Colorado, there are those on this side of the aisle who are deeply offended by the continuing deficits which have increasingly produced stalemate in our Government. This sequence began in the late 1970's, early 1980's, and there was an idea behind it—the idea was that, if you wanted to paralyze the Federal Government you simply put it into a paralyzing debt by the reduction of revenues and simultaneously increasing spending on defense and such matters. Indeed, that happened. We forecast it. We tracked it. And we are here today to say that it is the case.

Just a few years ago in a wonderful book "The Deficit and the Public Interest," Joseph White, and the late revered Aaron Wildavsky, said: "Strife over the deficit has affected procedure as well as policy, monopolizing the congressional agenda, encouraging paralyzing and deceptive legislation like Gramm-Rudman, frustrating our public officials, and stalemating the Government."

As regards deceptive legislation, Mr. President, I have to place this present proposal in that category. We are not balancing the budget. We are adding $700 billion to the debt in the next 7 years. One of the ways we are doing it is, while talking about the deficit, while talking about the debt, we are going to cut taxes. Well, no. No, Mr. President. I correct myself. I correct myself. We are going to raise taxes on half the population, and cut taxes on the other half.

Mr. President, here is a table from data produced by the Joint Committee on Taxation, which is an authoritative, intermittently nonpartisan, body which calculates the effects of tax measures taken by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance. In the course of our markup, as we say, voting out the tax bill, I requested that the Joint Committee give us the distribution of the $245 billion tax cut, and they did, including the reductions in the earned income tax credit which are tax increases, in my view. If you have to pay more tax, you have had a tax increase.

Sir, here is the data: 51 percent of American taxpayers will have a tax increase; 49 percent will have a tax decrease. How we can do this, and then talk about fiscal responsibility eludes this Senator.

Now a second table from the Treasury, showing the actual distribution of the tax cuts and tax increases across the population of taxpayers, by income. It shows a tax increase for taxpayers with incomes of $30,000 or less. I should point out that according to the analysis of the Joint Committee on Taxation, 51 percent of American taxpayers make $30,000 or less. Once we get above $30,000, then we see tax cuts for everyone.

I am embarrassed for my friends on the other side of the aisle. This is a caricature. A comic Democrat might have come along and have said, "Let me show you what a Republican tax cut looks like."

Families with incomes above $200,000 will have a tax cut of $3,416. Families with incomes under $10,000 will have a tax increase. That simply is unacceptable.

Mr. President, the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee earlier spoke about what Thomas Jefferson had to say on the subject of debt. I have not met Mr. Jefferson, but you can sense his presence in these precincts. The Senator said what Laurence Tribe has said about the accumulation of debt. I taught at the same university, and I know him well. And the legacy of debt of which the chairman spoke—we are the ones appalled by that legacy. We did not create it.

At the end of the 1970's, at the end of the administration of President Carter, the national debt was in the neighborhood of $800 billion. That was at the end of nearly two centuries in this Republic. After 15 years it is now approaching $5 trillion. That did not happen accidentally, and it did not happen as a consequence of activities on this side of the aisle.

To the contrary, 2 years ago the Democrats put together, in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, a combination of program spending cuts and "tax increases"—I do not forbear to use the term—of $500 billion. And we brought a deficit, which in that year, in fiscal 1992 was $290 billion. We started a glidepath down to where this fiscal year just concluded, the deficit will be somewhere between $160 and $170 billion. We cut the deficit in half.

In consequence of what we did, the so-called deficit premium on interest rates was reduced. The deficit premium is simply that extra charge which lenders exact when governmental deficits are running very high—because in the end the way governments typically have handled their debt was through inflation, to wipe it out, wipe out the currency, and wipe out the society frequently. But it happens. It happened enough that this premium exists. The "deficit premium" being charged on interest rates went down, and resulted in a savings to the Federal Government of about $100 billion more. So in total we achieved deficit reduction of $600 billion as a result of the 1993 legislation—passed without a single Republican vote.

What have we to show for that? First, let we say that the average length of recovery for 10 postwar business cycles has been 50 months, but the current recovery has now lasted 55 months and is still going. The annual rate of growth in real gross domestic product has been 3.3 percent, more than twice what it was in the previous 4 years. Unemployment has fallen to 5.6 percent, which is very close to full employment. The annual inflation rate has dropped to 2.5 percent.

If you correct for the CPI overstatement, you may have something very close to zero inflation. The New York Times this morning devotes a lead article in its business section to it. "Has inflation finally been whipped?" It did not just happen. It was made to happen by what we did in 1993, and we do not apologize for a thing. We would rather state we have shown the way—shown what you can do, if you have the courage to govern. There are things in this present proposal from the majority with which I would disagree. There are things with which I would not disagree in the least. I do not object in the least to the statement of the Senator from Colorado that a reduction in the rate of increase is not a cut.

However, to cut taxes is an act of unforgiven irresponsibility. I did not say "unforgivable." I said the consequences will be unforgiving at this moment in our business cycle expansion. We do not need to do this and, Mr. President, we would not be doing it save for the House of Representatives.

In our hearings on this subject, in the Finance Committee, one Republican Senator after another said no, we have to bring the budget into balance. This is no time to cut taxes.

We do not have to stimulate the economy. The economy is in its 55th month of expansion; we are practically at full employment; inflation has practically disappeared. Business investment is at the highest rate in 30 years—investment savings is at the highest rate in 30 years. This is not the time to get into an inflationary stimulus. We know enough about our economy to know that.

One Senator after another from the other side of the aisle said no, certainly not: we would never pass a $245 billion tax cut. And then we learned that—and I do not mean in any way to seem to ridicule, but it turns out that the Contract With America written in the other body required this tax cut. And so here it is today. But it is not a tax cut for all. It is a tax cut for half the population and a tax increase for the other half. That surely is something we would not wish to do in ordinary circumstances.

Has the prospect of a Presidential election brought us to this? I hope not, Mr. President. I hope we would not be doing things we are doing in the process of cutting, cutting Medicare as much as we do, cutting Medicaid as much as we do.

Mr. President, before this decade is out, we are going to have a crisis in our teaching hospitals and our medical schools because of the measures in this bill. We currently have in Medicare a provision to provide medical schools and teaching hospitals with some extra support. We currently have a provision on disproportionate share which in effect compensates those hospitals, including teaching hospitals, that treat large proportions of the uninsured. They are already in a precarious financial position, and the bill before us will exacerbate their problems. They will be in genuine jeopardy if this bill becomes law. At the greatest moment of medical science for this country's institutions, we are decimating their finances in order to give a tax cut to people with incomes over $200,000.

Sir, I believe my time has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I thank the Chair for its courtesy, and I hope I will have the attention of my friends on the other side of the aisle. It is not too late to do the right thing.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Could I inquire as to how much time is remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty minutes of the 1 hour remains.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I will take 2 minutes on our side and then I will yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Delaware. I use my 2 minutes very briefly to be responsive to some of the comments that have been made here already about the nature of the tax cut. I am sure the Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the Finance Committee, will elaborate in more detail. But I was very concerned recently when I began to see this chart appear and some of the comments related to it that suggested somehow the tax cut that is being proposed as part of this reconciliation bill would disproportionately fall on the shoulders of the less affluent and tremendously benefit the wealthiest among us which is the frequently used term that we hear.

So I said to myself, gee, that does not sound like the tax bill the Finance Committee passed. And indeed, I then began looking into the tax bill the Finance Committee passed, and according to the Joint Tax Committee calculations, in the first year of this tax bill 90 percent of the tax cuts will go to people whose earnings are below $100,000 a year. Over three-quarters or 77 percent of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making under $75,000 in the first year. Less than 1 percent of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making over $200,000 in the first year. Over four-fifths, 84 percent, of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making under $100,000 in the first 5 years; 70 percent of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making under $75,000 in the first 5 years, and so on and so on.

Indeed, charts and statistics can always yield certain kinds of inferences, but those are the actual numbers that the Joint Tax Committee produced when it evaluated this plan.

I said maybe there has to be a discrepancy here. What could it be? Let me look at the individual provisions of this tax cut and see. In order to fulfill the numbers we have been hearing, they must all be tax cuts that benefit the wealthiest people in America. So I looked and I found a $500 per child tax credit; $141 billion of the total tax cut is the child tax credit, and it is phased out for people beginning at family incomes of $110,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I would yield myself 1 additional minute.

In addition, we have an adoption credit, marriage penalty relief, student loan interest deduction, individual retirement accounts, and countless other provisions in the bill that are aimed at people in the income categories I have already referenced, primarily people making under $75,000 a year and to a large extent, approximately 85 percent of this tax cut to people making less than $100,000 a year. It is a middle-class tax cut.

That is why yesterday, in describing the reconciliation bill, the Washington Post in referencing the tax sections described it as family friendly. It is family friendly to middle-class families, to people who have felt the squeeze for so many years. That is why it is part of this legislation and why we are supporting it.

Mr. President, at this time I yield the remainder of our side's time to the Senator from Delaware, the chairman of the Finance Committee.

ORDER FOR MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business with Senators permitted to speak for up to 10 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I would like to make a further unanimous-consent request to finish my statement as in morning business for up to 10 minutes, and have my remarks appear in the RECORD as uninterrupted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. I would say, morning business will be until 1:15.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Delaware.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Andrew Eschtruth, a detailee to the Senate Finance Committee from GAO, be granted Senate floor privileges for the duration of the Senate's consideration of the budget reconciliation legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). Without objection, it is so ordered.

A MOMENTOUS TIME

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, this is certainly a momentous time. Change is the order of the day. And it is a time to renounce old and unworkable programs and philosophies and adopt those that will move America forward, those that will offer prosperity, security, opportunity, and growth to our families and to our communities.

As Henry George once said, "The sailor who raises the same sail regardless of changes in the direction of the wind will never reach his port."

In this Congress, we have not only trimmed the sails but we have set a bold new course for the future. For the first time in more than a decade, we are serious about balancing the budget, and we have a plan to do it. For the first time in 50 years, we have changed the dynamics of the welfare State, creating incentives that encourage work and strong families, incentives that balance rights with responsibilities.

At last, we have changed the questions concerning Government. No longer do we ask: "How big can we make it?" No longer do we ask: "How can we control the States? How can we concentrate more power in Washington?"

These are not the questions anymore.

Rather, the new questions are: "What is Government's proper role? How can we make it more cost-effective and efficient? And what do we need to do to create an environment of security for those who legitimately need Government assistance but an environment for economic growth and opportunity for the valiant taxpayers who provide that assistance?" And for the first time in my memory, we are returning power back to where it belongs, back to the States.

This is what we were sent here to do. It is the message we heard last November. And the job is getting done. At home we have energetic Governors with innovative plans, many with success stories. We have friends, neighbors, and constituents who want, once again, to feel like they have a powerful voice in the system. These are men and women who over the years have come to build this franchise as their Government has moved further and further away.

We are in the process of putting the power back where it belongs, in the States, where our friends, our neighbors, our constituents have a stronger voice and are more active.

As I watched this 104th Congress move forward, I have thought on many occasions that I can think of no other Congress in which I have been more honored to call myself a Member than this one. And I am grateful for my colleagues, colleagues on both sides of the aisle, who have come to agree that the old way just is not good enough, not for America, not for Americans.

In many ways there has been an immeasurable amount of cooperation in this Congress, and it should not be overlooked. In other areas I would like to see more. But I believe a part of the cooperation that is apparent, of course, is borne by the fact that we all know what needs to be done. Republican and Democrat, we all realize the challenges that must be addressed.

Even President Clinton, from time to time, has indicated his insight and understanding, saying that his record-setting tax increase was a mistake and finally agreeing with House and Senate Republicans that the budget could be balanced in 7 years.

With the reconciliation bill we bring to the floor today, we again need this cooperation, perhaps more than ever, as we turn our attention to saving and strengthening the Medicare system, toward curbing runaway spending and toward giving Americans what they most need now after a decade of tax increases: a real, workable, economy-expanding tax cut.

Frankly, Mr. President, there should be cooperation. President Clinton himself has been a most certain voice in expressing the importance of making real and lasting changes. As I said, he has admitted his tax increases were too high. He knows spending is out of control. He has proposed his own child credit, a credit of up to $800 per child. He has stated that it is possible to balance the budget in 7 years. And almost 2 years ago, he took a firm stand on Medicare, saying that—and I quote —"Today * * * Medicare [is] going up three times the rate of inflation. We propose to let it go up at two times the rate of inflation. This is not a Medicare * * * cut." End of the President's quote.

President Clinton understands what needs to be done. After all, he was the one who ran on the platform of bringing change to Washington. Now, he cannot have it both ways. We either change the old and failed ways of doing business, or we keep business as usual.

Well, Mr. President, I vote for change. I encourage my colleagues on the other side of the aisle to join us in making change possible, rather than retreating into gridlock and defending 30-year-old policies that have spent some $3 trillion to have more children living below the poverty line today than when those programs began. This is not progress.

According to economist Walter Williams, the taxpayers' money that Washington has spent on these programs to cure social ills over the last three decades could have bought the entire assets of the Fortune 500 companies and virtually all the U.S. farmland. But today the problems not only remain, they are even worse. The fact is, we cannot afford business as usual. Americans do not deserve business as usual, especially those Americans who in the last 30 years have fallen prey to the pathologies that attend poverty: dependency, crime, unwed mothers, broken families, decaying neighborhoods.

Certainly we must keep a safety net. None here argues that we should not. But we must change the system.

I believe that except for politics, President Clinton and many of his allies in Congress would be with us on most of the proposals we have included in the reconciliation package, even on our historic efforts to save and to strengthen Medicare.

Remember, it was the President's own Medicare trustee report that so vividly outlined the problems we are attacking today. According to that report:

> . . . the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund (Part A) continues to be severely out of financial balance and is projected to be exhausted in about seven years. The SMI Trust Fund (Part B), while in balance on an annual basis, shows a rate of growth of costs which is clearly unsustainable. Moreover, this fund is projected to be 75 percent or more financed by general revenues, so that given the general budget deficit problem, it is a major contributor to the larger fiscal problems of the Nation. The Medicare program is clearly unsustainable in its present form.

Mr. President, as I said, this is from the administration's own trustees.

There has been no question about the absolute need to restore the integrity of the Medicare Program, to save, to strengthen it, so that Government can meet its contract with the American people. Similarly, there has been no question concerning the need to control runaway Government spending. Government has grown accustomed to living beyond its means.

This must change, and reform efforts must be real. They must maintain the agreements Washington has made with the American people. They must see that the needy are cared for. They must keep the contract that exists between the Government and our retired constituents concerning Medicare. They must ensure the integrity of the program for a sufficient period of time to allow us to chart the distant future of that program so it can absorb the baby-boom generation.

And in doing all this, our efforts at reform must also create conditions, an environment, if you will, where our economy can expand and the harvest for coming generations can be planted. The reconciliation package we present today accomplishes just that. It keeps our promise to the American people.

Our proposal does not engender dependency on Government like the failed policies of the past. It does not perpetuate the negative incentive that feed the welfare bureaucracy and those who maintain their political power base by pandering to that bureaucracy.

Of course, our policies address the needs of citizens who cannot care for themselves, but, more importantly, they create conditions for upward mobility, conditions for economic opportunity, incentives for self-reliance. And I cannot express how important it is that we create these kinds of conditions.

At the moment our economy is not growing as strongly as it should be growing, and perhaps this is why President Clinton now believes his record-setting tax increases were a mistake. At the moment, there is little incentive for Americans to save and invest. Perhaps this is why today the average 50-year-old is so ill-prepared for retirement and why, among the industrial nations of the world, we lag behind even our competitors in our rate of personal savings. Incidentally, this, according to Federal Chairman Alan Greenspan, is one of the most pressing problems confronting our Nation economically.

At the moment, the Medicare Program stares into the abyss of bankruptcy, and this is why many of our seniors are living with fear and uncertainty. But not just our seniors: fear and uncertainty grip their children and grandchildren because they know that, left unchecked, entitlement spending is growing so fast that, along with interest on the national debt, it will consume almost all Federal revenues in the year 2010, just 15 short years from now. Left unchecked, by 2030, Federal revenues will not even cover entitlement spending alone.

Though we live in a Nation of infinite possibilities, we are, of course, a land of finite resources. At the moment, the Federal debt is approaching $4.9 trillion, deficit spending is well over $150 billion a year, and the fact is, Medicare, Medicaid, and earned income tax credit are some of the fastest growing entitlement programs on the books. Strengthening and restoring the integrity of these programs will not only benefit those who should appropriately receive them, but it will also help us balance the budget, and this, Mr. President, is what the vast majority of Americans not only want but demand.

A balanced budget is necessary for economic security. A balanced budget would increase job opportunity. Some forecast that over 6 million jobs would be created if the budget were balanced. Interest rates would be lower. They would fall by almost 2 percent, some say even higher. And Americans everywhere would enjoy a higher standard of living. There would be a reduced burden of debt on our children and our grandchildren, and people would be able to keep more of their hard-earned money rather than sending it to Washington.

To balance the budget, we must control the growth of entitlements. I am not suggesting these programs be abolished or even cut. We simply need to get them back within our budget, within our ability to pay for them. It is easy to see how they got out of control.

Simply put, these programs escape the discipline of the annual budget process. Increased entitlement spending occurs automatically, covering any individual who meets eligibility criteria. These increases are heavily influenced by the rapid rise in health care costs, the growing number of beneficiaries and real benefit expansion.

Of course, today America is aging. Our population is getting older as people are living longer. This is a good thing. It is indicative of progress. These changing demographics, however, must be accompanied by changing policies and programs. Programs that were created in 1965 when the average American lived to be 61 and when our Nation had five workers to support every one retiree must be modified to reflect current reality. Today, the average American lives more than 76 years, and there are less than four workers to support each retiree.

In 1965, when Medicare was enacted, the average American who reached retirement age could expect to collect benefits for 15 years. Today, the average 65-year-old will receive benefits for 18 years.

This is where we are now, Mr. President. Looking into the future gives us even greater reason to make the necessary changes we are proposing. The chart, which we will bring out a little later, demonstrates just how important it is that we begin now to make necessary changes in entitlement programs.

Today, there are less than 40 million Americans who qualify to receive Medicare. By the year 2010, the number will be approaching 50 million. By 2020, it will be over 60 million. While these numbers are increasing, there will be fewer workers to support each retiree, and while we have almost four workers per retiree today, we will have about two workers per retiree by the year 2030.

So, Mr. President, we must change the program. We cannot move into the future with blueprints that were designed for the past. Medicare and Medicaid have been the most significant contributors to entitlement growth in recent years. It is projected that these programs will cripple as a share of the economy within the next 35 years. Thus, they are unsustainable.

In 1994, Medicare spending was $160 billion. Over the past decade, Medicare grew by about 10 percent per year, and CBO projects similar growth over the next decade. Because of this rapid growth, the Medicare Hospital Insurance Trust Fund, part A, is projected to go bankrupt in 2002.

As the baby-boom generation retires, Medicare costs will continue to soar. The Medicare trustees project that between 1995 and 2020, Medicare will grow from 2.6 percent of the economy to 6 percent, an increase of over 200 percent. Likewise, Medicaid is out of control. This program alone is scheduled to grow at an annual rate of 10.4 percent between fiscal year 1995 and 2002, devouring both Federal and State budgets. Already, Medicaid consumes about 20 percent of State budgets, exploding from $15 billion in 1980 to a projected $180 billion in 2002.

These are serious concerns, and keeping in mind the demographics that I cited earlier, it is easy to see that without real change in policies and programs, there is no way the Federal Government will meet its obligation. There is no way that we can offer assurance to even the next generation of retirees that they will have coverage under Medicare and Medicaid.

The year 2002 is only 74 months away. However, as I have said on many occasions, I am an optimist. I am an optimist because we know what works. We know the right kinds of policy and program changes that need to be made, changes that will allow Medicare and Medicaid to meet their current obligations while at the same time saving these programs for future beneficiaries.

We know how to restore sound financial practices to the Federal Government, practices that can strengthen the economy, create an environment for employment growth and an environment where Americans are encouraged to work, save and invest. And achieving these conditions should be our primary responsibility.

Towards this end, we must see our proposal in this budget reconciliation process in its entirety, for its overall balance and how all components work together to benefit Americans at all ages and in all income groups. To single out one reform in our proposal, without looking at the others, is to do a great disservice to what this reconciliation package offers.

It is balanced, it is workable, and it is long, long overdue. It changes business as usual in Washington. It answers the clarion call from our constituents to make the kind of changes that so obviously need to be made.

I remember that an astute political adviser once warned his boss that there is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of thing. I believe, with some of the inflammatory rhetoric we have heard surrounding this important debate, there is good reason to say that this adviser knew what he was talking about.

Change is difficult, but change is more necessary now than ever before. Where some may feel they lose in one aspect while single-mindedly absorbing one component of these changes, they are sure to gain in others. What we seek to achieve here is balance, balance that improves conditions and opportunities for all. It is not the voices of individual special interest groups that govern our actions, but the collective voice of America. And we understand one fundamental truth about reform—a truth stated eloquently by Vaclav Havel:

> The more half-measures we take, and the longer they drag on, the greater the sacrifices will be, the longer they will have to be made, and the more pointless sacrifices will have to be piled on top of those that are unavoidable.

We must be resolved; we must have confidence in the balance that our program offers. I have that confidence—as do other Members who join me today in introducing this reconciliation package.

Quite simply, there are four components to our program—promises we made to the American people—promises we are now keeping:

First, we provide for a balanced budget;

Second, we strengthen and preserve Medicare and Medicaid, thus allowing these two important programs to continue to protect Americans into the future;

Third, we reform welfare; and finally, once we show that the budget is balanced;

We create an environment for economic expansion through tax cuts that offer relief to our families and encourage Americans to work, to save, and to invest.

To give a little history, the EITC was a bipartisan program, created to offset the sting of payroll taxes on working families with children. The fact is, each dollar Government taxes creates a disincentive to work, while each dollar that people keep for themselves is an incentive to work. History has proven this point. The economies of nations that have cut taxes have thrived, while those nations who have increased taxes—even to the point of taking everything the people earn—have fallen into ruin.

The EITC was to create incentives for low-income parents to work. It was that simple. But as they say about too much of a good thing becoming dangerous, such is what happened to this once-well-intended program. Over the years, the EITC has been expanded by a welfare-oriented Congress into another Federal handout. And today, some 85 percent of the EITC is a Federal outlay paid directly to individuals. No longer do individuals need to have families or children to qualify; no longer does the EITC encourage work, as it once did; no longer is the program fair and cost-effective. Much of the EITC cannot even be considered tax relief because those who receive a direct payment from the Government pay no income taxes at all. Make no mistake about it, most of the EITC is a welfare check.

Beyond this, the EITC is plagued by fraud and abuse. It sports a fraud and error rate between 24 and 40 percent, making it the most fraudulent welfare program on the books. Though the administration has worked to reduce these high rates, there is no evidence that current rates are below double digits. Many of those who commit fraud are not even legally able to work in the United States. And the fact is, since the program's inception, American taxpayers have lost $25 billion to fraud, waste, and abuse in the program. The GAO estimates that if this kind of fraud continues over the next 5 years, the EITC could waste another $37 billion. We can't afford this.

We need to get the program back to its original purpose: to help families with children offset the sting of payroll taxes. And that is exactly what we do with our proposal. We focus the program on the population for whom it was originally intended. We return it from being just another welfare program to where it belongs as a legitimate tax break for lower income working Americans with children.

Our reforms will place an important degree of control on this program. They successfully address the problems of rampant growth, fraud, and abuse. The key phrase here is "controlling growth." Remember, EITC will continue to grow. It will continue to meet the needs of those most vulnerable among us.

According to the Joint Committee on Taxation, families with children, who now receive the maximum earned income tax credit, will continue to receive a larger earned income credit in the future. When combined with the $500 child credit and marriage penalty relief—issues that I will speak about in a minute—low-income working families will be better off under our bill than they are today. Finally, we will continue to spend in excess of $20 billion on the EITC, keeping it as a significant program for the working poor.

MEDICARE

Our second major objective with the proposal we are introducing is to strengthen, preserve, and protect the Medicare system—not only for those who depend on the system today, but for those who will need Medicare tomorrow. We accomplish this by allowing the program to grow at about twice the rate of inflation, and by introducing choice in the system. In this way, seniors are guaranteed continued coverage as well as the ability to choose those plans and health care providers that best meet their needs.

In our proposal, Medicare spending increases form $178 billion in 1995 to $286 billion in 2002. Average spending per beneficiary grows from $4,800 to $7,000.

Our proposal controls runaway costs by introducing choice into the system, giving our seniors the ability to remain in the current fee-for-service plan, if that is what they want. On the other hand, we also offer them an unlimited number of health care plan options that they may choose to better meet their needs. We call this Medicare choice, and it includes, beyond the current fee-for-service plan, the opportunity for our seniors to join plans sponsored by local hospital and physician groups, health maintenance organizations, point-of-service plans, or preferred provider organizations. It also allows for seniors to join high deductible medical savings account plans, union or association plans, and, in fact, any other kind of health plan that meets the standards we set to protect the beneficiaries. Beneficiaries will be protected under our proposal. Despite the plan they choose, all seniors will receive coverage for the same services and items that are currently covered by the traditional Medicare Program. The good news is that as these new plans compete with each other for business, it's likely that they will offer even more benefits and improved services.

The private sector, which has done much better in keeping costs down than the Government, has proven that choice creates competition, and competition is good for the consumer. And the fact is, in our proposal we are offering seniors even more efficient and effective health care plan options than are available to most working Americans through their employers.

By introducing private market incentives into the Medicare Program—by giving consumers options and encouraging providers to compete for business—we could control program growth sufficiently enough to save it in the longterm. It is no surprise that the private sector has been much more successful at controlling health care costs, with innovative programs based on market principles, than the Government, which has depended largely on price controls. To survive, the Medicare system must allow patients and providers to use health resources efficiently through a choice of plans.

This is not a new idea; it is an approach that's been tested and proven.

Offering choice in Medicare is based on the highly successful Federal employees health benefit plan. Largely because of choice, this year the average FEHBP premium was reduced by 3.3 percent. Next year, the average increase will only be 0.4 percent, proving that choice brings competition and savings. In fact, choice could work so well that our current projctions—projections that keep Medicare solvent through 2020—could be understated.

Beyond using choice to strengthen the program, beneficiaries will continue to pay 31.5 percent of the premium for part B. In 1997 we will phase out the taxpayer subsidy of the affluent for part B; we will increase the deductibles from $100 to $150, and then increase it $10 every year, thereafter. Savings will also be made on the part of Medicare providers, predominantly through reductions in scheduled payment increases. Despite these restraints, providers will continue to enjoy annual growth rates of between 4 and 10 percent over the next 7 years.

Our proposal also aggressively attacks fraud and abuse in the Medicare Program. The GAO estimates that the loss to Medicare from fraud and abuse equals some 10 percent of the program's total spending, and law enforcement officials claim that the majority of Medicare fraud goes undetected. What we propose is to earmark a portion of trust fund money, starting in its first year with $200 million, to use for investigation and prosecution of health care fraud. We also offer a number of new tools to assist investigators and prosecutors in attacking this problem. The CBO has estimates that our provisions in this area will save the program more than $4 billion over 7 years.

Under our program, reforms would extend the solvency of Medicare for about 18 years. According to the CBO estimates, under our proposal, the Medicare HI trust fund balance will total $300 billion in the year 2005. The CBO states, "the HI trust fund would meet the Trustees' test of short-range financial adequacy." In other words, for the next 10 years, the HI trust fund balance, at the end of every year, will be more than enough to pay Medicare benefits for the following year.

More importantly, using the CBO's estimates through 2005, our Finance Committee staff, in consultation with the Office of the Actuary within the Department of Health and Human Services, estimates that the Medicare Hi trust fund will be solvent through about the year 2020. That's 10 years—10 years—after the baby-boom generation begins to retire, a quarter of a century from today.

Concerning Medicaid, our objective is, again, quite simple, to control the unsustainable growth rate of this program—a rate which reached as high as 30 percent in 1993. Even at its current 10.4 percent, the growth rate is too high. We bring it down to a manageable and more realistic 5 percent. We can accomplish this by moving the program back to where it belongs—back to the States. In fact, Governors have said that they can manage the program with the more moderate spending increases if the Federal Government will simply get out of their way.

Medicaid is best addressed by giving States adequate funds and the authority necessary to meet the needs of their most vulnerable citizens, without interference and excessive regulation from Washington. Governors have been asking for this authority since 1989, when Bill Clinton, then Arkansas' chief executive, signed a resolution calling for a freeze on the enactment of further Medicaid mandates. By extending States' authority, allowing Governors the opportunity to find innovative ways to provide for the unique needs of their respective States, we can keep the program at a manageable 40 percent growth rate by 2002, rather than the 100-percent increase in spending now projected by CBO.

Certainly, under this new structure, the States will have certain requirements that must be met. For example, they will be accountable for how Federal dollars are spent. States will spend 85 percent of what they are now spending on mandatory benefits for the three of the most vulnerable populations: low-income pregnant women and children, the disabled, and the elderly. There will also be protection from nursing home costs against impoverishing spouses living at home. Likewise, States will be allowed to use Medicaid funds to see that children are immunized.

We must remember that Medicaid was designed to be an equal partnership between the Federal Government and the States. However, the Federal Government in recent years has effected what can only be seen as a takeover. Toward this end, all three branches of the Federal Government have played critical roles. Congress and the courts have expanded eligibility while the bureaucracy has paralyzed the States with regulations. The time has come to release the choke hold.

Medicaid now consumes 20 percent of State budgets—20 percent. That means fewer dollars for education, for fighting crime, and rebuilding infrastructure.

Since 1990, the number of Medicaid recipients have increased by nearly one-third, as the current law has created over 70 different ways for people to become eligible for benefits. Promising more benefits for more people plus using the political system to negotiate supply and demand is a prescription for failure. The price for this now includes annual deficits of up to $200 billion and a second mortgage on the future which our children and grandchildren will be forced to pay.

Today we change these dynamics. Today business as usual is over.

The reconciliation package we offer allows us to meet the needs of low-income individuals, while at the same time controlling costs, improving the program, and working toward a balanced budget. Under our proposal, Medicaid spending continues to grow, but at a slower, more predictable rate. The money is given to the States with the flexibility to design effective and innovative programs—programs to meet the individual needs of their low-income citizens.

States can cover individuals and families with income below 250 percent of the Federal poverty level—that's $31,475 for a family of three.

What we get away from are the thousands of pages of Federal mandates that stifle creativity and our States' ability to develop programs that are both efficient and effective. Under our proposal, we repeal all mandates. We allow States to standards and provider payment rates. And we no longer require Federal waivers to implement many of the innovative delivery systems that have proven to be so successful in the private sector. In fact, we encourage States to combine programs and experiment. However, as a safeguard, we ask States to develop a State plan and to submit annual reports and independent evaluations as well as provisions for fighting fraud and abuse.

As under current law, the Federal Government will match State funding, up to an aggregate cap. Under this proposal, total Federal Medicaid spending will continue to increase over the period 1996-2002. In this period, the Federal Government will provide $776 billion to the States to meet the needs of poor children, the elderly, and people who are disabled. This is the equivalent of half of the total of today's Federal budget.

Between 1995 and 2002, total Federal spending on Medicaid will still grow by over 40 percent.

Mr. President, the States will make these reforms work. Federal funding will continue to increase while we provide the States with control over how these funds will be spent. After 30 years of Federal control, it is time to put the State in charge. Capping Federal spending will allow the States to enforce fiscal discipline. They will clearly know that the deep pockets of the Federal Government are not bottomless.

With firm control over these funds, we will unleash the creativity of the States in meeting the needs of the low-income citizens. The States will be able to expand managed care without asking permission of the Washington bureaucracy. Coupled with the welfare reform package just passed, the States will be able to experiment with ways to move families off welfare and into work. The States will be able to design health insurance coverage so that the loss of Medicaid will no longer be a barrier to leaving welfare.

The States will plan, design, and implement Medicaid reform which will meet their own unique needs in ways Washington has not even started to think about. Taxpayers and beneficiaries alike will benefit from Medicaid reform and from achieving a balanced budget.

TAX REFORM

These are important reforms. Without them, the Medicare trust fund will become insolvent within a few years, and Medicaid will eat away at our children's future, forcing Federal and State governments to borrow money for generations yet unborn. According to University of California economist Alan Auerbach, if current spending trends and benefit formulas continue, "the tax burden would be very close to absorbing all the lifetime income of future workers."

To escape from this, we must prepare to move quickly and successfully beyond our first objective of passing the budget resolution to embrace what should be our second, adopting initiatives that create an environment for economic growth. The only way to break out of deficit spending, without cutting off essential services and forfeiting on the contracts the Federal Government has made with our senior citizens, is to renew healthy economic growth—growth which is above the 2.3- or 2.5-percent range currently projected by official forecasting agencies.

This environment will be created only as Government adopts real tax reform—reform that shifts the bias against savings and investment in the current Tax Code to a system that encourages saving and investment over consumption. Among the means to tap into the consumption base are: The flat tax, a national sales tax, or an expanded IRA.

While some have emphasized the differences between these three plans, they are grounded in the same economic concept of taxation, and I am pleased to see their growing acceptance among Americans. Ultimately some kind of compromise, possibly including elements from all of them, should be possible.

The current income tax system has not only undermined economic growth, it has also undermined the economic position of American families. We must act to provide tax relief for families that are already facing intense pressures on other fronts. It is my desire to provide tax relief in the context of the current reconciliation package, but I also believe we must not overlook the opportunity to provide the additional tax relief in future tax reform, financed by continued restraint in Federal spending growth.

The tax relief offered in this reconciliation package is very much in the realm of current possibilities. We offer a $245 billion tax cut which goes into effect only when the CBO has certified that deficit reduction is being achieved. Despite what some may say for political reasons, this tax relief does not come at the expense of Medicare. As the generally more liberal Washington Post admitted, "The Democrats have fabricated the Medicare-tax cut connection because it is useful politically." In an earlier editorial, the Post opined that,

The Democrats are engaged in demagoguery, big time. And it's wrong. . . . [The Republicans] have a plan. Enough is known about it to say it's credible: it's gutsy and in some respects inventive—and it addresses a genuine problem that is only going to get worse. What Democrats have [on the other hand] is a lot of expostulation, TV ads and scare talk.

That is the end of the quote from the Washington Post.

Under the bill we propose today, using Medicare savings for tax cuts is illegal. The law requires that money saved on the Medicare Program will stay in the Medicare Program. These are trust funds, the assets of which may not be used for any other purpose. And to say otherwise, as the Post points out, is little more than politically motivated scare tactics.

The fact is, our efforts preserve and strengthen the Medicare trust fund. This is a promise made and a promise kept. Likewise our efforts bring the Federal budget into balance and provide substantial tax relief for middle-income Americans. Again, promises made and kept. I can only guess that these scare tactics are being used by some because for so long these individuals have gotten by politically by making promises without keeping them. Well, you cannot have it both ways. You are either working for the kinds of changes the American people want, or you are locked into business as usual. You are either working for reform, or you are an agent of big Government, runaway spending, and political gridlock.

Let this reconciliation package show Americans who stands where on these important issues.

Our plan offers a $500-a-child tax credit, encourages savings and investment, and offers other incentives for economic growth. Our proposal to cut taxes by $245 billion, offers relief for our middle class—with over 70 percent of the $245 billion going to families making less than $75,000 a year. These provisions mean more security for our families, more jobs for Americans, and greater stability in our communities.

Of the $245 billion Senate relief package, a full $223 billion will go to families. The remaining $22 billion will strengthen businesses and lead to increased employment opportunity. It will also improve America's ability to compete in the global community, with other nations that provide their businesses with strong incentives to compete with us.

The four pillars of our proposal are: First, a $500 child tax credit; second, restoration and strengthening of individual retirement accounts; third, relief from overbearing estate taxes on families and businesses; and, fourth, reduction of the top rate of capital gains on individuals and corporations.

These measures meet our promise to the American people. They represent a bold beginning in our effort to break with the failed policies of the past. The current tax system double-taxes savings, thwarts investment, hinders productivity, increases prices, stifles wages, and hurts exports. It is complex, controlled by special interest groups, and places disincentives on work.

We move to correct these deficiencies, and because we have cut spending, our bill balances the budget while making room for tax relief. Americans need relief. Our economy needs a shot in the arm. Even Bill Clinton has admitted as much. I call on him to join us in our efforts to unleash the potential our economy has to move us into a bold and exciting future.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Delaware has expired.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from New York yield? I have about three more pages. May I finish?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Of course. Could we then extend morning business until 1:30?

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—if we can have the morning business time, whatever morning business there was, divided equally between the two sides, whatever amount of time, since we are off the bill. If we could have whatever amount of time to be divided equally, then I would not object. If we are not going to have that allocation of time, then I feel compelled to object.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, may I make the suggestion that morning business be continued to 1:30 and that the time be equally divided?

Mr. KENNEDY. Reserving the right to object, that does not include the last 10 minutes—just from the time we go to morning business, divided equally.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I have to object momentarily for the leader. We want to find out if Senator DOLE wants this time extended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period of morning business be extended until 1:30 and that the time be equally divided. I believe it is the desire of the majority that the speakers alternate, if that is convenient.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Reserving the right to object, may I finish?

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Hearing no objection, without objection it is so ordered.

The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, as I was stating, that is what this reconciliation package is all about—the future.

As Lincoln said, "The struggle of today is not altogether for today—it is for a vast future, also"—a future that I believe will be very bright if we succeed in our endeavors here today.

Our objective is to strengthen the American Dream—in our homes, in our schools, in our communities, in our States, and all across the land. Some have said that the dream is dead, that our children cannot expect to lead a better life than that led by their parents. I strongly disagree. However, I do believe that in order to meet the domestic challenges before us—as we look to put our house in order here at home—as we seek to maintain influence and leadership abroad, that we must reinvent America to reflect the profound changes that are taking place throughout the world as well as here in the United States.

We must build on principles that are tried and proven and good. We know what works. We know what's failed. And we cannot march boldly into the future with blueprints prepared for the past. This reinventing of America must be thorough, it must create a nation that is compassionate, responsible, and economically viable from the houses in our neighborhoods to the Houses of Congress. It must encourage self-reliance, risk-taking, and the confidence that diligent labor will be rewarded with security and even greater opportunity for reward.

These are the principles that built America, and they are the principles that will see us into a bright and expansive new millennium.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. I wish to congratulate the chairman of the Finance Committee on a very thoughtful and deeply felt exposition of his views. They are not entirely shared on this side, but they are, nonetheless, admired for the grace in which he has presented them.

REPUBLICAN BUDGET PLAN

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, earlier in the day, this morning, I was Third, this reconciliation bill includes medical savings accounts, an idea that I was the first to introduce in the Senate. These accounts will give families independence and choice on health care, the opposite of the President's approach. It delivers security without bureaucracy, providing families the resources to care for their own needs.

The centerpiece of this reconciliation bill is a balanced budget. In the future, this will be recalled as our contribution to history. If we ignore our budget crisis, the child born this year will pay $187,000 over his lifetime just for interest on the national debt.

The argument for a balanced budget comes down to something simple: It is one of our highest moral traditions for parents to sacrifice for the sake of their children. It is the depth of selfishness to call on children to sacrifice for the sake of their parents.

If we continue on our current path, we will violate a trust between generations and earn the contempt of the future.

There is no doubt we must balance the budget, but in passing this bill, we will accomplish even more, because this bill displays a passion for limited Government, yet it also displays compassion for American families. It finally returns responsibility to the Federal budget, yet it also helps return abused and abandoned children to adoptive families.

It will improve the long-term health of our economy, and yet it will also deliver short-term help to families and to children, relief that will be felt next year and every year beyond.

These are not sideshows or distractions. This plan includes real relief that will be felt and appreciated by the American people, and that relief is specifically directed toward families with children. This is actual, meaningful compassion, not the synthetic, failed compassion of Government programs.

Mr. President, we have come to the beginning of the end of deficit spending in America. We have come to this place because there is no alternative. The work before us is difficult. But it is nothing more than most Americans expect.

We have come to a time that is unique—an authentic moment of decision. It is a moment to act worthy of our words, and to keep faith with the future.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAIRCLOTH). The Senator from Minnesota.

NO COMPASSION

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I want to talk about an amendment we are going to have coming up on Medicare. Just for the record, let me briefly respond to the Senator from Indiana. In all due respect, I do not see this compassion. I see $35 billion of cuts in nutrition programs.

I had an amendment on the floor of the Senate that asked my colleagues to go on record saying that if, as a result of this reconciliation bill with its cuts disproportionately targeted on vulnerable children in America, there was more hunger and there was a situation where more children went without medical coverage, that we would revisit this question next year and take corrective action, and I could not get that sense-of-the-Senate amendment adopted. I do not see too much compassion in that vote, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I hope we start this debate soon on the Medicare. I want to start out by responding to my friend from Iowa. I just quote my friend from Illinois, Senator SIMON. He has said it once, twice, 10 times, that to say we are serious about deficit reduction and then to have $245 billion of tax giveaways is like saying to somebody we are going to put you on a strict diet but first we are going to give you dessert. It is a huge contradiction. I do not find people in cafes in Minnesota saying to me: Senator WELLSTONE, we are serious about deficit reduction, but would you first give us more tax breaks? That is not what I hear from people. They know it is a huge contradiction and that you being cannot dance at two weddings at the same time. It makes no sense.

Second point. Mr President, $89 billion is the figure for the trust fund. Instead, we have $270 billion. People in Minnesota know how to add and subtract. What we have going on here on the floor of the U.S. Senate today is no less than an effort to make Medicare the piggy bank for tax cuts, or tax giveaways. That is bad enough. What makes it worse is it is tax giveaways in inverse relationship to those people who least need the tax breaks. Mr. President, that is simply unconscionable.

The third point. This is a rush to recklessness. I was surprised to hear my colleague from Iowa talking about the benefits of this for rural Iowa or rural Minnesota. I say to my colleague from Iowa, understand that in your proposal you have reimbursement to hospitals, rural hospitals, 2.5 percent less than rate of medical inflation. I tell you right now that our hospitals and clinics in rural America, in greater Minnesota, do not have the large profit margin; that is point one. Point two, they have a disproportionate amount of their patient mix—60 percent, 70 percent.

What I am saying to people watching this debate is that, in rural America, many of the people that come to our hospitals and clinics are elderly. Medicare is hugely important for them. That makes up a large share of the payments that go to these hospitals. They do not have the profit margin. They have a large percentage of the population that are elderly, who depend upon adequate Medicare reimbursement, and you have in your formula 25.5 percent less than the rate of inflation. In rural Minnesota and in North Dakota and in Kentucky and in rural Iowa, the rural heartland all across this country, the issue, Mr. President, is not just whether we can afford a doctor, it is whether we can find a doctor.

This is a rush to recklessness. This is a fast track to foolishness. Ask your providers, ask your nurses, ask your physician assistants, ask your doctors, ask your elderly, ask their children, ask their grandchildren. What you are about to do is very reckless with the lives of people.

Mr. President, I will tell you something. I just get more than a little bit angry when I see this stereotype and hear this stereotype about the elderly. You would think that the elderly are a bunch of "greedy geezers" that are traveling all over the country playing golf at the swankest golf courses there are. Mr. President, in my State of Minnesota, 70,000 seniors live below the Federal poverty line. In my State, of the 635,000 Medicare recipients, half of them have annual incomes under $20,000 a year. Mr. President, in my State of Minnesota, of the 635,000 Medicare beneficiaries, they are paying, on the average, over $2,000 out-of-pocket. Right now, for many seniors, catastrophic health care costs are a nightmare. They are terrified of prescription drug costs.

Mr. President, what we have here is an effort to make Medicare the piggy bank for tax cuts—rather tax giveaways, which flow in the main to the highest income citizens of the United States of America. There is no standard of fairness behind this proposal. People will see through it.

The second thing that is so unfortunate, so unconscionable, so unthinking about this proposal, will be its impact on the people of this country. Mr. President, $89 billion is not $270 billion. Please do not tell senior citizens their premiums will not go up, their copays will not go up, and in no way, shape, or form do you have to worry, and your hospitals, clinics, and providers will all get adequate reimbursement, and eligibility will not change, and we will just take $270 billion out of this health care sector.

Mr. President, senior citizens do not believe it, they should not believe it, they will not believe it. That is why this amendment that will be laid down by my colleague, the Senator from West Virginia, deserves the full support of every Senator in this Chamber.

I yield the floor.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time for morning business has expired.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, the pending business is what?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. S. 1357 is the pending business.

Mr. DOLE. It is my understanding that the ranking member, Senator EXON, is now prepared to offer the Medicare amendment. We have not yet reached an overall agreement. So I cannot say it will not be second-degreed, or whatever. At least we can start on that amendment. I guess it is a motion to recommit. I did not see the leader on the floor. I think we can start on that. That would give us some time to start talking back and forth.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time has been consumed thus far?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader has used 1 hour 15 minutes, and the minority leader has used 30 minutes.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, it would be our intention to devote an hour on this particular amendment.

Mr. DOLE. On each side?

Mr. DASCHLE. An hour on this side, and whatever amount of time the majority would care to use.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that we have an hour on each side on the motion to recommit.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Nebraska is recognized.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in view of the agreement just reached, we are prepared to offer the Medicare amendment. I hope that the chair will recognize the Senator from West Virginia for whatever time he might need. I remind him that we have an hour each, which can be divided between the managers of this particular amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, we will later debate what the Senator from Minnesota had to say. I have these figures, which show that about $477 million per year would go into Minnesota to help families with children. I assume those families with children would be happy to have tax relief.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from West Virginia.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I move to commit Senate bill 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days, not to include any day the Senate is not in session, making changes in legislation within that committee's jurisdiction to eliminate any reductions in Medicare beyond the $89 billion necessary to maintain trust fund solvency through the year 2006, and to reduce revenue reductions for upper-income taxpayers by the amount necessary to ensure deficit neutrality.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Was the Senator asking unanimous consent?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. No. The Senator was laying down a motion, and the Senator wishes to speak on that motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The text of the motion to commit is as follows:

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. President, I move to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days not to include any day the Senate is not in session making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to eliminate any reductions in Medicare beyond the $89,000,000,000 necessary to maintain trust fund solvency through the year 2006 and to reduce revenue reductions for upper-income taxpayers by the amount necessary to ensure deficit neutrality.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. In about 2 hours, I guess, every U.S. Senator will be asked to vote on the future of a program that makes the difference between security and insecurity, peace of mind and terror, health and illness, and sometimes, obviously, life or death for 30 million older Americans—including 330,000 seniors from my own State of West Virginia.

We offer this amendment, Democrats, to give Senators one more chance to preserve Medicare, and stop the destruction of one of America's proudest, most enduring achievements.

We make a very straightforward proposition with our amendment to save Medicare.

This amendment calls for sending the Medicare part of this package back to the Senate Finance Committee, and says Medicare should not be cut beyond the $89 billion needed to keep the trust fund solvent for another 10 years. That means we want to restore the $181 billion of unnecessary, dangerous Medicare cuts back to the trust fund, back to the health care system that seniors depend on every single day of their lives.

This amendment is a final opportunity, quite frankly, for our colleagues on the other side of the aisle to defend the Medicare trust fund from a mind boggling raid that will cut health care benefits, increase seniors' costs, and threaten the very existence of hospitals—a raid that is designed purely and simply to pay for tax breaks tilted in favor of the most affluent, comfortable households in this land.

The reconciliation bill on the floor cuts Medicare by $270 billion over 7 years. We all know that now.

We have all been told that this will save Medicare, keep it solvent, and, indeed, make the program stronger. Wrong, wrong, and wrong. The professional experts in charge of keeping the books for Medicare say exactly $89 billion is needed to keep Medicare solvent for the same number of years.

Hospitals, doctors, nurses, and other health care providers in every one of our States believe with absolute certainty that cuts of this size will disintegrate the kind of health care coverage that 30 million American senior citizens have counted on for over three decades.

When the average income of senior citizens is, in fact, $17,750 on a national basis, and closer to $10,700 in my own State, and when they pay 21 percent of their income for health expenses as it is now—that is, unless they are over 84, in which case the figure rises to 34 percent—no wonder they are incredulous, no wonder they are petrified to hear their Medicare is being used to pay for tax breaks, tax giveaways to far, far wealthier Americans and every imaginable kind of corporation.

I have no way that I can think of to explain to the 330,000 Medicare beneficiaries in my State why their Medicare deductibles will double, their premiums will skyrocket, and West Virginia hospitals are threatened with the possibility of losing $25 million in 1996 and more than $681 million over the next 7 years.

I keep saying I wish this were some kind of a dream. I keep expecting to wake up and find something different. I wish this were some kind of a dream. But the threat is real. It is written into the pages of the bill before the Senate unless we send it back.

I can only report what I read in the budget package. Mr. President, $270 billion will be cut out of Medicare. That is fact. Mr. President, $225 billion will be given away in tax breaks and giveaways. That is fact. Then there is the $187 billion sliced out of Medicaid, subject to another amendment leaving it in tatters as it is chopped into a block grants which States are not ready, in fact, to handle, with virtually none of the guarantees left for Americans hurting the most.

The response on the other side will be that we are exaggerating, that we are trying to scare seniors, that we do not understand.

Mr. President, this budget is a scary budget. It is a very scary budget. I am the very first to admit that I fear for my State. I fear for 330,000 older West Virginians. I fear for the health care system in America. I do not say that as a Democrat or as a Republican. I say that as a citizen of the State of West Virginia. I am afraid of the consequences of what it is likely we are going to do here, and hence this amendment.

When the very people who are trustees of Medicare say only $89 billion is needed to keep the trust fund solvent for 10 years, it is frightening to see a budget that sucks $270 billion out of the lifeline for older Americans. That is what older Americans are now coming to truly believe on their own, not because of what we say but because of what they are beginning to find out on their own. Their fear is genuine and justified.

Today, we offer one last chance to Senators to protect Medicare and older Americans. Vote for this amendment to ensure the solvency of Medicare for another 10 years. There is plenty of time for a bipartisan, thoughtful effort to plan Medicare's future for the 50 years beyond that period of time. Vote for this amendment to protect Medicare from highway robbery, from being used to pay for tax breaks, to take money from seniors with an average income of $17,500 and hand it over to Americans with incomes from $75,000 all the way up to millions. Vote for the right way to balance the budget and for a balance in the Nation's priorities.

We offer this amendment to remind every Senator that he and she can respond to the seniors, the families, and the health care providers of America who are scared by rejecting the part of this budget that casts a dangerous, deep, and dark shadow over Medicare—that is, unless this amendment is passed.

Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if this Republican bill becomes law, it will devastate senior citizens, working families, and children in every community in America. It is a transparent scheme to take from the needy to give to the greedy. It makes a mockery of the family values the Republican majority pretend to represent.

The Republican assault on Medicare is a frontal attack on the Nation's elderly. Medicare is part of Social Security. It is a contract between the Government and the people that says, "Pay into the trust fund during your working years, and we will guarantee good health care in your retirement years."

It is wrong for the Republicans to break that contract. It is wrong for Republicans to propose deep cuts in Medicare in excess of anything needed to protect the trust fund. It is doubly wrong for the Republicans to propose those deep cuts in Medicare in order to pay for tax breaks for the wealthy.

The cuts in Medicare are too harsh and too extreme. Mr. President, $280 billion over the next 7 years—premiums will double, deductibles will double, the age of eligibility will be raised to 67, and senior citizens will be squeezed hard to give up their own doctors and HMO's.

The fundamental unfairness of this proposal is plain. Senior citizens' median income is only $17,750. Mr. President, 40 percent have incomes of less than $10,000. Because of gaps in Medicare, senior citizens already pay too much for the health care they need. Yet the additional premiums alone under the Republican plan will add $2,400 to the health care of the average elderly over the next 7 years.

The Medicare trust fund trustees have stated clearly $89 billion is all that is needed to protect the trust fund for a decade—not $280 billion. The Democratic alternative provides that amount. It will not raise premiums an additional dime. It will not raise deductibles a dime. It will give senior citizens real choices, not force them to give up their own doctor.

The Republican Medicare plan also deserves to be rejected because of the lavish giveaways to special interest groups in the House and Senate proposals. Insurance companies got what they wanted—the opportunity to get their hands on Medicare and obtain billions of dollars in profits. The American Medical Association got what it wanted—lower reduction in doctors' fees and little on malpractice awards. The list goes on and on.

Clinical labs no longer have to meet Federal standards to guarantee the accuracy of tests. Federal standards to prevent the abuse of patients in nursing homes will be eliminated. Pharmaceutical firms will be given the right to charge higher prices for their drugs.

Because of this unjust Republican plan, millions of elderly Americans will be forced to go without the health care they need. Millions more will have to choose between food on the table, adequate heat in the winter, paying the rent, or paying for medical care.

Senior citizens have earned their Medicare benefits. They paid for them and they deserve them. The Republican attacks on Medicare will make life harder, sicker, and shorter for millions of elderly Americans who built this country and made it great. They deserve better from Congress. Our Democratic alternative protects senior citizens and preserves Medicare, and that is just what the Rockefeller proposal offers.

I see my colleague and friend from North Dakota here. I will be interested if he would tell us what his understanding of the implications of this program would be to those in rural America.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we have been told by some that the $270 billion reduction to Medicare is not a cut, that Medicare spending will still increase under this budget reconciliation bill. That is true. But, Mr. President, 200,000 new Americans every month become eligible for Medicare. More Americans are becoming eligible for Medicare and health care costs are increasing.

We have determined what it will cost for the Medicare Program over the next 7 years based on these facts. The plan is to cut $270 billion from that projection, so of course it is a cut. This plan will end up offering senior citizens this kind of Faustian bargain: We will offer you a deal in which you get less health care and you pay more for it.

In our country, we have talked about labels recently. When you go to the grocery store, there is a label on the food. Pick up a can of peas or a box of pasta, and the label says what is in it—how much sodium, how much fat. You have to be honest and truthful about labels on a can of peas in a grocery store. No such requirement exists here in the Congress. You can label it whatever you want to label it and do it with impunity.

This proposal is labeled "A Proposal To Save Medicare." The very people who opposed Medicare when it was created 30 years ago—97 percent of the present majority party voted against Medicare because they said they did not believe in it—are now telling us they are the ones who are going to save it.

If these folks were physicians in an emergency room and you came in with an ingrown toenail, they would cut off your leg and then boast about how your toe does not hurt anymore.

The fact is, you do not have to cut $270 billion to save Medicare. We should make an adjustment in Medicare but it need only be about a $89 billion adjustment. That is what the experts tell us is needed to extend the hospital insurance trust fund. So what is this debate all about? It is about getting money from the Medicare Program, with substantial cuts, in order to provide tax relief to some other folks. That is about pols and pals—politicians and their pals.

Who gets the tax cut? Well, first of all, let's consider who gets the tax increase? The Joint Tax Committee says 50 percent of the people in this country are going to pay higher taxes as a result of reconciliation bill. Here's a multiple choice question—which people will pay higher taxes, those with incomes in the lowest 50 percent or those in the highest 50 percent? Guess what, the majority party has said to us that the lowest 50 percent of the income earners should pay higher taxes, but the top 1 percent shall pay substantially lower taxes.

Where does all that money come from, to provide for the tax break to the upper income folks? Out of the $270 billion cut in the Medicare Program.

As I have said repeatedly, this is all about choices and priorities. If one thinks Medicare has not been worthwhile in freeing senior citizens from the fear of getting sick and not having the money to attend to their health care needs, then just decide there should be no Medicare Program. I respect that. I do not agree, but I respect that.

But this is about choices. Those of us who believe there ought to be a Medicare Program that senior citizens can rely on —and we are the ones who started Medicare, still believe in it and believe it should be there in the future—we say, send this legislation back, recommit it, and bring it back to the Senate floor with an adjustment in the tax cut and use that money to reduce the cuts to Medicare.

I had an amendment on the floor of the Senate 2 days ago that was very simple. It said, let us at least limit the tax cut to those whose incomes are at or below $250,000 a year. Just limit the tax cut for at least those who make less than a quarter of a million dollars a year, and use the $50 billion in savings from that over 7 years to reduce the hit on Medicare—to reduce the hit on senior citizens.

Do you know what? We could not get that passed. It was a party-line vote. Every single Member of the majority party voted against that simple amendment.

This debate is about choices and priorities. Our choices are to save Medicare for the long term. Our choice is not to provide tax cuts to the richest Americans and send the bill for those tax cuts to some of the most vulnerable Americans.

By far the majority of the senior citizens in North Dakota live on less than $15,000 a year in income. To say to those folks that we are going to take from your Medicare Program so we can offer tax cuts to the richest Americans makes no sense at all. Those are priorities that are not in keeping with what the American people would like us to do.

We need to balance the budget. We need to agree on a sensible way to do that. But we do not need to dismantle programs that work. We do not need to injure the Medicare Program and place a higher burden on senior citizens in order to provide a tax cut to the richest Americans. That is a terrible choice and I hope Members of both sides of the aisle will vote for this amendment offered by Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator KENNEDY, and others.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire or the Senator from Michigan—a number of questions have been raised on this side. We have been listening for months now to the attack on an $89 billion cut as opposed to a $270 billion cut.

I raised the question, what has happened to the $181 billion? Is this really going to a tax cut? What about the doubling of the deductible in the premiums? Things of this sort.

I ask if any on the other side care to explain why they would vote against my amendment, if, in fact, they are going to? I would just be interested if they have anything they choose to say?

Mr. GREGG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from——

Mr. GREGG. If the Senator will yield on his time, I will be happy to respond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from West Virginia yield?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I will not yield. Because I would like to hear the response from the majority party as to some of the reasons for their certainty as to the need for the $270 billion cut which is causing so much consternation throughout the land.

Mr. GREGG. If the Senator from West Virginia is going to propound a question to myself and the Senator from Michigan——

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator does not have to answer.

Mr. GREGG. I will be happy to respond to the question in the context of his timeframe. It seems rather unusual in speeches to be propounding questions and not wish to seek response.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator——

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. No; the Senator is not going to engage in this kind of game. It is clear the majority does not want to answer some of these basic questions. So at this point I will call on the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, while we are waiting I would like to be added as an additional cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. There are Democratic Members on their way down here to speak. They have not gotten down here to speak, and I hope they recognize they will have to get here very quickly. But I will yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, one of the things that most concerns me about all of this is the concept of senior citizens being able to keep their own physician. And one of the things that most scares me, that puts genuine fear in the heart not just of this Senator but of the seniors that I represent, is the fear they are going to lose their right to choose their own doctor.

I say this with a special feeling because, over the last couple of years, when we were debating health care, that was one of the things that was absolutely going to be able to happen. People are going to be able to have their own doctor. But there is this enormous movement in the private sector to move people into health maintenance organizations to cut costs down.

I read this, this morning, in the newspaper, that Washington General Hospital, now DC General, which is kind of the last resort for the people of Washington DC, is thinking, now, of closing down, merging with Howard University. That is happening now in the private sector. I hesitate to even imagine what happens if you take tens of millions of dollars away from them, or institutions like them, over the next number of years.

How many essential services in our city—I know in the city of Chicago, I know either seven or eight emergency rooms of hospitals have closed down under the current free-market system. And the exacerbation of all that, under these drastic Medicare cuts, is something which I think is truly terrifying.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. What is the Senator's understanding of the effect of this particular provision in the Republican budget bill and the impact on the people of West Virginia, in terms of the seniors there, their incomes, and what the Senator thinks would be the impact?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I will answer the Senator from Massachusetts that for the average senior in West Virginia, their income would be about $10,700 a year, and 21 percent of that they already spend on health care. There is little left on the margin just to survive. If this happens, the deductible will double, and the premiums will go up. All kinds of costs will increase, and services I believe, particularly in the rural areas, will decrease.

I think that, No. 1, they are going to feel like they have been abandoned. Whether or not they will be is yet to be fully determined. But they are going to believe they are going to be abandoned. Hospitals in rural areas are going to close down. They already are closing. That will pick up.

So in a State which is 97 percent mountain and 3 percent flat, as the Senator knows, they are going to feel cut off from health care, and in many cases they will be cut off from health care because they will have no acute care beds that will be available to them because of hospitals that are closing down.

So expenses will go up. Their fear will skyrocket. Their hospitals will begin to close down. Doctors are going to become much more reluctant to go into the rural areas of West Virginia because of the cuts in the graduate medical education. You are going to find the kinds of doctors who have traditionally gone into rural areas to service seniors are not going to be trained because they are no longer going to be funded by the Republican cuts under Medicare because of the cuts in graduate medical education.

So I do not know any way that they win. I can think of no way that they win, and I can think of 10 ways they lose.

Mr. KENNEDY. Just finally, if part B goes up, that is directly deducted from your Social Security check. Do you anticipate that part B premiums will go up, and, therefore, the Social Security checks will be affected for those in West Virginia as well?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. It is not necessary to anticipate it. It is a fact. They will go up. They will double.

Mr. KENNEDY. What is the impact on the Social Security check?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is just more money out of pocket. Of course, the ironic thing there is that 40 percent of what it is that the majority party is cutting out of Medicare—$100 billion—cannot even be used to help the trust fund, cannot even be used because it is from part B.

I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for yielding. He makes an excellent point to the Senator from Massachusetts.

This comes right out of the Social Security checks. That is where it is coming from. It is not coming from some other place when an elderly person gets that Social Security check. The amount that they pay in that monthly premium is going to double under what the Republicans have before us.

Mr. President, Halloween is just around the corner. It is trick-or-treat time. This is a trick-or-treat bill. The trick is on American seniors, and the treats are the $245 billion tax cuts for the wealthiest in this country. That is what it is. They are saying we are trying to scare our seniors. It is not a scare. It is an actual assault on the seniors of this country so that we can treat the wealthiest.

What is this debate really about? Mr. President, here is what the debate is about right here on this poster. This is what the debate is about. Make no mistake about it. Notice the date on these words. October 24, 1995. That was yesterday. Last night in a speech to the American Conservative Union here in Washington, here is what the majority leader of the Senate said:

"* * * I was there fighting the fight—voting against Medicare—one of 12—because we knew it wouldn't work in 1965.

There you have it. The majority leader is saying he is proud of the fact that he voted against Medicare in 1965 because he says, "We knew it wouldn't work." It will not work? Prior to 1965, only 46 percent of our elderly had health care. Today, 99 percent of our seniors have health care coverage. Tell me it has not worked. I want the majority leader to come out here on the Senate floor and tell the American public that Medicare has been a failure, that it has not worked, that he was right in 1965 when he voted against it. I wish he would tell me. I wish he would tell me. I wish he would tell me about my own family.

When my father was on Social Security and an ex-coal miner, we had no income. All he had was a Social Security check. We lived in a small town of 150 people. He had black lung disease. He was in his seventies. He had no health care. We had no money. We had no life savings. We had a little house and a half acre of property.

Every winter he would get sick and they would have to take him in to Mercy Hospital in Des Moines, and, thank God, the Sisters of Mercy would take care of him, and they would send him home. It happened like clockwork every year. That was the only health care he had when he was sick as a dog and they would have to rush him to the hospital. But before he died, Medicare came into existence in 1965. And the last 2 years of his life was by far the best years he had in his later years because then he could get health care. He got it when he needed it, not later on when he was so sick. But he got it up front, and he got it with his head held high and not coming in the back door to get charity.

I often think that if my father had had Medicare during the 1950's and in the early 1960's, he would have lived longer and he would have been a lot healthier.

So the majority leader better not try to tell this Senator that Medicare was a mistake and that it has not worked. I have seen too many in my own family. I have seen too many elderly people in Iowa who, before 1965, did not have health care living in those small towns and communities. Their lives were made better and healthier, and their children's lives were made better because Medicare came in and provided health care for the elderly.

I delight in talking to young people about Medicare. They think it is just for the elderly. I do this a lot of times with college students. I always ask them. I say, "How many of you have grandparents that are on Medicare?" Most of them raise their hands. I say, "After you get out of school and you start earning money, for every $100 that you earn, how much of that money is going to go into the Medicare trust fund to pay for Medicare? Out of every $100 you earn, how much goes in so that your grandparents get Medicare?" I tell you, you should hear the answers I get: $20 out of $100, $10 out of $100, and all kinds of wild guesses. When I tell them it is $1.45, for every $100 they earn, they spend $1.45 so their grandparents do not have to live with them, so their grandparents get quality, affordable health care, they are amazed.

I asked them, "Do you think it is worth it? Is it worth $1.45 out of $100 to put into the Medicare trust fund?" When you put it that way, they think it is a darned good deal.

So, yes. We have some problems with the Medicare trust fund, long term, short term, and we can address those. The other side is always talking about the trustees; how the trustees said it is broke and we have to fix it. There is nothing in the trustees' report that says we have to take $270 billion out of Medicare. That is what the Republicans want to do to—give a $245 billion tax break for the wealthiest in our country.

What our amendment does is send the bill back to Finance, and come back with an $89 billion cut in Medicare to make it secure but to keep it and to save it for our elderly. Let us not have this trick-or-treat bill that the Republicans have brought out here to trick our elderly and to take away their hard-earned savings and put it in a $245 billion tax break for the wealthiest in our country. That is what this battle is about. Make no mistake about it.

I yield back my time. I thank the Senator for yielding me that time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, what is the time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 28½ minutes remaining, and the Senator from Michigan has 60 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Does the Senator from Michigan wish to allocate time to anyone?

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time I yield myself such time as I may need, and I will be very brief. Then I will yield to other Members—the Senator from New Hampshire, who has been in the chair.

We have obviously been hearing a number of claims, accusations, and allegations both about the motives of the Republicans as well as the substance of the legislation before us. I know that other speakers will get into more detail in responding, but I will just point out a few things.

The comments with respect to the condition of the part A trust fund are not just whimsical comments, they are inaccurate comments, and they are very important comments to America's seniors. They should know today that starting in 1996, for the first year the part A trust fund will begin to run a deficit. We are no longer talking about problems that are somewhere out in the future that we cannot visualize. We are talking about concrete problems that are going to be before us in the very immediate sense soon.

Just last year we heard from the entitlement commission, a bipartisan group of Members of Congress who reported to us that at the rate of growth in entitlement spending in this country in just 15 to 20 years, entitlement spending and interest on the Federal debt alone would exceed all Federal tax collections combined. These are not problems that can be fixed by the old process of finding a few extra dollars and throwing them into the Medicare trust fund. These are problems that can only be fixed through substantive changes of the sort which we are offering here.

The Medicare Program is like a ship that is badly damaged. It is leaking water. There are two ways you can deal with the problem. You can pour more water over the side and try to bail your way out, but that will not solve the problem in a long-term sense. The alternative is to repair the damage. That is what we are trying to do because we do not want to just guarantee that Medicare will be safe for an additional 1 year or 2 years. We want to change the program to make it stronger, to protect it, to preserve it well into the future. We want to give seniors the right to choose a program that is best for them, and we want to make sure that we do that in a way that is not just cover us for the next election but, rather, in a way that truly protects seniors in the long-term sense.

And so at this time, I will yield the floor and grant whatever time he may need to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. GREGG. I thank the Chair.

I associate myself with the comments of the Senator from Michigan. I wish to respond to some of the points made here by members of the other side who, I am sure, have done so with sincerity but who have been inaccurate to say the least.

Initially, let me state that the purpose of the Medicare reform which has been put into this bill is to significantly strengthen the program which has cared for our seniors well but which was designed in the 1960's and which is not functioning well as we move into the year 2000. It is like a 1960 automobile trying to drive on a turnpike in 1995. The fact is that the muffler has fallen off, the pistons are not working very well, the chassis is out of line, and it needs to be fixed.

In fact, it needs to be significantly strengthened, and that is what we have proposed. The basic thrust of the Republican plan is to give seniors essentially the same options which Members of Congress have.

Now, why is that so outrageous? We are saying to seniors, "You shall have choice. You shall have the ability to go into the marketplace, if you wish, and choose other options than what you are presently supplied under Medicare." We are not saying they have to do that. In fact, we are making it very clear, under the Senate plan, if a senior decides to stay with fee for service, which is what most seniors have today, which is where they go out and choose their doctor individually, they can continue in that framework, they can continue to do that. That is their decision.

What we are saying, however, is if they should choose, they will have other choices. If they should choose, as like many people, their sons and daughters, who are in the workplace, to go with some group of doctors who practice together in what is known as a PPO, they will have that option. If they choose, as many of their sons and daughters do today who are in the workplace, to go with an HMO, where you have an affiliation of doctors and hospitals and delivery systems, they will have that option.

There are a variety of other options which we cannot even anticipate because the marketplace has not created them yet that we will make available to our seniors.

And in giving our seniors those choices, what else do we do? We also say we are going to give you some economic benefit from being a thoughtful purchaser of your health care. Under the Senate plan, if a senior chooses a plan which delivers the same or better care than they are presently getting from their fee-for-service plan but happens to cost less, we are going to allow the senior to keep that savings. We are going to create an incentive amongst seniors to look at other options. We are not going to say they have to look at them. We are not going to say they even have to take them. We are simply going to say you have that option.

So what is so dastardly about giving seniors the same option which Members of Congress have? I do not understand it myself. But the other side is outraged for some reason. I think their outrage functions more from politics than from substance.

Let us talk a little bit about substance, about some of the points that have been made by the other side. First, they say there is a $270 billion cut. That is an interesting concept. Only in Washington would a program where you are going to increase spending by $346 billion over the next 7 years be deemed a cut in spending.

This is the chart, ladies and gentlemen. Medicare spending goes up $349 billion—I was off by $3 billion; I apologize— $349 billion over the next 7 years. That is a cut in spending? It still remains, under that spending increase, the fastest growing, most significant expenditure in the Federal budget. In fact, if you compare the rate of growth of Medicare spending over the next 7 years to the rate of Medicare spending over the last 7 years, you would have to conclude that over the last 7 years we "savaged it," under the Democrat terms, because in the last 7 years it grew to $923 billion spent on Medicare, but over the next 7 years we are going to spend $1.6 trillion on Medicare.

So clearly there is no cut here in spending on Medicare. In fact, per beneficiary, spending on each beneficiary will go up by approximately $2,000 between this year and what would be spent on that beneficiary in the year 2002.

We heard this equally rather interesting argument: Well, there are going to be more people in the system; therefore, more should be spent. Actually, demographically, there will not be a significant increase in seniors going into the system until we hit the year 2007. So that is not an accurate statement on its face.

We heard the statement of essentially, well, but really, to meet the obligations of Medicare we have to spend $8,700, or something like that, per senior in the year 2002. What does that presume? It presumes a rate of growth of Medicare which would be 10 percent per year for the next 7 years—10 percent per year. If that is what my colleagues on the other side of the aisle want for Medicare, they have just signed on to a prescription which the Medicare trustees have said will lead to bankruptcy, because it is that 10 percent rate of growth that the Medicare trustees, three of whom happen to be members of this administration, stated was totally unsustainable—totally unsustainable—and that if it is allowed to continue at that rate, if Medicare is allowed to continue to grow at an annual rate of 10 percent, the trust fund becomes bankrupt.

They gave us a rather definitive chart which reflects that, and that is this chart here. It is a plane crash, ladies and gentlemen. A 10-percent rate of growth leads to insolvency in the trust fund in the year 2002. So when my colleagues on the other side of the aisle say, "But you are simply not increasing spending enough when you are increasing spending by $2,000 per beneficiary over the next 7 years, you have to increase it by another $2,000," what they are really saying is we want insolvency of the trust fund.

We heard some other rather interesting comments, something about, well, the trustees never said that there had to be anything like $270 billion saved in order to accomplish the rescue of the Medicare trust fund. I think my colleague from Iowa said there is no place in the trustees' report where that occurs; all we need is $89 billion.

I strongly suggest that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle read the trustees' report. I will read it for them. I have to put on my glasses, though.

The trust fund fails to meet the trustees' test of long-range close actuarial balance by an extremely large margin. To bring the HI program into actuarial balance even for the first 25 years—

Which happens to be their minimum year——

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GREGG. I am sorry. I will not yield. The other side did not yield. I will not yield.

Mr. HARKIN. I wanted to clarify a point.

Mr. GREGG. I am not yielding to the Senator from Iowa.

To bring the HI program into actuarial balance even for the first 25 years under the intermediate assumptions, would require an increase in the HI payroll tax of about 0.65 percentage points per employee or employer each or a comparable reduction in benefits.

What does that language mean in English if you convert it to numbers? That means that the trustees are stating that under their most conservative approach, on an actuarial basis, which they did not even agree should occur because they think it is too short of a timeframe, it would take $386 billion—$386 billion—of adjustment over a 5-year period in order to accomplish actuarial solvency. So this $89 billion number is specious on its face.

And then we have heard, "But the premiums of our seniors are going to double." That is a very interesting argument, because it just happens to ignore one major point. This plan that the Republicans have put forward does not increase the burden of the seniors on the percentage of premium that they pay in the part B premium.

Under the part B premium—I think this should be explained for those who may not be familiar with it; I know most in this room are—but under the part B premium, the senior citizen pays 31 percent of the cost, the general taxpayers, specifically the senior's children and grandchildren who are working, pay 69 percent of the cost.

Under the Republican proposal, the senior citizen will continue for the next 7 years to pick up 31 percent of the cost of his or her part B premium, and his children or her children and his or her grandchildren will continue to pay 69 percent of the cost of the part B premium.

We do not change that. Sure, it goes up. Health care costs go up. Of course it is going to go up. But as a percentage of the cost that is being borne between the senior citizen and their children who are paying the taxes, the subsidy, it will remain the same. Now, if we are to follow the logic of my colleagues from other side of the aisle, what they are saying is that the subsidy that the senior citizens' children should pay and their grandchildren should pay should go up.

That is the only logical conclusion from what they are saying. They are essentially saying that the senior citizens should receive a greater subsidy from their children and their grandchildren, so that they will not be paying 31 percent of the cost of their part B premium, so that they may be paying 28 percent or 25 or 26 percent of that cost. Who is going to pick up the difference? The senior citizens' children and grandchildren.

Their commitment, their subsidy to that premium paid for by the children and grandchildren of seniors will go from 69 percent to 70 percent, 75 percent. I do not know where they are going to end that number. But essentially they are pandering, on that side of the aisle, to one constituency at the expense of another constituency.

It is basically generational politics that are being played. What we have said in our bill is, "Listen, there's a fair distribution of subsidy between seniors and their children, the wage earners and the payers of their subsidy. Sixty-nine percent is paid for by their children; 31 percent by the seniors." We are saying we should continue it in that reference. We are not suggesting it be changed at all.

I think most seniors in this country would view that as a reasonable approach. I find very few seniors in this country who wish to pass on to their children either, one, a country that is bankrupt, two, a Medicare trust fund that is bankrupt, or, three, feel their children should be hit with a further charge for bearing the cost of their health care.

What else do we say in this plan? We say, let us ask the wealthy senior citizens to pay the whole cost or at least a larger percentage of the cost of the part B premium. You explain to me why a person who is working 40, 50, 60 hours a week on a computer assembly line in New Hampshire or at a restaurant or at a garage, why that person should have to subsidize the top 100 retirees from IBM last year. But that is exactly what is happening.

Under the present law, the top 100 retirees from IBM may make $150,000 a year when they retire. And they have a 69-percent subsidy of their part B premium paid for by John and Mary Jones who are working real hard just to make ends meet and take care of their families. It is not right.

We have corrected that in this bill. We have said if you have more than $75,000 as income as an individual, more than $120,000 of income as a married couple, then you have to begin paying a higher percentage of your part B premium. In fact, if your incomes get into the real high levels, $120,000, I think it is, for individuals and $150,000 or $160,000—I have forgotten the number for married folks—then you will not get any more subsidy.

What is wrong with that policy, my friends? Talk about income transfer from moderate income to wealthy, this part B premium, as it is presently structured, is the ultimate in the wrong way to approach income transfer. So we corrected that.

This whole premium argument is really inaccurate, as I mentioned a number of other points they have made. And then I think the core issue here becomes this question of solvency. How do you make the trust funds solvent so that seniors will have it, so that their children will have it? And what we have proposed is to put in place a system which generates a marketplace competition atmosphere which will help control the rate of growth of costs.

As I mentioned earlier, the trustees have made it very clear that a 10-percent rate of growth of the Medicare trust fund leads to bankruptcy. It leads to this horrendous event. It seems that some of my colleagues on the other side are willing to accept a 10-percent rate of growth. The trustees were not. I am not. Republicans on this side are not.

So what we have proposed is to try to slow that rate of growth from three times the rate of inflation to twice the rate of inflation. That still is a very generous increase. As I mentioned, there is a $349 billion increase in spending in the Medicare trust fund over the next 7 years. It is not a dramatic reduction in the rate of growth. You are still talking about a rate of growth which is twice the rate of inflation. In fact, if you compare it to what is happening in the private sector in health care, it happens to be six times the rate of growth of premium costs in the private sector today.

Last year, for example, the health care system which all of us here in the Congress benefit from had actually a drop in the rate of growth of our premium costs. Why? Because there was competition, because there was choice. What we are suggesting is that seniors should have those same types of choices that we as Members of Congress have, and as a result we will hopefully see a significant drop in the rate of growth in premium costs.

What we are projecting is a drop of 30 percent. We are not even expecting to get the same drop as in the Congress. But this is a reasonable drop. That is what this chart shows.

Instead of a 10-percent rate of growth, which my colleagues on the other side seem to be ready to endorse, which leads to bankruptcy, we are saying let us have a 6.4-percent rate of growth.

Ironically, the President, when he sent his budget up here in June—it was just a sheaf of papers that did not happen to make a lot of sense in other areas—the numbers in the Medicare area were not that far from our number. In fact, they were a lot closer to our number than they are to the 10-percent which my colleagues on the other side seem so enthused for because the administration understands that it cannot absorb a 10 percent rate of growth in the Medicare trust fund.

So we have put forward a plan which will lead to a slowing of the rate of growth of the Medicare trust fund to 6.5 percent approximately. And how do we do it? We do it by using the marketplace and by giving seniors more choices, more options, a stronger health care system, rather than a weaker health care system. From my standpoint, that is what reforming and improving and strengthening the Medicare system is all about. That is what this whole issue is all about.

We have heard a lot of misrepresentation on this by the other side of the aisle already. We have only been at this for, what, about 45 minutes of debate from the other side of the aisle, and we have already heard about seven major misrepresentations, all of which I just noted.

I would hope, however, as we go into the rest of this debate, that we will have some integrity in the discussion, we will get back to talking about what we need to do in order to make the Medicare trust fund solvent, and get off of this issue of trying to scare seniors through politics, versus addressing the issue through substance.

I thank the Senator from Michigan for his courtesy and for his time and would yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I just have to respond to my friend from New Hampshire. He is absolutely wrong. Here is a statement of a managing trustee of the Social Security trustees. Let me just read this paragraph:

> Simply said, no Member of Congress should vote for $270 billion in Medicare cuts believing that reductions of this size have been recommended by the Medicare trustees or that such reductions are needed now to prevent an imminent funding crisis. That would be factually incorrect.

So I say to my friend from New Hampshire, he is incorrect. The trustees never said, and in fact here is a statement just to the contrary, as the managing trustee said, it would be factually incorrect to say that $270 billion in cuts were recommended by the trustees. That was never the case.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GREGG). The Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I thank the manager for yielding the time. I was in the New Orleans Airport coming back from Washington one time during the debate on health care 2 years ago. This elderly lady came up to me in the airport and said, "Senator, are you all working on health care in Washington?"

I said, "Yes, ma'am, we sure are."

She said, "No matter what you do, please don't let the Federal Government take over my Medicare."

This was a senior citizen who thought the Medicare Program was working just fine. She thought it was the best thing she ever had. It was taking care of her and taking care of her family. But it showed how concerned they were about Congress messing with Medicare.

Today, Congress is messing with Medicare in a way that is not necessary and is not essential.

Mr. President, 77 percent of the people in my State of Louisiana, who are on Medicare, earn less than $15,000 a year. Do we wonder why a lady would come up to me in an airport and say, "Please don't mess with Medicare"? Because if we destroy Medicare, where are these people going to go?

I understand that for some, earning $15,000 a year is something that they do not even think exists, that nobody can be that poor. I say that because I noticed a quote in the paper this morning from one of our colleagues in the other body which I think is just terrific and it says something about how some people think. A Congressman from North Carolina said:

When I see someone who is making anywhere from $300,000 to $750,000 a year, that's middle class.

Middle class? It is not middle class in Louisiana. It is not middle class for 100 percent of the people who are on Medicare in Louisiana who earn less than $15,000 a year. I would agree with the Congressman if middle class is people earning up to $750,000, we do not even need Medicare. Let them go buy private insurance. Maybe let them buy a hospital if they earn that much money, or buy their own doctor.

But, Mr. President, seriously, we are talking about people who can least afford to be left without some kind of security in their senior years with Medicare.

Why is the Republican plan cutting $270 billion? Very simple, no magic about it: They need it to pay for the tax cuts.

The House created this. It was created over there. It was conceived over there. It was born over there. They decided they wanted to put the cart before the horse:

"We are going to decide if we want to cut taxes by over $300 billion. You know what, we have to pay for it."

"How are we going to pay for it?"

"Oh, I have an idea. Let's cut Medicare, let's cut Medicaid, let's cut earned income tax credit, let's cut welfare. By golly, that will do it."

So, today we have $270 billion taken out of Medicare, not to fix Medicare. This is not reform of Medicare. It is the same old status quo. It just has less money in it, by $270 billion.

Is that needed? No. It is very clear that actuaries—these are the guys who wear green shades. They are not Democrats or Republicans, they are actuaries, CPA's. What do they say we need to do to fix Medicare? It is very clear. The actuary for Health and Human Services says clearly you can fix Medicare to the year 2006 by reducing the spending $89 billion.

Guess what the Democratic package does? It reduces spending by $89 billion, not $270 billion, because that is not needed. You wonder why the people come up to us in airports and on Main Street and say, "Don't let Congress take over Medicare," because they are scared to death we might do exactly what this plan does: It rips it up, it cuts it up in an extreme manner and not to fix it. There is not a real innovative idea in their plan, but there are a lot of cuts, and the cuts are more than are necessary to fix it.

That is clear: that is simple. Nonpolitical people have said it, and we should get about the business of fixing it with $89 billion, which is difficult to do but must be done, and then I will suggest a bipartisan commission, with our colleagues on the Republican side working with us to come up with a long-term fix. It "ain't" going to get done by themselves, and we are not going to be able to do it by ourselves. Do the short-term fix, appoint a bipartisan commission and get the job done.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield? We saw somebody stand up with a chart on the other side of the room and say, "What cut? We are not cutting Medicare." Can the Senator respond to that?

Mr. BREAUX. It is $270 billion less money than they had last year. You can call that whatever you want to call it, but if it looks like a duck, walks like a duck and quacks like a duck, it is probably a duck where I come from. This is a duck.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Louisiana was not referring to me in his animal comparison.

I regret to say I support this amendment, not because I believe that it is wrong but because I believe Medicare does need to be reformed. I do not believe, in fact, we need another bipartisan commission. We have a bipartisan commission recommendation that lays out what needs to be done long term with Medicare. Unfortunately, in the budget resolution, we do not do that. Unfortunately, in this reconciliation agreement, we do not do it.

What we have done is we have identified a short-term need, which is to come up with money to fund a series of tax breaks, and we are using, among other things, significant reductions in Medicare over the next 7 years to do it. And worse, Mr. President, we leave the long-term problem unchecked. If you doubt it, just look at the cost of mandated programs this year versus the cost of mandated programs at the end of 2002. It is one of the biggest reasons that I seriously doubt that this body or the House is going to be able to hang in there and vote these kinds of cuts over the next 7 years.

At the end of this budget cycle, at the end of this 7-year period, we will have 25 percent of our budget for appropriated items. That will be $400 billion this year for defense and nondefense, and anybody with just a rudimentary understanding of the budget would know it is unlikely that we are going to be able to get the job done.

First of all, Mr. President, it does, as many have already said, try to come up with savings in the short term in order to be able to fund tax breaks. It leaves the long-term problem unchecked. Do not waste another million on a bipartisan commission. There is one that Jack Danforth and I did. It will not be pleasant when you look at the recommendations. The long-term recommendations to phase in changes contain many of the things that are asked for by the Republicans, only even more so, but over a long period of time, giving people a chance to plan.

One of the reasons that seniors are frightened by this whole debate is, as many people have already said, their incomes tend to be low. They have a difficult time purchasing insurance and buying health care. It tends to be a very high percentage of their disposable income, and they are terrified that tomorrow they might receive some health care bill that they are unable to pay.

Second, as far as generational warfare, it is the concern of their children and of their grandchildren that they may get stuck with these bills as well. So this terror that seniors feel does not come as a consequence of Democratic rhetoric, it comes as a consequence of an honest evaluation of income and likely expenditures.

Third, I find objectionable the deals that were made with the AMA, particularly on the House side, to get an agreement over there.

Fourth, it does not reform the system and really use the market and allow competition. Mr. President, $152 billion of the savings comes from cuts to providers; $71 billion in increased payments by beneficiaries; $43 billion by reducing payments to HMO's: only $2 billion come from increased use of competitive market forces.

Next, rather than taking a step toward universal coverage, which we ought to be doing if we want to have a market economy in the late 20th century, when we say to businesses, "Go out there and be competitive, try to keep your costs under control and still have a civil society," we have to have universal coverage.

Republicans now have reached a conclusion that they want to preserve

Medicare. I suspect Leader DOLE will come and say that his remark last night was taken out of context. If you want to preserve Medicare, that means you recognize at some point the market does not work. Well, it does not work for an awful lot of people—over a million in 1994 alone—who moved into the ranks of the uninsured.

We need a safety net that provides universal coverage. The problem, of course, is that to be able to do that, we are going to have to dramatically change the Medicare/Medicaid income tax deduction and the VA.

Next, I have heard it said that we want to give seniors exactly what Federal employees have. Please, let us not overpromise again. Our salaries are $133,000 a year. Look at the comparisons. We pay $44 a month; seniors pay $46, and under the GOP plan, it goes to $89. We have unlimited hospital care; theirs is limited. Our prescription drugs are covered; theirs are not covered. We have a deductible of $350; they are at $816. Here are more extensive services under preventive services, an out-of-pocket of $37.50. We do not want to say to seniors—and I have heard it said and I know the marketing is going on and this has been tested very well. Let us not overpromise here. If we say to seniors what we are doing in this proposal is giving you what Federal employees have, there is going to come a substantial and a rude awakening.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I hope that in fact a majority does vote for this amendment. I hope we recommit this to the Budget Committee and Finance Committee. I would love to participate now in a bipartisan effort to control the long-term cost of entitlement and mandated spending. I think we are extinguishing our capacity to invest in education, transportation, research, child care—those things you need in an active economy.

Mr. President, most particularly, I hope there can be a bipartisan consensus begin to emerge as a result of seeing the value of Medicare, that we need a new safety net that says if you are a citizen or legal resident, you will know with certainty that you are going to be covered.

This proposal takes us away from those goals rather than toward it. Therefore, I support the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia. I hope that a majority of Democrats and Republicans who understand the short- and long-term proposal will vote for this amendment so we can, hopefully, reach some kind of bipartisan consensus.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, how much time is left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 40 minutes left. The Senator from West Virginia has 15½ minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time, I yield 9 minutes to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, on Monday, October 16, there was a very interesting article that ran in the Wall Street Journal. At the appropriate time, I am going to ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The headline says: "Clinton Recruits Campaign Team of 'Nasty Boys' With Reputation as Tough, Savvy Hired Guns."

Then the lead paragraph says:

Gearing up for 1996, President Clinton is fielding a motley crew of re-election strategists with reputations for shrewdness and ruthless tactics. A mainstay on his team, New Yorker Henry Sheinkopf, readily boasts, "I subscribe to terror."

That is a very interesting statement, Mr. President. I have had it put on a chart—we are debating this whole thing with charts—"I subscribe to terror."

He goes on to say in the article:

Terror tends to work . . . because it is so easy to make people hate.

Now, back to the article, quoting:

Mr. Sheinkopf doesn't deny the remarks, but says they were taken out of context. He says he was addressing the strategy for a noncandidate campaign . . .

A noncandidate campaign. That is very interesting because what we have running on the airwaves today is a series of television ads that are terrorizing our senior citizens, and this is a noncandidate campaign. Mr. Sheinkopf was the architect of this summer's unprecedented ad campaign on crime.

This is the next statement that I have here on a chart. He is part of the group that wanted to start the Medicare ads early this summer. Quoting now:

The team wanted to attack the GOP with Medicare ads in early September . . . they got the go ahead.

Again, he said, "I subscribe to terror." That is the statement of the President's strategist on noncandidate campaigns.

There is more in the article. I will quote a few before I turn directly to the Medicare debate. But this demonstrates what we are faced with, as far as the ads currently running on television are concerned. Quoting:

Already, friends of the administration peg these mercenaries "The Nasty Boys." Like Mr. Clinton, many of them are accused of lacking an ideological rudder, allowing them to roam from left to right on policies.

Elsewhere in the article, it says:

Elizabeth Holtzman will never forget when she first heard about Mr. Sheinkopf. The former New York congresswoman was running for Brooklyn district attorney in the 1980s when, she says, her opponent fired off one of the "nastiest, sexist ads" she had ever heard. . . . She found out the spot was created by Mr. Sheinkopf.

Her reaction? She hired him for her next campaign.

"He's very creative," Mrs. Holtzman says. And, like other members of this media team, he'll bat for most anyone—as long as they are paying clients.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the entire article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I found this interesting because it demonstrated what is happening to political debate in this country when we are not debating the merits or demerits of the proposal before us. Instead, we are mounting 30-second spots to attack each other in the spirit of terror. That is not my word, but the word of the man whom the President of the United States has chosen to advise him on this particular issue.

By contrast, Mr. President, I am aware of some focus groups that have been held in an attempt to understand this issue, where the Republican plan was described in as neutral a term as possible and the Democratic proposal is described in as neutral a term as possible; they were presented to a group of senior citizens in a focus group, with the first called the Smith plan and the second one called the Green plan. Discussion was held, without any prejudice one way or the other. When it was over, they found that by about an 80 percent to 20 percent margin, in virtually every section of the country where this attempt has been made to find out people's reaction, the Smith plan out-polled the Green plan. And only then was it unveiled to these people that they had, in fact, by a vote of 4 to 1, subscribed to the Republican position rather than the Democratic position on this issue.

I find this very encouraging for this reason, Mr. President. I go back to the debate in the last Congress over health care when the President unveiled his health care proposal. A very substantial majority of Americans were in favor of it. We on this side of the aisle felt very lonely in our opposition to it, but we were sustained by this knowledge: The more people that knew about the President's plan, the less they approved of it. The more the information got out, the more the poll numbers fell. So that by the time we finally got to the resolution of that issue on this floor, they had switched completely. Instead of being 2 to 1 in favor of the President's plan, they were 2 to 1 in opposition to the President's plan.

Based on the research that has been done in this nonideological fashion, we find that the more people know the facts of the Republican proposal on Medicare, the more they support it. So that, over time, the American people—as they did with President Clinton's plan—are going to move in the direction of supporting the Republican position.

Right now, if you look at the polls, they are virtually identical. If you poll Americans, about 50–50 are saying we are for the Democrat position or we are for the Republican position. That would bother me a great deal if I did not know that the more people know about the particulars of our plan, the more they support it.

So I urge my fellow Republicans to stand firm with where we are, knowing that time is on our side, that facts are on our side, and do not be terrorized by the deliberate program of terror that is being mounted primarily out of the White House and from the Democratic National Committee.

I yield the floor.

CLINTON RECRUITS CAMPAIGN TEAM OF "NASTY BOYS" WITH REPUTATION AS TOUGH, SAVVY HIRED GUNS

(By Michael K. Frisby)

WASHINGTON.—Gearing up for 1996, President Clinton is fielding a motley crew of re-election strategists with reputations for shrewdness and ruthless tactics. A mainstay on his team, New Yorker Henry Sheinkopf, readily boasts. "I subscribe to terror."

Already, friends of the administration peg these mercenaries "The Nasty Boys." Like Mr. Clinton, many of them are accused of lacking an ideological rudder, allowing them to roam from left to right on policies. Bill Lacy, a strategist for GOP frontrunner Sen. Robert Dole of Kansas, says he expects "a scorched earth campaign" from this group.

The Clinton-Gore re-election campaign will be headed by a prominent Democrat, perhaps a cabinet member, who will set the grand blueprint with the president. But every campaign relies on its savvy strategists and creative media team to fire up voters. And Mr. Clinton has loaded his campaign with the most aggressive war counselors available.

Led by Dick Morris, of Connecticut, the president's media-message team also includes the New York polling firm Penn & Schoen Associates Inc. It's anchored by Washington veteran Robert Squier, a firebrand himself, who plays a calming role on this feisty group. "We are putting together an exciting creative team that can pick up where the strategic thinking leaves off," Mr. Squier says.

It is Mr. Sheinkopf, a whiz at low-budget ads, who has raised the most eyebrows. A year ago, he shared his trade secrets at a convention of political consultants and talked about using fear to win campaigns. Mr. Sheinkopf told the gathering, "Terror tends to work . . . because it is so easy to make people hate."

Mr. Sheinkopf doesn't deny the remarks, but says they are often taken out of context. He says he was addressing the strategy for a noncandidate campaign, such as a referendum fight, in which the clients don't have much money. "I'm tough, but I'm not ruthless," he insists. "I fight for my clients."

Elizabeth Holtzman will never forget when she first heard about Mr. Sheinkopf. The former New York congresswoman was running for Brooklyn district attorney in the 1980s when, she says, her opponent fired off one of the "nastiest, sexist ads" she had ever heard. "The voice said, 'She's a very nice girl. I might like her for my daughter, but not district attorney.'" Ms. Holtzman recalls. She found out the spot was created by Mr. Sheinkopf.

Her reaction? She hired him for her next campaign.

"He's very creative." Ms. Holtzman says. And, like other members of this media team, he'll bat for most anyone—as long as they are paying clients.

Mr. Sheinkopf's claim to fame is hot radio spots for African-American candidates, many of whom are liberals. Yet, he and his partner, Gerry Austin, in the wake of the riots after the Rodney King case, worked on behalf of Los Angeles police officers fighting a reform measure on the ballot. Mr. Morris, a longtime associate of Mr. Clinton, has worked for conservative Republicans, such as Mississippi Sen. Trent Lott. Mark Penn, a partner in Penn & Shoen, worked for maverick Ross Perot in 1992, and the firm does considerable work for corporations.

Thus far, the consultants, with Mr. Morris calling the shots, have helped bring Mr. Clinton back to life after last fall's GOP sweep. "They have presented a disciplined and controlled message," said Democratic strategist Robert Beckel. "It has put the president back in the dance."

PUSH FOR BUDGET PLAN

Even Mr. Morris's critics tip their hats to his pushing the president to offer up a balanced-budget plan last spring, a move that embittered other Democrats. Mr. Morris argued it would gain the president credibility on economic issues, opening the door for him to now hammer the GOP for squeezing Medicare and education funds without appearing to be a tax-and-spend Democrat.

Mr. Sheinkopf was the architect of this summer's unprecedented ad campaign—16 months before the election—portraying Mr. Clinton as tough on crime. Using his connections, the former New York City police officer lined up cops around the country for the ads.

Inside the White House, the acceptance of Mr. Morris and his crew is growing, but there are still spats. The team wanted to attack the GOP with Medicare ads in early September, but were blunted by Deputy Chief of Staff Harold Ickes, who doesn't want to get caught short on campaign cash next summer. By late September, however, the media team got the go-ahead.

Aides say that while Mr. Clinton values his hired guns, the president is comfortable with Mr. Ickes controlling the purse strings and taking charge of relations with the Democratic base—unions, liberals and minority voters.

The team may prepare one more media hit before January; it is likely to be either a package on the budget battle or about Mr. Clinton cherishing the same values as average Americans.

Some Democrats privately raise concerns about whether this crew is ready for prime time, however. Mr. Morris, for one, is described by many as brilliant, but has his share of bloopers. Last year, he produced an ad for Tennessee GOP gubernatorial candidate Don Sundquist that people still talk about. It was a high-tech TV spot with a car driving in a video game, crashing into barriers with signs carrying the theme that the candidate was against taxes.

"It didn't have the desired effect," concedes Ray Pohlman, the campaign manager. But in the next breath, he says Mr. Morris is fabulous at deciphering polling data and crafting a message. And Mr. Sundquist won the election.

The strategizing on the Clinton campaign goes right down to bringing in an outside expert to do the video work. Mr. Morris, who was responsible for hiring Mr. Sheinkopf, also recruited Marius Penczner, who runs a video production house in Memphis, Tenn. Mr. Penczner, whom Mr. Morris met on the Sundquist campaign, is known more for country music videos than political work. Mr. Clinton has marveled at the quality of Mr. Penczner's Oval Office video shots, which are in most of the president's TV spots.

CONTROVERSIAL POLL

Mr. Morris also picked Penn & Schoen as the campaign pollsters, virtually ousting old Clinton hand Stan Greenberg. Their results, however, are sometimes controversial. Their poll put then-Ohio Rep. David Mann up 28 points in his Democratic primary fight against State Sen. William Bowen. A short time later, fund-raising letters went to political action committees, citing Mr. Mann's lead. He won the race, but by two percentage points. "We laughed at that poll," recalls Mr. Bowen. "It was just part of their tactical strategy to show him way in front: that wasn't the case."

The poll was five months before the election, and undecided voters later turned against the incumbent, says Douglas Schoen. "We always thought it would be close," he says, noting a poll closer to the election showed a tighter contest.

The new Clinton campaign team raises concerns among presidential scholars. While applauding their cleverness, experts search for the intellectual thrust. Mr. Clinton likes to be compared to President Truman, who overcame a hostile Congress to win re-election. But Fred Greenstein, a Princeton University historian, notes Truman's comeback was fueled by the intellectual energy of Clark Clifford and others—not image-makers. And that, he says, is missing from a Clinton team searching for the best political answer.

"Maybe you need someone with substantive fiber to give you advice," Mr. Greenstein says.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BREAUX. I yield 30 seconds.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say on behalf of my good friend, Senator HARKIN, and myself, the Senator from Utah says the more people learn about the plan—we just got there. There has not been one hearing. How many pages are there?

Mr. HARKIN. There are 2,000 pages.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, 2,000 pages, and people do not know what is in here. We did not have experts come to committee. People in Iowa, Minnesota, and across the country——

Mr. HARKIN. How many days of hearings have we had?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Not anything.

Mr. HARKIN. Zero. The American people have no idea what is in this.

Mr. WELLSTONE. The people do not know about this.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, 23 years ago I came to the U.S. Senate as what we call a Southern conservative. There are not as many of us left as I would like there to be, but throughout that time, Mr. President, I have frankly given my party some consternation by opposing some things which I thought were too liberal, particularly when it came to what I thought was income redistribution.

I can recall opposing the CETA Program because I thought it was sort of a make work program that would take money and give it to poor people, just sort of without working.

Now, Mr. President, in spite of the fact that I remained through all those 23 years as a Southern conservative, I oppose strongly this program.

Mr. President, this program goes in the exact opposite direction because it is income redistribution from bottom to the top.

Mr. President, I will be leaving this institution in another year. I must say that we are leaving, if this passes, we are leaving in its wake a real difficult situation for people of modest means in this country.

While we are taking care of those who are better off—the tax credit for children goes up to $110,000, people with those incomes—the top 1 percent, Mr. President, in this country, are going to get almost $5,000 per person.

Mr. President, what this does to poor people, what it does to people of modest means in my State—this is not scare tactics. Mr. President—we are going to have 4,700 fewer people on Head Start, school loans are going to be restricted, summer jobs are eliminated by the thousands in my State.

There will be 406,000 children in Louisiana whose nutrition is going to be cut because of this program. Mr. President, 60,000 people of modest means in my State are going to have to pay more for housing.

Mr. President, going right down the line—look at Medicare. We will have 17 million low and moderate-income people in this country who will have an average tax increase of $352. The Medicare people who are having their Medicare cut, their average income is $17,750, while we are giving tax cuts to those of greater income.

Now, Mr. President, there is a blizzard of propaganda——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 3 minutes yielded to the Senator has expired.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I oppose this program because it is income redistribution from the bottom to the top.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, as chairman of the Finance Committee, I must oppose the Democrats' amendment for one simple reason: It does not preserve the Medicare Program for this generation, and, especially important, not for future generations. That was the conclusion that the Finance Committee came to when it voted down this amendment during our deliberations.

My good friends and distinguished colleagues, Senators MOYNIHAN and ROCKEFELLER, offered a similar amendment during the Finance Committee markup to save $89 billion from the Medicare Program over the next 7 years. Frankly, it did not go far enough then and it does not go far enough now.

The Congressional Budget Office did a preliminary estimate of the Medicare trust fund effects of the Democrats' amendment to save $89 billion from the Medicare Program. Remember, it is the CBO office that the President himself said is the one that should be making these kind of determinations.

Here is what CBO's preliminary estimates showed would happen to the Medicare HI trust fund if only $89 billion is saved over the next 7 years. The Medicare HI trust fund would only be solvent through the year 2004. In other words, it would get us through the next election.

CBO further said that the Medicare HI trust fund would have a negative balance of $8.4 billion in the year 2005. This would mean that Medicare could not pay its bills on time in the year 2005.

Even more alarming under the Democrats' proposal, CBO says that the Medicare trust fund could not even pay a full year's Medicare benefits starting in the year 2001. Mr. President, that is only 6 years from now.

In contrast, CBO says that our proposal meets the Medicare trustees. Remember, those trustees are primarily appointed by the President. It says it meets the Medicare trustees' 10-year test of financial adequacy. In other words, Medicare has enough money in the HI trust fund at the end of every year—that is critically important—at the end of every year for the next 10 years, to pay the entire next year's Medicare benefit.

Mr. President, the Medicare HI trust fund has a $300 billion balance in the year 2005. The Medicare trust fund balance is increasing—would be increasing instead of decreasing every year.

Using CBO's estimate through 2005, we went to the Office of the Actuary to get their preliminary estimate of how long solvency would be extended under our proposal. The Medicare HI trust fund solvency will be extended until about the year 2020 under the proposal. That is our estimate, in consultation with the Office of the Actuary. That is a quarter of a century from today.

What a contrast to what would happen under the proposal before when it would only be solvent to 2005.

Mr. President, $89 billion in Medicare savings just is not enough. Even the President earlier this year said that at least $127 billion in Medicare savings are necessary.

Let me just say, Mr. President, a few words about the need for savings to Medicare part B. Most attention has been focused on the need to restore solvency in the part A trust fund.

But part B spending is a big, big problem. According to Medicare public trustees—again, appointed by President Clinton—the Medicare part B spending shows a rate of cost which is clearly unsustainable. Medicare part B spending was $2 billion in 1970. In 1995 the Congressional Budget Office estimates Medicare part B spending to be about $66 billion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The time yielded to the Senator from Delaware has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield the Senator from Delaware an additional minute of time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, let me conclude by saying that without savings in the part B program we cannot say that we have effectively tackled the problem of fixing Medicare. Therefore, I oppose the Democrats' amendment because we have already debated and voted down this amendment in the Finance Committee. It does not go far enough to help the Medicare HI trust fund, and we do not want to do it in small steps that will only cost more and create greater hardship. It appears to do nothing, to be candid, to slow Medicare part B spending, which is a significant problem. For that reason, I must oppose the amendment.

I yield back the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I inquire as to how much time is left at this point?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 25 minutes. The Senator from West Virginia has 11½ minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia is recognized.

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, this whole debate baffles me. I think it really boils down to those who want the status quo and those who want to confront the fiscal dilemma.

The entitlement commission was chaired by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska who is on the floor right now and that sets the predicate for everything that has to be done. I commend the Senator for that work. I wish a lot more was being said about it.

But, in essence, that report says that within 10 years all U.S. revenue and wealth is exhausted by five programs: Social Security, Medicare, Medicaid, Federal retirement, and the interest on our debt. And then there is nothing left.

So it is entirely appropriate that the new majority confront these issues. In the discussion, with repeated frequency, the other side tries to link the tax reduction that we are proposing to Medicare. Over and over and over we hear that somehow, something is being taken away from Medicare to help a tax reduction.

The President, of course, has already admitted that he raised taxes too much in 1993. We are trying to help him fix it, even without the support of his colleagues here on the Senate floor.

But this is not a vacuum in which we are operating. What happens to the $245 billion in tax reductions? First of all, the savings on Medicare by law stay in Medicare and extend the solvency, which is why we have been given assurances that our Medicare proposal will assure solvency for a quarter century, 25 years. Their suggestion gives us 24 months. Is America looking for a Band-Aid or a solution for these senior citizens?

Let us step aside. Why are we coming forward with a tax reduction? I read here, from Llewellyn H. Rockwell, of the Ludwig Von Mises Institute in Auburn, AL. He says:

> Even as family income has declined since 1970, the Federal Government's tax hike in real terms has increased more than 600 percent.

An average family, making $40,000 a year, with two children, is seeing half their total income absorbed and taken away by a Government. In 1950, Ozzie and Harriet, the quintessential family, sent 2 cents out of every dollar off to Washington. If Ozzie was here today, he would be sending 24 cents to Washington.

The point is we have marginalized the average family. We have taken so much of their resource away from them that they are unable to fulfill their principal obligations to their children —to housing, to clothing, to education and health. So, it is important that there is a tax reduction. Their President has already acknowledged it. And we are fulfilling it.

Mr. President, 70 percent of this tax relief will go to families with incomes under $75,000. This proposal alone, for this family that makes $40,000, the combination of the tax reduction and the balanced budget, will put between 2,000 and 3,000 new dollars on the kitchen table of every family home. That is an equivalent increase of their disposable income of 10 to 20 percent, depending on the family. That relief is long overdue.

We will lower their interest payments on their mortgage, probably about $50,000, by $1,081. We will lower the interest expense on their car loan by about $180 a year; on the student loan, by $220 a year; on their credit card. With the two children, they will get $500 for each child.

This is just the beginning, and that is $2,500 to that average family. Given the fact we are taking half their income now, do we not think it is about time that something got back to the average family? This tax relief does not disappear. This goes to real working families, real people who are having a hard time making ends meet. To extend solvency and to help the middle-income family is entirely appropriate.

Mr. President. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. Who yields time?

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, what I would like to do this afternoon, briefly, is to address the so-called part B premium situation. It seems to me, in all of this political maneuvering around here, the Democratic Party has overlooked the unfairness that is occurring in the part B premium.

What is the part B premium? The part B premium is an insurance program that those on Medicare take out if they wish. When Medicare was set up, under the part B proposal the Federal Government was going to pay half the cost of the premium, and the insured was going to pay the other half. But over the years that has deteriorated so now, currently, the insured is paying 31.5 percent. Not 50 percent of the premium, but 31.5 percent.

Do we change that? No, we do not change that at all. That remains constant at 31.5. I do not know how anybody could complain about that. You get 100 percent of the premium and you only pay 31.5 percent for it.

We then go on to say, wait a minute, this is costing the Federal Government a lot of money. It is costing the Federal Government $42 billion a year to subsidize that part B premium, the other 69 percent. So we say, is it not fair for the richer people to pay more of that premium? So that is what we provide. We provide for individuals with $50,000 of income—this is not some pauper, this is an individual with $50,000 of income—or a couple with $75,000 of income, that they will then start paying more of that premium than 31.5 percent. Apparently they do not think that is fair. I think it is eminently fair. Why should some jewelry worker in the city of Providence have his or her wages deducted and go into the general Treasury and come out to pay some wealthy person's premium under part B of Medicare?

But does that person at $50,000, or $75,000 a couple, have to pay all the premium?

The answer is no, they do not. They just start paying more than the 31.5 percent. When do they start paying the full part of the premium? When the individual reaches $100,000 and the couple reaches $150,000.

So, Mr. President, this is a very fair program. By the way, if the person does not want that insurance, they do not have to take it. It is an optional program. I do not know. Apparently, over on the other side they think it is wonderful that the Federal Government subsidizes these insurance programs.

Jack Kent Cooke, the owner of the Redskins, is having 70 percent of his doctors' bills paid for by some worker, somebody who cleans up the halls or works in a restaurant. I do not think that is fair.

I think the program that the Republicans have submitted in connection with Medicare is an eminently fair program, and, Mr. President, I urge its support in this Chamber.

I think there is no need for this recommittal motion whatsoever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank my friend from West Virginia.

Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island said that he thinks it is eminently fair. Let me try to just reduce it to the simplest, and I think the most truthful assessment of what is fair and what is not fair. Most Americans, when they stop and look at what is about to happen, are going to wind up asking if it is fair to take an assessment by the trustees of Medicare that says there is a $90 billion problem, and turn it, through political sophistry, into a $270 billion problem so that you can give a $245 billion tax cut. That is absolutely what this comes down to.

This is a zero-sum game. This is a process of balancing the budget. And in their balanced budget, they are offering a $245 billion tax reduction to Americans. How do they get it? They do not pull it out of the sky. It has to be balanced against other items in the budget. And in order to find the room to balance the budget and provide the $245 billion tax cut, they give a $270 billion definition to a Medicare problem that the trustees themselves call an $89 billion problem. It is that simple. Take away the smoke, take away the mirrors, and take away the rhetoric. You cannot balance the budget with a $245 billion tax break without finding the money somewhere. And they find the money by taking it from seniors. Is that fair?

They say to Americans they are giving every American family a tax break for having children—the $500 credit. But analysis will show that, too, is not only not fair, but it is not truthful because not every American family will get the tax credit because not every American family qualifies because of income to have an income tax reduction. Most American families pay their taxes—a large burden—many, through the payroll tax. And because the tax credit is not refundable to them at the lower end of the income scale, they will not get the benefit. So not only do you have a skewed tax relief, so to speak, but you have a discrimination against the hard-working average taxpayer of America.

But it is even worse than that, Mr. President. Because while they give a tax break of about $5,000-plus to the person earning more than $350,000 a year, they raise the taxes on the person earning less than $30,000 a year.

That is an extraordinary definition of fairness. I do not know where you get that definition of fairness. The Medicare cuts themselves are going to be devastating, devastating. There are more and more post-World War II baby boomers who are reaching the age of 65, and the number of people paying taxes to pay for them is diminishing. Today you have an estimated four taxpayers supporting a Medicare part A beneficiary, four people supporting one. But when the baby boomers retire between the years 2010 and 2015 you are going to go down to about two people paying for each one of those on part A.

The result of that with these cuts is going to be that you are going to have an overall population increase of 2 percent, but are you are going to have a 30-percent increase of people on Medicare looking for their retirement benefits under Medicare? The problem is under the cuts and the reductions of the total pot that will be made available by the Republicans, you are going to be having people come in at a 30-percent increase saying, "Where are the benefits that I am due?" And they are not going to have them.

Mr. President, this is not fair. It is not sensible. And I hope that we will adopt the amendment of the Democrats to have a fair distribution of solving the problem.

Mr. President, the Medicare and Medicaid cuts proposed by the Republicans hurt people and families.

The Republican cuts eliminate jobs, and these Democratic amendments protect jobs.

Republican cuts affect the quality of care for nursing home patients, and these Democratic amendments maintain care—for seniors, for people with disabilities, and for children while still containing costs.

These Democratic amendments scale back tax breaks for the wealthy to help people in my State and around the country who are struggling to make ends meet.

My Republican colleagues are offering a $270 billion solution—at least $160 billion more than is necessary to ensure the financial solvency of Medicare.

We have been told by the Medicare trustees that there is a pending financial disaster that could result in the total collapse of the Medicare part A program unless changes are enacted.

According to the trustees, the magnitude of the crisis is around $89 billion. The Republican solution is to make changes impacting both beneficiaries and providers that would save $270 billion—three times the amount necessary to fix the current financial crisis.

It is important that people across America recognize that Medicare is faced with a short-term crisis that can be fixed without totally dismantling a program that has provided economic health security to millions of retired Americans since its inception.

While I fully recognize that there is a financial crisis confronting Medicare, and believe it is probably somewhere beyond $89 billion, but substantially less than the Republican solution, the Gingrich solutions are anything but solutions.

The solutions being put forth fail once again to take into consideration the changing composition of the over-65 population. For example, do the solutions being proposed really fit the acute and long-term care needs of current and future generations of retired Americans?

With more and more post World War II so-called baby boomers beginning to reach age 65, the number of workers paying taxes will continue to decline, while the number of Medicare recipients continues to increase.

Today, an estimated four taxpayers support a Medicare part a beneficiary. However, when the baby boomers retire between 2010 and 2015, the estimated number of taxpayers paying for each Medicare part a beneficiary will have dropped by two.

Thus we will have gone from a 4-to-1 ratio to a 2-to-1 ratio in just a few years.

By 2008, our overall population will increase by 2 percent, but our retired population will increase by 30 percent.

The Medicare changes will, however, cause one additional problem—a reduction in health care employment and other jobs that indirectly benefit from the health care sector.

Let us look at the impact on my State: Jim Howell of the Howell Group has recently issued a study that shows that the proposed combined cuts in Medicare and Medicaid of $452 billion will conservatively result in a $13 billion loss to the State over 7 years.

Massachusetts could lose 71,000—71,000—health sector jobs and the indirect employment impact could result in $165,000 lost jobs.

The hardest hit towns would be Boston, Brockton, Cambridge, Fall River, Farmingham, New Bedford, Salem, Springfield, and Worcester.

The proposed $1 billion cut in funds for graduate medical education will have a devastating impact on institutions and it will hurt Massachusetts' knowledge-based economy by disrupting the network of medical schools, research institutions, health care providers, and biotech firms.

The proposed cuts would result in aggregate personal income losses in the State of $2.1 billion.

The health of seniors and children, and the loss of jobs at a time when working families are struggling to make ends meet is just too high a price to pay.

The problems for Massachusetts are intensified when we examine the potential impact of the proposed cuts in Medicaid—the health care program for poor children disabled persons, and seniors.

Under the Republican plan, Massachusetts would lose approximately $4.6 billion.

With regard to children, one out of every three low-income who is currently receiving health insurance coverage from Medicaid is in jeopardy of losing their coverage.

For elderly persons in Massachusetts, the impact is more severe. Currently, 75 percent of all patients in Massachusetts nursing homes are dependent upon Medicaid to help pay for the costs of nursing home care.

Under the Republican plan, more than 25,000 seniors would lose their Medicaid eligibility by 2002.

I believe the Republican response to the Medicare crisis can best be summed up as follows: it does not focus on the future of the overall program; it does not address the growing long-term care crisis facing Americans of all ages but particularly elderly Americans; and it does not address or take into consideration the impact such dramatic cuts will have on employment in the health care sector, and on those communities who have become dependent upon this sector as a means of fighting or deterring rising unemployment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I yield to the Senator from Tennessee 7 minutes.

How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 15 minutes-plus remaining, and the Senator from West Virginia has almost 7 minutes.

The Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the motion. Why? Because the plan we have on the table addresses three central issues.

First, it prevents bankruptcy of not just for part A, not just the hospital part of the trust fund, but it prevents the bankruptcy of the entire program.

Second, our plan, our underlying bill, increases spending, increases spending from $4,800 by nearly $2,000 per beneficiary to $6,700. That is an increase in spending.

And, third, our program improves Medicare as we know it today.

As has been pointed out by my colleagues before, we have a program that is a good program. I say that as a physician who has taken care of thousands of Medicare patients. It is a good program. But it is an antiquated, out-of-date program that locks seniors' hands, that deprives them of choice. We want to give them choice. We want to give them the opportunities that you have, that I have, that most people, the majority of people have who are less than 65 years of age today.

The Democratic motion ignores the fundamental problem. The problem is twofold. It really has not been discussed very much over the last hour and a half.

The first part of the problem is that it is an outdated program. It does not meet the needs of our senior citizens today, or individuals with disabilities, or why would 70 percent of them have to go outside and buy additional coverage for Medicare? Why is it that Medicare today does not cover prescription drugs?

As a heart surgeon, as a lung surgeon, as somebody, again, who has taken care of so many Medicare patients, I can tell you our senior citizens need help with their prescription drugs. Today, we deny choice. We deny the right to choose to our senior citizens. Is that fair? Does the other side not want to offer the same choice that we have to our seniors?

That is the first part of the problem. To me, that is what is most exciting about our solution that is in the underlying bill—is that we improve the program.

Second, it is the program that has unsustained growth. The growth has been at about 10 percent a year. It is of the entire program. We talk a lot about the trust fund, part A. I think people broadly need to know that part A is one part of the problem. Part A is the hospitals. Part B is the doctors. This particular proposal by the Democrats today addresses the part A part of the trust fund without addressing the overall connection, without addressing the overall program.

That is really in spite of the fact that the trustee report says very specifically—and, again, this is the trustee report, six trustees, trustees of Medicare, three of whom are in the Clinton Cabinet, and they say very clearly, "We strongly recommend that the crisis"—we cannot just put another Band-Aid on this—"presented by the financial condition of the Medicare trust funds"—funds, not just part A, funds, the overall program—"be urgently addressed on a comprehensive basis."

We cannot just throw $89 billion at part A, one part of these trust funds, and expect to solve the problem long term.

We address the program in a comprehensive way. We address part A, the hospitals; part B, physicians, the complex interaction that comes between the two. As a physician who works in a hospital and works in a clinic, I can tell you it is a complex interaction and you cannot address just part A. If you squeeze part A, part B will balloon out.

The Democratic motion addresses only part A. And, again, if you go back to the trustee report, the trustees say it is not a problem just with part A. It is both trust funds. "Both the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund"—that is part A—"and the Supplemental Medical Insurance Trust Fund show alarming financial results." The part A "trust fund continues to be severely out of financial balance and is projected to be exhausted in about 7 years."

The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee just read the report from the CBO that says maybe the $89 billion which is in this proposal by the Democrats today will extend that trust fund, just that part A, for 2 years, maybe 2 years. It does not address the underlying problem.

Going back to the Medicare trustees report: "The HI Trust Fund continues to be severely out of financial balance. * * * The SMI Trust Fund"—part B, not addressed by this proposed amendment today—"shows a rate of growth of costs which is clearly unsustainable." Clearly unsustainable.

My point is, we have a program here you cannot just address one part without addressing the overall program.

Let me go back to a chart that was shown earlier by my colleague from New Hampshire that shows that we are going bankrupt in 7 years. In 7 short years there will be no Medicare part A trust fund.

Again, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee said that the CBO's preliminary estimate shows what will happen to the Medicare trust fund if only $89 billion is saved over the next 7 years. Their conclusion: The Medicare HI trust fund is solvent through the year 2004.

So what we have done is taken this curve and shifted it 2 years, put a Band-Aid on it without addressing the underlying problem—again, short-term solutions. That seems to be so much the approach here.

We are addressing it long-term.

Let me see the next chart. Again, this is a chart that shows next year, if we do nothing, we will begin deficit spending in the year 1996. Again, what we do with the motion in the Chamber now is to shift this curve out, not change the slope of the curve at all but shift the curve out 2 years for some commission to decide in the future.

In summary, the problem today is an antiquated, outdated system which serves senior citizens well but not as well as the private system serves people under 64 years of age.

We address that problem. The proposal in the Chamber currently, which I oppose, by the Democrats does not address the overall antiquation of the system.

Second, the Democratic proposal in the Chamber ignores this complex relationship between A and B, touches just upon A.

And third, the Democratic proposal, as Senator ROTH pointed out, the only thing it does is move these problems out another 2 years beyond the next election.

Ours is a long-term solution.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. BIDEN. I will be necessarily brief, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I find it fascinating to hear none of my Republican colleagues stand up and say the Medicare system is bad. They say things like it is antiquated and outdated, but it serves the senior citizens well. How in the heck can that be done? How can it be antiquated, outdated, and serve the senior citizens well?

The second thing I would like to say is in response to my friend from Georgia talking about Ozzie and Harriet. Let me tell you how Ozzie and Harriet are going to work under this proposal. They are going to find out that their mother and their father on Medicare are going to pay $800 or $900 a year more come the year 2002. Then when grandmom and grandpop come to Ozzie and Harriet, because they have the same middle-class values as the Senator from Georgia and I do, and mom says, "Ozzie, I tell you what, these Republicans gave me a choice; I can pay $800 more or I can go into one of these HMO things, but I do not get to see Dr. Jones anymore," do you think Ozzie is going to stand there and say, "Hey, Mom, tough."

Ozzie is going to reach in his pocket, like all the Ozzies in this Chamber, and say, "Don't worry, mom. Even though I can't pay my taxes, even though I can't get my kid to school, I am going to increase my taxes, in effect, 800 bucks to pay for you and 800 bucks to pay for dad because I know your median income is about $18,000, so I will take care of it for you."

This is a tax increase for middle-class people who care about their parents.

And wait until we get to Medicaid, when Ozzie and Harriet get the phone call midyear and mom says, "Hon, they tell me I got to come home; it's June. I gotta come home from the nursing home." Watch what happens then to decent, honorable, middle-class people who are being crunched on the one hand by their children with the cost of a college education and the cost of maintaining their standard of living, which is slipping from them, and on the other hand, having to pick up the costs for mom and dad.

The last point I would like to make is one of the reasons to send this bill back, and that is, fraud, although Senator ROTH did much better than our House Members did. Everyone acknowledges there is about $34 billion a year in fraud in Medicare and Medicaid. This bill hardly touches the problem. This is the case, I might add, because health care providers do not like us dealing with fraud.

I have been working to combat health care fraud for over 3 years now—ever since I first introduced a health care fraud bill in the U.S. Senate and held hearings on health care fraud in the Senate Judiciary Committee.

I found in those hearings—and it has been reported elsewhere ever since—that fraud in the entire health care sector accounts for up to 10 percent of all health care spending.

The same, unfortunately, is true for Medicare.

The General Accounting Office estimates that fraud in the Medicare Program will total up to $18 billion this year alone. Medicaid fraud is another $16 billion.

Now, the vast majority of doctors and other health care providers are honest professionals. But, a few dishonest manipulators are ripping off the taxpayers and threatening the integrity of Medicare and Medicaid. A few cynical criminals are preying on those who need health care the most.

Going after these crooks and thieves who are defrauding the system must be our top priority. If this motion to commit is adopted—and I hope it will be—the first place we should try to find savings is in Medicare fraud.

Later in the debate, Mr. President, I will be joining Senator HARKIN and Senator GRAHAM in offering an amendment specifically on Medicare fraud—and I hope my colleagues will support that as well.

According to one estimate, for every dollar we spend fighting Medicare fraud, we save $10. One example of this:

in 1994, in the Middle District of Pennsylvania, the Justice Department recovered almost $7 million in fraudulent Medicare and Medicaid payments—more than what it cost to run the entire Justice Department office in that district.

This is an excellent return on our investment. So, before we raise costs to senior citizens—before we impose draconian cuts on benefits—we need to root the robbers out of Medicare.

Let me say up again that the Senate bill is much better than the House bill on this front. The House bill would make it much more difficult to prosecute health care fraud.

The House bill would change the standard of proof in a civil fraud case from "knows or should know" to "deliberate ignorance" or "reckless disregard."

The House bill would change the standard for enforcing the Federal antikickback laws. The current standard prohibits kickbacks when one of the purposes is "to induce" referrals. But, the House bill would prohibit kickbacks only "for the significant purpose of inducing referrals."

Fortunately, these provisions are not in the Senate bill. But, let me mention one thing about the Senate bill that troubles me from the fraud perspective.

The Senate bill would repeal all Federal safety protections for seniors in nursing homes. Last week, in Delaware, I held a forum on Medicare fraud. At that forum, Federal prosecutors said that elimination of nursing home standards would create a significant problem in both the investigation and prosecution of patient abuse.

In addition, Mr. President, I believe the antifraud provisions in the Senate bill could be—and should be—stronger.

We need to guarantee that there will be funding to fight fraud—so that there are more investigators and prosecutors in the field to go after the crooks.

We should collect the costs of our investigations from those who are found guilty. And, we should require the guilty to pay restitution to the victims.

We need to strengthen the penalties for those found guilty of health care fraud—including increased fines for those who violate the antikickback laws.

And, we should provide rewards for consumers and patients who uncover fraud.

So, Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support the motion to commit—so that fraud can be made the top priority in achieving Senate savings. And, I hope my colleagues will later adopt the Harkin-Graham-Biden antifraud amendment.

Now is not the time to make it easier for the crooks and con artists to get away with ripping off the American taxpayer. Instead, we need to renew and strengthen our efforts to fight Medicare fraud.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 3 minutes have expired.

Mr. BIDEN. I yield my time. Fraud is a problem. This bill does not address it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 1½ minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have been in the Chamber for 5 hours, and what we have not heard from the other side is the justification for a $245 billion tax cut for the wealthiest individuals, the wealthiest corporations and an increase in the taxes on the working families.

The challenge of the Rockefeller amendment is to join with us, Republicans and Democrats alike, put aside the tax cuts for the wealthy, put aside the tax breaks for the large corporations, put aside the tax increase on the working families, and join with us in taking the recommendations of the trustees' report for $89 billion, work with us for a program that will mean no increase in premiums, no increase in copays, no increase in deductibles, not lifting the age eligibility issue and assuring the senior citizens of a meaningful choice.

We can do that. We should do it. That is the challenge. That effectively is the challenge of the Rockefeller amendment, and I hope it will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, as I said at the beginning of this debate, all of this comes out of the Contract With America. All of the $270 billion cut in Medicare comes out of the desire to find the tax breaks for wealthy families and corporations.

When you are looking for that kind of money in the budget that we now have, you cannot look to the military. You cannot look to education. You have to look to the places where the money is. That is in Medicare, that is in Medicaid, to some degree in the earned income tax credit and, of course, to some degree in welfare.

So the Republicans have pounced upon Medicare, and they have decided not to solve the Medicare problem but to bury Medicare with the idea of making absolutely certain that they could get the most amount of money from Medicare for the purposes of their tax breaks for the wealthy that they possibly could.

This vote is about nothing else than that. If it is simply a matter of trying to solve the Medicare problem, then the Democratic solution in this amendment, which I hope people will support, is the answer: $89 billion will do it. If it is tax breaks for the wealthy, and that is what you are after, then you will want to vote against this amendment because that is not what we on this side are trying to do.

I hope my colleagues will understand the genesis and the nature of what this whole argument has been about from the very beginning.

This is a historic vote. It is a defining moment. It is an extremely dangerous moment for the seniors of our country.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry.

What is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has just under 8 minutes remaining. The Senator from West Virginia has 28 seconds remaining.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 7 minutes of that.

Mr. President, there is no question this is a defining moment. It is a defining moment because today and tomorrow we are going to decide whether we want to have a Medicare program for the senior citizens of the United States or whether we want, under this amendment, to protect one little part of it for a couple of years.

Which do the seniors really want? Do they want a Democratic proposal which essentially ignores more than half of the Medicare program, does not even talk about it? It is in big trouble. And then it says we are only going to reform the hospital program sufficiently to keep that fund solvent for how many years, I ask Dr. FRIST?

Mr. FRIST. Two additional years.

Mr. DOMENICI. Two additional years, two additional years.

Now, for all the talk on that side of the aisle, the truth of the matter is, they do not really care about senior citizens. They would rather win this fight than protect the senior citizens. They are crisscrossing America and using the airwaves to frighten them to death. And what is their proposal? Their proposal is to extend the trust fund 2 years.

Now, let me suggest, nobody should believe with that dose of reality that this is anything more than a political exercise. It has little or nothing to do with American senior citizens. It has to do with trying to win at the ballot box. And let me say to the seniors, once we have resolved this issue, you will find the reality and you will not be duped by the debates of today. Rather, you will be convinced by the reality of tomorrow, which means we are going to have a Medicare system that is solvent, that we can afford, and that our young people who are helping pay for it can be proud of.

Now, there is no question that once again it is proven that the other side of the aisle, the Democrats, would rather tax and spend than to reduce expenditures and cut the American people's taxes. For what else is this? If there are no tax cuts in this bill, part A of Medicare goes broke. Take them off the table and it goes broke. That is not this Senator speaking. That is the trustees, four of whom work for the President. Forget the tax cut, it goes broke. So what are they talking about? They are talking about a political issue, not the reality of what we as leaders must do.

Frankly, there is no question that the trustees talked to us about both parts of Medicare. Seniors, you understand very few of you go to hospitals every year, but a lot of you go to see your doctors. The hospital coverage is the part that will be protected for 2 additional years, but the rest of the program will be, according to the Democratic version, will be left in the doldrums.

The trustees told us both part A and part B are in serious, serious trouble. And we have explained to everyone, we do not have to change things a lot to make this a far better program for the future and give seniors a choice rather than have them rattled by the bureaucracy and paperwork that frustrates them more than the doctors that serve them.

If you have ever heard a senior complain, they say, "Why do we have to fill out all these papers? We don't even understand them. We are getting defrauded. We can never find out what it costs." That will all change once we defeat this amendment today and move on with the Republican agenda.

Let me make one last remark. We used to hear that it was the House plan that was going to give all these tax cuts to the rich. And we used to come down here and say, "What plan are you talking about?" They would say, "The House plan." They cannot talk about it anymore because right here before us is the Senate plan. And the Senate plan does not cut taxes for the rich as described on the floor of the Senate by the distinguished Democratic Senators. Let me say, once and for all, 90 percent of the tax cut in this bill—not 60 percent, not 50 percent—90 percent will go to Americans with $100,000 in income or less. And that is not DOMENICI, that is the Joint Tax Committee—90 percent.

Now, they can get up and hypothetically say we are giving the rich back tax cuts. Ninety percent go to $100,000 earners and less. Are those the rich people of America or are those the people with families that need some help in raising their children? That is what this Senate bill is about. We have decided that our families raising children ought to get a better economic break because years ago we used to give them a break. We took it away.

In fact, I would close by saying a piece of this tax bill goes to correct what the Democrats did last time. They raised the marital deduction. They made it cheaper to be unmarried than married with the same income, another enticement not to get married, not to stay together and raise your kids because you get a break if you do not.

We have fixed that in this bill. Is that helping rich people of America or is that helping thousands of Americans that would like the benefit of not being treated inferior because they happen to file jointly as husband and wife?

It seems to me we are on the right side of these issues. And all we are going to hear is political rhetoric, half-truths. And by the time we are finished, and this program is implemented, I suggest it will be those prophets of gloom who predict what is unpredictable—because it will not happen—they will be the ones to suffer, not the Senators on this side who are going to stand up and be counted today.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DASCHLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I will use leader time to accommodate my remarks.

Mr. President, I was told that the previous speaker just has indicated that it is his view that Democrats do not care about senior citizens. If that is what he said, I am very disappointed. He knows better than that. In fact, the issues in this debate are about finding the best approach for senior citizens, and finding a way to ensure that the commitment we made three decades ago will remain for as many decades as this country exists. These are the issues.

I think it is all too convenient—all too convenient—that at the very time our Republican colleagues propose a $245 billion tax cut, it just so happens they also propose to cut Medicare $270 billion.

I know there are some who say it is sheer coincidence. I know there are some who say we could come up with the tax cut or the tax break revenue in other ways. But I also know that there are not many pools out there that are big enough to accommodate a tax cut, a tax break of that size. This is the biggest rollback in health benefits to senior citizens in American history. This is the biggest financial transfer from low- and middle-income families to the upper-income brackets in American history. So no one should be misled. This will be the most important vote we will cast during the budget debate.

So, Mr. President it is with a great deal of concern, grave concern, that we offer this amendment this afternoon. There is no question about what this proposal in the reconciliation package means for senior citizens. I do not think there is any doubt. Any analytical report will show that this proposal will cause senior couples to pay more than $2,800 more in Medicare premiums and deductibles.

We know it will double premiums. We know it will double deductibles. We know it will increase the age of Medicare eligibility from 65 to 67. We know that it eliminates protections for seniors by providing doctors and managed care plans with opportunities to charge seniors more than a Medicare-approved rate. We know all of that. There is no doubt about it. No dispute.

No one should be misled. This proposal is going to hurt. And if it were in some way designed to really reform Medicare, and to bring the trust fund into solvency in ways beyond what the Democrats have offered, I could understand it. If we were in a position where it was this plan or bankruptcy, I could see that we might have to suck it in and do it.

But we know with certainty that is not the case. The actuaries and the trustees have told us that we need $89 billion to keep the trust fund solvent into the year 2006. Not a penny more. In an analysis of the House plan to cut $270 billion, the actuaries also indicated a solvency date in 2006. Where does the extra money go?

Again, no one should be misled. This is not a question about solvency. It is a question about where we go for revenue to pay for the tax cut that we have been debating now for several months.

Let me just say, Mr. President, the damage done under this plan reaches beyond seniors. The problem with the health care provisions in the reconciliation package is that 9 million people in rural America could find their clinics closed when they need health care in the future. Under these proposals, we know the hurt will be widespread.

We know that in South Dakota 10 to 15 rural hospitals would likely close.

We know that these proposals will undermine health care provided in rural America.

We know that huge cuts to teaching hospitals will decimate medical research and training programs.

We know that up to $100 billion is going to be cost-shifted on to those with insurance in the private sector, according to the Lewin-VHI study.

We know all of these things, and more. So this is not just an issue for senior citizens. This is an issue affecting rural America, and every single person with private insurance in the country.

And so, Mr. President, I just hope before we cast this vote that no one misunderstands our choices. If we choose to protect the trust fund by ensuring its solvency, to recognize the importance of this issue to senior citizens and their families, to say no to tax breaks in areas where they are not necessary, and to say no to tax breaks to the wealthy, then the choice is very clear. Democrats have presented an alternative that makes sense, that ensures solvency, that assures, in the long term, senior citizens are going to continue to get the best care that we could possibly provide and that protects a commitment that is now more than 30 years old. We owe them that. We ought to adopt this amendment.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. How much time remains and who has time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-seven seconds to the Senator from New Mexico: 28 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator from West Virginia want to save his 28 seconds?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield back my time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I just want to finish wrapping up. There is a suggestion when we talk about how much is being reformed, how many dollars are going to be saved, nobody talks about how much we are going to spend. The senior citizens ought to know we are really not intent on denying them money for health care. In fact, over 7 years on Medicare alone, we will spend $1.65 trillion. In the seventh year, we will spend $104 billion more than in the year it starts. It will go up to $104 billion more, a total of $1.65 trillion, which we cannot hardly understand.

With that, I yield back any time I might have and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

AMENDMENT NO. 2949 TO THE INSTRUCTIONS OF THE MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I rise to offer an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] proposes an amendment numbered 2949 to the instructions to the motion to commit S. 1357 to the Finance Committee.

Strike all after "Finance" and insert the following: "With instructions to report the bill back to the Senate forthwith to include the findings of the Trustees of the Federal Insurance Trust Fund that, in order to save Medicare and to keep the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund solvent for future generations, Congress must address both the long-term and short-term shortfalls in the Medicare program."

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the underlying amendment that is before the body suggests that this measure be returned to the committee and deal only with the amount of money that would need to keep the fund from going bankrupt or being insolvent through the year 2006.

That figure is based on their intermediate projections. I as one am familiar, as I think most Members are familiar, with our process. We do a conservative projection. We do an optimistic projection. We do an intermediate projection. I might remind Members that in Social Security projections, for most of the years we have had those Social Security projections, the optimistic projection has not proved to be correct. As a matter of fact, the intermediate projection has not proved to be correct. As a matter of fact, the conservative projection has not proved to be correct. Through most of the years we have had those Social Security projections, as a matter of fact, even the conservative one proved to be far too optimistic.

None of us have a crystal ball, but I think it would be foolish in the first order for us to assume that the $89 billion is going to be enough to keep this fund solvent through the year 2006. If history is to be the judge in looking at the projections we have had, it is quite clear that we may well see this fund go insolvent if the underlying amendment is adopted.

I think men and women of honesty and fortitude who have discussed this issue today can honestly disagree about the projections. It could be the intermediate projection is just fine. It could be that the conservative projection is far too optimistic, as history as has shown. But one thing I do know and one thing is incontrovertible. If you read the report of the trustees—and let me remind the Members, the trustees are appointed by the President of the United States and all but one of them are Democrats; that is, of the seven trustees, all seven have been appointed by the President and all but one of them are Democrats—they say in their report that after the 10 years that is contemplated in the underlying amendment that this fund goes belly up, even if you do the $89 billion with the intermediate projections.

They say, in the long run, it does not meet the 7-year solvency test and they say, moreover, it becomes much, much more difficult to meet it, as you have the baby boomers coming in after this 2006 period.

So the suggestion in the underlying amendment is that you should deal only with the current crisis and close your eyes to the real insolvency that is coming in Medicare. I believe Americans deserve better. Frankly, Mr. President, I think Americans expect better. If you go out to the working men and women of this country and you tell them that we are going to come up with a program that will let you pay taxes for another 10 years, but at the end of 10 years, according to our intermediate projections, there will not be anything left for you to collect on, I think they would be outraged.

Frankly, I think they deserve to be outraged. The proposal that is before the body says, "Let us slip by for now, make working people pay another 10 years and then have nothing for them when we get to the end of 2006."

That is not HANK BROWN projecting with regard to the Medicare trust fund. That is not a group of Republicans projecting. That is a report by Presidential appointees themselves, six of the seven who are Democrats, all appointed by the President of the United States. That is not a Republican projection; that, if you want one, is a Democratic projection.

I think we need to do better than that. I think we need to say to the working men and women of this country, "We're not only going to take your money for the next 10 years," which the current law does, "but we're going to make sure there is something there for you when we finish."

That is what this amendment does. This amendment makes it quite clear that what we are to look at is not just the short term, but the long term as well. I believe that is a proper focus. I believe it meets our commitment.

We have a choice with this amendment. We can go with the short-term outlook that leaves the fund insolvent after 10 years, or we can go with the long-term outlook that requires that this end up being solvent in the long run as well.

Mr. President, I suppose one of the saddest things to see, with respect to Federal programs which we have put in place for working men and women, where they rely on the Federal Government themselves, is the Government being in a position where we cannot meet our obligations. This is by a Federal Government that, through ERISA, has come forward and said, with regard to private pension plans, that you are required to make them financially sound, and we put in place very tough rules on the private sector that forces them to fund them, with extreme penalties on anyone who would not.

I do not think anyone would fail to be uncomfortable with the proposition that says in the private sector we are going to mandate these to be actuarially sound, but in the public sector, trust us. Why would people not want to trust us? For exactly the reason for the underlying amendment. The amendment says we will fix it in the short term and leave a problem for the long term. That is the difference in the private sector. What we have done is impose on them burdens to be sound, to fund their obligations, and to face up to them. And in the public sector what we have done with the underlying amendment is say we are only going to fix it up and get by, and at the end of 10 years, after taking your money, there will not be a balance left there to help you meet your obligations.

I believe we have to do better. We have had a lot of people quoted here. Let me quote the President's nominees on this board. These are the conclusions of the board of trustees:

Under the trustees' intermediate assumptions—

My own view is that the assumptions are far too optimistic.

Under the trustees' intermediate assumptions, the present financing schedule for the HI program is sufficient to ensure the payment of benefits only over the next 7 years.

As a result, the HI trust fund does not meet the trustees' short-range test of financial adequacy. Under the high-cost alternative, the fund is projected to be exhausted in the year 2001, approximately 6 years from present. Under the low-cost alternative, the conservative one, the trust fund is projected to be exhausted in the year 2006. Currently, about four covered workers support each HI enrollee. This ratio will begin to decline very rapidly in the next century. By the middle of that century, only about two covered workers will support each enrollee.

Let me pause here, Mr. President. I want to reiterate that because it underlines the problem we have and the reason we should address it. "By the middle of the next century"—quoting the Democratic majority on the board—"only about two covered workers will support each enrollee."

Mr. President, that is our problem and that is what needs to be addressed long term.

Mr. GREGG. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BROWN. Yes.

Mr. GREGG. I think the Senator highlighted a critical point, which was not made by the Senator or by anybody on our side, but made by the trustees of the hospital insurance trust fund, three of whom are members of this administration—Secretary Rubin, Secretary Shalala, and Secretary Reich—which is that the trust fund is headed toward insolvency, and that in order to correct the insolvency, there would have to be a significant adjustment in the trust fund, either in the way of revenue or benefit costs.

I would like to ask the Senator from Colorado if he noted also on page 27 that they put a number on what that adjustment would have to be. Their number, as I read it, is .65 percentage adjustment in payroll rates for employees and employers, which translates into $387 billion of adjustment which must occur over a 7-year period. This is the trustees speaking, saying an adjustment must occur over a 7-year period in order to get actuarial solvency, under their intermediate assumptions—which you say are rather rosy—for a 25-year period, which they consider to be a short time. They would rather it be for 75 years. That means when the other side comes forward with a proposal that only does $89 billion, they are missing the mark, according to their own trustees, by somewhere in the vicinity of $300 billion. Is that not correct?

Mr. BROWN. Let me say to the distinguished Senator that I believe his analysis is correct. It points out the enormous problem we have here. We will have an absolutely catastrophic impact if we do not address it now. The longer we wait, the more difficult the problem gets. I am reminded by staff that we need to make it clear in this amendment that we are exempting part B of the Medicare.

AMENDMENT NO. 2949, AS MODIFIED

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modification of my amendment that clarifies that aspect.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 2949), as modified, is as follows:

I modify the text of my amendment to read as follows: "with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate forthwith providing that all savings to Part B of Medicare made by the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 shall be transferred from the general fund of the Treasury to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund; to include the findings of the trustees of the Federal Insurance Trust Fund that, in order to save Medicare and to keep the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund solvent for future generations, Congress must address both the long-term and short-term shortfalls in the Medicare program."

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I want to continue, if I may, to make available in the RECORD the exact words of the board of trustees. I think they have credibility not only because this is a contentious issue between parties and they happen to be—six of them—Democratic members, all appointed by the President. I think that renders at least—even though they are partisan in their majority, it brings certain credibility to these deliberations. Frankly, I think that for most Americans looking at this, that is the first question they will have about this aspect of it.

Continuing on with this:

Not only are the anticipated reserves and financing of the HI program inadequate to offset the demographic change, but under all sets of assumptions, the trust fund is projected to become exhausted even before the major demographic shift begins to occur.

What we are talking about here, Mr. President, is before you have that adjustment from four workers down to two workers supporting the persons who receive the benefits—even before that demographic change begins, you have problems with the solvency of the fund. The trustees go on:

The trustees note that some steps have been taken to reduce the rate of growth in payments to hospitals, including the implementation of prospective payment systems for most hospitals, and experience to date suggests that this mechanism, together with provisions enacted by Congress, has restrained the growth in hospital payments that improve the efficiency of the hospital industry.

In their overview, they continue on, and I think this is more significant for our purposes:

Extension of this payment system to other providers of hospital insurance services in further legislation limits payment increases to all hospital insurance providers, could postpone the depletion of the HI trust fund for about another 5 to 10 years. Much more substantial steps would be required, however, to prevent trust fund depletion beyond 2010 when the baby boom generation begins to reach age 65.

Mr. President, that is the nub of it. The trustees have put their finger on it. They hit it exactly. You can do a quick fix for 5, 10 years. That is, apparently, what is behind the thinking of the underlying amendment. But in the Democratic trustees' own words:

Much more substantial steps would be required, however, to prevent trust fund depletion beyond 2010 when the baby boom generation begins to reach age 65. Under present law, as shown by the projections in this report, the Hospital Insurance program costs are expected to far exceed revenues over the 75 year long-range period under any reasonable set of assumptions.

Under any reasonable set of assumption, Mr. President. As a result, the hospital insurance program is severely out of financial balance, and the trustees believe that the Congress must take timely action to establish long-term financial stability for the program.

The President's own nominees are admonishing Congress to take timely action to establish long-term financial stability.

I have listened on this floor to Members stand up and say, "Heavens, we do not need to take long-term timely action. No, that is not what the trustees said." Mr. President, it is in their report. It is in black and white. It is on page 4.

The cost to the hospital insurance program is projected to increase over 1.6 percent of gross domestic product in calendar year 1994, to 4.4 percent of GDP in the year 2065. This rapid growth is attributable primarily to anticipated increases in hospital admissions and in the complexity of the services provided, together with expected changes in demographics.

With the magnitude of the projected actuary deficit in the hospital insurance program and the high probability that the hospital insurance trust fund will be exhausted in less than 10 years, the trustees urge the Congress to take additional actions designed to control hospital insurance program costs and to address the projected financial imbalance in both the short range and the long range through specific program legislation. As part of a broad-based health care reform, the trustees believe that prompt, effective, and decisive action is necessary.

Mr. President, how much more clearly can it be said? The President's own nominees, six of the seven of them Democrats, say it as clearly as is humanly possible: You have to take prompt, effective, and decisive action.

What is before the Senate is a suggestion we take a short-term view, that we patch it up for 10 years and leave people who paid in all their life without any coverage. That is not responsible. It does not conform with the guidelines set forth by the President's own nominees.

They go on:

To facilitate this effort, the trustees further recommend legislation to establish an advisory council for the Medicare program. This action would help provide critical information that will be needed by the administration and Congress as they deliberate the future of the hospital insurance program.

Let me pause and simply mention this: The Republican leader himself asked the President—he was joined by the Speaker of the House—asked the President to help set up a commission to work this through, as it was done in Social Security, to come up with an answer in this area that was bipartisan, that would lend integrity to the commitments we have made to the men and women of this country who have paid into this program—some of them for almost all of their lives.

The President was unwilling to cooperate in that venture in a timely manner to get an alternative before Congress.

Now, Mr. President, the reality is this: This should be a bipartisan effort. I do not believe that my Democratic colleagues want this fund to go bankrupt in the long run. The American public is wise enough to know that many of the things each party says about the other are somewhat taken with the heat of the moment and not necessarily meant seriously.

I do not believe Democrats, any more than Republicans, want this program to go belly up. I believe the vast majority of Americans, whether Democrats or Republicans, would be shocked to know that this program will be out of funds in 10 years and we would not have taken care of it.

I do not think anybody—Democrat, Republican, or independent—feels that is responsible. I honestly believe that the people of this country expect us to come up with the long-term answer. That is why this amendment is offered. It talks about looking at the long run, not just the short run.

Mr. President, that is the essence of what this debate is all about. Members will have an option. They can vote "no" on this amendment and opt for a short-term solution only; or they can vote "yes" on this and help ensure that a long-term solution is in sight.

Mr. President, let me add a word of warning. The amounts of money in this bill are estimated to be adequate with other changes that would be made in the long run to help put us on sound footing and make it actuarily sound.

Mr. President, I must say, my own belief is that this does not go far enough. My own belief is that we should not be looking at the immediate projection. My own belief is we should do much more than what is suggested in this bill.

While we accept the immediate funds, and some would say what we need to do is have an $89 billion fix and others would say a fix in excess of $270 billion, my own estimate is that the problem is much greater than that: that the projections are far too optimistic.

If we are to be responsible, we should not only do what is in this bill, we should set about seriously in an effort to make sure that we have solved the problem for all time, that we have adopted the actuarial soundness principles that we impose on the private sector. We ought to be willing to stand up and do as this Congress does—begin to live by the same laws that we impose on others.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON). The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I might consume.

Mr. President, no one is going to be fooled by this amendment. Our Republican friends are scared of this vote. They do not want this vote to happen. It is Halloween and they are running scared. It is clear the people who are running scared are the Republicans trying to cut the Medicare.

No one is fooled by this Halloween trick. The American people know what is at stake. Medicare is at stake and Democrats are trying to save it.

Now, Mr. President, I have been on the floor since the first hours, about 10:30 this morning, when we began that debate. I have listened hour after hour after hour after hour how our Republican friends justify the measure before the U.S. Senate. They talked about the different proposals of it. Why it was fair, why it was just, why it was equitable, how it was going to enhance health care for our senior citizens.

That is what they have talked about. They would not talk about the $240 billion tax cut for the wealthiest individuals, for the corporations, the tax increases on working families, the fact that they are raising the eligibility age from 65 to 67, the pressures that will be on the senior citizens in reducing their options to be able to choose their own doctors.

No, they did not address those particular issues. They did not address those particular issues. They said what we have here makes sense. It makes sense for those who are interested in the balanced budget. It makes sense for those who are interested in quality health care.

Now, our Republican friends have come, on top of this amendment that was offered by the Senator from West Virginia, and effectively eliminated, emasculated in a way which would have, if it had been accepted, preserved what had been recommended by the trustees, the $89 billion, and ensured there would be no increase in the copays and deductible premiums for our seniors.

But, no, they would not give the Senate a chance to vote on that. Instead, they are here saying, instead of your amendment, why not just have a study about the medium- and long-term interests of the Medicare system.

We are all for it. Why did you not do it when you had a chance? You had the votes to do it. Why did you not do that earlier? You could have reported out some kind of measure in the meantime, but you did not do it.

All Members are concerned about what is going to happen after 10 years of solvency for the Medicare system. Many of us believed that what you are concerned about and have offered recommendations and suggestions, when you recognize that there is nothing in this legislation that is going to do anything about providing preventive health care for our senior citizens. I am interested in that. What about the 30 percent of overutilization in our hospitals because of Medicare entries into the hospitals? I am interested in that.

What are we doing to expand long-term care? Or home care for our seniors? I am interested in that. What are we doing about prescription drugs so we can keep people out of the hospital and treat people in their homes and save billions of dollars? I am interested in that. Many of us are interested in that.

None of those issues was addressed by our Republican friends. No, none of those issues that would have had an impact on the medium- and long-term health care needs, none of those issues was addressed.

But, instead, after 5 hours of debate and justification of their own position, they refused—absolutely refused—the effort of many of us who want to try to protect Medicare, who want to defend Medicare. If they are so correct, as we have been listening to them say for 5 hours, why will they not let us vote? Why will they not go and make the speeches they have been making here on the floor of the U.S. Senate, back into the nursing homes, back in the senior citizens homes, back in the plants and factories, and to the elderly people all over this country, if they believe that they are so right about it? If they think the merits are on their side, why do they take this and defend it for 5 hours and then say, "But we will not defend it any longer. We will not defend it anymore. We will not defend it at all. We are going to try and emasculate what you are trying to do with regard to the protection of Medicare."

You do not have to be around here a long time to understand what this is all about. You only have to be around here about 2 or 3 months to know exactly what it is about, and that is you do not want to vote on it. You do not want to know about it.

You came up with this proposal without a hearing on the Medicare cuts. You refuse to listen to the elderly people about the impact it was going to have on them. You jam this through the Finance Committee and the Budget Committee. And you say that it is justified to provide $240 billion to the wealthy individuals and corporations and increase the taxes for working families.

You have done all that. You have it going your way, Senators. We have a time limitation, restriction in terms of being able to take some days and provide some debate on this so the country can know what it is all about. You have it going all your way. You can try to jam us because you have the votes that way.

But, no, you refuse to even let us have a vote on accountability. Come on. Come on. Your program did not make any sense before and you are now demonstrating here on the floor of the U.S. Senate it does not make any sense to you either, because you refuse to defend it. You refuse to defend it.

We listened to all those speeches about how correct you were. Why will you not let us have a vote on it? No. No, we are, instead, going to have a vote on something else, a long-term study on it. We are interested in long-term studies. We are interested in intermediate studies. What you do not want to face is your $245 billion tax cut that is coming out of the Medicare premiums, deductibles and copays for the seniors of the country—you do not, and refuse to let us have a vote on it.

Why? Why is it? Why have the Republicans not spoken about that? Why did you not at least say, "OK, we have addressed the short term and medium term of the Medicare. Now we think it is right to get a tax cut for the wealthiest individuals and we are proud to defend that position." I have not heard that. I have not heard that speech. I do not think we are going to hear it because it is indefensible, when you are looking at what they are attempting to do, and that is to undermine the Medicare system which has been a compact with the seniors of this country since 1965.

You know, when I look at the conduct of our colleagues and friends I can kind of understand why they do not want to vote on it. I was here in 1964 when the Medicare amendment was defeated. I was here 8 months later, in 1965, when it passed. I was here when 19 Members who voted "no" in the fall of 1964 voted "yes" in April of 1965. Do you know what had intervened? An election. An election intervened. Our colleagues who were opposed to it then went back home and gave the same kinds of comments that were given, evidently, by the majority leader last night, according to TOM HARKIN, saying the majority leader was proud to oppose Medicare when it first came up and is still proud to oppose it. Those were the speeches then.

And then they got a little awakening because the seniors knew what was out there. The American people understood what was out there. Not just the elderly, but their sons and daughters had a fundamental recognition that, when people grow older in our society, they have additional kinds of health care needs and, by and large, their incomes go down. That is what happens, not only industrial societies, but in other societies around the world. And, therefore, if we are going to be a compassionate Nation and care about our seniors—the men and women who fought in the wars, brought the country out of the Depression, sacrificed for their children, many of whom are sitting in the U.S. Senate—that there was going to be a compact. They were going to pay in and then they were going to be able to receive out.

The Democratic alternative is not perfect, but it provides for the fundamental integrity of the Social Security system for 10 years. That has been testified to by the trustees themselves. But what we have not done is included the tax goodies for wealthy individuals.

You ought to be ashamed of yourself. I am not surprised that you do not want to vote on this turkey. I can understand that. Refuse? I would certainly hope the leader would say, if we are not going to get the vote on this one, we are going to keep coming back and coming back and coming back, every single time that we have in the 10 hours left, and we are going to make every attempt to get a vote on it and let our Republican friends pull every kind of trick in the book on it and let us take that issue all across this country and let you defend it. You cannot defend it. You cannot defend it.

You come up here and say, "Let's get back to that trustees' report now. Let's see what is going to happen in 10, 15, 20 years down there." It is wonderful to hear all those voices now. We were attempting to deal with the medium- and long-term interests of this health care system in our country a year or so ago. It is wonderful suddenly to find they are all interested in this now, really interested in long-term care.

Where are the initiatives in home care? Where is a single proposal from someone on the other side of the aisle on prescription drugs? That is a No. 1 problem for our seniors. Where is it? If you provide prescription drug assistance for our seniors you will probably do as much or more in terms of reducing long-term costs, because seniors will be able to stay home instead of going to the hospitals in order to get their prescription drugs. And that is going to be true in a wide variety of different areas. Sure we need some advice and counsel on those.

What are we doing on home care, so we can give alternatives to our seniors whether they want to go into a nursing home or remain home and get some help and assistance? Where is the Senators' proposal on that? Where are these proposals on it, to demonstrate that suddenly we are interested in the long-term interests of our elderly people? Why do we not keep them out of high-cost facilities? Where are your proposals on that? Where are these proposals, that, suddenly we really care about these long-term interests?

They are not there. They are not there because at the core of it, this program on Medicare has not been a program that you supported over its history, and the record shows it. Suddenly, to find out that you care about this after, in the House of Representatives, they used $80 billion of part A for their tax program, and then a month later said, "Oh, my goodness, there is some difficulty in the insurance fund." And some said,

"Don't you think we ought to go back and restore the $80 billion?"

"Oh, no, we are going to need that for the tax cut, a tax cut which is even greater in the House of Representatives."

The reason we are debating this is they had no opportunity to do it in the House of Representatives—none, closed down. Here we have 1 hour, and were thinking we were going to at least have a chance to get some kind of result, at least get a chance so we can speak on these issues, to try to work out, in the time that is available, a series of amendments which would be defining in terms of what this debate is all about.

But we are even denied that opportunity, evidently. We are denied that opportunity on the first amendment out: denied the chance to have a rollcall vote on this issue.

So, Mr. President, I would have suggested to the minority leader and to our friends, Senator ROCKEFELLER and Senator EXON, that if they have that amendment and just use that as an add-on, as an add-on to this amendment, to have the language included. I had it here a moment ago. It is not the wording. Words can be worked out, that you send it back the way we suggested that it be sent back with a report for the $89 billion, and then we also include, if you want, recommendations in terms of meeting long-term care.

I do not understand why the Senator is so concerned about it, why that route would not be acceptable. But, oh, no, you cannot have it that way. We are not that concerned. We are not that concerned about medium and long term. But the Senator is hoping the whole thing will go down, that all of it will go down.

Do not fool us. We know what is going on around here. I do not know if the American people do. I hope that they have been watching—at least today—this debate and discussion to try to find out who is attempting to defend the Medicare system, who believes in it, who, by history and tradition, is a party of defending it and supporting it. They will know because they sure will not know it on the first proposition in defense of the majority leader's legislation that is before us.

So, Mr. President, everyone ought to have a very clear idea. I am sure the seniors do. There may be those around here who think they do not just because they are challenged with various physical illnesses and have difficulty sometimes in being able to hear all of the different words or read because their sight is facing difficulty, or unable to get around. They know when they are being fooled or when there is an attempt to be made a fool of. They can look through.

If they take the time to read this debate over the time here today, they will know who is on their side. It is not those who have promulgated this amendment, but it is those who have said, take back the giveaways, take back those tax breaks to the wealthy individuals and corporations, take back that age restriction for an eligibility increase, take back those additional taxes on working families. And let us get something out here that will assure our seniors that there will not be increases in the copays and deductibles, and that they will have the choice of their doctors.

We have asked to try to work that out together so we can have something that will deal with the economic challenges, but, most importantly, assure that our senior citizens are going to have their contract maintained with the American people and with the Congress.

Mr. President, I see my friend from Minnesota. I am glad to divide up the time.

How much time is on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's side has 42 minutes and 45 seconds, and the majority has 39 minutes and 34 seconds.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would be pleased to alternate, if my colleagues want to do that.

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, we have taken more time than the other side. I will try to be brief so the distinguished Senator from Minnesota can go ahead. I simply want to respond to the discussion with regard to taxes.

My amendment does not deal with the tax portion. Mr. President, I am firmly committed to making sure the money in Medicare stays in Medicare, that none of it gets used for any other purposes. Frankly, that is what is in the bill.

Let me suggest this. Sometimes people organize demonstrations and they make the signs in advance, and it turns out the signs do not have anything to do with what the reality is. That is what has happened here. They made up their signs about tax cuts for millionaires, and it turned out they no longer apply. What they have done is used the signs anyway.

Mr. President, the biggest portion of this bill deals with the child tax credit, and it makes clear that higher income people do not get it. They not only do not get what everybody else gets, they do not get anything at all from the child tax credit. So the discussion about how you are somehow helping the millionaires out is quite misplaced, at least in this Member's view. What they have done basically is made up their signs in advance and have not been able to adjust them.

Mr. WELLSTONE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I really welcome this debate, and in the spirit of debate, colleagues, I say to my colleague from Colorado that the problem with the tax credit proposal is that it is not refundable and that if you are a family with an income under $29,000 a year, you are not going to receive it. It makes no sense whatsoever.

Where is the standard of fairness? In my State of Minnesota, we are talking about a significant percentage of the population, families with incomes under $29,000 a year. If it is not a refundable credit, it does not do any good at all for that family.

Mr. President, I just want to respond to a couple of comments by my colleague that were made earlier. And in the main, what I would like to speak to is this argument that somehow part of this debate is a scare tactic or this is an effort to "terrorize senior citizens."

Mr. President, I think that, as a matter of fact, that is a bit insulting to senior citizens. It is a bit insulting to citizens in our country, period. People have their own wisdom.

I was in a debate the other day with several of my colleagues at U.S. News and World Report. I said, forget all of this discussion about scare tactics. I wish we were talking about scare tactics so I would not use it. People have their own intelligence. People can figure this out for themselves.

And, one more time, we have an amendment here that now is in the second degree. Why are my colleagues afraid to have an up-or-down vote on this? We had the debate. Now the rubber meets the road.

We have been saying to you that $89 billion—which is what you needed for the trust fund—what you are doing is cutting $270 billion for Medicare.

In addition, we have said, what is the meaning of $270 billion of cuts in Medicare juxtaposed with tax giveaways, in the main, and $245 billion that goes to people with higher income?

You can vote that up or down, colleagues. It is time now to match your votes with your rhetoric. Why are you afraid of an up-or-down vote?

Mr. President, the only people that are terrorized here right now are some of my colleagues on the other side who are in terror that they might have to vote what they have said they believe all along.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator agree with me that if our friends on other side of the aisle are really interested in reforming Medicare, they would drop the tax cuts for the wealthy and large corporations, drop that, and let us see if we cannot find some way of trying to deal with this in a medium and long-term way?

Does the Senator believe, and is it the Senator's view, if they were prepared to do that, that this particular proposal would be the difference?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would say to my colleague from Massachusetts his question is right on the mark, because what people are saying in Minnesota and around the country is, please permit us to be suspicious because you are cutting much more than is necessary for the trust fund, and we think you are making Medicare the piggyback for tax cuts for wealthy people. And if, in fact, you would give up on these tax giveaways—and we were not talking about the $245 billion—then I think we can get down to a discussion where we can focus on what we need to do. I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, for real reform.

Real reform, Mr. President, is universal coverage. Real reform is making sure that elderly people can afford prescription drug costs. Real reform is home-based care so that people can live at home in as near a normal circumstance as possible, with dignity, and not have to be institutionalized. Real reform is where there is a standard of fairness.

I tell you what is not real reform—reverse reform, where we cut $270 billion from Medicare and at the same time we have a $245 billion tax giveaway.

I have been in debates with colleagues, and they have said, I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, over and over and over again, no, this is all for Medicare. This is what we need to do. This makes Medicare solvent. This reforms Medicare. This is for the good. This amendment puts them to the test. If that is the case, then vote against this amendment. Vote it up or down.

I find it just unbelievable that after all the speeches that have been given and after all the reassurances that have been given, my colleagues are unwilling to vote on this. That is what the second-degree amendment is all about. It is a huge dodge from a vote that people should have the courage to make.

One more time, in my State of Minnesota, 50 percent of senior citizens have incomes under $20,000 a year. In my State of Minnesota, many of our elderly live in rural communities, and those hospitals and those clinics have a huge percentage of their patient payment from Medicare and they do not have a profit margin. If you go ask those providers—has anybody asked them? Anybody asked the clinics? Anybody asked the doctors? Anybody asked the nurses? Anybody asked the physician's assistants much less the beneficiaries? They will tell you that they cannot survive some of these reductions. They will not be there to deliver health care.

So this is not about scare tactics, I say to my colleagues. This is about some unpleasant realities. And one more time, we have in our State 635,000 Medicare beneficiaries. It will be about 685,000, or 675,000, I believe, by 2002. Later on, we will talk about medical assistance. We have 425,000 beneficiaries of medical assistance. It will go up to 535,000. And anybody who wants to look at the policy carefully and understand its impact on citizens understands that the way you view health care is you look at the number of people who are going to be eligible, what the existing benefits are that people will need to have for quality health care and what the medical inflation level is, and these reductions fall far short of that.

I say to my colleagues, you just do not have the credible argument. You cannot cut $270 billion from Medicare at the same time you have $245 billion of tax giveaways, mainly going to wealthy people. You cannot do it. It makes no sense. And with this amendment, introduced by Senator ROCKEFELLER, we give you the chance to vote on what you say you believe in. We give you the chance for an up-or-down vote where you can match all of your speeches with your votes, where you can look the American people in the eye and you can say we believe that all $270 billion is necessary in order to, as you say, save Medicare.

I do not think you are saving Medicare. I think in the name of saving Medicare you are destroying part of Medicare. That is what this vote would have been about. I think the only people who are terrorized are colleagues on the other side of the aisle who are terrorized that they have to vote what they have been talking about for the last 6 or 7 months.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Again for a question. If this is such a great deal for the seniors, why do all of the seniors themselves and their principal representatives, the American Association of Retired Persons, Council of Senior Citizens, National Committee to Preserve Social Security/Medicare testify in opposition to the plan? If this is such a great deal—we listened to these Senators talk about it this morning for 5 hours—5 hours—and then the time came to call the roll. Oh, no, you cannot even have a vote on your amendment, even though we think it is so great. If it is so great, why will they not defend that back home to their seniors? Why will they not be able to go into their senior citizens homes and be able to justify it?

They cannot do it. They cannot do it. And the proposal and the idea that we want to look at medium or long term, they could have done that before. They could have reported out something with those kinds of provisions. But no, suddenly when they are just about to call the roll, they pull this amendment out and send it to the desk.

As we have said before, this is Halloween, and it is trick or treat time. This amendment is a trick on the seniors of this country, and it should not be accepted.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, let me respond and then just simply yield the floor to some of my other colleagues who would like to speak.

First of all, let me just say to the Senator from Massachusetts and my colleague from Iowa—if I could get their attention just for a moment—it is very interesting; you asked the question, if this is so good for senior citizens and represents such good reform, with all the promises that have been made, how come all of the organizations and all the people who are going to be affected by this are opposed to it?

The answer is there is a huge disconnect between these proposals and the lives of people back in the States. These proposals are very reckless with the lives of senior citizens. And it is the intelligence of senior citizens in Minnesota not because anybody is leading them around by their noses; it is their own intelligence and their own insight which tells them that these proposals are not in their best interests.

I have to say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that your refusal to vote on your own proposal does nothing to reassure them. We have been hearing your speeches forever. We have been seeing your ads on television. You have been telling the senior citizens this is going to be so great, and now you have a chance to vote what you say you believe in, and all of a sudden, I say to my colleague from Iowa, we see them just running away, running away.

That is my first point. My second point is that—I do not even remember my second point.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WELLSTONE. I would be pleased to yield for a question and then by then I will get my second point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 3 more minutes so I can come up with my second point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 more minutes off his side's time.

Mrs. BOXER. What I would love to do is simply say to my friend the reason he did not get to his second point is his first point was so good. But I have to say that in listening to my colleagues—and I truly was not going to participate in this particular amendment. I had come over here expecting a vote on it. What do I find? We are blocked from voting. What is the other side afraid of if they are so excited about their plan? They are afraid to vote.

I will tell you why they are afraid. Because they know that the American people are waking up and they understand now it only takes $89 billion to keep Medicare solvent, and they are cutting $270 billion. We know they need to cut that much to come up with what NEWT GINGRICH calls the crown jewel of the contract, the tax breaks for the wealthy. And I say to my friend, because he has been working on these issues a long time, in his hometown and his home State, do seniors understand why the Republicans want to give $5,500 a year back to people who earn over $350,000 while they destroy Medicare, Medicaid, student loans, and for God sakes repeal nursing home standards? Do the people in his State understand that?

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I would say to the Senator from California, no. And I think this becomes an issue of Minnesota fairness and people just do not find it credible—$270 billion in cuts in Medicare but only $89 billion needed for the trust fund, and at the same time $245 billion in tax cuts, disproportionately going to people on the top. No, that violates the Minnesota standard of fairness.

My second point, which came to me, is that this whole business about some sort of a study of what the consequences of all this will be, Senators, we have this that just came to us—2,000 pages. And my colleague from Utah, whom I deeply respect, said the more people in the country get to know about our plan the better they like it. People do not know what is in this plan.

I say to my colleague from California, I have said for the last month this is a rush to recklessness, and it is because when you talk to the people who live in the communities that are affected by this and deliver the care to Medicare beneficiaries, they are saying this will not work. There is a disconnect. Anyone can add numbers and subtract numbers, but, for gosh sakes, colleagues, look at the connection between your numbers and people's lives.

We never had one hearing on your final set of proposals, not one hearing, not one expert flown in from anywhere in the country, much less the opportunity to take this back to our homes and ask the people who are affected by this whether or not it will be beneficial to them. If we had an up-or-down vote on this amendment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 3 minutes have expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Then I think we would have had an opportunity for everybody to speak.

I yield the floor. I thank my colleagues.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this is an interesting——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields the Senator time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator from Massachusetts, I believe, is yielding me time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the remainder of the time to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I guess it is my general impression that the other side, the Republican party, does not want to vote on this amendment which we started hours and hours ago. We have had all kinds of delaying tactics and we had second-degree and first-degree amendments, talks about all kinds of time agreements, but not a vote, not a vote.

I have not been on the floor. I have been working with our leader, but I assume that this point had been made over and over again. One of the things that I think seniors should be aware of is—which has not been talked about at all in the Republican amendment for Medicare, which cuts $270 billion out of Medicare—is something called the BELT agreement. It is not GATT, it is not NATO, it does not have forces, but it has lethal effect, absolutely lethal effect. And it is tucked away inside the Republican Medicare plan. And BELT, because I know you are anxious to find out, stands for the "budget expenditure limit tool." Interesting phraseology.

It is a budget gimmick that poses a very dangerous threat to our senior citizens. And when our colleagues on the other side of the aisle say we are trying to scare senior citizens, one of the things that comes back at me is, do our senior citizens even know the beginning of what they would be getting into if we ended up with the Republican amendment to cut $270 billion and other matters, for example, the BELT agreement?

Now, let me tell you what the BELT agreement does. This is the Republican device that will make automatic cuts in Medicare for years to come—for years to come—automatic cuts, no legislative authority, automatic cuts. And what will the cuts be made for? They will be made for the GOP tax breaks for the wealthy.

The budget gimmick is labeled, as I indicated, the "budget expenditure limit tool." And it is the Republican secret plan to make automatic cuts in the traditional—now catch my words—fee-for-service Medicare Program. Now, remember what we have been hearing this afternoon at great length is that "No, no, no, don't worry about these things called HMO's. Don't worry about that, because 90 percent of seniors are already in the fee-for-service program. Of course they'll be staying in the fee-for-service program."

So all seniors are meant to relax when they hear that argument. But they do not understand the BELT agreement, the BELT agreement, which is the "budget expenditure limit tool." And what it does is makes automatic cuts in the traditional fee-for-service Medicare Program, without any action by Congress or the President, for the next 7 years into the future.

Now, how would it work to hit seniors? First of all, it would put GOP, Republican, priorities ahead of seniors' health care needs in three ways.

First, the BELT—this budget limitation tool for seniors on fee-for-service Medicare, ordinary Medicare, 90 percent of seniors—it would set a fixed annual target on Medicare spending. Oh, we have not talked about that this afternoon. We have not talked about a fee or an expenditure limit on Medicare spending. I have not heard that from the other side this afternoon, because everything was geared to have seniors believe, so long as they were in the Medicare fee-for-service portion that they are now in, that life continues to be cheerful and wonderful and there is no worry. "Don't worry about that, HMO's." But they did not tell us about BELT.

So a fixed annual target is set on Medicare expenditures representing the amount necessary to secure the funds that Republicans need for tax cuts for the wealthy. And it becomes an absolute limit on what Medicare will contribute to seniors' health care. May I repeat that? It becomes an absolute limit, a ceiling, on what Medicare will contribute to Medicare regular enrollees, non-HMO seniors' health care.

Second, if Medicare's bill exceeds this limit, the BELT, which is the budget expenditure limit tool, imposes automatic—what is my next word?—reductions, reductions, arbitrary in nature, in key Medicare spending in the following year, imposing cuts in Medicare; for example, inpatient hospital services, reductions in expenditure for inpatient hospital services, inpatient hospital services for seniors; home health services, reductions; hospice care services, reductions; diagnostic tests, reductions; physician services and outpatient hospital services, reductions, Mr. President.

I am sorry, I am sorry, this is in the Republican plan. No, we have not heard about it because we did not have much time. And, no, we did not hear about it in the Finance Committee because we spent about a total of 10 minutes debating this entire thing—10 minutes per side.

Mr. HARKIN. Would the Senator yield?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I would be happy to, although I have my third Draconian measure that I would like to mention.

Mr. HARKIN. This is startling news to this Senator. I am not on the Finance Committee.

Is the Senator saying that this BELT provision, which sounds to me like the old sequestration, whereas, if you do not hit certain targets, there is automatic across-the-board cuts, is that what is going to happen, automatic, in all these services?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The word "sequestration" is the perfect word.

Mr. HARKIN. Well, what the Senator from West Virginia is talking about, are these BELT provisions, are they in this 2,000-page reconciliation bill? Is that what the Senator is saying? They are in this big thick bill someplace?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Yes.

Mr. HARKIN. I wonder what else is hidden in here. Two thousand pages, and we got it yesterday—2,000 pages. Who knows what is hidden in here—2,000 pages. We have not had 1 day of hearings on it, not 1 day. And now the Senator from West Virginia has brought up something that this Senator was totally unaware of, I will be frank to admit to everyone.

Why? We have not had a chance to look at this or have hearings and know what is in it. What the Senator is saying is buried in these 2,000 pages, which no one knows what is in there, is a provision that will allow for services to the elderly, in all the areas the Senator just outlined, to be automatically cut, automatically without any vote of this body or of the Congress of the United States. I find that incredible. I almost cannot believe it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. If the Senator will yield to his incredulity and mine. I would add that under the Republican $270 billion cut, Medicare will be squeezed in its growth rate at 4.9 percent per person. Now, you go into the private market, private health insurance, that is going to grow at 7.1 percent. But they are going to hold it down to 4.9 percent for Medicare.

Now, this is for your Medicare. So what is going to happen? Obviously, spending for Medicare, because you do not reduce the price of health services simply because you reduce the amount of money that you are willing to pay, to make available to pay for them, the price will continue to rise as it has in the past, but the amount of money will be much less. So what, in fact, you have guaranteed is this BELT procedure.

Mr. HARKIN. Not only that, if the Senator would yield further, not only that, not only the price increase, but the number of elderly is going to increase. People are living longer. They are healthier so they are living longer. So you will have more people in that bracket in the future.

So the belt is going to tighten even harder and faster because of both of those. I am just shocked about this. I am glad that the Senator brought this up. I daresay, there are very few people who understand this. We are indebted to the Senator from West Virginia for pointing this out. I just still find this incredible that this would be buried in this bill.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is the point, I say to my friend from Iowa. And what is absolutely incredible is I have sat here under limited time, to be able to discuss any of this, this afternoon for hours, and I have heard all of this talk about this glorious—"All those seniors in the fee-for-service Medicare Program are going to be happy. We don't do anything. They are just there. They don't have to join the HMO's. They will be in that 90 percent of happy folks that we are going to do nothing to cut their services and life will go on." But this BELT procedure is reserved exclusively for them. I say to the Senator from Iowa.

So they are going to cap this at 4.9 percent, even though the private cost of health care costs are going to be 7.1 percent. So it is automatically guaranteed there is going to be a shortfall, at which point the sequester falls in, the BELT falls in, the reductions are made in inpatient hospital services, home health services, hospice care, diagnostic tests, physician services—that means visiting a doctor—and outpatient hospital services. That is the whole ball game in health care. There is not much else you can do.

I will say, I made a mistake, because the third part of this is that under the plan, since the first-degree amendment of the Senator from Colorado wiped out the $89 billion reduction in Medicare and supplanted it with a $270 billion Republican one, what I failed to say was that, in fact, they have been at least kind enough to say that the Congress could adjust this BELT or do something with this BELT procedure, but only under a supermajority.

I am not sure what a supermajority is, but it has to be at least 60 percent. It is probably closer to 66⅔ percent, which means that the Congress would not do it, so the BELT would be in effect.

Of course, BELT threatens access to choice. It applies only to Medicare fee-for-service expenditures. It hits only seniors who want to keep their current doctors. As a result, this budget gimmick will discourage doctors from accepting fee-for-service patients, senior patients, which, for reasons which we now understand much more clearly because of what is hidden in this Republican plan since obviously their payments will be cut, the physician payments will be cut, threatening the access of seniors to doctors' offices of their choice.

If there is anything you can say to a senior that will justifiably terrify that senior, it is that you are going to take that senior's doctor away.

All afternoon we have been hearing that is not going to happen, but it is the current beneficiaries who are going to be hit the hardest. I just would very much like for my colleagues to understand a new concept called BELT, budget expenditure limit tool, which automatically, if costs go up too much—which, of course, they will—it automatically sequesters and then reduces virtually all health care services for seniors. Nobody in this building knows about it.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Virtually nobody in the Finance Committee knew about it, because we only debated the thing for about 10 minutes. Now, the Senator from Iowa and the Senator from West Virginia know about it, and perhaps some others do, too.

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Of course, I will.

Mr. HARKIN. Again, I want to thank the Senator for pointing this out. I daresay, not too many people know about this hidden in these 2,000 pages. I just received a piece of paper on this which indicates that BELT applies only to Medicare fee for service. So it would hit only those elderly who want to keep their current doctors; is that right?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is correct. The Senator is 100 percent correct.

Mr. HARKIN. Wait a minute. I had been led to believe by the other side that they want to give seniors choices, more choices; that they do not want to shoehorn or force the elderly into managed care systems but leave them their choices and their options.

But now what this says is that this BELT, this thing which would have these across-the-board cuts in all these areas, would apply only to fee for service. Again, am I correct, I ask the Senator from West Virginia, in saying that with this BELT provision, it is just another way of taking away more choice for the elderly?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The Senator is correct, but I will add a further dimension. It is another aspect in what it is that our Republican colleagues have to do, driven by this Contract With America, in order—you see, there is a reason for this. You do not do it because you want to do it, you do it because you have to get that tax-break money.

Mr. HARKIN. I am beginning to see.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. That is why you have to come up with gimmicks like this which you do not talk about on the floor of the U.S. Senate, because you do not want anybody to know about it.

Mr. HARKIN. I ask the Senator from West Virginia if he will yield for another question. Then in the substitute that was offered by the Senator from West Virginia earlier today, on which they will not allow us to vote, it looks like, that BELT provision is not in the substitute of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. There is nothing—nothing—in the Democratic amendment which has that.

Mr. HARKIN. And one last question of the Senator from West Virginia, then. The only reason he can discern for having this provision in there is only so the Republicans can get their $270 billion cut in Medicare to fund the $245 billion tax break; is that correct?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. To the Senator I say, you have to get your money somehow. If you are going to cut to get all this tax-break money, you have to go to where the money is. The money is in Medicare. The money is in Medicaid. There is some money in the earned income tax credit, which they call a welfare program, which is very interesting to me, because how come those same people then pay a personal income tax and Social Security tax? I did not think people on welfare paid those taxes.

It is just a very depressing aspect of how far they will go.

Mr. HARKIN. I am going to ask the Senator to yield. Again, I hold up this poster. I talked about it earlier. But just in light now of what I have found out from the Senator from West Virginia of what is hidden in this bill reminds me of what the majority leader said just last night, and I will quote again for the RECORD:

> I was there fighting the fight—voting against Medicare—one of 12—because we knew it wouldn't work in 1965.

That was the majority leader just last night.

So I guess I would say, who do you trust? I keep hearing from the other side that they want to save Medicare. From what the Senator from West Virginia just pointed out on this BELT, it ought to be called the "knife," because it is really cutting Medicare. That is what they are doing.

I thank the Senator. He has done a great service in bringing this to our attention.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Senator from Iowa. I just simply say that it is a shocking thing. It is a hidden thing. It is malicious to seniors, and it is particularly embarrassing, I think, in the context of fair debate, when people all afternoon have been talking about the fact that seniors on Medicare in the regular fee-for-service Medicare system, which is 90 percent of the system now, will continue to have this wonderful existence, when they know perfectly well that what they are doing is they are capping expenditures. They are capping expenditures several percentage points below what they know the cost of expenditures will rise in health care and then guaranteeing, therefore, the sequestering followed by the reduction in services on all fronts of health care for Medicare patients. Then the only way you can get out of it is through a supermajority, which I would assume is two-thirds of the Congress, both the House and the Senate, which I think would be very hard to do.

It is also interesting that—well, Medicare recipients on top of this will pay more out-of-pocket expenses. In other words, there is going to be $700 less per beneficiary in the year 2002. It is going to double deductibles, raise premiums, raise the Medicare eligibility age to 67. These are all very important, very troublesome problems. Private health premiums will be increased, as the minority leader indicated, by cost-shifting. Hospital closings will take place in States like West Virginia and, I assume, Iowa. I think most rural States.

Frankly, it is my judgment that doctors will be driven out of the program and will be turning away Medicare recipients.

Mr. HARKIN. If the Senator will yield again on that point, I will just say, if you have fee for service and the doctor is taking fee for service, and then you have this automatic provision to cut all these provisions, then it would be very discouraging to doctors to take fee-for-service elderly. Thus, once again, that would be lying—the intention of the Senators on the other side of the aisle that they want to provide more choices for seniors. They can say it all they want. You can say the Moon is made out of cheese, but that does not make it so. The facts are that this bill is going to push the seniors out of their fee for service.

If the Senator will yield further for a question, I want to ask the Senator what the Republicans are trying to do here with their $270 billion cut—and now with this BELT gimmick that I never heard about before—how that would work for an elderly person who just wrote me this letter from Iowa. A husband and wife—I will not use their names, because I do not have their permission yet. I will get in touch with them to ask for permission. Their total income per year with Social Security, plus they have an old house rental, is $20,000 or less. She adds up all of their health expenses and premiums, which totals $7,668 a year, out of a $20,000 income. She has diabetes and her husband has heart disease and a fractured hip socket. She had a stroke 3 months ago. She is talking about how wonderful Medicare has been for them. She said, "People around here are worried that Congress is destroying the best programs in our country, which have made people's lives so much better. My late grandparents lived in poverty receiving $40 a month welfare. Could we live on that?"

I ask the Senator from West Virginia, how could someone like this, making $20,000 a year—and I might add this: When I hear people on the other side of the aisle talk about the elderly, I swear all the elderly they know live in Beverly Hills, or Palm Beach, or something like that, because in my State of Iowa, 80 percent of the senior citizens make less than $20,000 a year, and 50 percent of the elderly in Iowa have incomes of $10,000 a year or less. That is what we are talking about.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield for a second? How much out-of-pocket do they pay on health care expenses right now?

Mr. HARKIN. Well, right now about 21 percent of their income. So if they have $20,000 a year, you can figure right away that 21 percent of that—about $4,000 a year—is going for out-of-pocket expenses. One-fifth of their income is going out. Under the Republicans' proposal, that will go up, over the next several years, to 31 or 32 percent. So it will be one-third of their income that would go out. Right now, for us who are working, it is around 7 percent, 8 percent of our total income that goes for health care. So in Iowa, where we have 50 percent of our people making less than $10,000—and I have this letter which is a heartbreaking letter, where she talks about how much they have to pay for their premiums, what they have to pay for their deductibles and their prescription drugs. Their income is $20,000 a year, Mr. President, and they are paying $7,668 a year out-of-pocket. I ask the Senator from West Virginia, what hope would there be for this couple under the Republican proposal, cutting $270 billion out of Medicare? What could you tell this couple when their premiums and deductibles are going to double, yet, their income is not going to go up?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Well, of course. Social Security will be cut, too, will it not, under the Republican plan?

Mr. HARKIN. That is right. Not only that, but for some of the low-income elderly in Iowa making less than $10,000 a year, they are cutting the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program where they get a measly $80 or $100 a year to help out in that respect.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. If the Senator will yield, after a period of 7 years, I believe it is, they are saying that you can no longer get Medicare when you are 65; you can only get it when you are 67.

Mr. HARKIN. It is going to go up to 67, right. The Senator is absolutely right.

If the Senator will yield further, the only thing I can come up with—and I really do not know why they are doing what they are doing on the other side of the aisle. I know they want to give tax breaks to their special interest friends. I understand that. That is what they want to do. They made their agreements and their contract, and they want to do that. But why do they believe they can take it out of the elderly? The only thing I can assume is that they think the elderly are so gullible that they are not going to pay attention. Maybe they are so busy, like this couple, paying their bills and making ends meet that they are not going to pay attention to what happens here. Maybe they feel that. I hope not because, I am telling you, the elderly have to understand that this is going to hurt and hurt badly for the next 7 years.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. If the Senator will yield, I think there is a very interesting point that goes along with all of this. The majority party—the Republican Party—has accused us of "fear mongering," and scaring seniors. Yet, for a long period of time—and in telling the truth, everybody is entitled to their own opinion but not their own facts. We have been talking about some of the facts which the Senator and I have discussed this afternoon, a relatively new fact in that 2,000 pages. But, hopefully, more people will know about that. What is interesting is that the American Hospital Association really did not get very much—even though they are getting terrible cuts, they did not get involved too much in taking all of this on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from Michigan has 38 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time, I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, if this is a contest of volume and rhetoric and half truths, we are going to probably come in second best. I would like to try to concentrate on some common sense and some truth about what we are trying to debate here on the floor.

We are really talking about a couple of major issues, and that is that a lot of the debate is whether we are going to put a Band-Aid over the Medicare Program and extend it for maybe 2 years into the future of solvency, as the Democrats have proposed, and then be back here in another year or two and debate this all over again, or we are going to look at some real reform. We are going to talk about extending this program to 2012 and into the next generation, to make sure that we secure, that we improve, and that we protect the Medicare system, not only for those who depend on it today, but for the next generation as well.

If we do not begin real basic reform—that is, to reduce the rate of growth in this program, and we are not talking about cuts, we are talking about trying to put some common sense into this program and put out there a Medicare Program that not only provides good service but is one that we can afford. If we do not, the alternatives are just a couple. Either we can do as the Democrats have proposed, and that is extend the life of this program for just 2 years so we can come back here and debate this all over again after the next election. Or we can do nothing and we can let the trust fund go broke, as the trustees have told us it will do, in the year 2002. Or the other option would be that we can go back to the taxpayers with business as usual and say we need another $388 billion to keep this program status quo—business as usual.

That is what the Democratic answer has been over the last 30 years. Seven times they have gone to the taxpayers and said, "We need more money for this program," and raising taxes has always been the answer—never real reform, never restructuring the program, never trying to make it sound. Just more taxes. Throw more money at the problem and get us by another couple of years; just, limp into the next century, and we will come back and address the question then. Then the linkage, the demagoging, of always $270 billion in reduced growth—not in cuts, but reduced growth—and they link this always to $245 billion in tax relief. They seem to have some kind of an objection to letting Americans keep more of their own money.

If this were a repeat of the 1993 record increase in taxes they would be down here in a second to vote to raise your taxes. But if there is any talk about tax relief for American families, hard-working families, they just demagog this to death. They do not want you to keep any more of your money.

Somehow, somehow the thought and the notion in this Capital City has been that the money belongs to Washington. We are going to decide how much to dole back to you, the hard-working Americans.

Those who get up every morning, go to work and put in 40-plus hours a week, husband and wife trying to take care of their family—they do not think you can spend their money as wisely as they can in Washington. If they allow you to keep this $245 billion over the next 7 years, you might spend it foolishly—like on food, clothing, shelter, education for your children. You might do something stupid with your money. So, send it to Washington and they will make sure that it is spent more wisely.

And talk about the scare tactics. Fearmongering—they do not fearmonger. They are not throwing out scare tactics. For the last hour, we have sat here and listened to nothing but scare tactics, that we are somehow gutting this program, that there will not be a dime for Medicare, for our senior citizens over the next 7 years or beyond.

If that is not a scare tactic, telling every senior citizen in America if we do not buckle under and not give any tax relief or raise taxes, that somehow all Medicare will disappear. My grandmother is one that got one of these scare tactic letters from her Democratic Congressman in northern Minnesota. It said that somehow the Republicans are going to put you into the street because they are going to take away Medicare.

Now, for a 92-year-old bedridden woman to get a letter like this, if this is not scare tactics, I do not know what is. To hear the rhetoric we have heard and will continue to hear, if that is not scare tactics, without addressing the problem, if the problem is so bad, where have the Democrats been over the last 30 years? How come all of a sudden we are on the brink of disaster, if they have all the answers today?

I do not know why a $500 per child tax credits somehow does not work in with their plan.

Another thing, the $270 billion in reforming Medicare. Now, if we do not do this, again, the trustees are saying it will go broke, that somehow Medicare—we know that over the next 7 years any savings in Medicare has to remain within the trust fund. There is a fire wall.

In fact, Republicans have an amendment, as our amendment notes, using Medicare savings for tax cuts would be illegal under the Finance Committee bill. The Senate committee bill says it would be illegal to use it for anything but Medicare.

There is no linkage. The only way we can have tax relief is if we reform it and balance the budget. If we can do that, then the benefits are going to be some tax relief for hard-working Americans who have been paying $245 billion—do you realize that is only 1.5 percent of our total expenditures over the next 7 years?

But it sounds like that if somehow we give this small tax relief to American residents and hard-working middle-class families, that somehow this whole country is going to unravel; if we take this $245 billion and shift it out of Washington and into the hands of families, that somehow this whole country is going to collapse, because we have taken another $245 billion from bureaucrats in Washington to spend as they want.

So, again, one other thing I want to mention, if the Government is going to somehow pay for all of this, if we cannot afford it ourselves, how can we afford to pay taxes to let the Government do it? We cannot.

If we cannot as a society, as individuals or as families, somehow afford this, is the Government automatically going to have enough money in Washington? They will tax it away. Washington does not create wealth. It collects it and redistributes it.

Is this good for seniors? Yes, Mr. President, it is good for seniors. It will make sure that Medicare is protected and preserved.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. GRAMS. I just have a few minutes left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ABRAHAM). All time has expired.

Mr. GRAMS. I think this is something that is so important that we cannot ignore it, and we have to make sure that Medicare is preserved and protected not for an additional 2 years but for the next generation.

I yield the floor.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President I yield 8 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Thank you, Mr. President.

I come to change the tone a little bit. I have been sitting here for 5 hours and have heard nothing but negative, depressing kind of things.

I am excited about the opportunities that we have. I am excited about the opportunities that ,we will have to do something that the people who have been complaining here have not done for 30 years. We will have a chance to balance the budget. We have not done it for 26 years. We will have a chance to do something about welfare. We have not done it for all these years. We will save Medicare. We have not had a plan to do that. We will leave a little more money in the pockets of Americans.

Now, that is not a bad idea. That is a pretty positive kind of a thing, it seems to me.

Frankly, I get a little weary of the same folks that have been here, who have brought us where we are, that we need changes, and they resist changes, and expect something different to happen by doing the same thing. I do not understand that.

That is what we have heard all afternoon. Do not change anything. Things are not good, but do not change them.

Someone mentioned the difficulty in rural States. I come from a rural State. As a matter of fact, there are a number of things here that I think will be greatly strengthened, including the health program in rural areas.

There are several specific things here that I want to mention. One is limited service hospitals. We have, over time, developed hospitals. We were encouraged over the years—properly—to develop full service hospitals in small towns. Quite a few of them sometimes were just 20 miles apart.

In Wyoming, we had a hospital with 4 percent occupancy. It cannot exist at that. So it has to fail.

So we will change in this bill the qualifications of a hospital so that you can have a limited service hospital, still be reimbursed by HCFA, the Federal Government for stabilizing facilities, for emergency facilities, so you can move to the next hospital. It would be a great asset. You need something in a town but you will not be able to have a full service hospital. That will be done here.

Medicare dependent hospitals—the 1993 budget let this program expire. We are going to reinstate that. The purpose is to assist facilities in high Medicare patient loads to continue.

The extension of the sole community hospital status, hospitals that have less than 50 beds, 35 miles away from the nearest hospital, will continue. This is good stuff for rural America.

It levels HMO payments in Medicare. There is a great disparity now. We settled that on the basis of fee-for-service as it existed. In Bronx County, New York, $678 can be paid per month for HMO's and Medicare; Fall River County, South Dakota, on the other hand, gets $177. We will fix that. That is good for rural America.

Medicare bonus payments to physicians will be increased from 10 percent to 20 percent. We talk about bringing service providers into the rural area. This will do that. Telemedicine grants—we have a great opportunity to increase services with telemedicine grants in rural communities.

I understand the marketing device, of being opposed—there are some very positive things here, starting with the fact if you do not do something, it fails. Second, you can preserve it for 2 years or you can preserve it for longer than that, and we are going for the long haul.

There are positive things here. One of them is the help for rural areas, like my State of Wyoming. I am very pleased we are looking forward, in these next 2 days, to do some positive things. I hope we begin to talk about the benefits that can accrue, benefits that will accrue, rather than seeking to worship the depressing scenario we have been going through for the last couple of hours.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to join my Democratic colleagues in expressing deep disappointment and outrage at the way in which those on the other side of the aisle have chosen to handle this critical issue.

Several weeks ago, I participated in hearings organized by Senators KENNEDY and ROCKEFELLER because it was—and remains—my view that the public ought to have the opportunity to review and understand what is being proposed by congressional Republicans with respect to the Medicare Program.

During these hearings, we heard testimony from the trustees of the Medicare Trust Fund. We believed it was important to hear from the trustees in order to give them the opportunity to clarify any misrepresentation of their annual report on the future solvency of the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund and to get their analysis of the Republican proposal to cut $270 billion from the Medicare Program.

What we found was that the Medicare trustees do not even suggest that $270 billion is required to address the problems of the trust fund. In fact, the trustees made it very clear that $89 billion over the 7 years is all that is required to address short-term solvency issues of the Hospital Insurance Trust Fund. In a recent letter to Republican leaders DOLE and GINGRICH, Secretary Rubin specifically states, and I quote him:

> No member of Congress should vote for $270 billion in Medicare cuts believing that reductions of this size have been recommended by the Medicare Trustees or that such reductions are needed now to prevent an imminent funding crisis.

The amendment offered by Senator ROCKEFELLER gets right to the heart of this issue. Senator ROCKEFELLER's amendment would recommit the Medicare portion of the reconciliation bill with instructions to the Finance Committee to eliminate cuts beyond the $89 billion that the Medicare actuaries certify is necessary to ensure solvency of the trust fund through 2006.

Now, we find out that we will not be permitted a straight up-or-down vote on this amendment. I say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, if you believe as you say you do, that a $270 billion cut is needed to save the Medicare Program, then this vote should be simple and we should all have the opportunity to make our position clear on this important matter.

The effort to prevent a clear, recorded vote on Senator ROCKEFELLER's motion is even more distressing in light of the absolute refusal of the Republican leadership to hold the kind of open, public hearings that an issue of this magnitude requires. What they have done is spring the legislation on us and then immediately move to mark it up and report it to the floor without any chance for careful examination or thought as to what its implications are for our senior citizens. They try to move it so fast that people cannot, in effect, identify what is being done.

The best description of what they are doing was given, in my judgment, by the Republican political analyst, Kevin Phillips, in a recent radio interview where he was quoted as saying—now this is not me talking; this is the Republican political analyst Kevin Phillips. And he said, and I quote him:

> This revolutionary ideology driving the new Republican Medicare proposal is all so simple. Cut middle-class programs as much as possible and give the money back to private-sector business, finance and high-income taxpayers. Rhetoric about the cuts being to save Medicare is politics, not underlying GOP motivational reality. Remember, at the same time as the Republicans propose to reduce Medicare spending by $270 billion over seven years, they want to cut taxes for corporations, investors and affluent families by $245 billion over the same period. This is no coincidence.

The fact of the matter is, the Republican Medicare reform proposals are not about saving Medicare or about protecting senior citizens. They are not about true reform. To reform, by definition, means to make better or improve by removing faults. I submit that this entire reconciliation package is driven by an insatiable desire to give further large tax benefits to very wealthy people.

Mr. President, it would be truly irresponsible for the Congress to approve sweeping and drastic changes to the Medicare system without a thorough discussion of what those proposals mean to our Nation's health care system, and to the people it serves. We have not been afforded the opportunity for such a discussion and I regret that we will also not be afforded the opportunity to have straight up-or-down vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, the amendment that has been offered by the other side of the aisle is a statement that the Members on the other side of the aisle have lost their nerve. They have lost their nerve to really do something big about Medicare before it is too late.

We all know from the President's own people that Medicare will be bankrupt in the year 2002. This bill put forth by the majority party guarantees that Medicare will not be bankrupt by the year 2002.

The plan that is put before us addresses only the part A trust fund. We all admit that there is a crisis in part A, because it is growing at a very robust clip of 8.4 percent. But their plan does nothing to address part B. Part B is growing, as we know, at 14.5 percent, an unsustainable rate. So I think we all have to question their logic, that they raise a point about 8.4 percent being a crisis but will forget about the part of Medicare that is growing almost twice as fast, at 14.5 percent.

It is a simple fact, if we do not act now, there will not be a system around when baby boomers retire. The longer we put this off, the harder it will be to address. Just look at how difficult a time we are having to apply a stitch in time. The scare tactics being used now by the Democrats, of course, will look like Halloween compared to what we will see if we continue to put these reforms off until the years 1999, 2000, 2001. Maybe they will not even be dealing with it in the year 2002.

Then I look at the recent discussion from the other side of the aisle on the provisions dealing with what is called the BELT.

We have been fed a lot of horror stories by the other side. If I get any message from the seniors of America, it is this. They think the cost of medical care is too high and they blame us, because it is a Government program, for it being too high. They expect us to do something about the bills. They expect us to do something about the cost of Medicare. This provision only makes sure that Congress lives within its spending targets.

Ask any senior anywhere in America if they believe in a balanced budget. They will tell you that they do believe in a balanced budget.

Ask them if they think there ought to be some limits on what is spent on a Government program, health care or anyplace else, and they will say, yes, there should be.

That provision is in the bill to guarantee that costs do not exceed spending targets.

The impression was left from the debate between my colleague from Iowa and my colleague from West Virginia that this has never happened before. It did happen before. In 1987 there was a reduction of 2 percent, so do not say this is a provision that has never been applied before. It has been applied before. Do not say that this is a system Congress has no control over, because the law provides for a review by Congress. And if Congress wants to bite the bullet and take action before the President does, we can and we should and we will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, first I wish to compliment Senator FRIST, Dr. FRIST from Tennessee, for his leadership on this issue. I think he has brought a great deal of experience and expertise on the entire health care issue. I compliment him for it.

I also wish to compliment the Senator from Colorado for this amendment. The amendment that we have basically says this reports with instructions back to the Finance Committee to make sure that we have a lockbox provision to make sure all the savings or changes that we have in part B go into the savings in part A so it will help make sure part A does not go bankrupt.

Our colleagues on the other side do not have that in their provision, but I think it is a very good, solid provision. It is one the Finance Committee adopted. This is kind of a second key on the lockbox to make sure that of any of the costs that would be incurred by beneficiaries, that 100 percent of those costs go directly into the solvency of part A. I think that is an excellent amendment, so I compliment my colleague and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Some people have alluded to the fact, well, we do not really have a problem with Medicare. I beg to differ. The trustees report clearly states we do. We have seen charts that next year under Medicare we start paying out more money than we take in, and that over a 7-year period of time the trust fund is totally used up and then they cannot pay the bills. That is not acceptable. That is not an alternative that is agreeable or acceptable to anyone.

Some say the $89 billion would solve the problem. It does not solve the problem. It does not even come close to solving the problem. If we take the changes that we have proposed in the Finance Committee, reiterated by the amendment that we have from the Senator from Colorado, we are ensuring the trust fund. We are saying we are going to make some changes in part B, as the trustees said we should, because the part B trust fund has problems, it is running out of money. We take those savings and use that to ensure the solvency of part A. That makes sense.

We are going to keep part A solvent, not just for 2 years but, really, for more than 10 years. I think that is an excellent step in the right direction. What have we done in the past when we had a problem under Medicare? In the past we have had problems. We have had reports from the trustees, as was alluded to by some of our colleagues, that it is running out of money. What have we done? Every time in the past what we have done is we have increased payroll taxes and we have had big, big increases in payroll taxes.

There are only two ways you can solve the Medicare trust fund problem. You either increase the money going in—that is paid for by a payroll tax. Presently we are paying 1.45 percent; the employee pays that. The employer matches that. So it is 2.9 percent of payroll going to fund Medicare. That is what we are doing today.

When we have had problems in the past, how have we financed it? We have financed it with a big increase in payment, in taxes. That is what the trustees said we are going to have to do. We are going to have to have big payroll tax increases to solve the problems in the trust fund or we are going to have to reduce the rate of growth of expenditures.

We elected not to increase taxes. That is unheard of. Because I will tell you something—I want to put something in the RECORD. In the past, all Congress has ever done is increased payroll taxes. I just ask a question, does anyone know what the maximum tax rate is, if someone paid maximum taxes in Medicare in 1978, what the total tax was for them and their employer combined? It was $177.

Do you know what the maximum tax rate was in 1993? It rose a little bit. It went from $177 to $3,915. And today it is even more, because we took the cap off. So it went from $177 to over $4,000 in a period of 15, 17 years. There are unbelievable increases in premiums, and that is still not enough. It is an unbelievable increase in taxes, and it is still not enough.

So what did we do? We said, let us reduce the rate of growth in spending. Some people said, you are cutting $270 billion. We are spending, today, $178 billion in Medicare; in the year 2002 we are going to spend $286 billion. That is an increase. I am going to put into the RECORD how much Medicare spending is increasing every year. Most people said 6.4 percent. I have said that. Actually, it averages out right at 7 percent. So I will put this into the RECORD.

It is interesting. I went back to see what the President's figures were when he revised his budget on June 22, 1995, what the President's figures were for Medicare. Guess what? He proposed changes. He uses OMB. He uses a different baseline, uses different growth rates, but the differences in outlays are minuscule.

In 1995, he estimates we are going to spend $4 billion less than what CBO does. He says 174. In 1996, we estimate we are going to spend 193 in our proposal; the President says we are going to spend 192—almost identical. In 1997, we estimate we are going to spend $207 billion, a 7 percent increase. The President says we are going to spend $208 billion. In 1998, there is only $3 billion difference. In 1999, the President said we should spend $5 billion more.

My point being there is very little difference in outlays estimation. Granted, the President is using OMB, he is using a rosier scenario, forecasting a lower growth rate in Medicare costs, but there is very little difference in outlays between what the President is estimating we are going to spend in Medicare than what we estimate using the Congressional Budget Office. Why did we use the Congressional Budget Office? Because that is what we agreed to use. That is what the President said he would use when he gave his State of the Union Message. He said he was going to use the Congressional Budget Office. Now he is not doing it. Now he is not doing it. But we are.

Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the Medicare spending comparisons, both by this budget resolution that we have before us and by the President, and tell my colleagues that over the 7 years, our plan says we should spend $1.655 trillion, and the President, over that same period of time, spends $1.676 trillion, a minuscule difference in the total spending over that period of time, of $21 billion—the difference in outlays between the President's budget and our budget granted that he uses OMB and a rosy scenario.

Also, Mr. President, I am going to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the growth rates of the maximum amount taxable for Medicare, the tax rates, and the maximum amount paid, because it will shock our colleagues to find out that in 1978 we were spending total taxes of $177, and today the maximum tax is over $4,000. That is still not enough. That says we need to reduce the rate of growth in this program, not increase taxes.

I compliment my colleagues for this amendment.

I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 13 minutes and 40 seconds.

Mr. FRIST. I yield 7 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, I too listened with great interest to some of the rather vigorous debate, I believe is the phrase. It was rather strained a time or two, and almost a little bit hysterical, I thought a time or two also, just hearing snatches of it from those on the other side of the aisle. It would, indeed, as my good old friend from Wyoming has indicated, make you weary. And indeed it will.

What will make you even more weary is to read once again, which has been alluded to many times in this debate. "The Status of the Social Security and Medicare Programs in the United States of America," this wonderful little yellow pamphlet which has been recommended to all Americans for many months now. And I wish I could put it in more earthly vernacular, and I could ordinarily, but this forum does limit one in that particular dependency, so let us just say that Social Security is going to go broke and Medicare is going to go broke. So if you want to have another TV ad of somebody smashing into their oatmeal with the pitch that the Republicans are doing something horrid, get a real picture of someone who is watching Medicare go broke in the year 2002, where you do not have a "less" benefit in the years out; you have "no" benefit. Try that one on.

So too even with the hard work we have done here, be of stout heart. For medicare will not go broke in the year 2002. It will now go broke in the year 2008. So gird your loins, cheer yourselves, and know that the draconian activity we have undertaken here on our side of the aisle—and we will do it, and we will do it by ourselves—will "save" it till then. And in a year we will tell the American people what we did, and they will be very pleased. This is what we are about.

I have not heard a single recommendation from the other side of the aisle that would do anything, and certainly $89 billion is not going to do anything because they did not even talk about part B. How phony can you get to come in and talk about you only need $89 billion to save Medicare, and leave off part B? How really phony can you get when you want to know, ladies and gentleman of America, that part B premiums are totally voluntary, they are not part of any Contract With America, and they were not part of any contract with senior citizens. In every sense, it is an income transfer. It is a welfare program because right now the senior citizen who has chosen to accept this is paying 30 percent of the premium, and the people who maintain this magnificent building at night when we are not here are paying 70 percent of the premium. I hope somebody will figure that one out.

So I want to watch the votes. Again, how we are going to handle part B premiums when we have this peculiar situation, to say the least, where "Joe Six-Pack" is paying 70 percent of the premium for somebody who is "Mr. Megabucks." If you want to get into this business about "the little guy," let us get really into this one. This is about the little guy, the guy that does not have anything, and he or she is going to work every day to pay 70 percent of the premium for everybody in Medicare part B. That is absolutely absurd.

So I am anxious that we do cast some votes in that area. We will smoke them out and see who really is for "the little guy".

Then, of course, we will see a unique and remarkable experience. We will get there in conference. The President of the United States has said that Medicare will not be allowed to go up over 7.1 percent, and we are saying we will not let it go up over 6.4 percent.

Does anybody in America believe we will not get there? There is not a single person on the other side of the aisle that does not know the President of the United States of America has already recommended that Medicare not be allowed to increase over 7.1 percent and not 10.5. We all know that. I hope the American people cut through the babble on that one.

We all know the President of the United States has now said we will have a 7-year budget instead of a 10-year budget. It is good that he is calling it a 7-year budget because his 10-year budget thing was just a thing. It was not a budget. So we will address that.

Now he has admitted that he went too far in raising taxes. I saw a fellow get beat on that once in a campaign—two of them, in fact. Now, surely, perhaps three.

So we are ready to go. We will go over the cliff together. We will not get a single vote from the other side of the aisle. And between now and next October, next election season, we will describe to the American people just exactly what we did, how we saved Medicare, how we began to get on track again all over the United States, and all over the world with our work, with our debt limit, our deficit, our savings rate with all of the things that are critical to us, and be a solvent country.

But in the next few days, and weeks, we will be accused of being the party that broke all the ketchup bottles over the heads of every child in the first grade, threw all the bed pans out of the nursing homes, destroyed every possible facility that shelters the homeless, the aged, and the infirm. And be ready for that.

And the charge may be led by the AARP, which is a group of 33 million Americans bound closely together by a love of airline discounts, automobile discounts, and insurance discounts—one of the biggest businesses in America who even have a thing called "tax advice" for their members. And this is a group that has paid the IRS $135 million in back taxes. Boy, I would love to have them giving tax advice! They need all the money they can to figure out how to get back $135 million. So be ready for it. Dig in. We are going to have a lot of fun. And when it is all over, we will have the votes. And when it is really completed, the American people are going to be very excited and pleased months from now when they figure it all out as to what we did and what they on the other side of the aisle did not do.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I give the Senator from Wyoming an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, will the Senator comment on—how much? I think the Senator previously talked about, how much does the AARP have in investments?

Mr. SIMPSON. They are a ragged lot. They are just a tattered band of ragamuffins. They have a building downtown here which could be described as "the Taj Mahal," and their lease rental there per year is $17 million—$17 million a year on a 20-year lease. They have $314 million in the bank in T bills. They get $106 million a year from Prudential Life Insurance, taking 3 percent of every premium. They get premiums and royalties from Scudder on investments, from New York Life, from the R.V. insurance. They are a big, big, big business, and they also get $86 million from the U.S.A. to run some of their programs on top of all that.

Mr. D'AMATO. I thought it was interesting that they have over $300 million in Treasury bills that they have invested.

Mr. SIMPSON. That is true. But they are just struggling along. And we want to continue to send our $8 dues to them because my mail is running 16 to 1 against the AARP, and most of it comes from their own members who say, "I am still going to pay the 8 bucks, but go hit 'em a lick." And I am certainly going to be delighted to do that.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. Time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes remain on the Senator's side, no time remaining on the other side.

Mr. FRIST. I would like to yield the remaining 5 minutes to the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York has the floor.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Tennessee. He has done a magnificent job in attempting to combat the demagoguery that comes from nothing but partisan politics. And I have to tell you something. If it is not the drumbeat of the AARP, which is bad enough, scaring seniors, you cannot make a call into my office because they have got these poor people absolutely frightened. And I wish to apologize to the senior citizens for all of the fright that they have gone through. I think it is a shame. I think it is a shame that maybe we have not done a better job of getting the message through. I think it is a shame that some people who call themselves champions of the underprivileged have engaged in demagoguery that has hit new heights.

Only in Washington can you spend $110 billion more for a program, which we will be doing in Medicare over the next 7 years, $110 billion more, increasing expenditures at twice the rate of inflation, and call that a cut. Only in Washington can you be taking the average recipient who gets about $4,800 a year in benefits and almost increasing it by $2,000 so they will be getting $6,700 a year and call that a cut. Only in Washington can my colleagues on the other side demagog it and get up there with the big voice: Oh, we are going to cut; we are going to kill, totally negate, forget what is going to take place and come forth with not one constructive suggestion as it relates to how you are going to keep Medicare from going bankrupt.

They do not come forth and say anything. No, just spend it and spend it and bankrupt us in less than 7 years. There will not be any Medicare. Then what happens to the seniors? What do they say? They say you are cutting so you can give taxes to the wealthy. Nonsense. Mr. President, 70 percent of any tax advantages are going to go to working families in America; $141 billion out of the $224 billion that will be coming in cuts go just for the $500 per child tax credit— $141 billion. That is about 60 percent.

We hear yelling and screaming about the families, when we do something for adoption, when we do something to take care of the marriage penalty, when we do something to equalize and strengthen the family and give people IRAs, working families, middle class families, not millionaires, not businesses, when we say, by the way, that those people who have incomes of $150,000 should pay for their own health insurance. A retired person with $150,000, by gosh, should pay for it, not working middle-class families subsidizing the wealthy.

That is what we do here. We hear nothing but demagoguery. I cannot believe it. I wish to tell you something. You do a great disservice to the American people with that kind of rhetoric. I think we will demonstrate quite clearly that we are the party that is responsible.

Here is the President's status of Social Security and Medicare Program, a summary. This comes out by the President, his commission. Three of his Cabinet officials are there. And I read the first page. It says, "The Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund will be able to pay benefits for only about 7 years and is severely out of financial balance long range."

What do our friends on the other side say about correcting that? Nothing. And we come forth with a program. They have had months and months to work with us. Do they offer any constructive suggestions? No. They demagog the issue. They say to people, they are going to cut your benefits. That is not true. They say, they are going to cut your benefits and give tax breaks to the wealthy. That is not true. They say, they are going to give you less. And, indeed, we are increasing that program again by $110 billion more.

Somehow we have to do a better job to get the message out. But that does not negate the negativism, the demagoguery, the sheer hypocrisy that comes from the other side. I have to tell you something. I make no apologies for branding their brand of legislative acumen in that manner because that is what it amounts to—sheer demagoguery.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? There are 25 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do I have to yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 25 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Just 25 seconds. Does anybody want 25 seconds on our side? Does the majority leader want 25 seconds?

Mr. DOLE. No. Keep counting.

Mr. DOMENICI. Let me thank Senator BROWN from Colorado for originally coming to the floor with this second-degree amendment and helping us out. He did a very good job. And for those who spoke the last 2½ hours on our side, I think we have all done a good job.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. GORTON. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Ms. SNOWE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Madam President, the majority leader yields to the Senator from Washington such time as he needs off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Michigan.

Madam President, we are at the beginning of a debate over the most important piece of legislation that this body has considered during the course of the last decade. We have before us a proposal which will lead the United States to its first balanced budget in 26 years. Yes, Madam President, 26 years.

That proposal includes with it a plan to preserve, to protect, and to strengthen Medicare to see to it that the Medicare trust fund or hospital insurance does not go bankrupt; fairly to distribute the costs of Medicare part B, fees for physicians and for medical care across the course of the population; to provide our seniors with a greater degree of choice than they have at the present time and the selection of the way in which they receive their health care, one which will allow the expenses for Medicare to increase in each and every year during the time during which we are balancing the budget; a plan, a budget which will also ultimately include in it genuine welfare reform, reform of a system which has actually made worse the very conditions it was designed to alleviate in the first place, a welfare reform which will emphasize work, families, and hope for the future; and finally, but not at all incidentally, Madam President, tax relief for the hard-working American families in the middle class, those who are working and contributing to their society, those who are providing for their families and for their future.

Madam President, in the almost 13 years during which I have served in this body, we have never previously had an opportunity to do correctly and well any one of these things, much less all four of them together.

It is not as though we were presenting one alternative vision of the future and the opponents were presenting another valid, arguable vision of the future. We are presenting a plan, an idea, a course of action, and the other side is defending the status quo. They do not wish to propose an alternative.

The President of the United States has, in vague and general terms, proposed an alternative budget, a budget based not on projections made by our Congressional Budget Office, the office the President himself said should be the common ground of all proposals on future spending and tax policies. No, the President's proposal is based on his own figures, taken almost out of thin air, but, nonetheless, it is a proposal, Madam President, a proposal which was rejected by a vote of 0 to 96 in this body earlier this week. The President's party in this body does not propose to follow the course of action that the White House has outlined.

It simply proposes to vote no on all of the changes which we have advanced in this reconciliation bill.

But perhaps most significant, I believe, in connection with this debate is the estimate, the projection that our Congressional Budget Office has made conditioned upon our adopting these spending reforms and passing a statute which will lead to a balanced budget even 7 years from now in the year 2002.

The Congressional Budget Office has said that if there is in law a realistic and effective set of statutes, which it and independent economists can say with a high degree of confidence will balance the budget even after the turn of the century, then, in its view, the economy will grow sufficiently to provide an additional $170 billion in revenue as a result of a growth of the economy itself and as a result of lower inflation and lower interest rates—$170 billion, Madam President, for the Government of the United States. But that figure is not the total of the benefit to the people of the United States; it is only the share of the Federal Government. The total benefit—roughly four times that—will approach $1 trillion.

Where will the balance over that $170 billion be? It will be in the pockets of the American people in the form of higher wages, in the form of lower interest payments on the homes that they purchase, in the form of better jobs because of greater opportunity that the society will create. That is the reward—the cautious and conservative reward—that this country and its economy and its people can and will receive from a balanced budget. That is an argument which has been almost totally overlooked in this debate over specific programs and precise benefits, tax breaks, and the like, that simply by engaging in this action we will provide Americans with a brighter and a better economic future.

Of course, Madam President, that $170 billion of additional resources for the Government of the United States represents, itself, the overwhelming bulk of the tax relief which is contained in this proposal, and is conditioned upon this proposal becoming law in a way that will in fact balance the budget. When you add to that the closure of various corporate loopholes, the overwhelming majority of the tax reductions have as their source either those loophole closings or the fiscal dividend—the $170 billion dividend we get—simply because we will have balanced the budget. And it is our firm view that that dividend ought to be returned to the American people in the form of lower taxes and not retained by the Government for its programs.

As I said, Madam President, we do not have an alternate vision; we have an alternate set of criticisms. No, we cannot do this. No, we dare not do that. No, we cannot reduce that program and, above all, we do not dare reduce taxes on the American people. That alternative course of action is one which says, essentially, that the status quo is the best we can do; that whatever we have done in the past, we ought to continue to do in the future; that we can afford to ignore almost completely, but not quite, all of the challenges and problems of the most rapidly growing of our major entitlements—Medicare; that we can and should continue to say that the overwhelming bulk of the cost of Medicare should be paid by today's working people, even when that means that hard-working, middle-income Americans are paying for more than two-thirds, almost three-quarters, of the health expenses of wealthy, retired Americans—millionaire retired Americans. No, we cannot make these reforms. We should not make any changes. Everything that Congress has done in the past, all of the programs it has passed in the past should and must be continued.

Well, Madam President, I must say that the choices are relatively easy choices. With all of the difficulties and with all the changes in direction, with all of the groups with genuine or imagined concerns, we have a plan, we have a vision that will lead to a stronger America. Our opponents do not. It is time for us to move ahead, to do what we committed ourselves to do during the course of last year's election campaigns—to pass this proposal, to settle our differences with the House, and then, from a position of strength, to persuade the President to keep the commitments that he has made at one time or another, which, of course, included all of these elements—a reform in our Medicare system, a balanced budget, changing welfare as we know it, and a tax cut for middle-income Americans.

Every one of these four elements in our program is something that the President of the United States has promised or committed to at some time in the past and has since, to a greater or lesser degree, repudiated. We want to keep our commitments; we want to keep his commitments. The only way we can do so is by passing this reconciliation bill.

Madam President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Madam President, I yield myself such time as needed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. We have heard today a number of arguments made on each side relative to the topic of the tax cut provisions in this legislation, and I think it is important for the American people to understand the clear distinction that exists on the two sides of the aisle over the issue of taxes.

Today, the Republican tax cuts that are part of this legislation have been described as tax cuts for wealthy Americans. They have been described as unfair. They have been described as unneeded. They have been described in a variety of other ways.

I think it is important before we analyze those tax cuts and who they really benefit, to begin by just stepping back from today and looking at some of the things that have transpired here in Congress in recent years. I find it interesting that the people who are on this floor attacking the tax cut provisions of this legislation are the very same people who just in the last Congress voted to raise the taxes of working Americans by $270 billion, the largest tax increase in history.

Indeed, it is very simple, I think, to differentiate between the parties and their positions on taxes. There is one party, the Republican Party, that is presenting Americans today with middle-class tax cuts; there is another party that in the last Congress raised taxes a record level of $270 billion.

I think that the opposition to the Republican tax cuts that are proposed in this legislation should not surprise anyone. It is coming from the people who already raised our taxes by a record amount, and who would hate to see those taxes go down at all.

The fact of the matter is, Madam President, that taxes represent the hard work of people in this country who are out playing by the rules. In my State of Michigan they are doing the things we need to keep our economy strong. They are average men and women whose income, at least in my State, for a family is about $32,000. They work hard for those dollars.

Some time ago in the 1950's and 1960's, those average families in Michigan like my own sent $1 to Washington for every $50 they earned; today that average family in Michigan spends $1 in Washington for every $4 it earns.

In part, I came here to the U.S. Senate and ran for this office so that families who are sending too many of their dollars to Washington would get a chance to keep more of what they earn.

We talk a lot today, and we have seen charts in the Senate over the last few months in which we talk about the problems of the so-called middle-class squeeze, the economic pressure on hard-working average middle-class families in our country to make ends meet.

We are often told it is so unfortunate today that it is now necessary often for two people in the household to work in order to be able to attain the same economic conditions that used to be available to middle-class families with only one person out there in the work force.

A lot of speculation goes on in the U.S. Senate as to why it is; why is that middle-class squeeze happening? Why is it that two people have to work to make ends meet?

A big part of the answer, Madam President, is the taxes have gone up so dramatically during the last 30 to 40 years in this country, and dramatically in just the last 2 years alone.

The fact is if the average family in Michigan was still sending $1 in Washington for every $50 it earned, the financial security of those families would be a lot greater today. The combination of paying higher taxes and paying higher interest rates on all the sorts of things that people in my State have to pay interest on, whether it is a mortgage for a home or interest on a car payment or interest with regard to consumer items or interest on student loans, if those interest rates were lower, people in my State would be better off as well. But they are not low.

One reason they are not low is because the Federal Government has not balanced its budget in the last quarter of a century. As we run up red ink in Washington, as the Federal Government is forced to borrow money from lending institutions, from individuals, from whomever, we have driven up interest rates.

The middle-class families find themselves in two separate ways dramatically affected by the policies here in Washington. On the one hand, it does not get to keep as many dollars as it earns because it has to send more dollars to Washington in taxes; and then with those fewer dollars that remain it has to pay more in the way of interest because Government policies have helped to drive up interest rates, because we cannot live here in Washington within our means.

That is why in this legislation we are trying to correct the two problems that afflict those middle-class families.

On the one hand, we are trying to give middle-class families the kind of Federal Government fiscal responsibility they have to exercise in their own homes. What we are trying to do is to bring about ultimately at the end of 7 years the balanced budget that has eluded us here in Washington for a quarter of a century.

As we bring down the deficit and as we maintain a balanced budget, and as we maintain a balanced budget after the year 2002, the impact of that will be a dramatic effect on middle-class families, because as we bring down the deficit, as we recognize in our own CBO reports here, interest rates that the Federal Government has to pay will go down.

That will save money for the Federal Government. It also will mean that interest rates in the private sector go down. It means the interest that people who are watching today and hearing all these frightening stories, as they go out into the housing market, as they go out to buy a car for the family, as they go out to make other purchases that are affected by interest rates, they will find their interest rates, just like the Federal Government interest rates that they have to pay, will be coming down, which will make items more affordable.

That is one reason we are trying to bring this budget into balance. At the same time, we are trying to address the other problem that affects average American families, the problem of sending too many dollars to Washington. That, of course, leads us to the issue of our tax cut.

There have been many, many descriptions of the tax cut. The tax cut was being described before it was ever even talked about in the Senate, before it was addressed, before anybody put a pen to paper to try to draft a tax cut. It was always described the same way it is being described today, as a tax cut principally desired by Republicans to be given to the wealthiest of Americans.

I was astonished when the other day in our Budget Committee meeting when we finally passed the reconciliation package to the floor, to hear talk that over half—over half—of those benefits from the tax cut were going to go to the wealthiest families in America.

That was not the tax cut I had heard about. It was not the way I had seen it described. I had even read the Washington Post in which the Washington Post described the tax cut as "family friendly."

I went out and asked for statistics and I was presented with the Joint Committee on Taxation's specific results of their analysis. Here is what I found: In the first year of this tax cut, 90 percent of the tax cut goes to those making under $100,000 in the first year; 77 percent of the proposal's tax cuts go to those making under $75,000 in that first year. Less than 1 percent of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making over $200,000 in the first year. Over four-fifths, 84 percent of the proposal's tax cuts go to those making under $100,000 in the first 5 years. And 70 percent of the proposal's tax cuts go to those making under $75,000 in those first 5 years. Less than 6 percent of the proposal's tax cuts will go to those making over $200,000 in the first 5 years.

That is a completely different set of statistics than the ones presented to us at the Budget Committee. It is not the case that over half of the tax cuts are going to people making over $100,000, quite the contrary.

This is a family friendly tax cut. It is designed to address the second problem I earlier mentioned, the problem that middle-class families have had, the squeeze that has been put upon them because they have had to send too many dollars to Washington.

I did not want to just leave it at the Joint Tax Committee's numbers. Now, we had competing sets of statistics so I thought the next and most important thing I could do would be to look at the specific components of the tax cut to see which of the two versions was accurate. What I discovered was that, of course, the Joint Tax Committee's version, their statistics, are right on the mark.

Let us tell the American people some of the things that comprise this tax bill.

First, it provides a $500 per child tax credit for American families. That constitutes $141 billion of the $225 billion in tax relief under this bill, over 62 percent.

Some say for some of those children, they are part of families that make lots of money. That may be true. But, of course, this tax bill has been limited in its scope. Indeed, the $500 per child tax credit begins to be phased out, in the case of families with a single head of household at $75,000, in the case of a couple at $110,000. So, unless people between $100,000 and $110,000 have a vastly disproportionate number of children, the argument that many of the tax breaks from the family tax credit are going to go to wealthy people, as defined by some people here in Washington, just is simply not the case. Of course it is not the case.

Madam President, $141 billion, 62 percent of the tax cut, is the family tax credit, $500 per child, letting families keep $500 per child to spend, to try to make ends meet to provide those children with a better way of life.

Another important part of our tax credit in the family tax relief section is an adoption credit. That accounts for almost $2 billion of this tax cut. It is a nonrefundable tax credit allowing for the exclusion of up to $5,000 in adoption costs. The credit phases out. This is important. It phases out between the taxable income levels of $60,000 and $100,000 for both individuals and couples. In other words, not $1 of the adoption credit, the $2 billion of tax cuts that form the basis for that tax relief, will go to anybody making more than $100,000. Indeed, again, it is aimed at helping people in this country, middle-income categories, to be able to expedite the adoption of children, to provide children with loving homes and a few of the dollars necessary to make it possible for those adoptions to be carried out in a way that provides children with a better chance for their future.

The next part of it, another family-related tax section, is $12.3 billion to try to provide relief from the marriage penalty that we impose under our Tax Code. Maybe some people who make more than $100,000 will benefit from the elimination of the marriage penalty, but I hardly think anybody wants to come to the floor of the U.S. Senate and argue we should not eliminate this marriage penalty. It makes no sense for us to have ever done it in the first place.

Another part of our family tax relief is student loan interest deduction. That is another $1 billion. Once again, it is limited in scope to people who have adjusted gross incomes of between $40,000 and $55,000 for singles and between $60,000 and $75,000 for married couples. After that, this deduction is not available. Again, a deduction aimed at helping people of moderate means to try to better and more easily finance college educations.

On and on I went through this tax program. What I discovered was that in almost every section, the entire focus has been to try to provide middle-class families with tax relief, to try to let people keep more of what they earned, to try to allow families in this country to offset some of the hardships that come about when the Federal Government consumes too many of their dollars.

That does not mean that every part of the bill primarily benefits people of middle-income backgrounds. Yes, there are sections aimed at trying to create growth in our economy, that disproportionately benefit people and, to some extent corporations, people of greater means and corporations. Interestingly, though, a very substantial percentage of the benefits of those pro growth tax reductions and tax cuts go to the benefit of average working families in this country because, as we unleash the benefits of some of these growth-oriented tax cuts, what will it produce? It will produce more jobs, better paying jobs. As companies expand and grow, we will hire more people, we will provide more opportunities for Americans.

Remember this, too, Madam President, a great number of the people who benefit from capital gains tax cuts are families who are selling the family home, who are selling other capital assets, who own or are part of pension programs that invest in stocks and corporations and ultimately realize capital gains.

Moreover—and I think it is important to note—this bill does not have simply an up side for those in these wealthy categories or for corporations, because we are also closing a substantial number of tax loopholes. In fact, the closing of loopholes largely offsets the tax advantages that are provided to corporations and upper-income individuals under this bill.

In short, we are paying for most of the benefits derived by those individuals by the closing of these loopholes. In short, once again, this tax cut bill is designed to aid families in the middle class above all other families in this country.

For those reasons, I intend to come to the floor again as may be necessary to keep reminding our colleagues exactly who the beneficiaries of this tax cut are. It is simply, as you analyze the data as to where the tax cuts go and how specifically the tax cuts have been developed, you realize once again that the claims that our tax cut is designed to help so-called wealthy people simply miss the point. It is a tax bill designed to help middle-income families to address a problem that has been growing in this country for the last 40 years, the problem of the Federal Government getting too big, consuming too many resources, making it much more difficult for average families to make ends meet. By balancing the budget and thereby bringing down interest rates, by giving families tax cuts, we can try to help alleviate the middle class squeeze. That is what we are trying to accomplish in no small measure with this legislation.

At this time, I yield the floor.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield to the Senator from Iowa such time as he may need off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Madam President, first of all, I thank the Senator from Michigan for an outstanding review of all of the various profamily, progrowth tax measures that are in this bill. This tax bill is a memorial to the proposition that we believe taxpayers' money comes to the Treasury for legitimate Government purposes, and the expenditure for those purposes and not one more penny should come from the pockets of the taxpayers. When we give this tax cut this year, we are just giving people back money that was ruthlessly taken from them in the last Congress by the President's budget.

We give it back in the way of helping middle-class working families who pay the bulk of the taxes in this country. We do it in a way that says that the foundation of our society is families and that we want to encourage the family as an institution. That is why three-quarters of the tax cuts in this bill go to families, primarily through the $500 per child tax credit. That is a tax credit that is off the bottom line of taxes otherwise owed to the Federal Treasury.

Whereas, the Senator from Michigan gave a very good explanation of what is in the tax provision, I want to speak about our efforts to balance the budget, our efforts to reduce the role of Government in our economy by reducing the size of the budget, by reducing the percentage of the budget to the gross national product over time, meaning a lessening of the amount of money that is run through the inefficient operation of the Federal budget, because we believe that the free market, the segment of the economy out there that comes from the private sector, the nonpublic part of our budget, is the most efficient distributor of goods and services, where the jobs are created, where we have efficiency within our economy.

Getting to a balanced budget sets a very, very good starting point for the reduction of interest rates. And it is projected that interest rates will go down 1.5 to 2 percent if we pass this year a budget that will balance by the year 2002. And we are gradually and responsibly reducing expenditures to get to that point that interest rates will go down. In fact, we started to reduce Government expenditures with a rescissions bill of $14 billion for fiscal year 1995, just completed.

By reducing interest rates, we are setting the stage, then, for growing the economy, for creating jobs and expanding, as we must be. There is so much of the job creation which comes from the private sector and the small business sector of the private sector that with interest rates going down, it is really going to encourage small businesses to create more jobs. They are the engine. Small business is the engine that drives our economy.

Getting to this point has been about a 10-month process. Remember, just 12 months ago there was a Republican program called the contract that had 10 features in it that was in a sense a national program. When normally we have 435 different races for Congress and campaigns for Congress, the Republican Party had one national campaign. And the centerpiece of that national campaign was to deliver a balanced budget. Twelve months ago we may not have foreseen a Republican victory the size that it was, we may not have foreseen the people's response to the program, but that program called for a balanced budget.

We took control of both Houses of Congress in January for the first time in 40 years. In a sense, when we took over in January we transformed our contract into New Year's resolutions with the American people. We said that we are going to put this bloated Government on a diet. Then for the last 10 months, we have been following a regime to achieve our resolution.

What happens in the Senate on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week, as far as delivering upon one of the major promises of the last campaign—to balance the budget, to reduce taxes, and to reduce taxes that are paid for by cutting spending—that is all of that 10 months of work. Everything that the people have been expecting since they voted 12 months ago for a new Congress is coming to an end on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday. What decides whether or not we are successful is if we have 50 votes to pass this reconciliation bill. We Republicans then have been following a regime to achieve our resolution that we started on last January.

The other side of the aisle, meaning my Democratic friends, have been carping with neither shame nor credibility. They have no credible alternatives. Oh, the President said in June, after 6 months of finally waking up to what the people decided in the last election, that he was for a balanced budget, not in 7 years as the Republicans planned but in 10 years. But when the Congressional Budget Office, the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office, looks at the President's program to balance a budget in 10 years, they do not find a budget balance in 10 years. They still find $200 billion deficits as far as you can see into the future.

That is no different than the President's program of 1993, which he claims has reduced deficits more than in any other 3-year period than any other President ever had. But the point is the President's program of 1993 still saw beyond the year 1997 $200 billion deficits as far as the eye can see. Two years later, in June 1995, the President says he is for a balanced budget by 2005. But when you score it the same way we score our budgets, it is still the same old story—unbalanced budgets as far as you can see into the future.

Maybe I should not say the other side has no alternative, because the President did say the budget ought to be balanced. He did not send up a program to do it. He just said that is something that he is for. But never before was he for a balanced budget. Then later on he said, well, maybe it can be done in 9 years. Then I believe it was just last week, or near to now, he said he could agree with the Republicans, that it ought to be done in 7 years and can be done in 7 years.

But for the most part, all we have heard from the opposition is naysayers. This diet that we Republicans want to put the Federal bureaucracy on, the other side has been saying no to, naysayers. It is kind of like those little voices that you hear in your head when each of us say that we ought to go on a diet, or we are going to go on a diet. That little voice in our head says, "I cannot do this. I cannot do this." That little voice says, "Let us wait until manana." Or it says, "I do not feel like doing anything today, do it tomorrow. Maybe tomorrow I will start, I will start my diet." Then you hear those little voices with millions of excuses why you cannot go on a diet.

The Republican program is putting the Federal bureaucracy and Federal programs on a diet. It is being downsized. That is the essence of our reconciliation bill before us. The other side, without shame or credibility, are naysayers to this process.

Madam President, sometimes to achieve the best results we ought to tune out those little voices, not listen to those little voices in our head who say, "I cannot do this," or, "I will do it tomorrow," or any of those other million excuses that we hear. Tune out those little voices.

So that is why I speak to my colleagues, particularly my colleagues on the other side of the aisle, because this is a very important debate about turning things around and no longer business as usual when it comes to the fiscal policy of the Federal Government because business as usual has been for 30 years, do not be concerned about a balanced budget. Or maybe I can say the last 10 years, be concerned about a balanced budget, but not really doing anything about it. That is business as usual.

The people in the last election sent us a clear signal that they no longer want business as usual in Washington. And the reconciliation bill up for debate on Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday for 20 hours of debate in this body, and then hence to final passage, is our statement of no longer business as usual, that we are going to deliver on the promises of the last election. For once, Congress is going to perform according to the rhetoric of the last campaign. Our performance will be commensurate with what we said in the last election. And the essence of that is our Government programs and our bureaucracy must go on a diet.

And so during this debate then, just tune out those little voices that say, "I can't do this. I can't go on a diet." Because we will. We must. And we sense the responsibility not only because it philosophically comports with what we feel Government must do, but it is also a behavioral change that comes from the large voice of the electorate that spoke in the last election.

This very important debate can be summed up in just one word. That one word is six letters, future, f-u-t-u-r-e. This budget plans for the future; this budget provides for the future; and by so doing gives our children and our grandchildren a future, the sort of future that we have a responsibility to leave them. It is not a responsibility that we judge our own. It is a responsibility that we have inherited from past generations of Americans who have given my generation and younger generations a great country to live in, a better future than our ancestors had and the generation that preceded it.

That would not be possible, Madam President, without providing a balanced budget and the secure future that it allows. In effect, it is a necessary forerunner to a guaranteed future as we know it and better for our younger generations.

This budget provides a positive vision for our country's future, a future in which we have a balanced budget that will help increase productivity, lower interest rates, create more jobs and, most importantly, lessen the tax burden we are placing on today's children.

Let us be clear. We talk about fiscal policy. We talk about doing economic good. We talk about a secure future in materialistic terms. But this is not just a debate about material betterment. It is not a debate about abstract fiscal policy or economic issues. This is more a moral issue than anything else.

The Republican Party simply believes it is not right for our generation to live high on the hog and to pass the bills on to the next generation of young people. We are saying that finally Congress realizes that is just not right. That is what we said in the last election. We did not know when we said it that people would respond positively to it. But the voters did respond positively to it by the biggest shakeup in Congress since the 1930 election. That 1930 election turned things around politically so much in Congress and Washington, DC, that there has not been a change from that direction until now.

Now, whether there was a whole new political environment ushered in by the election in 1994, I do not know for sure. I suppose the 1996 and 1998 elections will answer that question for me. But I do know this, that we got the message of the last election. We are responding to it. And we are passing a budget that is balanced based upon the fact that it is immoral for us to go in the hole, to deficit spend and not care who pays the bill while we live good and live well.

While we are worried about what the 1996 election or the 1998 election might mean for securing a long-term political change in Washington, DC, we have the responsibility to do what the voters asked us to do in the last election. So this budget states that we believe Americans know how to spend their hard-earned dollars better than bureaucrats as we decrease the size of Government as a proportion of the gross national product, as we reduce the number of Government employees, as we reduce and eliminate deficits by the year 2002. We show our faith in the American people by giving back to them $224 billion of their hard-earned tax dollars for them to decide how to spend for their future because we believe it will be more efficiently spent by them than by Government.

Finally, this budget ensures that the future of our seniors and the baby boomers who will soon be retiring is secure because we preserve Medicare in this budget and we ensure that it does not go bankrupt. Republicans have offered a comprehensive vision of the future. We have kept the promise of the last election. If we pass this resolution in the next 2 days, we have kept our New Year's resolution to the voters to put Government on a diet. We have not listened to those little voices in the minds who say, "I can't go on this diet. I can't do this today. I will do it tomorrow." We have listened to the loud voice of the electorate.

Now, incredibly, I have heard the President claim that the Republican balanced budget would mortgage our future—would mortgage our future. Can you imagine the nerve of the President saying the Republican balanced budget will mortgage our future when we have been mortgaging our future for the last 30 years because it was 1969—not quite 30 years, 26 years—since we have had a balanced budget. He did not say that out of ignorance because the President is a very intelligent person. I do not know really why he said it. I would like to know why. It seems to me that it could be part of a program to muddy the waters.

It is clear to the people what is going on up here on the Hill because this budget, this reconciliation bill before us, does not mortgage the future. The failed policies of the big spenders have already done that. We Republicans, with this balanced budget resolution, are successfully ridding ourselves of the deficit, the so-called mortgage that is on our future, so that we can have a bright future for our young people.

Unfortunately, the Democratic side offers nothing for the future. It seems the White House is happy to have a growing deficit that continues to mortgage our future. The White House, by not cooperating with Congress to balance the budget, is sending a clear message that they want in essence to take out a second mortgage to fund increased spending instead of doing the responsible thing of balancing the budget.

The White House policy will have our children and grandchildren continuing to pay not only the first mortgage but the second mortgage.

I guess, Mr. President, the essence is that the other side of the aisle has no New Year's resolution. They can only offer working families more of the same. They do not even want to sit down at the table with us to negotiate. Right after our summer recess in August, we returned after Labor Day, the President was invited to the Hill—not to the Hill, wherever the President wants to sit down with Republican leadership to talk compromise, work out differences. The President then would have to put his wares on the table for the whole world to see. Evidently, he was not ready to do that. No response.

October 1 comes, the end of the fiscal year. We have to move forward. We moved the time ahead to November the 13th, but we could not wait any longer to fulfill the constitutional responsibilities that the Congress has to provide a budget; and implicit in our Constitution, a balanced budget, because we have had more balanced budgets in peacetime than we have deficits throughout the history of our country.

Just last Thursday, the Speaker of the House and the Senate majority leader offered the President to sit down and talk. No response. So we move forward. I think this can be resolved. But it cannot be resolved by the other side having no program and at the same time carping and criticizing what the majority is doing. More of these same policies are going to bankrupt Medicare.

This bill before us solves that problem, as the trustees, the Democrat trustees, asked us to do on April 2. Not the President's proposal, it is going to provide for more out-of-control spending, with $200 billion deficits that will destroy our children's futures because that is what the President's 10-year balanced budget program—even though he did not give us specifics—would provide. That is not my determination. That is the determination of the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office. And you know in this proposal it is going to still continue to give us more taxes, more taxes, and more taxes. And if there are not more taxes this day, because the President may not be proposing to change tax policy—he did it with the biggest tax increase in the history of the country in 1993—for the young people of America it is going to mean into the next century tax increases of 80-some percent because of irresponsible spending today.

So I think it is clear which New Year's resolution the American people want us to keep. It is the one of promising a future for our young people, a future for our country, a future for the world, as this engine of the United States, this economic engine of the United States, drives the rest of the world.

We have that opportunity to fulfill that promise for our future generations by adopting this resolution and to avoid being influenced by the carping from the other side of the aisle and from the White House that has no program to reach the goals that we do.

I yield the floor.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas and, following that 5 minutes, to the Senator from Alabama from our time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, we have now been on this bill 6 hours—let us see, I believe a little over 6 hours, 6 hours, 30 minutes, and we have yet to vote. We only have 20 hours on the entire bill. And my question is this: This bill, which everybody on the other side of the aisle is so proud of, why do you not want to let us offer the amendments and let you defend it?

That is all we want. If you are so proud of that tax cut, let us offer an amendment to make that tax cut refundable for the people who really need it. You call it a middle-class tax cut. That does not even stand the giggle test. A family with four children, making $20,000 a year, probably pays no income tax. And they do not get the $500 per child tax credit. They get nothing. The $500 credit is only available if you pay $500 in income tax.

Contrast that situation with this: A man and wife with one child, and they pay, we will say, $500 in taxes. Under the Republican budget, they will get that $500 back through the child tax credit. But if you happen to have a house full of kids, your dependent exemptions will probably result in you paying no income taxes, so you will not be eligible for the same credit wealthier families get. That is a middle-class tax cut? We all know now that 49.5 percent of the people in this country make less than $30,000 a year. What do they get out of this middle-class tax cut? They get a tax increase. 50 percent of the people in this country are going to wind up paying more.

Now, I will never forget in 1981 when Ronald Reagan came to town on the promise he was going to balance the budget, and I was hot for him. I am one of three Senators in the U.S. Senate—I want to cleanse my skirts—who voted for every one of President Reagan's spending cuts, but I voted against that massive tax cut. If everybody had voted the way FRITZ HOLLINGS, BILL BRADLEY and DALE BUMPERS voted, we would have had a balanced budget. But, no, we had to give the store away. General Electric made——

Mr. INHOFE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUMPERS. No.

General Electric made $3.7 billion in 1983 and got a $700 million tax cut. That was all $3 trillion ago, $3 trillion from the promise of a balanced budget. In only 8 years, our $1 trillion debt went to $3 trillion. You talk about snake oil.

So what are we doing here? Are we going to pass an amendment that says the tax cut cannot come out of the Social Security trust fund? If you want to balance the budget, forget the tax cut. CBO says that without the tax cut we can balance the budget in the year 2001, a year earlier than under this budget. How is the tax cut being paid for? Out of Medicare, out of school lunches, out of Social Security, out of student loans, out of the earned income tax credit, out of agricultural programs. It does not make any difference which spending cut you say is the source of the tax cut. It does not matter.

What matters is that we are giving away $220 billion to $240 billion in taxes that ought to go on the deficit or, at a minimum, be placed back in those programs like school lunches and Head Start and student loans and things that give people at the bottom of the ladder a fighting chance to become somebody.

I got that chance when I went to one of the best law schools in the country on the GI bill, and I have been trying to pay it back ever since by reaching from the top of the ladder down to people on the bottom rung and bringing them up, because I think that makes me better and it makes our country stronger.

I consider this 2,000-page monstrosity of a bill, that must weigh at least 10 pounds, I consider it one of the worst disasters to befall this institution called Congress. You think of it—penalizing the elderly, penalizing poor children, penalizing the most vulnerable among us while we give away 76 percent of the capital gains tax cut to the wealthiest people in America. Meanwhile, we continue to sell lands for $100 an acre when the mineral rights are worth thousands of dollars an acre. So the StillWater Mining Co. in Montana will pay $200,000 for a plot of land worth $38 billion in platinum and palladium. We are giving away taxpayers' property while we penalize the most vulnerable among us.

Thank you, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senate will soon be faced with an up-or-down vote on proposals of mammoth proportions. These proposals will directly affect virtually every segment of the government and every citizen of this country. For some, the consequences will be positive. For the vast majority, however, the consequences will be bad—in some cases, like for the elderly, students, and working class, the effects will be economically devastating.

While this package as written will significantly reduce the deficit, at least in the short term, there is considerable doubt as to whether or not it will ultimately balance the budget by 2002. Some of the savings are artificial or even lose money despite producing CBO-scored savings. As we all know, future congressional action is likely to reduce other savings currently assumed by this plan. A major portion of the projected savings in this plan come from Medicare and Medicaid. Welfare reform, nutrition programs, the earned income tax credit, farm programs, and student loans are other areas facing enormous cuts.

I am strongly in favor of deficit reduction and, ultimately, the elimination of the national debt. I have long supported a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution. I supported the 1993 reconciliation bill which has already led to significant reductions in our annual deficits. But as with any omnibus legislation of this type, there is a right and wrong way to pursue the same goal. Themes and patterns emerge. Priorities and process do matter, and it appears that on balance, the priorities in the package before us are seriously misguided.

What our colleagues on the other side are attempting is to place a vastly disproportionate share of the pain which will inevitable result from cuts of this magnitude on those least able to absorb it—working people, the elderly, students. There is a bitter flavor that this package produces, and you do not have to bite off and chew on its details to taste its bitterness. Its basic ingredients were listed in the blue-print the Senate passed several months ago, but as they have been mixed together and as they have simmered in the context of this reconciliation package, they have become dramatically more bitter.

The theme throughout is to benefit those who have already benefitted greatly in this society, and to punish those who are simply trying to get by or to realize a share of the American dream.

I have several major concerns surrounding this legislation, but the most disturbing are the cuts in Medicare and Medicaid. The plan is to cut Medicare growth by $270 billion over 7 years. In addition to slowing the growth of spending from 10 percent a year to about 6.4 percent, it mandates a major restructuring of the program to supposedly give Medicare enrollees a wide range of options to join private health plans. I am concerned that instead of options, however, senior citizens will instead be faced with fewer alternatives, and will be forced into certain plans because they have no choice.

It is my understanding that $89 billion in savings would rescue the Medicare Program, but we are considering a bill which cuts it by $270 billion. The proposed $270 billion of savings is vastly more than is needed to preserve the solvency of the program. Therefore, we need honest answers as to why we are attempting to write into law a $270 billion reduction.

The direction we are going will ultimately cause senior citizens to be charged more for health care while receiving less in Medicare, all the while financing a tax break for those in the upper income brackets.

A great portion of the savings in Medicare would result by raising the part B premium. The premiums that our senior citizens pay would rise from the $46.10 per month to more than $90 by the Year 2002.

I have reservations and misgivings with regard to any Medicare reform that threatens the access to, and quality of, health care for senior citizens. Specifically, this bill would cut inpatient hospital service, home health care services, extended care services, hospice care, physicians services, outpatient hospital services, diagnostic tests, and other important services to our senior citizens.

In addition to reduction in services, the following immediate burdens would be placed on our senior citizens: For Fiscal Year 1996, the monthly premium would rise to $54. Participants in the part B program would be required to pay the first $150 of expenses out-of-pocket rather than the current $100 deductible. This would rise by $10 annually through the year 2002. All these in combination with the proposal to raise the eligibility age to 67 leads me to believe that seniors are being singled out to bear the brunt of budget cuts.

We all realize that the Medicare Program cannot continue functioning indefinitely as it is now, but the cure is certainly not the Republican plan.

Not only do these proposals cut Medicare, but Medicaid is being reduced by $187 billion over the next 7 years. For the past 30 years, the Medicaid Program has been America's health and long-term care safety net. The Republican proposal is to repeal Medicaid, slash its Federal funding over the next 7 years by 20 percent, and to turn remaining Federal funds over to the States in the form of a block grant. According to the American Health Care Association, in 1993, 43 percent of the cost of Medicaid payments was born by the States. Under the block grant proposal, by 2002, the state share would be 56 percent—a 13-percent increase in just 7 short years. In a State like Alabama, which is habitually faced with budget proration, the effects of such additional burdens will be huge and devastating.

The National Association of Counties strongly opposes the block granting of Medicaid and the loss of a Federal guarantee to benefits. In a letter sent to my office yesterday, its executive director, Larry E. Naake, wrote,

> We do not believe that states will find enough budgetary efficiencies without reducing eligibility . . . Individuals will continue to have health needs, regardless of the payor source. That is why we have always supported the intergovernmental nature of the Medicaid program and the assurance that there is some minimum level of coverage guaranteed to eligible individuals, regardless of the state in which they reside.

The Democratic plan would reform Medicaid, not repeal it. It would restrain the rate of growth in Federal Medicaid spending in a responsible manner, not slash spending so much that huge cutbacks in eligibility, benefits, and payments to providers are inevitable. It would maintain a Federal fiscal partnership with the States for health and long-term care, not break the commitment to assist States and localities in paying for care to vulnerable Americans.

These proposed cuts in Medicare and Medicaid funding would also have a devastating impact on hospitals and health care systems since providers will take the brunt of $270 billion Medicare reductions. Alabama would get $1.45 billion less in Federal Medicaid assistance over the next 7 years. Such a drastic cut will have a profound effect on the ability of health care providers to meet the ever-increasing needs of the community and will also increase costs for those with private insurance plans. On the other hand, the right kinds of decisions could set the course for restructuring these programs in ways that will enable providers to deliver quality care more efficiently.

These extreme cuts to Medicare also threaten health care for millions of people of all ages living in rural America. Medicare spending in rural communities will be cut by $57.9 billion over the next 7 years—a 21-percent reduction by 2002. Since rural hospitals rely on Medicare for a significant proportion of their revenue, they will be particularly hard hit. Some will be forced to close altogether. Hospitals in rural areas are few and far between. A hospital closing affects all rural residents in the vicinity, not just seniors on Medicare. Under the GOP plan, these Americans will be forced to drive further to the nearest hospital, putting lives at risk.

As an alternative to closing, rural hospitals could turn to local residents to pay more for services or to pay higher taxes to subsidize their hospitals. So, taxpayers in rural America will be forced to pay more in order to protect access to health care as well as the quality of their services. Seniors in rural areas already have a limited choice for doctors and this plan will result in fewer doctors accepting Medicare patients or doctors charging seniors more.

Also with regard to rural America and agriculture, there are several provisions which have potential hidden costs. The savings from the Wetlands Reserve Program, for example, do not continue in the years beyond 2002. CBO anticipates that in those years, the program would actually be more expensive under this legislation than under current law. In addition, the removal of the requirement to purchase crop insurance will expose additional farmers to losses from poor weather, floods, and other natural disasters. In the past, Congress has responded to such events with supplemental appropriations for disaster relief. The removal of the crop insurance requirement provides budget savings for reconciliation but undermines a key element of last year's crop insurance reforms, which were intended to end the temptation for Congress to pass costly disaster assistance bills. If our past experience is any guide, the end result will be even higher Federal spending.

I am also deeply dismayed over the $10.8 billion cuts in student loans, most of which will come out of students' and parents' pockets through higher interest payments. Each school would be required to pay a 0.85 percent fee on the amount of Federal loans made for students attending the school. This would undoubtedly be passed on to the students in some form. It would cap the direct lending program at 20 percent of student loan volume. Rather than saving money, this change would only produce paper savings as a result of new scoring rules adopted by the majority.

Mr. President, in this Nation, we have prided ourselves on the quality and accessibility of our system of higher education. Today, through student loans, Pell grants, work-study, and other programs, virtually every person who wants to attend college is able to do so. We have made the correct decision that economic circumstances should not prevent a bright, young mind from being able to obtain a college degree if that is what they want to pursue. Why on Earth would we want to retreat from that commitment by making higher education less accessible to millions of academically qualified students? The bottom line is that to the vast majority of families who depend on student loans to pay tuition, slashing student loans will mean the difference between enrolling their children in college and not sending them.

Finally, Mr. President, I want to discuss my concerns over the changes to the earned income tax credit, which former President Reagan once described this way: "The EITC is the best anti-poverty, the best pro-family, the best job-creation measure to come out of Congress." Republicans in the Senate as well have supported the EITC for many years.

The plan before us dramatically increases taxes on the working poor by scaling back the EITC that so many Republicans have strongly supported in the past. The plan increases taxes by $43 billion over the next 7 years. This means an immediate $281 average tax increase on 17 million low-income American taxpayers. By the year 2005, 21 percent of all families currently eligible for the EITC would no longer be eligible. While its supporters praise hard work and self-reliance, their plan will make life more difficult for millions working in demanding, low-paying jobs.

In 1993, when the EITC was expanded, the Treasury Department estimated that approximately 374,700 Alabama families would qualify for a financial break under the plan. Actually, almost 388,000 families ultimately qualified under the EITC, a total of 22 percent of the entire returns filed. If this plan is adopted, these hundreds of thousands of families and millions of others across the country will see this benefit evaporate. Approximately 17 million low-income working Americans will see an immediate tax increase averaging $302; that tax increase will grow to an average of $471 per year by 2005. Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin has stated: "Low-income working families will suffer if the Senate Finance Committee's cut to the earned income tax credit becomes law. It is fundamentally unwise to raise income taxes on America's working families while high-income taxpayers are receiving the benefits of a tax cut."

As I stated before, this reconciliation package's priorities are misplaced, its effects unfair, and its assumptions dubious. In its current form, it will and should be vetoed. We should and will be forced to start over after the veto. It would be to our benefit and the benefit of the American people to return this legislative bitter pill back to its container now and come up with a plan that is equitable and that gets the job done the right way.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I want to take a moment from our time, if I might, to thank both my friend from Alabama and my friend from Arkansas, who preceded the Senator from Alabama, for excellent remarks.

The Senator from Alabama is the former chief justice of that State. I have served with the distinguished Senator from Arkansas since 1971 when we both were elected and began service to our States as Governors. They are extremely talented and dedicated people. I want to thank them for their excellent comments to try and recognize the serious problems with this budget bill that I addressed at some length at the beginning of the morning, about 10:30 this morning.

To all I want to say that while I am disappointed that we have not had a single vote yet, I advise all that some progress is being made, and I suspect that in the possibly not too distant future we may have some kind of an announcement by the majority leader and the minority leader, or the chairman of the Budget Committee, Senator DOMENICI, who is on the floor, and we can maybe move more progressively ahead and stop the talking and start the voting.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. INHOFE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield time?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes, are we just open-ended on time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is off the resolution, so the Senator can yield time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator want?

Mr. INHOFE. Three minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 3 minutes to the junior Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico for yielding. I wanted to ask a question of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas when he was very eloquently expressing his position. He was unable to yield to me.

What I was going to ask him is, I heard him state several times on the floor of this body the tax reductions that took place under the Reagan administration. There is a fact that has to be stated at this time, every time someone talks about that, and that is the total revenues for marginal rates in 1980 amounted to $244 billion; in 1990, from the marginal rates that had been decreased, the total tax amounted to $466 billion. In other words, we almost doubled the revenue during that 10-year period, and what happened during that period, as was pointed out by the Senator from Arkansas, is that we had the most significant tax reductions during that period of time. In other words, we increased revenue by reducing taxes, and that has gotten lost in this debate somehow.

Then another observation I had after listening to the Senator from Arkansas was that those same individuals who are fighting the tax reduction that we are proposing in this resolution are the same ones that supported the largest tax increase in the history of America, as it was characterized by not a conservative Republican, JIM INHOFE, but by the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee in 1993: The Clinton tax increase was the largest single tax increase in the history of America or the history of public finance.

Who are the ones who voted for that? Those individuals who voted for that tax increase were the big spenders as ranked by the National Taxpayers Union, National Tax Limitation Committee and all of the other organizations that ranked big spenders in Congress.

So you had the big spenders who were for a tax increase at that time. All we are trying to do is say, "Mr. President, you made a mistake back in 1993 by passing a big tax increase. We want to repeal some of that tax increase."

So the same individuals that are opposing our reduction in taxes now, to give some of the taxes back to individuals in America, are the ones who were supporting a major tax increase.

The last thing I want to mention is that those individuals who in 1993 supported the huge tax increases, a very large percentage of them are not around to vote today because those who came up for reelection during the 1994 election, when that was the major issue in their campaign, were defeated. We have shown that with charts on the floor many times before.

I thank the Senator for yielding.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending ROCKEFELLER motion and the amendment thereto be laid aside in the status quo and that I may be recognized to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2950

(Purpose: To provide for beneficiary incentive programs)

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. ABRAHAM] proposes an amendment numbered 2950.

At the end of chapter 6 of title VII, insert the following:

SEC. . BENEFICIARY INCENTIVE PROGRAMS.

(a) PROGRAM TO COLLECT INFORMATION ON FRAUD AND ABUSE.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Not later than 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall establish a program under which the Secretary shall encourage individuals to report to the Secretary information on individuals and entities who are engaging or who have engaged in acts or omissions which constitute grounds for the imposition of a sanction under section 1128, section 1128A, or section 1128B of the Social Security Act, or who have otherwise engaged in fraud and abuse against the medicare program for which there is a sanction provided under law. The program shall discourage provision of, and not consider, information which is frivolous or otherwise not relevant or material to the imposition of such a sanction.

(2) PAYMENT OF PORTION OF AMOUNTS COLLECTED.—If an individual reports information to the Secretary under the program established under paragraph (1) which serves as the basis for the collection by the Secretary or the Attorney General of any amount of at least $100 (other than any amount paid as a penalty under section 1128B of the Social Security Act), the Secretary may pay a portion of the amount collected to the individual (under procedures similar to those applicable under section 7623 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to payments to individuals providing information on violations of such Code).

(b) PROGRAM TO COLLECT INFORMATION ON PROGRAM EFFICIENCY.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT OF PROGRAM.—Not later than 3 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall establish a program under which the Secretary shall encourage individuals to submit to the Secretary suggestions on methods to improve the efficiency of the medicare program.

(2) PAYMENT OF PORTION OF PROGRAM SAVINGS.—If an individual submits a suggestion to the Secretary under the program established under paragraph (1) which is adopted by the Secretary and which results in savings to the program, the Secretary may make a payment to the individual of such amount as the Secretary considers appropriate.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, on our time, I know a lot of Senators are in their offices and are wondering what we are doing. They have a right to wonder. I will explain that we had an understanding with the Democratic leadership that we would set aside in a status quo the previous motion to recommit and the amendment to it, leave it in a status quo format, and proceed to another amendment.

The other amendment is the amendment that Senator ABRAHAM offered. It is being reviewed, but I believe we ought to proceed with it. Why are we doing this? I think everyone knows that, since shortly before noon, we have been working with the Democratic leadership, and they have been working very hard, from what I can tell—and I truly believe that—to see if we cannot narrow down the number of amendments and establish some process which will be more orderly than just waiting until the end and having hundreds of amendments just offered. We are working on that, and we have not yet reached an agreement. We have agreed to take up the Abraham amendment in the normal course. We will take an hour, and that side can take what time they need. This will give us some time to further our negotiations, which will continue in a very lively manner.

I yield the floor.

Mr. FORD. Will the chairman of the Budget Committee answer a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course.

Mr. FORD. As I understand it, we have a motion before the Senate and then we have a first-degree amendment. We do not have an amendment in the second degree here; is that right?

Mr. DOMENICI. We have a motion to recommit.

Mr. FORD. And then we have an amendment in the first degree. We have used up all of the time allotted, unless we get unanimous consent on both of those; is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. That is correct.

Mr. FORD. We have set both of those aside in this agreement here, and we have an amendment in the first degree.

Mr. DOMENICI. Which is totally separate and distinct, yes.

Mr. FORD. Now, this amendment has 2 hours. At the end of the 2-hour period, an amendment in the second degree, which would have an hour, would be in order; is that right?

Mr. DOMENICI. Correct.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. EXON. Will the Budget Committee chairman yield for a further question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure.

Mr. EXON. If I have understood what you have said, this is a Republican amendment, and 1 hour is allocated on that side and 1 hour on this side. If this side of the aisle only uses 5, 10, 15, or 20 minutes, then we would only be charged with that on our total 10-hour allotment; is that correct?

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is not correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. What would happen, Senator, is 1 hour and 10 minutes is charged against the bill if you use 10 minutes and we start from that point to allot time again; if you used an hour and we use 10 minutes, 1 hour and 10 minutes would be charged against the total hours of the bill and we start from that new point.

That is no different than it has been forever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is divided equally in that case.

Mr. DOMENICI. Thereafter, the time is divided equally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time is allocated equally.

Mr. DOMENICI. That is a different way of saying what I said.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, the question is, What happens if the Democrats just take 10 minutes? They lose half of 50 minutes, which is 25 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is correct.

Mr. FORD. So we are caught in the dilemma here now that if the Republicans take a full hour and we do not take but say 10 minutes, then we lose 25 minutes of which they could get on the next amendment.

It seems like there ought to be some other way. If we did not want to use our time or the Republican side did not want to use their time, we could save that for an amendment we would like. But the rules are the rules, and I understand.

Mr. DOMENICI. Maybe I ought to clarify it.

I think I expressed it my way but I would rather express it this way: It has been the rule since we had reconciliation on the floor in the Senate that whatever amount of time is used on an amendment by both sides is charged equally to both sides.

Is that not correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOMENICI. I told that to the distinguished Senator yesterday. We were discussing it. We are not changing a thing here. The shoe is on both sides. Sometimes it works the other way. It has worked both ways in the times I have managed the bills.

It will come out all right in the end. You will have your amendments, from what I can tell. We can use more time this way.

Mr. EXON. If I might just add some editorial comment here, the problem that we have is that at 9 o'clock this morning I was in the first meeting. We have been meeting and talking and advising and cajoling now going on almost 12 hours.

The point I make is that I think it is time we start voting. I simply say that the delaying tactics thus far are just cutting down the time that I think we would like to use on this side of the aisle on several very key, very important amendments.

I am not saying that the amendment being offered by the Senator from Michigan is not an important one. It probably is. But compared with the many amendments we have ready to offer and want to vote on this side—another way of saying this. I am very much disturbed by the fact we are continuing to use up the time.

We only have a total of 20 hours to debate the most far-reaching reconciliation bill, maybe the most far-reaching bill that has ever been presented to the U.S. Senate, when you consider all of its implications.

I recognize we may be playing by the rules but the rules in this particular instance might not be fair. I appeal once again as one who has worked on this all day long. I wish we could start voting up or down on the important amendments.

I do not believe that we should or could under the dictates of the 20-hour maximum limit, that we should be taking an hour on each side to debate the amendment that is being offered by the Senator from Michigan. It may be something, when I know more, that I will fully vote for.

I think time is wasting and I wanted to make that point. I yield the floor.

Mr. DOMENICI. I just want to say I think we have explained that we are using the time usefully. We are using the time usefully to try to make a better arrangement for the rest of the bill. We ought to be through with that soon.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I have sent an amendment to the desk which has been read.

Mr. President, the savings necessary to rescue the Medicare program from bankruptcy will not be found solely through eliminating waste, fraud and abuse. Nevertheless, I believe it is incumbent upon us to diligently pursue and root out every vestige of inefficiency in the system.

Therefore, I am offering this amendment which I think will produce additional vigilance in the ballots against Medicare waste and fraud. This amendment calls on the Secretary of Health and Human Services to establish programs that enlist Medicare beneficiaries in our efforts to eliminate waste, fraud and abuse in the Medicare system.

These beneficiary incentive programs, as they would be called, would come in two forms: One program would reward individuals who report fraudulent activities; the other program would reward individual beneficiaries for suggestions they make which result in greater efficiency and overall savings to the program.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services would be responsible for setting up each program and for providing financial remuneration to those individuals reporting instances of tangible fraud and waste.

The Senate Finance Committee's reconciliation package currently does not contain a beneficiary incentive program or provision. The amendment I offer would include in the Senate reconciliation bill language which is similar to that currently in the House proposal.

It is difficult to explain to Medicare beneficiaries why dramatic changes in the program are necessary to keep it from going bankrupt when many of these same individuals have firsthand experience with waste and fraud in the system.

Indeed, Mr. President, in my own State we recently had an incident where a Congressman had a constituent come to him with an overcharging of something in the vicinity of $400,000 that was made in error. Nevertheless, it has been paid.

Those kind of circumstances make at least my constituents who are part of the Medicare Program frustrated, angry, and especially concerned when they hear about changes we are making in the program. They do not want to see us just address the growth issues or just the solvency issues. They also want us to address the problems they see every day with fraud, waste, and abuse in the program.

That, in my judgment, has to be addressed in our bill. That is why I offered this amendment.

If our efforts at Medicare reform are to succeed we must demonstrate our seriousness about ending these abuses. I believe enlisting the aid of Medicare beneficiaries, showing our resolve to combat the problem can prove to be a valuable asset in exposing and eliminating waste and fraud from the system.

Just to clarify, Mr. President, my amendment authorizes the Secretary of HHS to within 3 months establish two separate programs, one which would basically be called a beneficiary incentive program designed to allow seniors to report fraud, waste and so on, and if the fraud is significant, allow the Secretary to provide a financial reward to the individual who reports it.

The second program, also designed to allow Medicare beneficiaries to benefit from ideas and suggestions in improving the program, would provide Medicare beneficiaries awards for providing us with recommendations specifically to the Secretary of HHS for improvements to the Medicare Program by way of promoting greater efficiency. Once again, if the savings are significant, the Secretary of HHS may provide a financial award to the individual whose recommendation was submitted.

Mr. President, we are addressing the growth of Medicare and its expense in many different ways in this legislation. I think a key component in the long-term control of those costs has to be ferreting out this abuse and waste.

I believe this amendment, as part of a package of similar reform, can make a significant impact in reducing those kind of costs that stem from either inefficiencies in the program or fraud or mismanagement in the program.

I am pleased to offer this amendment tonight and I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, all day I have listened attentively to both sides of this debate. Increasingly, I have grown deeply saddened because I see the polarization that is taking place between the two sides of the aisle. I tried to reflect on the profound impact this bill will have on people, specifically, the 32 million people in the State of California.

In a sense, it is ironic that this bill is called a "reconciliation" bill, for in reality, other than in Washington-speak, it is far from a reconciliation that we have here on the floor today.

If one just looks at the size of the Medicaid and Medicare cuts, one cannot help but be staggered by what its impact will likely be. Overall, the $450 billion cut in Medicaid and Medicare, would affect my State of California to the tune of $54 billion in losses during the next 7 years. That breaks down as $36 billion in Medicare cuts and $18 billion in Medicaid cuts. Those cuts will have an enormous impact on the people of California.

Let me give you an example of this bill's harsh consequences. In California, 15 percent of the current Medicare recipients are also receiving Medicaid. That is 540,000 of the poorest seniors in the State of California. They need Medicaid to meet their Medicare premiums and copayments. Premiums are being doubled and, under the bill, they will not have the assistance of Medicaid. What is, obviously, the likely result? Without Medicaid to assist these seniors meet their payments, many will lose their benefits and be placed at higher risk.

Further, for people suffering with HIV/AIDS, Medicaid is the most important program in the Nation. With these Medicaid cuts, what happens? It puts added stress on the public hospital, the county hospitals, in the State.

So let's turn and look and see what is happening to the county hospital. In the 58 counties of my State, county hospitals—like San Francisco General in San Francisco or Martin Luther King, Jr., General in Los Angeles, will lose an estimated $150 million over the next 7 years.

Now let's turn to the great teaching hospitals in my State. The University of California system is a great system, probably the best in the world, with five great, major teaching hospitals. They are projected to lose $444 million over the next 7 years.

In a letter from the university system, they inform me that, for the first time in history, the University of California's teaching hospitals will go into deficit.

Great teaching hospitals going into deficit.

Public hospitals not being able to keep up.

Medicaid cuts that will prevent the poorest in our Nation from being able to use Medicare.

I really had to ask myself the question—is it really necessary to do it this way? This is where the bill becomes, I must honestly say, immoral. Because the answer to the question has to be, no, it is not necessary.

When you add it all up, you know that these cuts are as deep as they are for one reason, and one reason alone—to provide an enormous tax cut in this bill, while the poor get hit hard by the changes in the earned income tax credit.

I am one Democrat who supports a cut in capital gains, but not on the backs of poor people. It is simply not what we are supposed to do—either party, Republican or Democrat.

I have a basic philosophical belief. What Government should do is those things that the private sector cannot do. So Medicare and Medicaid are an important part of that philosophy. To take these deep cuts at this time, all at once, without any hearings or full knowledge of how these cuts will fall?

What does happen to the five great teaching hospitals?

When do they have a chance to give testimony and indicate what they can or what they cannot save? What does happen to 540,000 seniors who depend upon Medicaid to make their Medicare premium and copayments? What happens to them? We have not discussed it. Nobody knows.

What happens to the county hospitals, already cut deeply, the major providers of indigent care in many areas across California? The DSH payments are not going to be enough. What happens to the affected AIDS/HIV community, more dependent on Medicaid than any other single program?

These are questions that deserve a hearing. These are questions that deserve the wisdom of both parties sitting down and working it out.

Mr. President, I am delighted to see the Senator from Arizona in the chair, because we just had an example of where we can work together. He and I both know that the majority leader, and you as a major author, did not have to compromise on the Jerusalem bill we recently considered on the floor.

You had the votes to do it without it. And, yet, your feeling was—and I think correctly so—that it would be a better bill, with less divisiveness, if we sat down and tried to work out our differences. And, Mr. President, you and I and others sat down at least twice and we worked out our differences and we were able to produce a bill that got all but five votes in this esteemed body.

I really think that is the way our people—those people who elected us—think that is what they elected us to do. They didn't elect us to be so partisan that we drive a divisive wedge into two of the most important programs, Medicaid and Medicare, that touch human lives in this country.

I will tell you honestly—God strike me dead if it is wrong—I do not know how the State of California is going to cope with these cuts. They are deep, they are wide and they are enormous for a State that has a growing poor population, that is the site of 40 percent of all of the foreign born, that has more illegal immigrants in it than all the other States, combined, and has probably the largest number of needy people.

We recently considered welfare reform on the Senate floor. I voted for welfare reform, yet welfare reform is a $7 billion cut to California—no question—by any independent analyses. I voted for it because I felt there was a redeeming value in making the necessary changes and moving off chronic dependency.

Yet, how can I vote for this budget bill and show up back in California when I know the reason the cuts are so deep is simply to give a tax cut?

Who benefits?

My husband is a merchant banker. He deals in this kind of financial area. He would love to have a capital gains cut. He pays major income taxes. They went up in 1993, just like 275,000 other families out of 13 million taxpayers in the State of California.

But does he want to get a capital gains cut under these conditions? Anybody can call him and he will say no. It is morally wrong. It is not right to do it this way. And that is the gut-level problem that I have with this bill that so saddens me.

The Republican Party has been known as the party that is most concerned about the national debt. True, we have a national debt of $4.9 trillion, which has developed, largely, over the past 25 years. But this budget bill will add to the deficit over its 7 years. Under this bill, the Nation's debt will increase by about $670 billion over the next 7 years—about $245 billion more than if no tax cut is enacted. This is not fiscally responsible action.

Further, I recently learned that June O'Neill of the Congressional Budget Office reports that, if off-budget items, such as Social Security, where not incorporated into the deficit calculation, the budget would show a $105 billion deficit in 2002 under the Republican leadership's plan, not the balanced budget they claim. Now is not the time for an excessive, and misdirected, tax cut.

The current deficit is $160 billion and that is too high and needs to be eliminated. But the deficit has been as high as $290 billion only a few years ago. True, the deficit picks up in the outyears of this decade. And true, Medicaid and Medicare are partially responsible for it and need to be changed.

I will support changes in these programs, like an age of eligibility change. I will support means testing of premiums, not because I want to, but because I believe it has to be done.

But to take the cuts this way, for the purpose of being able to rationalize a tax cut directing billions to the investment banker types of this country, is absolutely wrong. It is morally wrong.

And to go back to California and tell senior citizens, some of whom, in my State are eating dog food—true story, eating dog food, and using Medicaid to pay their premiums, is something I cannot accept. The lower you are on the economic ladder the more difficult it is.

I am sure I have exceeded my time. I apologize. I got a bit wound up. But I think it suffices to say that I do not know how anyone can vote for this bill and return to their people and say, "You are not going to be hurt by it." I know I cannot.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I want to thank my friend and colleague from the State of California for a very excellent statement, and, as usual, she puts it into perspective so we can all understand it. I think the personal remark that she made with regard to her husband should set the tone of understanding that I think is very lacking on the budget reconciliation document that we have been addressing and that I addressed along similar lines this morning.

Mr. President, I would simply like to say that, subject to their recognition by the Chair, I yield 10 minutes, first to the Senator from Nebraska, Senator KERREY, and followed by that 10 minutes to the Senator from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. KERREY. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, several Members, Republicans and Democrats, have come to the floor and have decided to use the bipartisan Entitlement Commission—actually established by President Clinton last year—as either the basis for supporting the reconciliation agreement or the basis for opposing it. My opposition I must say is reluctant. I would love to be able to join with Senator GREGG, Senator SIMPSON, and others who participated in this effort and understand that the severity of the long-term problems with entitlements is not just Medicare and Medicaid, and other entitlements, but the big one, Social Security. The long-term problem is not something that we can afford to put off. Every year that we wait the problem gets worse.

All of us who look at the situation of retirement understand that the sooner you begin to plan the less you have to put away.

So those that say we will wait until 1997 to deal with Social Security are not doing beneficiaries any favor. The longer we wait the more severe the problem is, and the more the severe the adjustments we have to make. And we should recognize that when you are dealing with retirement or with health care, if there is a requirement to save money and accumulate reserves, as there is with our trust funds, that you have to do it over a prolonged period of time.

Mr. President, the reconciliation agreement does not solve that long-term problem. The appropriated accounts this year are about 26 percent of the whole budget at the end of the 7-year period. We are seeing a decrease in the appropriated accounts—a continuation. I mean it is the most dramatic chart that we have in the entitlement report. I commend it to colleagues who are interested in it, because when you get to the back and see what Senator DANFORTH, I, and Senator SIMPSON recommended you can see that you are dealing with real tough choices.

So I am not objecting to making tough choices. I am not objecting to saying that I will cast a vote for something that might be unpopular. I am not going to criticize the Republicans, for example, for choosing to increase the eligibility age. I think it has to be increased. But what we observe is a long-term problem. Again, when you say long-term problem the presumption is that we can wait a long time before we deal with it. You cannot because the longer you wait the more serious the issue becomes.

Mr. President, I want Members to understand that there are facts here in the Entitlement Commission report, as well as recommendations in the Entitlement Commission, that I believe need to be considered. I regret the President did not take those recommendations and make it a part of his budget. I think we would be in a different shape right now, if, in fact, the observations of the recommendations of the Entitlement Commission were accepted by the administration. But they were not. But there is still bipartisan support for action, and a willingness to risk political careers using facts and using the truth, and hoping the American people trust that we have to make change.

In short, Mr. President, the goal for us in this exercise cannot just be to balance the budget because, if all we do is balance the budget, we have other problems that will still need to be addressed. I have identified a second one.

The second one is the growing cost of entitlements as a percent of our Federal budget. With all the rhetoric on both sides of the issue, the amount of money that the Congress extracts from the U.S. economy has remained relatively constant over the last 50 years. It went up during World War II, and it went up during the Vietnam war, but it remained roughly 19 percent of GDP. It is unlikely that is going to change. It is likely that is going to remain the same even with the proposal to reduce taxes that is in this piece of legislation. It really does not make a dent in that. You are still going to be pulling about 19 percent of GDP. That means the more that we allocate for mandated programs the less we have; not just for defense but for nondefense appropriations accounts. It severely restricts our ability to build roads, our ability to educate our people, to do training, and to do things that I think Republicans and Democrats can agree need to occur.

So not only do we need to balance the budget but we need to interrupt this trend where America is moving in a direction which our Federal Government is moving in—a direction of becoming an ATM machine. Again, time is not on our side. You may say, "Oh, my gosh. I do not want to increase the eligibility age because that will make me unpopular. I do not want to deal with Social Security because it is too controversial." But we have to.

We have obligations on the table right now that we cannot meet. We can meet them over the next 5 or 6 years. We are not going to be able to meet them long term.

The flaw in the Republican proposal, in my opinion, comes from the need to satisfy a relatively small number of people that campaigned on a promise to reduce taxes. It is the tax cut that makes it imperative to get more over the short term and less over the long term. That is why I think this thing may have run aground. But Americans should not suffer under the illusion that is there is an absence of bipartisan willingness to look at the future, and say, "We are going to change our laws so as to change that future." Not only should we be moving toward the balanced budget, but, second, we need to get consensus that we are going to cap all entitlement programs at a fixed percent of our budget—64 percent this year. I would be thrilled to get an agreement on 70 percent instead of the 74 percent that it is going to be in the year 2002.

Third, Mr. President, I have strong objections to this proposal because instead of building a new safety net for a changed economy, which I think we need, we are saying as businesses are downsized they become more productive, and more competitive. But as they do it dictates that we examine our safety net and build a different one. I think on the top of the list, if you are trying to rebuild a safety net, is to change the way we establish eligibility for health insurance in this country. And rather than saying we are going to just change Medicare and reform Medicare, we ought to be reforming Medicare, Medicaid, the income tax deduction, and the VA system—establishing a simplified system of eligibility saying, if you are an American and a legal resident, you are in but you have to participate personally in controls. We are not going to subsidize you, if you do not need to be. We have to, rather than block granting for budgetary reasons, have a new safety net.

If we want to remain an aggressive market economy where our businesses have an incentive to maintain their productive edge, we have to have a safety net that enables people when they find themselves out of work to still know that they have health insurance, and still know that they are going to be able to pay the medical bills.

I was down in Texas over the weekend and discovered in the State of Texas, a relatively conservative State, that 50 percent of all babies delivered in the State of Texas are paid for by Medicaid—Medicaid, Mr. President. This is supposed to be a poverty program, and it is supposed to be a minimal safety net.

The reason that it is increasingly being used by working people is that we do not have a very good and a very flexible program. We are saying, as many Republicans have come to the floor and said, there is something wrong when I have working people without insurance paying a 2.9 percent payroll tax to fund health care programs for some that can afford to pay the bills. There is something wrong with that.

But to reconstruct the health care safety net, we cannot just adjust the payment system in Medicare. We cannot just block grant Medicaid. We ought to be saying let us re-establish a fundamentally different way of becoming eligible for health care, and then let us make sure subsidies go to those who need it, and make sure we provide people with the basis as well, as both Republicans and Democrats have talked about, and accumulating the resources to be able to pay for it.

Mr. President, if this proposal in addition to balancing the budget fixes the cost of entitlements, instead of the Republicans looking across the aisle and saying we are in the majority, we have looked at this Entitlement Commission report, we agree, we have to control the cost of entitlements, here is the proposal to fix it—if the Republicans had said we now come to the table in an understanding that, as well as the market working right now to control the cost of health care, there are some individuals that are not going to be able to purchase it, that is the basis for Republicans supporting Medicare.

We understand that after 65, a lot of people cannot afford to pay the bills because health care gets more expensive. Well, if it is true for 75-year-old people, it is also true for 25-year-old people in the work force. We ought not just be changing Medicare to save money. We ought to reform our health care system so that every single American knows with certainty they are going to be covered.

If the Republican proposal did those three things at a minimum, then I would be standing here as a Democrat supporting it. I would love to be able to get to that point. I know there are many people on the other side of the aisle very uncomfortable with the tax cuts, very uncomfortable in particular with the Joint Tax Committee that has disclosed to Americans that every single person with a family income of $30,000 or under is going to have a tax increase. I know they are not comfortable about that and would prefer to have it changed. I know they understand that the entitlements are a problem, that we have to do more, not less, if we expect to have the resources to invest in our future.

I know there is the basis to produce a bipartisan reconciliation bill that we could send on to the President hopefully for his signature.

Unfortunately, that does not appear to be the direction we are heading. Unfortunately, we appear to be heading in a direction where we are going to sort of rigidly hold on, have a minimum amount of debate, limit the number of amendments offered, pass legislation for the short term and hope the people do not discover we left the long-term problem in place: that we have constructed a safety net that is not adequate for the kind of market economy we face today and unfortunately will have left our children, rather than blessed in the future, still cursed by an insufficient amount of investment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for recognizing me.

I am just going to speak a very few moments on a subject that is and has been very near and dear to my heart during my entire period, you might say, in the field of public life. It relates to nursing home standards, Mr. President.

The legislation that we are considering tonight in this Chamber—I do not know how many thousands of pages, about 2,000, I think—includes what we might think of as just about everything, that nothing was forgotten, nothing was left out, nothing was omitted from the budget reconciliation bill that we are considering this Wednesday evening in the Senate. But there is something very critical left out of the budget reconciliation brought to us by our friends from the other side of the aisle. What was left out, what is notably absent is any Federal national nursing home standards.

Mr. President, only this week, in Time magazine, we see a remarkable article entitled "Back to the Dark Ages," which predicts what is going to happen in the American nursing home to some 2 million residents if we totally do away with Federal standards.

Mr. President, it was in 1987 when the late John Heinz, the Senator from Pennsylvania, the former Senator from Maine, Senator Mitchell, and many of us joined on this side of the aisle with our friends on the other side of the aisle to enact for the first time Federal standards for nursing homes.

If I might, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD this article from Time magazine.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BACK TO THE DARK AGES

(By Margaret Carlson)

Anyone pondering his or her sunset years will remember the exposé of the shocking conditions in nursing homes circa 1970. Woefully undertrained workers strapped patients to hard-backed chairs, fed them cheap diets and kept them in a whimpering state of sedation. There were tales of urine-soaked hospital gowns and of false teeth collected at night and thrown into a communal vessel that patients had to fish through in the morning. All this and more was documented by the National Academy of Sciences in 1986. The next year Congress passed legislation to address decades of abuse of the elderly by profiteering nursing-home operators.

But in the blink of an eye these days, a carefully built construct of regulations can be blown away without so much as a formal hearing. As part of a crusade to curb federal authority, and with only a simple assertion that the regulations are burdensome, two congressional committees have sent to the floor for a vote this week legislation that would repeal federal standards. There would be no protection against patients being restrained, no standards on staffing or when someone could be discharged after using up all his or her money. Niceties like nurses would be optional, since there is no requirement in the new legislation that a licensed nurse be present. Instead there would be so-called patient rights—to receive mail, keep personal belongings and be free from abuse and forced labor—rights that may duplicate, but do not exceed, the Geneva Conventions for prisoners of war.

Republicans justify the changes by saying the states know best how to run nursing homes. Of course, it was the failure of state regulation that got the reforms passed in the first place. It is unlikely that with $182 billion less in federal Medicaid money over seven years the states will embrace high-quality care. The market solution would be to replace that nurse's aide at $10 an hour with an unskilled worker at $5 and to substitute thin soup and macaroni for meat and vegetables.

In fact, it turns out that being humane actually saves money. Catherine Hawes of the nonprofit Research Triangle Institute estimated that after the 1987 reform legislation was passed, $2 billion was saved by 269 nursing homes from fewer emergency hospitalizations, less malnutrition, a 30% decrease in the use of catheters and a 25% reduction in the use of restraints. Says Sarah Burger of the National Citizens Coalition for Nursing Home Reform: "Operators didn't know until they were forced to stop doing it that the main cause of incontinence and bedsores is being restrained and not being able to get to the bathroom." But wholesale budget slashing will no doubt pressure some facilities to cut corners. Senator William Cohen of Maine, one of the few Republicans to oppose the rollback, warns, "If we weaken federal enforcement, we will be sent back to the dark days of substandard nursing homes, with millions of elderly at risk."

Republicans may have entered the slap-happy phase of their revolution, killing regulations simply because they can. Indeed, the nursing-home industry has not even asked for regulatory relief, in part because it would allow unscrupulous operators to flourish and bring shame on all of them. But Speaker Gingrich is hurtling along, fearless about sending Mom and Dad back to the future, to the day of nursing homes that lack nurses and feel nothing like home.

Mr. PRYOR. I shall read only one sentence. "Indeed, the nursing home industry has not even asked for regulatory relief, in part because it would allow unscrupulous operators to flourish and bring shame on all of them."

Mr. President, that is going to be exactly the status of the residents who are living today in the American nursing home.

First, I would like, if I might, to show our colleagues the projected growth in the nursing home population. Today, we have approximately 2 million residents in American nursing homes. By the year 2003, just a few years from now, we are going to see 4.3 million American citizens residing in American nursing homes. In fact, most of the people who reach the age of 65 are going to be in this category. They are going to be living in a nursing home.

I can only imagine. If the 2 million nursing home residents in this country could be surveyed or polled on how they felt about removing all Federal nursing home standards, it does not take a great amount of imagination to know what the results would be. Of course, in overwhelming numbers, undoubtedly, they would vote to continue these present Federal standards.

For example, the choice of a physician, the care and the treatment in choosing a physician, the freedom from chemical and physical restraints, is this something that our colleagues on the other side of the aisle want to remove? Just last week in the Senate Finance Committee, on a vote of 10 to 10, every Democrat voted for retention of these Federal standards, every Republican except one, Senator CHAFEE of Rhode Island, voted to eliminate all Federal standards in nursing homes.

What about the issue, Mr. President, of privacy in receiving mail and communications? What about the confidentiality of medical records? What about the protection from unwarranted transfer to another nursing home or discharge in the middle of the night from the particular nursing home the resident finds himself or herself in?

Mr. President, another chart indicates something that I think is extremely dramatic and once again indicates the real need for us to retain at least the minimum of Federal standards for nursing homes. Look at the characteristics of the nursing home patient or resident today: 77 percent need help in dressing; 63 percent need help in toileting; 91 percent need help in bathing; 66 percent have a mental disorder. And there is one more figure that did not make it to the chart, Mr. President. That is that over 70 percent of the patients today residing in America's nursing homes have no relative and no advocate out there on a daily basis visiting them or advocating their cause or trying to support bringing them a better quality of life.

Mr. President, there is also a letter being circulated dated October 24 addressed to our colleague, Senator DOLE, making one final plea to Senator DOLE and all of us in this body to restore these meaningful nursing home standards. It is signed by the American Health Care Association, by the American Association of Homes and Services for the Aging, by the Catholic Health Association, and down the line.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter all of us received in the Senate be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCTOBER 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: As providers of long-term care services, we are concerned that the current Finance Committee proposal to impose a block grant financing mechanism for Medicaid fails to ensure that adequate resources will be made available to meet the needs of our nation's elderly, disabled, and infirm. We fear that the proposed annual increases in federal Medicaid funding for state programs will be insufficient to meet the quality of care needed by residents of long-term care facilities and subsequently reduce access to services. Furthermore, the failure to meet the resources needs anticipated in future years for these services will negate the many advances made in this area as a result of the enactment of the nursing home reform provisions of OBRA '87.

We urge you to support the retention of federal oversight of nursing home quality linked to a statutory provision ensuring that adequate financial resources are made available to meet prescribed levels of service. Although this linkage can take several forms, the current formulation which backs the nursing home reforms of OBRA '87 to a statutory direction that payors of services (both federal and state) must ensure the payment of adequate rates has proven a workable mechanism and should not be repealed.

Federal nursing home reform standards, joined with existing reimbursement standards have resulted in a steady improvement in the quality of long-term care services. Without such a linkage, this quality of care can not be sustained. It is our sincere desire to move forward with the quality of care provided in nursing homes, and recognize that the ability to do so is dependent upon the provision of adequate financial resources.

STATEMENT OF STEWART BAINUM, JR., SUBMITTED TO THE SENATE SPECIAL COMMITTEE ON AGING, OCTOBER 26, 1995

As the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Manor Care, Inc., I want to express our strong support for retention of the Nursing Home Reform Act of 1987 (OBRA '87). Manor Care owns and operates 170 skilled nursing facilities in 28 states, and provides care to over 20,000 residents.

The OBRA '87 reforms represent the most comprehensive revision of nursing home regulations since the inception of the Medicare and Medicaid programs in the sixties. As I recall, the bill was over 1000 pages long, and addressed critical areas of care, such as resident assessment and care planning, nurse aide training and testing, resident rights, nurse staffing ratios, and enforcement. The final product reflected the agreement reached among 60 national organizations, representing consumers, seniors, providers, and state regulators. It was a painstaking process that worked. In fact, OBRA might depict one of the finest collaborative achievements ever in the history of health care legislation.

Manor Care proudly supported OBRA in 1987 because the legislation offered a valuable means of protecting and promoting the quality of life for one of the most vulnerable segments of our population. We must afford nursing home residents an environment which is safe and ensures their physical and mental well-being. OBRA '87 has been widely successful in accomplishing this goal.

Manor Care pledges to continue to meet these federal quality standards because they are reasonable, and have led to significant improvements in the care delivered to our residents. As a national company, we are supportive of the uniformity and consistency these standards provide across the states.

OBRA created a system of care delivery to help guarantee the dignity and respect of institutionalized seniors. Do not undo the valuable work that has been done. We ask that Congress support retention of the Nursing Home Reform Act and its standards. Stated most simply, it is the right thing to do.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, these particular standards which have been on the books now not even for quite a decade are already paying dividends. For example, if we would just look at an additional chart to see what is happening in improved resident outcomes, the maintenance of the ADL function, what it takes to daily exist, we see the pre-OBRA functional status in the purple, we see the red, the post-OBRA functional status showing a dramatic increase in the very basic quality of life because of these nursing home standards.

We look, Mr. President, and see what is happening in improved care for the nursing home resident. "Decreases in Problem Areas." Physical restraints are going down; dehydration is going down; indwelling urinary catheters, 29 percent, going down.

What we are seeing here, Mr. President, are hard-won gains that we are about to eliminate in one fell swoop simply because this particular budget reconciliation does not contain Federal nursing home standards to protect the American nursing home resident.

Finally, Mr. President, let me ask, how would we vote in this body—when this issue comes before the Senate, how would we vote if we knew that Monday our mother or our father or our son or our daughter or even ourselves were about to enter a nursing home and become yet another statistic? How would we vote, Mr. President?

I ask my colleagues to strongly consider the opportunity, when it becomes available, to retain these basic nursing home standards and to continue them as a part of the law of this land and the basic protections that we must not take away from these 2 million, and going to soon be 4 million, American citizens residing in our nursing homes.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Parliamentary inquiry.

How much time is left on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 48½ minutes, and the other side has 26 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may need to make a few brief comments with regard to my amendment, which I would like to bring us back to for a moment.

First of all, the issue of fraud and abuse in Medicare is a problem that has been widely recognized by Members of the Senate, and I would like to call attention to several Members who have been actively engaged in trying to ferret out these problems so that we might address them in ways such as the amendment I am presenting here tonight.

First, I would like to acknowledge the efforts of Senator KYL and Senator MCCAIN—Senator MCCAIN in particular, who has worked in this area a lot, who has separate legislation, I know, on this topic; and his leadership on this issue has helped to bring it to our attention.

More recently, I would also like to acknowledge, and then quote, from a report, an ongoing, actual effort by Senator COHEN, who is also chairman of our Senate Special Committee on Aging, an investigative staff report which he conducted and which was released July 7, 1994. It has identified countless examples of Medicare fraud and abuse, the kind of abuse and fraud that, hopefully, this amendment which I have presented tonight can address.

Without going into all the details at this time—although I may from time to time during the debate mention specific cases—let me just focus on an area that was just touched on by the Senator from Arkansas; namely, the area of nursing homes.

The investigative report revealed a considerable number of cases involving direct targeting of nursing home patients in which both the industries that supply products and services to the homes and the owners and administrators of the homes are involved in fraudulent and abusive practices.

Nursing home owners have been convicted of charging personal luxury items like swimming pools to Medicaid cost reports. HCFA, the HHS [inspector general's office], and the Minority committee staff are continuing to investigate nursing homes * * * as was the case at the time this report was revealed.

Let me cite two specific cases.

A Minnesota speech therapist submitted false claims to Medicare for services provided to nursing home residents. The therapist also received Medicaid payments for speech therapy he never actually performed—and the investigation revealed that he had been paid for services "rendered to patients" several days after they had died. He was also observed using flash cards with a blind resident, and then billing for reimbursement.

Another case:

The owner of a Pennsylvania rehabilitation service was indicted for allegedly operating a scheme to defraud Medicare by submitting false claims for speech therapy provided to patients in nursing homes. The owner allegedly told speech therapists to recruit Medicare clients even though he knew their therapy would not be covered under Medicare.

Before submitting the paperwork for reimbursement, the speech therapists would rewrite their patient reports so that they would appear to be medically necessary rehabilitation services. The employees then allegedly falsified bills submitted to Medicare, including certifications by doctors that patients needed continued speech therapy, and also falsified patients' medical records.

Mr. President, we can talk about the different problems in the nursing home issue, one many of us are concerned about. One of the reasons this amendment which I have offered tonight is before us is because it helps to address some of the problems that do go on in nursing homes.

I will cite other examples in other contexts in which Medicare fraud is running up the costs of Medicare, costs that we should address through this amendment that I am offering, as well as some of the other items included in the reconciliation bill before us.

At this time, Mr. President, I would like to yield 10 minutes of our remaining time to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. DEWINE. Let me thank my colleague from Michigan for yielding time and say that I rise in strong support of the Abraham amendment.

My friend from Michigan said a moment ago that he has many examples of constituents who have had firsthand experiences. My guess is that there is not a Member of this body who could not say the same thing. As I travel the State of Ohio, I talk to people about the Medicare issue and what we need to do, the steps that we will have to take to preserve and protect and strengthen Medicare. And people will always talk to me about the fraud, talk to me about abuse. Many times I travel the State. And they have specific examples. I suspect that every single Member of this body could say the same thing.

I have had my staff go through some of the letters that we have received. Here are just a few of them, people who have written to us, people who I have talked to personally, who have described specific incidents that they believe constitute fraud.

I think my colleague from Michigan is right on point, because I think one of the things that we have to do is to enlist the public's help in this effort to deal with the fraud and abuse. It has been my experience, Mr. President, that the American people are generally right. And in this particular case, the American people, the people who are on Medicare, the children of people who are on Medicare who have been involved in maybe paying the bills or overseeing some of the finances, they are not wrong. They are right. There is fraud. There is abuse. There are things that need to be done.

So I would like to congratulate my colleague from Michigan and give him my full support for this particular amendment.

Mr. President, the reconciliation bill that we are debating tonight and will be debating tomorrow, probably also into Friday, has great historic significance. It has many different parts to it, as has already been pointed out tonight.

One of the provisions in this bill that my colleague from Michigan mentioned several hours ago when he was on the floor I would also like to briefly comment about, and that has to do with the tax credit, the $500 tax credit for those couples, those families, who have children. There has been a lot of talk about what this might do to help stimulate the economy, a lot of talk about what impact this has on this particular bill.

But I think the main reason, Mr. President, for having this provision, and why so many of us on this floor tonight insisted that this provision be in the bill, is because it is a question of fairness, it is a question of equity.

If we look at the tax burden that our Government has placed on working men and women and on their families, what we find is that that burden has really impacted how people live their lives today. Let me give you a statistic. If you took a family with four children in 1960 and compared them with a family of four children in 1995, what you find when you strip away inflation is that the tax burden on that family has gone up in real dollars 220 percent—220 percent. So each one of us has constituents back in our home States who are working second jobs, or third jobs or where the spouse has taken a second job or maybe taken a first job, who would not do that but for the fact that this tax burden has been imposed on them.

And so you have one of the spouses working one job full-time just to pay the taxes, just to keep the family standard of living where they believe it should be and to help educate their children. That is the perverse impact that the Tax Code has had on families, and the fact that the Tax Code has not, over the years since 1960, for example, kept up in any way, shape or form with inflation.

What this $500 tax credit does is helps to rectify that injustice and bring some equity to the tax system.

Mr. President, another major provision of this bill that we have in front of us has to do with welfare. I believe that this bill is an essential step toward creating jobs and opportunity for the American people, and I believe that the welfare provision goes a long way in doing that.

This particular provision encourages the culture of work instead of the culture of welfare. In the case of the welfare provision, again, there has been a lot of talk about dollars and cents, and those certainly are important. In the long run, I think this provision is going to save money, but that is really not the main reason it is in this bill.

It is really not the most significant thing about this welfare provision, because in this bill, we are changing the culture. In this bill, we are turning our back on the last 30 years where what we really have been doing in this society—it has been unintended—but what we really have been doing is keeping people alive. We have been feeding people, we have been keeping them on welfare.

I guess we have done a pretty good job in that respect. But what we really should be doing is what we are doing with this bill, and that is, moving from a system of welfare, whose goal is to maintain people, to a system of welfare whose goal is to help people realize the American dream, to help them get themselves off welfare so they can fully participate in the great American dream.

Let me briefly discuss, if I can, Mr. President, how this bill does this. This bill promotes work, not welfare. It proposes radical change based on the principle that the only way to succeed in reforming welfare is to get welfare out of Washington, DC. We are only going to change welfare when we turn the power back to the local communities, we turn the money back to the local communities. Washington, DC, has demonstrated for decades that it cannot reform welfare.

The innovation that has occurred in the welfare area in the attempt to get people to work has not occurred over the last few years in Washington. Where you see the innovation is in the 50 States. The States have truly become the laboratories of democracy. And so what we have seen in the last few years is Governors and State legislatures who have had to petition Washington, have had to come hat in hand to Washington and deal with some unelected bureaucrat to ask permission to be bold and innovative and to try a new program back in their home State.

What we are saying with this bill is enough is enough, we trust the States. That is where the innovation has been. That is where the changes are going to be made. Let us get the money out of Washington, get the power out of Washington.

Real change is only going to come, Mr. President, at the State level. And so the thrust of this bill is, as I said, to get the power and the money and the decisions out of Washington, DC.

It will take the States time to fix this broken system. I think we have to be very realistic about this. Welfare did not become a wreck overnight, and it is not going to be fixed overnight. In fact, it will not get fixed at all if the power course stays here at the Federal level.

The welfare provisions contained in this bill will help accomplish this historic transfer of power away from Washington. It will transfer welfare responsibility to the States in the form of block grants.

The bill would also establish a tough new uniform work requirement for welfare. Next year, under this legislation, to continue receiving block grant money, States will have to make sure that at least 25 percent of the people on welfare are working in return for the benefits that they receive.

I ask for 3 additional minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Ohio.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. DEWINE. Mr. President, that percentage will continue to rise every year, and by the year 2000 at least 50 percent of those receiving welfare will have to work.

The only long-term solution to welfare is work. This reconciliation bill recognizes this basic commonsense fact.

I am especially pleased by some of the improvements we were able to make during floor consideration of the bill. We established, when we were debating the welfare bill, a rainy-day fund to help cover economic emergencies, creating a grant fund of Federal money that will help tide States over in the event of a recession.

We also made it easier to track deadbeat parents. We know that we could reduce the welfare rolls by up to two-thirds if deadbeat parents would just pay their child support. Years ago, I was a prosecutor in Greene County, Ohio, and I learned then firsthand how difficult it can be to track down these deadbeat parents. You get banking information about them on a yearly basis, you find out their assets, find out their location, just in time to discover they vanished once again.

This bill would provide this vital tracking information on a quarterly basis, once every 3 months, not once a year. It will be a big plus for our efforts to track down the deadbeats and, thus, reduce welfare costs and, perhaps most important of all, we will give States credit for helping people avoid falling into the welfare trap.

We have found that helping people before they get on welfare through job training, job search assistance, and similar measures is a cheaper and more effective way to help them than simply waiting for them to fall off the economic cliff and become full-fledged welfare clients.

In conclusion, Mr. President, I strongly support the idea that we have to make welfare recipients work, but we need to make sure that meeting the work requirement does not become an end in and of itself. The goal, after all, is to help people avoid getting caught in the welfare trap in the first place. This bill gives States credit toward the work requirements for the efforts they make to help people stay off welfare. It will help keep States focused on the real problem: Making sure fewer and fewer people need welfare in the first place.

With these changes and the underlying idea of promoting work and getting welfare out of Washington, the Senate welfare reform package is a major step toward breaking the cycle of welfare dependency once and for all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Does the Senator from North Dakota wish to go next?

Mr. DORGAN. How much time remains on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 26 minutes on the minority side and 30 minutes on the majority side.

Mr. DORGAN. I defer to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan. I also am strongly in support of his amendment. I think, as he says, eliminating fraud and abuse from the Medicare system certainly is not, in and of itself, going to cure the problem we are faced with. But it has to be part of the package and it represents doing something. I applaud his efforts in that regard. I also applaud the comments just made by the distinguished Senator from Ohio and his comments about the welfare portion of the reconciliation package.

Mr. President, I speak from a little bit different perspective than many of those who have spoken on the reconciliation package. I am a new Member to this body. I have not run for elected office before. I ran for the U.S. Senate. I decided to run for this body because I felt—as I think a lot of other people in this country feel today—that our country is at a crossroads, that our chickens have come home to roost, and it is time to make some strong decisions, and they are going to have to be made by people of courage and conviction. I felt that I could play a small part in making the difference, in helping make that happen.

It is all coming down now to these last few days, and that opportunity is going to be given to me, and it is going to be given to everybody in this body. Everything we have done in the last 10 days has led up to this time, has led up to this day of judgment. This is a day of judgment for ourselves as individuals. Some would say it is for our party, but it is more importantly for us as a body and us as a nation. I think those difficult choices have to be made.

We are talking essentially here about change, Mr. President—change from the way that we have done things in the past. Change is always somewhat painful. Change is never easy, but change we must have.

There are legitimate issues to be debated and discussed, without question. I think it is quite clear that there are basically two different philosophies in this Chamber, as we approach these issues and problems. One believes that the Government, by growing larger and spending more money, can solve these problems, in the face of all the evidence to the contrary. We, on the other hand, believe that Government ought to do those things that Government does best, that we should shrink the size of the influence of the Federal Government on people's lives, give more power back to the States, back to the localities, and leave more dollars in the pockets of people who earn those dollars. It is a pretty simple proposition.

But there are legitimate issues. There is a legitimate issue as to how far we should go with regard to Medicare. Should we apply a Band-Aid? Sometimes a Band-Aid can work perfectly well for short periods of time. But the question is whether or not we should apply that Band-Aid or do something more serious for the future. Although, surely, we agree that something must be done.

There is legitimate debate as to what extent we should keep centralized here, control of the welfare program, or to what extent we should give those responsibilities back, closer to where the problem is. Although, surely, there can be no debate that we indeed have a failed welfare system and that something must be done.

There is even a legitimate debate with regard to a balanced budget. A while back, some were thinking maybe we did not really need one. Apparently, now we are all in agreement. We can debate those priorities, but, surely, we are all in agreement that we cannot continue down the road we are traveling on now, and that the next generation does not deserve it.

We can debate tax cuts. We can debate the effects of those tax cuts. But, apparently, we even agree across party lines and with the White House with regard to the need for tax cuts—the President having acknowledged that tax cuts are indeed needed.

So these are legitimate items of debate, and I have been looking forward to a discussion of those issues. We are in the midst of it now. I think the discussion tonight has been good. I must say that, throughout the day, it has not always reached a level that I would like to see reached in this Chamber. We have seen some mean-spiritedness, and we have seen some calls to fear. We have seen appeals to envy and appeals to greed. One Member, today, suggested that those who espouse our philosophy should be ashamed of ourselves. Another Member today, on the other side, said that apparently the only elderly people we know are those who live in Beverly Hills, which would come as a real shock to my mama in Franklin, TN. But that was said today. It has been implied that those on the other side of the aisle are the only ones who have any concern, any care, any compassion because, indeed, they are the ones who are willing to send out more dollars from Washington to solve those problems, as they have solved them in times past.

Mr. President, it has come now to a time where we must put partisanship aside. We can have legitimate debate on legitimate issues. I think the time is well past when we should be attacking other people's motivations as we reach to solve these problems, because some of us must take note of the fact that some of the ones arguing and screaming so loudly about these changes being made have been here for some time and have witnessed this legislation that has come out of this body and the other body, which has contributed to the problem over the last 40 years—much more than it has contributed to the solution, it has contributed to the policy of neglect and one that has, in every respect, failed. It has operated under false assumptions and false policies that must now be corrected. It is on our watch now—those who are coming in and who have been here a while. It is on our watch now, and we have to do something about what has been going on here for the last 40 years.

We have a lot of talk about the blame and partisanship on this side of the aisle and the other side of the aisle. I suggest that there is enough blame to go around, Mr. President. But we are now cleaning up after the act of the last few decades that was based on the proposition that we can eradicate welfare in this country, that we can eradicate poverty by spending more dollars on it. We spent $5 trillion and got about the same level of poverty, along with a lot of other socially undesirable results, which we surely must all agree on.

In 1965, the Ways and Means Committee estimated that the hospital insurance part A Medicare would cost $9 billion to finance by 1990. In 1990, hospital insurance actually cost $67 billion. That is quite a bit of disparity, even by congressional standards. Medicaid was intended to cost a billion dollars annually. Expenditures ballooned to $76 billion in 1992. In 1995, it went to $89 billion. That is just the Federal Government part alone. The States contributed $67 billion, in addition to that. False assumptions, which led to bad policies, which basically said, let us put this down and get to the next election and get an issue for the next election and on down as far as we can carry it, election after election, and let somebody else take care of the consequences. Well, we are now taking care of the consequences, we are taking care of those estimates that turned out to be so wrong.

What has that wrought? It is certainly more than an academic exercise. It has wrought a Medicare trust fund that is virtually bankrupt, a welfare system that is morally bankrupt: it has wrought a fiscal situation that is going to bankrupt the next generation if we do not do something about it. It has led us to a point where we have the lowest savings rate in the industrialized world. We have one of the lowest investment rates. We have a growth rate now that is about half of what it should be, about half of what it normally is coming out of a recession. That has resulted in leaving a legacy to those who come after us in a few short years of even higher and higher payroll taxes, of even higher interest rates, of not being able to compete in the international marketplace, and depending more and more on foreign dollars to subsidize our debt. That is what these miscalculations have wrought.

Yet, from everybody in this body, on both sides of the aisle, all you hear talk about is the "working person," or the "working family." Everybody is looking out for the working family. Everybody is taking care of those workers, and talking about the people in the upper income levels as if they were born that way and none of them ever worked. We know who we are talking about.

What have we done for the working family? Those are the folks who put me where I am standing here today. Those are the folks that elected most of us in this body. We ought to be looking out for them. But have we been doing that? Do our actions belie the words "looking out for the working family"? We have seen income levels stagnate, and in looking out for the working family we have seen among young working people actually income levels decline in this country.

Among working people, we have seen greater and greater tax burdens laid upon them, up to 220 percent. The Senator from Ohio a minute ago was exactly right. The very people who benefit from this $500-per-child tax credit—that is what we have been doing for the working family. I can hear working folks all across America saying, "Please don't help us out anymore. We can't stand it."

What is the solution to all of this? We have seen the President's first budget which gave $200 billion deficits as far as the eye could see. Nobody took it seriously, and it did not get one vote in this Chamber.

We saw the President's second so-called budget that created $245 billion out of thin air by changing some assumptions. Nobody is taking that seriously either. Apparently it did not get one vote in this Chamber.

Apparently, the idea is not to come forth with any constructive idea at all, not to help contribute to the solution, but lay the wood on those who are trying to solve the problem, and to keep on taxing and keep on spending.

With regard to the Medicare solution, my friends on the other side are correct in claiming that their $90 billion solution would keep the Medicare trust fund solvent until 2006, but in 2010, the last year the Republicans would keep the trust fund in the black, the Democrats would leave it in the red.

That date is important, because 2010 is the year the human wave of baby boomers really hits—those baby boomer retirees. Everyone acknowledges that further changes in Medicare will undoubtedly need to be made at that time. It is a different situation entirely. To meet it on an equilibrium is what we are trying to do, or not to meet it already $300 billion in arrears.

My time is running out. I want to address the tax component that we have heard so much about. The claim, of course, that the problem here really is that we want tax cuts for those who do not need them, and, therefore, the Medicare problem would not be as big, I can only hope the Washington Post—every knowledgeable observer, Mr. President, and traditionally Democratic, have basically made the same statement. The Washington Post on September 25, 1995, said, "The Democrats have fabricated the Medicare tax cut connection because it is useful politically."

Mr. President, this business about tax cuts for those who do not really need them—I find it interesting, kind of parenthetically, and this is historically espoused by those who want higher and higher taxes. We just had the largest tax increase in the history of the country and now that is supposed to be locked in and not touched.

We meet every year, practically, in this body, and decide who does need it, who deserves it. This group this year deserves a tax break. This group this other year does not deserve a tax break. So we have a tax bill. We had a tax bill in 1969, in 1971, 1976, 1978, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1984, 1986, 1990, 1993—major tax bills. That does not include the miscellaneous tax bills. And every time, we in this body decide who is deserving and who is not—passing judgment on our fellow citizens as to whose money we ought to take and who we ought to give a little back to, continuously focusing on the "who," the "who"—not the what.

In other words, who is going to be hit? Continuing to focus on how to divide up the pie, not focusing on policies as to how to make the pie bigger.

My time, I am sure, is close to being expired, so I will address this in a little bit more detail at a later time.

In conclusion, I urge that we get down to serious business, that we put the details of this aside. It is painful. There are things in this bill of this magnitude that are going to pain us in various areas.

The bottom-line question is whether or not we will get this fiscal house in order. We take the first step, which is only a first step. If we do everything we are talking about and go through all the pain, this is just the first step. We will have to continue to do it year after year after year. I suggest we get used to it and get on with it.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 26 minutes 50 seconds, and the other side has 15 minutes.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in order of their recognition by the Chair in this order, I wish to allocate the time remaining with 8 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota, followed by 10 minutes to the Senator from Illinois, and then 5 minutes to the Senator from New Mexico. I yield myself 3 minutes at this time.

All day long, Mr. President, we have had Republicans beating up on the President of the United States. I simply say that today the President announced that the year-end budget deficit was 160-some billions of dollars. That is the lowest deficit we have had for a long, long time in the United States of America.

I simply say to those who have been in this body now not a full year, none of them can hardly take any credit for the deficit going down dramatically under the leadership of the President of the United States.

While we all tend to beat up on the President of the United States once in a while, I think it is well to note that under his leadership and under his direction, under his determination, and in the policies that he has fostered, he has put his political muscles where his mouth is, and the deficit has come down dramatically.

I simply say that the last time we had a deficit this low was way back in 1989 at $153 billion. The intervening years it has been $221 billion, $270 billion, $290 billion, $255 billion, $203 billion, and so forth.

I simply say, Mr. President, that once again the President of the United States should be saluted for at least bringing the deficit down into the $160-billion range. I want to get that for the record because there have been so many brick bats thrown at the President of the United States today.

I yield the floor.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have listened in recent hours to discussions by people who talk about what has been going on around here for the past 40 years in some disappointing way. Let me put in a good word for what has been going on in this country for the past 40 years.

I wonder how many people think that somebody would like to live elsewhere? Do you think that we have not progressed in this country in 40 years? Do you think Medicare does not matter to people? Do you think things are not better for a lot of Americans than they used to be? Do you think in this century the fact that we decided to provide electricity to the farms, that somehow that was not relevant? Created a Social Security system; that did not matter? Marshaled the will and the strength to beat back the forces of fascism and Nazism? Survived the Depression and created a period post-Second World War of unprecedented growth and opportunities?

I guess it is fine to talk about what has been going on the last 40 years. I happen to think this is a pretty good place. I do not see people rushing to leave. If they go, I do not know where they would go. Would they go to Tegucigalpa because the mail service is better? Krakow, because they have better roads? Budapest, because they have a better telephone system? I do not think so.

The fact is we ought to talk about what is right in this country for a while. Some of the things that are right in this country are now to be taken apart by 1,950 pages of legislation on which there has been no hearings, which we received yesterday afternoon about 4 o'clock, and on which we now have 10 hours of debate left.

It is a fairly disappointing thing to watch here in the Senate today. This 1,950 pages contains substantial policy changes—Medicare especially. Medicare matters to a lot of senior citizens. We offered an amendment today about 8 hours ago. It is very simple. It does not take 10 staff people to explain it to anybody here. It is not rocket science. It is very simple. It says those who propose to reduce the amount needed for Medicare by $270 billion—and that is what the proposal is—$270 billion less than is needed to fund Medicare in the next years, we say to those who want to do it, look, you also want to give a tax cut. We would like you to modify the tax cut and not provide tax relief to the upper income Americans, and use the savings from that limitation to reduce the hit on Medicare so that we are reducing Medicare by about the $89 billion that the trustees say are necessary to make it solvent.

Shorthand—reduce the cut on Medicare to about $89 billion. That is all you need to cut in Medicare to make it solvent, and get the money for that by eliminating the tax cut for the affluent Americans.

Very simple. It does not take 8 hours to figure out what you will do about this. We do not need people sitting around with fingernail files and clippers and just ruminating about the world.

We have 20 hours on this bill. We offered this amendment 8 hours ago. Do Members know what we are talking about now? We are talking about an amendment on Medicare fraud. This amendment ought to be accepted in a nanosecond. Want to talk about this forever? God bless you, come and get time next week and talk to the whole world for 40 hours until you are blue.

This amendment is fine. It is not controversial. Why are they talking about it? Why are they eating up time on this clock? Because they do not want to talk about our amendment. They certainly do not want to vote on our amendment. And it is not just this amendment. There are others exactly like it.

We have family farmers out there who know that the farm bill is in this piece of—reconciliation, this reconciliation bill. This budget bill has the farm bill in it.

We are supposed to write a farm bill this year. We did not. So what do they do, they put whatever they have written in this. There are no hearings, nobody knows what is there, really. I mean, it is a real a slap in the face for family farmers. This will cut farm income in North Dakota by 25 percent. The first time in history they throw a farm bill in a reconciliation bill —first time.

What else is here? Oh, a note to families in middle-income circumstances that we want to make it tougher for you to send your kids to college because we cannot afford student financial aid. So we tell the old folks we cannot afford Medicare. We can afford a tax cut for the wealthy; cannot afford Medicare. We cannot afford student aid for middle-income families whose kids are about to go off to college, but we can afford a tax cut for the affluent. We cannot afford Head Start for 55,000 kids in the appropriations bill, but we can afford a tax cut for the most affluent people in the country.

And people over there say, "You are being too sharp in your criticism. Class warfare." You bet it is class warfare. It is all here, 1,950 pages of class warfare, in this bill. And do not take it from me, take it from your colleague, Senator SPECTER, who said it on the floor yesterday. It took a little courage for him to say it, and I admire him for saying it.

> . . . the pain of the spending cuts goes to the elderly, the young, and the infirm while allowing tax cuts for corporate America and those in higher brackets.

You know what he said yesterday, and in your secret moments you know what he said was right. He said that if it were a secret ballot, 20 of you on the other side of the aisle would vote against this because you know it is the wrong priorities.

We have spent 8 hours and have not had a vote. We have several more people who want to speak to the amendment on Medicaid fraud. I compliment the Senator for offering it. I support it and think we ought to accept it in 4 minutes. But instead, we will take 2 hours on this, I suppose, because the other side does not want to vote on an issue that deals with hundreds of billions of dollars of Medicare for the elderly juxtaposed against tax cuts for some of the most affluent Americans.

I know there has been a lot of nonsense on this floor these days, but I just want one person to bring a chart to the floor that tells me this statistic is wrong: on average, the 51 percent of American families with incomes under $30,000 get a tax hike in these 2,000 pages. That is a fact. It comes from the Joint Tax Committee. We do not run that. Half of the American families, on average, get a tax hike. Guess which half—the top half? Oh, no. The bottom half, the very folks the people who are pushing this say they want to help. It is a curious way to help people, in my judgment, with a tax hike.

Who gets the benefit? For everybody that finds a loaf someplace, somebody else is getting it buttered. So who gets their bread buttered here? The top 1 percent, of course—big tax cuts. I want somebody to come to the floor in the next day or so, just to tell me this chart is wrong and tell me how it is wrong. You know it is right. Senator SPECTER knew it was right yesterday when he spoke. And you can do all the high-wire acts and you can do all the half gainers and all the gyrations you want, build all the word castles in the sky forever, and it is not going to change the central facts.

Old folks are going to pay more and get less health care. They are going to pay more for it and get less. Family farmers get the short end of the stick. Middle-income families are told college education is not so important for your kids. And young kids are told education is not a high priority for you--whether it is Head Start and dozens of other programs.

So I just ask people around here, when are we going to vote on something we offered 8 hours ago? A simple proposition. I do not have to read it again. Everybody in here understands it and everybody here understands why we are not voting on it. We are going to have 40 or 50 votes, I suppose, on this bill. But we are draining off all of this debate time on a noncontroversial issue. I understand why, but it is not right.

The rules provide 20 hours on this bill. We have limited time to deal with things that literally affect people's lives more than almost any measure in the last 30, 40 years. And we are told we just cannot vote on these issues up or down. We want to go talk about Medicare fraud.

I see Senators on the floor who have been working on this for a long while, and I commend them. I have worked on it. But I tell you, our constituents would much sooner understand how this bill affects their lives in a real way than deal with this noncontroversial amendment, an amendment we should have accepted 2 hours ago.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from North Dakota for a brilliant statement. He has such a way with words, and I congratulate him for putting the issue in context.

Mr. President, at the outset, I want to make it clear that I am one Senator who believes that major changes are critically needed if we are to bring the federal budget back under control. I also believe that major changes in our Tax Code are necessary to help generate new economic growth and to create new jobs.

I do not think any of us should fear change. Indeed, change is critically important if we are to succeed in meeting the challenges the future holds for us, for our children, and for future generations. The right kinds of changes can help create a climate that will produce the new jobs and economic growth that all of us want to see. The right kind of changes can open up opportunity, and help make this an America that makes use of all of the talents of all of its people, which benefits us all. The right kind of changes can help create a climate that will help Americans provide for their families and give them what we have had—the opportunity to live better than our parents did.

There is no argument but that change is needed. I strongly agree with the statement made in a letter written by the Competitiveness Policy Council on October 12 when the council issued its report entitled "Lifting All Boats—Increasing the Payoff from Private Investment in the U.S. Economy." The cover letter, talking about the report's conclusions, stated: "many of the Federal laws and regulations that influence private investment decisions were developed before World War II, and are out of sync with current economic and financial market conditions." That is exactly right!

Another of the council's recently issued major reports, entitled "Saving More and Investing Better—A Strategy for Securing Prosperity" makes it very clear why we must change Federal budget and tax policies, and other Federal policies. That report found, among other things, that:

> More Americans are employed, yet they are working longer hours and for less pay;
> Productivity growth has improved since 1990, yet it has not translated into higher compensation for workers;
> * * * public dissaving has been reduced by 2 percent of GDP since 1992 through cuts in the Federal deficit, [yet] the net national savings rate continues to fall * * * primarily due to the downward trend in household saving, as Americans currently consume 97 percent of their household income;
> * * * private investment is growing yet the stock of existing plant and equipment is flat; and > * * * improvements in product quality and delivery, lower wages, corporate restructuring, the depreciating of the dollar and government support have helped American goods and services gain a greater share of world markets, yet the trade deficit is reaching historic highs.

The council set out three goals—goals that I believe make a great deal of sense—to deal with these and other problems raised by its reports:

First, doubling productivity growth to at least 2 per cent per year;

Second, achieving 3 percent annual GDP growth, in order to reemploy workers made redundant through productivity improvements; and Third, eliminating our current account deficit, in order to reduce U.S. reliance on foreign capital, and helping ensure that the other goals can be sustained over the long run.

I think these are goals this Congress must pursue, both through the Tax Code through Federal spending decisions, and through the other actions of the Federal Government. One critical question the Senate should be asking is whether this reconciliation bill moves us toward these goals or not. After all, restoring Federal budget discipline is not just an accounting game. Changing Federal policies is not just about making the numbers line up. The reason we are want to deal with the deficit problem, the reason the right kinds of changes are so important, is what they will mean to the American people, to the kind of opportunities our children will enjoy, and to our collective future as a nation. Tragically, this reconciliation bill does not move us toward these goals. It does not pursue the right changes. It is contentious and controversial precisely because it is shortsighted. We currently enjoy solid economic growth and low unemployment. Yet Americans are increasingly anxious about the future.

More and more Americans worry about whether they will be restructured out of their jobs. Americans entering the work force worry about whether there are enough good jobs out there for them to find. And most Americans increasingly worry about being priced out of the American dream.

Unfortunately, there is substantial cause for this anxiety and this worry. All too many Americans have been restructured into lower paying jobs. Eighty percent of Americans are not seeing any real increase in their pay. Yet between 1989 and 1990:

The average price of a home increased from about $76,000 to almost $150,000, an increase of almost 100 percent;

The average price of a car went from about $7,000 to $16,000, an increase of over 125 percent, and the number of weeks an American had to work to pay for the average car increased from about 18 weeks to over 24 weeks, an increase of about one-third;

The cost of a year's tuition at a publicly supported college increased from $635 to $1,454, an increase of almost 130 percent, and a year's tuition at a private college increased from an average of $3,498 to $8,772, an increase of 150 percent; and Health care costs increased at close to or at double digit rates each year.

We have a responsibility to do what we can to help address the causes of that anxiety. We have a responsibility to help ensure that the opportunity to achieve the American dream is open to every American—and that the dream is not priced out of reach for many Americans. We have a responsibility to ensure that Government tax, spending, and regulatory policies do not undermine the opportunity for Americans to find a good job, to keep a good job, to be able to provide for their families, and to help their children get ready to succeed in an ever more competitive world economy. We have a responsibility to adopt policies that encourage, rather than discourage, the creation of the new good jobs we so greatly need, and the kind of solid, sustainable economic growth on which our individual and collective futures so fundamentally depend. We have a duty to ensure that Government policies help, rather than hinder, Americans who want nothing more—and nothing less—than what we have all had: the opportunity to live better than our parents did.

We have to meet these responsibilities based on as complete an understanding as possible of the way our economy works now, and the way it is likely to work in the future, and not simply on the way it may have worked in the past. We have to meet these responsibilities without falling into the trap of doing the tax and budgetary policy equivalents of fighting the last war, instead of preparing for the next one.

Yet, that seems to be exactly what this reconciliation bill is all about. It does not meet our responsibilities to our children and to our future. Its remedies are based on a foundation of myths, and a time that has long since passed, instead of the economic realities that the American people live every single day.

There is no question that our budgetary situation has changed dramatically since the Federal Government last balanced its budget in 1969. In 1969, the national debt was $365 billion; now it is almost $4.9 trillion. In 1969, interest on the national debt cost only $12.7 billion; this year, interest alone will consume over $230 billion—over $40 billion more than total Federal spending in 1969. And the future holds even greater problems. Last year, I served on the Bipartisan Commission on Entitlement and Tax Reform. Finding No. 1 of the Commission's interim report to the President made it abundantly clear what will happen if we do not address the critical budget problems facing this country. The chart accompanying that finding was headlined, "Current Trends Are Not Sustainable"—a very understated way of pointing to the very real crisis we face. If we do nothing, by the year 2012, entitlement spending and interest expense consume every single dollar of Federal Revenue. If we do nothing, by 2030, Federal outlays could consume 37 percent of the entire U.S. economy, up from 22 percent today. If we do nothing, by 2030, just paying the interest on the national debt will take over $1 of every $10 our economy produces.

The Commission's reports are compelling evidence that we must act to get the Federal Government's fiscal house in order. They make it clear that we cannot afford to act based on any political party's or interest group's budgetary mythology. They reinforced my conviction that an amendment to our Constitution is good public policy.

That same objective—a balanced budget, restoration of fiscal discipline—is the stated objective of the reconciliation bill we are now considering. But what kind of message is being sent, what are the American people really being told, if the same bill that takes $893 billion out of the spending side of the budget over the next 7 years also takes $245 billion out of the revenue side of the budget. What kind of message is being sent if a bill that is supposed to lower deficits actually increases them by $93 billion over the next 7 years in order to help finance tax cuts?

The reason greater fiscal discipline is important is that we owe more to our children than a legacy of debt. How is that consistent with giving ourselves a tax cut now, thereby creating more debt for them to repay?

The tax changes now contained in this bill are very substantial in comparison to the deficits we face. They amount to 15 percent of the $1.6 trillion in deficits forecast for the next 7 years if we do not act to put our fiscal house in order. And they are an even larger percentage—38 percent—of the $638 billion in deficits forecast for that period in the budget resolution we are now working under. That is why the tax cut provisions of this bill have such an impact on the deficit reduction objective that both Democrats and Republicans want to achieve.

A tax cut right now is inconsistent with achieving real deficit reduction. And it is important to keep in mind that, even if the Senate does not act on these tax proposals, we would not be choosing to move toward a balanced budget by increasing the burden on American taxpayers. Whether these tax proposals become law or not, Federal revenues are not growing faster than our economy. Federal taxes consumed 19 percent of the U.S. Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in 1994. That is 1 percentage point less of GDP than Federal revenues accounted for a quarter of a century earlier, when the Federal Government last balanced its budget, back in 1969, by the way.

The rationale for tax cuts is that they will help promote savings, economic growth, and the creation of the kind of new, well-paying jobs Americans need. And it is true that $245 billion in tax cuts sounds like a number large enough to provide a substantial opportunity for those kinds of changes to happen. When compared to Federal revenues that will total more than $11.3 trillion over the next 7 years, however, that figure shrinks dramatically. It amounts to a tax cut of only about 2.1 percent. And, according to the Joint Tax Committee, it amounts to a cut in average effective tax rates for American taxpayers of only eight-tenths of 1 percent.

Moreover, even this tax reduction is illusory for many Americans. The reconciliation bill, to cite one example, creates a student loan interest tax credit, an idea I support. This tax credit puts approximately $1.5 billion in the hands of American taxpayers to help pay student loan expenses. However, the reconciliation also contains provisions designed to save $10.8 billion over that same 7-year period by making student loans more expensive. On a net basis, therefore, families with students are likely to be worse off, not better off.

The bill also creates a $500 per child tax credit for families. But many EITC families won't see much net relief, because once the EITC cuts are fully phased in, they will lose, on average, $457 in annual tax relief they are now receiving. For many of them, therefore, the effect of the tax provisions in this bill is simply to move their tax benefits from one line of their tax returns to another line.

And even middle income Americans will not receive much relief from the tax provisions in this reconciliation bill. Both the Joint Tax Committee and the Treasury Department agree that Americans with annual incomes of $30,000 or less, which is over half of all Americans, will see no net tax relief at all from this bill.

In the health care area, the bill calls for creating medical savings accounts, providing more favorable tax treatment for long-term care insurance, and a number of other changes. The benefit to American taxpayers of these changes amounts to approximately $12 billion. However, the bill also makes changes in Medicare and Medicaid that will take $452 billion out of those two programs over the next 7 years. The changes include doubling the Medicare part B premium, and the Medicare part B deductible. For most Medicare and virtually all Medicaid recipients, the tax relief they will receive under this bill, therefore, will probably not come close to covering their increased health care costs. And if, as many believe, one result of these Medicare and Medicaid changes is to put additional upward pressure on health insurance costs, than it is not just the elderly, the disabled, and the poor who will see their tax relief overwhelmed by increased health care costs, millions of other Americans who are not currently using these two health care programs will also face that same reality.

Cutting taxes is the oldest political trump card, and it has not lost its power. And tax cuts are easy to understand. The temptation to promise the proverbial "chicken in every pot," is too great for some to resist. But imposing new costs on American families while only partly offsetting these new costs with tax cuts does not represent real tax relief; instead, it is, at best, no more than a cynical shell game.

And the proposed tax cuts are far from the only problems with this bill. The bill makes student loans more expensive, adding an 85 basis point fee to the cost of every loan, most, if not all, of which will be passed on to students. It adds 100 basis points, or one full percentage point, to the cost of what are called PLUS loans, which could add up to $5,000 in student loan costs for American families who use that student loan program. It ends the interest free, 6-month grace period which is designed to provide an opportunity for students to find a job after they complete their education, which adds another $700 to $2,500 in costs to student loans. And it actually increases, rather than decreases, the redtape and administrative costs associated with student loans, by backing away from direct loans in favor of using the banks to make student loans guaranteed by the Federal Government.

The net effect of all of these cuts is to price college out of reach for more Americans. A study by two higher education economists—Michael McPherson of Williams College and Morton Shapiro of the University of Southern California concluded that each $250 increase in the cost of college will result in a 1-percent drop in the number of low-income students enrolling in college.

And low-income students will not be the only students affected by these changes in student loans. Middle class American families with students in college or approaching college-age will also be affected—all too many people will be unable to meet the new, higher costs, which means that their children will have their opportunities diminished by this bill, instead of expanded. We want a brighter future for our children, but if we are simply moving costs from the Federal balance sheet to the budgets of American families, we aren't helping them at all. That kind of approach does not meet our responsibility to American families or to our children, and it does not meet our obligation to the future.

These kinds of changes may produce budget savings in the short run, but they are not in the long-term interests of our country; this is not the kind of legacy we want to leave our children. After all, our people are the most important asset our country has. If we are to compete successfully in the future, if we are to generate the kind of economic growth we need, and if we want expanded, rather than diminished, opportunities for our children—and their children—we simply cannot skimp on essential investments in education.

We all know that education is the one of the most important determinants of the amount our children will earn in their lifetimes. In this increasingly technological age, education is ever more important. How, therefore, does it make budget sense, or any other kind of sense, to cut our investment in education, when one of the top purposes of this bill is to improve the legacy we are leaving our children, and to create a brighter future for our children.

The bill's approach to health care is as shortsighted and misguided as its approach to education. Advocates of the bill's Medicare and Medicaid provision argue that the reconciliation bill does not "cut" either program; what is actually going on is simply a reduction in the rate of growth of these two programs from their current double digit increases to a bit more than 4 percent annually. They also argue that action is required in order to keep the Medicare trust fund solvent.

If the only important thing is the narrow budget numbers themselves, that argument is correct. If, however, the economic and health care realities behind those numbers are also considered, the argument collapses.

The truth is that this bill calls for reductions in Medicare of $270 billion—three times what is needed to protect the trust fund. And the truth is that the aggregate spending levels are not the whole story, but only the beginning of the story. There are two factors driving up the cost of Medicare and Medicaid, and health care costs generally: demographic change, and cost inflation. The simple fact is that the number of older Americans is increasing far more rapidly than the population generally, and that the increases in the number of elderly Americans will accelerate even further early in the next century when the "baby boomers" begin to hit retirement age. This fact has profound implications for Medicare, and also for Medicaid—because spending for older Americans takes 70 cents of every dollar spent on that program. Both Medicare and Medicaid must increase substantially just to keep pace with the increasing number of Americans using those programs.

Health care cost inflation is a perhaps even more important factor. Medicare and Medicaid inflation rates have been at double digit levels, or close to them, for a long time, and it is true that we have to get that inflation under control. However, this bill has no real plan for reducing health care inflation. Instead, its impact will be to reduce the quality of care and the health care choices available to millions of Americans. Under this bill hospitals and other health care providers will see over $200 billion less in reimbursement for services provided to Medicare patients, which will literally drive some of them into bankruptcy, and cause others to reject Medicare patients; Medicare premiums will double, as will deductibles; the two-thirds of all nursing home residents who depend on Medicaid will be thrown into jeopardy; and almost 9 million people, including almost 4½ million children, could be thrown off the Medicaid rolls.

Again, what seems to be happening is that costs are not being eliminated by making the delivery of health care cheaper and more cost-efficient, but by simply transferring costs from the Federal budget to the budgets of individual Americans. Medicare beneficiaries will not only see higher costs from the Medicare Program directly, but higher private insurance costs, as so-called Medigap insurance, which involves higher administrative costs and more inefficiency than Medicare—becomes more expensive due to this bill. Medicaid recipients will also face higher costs—the average cost of a year in a nursing home is $38,000—for less health care. And every American will likely see higher health insurance costs, as hospitals push costs formerly paid by Medicare and Medicaid over to privately insured patients. Lewin-VHI, an independent research firm, found that the $452 billion in Medicare and Medicaid changes will force doctors and hospitals to raise their fees for private patients by at least $90 billion.

Under this bill, Americans will get $245 billion in tax cuts, but if even half of the $452 billion in Medicare and Medicaid reductions show up in the budgets of individual Americans, then Americans are not better off at all. They deserve more than budgetary shell games. They deserve real reform—we need real reform—but all this bill provides is the rhetoric of reform, instead of the reality. The only reality it will deliver is less care and higher costs for every American. It takes a meat ax approach to health care system reform when a scalpel would do a better job.

I have focused a lot on the impact this reconciliation bill will have on all Americans, Mr. President, but I cannot conclude without expressing my outrage and my dismay on how it treats the poorest Americans. The proponents of this bill say it reforms welfare, that it "reforms" the EITC, that it "reforms" health care for the poor, that it "reforms" nutrition programs, and that it, along with the appropriations bills that encompass the rest of the program advocated by the other side of the aisle reform the rest of the social safety net. But these reforms are even less real than the health care reforms. Instead, these proposals represent a shredding of the social safety net. This reconciliation bill walks away from the working poor. It walks away from the welfare recipients who want to work. It walks away from poor children who want the opportunity to escape their poverty.

It walks away from opportunity, from inclusion, and from making use of all of the talents of all of our people. It walks away from the problems of our cities, and of economically distressed rural areas.

It calls for further reductions in welfare, even though welfare benefits per beneficiary have been declining for years. It fails to recognize the real problems involving child care, and access to jobs, and job training that have to be addressed in order to make real progress in reducing our welfare rolls by bringing people into the workforce. It ignores the fact that two-thirds of welfare recipients are children. It divides us from one another, viewing the poor as a cost to be cut, instead of as an asset to be developed. I could go on, and on, and on.

Considering the overall impact of the bill, one has to ask the question, "What do the supporters of this bill have against poor people?" After all, Americans who make less than $20,000 get a tax increase, instead of a tax cut, under this bill. Americans who make less than $30,000 get no tax cut at all. And the poorest 20 percent of American families have to bear half of the total cuts in Federal spending. This reconciliation bill is so unbalanced that the distributional impact is—or should be —a stunning embarrassment.

It is the long term that I believe must guide our deliberations. We must deal with Federal budget problems, but our objective must be to deal with our budget problems in a way that enhances our country's future, and our children's future. A bill that undermines education, that simply transfers costs from the Federal Government's balance sheet to the budgets of American families, and that needlessly jeopardizes, instead of reforming, our health care system, cannot end the anxiety so many Americans are experiencing.

How can making education more expensive that is already too expensive be in our long-term national interest? How can cutting taxes by $245 billion, at a time when we have $4.9 trillion in Federal debt outstanding, and at a time when we are experiencing nine-figure budget deficits every year, be in our long-term national interest. And how does lowering taxes for some Americans while pushing more health care costs, education costs, and so many other costs onto every American family help them better meet their own long-term objectives. Finally, how is walking away from the poor—and particularly poor children—consistent with either our own long-term interests or our own core values.

The answers are, of course, obvious. It cannot, it does not, and it is not. It does not meet the long-term needs of American families. It does not prepare our Nation or our children to meet the challenges the future holds. It does not include the kinds of reforms we need. All this bill offers is diminished opportunities, a loss of competitiveness, and a continuation of the current anxieties that so plague the American people. When it inevitably fails, its only lasting result will be to further increase the already pervasive cynicism that so poisons our public dialog.

We can and must do better. We have an obligation to our country, to American families, to our children, and to their children to enact the kind of reforms that will help make our individual and collective futures brighter. However, the only way for this Senate to do the right thing is to first defeat the wrong one. I therefore urge my colleagues to join me in opposing S. 1357, the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Illinois would answer a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CHAFEE. Maybe I could have 5 minutes off the bill, if I might.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Illinois is a member of the Finance Committee. So she is familiar with some of these items, obviously. But I heard her say that under the Republican measure the Medicare part B premiums are going to double. What is her source of information for that? What is she basing that on?

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. I am going to have to find the record. But I would be delighted to get back to my colleague with regard to the effect as to some of the recipients of Medicare. The premium will double, and those are the numbers provided for us in committee. I would be delighted to get the base information. I do not have it.

Mr. CHAFEE. I wonder if the Senator from Illinois is objecting to the affluent testing of the part B premiums.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Objecting to the affluent testing? No. I would say to my colleague that the point I have been trying to make in this statement today is that we are with this bill in all 20 instances robbing Peter to pay Paul, taking from one pocket to put in another, and that, therefore, the notion that we are just restraining, restoring, and saving the program becomes illusory given the overall impact of the changes that are suggested in this reconciliation bill.

There do have to be changes. That is the main import of my statement as well. There have to be changes in the way that this program works. Certainly, affluent testing is one. Some parts of the affluent testing proposed in the Finance Committee are laudable and will help the program overall. But the overall impact on the way we treated the part B premiums will be to increase the cost on senior citizens and will double the costs in some instances.

Mr. CHAFEE. Let me just say this. As the Senator knows, we both worked together in the Finance Committee on the Medicare matters. To say that the Republicans are doubling the premiums on part B is an inaccurate statement, if I may say so to the Senator. We maintain the percentage that an individual pays under the part B premium at exactly the same amount that is there now, the same amount that was there under a Democratic administration and under us. It is 31.5 percent.

Now, if the predictions show that the costs of the premiums are going up, that has nothing to do with Republicans being in charge. That is a fact of costs of health care. But to say it is a Republican fault is a charge that I think is a very unfortunate one to make.

I say to the distinguished Senator from Illinois that what we have done on the Medicare Program is justified. Have there been some deductibles increased? Yes, there have. But the part B premium remains at exactly the same percentage that exists now. And if the distinguished Senator from Illinois objects to the affluence testing, then she is on a different course than I am and I think most of the American public.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. I would like to reclaim my time and to read to the Senator some numbers:

Under this plan, increased premiums alone will cost every elderly couple an additional $2,800 over the next 7 years. By the year 2000, premiums will double to more than $1,100 per beneficiary per year. Upper income beneficiaries—will pay even more. For some of them, the premiums will triple.

And this gets to the affluence testing that the Senator mentioned.

It is documented. So maybe——

Mr. CHAFEE addressed the Chair.

Mr. DORGAN. Will the Senator yield to me?

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). The Senator from Rhode Island controls the time.

Mr. CHAFEE. It is my time, Mr. President. I believe I am on my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island controls the time.

Mr. CHAFEE. All right. Now, I would just say this, that those premiums she is discussing would go up no matter which administration and under whose program you are talking about.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. But that does not make my statement in error, does it?

Mr. CHAFEE. If the premiums are going up—and who knows what the costs are going to be out there because we do not set forth a dollar amount, as the distinguished Senator knows. We stay at exactly the same percentage. And if health care costs should go down, then the premiums will go down. If health care costs go up, then the premiums go up. To blame that on the Republicans and on our Medicare program is just a charge that I believe is highly unfair.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. I would like to claim my time.

Mr. CHAFEE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields back his time.

Who yields time on the amendment?

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN addressed the Chair.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I believe the previous agreement——

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, I have not yet yielded the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Illinois has expired.

The Senator from Rhode Island claimed time under the Republican side on the bill and was recognized for 5 minutes. He has yielded back his time.

Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, just as a point of clarification, I believe the Senator from Nebraska is not in the Chamber now, but he had previously sought and obtained consent for the Senator from New Mexico to proceed at this point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 5 minutes.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Will the Senator from New Mexico allow me, because I think we got into a parliamentary pickle here for a second, and I just want 30 seconds.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I would be glad to yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Illinois.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. I thank the Senator.

Again, to Senator CHAFEE, the Office of Management called. Part B here more than doubled. That is to be found on page 8 of the statement of policy. And I would like to provide that for the Senator. I did not misspeak. We may have a different interpretation, but the statement that I made was factual with regard to the impact on part B premiums. I yield the floor, and I thank the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, let me speak for just a few minutes about the Republican tax plan, the plan which is before us. It is title XII of the bill. It begins on page 1463 and runs through page 1949. In case some of my colleagues have not read all aspects of it, I have not either, but I do think I understand the main thrust of it. The main thrust of it is that it does place an additional burden on those who are least able to pay. In doing so, it provides tax breaks to those who are doing the best in our economy.

The Joint Committee on Taxation, which has been referred to many times here in this debate, has released some findings that I think all of us have to agree are accurate, and those findings are that people who earn $30,000 a year or less will be shouldering a heavier tax burden once this bill becomes law. The new data are the result of the effort and the proposal to reduce by $43 billion the earned-income tax credit.

Mr. President, this chart here, I think, makes the point about as well as anyone could. We have here the people who have $10,000 of income or less. Their taxes will be expected by the year 2000 to rise 9.6 percent. In the case of people with $20,000 of income, it is 2.2. In the case of people with 30,000, it is a smaller percentage. But everyone in that entire range would see their taxes increased. At the same time, those above $30,000 would see a decrease.

Mr. President, what we have, which is a fairly remarkable result, in my opinion, is a bill that cuts Federal taxes, reduces Federal taxes by $245 billion and at the same time increases taxes on more than half of all Americans who pay tax.

Let me point to one other chart here which I think makes the point very dramatically.

The Senator from North Dakota earlier was saying that the bottom 50 percent of all taxpayers are the ones who are going to see their taxes go up. In my home State—and we have State-by-State breakdowns of this—in my home State of New Mexico, it is not the bottom 50 percent who are going to see their taxes increased; it is the bottom 70 percent. Because we are a low per capita income State, we have a substantial number of people who are in that income category that puts them at $30,000 or less. So 70 percent of the taxpayers in my State will in fact see their taxes rise under this bill according to the Joint Tax Committee.

What is most disturbing about this is that this is happening at a point in American history where the average American worker is having a tougher time making ends meet. They are seeing their wages, the real spending power of their wages decline. Families are increasingly finding themselves without adequate health care coverage or pension options. It is a time when the stock market is at new highs, when corporate profits have never been higher than they are at this time in our history.

In fact, talking about the stock market and corporate profits, there have been many times in the last month or so when I wished I owned some stock. We own very little stock. And I am sure there are many working families in this country who look at the rise in the stock market and wish they had a piece of that pie. But the reality is they do not.

What we are doing here is the rich are taking a bigger share of the Nation's economic pie than ever before. We are proposing in this bill to reduce the burden on those who are relatively well off.

Some have recently argued that the $500 child tax credit is more than an adequate offset to those working poor who will be getting tax increases. This is simply not true. Clearly, a family has to have substantial enough income on which to pay taxes for a $500 credit to make a difference. More than a third of the Nation's children will not benefit at all or will only receive partial credit from this proposal. If we are serious about giving tax relief to the working poor, then the child tax credit should be refundable or offset against payroll taxes, not just against the income tax.

A working family in my State with two children and $15,000 adjusted gross income has no Federal tax liability and thus has no opportunity to receive any benefit from the child tax credit. This worker, however, has a real increase in tax burden by the reduction in EITC that helps the family keep working, not falling back into welfare programs. But this same worker has payroll taxes of $1,148.00. If the child tax credit were an offset against these taxes, then this might do some good.

Mr. President, this Senate has been here before—in fact, 14 years ago. In 1981, it was the passage of the Kemp-Roth bill which was a major cause of the deficit we are now struggling with. In 1983, 1985, and at other subsequent times, this Congress has quietly undone parts of Kemp-Roth, which cut taxes during a time when the Nation's financial circumstances could not bear the pressure. But we have never recovered—and that is why the budget balancing process today is so terribly difficult. It is very unwise to attempt to cut the programs that we are cutting toward the noble cause of balancing the budget, and at the same time cut taxes for the wealthy. It was the wrong thing to do in 1981, and it is the wrong thing to do today.

Mr. President, if we are going to promise tax relief, it needs to be equitable. We must go back to the drawing board and reverse these EITC reductions.

The Republican tax plan, as it now reads, benefits the wealthy at the expense of the poor. We would be better off leaving the whole issue of taxes to another day when we can afford it, and when it can be done fairly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I would like to yield 10 minutes of our remaining time to the Senator from Maine, but before I do I just want to recognize and commend the efforts of the Senator from Maine.

It was Senator COHEN who last year served as the ranking minority member of the Senate Special Committee on Aging, and it was his staff that produced the document which I have read from several times tonight pertaining to investigations of the kinds of Medicare fraud and abuse which the amendment I have brought this evening tries to address. It was his fraud and abuse legislation, in fact, introduced earlier this year, which served as the basis for the antifraud and abuse provisions contained in the legislation before us. His earlier legislation had bipartisan support.

Provisions in the pending legislation are tough. They are comprehensive and they are unprecedented in their effectiveness. I believe that this is the first time health care fraud and abuse provisions have been scored by the Congressional Budget Office as generating savings.

In fact, according to CBO, these provisions yield over $4 billion in savings. So, I want to commend the Senator from Maine for these efforts. They are productive ones. And I applaud what he has done. And at this time I turn the floor over to him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. I thank my colleague and friend from Michigan. I want to join in support of the amendment that he has offered to make what I believe to be very strong antifraud measures even stronger.

Mr. President, I have listened at length to the debate today, and I think the American people are wondering, why are we here at this point in time debating this issue in the fashion that we are debating it?

We are here because there has been a lot of politics involved in the entire debate. Ever since the release of the trustees' report on the Medicare trust fund last spring, Republicans have said, "We have to do something." I recall that Senator DOLE, the majority leader, last spring urged that President

Clinton try to put together some kind of a bipartisan commission or committee or group of Senators and House Members to see if we could not resolve this on a bipartisan basis.

There were no takers. There were no takers at that time. They simply said there is not a problem. "There is no problem with Medicare, and you Republicans are simply trying to blow it out of proportion." Well, there is a problem. There is a problem that has to be fixed.

Let me say very candidly, as we talk about taxes, that I, for one—I may be a minority of one—do not favor tax cuts at this time. I think that we should be balancing the budget, period, at this time. But I think we have to separate out the issue of the reformation of the Medicare fund itself.

I compare it to a situation of a home in Maine, by way of example. We are going into the winter season. We have a home that needs to be heated. And there is frost on the walls, and the inside of the walls, not the outside. That is how cold it is. We have a home that is losing heat. We need to get heat into the home to keep people warm. The problem is, you have several holes in the roof, and the windows are broken, and we have an inefficient furnace in the basement.

Now, there are one or two ways that we can keep warm in that home. We can try to buy more fuel. We do not have enough money, so we have to get a second or third job, assuming you can find a second or third job. And so we have to buy more fuel to put more fuel into the home to keep the frost from freezing us inside. That is one way of doing it. That way would be to simply increase taxes. If you want the analogy to be made properly, we just have more taxes to keep the system going at a rate of 10 percent growth. That is what we have to do, increase the taxes.

I have not heard one single person on the other side call for a 44-percent increase in taxes, in the payroll tax of part A of the Medicare trust fund. So we know that we would have to get more fuel oil or get a second or third job to buy more fuel oil to put oil in that house.

Or we could make the house more energy efficient. We could fix the holes in the roof. We could fix the windows that are broken. We could put a new furnace that is energy efficient in the basement and conserve energy as opposed to allowing it to go out through the chimney and the holes in the roof and the windows.

That, basically, is what the Republicans have tried to do in terms of slowing down the growth of the Medicare fund as such to make it more efficient, to stop growing at a rate of 10 percent to 6.3 or 6.5. Now, President Clinton, to his credit, admitted that we have a problem, and he suggested that we slow the growth down to 7.5 percent.

Mr. President, I suggest that there is room for agreement between our two parties, between the President and the Senate and the House. And right now, unfortunately, we are in a stage where we are setting the posture for a potential agreement sometime down the line.

But let us not make any mistake about it, we still need to reform the Medicare system. Part A and part B have to be reformed if we are going to ever stop the growth rate of 10 percent a year, which cannot be sustained under anyone's calculations without a major tax increase. And no one on that side of the aisle is talking about a major tax increase.

I would like to come back to a subject matter which I think has been addressed earlier but is of great importance to me because it deals, not with Medicare, but Medicaid. One of the mistakes, I believe, that has been made in the bill as reported out of the committee is that we are suddenly waiving many of the standards and regulations that have been hard fought in the field of nursing home care.

One of the first bills that I introduced back in 1973, in December 1973, was the Nursing Home Patients' Bill of Rights. That came in the wake of a number of congressional investigations into absolutely intolerable conditions in nursing homes where patients were tied to their beds or wheelchairs, where they were medicated and overmedicated to the point where they were practically zombies, where a Senate aging committee called them warehouses for the dying.

As a result of the expose of the abuses that were taking place in the nursing home industry itself, we were able to, over a period of time, establish nursing home patients' rights. Many of them have been put into place by Executive order. Finally, under OBRA 87, the Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1987, we finally were able to put into law specific regulations and standards about how these homes should be run and maintained.

We have, for all practical purposes, eliminated that under the bill. I hope that we can correct that. I believe that we can correct that, and we should correct it.

But tomorrow we are holding a hearing in the Aging Committee in which we will again discuss the reasons why we need a continuation of the Federal standards and oversight and enforcement of nursing homes.

Let me give you just a couple examples. By the way, this is not a new issue.

I ask unanimous consent to have this material printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXISTING PROTECTIONS

The Republican Congress has taken steps to eliminate burdensome federal regulations, many of which are unnecessary and costly to individuals and businesses.

But when it comes to abolishing nursing home regulations, which protect the health and safety of elderly citizens, some caution is in order.

Before repealing a law that has vastly improved conditions at nursing homes in Indiana and nationwide, lawmakers should study the sordid history that led to its enactment. They are likely to find this is one area where uniform federal standards make sense.

At issue is the Nursing Home Reform Act of 1987, the final phase of which took effect just this past July. As part of the move to turn Medicaid into block grants for the states, Congress is trying to repeal the law and drastically reduce funding of the nursing home enforcement system.

The 1987 law—which requires nursing homes that receive Medicaid dollars to follow good nursing practices and protect residents' rights—was the result of years of study, public hearings and documentation of abuses, such as the use of unnecessary physical restraints and excessive reliance on drugs for behavior control.

The standards have been gradually phased into effect over the past eight years. As of July 1, agencies such as the Indiana State Department of Health have federal authority to levy fines and ban admissions at homes that violate the standards. As recent experience has shown, the law has dramatically changed how officials police bad facilities.

For example: During the entire 11-year period from 1984 to 1995, Indiana assessed only 33 fines against nursing homes for violating regulations. In the three months since July 1, 28 state fines have been levied, three homes barred from accepting new residents pending resolution of problems and four homes scrutinized by state monitors inside their facilities. In addition, the federal government denied Medicaid to 12 homes and issued 48 civil financial penalties.

If the proposed legislation passes, it is highly unlikely states will replicate the federal law. In fact, they will be under intense pressure from the nursing home industry to deregulate facilities to compensate for Medicaid reimbursement cuts. Beds for those who depend on Medicaid will become sparse since long waiting lists are already common.

Scott Severns, an Indianapolis attorney and president the National Citizens' Coalition for Nursing Home Reform, believes federal rules may actually save taxpayers' money spent on the elderly. As a result of the '87 law, he notes, hospitalizations of nursing home residents have dropped 25 percent, which means less spent through Medicare.

"Nursing home residents who are hospitalized for broken bones, bedsores and infections from neglect cost far more than residents who receive proper care," he says.

If Congress wants a compelling reason to preserve the federal protection, it need look no further than Ritter Health Care Center in Indianapolis.

Last month, state inspectors found Ritter residents tied with gauze to rails and beds and smeared with food and body wastes. Some were confined to rooms by greased door handles because too few staff were available to supervise. One resident on a liquid diet choked on a piece of food.

Ritter had been cited for numerous violations since 1993, but never really punished. Thanks to the new federal tools, the health department moved swiftly this time. The owners have been fined and denied Medicaid eligibility. Tragically, residents must now move elsewhere because of the facility's failure to correct its problems.

That is how the federal law was designed to work. That is how it is working in Indiana. At this point, it would be a mistake to repeal what isn't broken.

[From USA Today, Sept. 27, 1995]

DROPPING FEDERAL RECS IS AN INVITATION TO TRAGEDY

Eight years ago, after 15 years of argument, Republicans and Democrats in Congress got together to correct a public embarrassment. They passed a law to stop nursing home operators from abusing or neglecting the elderly.

They had ample incentive. Reports of residents lying in excrement, dehydrated, malnourished or overmedicated were commonplace. State regulation was a failure. Public outrage was high.

It should be just as high now. The regulations created by that law are about to be weakened or stripped away—victims of a ideological crusade to curb federal authority, good or bad.

Control would return to the state, despite their history of failure.

Those pushing the new plan, House and Senate Republicans, claim their legislation is not a repeal. They say the law is ineffective. And they say it's hugely expensive.

All three claims are fiction.

Not a repeal? Under existing regulations violators are subject to financial penalties, decertification, denial of payments or takeover by temporary managers if they violate health and safety standards. Proposed changes would weaken enforcement by states that are vulnerable to powerful lobby groups. The Senate wouldn't require inspections, nurse staffing or protections against restraints or medication.

Not effective? A government study of 269 homes in 10 states cited impressive results. The study found hospitalization of nursing home residents down 25%, use of restraints down 25%, and detection and punishment of abuses increasing.

Too expensive? Quite the contrary. A study of 9,000 Georgia nursing-home residents reports a monthly $76,738 savings by curtailing unnecessary drug therapy, thanks to the regulations. And that's not an isolated case. The National Citizens Coalition for Nursing Home Reform, a resident advocacy group, says the changes saved billions in costs attributed to poor treatment.

Even the American Health Care Association, representing nursing home owners, says costs have not been a problem.

In fact, nursing home owners signed onto the legislation when it passed in 1987. So did consumer groups. So did state officials. So did the Institute of Medicine, research arm of the National Academy of Sciences, whose 1986 report on nursing home conditions led to the reform.

No credible evidence exists to justify reversing course. If changes are necessary they should be based on the same kind of thorough study and public hearings that produced the original regulations.

Seniors are in nursing homes because of advanced age, mental or physical disabilities, to recover from hospitalization or because they have no one to care for them. They are frail and vulnerable. They deserve all the protection the public can provide.

[From the New York Times, Oct. 18, 1995]

KEEP NURSING HOME STANDARDS

In its ongoing effort to give more power to the states, Congress wants to scrap Federal standards for quality of care in nursing homes. Given past abuses that the standards were designed to guard against, and the future need for even more nursing homes, this is an invitation to trouble. There may well be room to revise the Federal standards to make them simpler and less costly. But with vast changes occurring in the health-care system, the need for Federal standards to insure minimal quality is greater than ever.

It was only about 20 years ago that a series of media exposés, state government reports and legislative hearings revealed widespread abuses in nursing homes, from unsanitary conditions and malnutrition to overmedication, neglect and sexual, and physical abuse. In 1987 Congress passed the Nursing Home Reform Act, which set national standards for staff training, individual assessments of patients and protection of basic patient rights, including the right not to be physically restrained, the right to voice grievances and the right to be notified before transfer or discharge.

The law has begun to make a difference. In the mid-1980's, about 40 percent of nursing home patients were physically restrained; now, less than 20 percent are. Improved care has also led to savings on medications and unnecessary hospitalizations.

Now Congress is trying to reshape the health-care system by sharply cutting Medicaid, which provides about 60 percent of nursing home funding, and shifting the money to state control through block grants. Congress wants to cut $182 billion out of Medicaid over seven years, which would likely lead to reduced reimbursement rates for nursing home services and facilities.

Many states are insisting that, if they are to assume control of a reduced pot of money, they must have the power to set their own nursing home standards to eliminate needless costs. House and Senate committees have separately passed bills that would give states primary responsibility for setting quality-of-care standards for nursing homes, with Washington offering only general categories to be covered. Nursing home providers could lean on states to cut back on standards that they will not be able to live up to for lack of funds.

Nearly two million people now reside in nursing homes. But with an estimated 43 percent of people over 65 years of age likely to spend some time in a nursing home, and an aging baby-boomer population, the demand for these facilities will only grow. To abandon national standards now may invite a return to the nursing home disasters of the past.

Mr. COHEN. We have had over 50—at least 50—congressional hearings and reports over the years dealing with nursing homes, going back all the way to 1965. This only starts in 1986. We have had many more since that time.

But let me just cite you some examples of what is taking place, even as I speak.

Recently in Maryland, a resident expired due to strangulation from an opposing restraint because the resident was not properly wearing a restraint.

In Ohio, we had a resident who died due to strangulation from a vest-type restraint that was incorrectly applied.

In Florida, we had a resident who was sexually assaulted by a nurse's aid.

In Indiana, a resident was found with maggots in wounds.

In Ohio, a resident was being fed with a syringe and aspirated. The staff was unaware what to do. The resident became cyanotic and was subsequently hospitalized.

In Louisiana, we had a resident who was left unattended in a geriwalker and fell. She hit her head and required hospitalization.

In Texas, a resident was force fed with a syringe and aspirated and was hospitalized.

In Maine, we had a resident die of pressure sores.

In Indiana, a resident fell down the stairs and was killed.

In Indiana, a resident in respiratory distress was left unattended for 7 hours. The resident died.

In North Carolina, a resident required thickening liquids to prevent choking. It was not provided. The resident developed aspiration pneumonia.

In Indiana, a resident was missing from the facility. He was found two blocks away.

I could go on for some length this evening, which I will not do. I suggest we have to make modifications to this legislation to make sure that we tell the States, "No, we are not simply turning it all over to you, that, because Medicaid has been turned over in the form of a block grant as such, we still expect some standards and oversight and enforcement on the part of the Federal Government."

This is not something that the States can say, "Wait a minute. This is a Federal mandate here." We have $800 billion going to the States in the next 7 years, $800 billion. That gives us some right, it would seem to me, to say that there ought to be standards that have been set. They ought to be enforced, and we ought to maintain a level of oversight that will, in fact, make sure that we do not have a repetition of some of the things that I have outlined here tonight. These are just symptomatic; these are just a small sample.

I know my friend from New Mexico is sensitive to this. He served with me on the Aging Committee. The Presiding Officer sitting in the chair also serves in that committee. And we will hear more about this. We need to make sure that when you finally come to that position in life where you have to take a parent or a grandparent and turn them into the arms of those who run our nursing homes—that is just the beginning—we have to make sure that those facilities are well run, they are well managed, that the residents are properly cared for, so that the people who have entrusted their loved ones into the hands of these individuals who are running the nursing homes do, in fact, treat them with loving care, and make sure that we are satisfied that that is so.

Now, Mr. President, I will not take the time this evening—I have, I think, just a few moments remaining—other than to indicate that my friend from New Mexico is aware of my concern about this. I know that he and others are working along, hopefully, with others on both sides to make sure that this is corrected. I believe it is a deficiency. We need to correct it. And it should be done, if not this evening, certainly tomorrow before we proceed further. And I yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. I thank the Senator very much.

I would like to commend the Senator from Maine for his words about a hidden part of this bill.

It is a very large bill, and in it is a repeal of Federal nursing home standards. In the Budget Committee on which I serve, I raised this issue. I have spoken about this issue on the floor. It is truly music to my ears to hear you speak about this as eloquently as you have.

I am sure you are aware that Senator PRYOR has put together an amendment. I know he was looking forward to working with you on it, and I am a cosponsor of that amendment.

I happen to have had the sad circumstance of losing my mother a few years ago, and she died in a nursing home. Even with the Federal standards, I say to my friend, it is an awfully difficult situation. The people are so vulnerable. They are as vulnerable, in many ways, as little babies. It just tears your heart out.

To think that we would allow 50 separate legislatures and 50 separate Governors to say, "Well, gee, maybe we don't have enough money in this, maybe we do," I think is just too important.

I am so pleased to hear the Senator from Maine say that the Senator from New Mexico, my chairman, is concerned about this matter. I hope we can reach across the aisle and maybe restore those national standards.

I think it is something we did because there was a crying need. I agree that change is wonderful, but sometimes it does not make sense to change something when we learned how rough it was out there in those nursing homes.

I want to thank my friend very much. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, do I have time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes and twenty-two seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes off the bill.

I want to thank Senator COHEN for his statement tonight and his efforts in the past on the Aging Committee. He has done excellent work. Everybody knows the committee is a factfinding committee, but you have turned it into more than a factfinding committee because much legislation has come from the hearings you held.

We had one in the recent past, which you actually brought forth, with reference to fraud, saving money, some abuses on the side of the SSI Program, which were clearly brought out by your committee. I thank you for that, and I can assure you we have your concerns under our serious consideration, as we move through in an effort to get a good bill that passes the Senate and goes on its way to a conference in the House.

Let me also compliment Senator ABRAHAM for this particular amendment that we are now addressing. Actually, nothing bothers senior citizens more than what they consider to be a rat's nest as they look at their bills and they look at the processes and they receive documentation on what they owe and what Medicare owes or what Medicaid owes—total confusion.

Some of them try to find out if they have been gouged. Some try to find out if they have been overcharged or even that they have been charged for something they do not remember getting.

Frankly, it is so complicated that they give up. We are losing because of that. One of the most credible and reliable ways to control costs is by having an informed patient concerned about costs. In fact, I think that everyone would agree that over the past 30 years, one of the reasons that health care costs have spiraled is because we are developing a culture where the recipient of the benefits pays so little or nothing that they never challenge the bills and, as a result, if it goes unchallenged long enough, it gets pretty loose, to be kind of modest in one statement.

This amendment says we want to take back the patient, the senior citizen and make them part of the army that polices fraud and abuse. This says if, in fact, the senior finds that they are going to share, by way of a portion of the recovery that is made, it will be an incentive to them.

This is new and different. Some might say it will not work but, frankly, what we have been doing is not working. So it seems to this Senator that what we ought to do is adopt this amendment, make sure it becomes part of the law, and as we move through our reform, give seniors more choice which is going to permit them to be more selective, more concerned and to gain more from watching the bills. This ought to become part of the substantive law of the land.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARKIN. Before the Senator puts in a quorum call, I hope he will yield for a question.

Mr. DOMENICI. Without losing my right to the floor I will.

Mr. HARKIN. This Senator came to the floor in good faith because I thought that when time was through, then there would be an opportunity for an amendment. I was going to offer a second-degree amendment. I wonder why that is not appropriate to do at this time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I humbly apologize. What is the Senator's question again? I was trying to get your question answered, but I did not listen to you. So that is not very good.

Mr. HARKIN. My question was, I thought under the rules, after the time on the amendment ran out, that it would be open for amendment. I had a second-degree amendment I was going to offer. I was going to do it at this time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me tell you what I understood the situation was, and we have the minority leader here. I think what we said is the Abraham amendment will be second-degreed, and you all can amend it, but we would like to see the amendment before we agree to that. I just got the amendment, and I would like very much just to look at it for a minute and get right back to you, during which time I will ask for a quorum call. I reinstate my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous-consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT REQUEST

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me sort of outline here what we have agreed to do. I want to thank the Democratic leader and the Senator from New Mexico and others who have been working on this, along with the Senator from Kentucky, Senator FORD.

As I understand it, we have laid aside the Rockefeller Medicare amendment and the Brown amendment to Rockefeller. The Abraham amendment is pending, and that will be second-degreed by Senator HARKIN. After that debate, that will be laid aside, and then the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] will offer a motion to recommit EITC, and Republicans will offer a first-degree amendment.

Following that, we will recess for the night, leaving approximately 8 hours remaining. Then tomorrow morning, the Senator from New Jersey will have an additional 20 minutes or 30 minutes starting at 9 o'clock on the EITC.

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time is Senator BRADLEY getting? Is he getting a special privilege or the regular time?

Mr. DOLE. The regular time. He will save 30 minutes of his allotted time.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think the Senator should speak tonight. The whole world will turn him on and turn the baseball game off.

Mr. BRADLEY. If the Senator will yield, I think the Senator is quoting me in my conversation with him, and he should attribute that to me.

Mr. DOMENICI. I was merely repeating what the Senator said.

Mr. DOLE. Anyway, there will be 30 minutes, and then after that, that would be laid aside and then there would be a motion to recommit Medicaid, and there will be no first-degree amendments to that. That will be followed by either an amendment or a motion on education, and then a amendment or motion on deficit reduction, or an amendment or motion on rural restoration.

That takes us to approximately 12:30, at which time we hope to be able to say that we have worked out some agreement, where they will have either up or down votes on their first-degree amendments or motions to recommit, and we will have up or down votes. There will not be any second-degrees on, say, the Abraham amendment, or on the other amendments, but vote on or in relation to, and motions to table. I think that fairly well covers it. In other words, if we reach an agreement, Republicans may withdraw all second- and first-degree amendments and have votes in relation to the major amendments. Democrats will do the same on the amendments pending. That will take us to 12:30 p.m. tomorrow. Do I properly State the understanding, I ask the Democratic leader?

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, that clearly articulates, I think, the agreement that we have. We will have a series of amendments tomorrow morning. I urge all Democratic Senators to be on the floor to offer the amendments and participate in the debate. We will continue to negotiate during that time, with an expectation of having some final understanding of whether or not we can reach an agreement by tomorrow noon. And then we will work from there.

Mr. DOLE. That would, in effect, take care of your so-called tier 1 amendments.

Mr. DASCHLE. That is correct.

Mr. DOLE. I make that request. Is there any objection to my request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it has been accepted, but might I ask both leaders this. It is clear that if we do not have an agreement and all of the first-degree amendments that were offered by the Democrats that have been set aside, we can offer our second-degrees to them, is that understood?

Mr. DOLE. That is the understanding of the two leaders. Hopefully, we can reach an agreement where they can get up or down votes or motions to table and we can have the same. If we cannot, we are back to square one and we start voting.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, might I thank the minority leader and those who worked with him, including Senator EXON and others. We offered you something a little different than that and, frankly, I think this accommodates both, and we are very pleased you were able to help us work it out. I thank you very much.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished majority leader, when do we vote? Are all the votes going to be stacked? It appears to this Senator that once you debate an amendment, you debate the second-degree, you ought to vote on it and then we lose—maybe that is what you want to do—but it seems to me that once an amendment is debated, if there is a second-degree amendment, that is debated and, at that point, we ought to vote on it rather than keep stacking. I know you are trying to work out an arrangement here, but something is going to be retroactive based on whatever the agreement might be.

I just hope that at some point we will get to where we can vote and get that part behind us. We understand probably the numbers of the votes, but there might be a surprise or two in this.

Mr. DOLE. I do not disagree with the Senator. But I think until we have an agreement, it probably would not work, because we would be forced, in effect, to offer amendments and may not want to offer amendments. We will keep that in mind. I think you are right, we ought to have the amendment and second degree, and then vote. I think while we are trying to work this out—well, we should know by 1 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. DASCHLE. In addition to that, Mr. President, I share with the distinguished minority whip that it is our intention to try to utilize the time we have and to avoid second-degrees, if it is at all possible, to allow us more opportunities to offer our amendments.

I ask the majority leader, we have shared the first and the second tier with the leader. I am wondering if you might have the list of Republican amendments that you are planning to offer so that we might have the evening to take a look at them. If that could be accommodated, that would be helpful.

Mr. DOLE. The majority whip is working on a list and when it is available, we can do that. I think the majority whip is working on that list as I speak.

Is there any objection?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It has been agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. That will be the last vote today. There will be no more votes today or during the evening.

AMENDMENT NO. 2957 TO AMENDMENT NO. 2950

(Purpose: To strengthen efforts to combat Medicare waste, fraud, and abuse)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN] proposes an amendment numbered 2957 to amendment No. 2950.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this amendment is an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, Senator ABRAHAM, and it deals with waste, fraud, and abuse in the Medicare system. I might just say at the outset that while I have no real disagreements with the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan—it is not a bad amendment—it just does not go very far. There is a lot more that I think needs to be done in the whole area of waste, fraud, and abuse than is encompassed either in the underlying bill or the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. President, for the last several years, I have been privileged to chair the Appropriations Subcommittee on Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies.

In that capacity, at least once a year, I had a hearing on the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse in Medicare. Just about every year I asked the GAO to do a study on one facet or another of the waste, abuse, or fraud in the Medicare System.

We have had several of those, and two or three inspector general reports on that subject also during that period of time.

It seems that every year we would uncover something and try to take some action to stop it, and it would only pop up in another place and be even worse.

I became convinced over the last couple of years that major changes had to be made in the way we address the issue of waste, fraud, and abuse in the Medicare Program.

Mr. President, these GAO reports that we have had done are available to Senators. Here is one that we had on medical supplies that was done over the last year, issued in August 1995.

Let me say for the record what the GAO found in their study of the purchase of medical supplies. They went in and did a random sample of supplies that were paid for by Medicare. They went behind the supplies to get an itemized list.

When they looked at it, the result was startling. The GAO found that 89 percent of the claims should have been partially or totally denied; 61 percent of the money paid out should never have been paid out.

That is a lot of money, Mr. President, because last year Medicare paid out about $6.8 billion for medical supplies. If that sample that GAO took was representative, and I believe it probably was, you are talking somewhere in the neighborhood of $4 billion going for wasteful, duplicative, and fraudulent spending.

While we may not get all of that, we certainly ought to be able to get a good share of that money back for our taxpayers who are paying this money in.

There are a lot of other programs. The computer system that HCFA used, for Health Care Financing Administration, the computers are outdated. It is as if we were all using manual typewriters, that is how outdated their hardware and software is. Here is another report we had from the GAO outlining that.

Very briefly, what the amendment I have offered does is add to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan. Basically, it strengthens the sanctions against providers who rip-off Medicare. Those convicted of health care fraud and felonies would be kicked out of Medicare. Maximum fines would be increased. What we also did, Mr. President, I think the heart and soul of the whole thing, is that we have to go to competitive bidding.

We found, for example, that Medicare was paying up to 86 cents for a bandage that the Veterans Administration only pays 4 cents for. We found in durable medical equipment that Medicare was paying up to $3,600 a year for an oxygen concentrator that only costs $1,000. The Veterans Administration was reimbursing at only about $1,200 a year—one-third of what Medicare was reimbursing. Same for oxygen equipment and everything.

Time and again, we have found the Veterans Administration was substantially below what Medicare was paying for the same items. The reason for that is because the Veterans Administration competitively bids for durable medical equipment, services, and for supplies; Medicare does not.

Usually, when I tell audiences that, they cannot believe it. They cannot believe we would not do something so simple and straightforward and so market-oriented as to require competitive bidding for supplies, services, and durable medical equipment.

This started when Medicare first came in 1965—a fee schedule was set up for the items, and it has rolled on year after year after year.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, I say in all candor, those entities, those companies involved in this, have had a sweetheart deal. They have opposed efforts in this Congress and in other Congresses to do away with the fee schedule and go to competitive bidding. I can understand why—because they are really ripping off the system.

Mr. President, we had a study done on duplicative claims. Case after case where a doctor put in for, say, two X rays; the GAO found out he should have only been paid for one X ray. On and on.

Again, this is because GAO's computers could not pick it up. We had testimony from one private insurance carrier who also did the billing for Medicare. They had one set of computers and software for their private side of what they did; they had another set for what they did for Medicare.

The examples were astounding about how for the same claims, covering the same items, under the private side the computers and their programs would pick up duplicative claims and spit those out so they would not pay it. On the Medicare side, because of the old software and computers, they would not catch it and out would go the money for two X rays when only one was required.

So our amendment, the amendment I offered, requires competitive bid. That, I believe—we can do anything we want to Medicare. Want to cut money, want to save money in Medicare you can do all you want to and jimmy the system, but until we have competitive bidding we are really not going to get to the bottom of the extensive amount of money that goes out.

What are we talking about? GAO estimates that up to 10 percent of Medicare spending goes for waste, fraud, and abuse. You figure $170 billion this year in Medicare, if we took 10 percent, that is $17 billion a year. We are talking about 7 years here. Mr. President, $17 billion a year for 7 years, and you have more than enough to take care of fixing up the Medicare system just by clamping down on waste, fraud, and abuse.

I realize we cannot get all of that but if we could just get half of it, if we could just get half of it, we would save our taxpayers and we would save the beneficiaries from having to pay more money.

Our amendment provides for that competitive bidding. It would specifically prohibit also Medicare payments for a number of items clearly not related to quality patient care.

For example, we found, Mr. President, that Medicare was paying for tickets to sporting events, personal use of automobiles, and we even found that they were paying for travel to Italy to examine art to be put into a hospital. Medicare was picking that up. Our amendment expressly prohibits that.

Another part of our amendment clamps down on improper payment for ambulance services. Again, another GAO report that we had done shows that ambulance services are charging the highest rate for ambulance services even though they are not using all of the equipment or they are not using the more expensive ambulance services when they go out to pick up a patient.

Also, our amendment, as I said, puts funds in there so they can get updated computers, so they can stop the double billing.

GAO estimated that if this amendment, this part of the amendment that we offered, to require Medicare to employ the commercial software that is available and to do it within 6 months—and GAO said they could do it within 6 months—that in the first year we could save $600 million just by employing this software.

Mr. President, our amendment would strengthen the criminal penalties and also provide rewards up to $10,000 to individuals who report violations of the law which result in criminal convictions for health care fraud.

Our amendment also provides for uniform application process for health care providers seeking to participate in Medicare and Medicaid. Right now, there is just too much paperwork. Our amendment says one standardized form for the submission of claims under Medicare and Medicaid. Again, Mr. President, that would save countless millions of dollars.

So, in sum, Mr. President, this amendment builds on what the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan does and what is in the bill. What is in the bill, and even with the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan, really does not get to the real problem.

I repeat for emphasis' sake, the real problem in Medicare is lack of competitive billing. All of those who believe in the market system and who believe the market system gets you the best services and the best prices, you ought to be for this amendment. We ought to, for once and for all, require competitive bidding for Medicare just like we do the Veterans Administration.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may use to briefly comment on the amendment before us, and then I will yield further time to other Members on our side.

Mr. DOMENICI. Will the Senator yield 5 minutes to me first and then proceed?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. In the short timeframe of this evening, not even an early part of the day, because I did not keep tabs on all times, but Senators on the other side of the aisle—this evening it was Senator DORGAN and my colleague, Senator BINGAMAN—took to the floor and talked about the distribution of the tax cuts. And Senator DORGAN said nobody has disavowed and disproved that 50 percent goes to the very wealthy people.

Mr. President, the truth of the matter is that was first reported in the Wall Street Journal article, and the Joint Tax Committee writes the chairman of the Finance Committee a letter on October 24. Let me read a paragraph.

No factual basis exists for the assertion (since retracted) contained in the Wall Street Journal of last week asserting that one-half of all households would experience a tax increase under the Senate Finance Committee revenue [package].

In other words, it was retracted by the Wall Street Journal but it continues to be used. And in this letter the Joint Tax Committee states the following, and let me read it. Calendar year 1996, without EITC changes.

Some will say wait, you have to have EITC in it. I will put it in. Just a minute.

For 1996, it says, "Under $75,000 is 77 percent; under $100,000 is 90 percent." In 1996, they confirm that the tax cut, that 77 percent goes to people under $75,000 in earnings.

In the year 2000, because there are some changes—let us put it all on the table—68 percent of the then-completed tax cuts go to $75,000 and under, and 83 percent to $100,000 and less.

Now, let us use EITC, since Chairman ROTH asked them: Check about the EITC. So we make sure we got that. With the EITC tax changes, this confirmation letter says the following. In 1996, the tax distribution is as follows: "Under $75,000, 75 percent. Under $100,000, 89 percent." It has been changed by 1 percent, from 90 percent to 89 percent.

In the year 2000, with the EITC tax changes, 65 percent of the distribution is wage earners under $75,000 and 81 percent under $100,000.

If you are talking about taxes, that is the authentic story, from the authentic source. And this one, even the President has decided not to do his own. Everybody uses the Joint Tax Committee. And they are saying this.

So, when anyone comes down on the other side and says nobody has disproved it, disavowed it, we are going to put the letter in the RECORD.

I ask unanimous consent it be printed in the RECORD at this point, the letter dated October 24, and I yield the floor.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
JOINT COMMITTEE ON TAXATION,
Washington, DC, October 24, 1995.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ROTH, Jr.,
Chairman, Senate Finance Committee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN ROTH: I am writing in response to your letter of October 23, 1995, in which you asked me to address several questions with respect to the revenue recommendations approved by the Senate Finance Committee on Thursday, October 19, 1995, and previously approved reforms to the Earned Income Credit ("EIC"). The highlights of my response to your questions are set forth immediately below. Detailed answers to each of your questions are provided in the supplemental submission which accompanies this letter.

No factual basis exists for the assertion (since retracted) contained in the Wall Street Journal of last week asserting that one-half of all households would experience a tax increase under the Senate Finance Committee revenue recommendations—even if one were to include the effects of the EIC reforms previously approved by the Senate Finance Committee.

The Joint Committee on Taxation did not change its distribution analysis of the Senate Finance Committee's revenue recommendations. Our analysis of this set of proposals indicates:

PERCENTAGE OF TAX REDUCTION TO INCOME CLASSES

Calendar year	Percent
	Under $75,000	Under $100,000
1996	77	90

The distribution analysis does not change significantly if one also includes the EIC reforms (including the EIC outlay reductions) approved by the Senate Finance Committee in a separate mark-up (as requested by Senator Moynihan):

PERCENTAGE OF TAX REDUCTION TO INCOME CLASSES

Calendar year	Percent
	Under $75,000	Under $100,000
1996	72	88

At Senator Nickles' request we also prepared an analysis of the Senate Finance Committee's revenue recommendations, including the effects of EIC reforms previously approved by the Senate Finance Committee, but limited to the revenue effects of the EIC reforms, i.e., excluding the outlay or spending portion of the proposed EIC reforms. That analysis indicates the following:

PERCENTAGE OF TAX REDUCTION TO INCOME CLASSES

	Under $75,000	Under $100,000
1996	75	89

With respect to the Senate Finance Committee's previously approved EIC reforms, our analysis of the combined effects of the Senate Finance Committee's EIC reforms, the $500 child credit and marriage penalty relief for 1996 indicates that less than 1.5 percent of all households will have in income tax increase as a result of the EIC reforms. Other key points to consider include: 3.6 million households without children would no longer receive an EIC beginning in 1996. This reform reinstates the pre-1993 policy of providing an EIC only to families with children. Approximately 1.2 million households will owe income taxes as a result of this change.

Of the remaining 14.7 million households with children who would be eligible for the EIC, approximately 14 million would not have an increase in their income taxes over current law. Approximately 700,000 households would owe income taxes because of the Senate Finance Committee's EIC anti-fraud and illegal alien provisions and the affluence reforms that count certain types of income in determining eligibility for the EIC.

Families who are currently eligible for the maximum EIC (families with children and having adjusted gross income under $12,000) will receive an even larger EIC next year and thereafter. For example: (i) The maximum EIC for a family with one child will increase from $2,094 in 1995 to $2,156 in 1996. (ii) The maximum EIC for a family with two or more children will increase from $3,110 in 1995 to $3,208 in 1996.

In addition, since these families would not owe any taxes under the Senate Finance Committee's revenue recommendations, the full amount of their EIC would represent an outlay payment from the Federal government.

Families living at or near the poverty line (one-child families with earnings under $12,500 and two-child families with earnings under $15,500) would continue to receive an EIC in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes (employee and employer shares).

Even after the Senate Finance Committee's EIC reforms, the cost of the EIC would exceed $20 billion in 1996 and thereafter.

The share of federal taxes paid by higher-income individuals under the Senate Reconciliation bill would actually increase as compared with Federal taxes paid under current law.

If you have any questions about this information, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

KENNETH J. KIES,
Chief of Staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself as much time as I may need just to make a couple of comments on the second-degree amendment to the first-degree amendment, and then I will yield the balance of time on that point.

The Senator from Iowa commented that the first-degree amendment was a good amendment, but not nearly adequate to deal with the issues of fraud and abuse in the Medicare system. I do not disagree with that point. It was not intended to be the comprehensive solution to fraud and abuse problems with Medicare.

Indeed, we do not need that in my amendment because the reconciliation bill includes a whole variety of projects and sections which try to address these problems.

First, the Senate Republican proposal directs the Secretary of HHS, through the inspector general, and the Attorney General to establish a joint program to coordinate Federal, State, and local law enforcement efforts to combat health care fraud and abuse.

Second, our bill creates a new health care antifraud and abuse account to cover the cost of this coordinated health care antifraud and abuse program between the inspector general at HHS, the FBI, State fraud control units, and Department of Justice prosecutors. All moneys collected in the form of penalties, fines, forfeitures, and damages from health care fraud cases will be turned back over to the Medicare hospital insurance trust fund.

Third, the bill establishes new health care antifraud and abuse guidelines relating to safe harbors, interpretative rulings, and special fraud alerts. For instance, under this provision, any person may request the HHS inspector general investigate and issue a special fraud alert informing the public about suspected fraudulent activities against Medicare or Medicaid.

Fourth, the bill strengthens current sanctions by requiring the Secretary of HHS to exclude from receiving Medicare or Medicaid payment individuals and entities against whom there have been convictions for fraudulent activities.

Fifth, we create intermediate sanctions for the Secretary of HHS to use against Medicare HMO's which fail to live up to contractual responsibilities. Civil monetary penalties range from $10,000 to $100,000.

Sixth, our bill establishes a national health care fraud and abuse data collection program and requires the information collected be made available to Federal and State government agencies and health care plans.

Seventh, this proposal increases the amount of civil monetary penalties for current law, adds new offenses to those subject to civil monetary penalties, and requires that all civil monetary penalties be used to reimburse the Medicare or Medicaid program and any remaining dollars be returned to the health care fraud account.

Eighth, for the first time, a health care fraud section is added to the criminal code.

Ninth, this measure extends the authority of State health care fraud control units by allowing the Units to investigate other Federal fraud abuses and allowing investigation and prosecution in the case of patient abuse in non-Medicaid board and care facilities.

Finally, Mr. President, the 10th reason the Senate Republican bill is tough on fraud and abuse is that it will clarify existing provisions of the criminal antikickback law in the areas of discounting and managed care related to Medicare choice plans. Direct the Secretary of HHS to study the benefits of volume and combination discounts to the Medicare Program and develop regulations based on the findings of such a study.

And I just conclude my statement by saying we have worked hard already in this legislation to address the areas of fraud and abuse in Medicare to try to save the taxpayers' dollars. I would just add this point. As I inspected the things that we had already done, it struck me the one missing ingredient, important missing ingredient was to provide an incentive whereby the Medicare beneficiaries themselves could help us to solve these problems in the years ahead and to provide an incentive for the Medicare beneficiaries to help us solve these problems in the twin approaches which we have outlined in our amendment.

That said, at this point——

Mr. HARKIN. Will the Senator yield just to engage in a 2-minute colloquy?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I committed time at this point to other Members. Maybe they would be able to yield at this point, but I have to, at this point, yield my time to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Might I make an inquiry as to how much time we have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 22½ minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I just wanted to ask one very small thing.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Sure.

Mr. HARKIN. The Senator was very thoughtful. As I said, I do not really have much argument with what is in the bill. I am not trying to undo what is in it, nor the Senator's amendment. But I still think the heart and soul of this is competitive bidding. I hope the Senator will think about that. Maybe we might reach some agreement on this. But I think the time is long past when we should put out competitive bidding just like they do in the Veterans Administration. I hope your side might take a look at that.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this point, I would like to yield 12 of our remaining minutes to the Senator from New Hampshire, to be followed by 10 minutes to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Michigan for yielding this time. I think it is important at this juncture in the debate, because so much has been discussed relative to the impacts of the Medicare activity within this bill and all these numbers that have been put on the floor, to maybe go back and review where we are, especially in the context of this amendment that has been brought forward by the Senator from Michigan, which is an excellent amendment, and the amendment which has been brought forward by the Senator from Iowa, because the Senator from Iowa keeps referring to the fact that the essence of cost control in Medicare should be competitive bidding.

If that is the Senator's position, and that is the position of the Members on the other side of the aisle, then they should be embracing with enthusiasm the proposal for strengthening Medicare which we have put forward in this bill because our proposal is competitive bidding. What we are saying to the senior citizens of this country is today you are locked into a single-source provider, or approach called fee for service. But we are going to open the marketplace up to you. We are going to give you, the seniors of this country, choices—essentially the same choices in concept that Members of Congress have. We are going to allow you to choose between groups of doctors practicing together in what is known as PPO's, and doctors practicing together with hospitals in what is known as HMO's, and groups of doctors and hospitals practicing together in all different kinds of imagination for which we do not have names and titles for, euphemisms, initials, and titles for: medical savings accounts, and your present fee-for-service proposal which you can participate in. We will not limit your ability to participate in that. But we will open the marketplace to competitive bidding for your dollars that you are spending on Medicare today and on your health care.

That is the essence of our proposal. It is to bring the marketplace into the Medicare system, something that has been ignored over the last 20 years as we have seen Medicare evolve.

The impact of doing that is essentially what the Senator from Iowa has mentioned. He thinks the impact of bringing competitive bidding into a narrow band of purchasing activities on Medicare, the impact of bringing competitive bidding to the entire concept of health care and the marketplace into the Medicare system, is to control the rate of growth of costs of the Medicare system. Why are we doing this? We are doing it because if we do not control the rate of growth for the Medicare system we have been told by the Medicare trustees that the Medicare system will go bankrupt. Unfortunately, earlier today we heard about the fact that statements were made on the other side of the aisle from some of the Members that we, in controlling the rate of growth of the Medicare system, are undermining the Medicare system; the fact we are trying to keep the Medicare system from growing at the 10-percent rate of growth, which the trustees have said is going to lead to bankruptcy, is being construed on that side of the aisle as somehow irresponsible.

I find it very difficult to follow the logic of that argument because, as the trustees have told us, a 10-percent rate of growth is not sustainable, and will lead to bankruptcy. How can you come forward on the floor of this Senate and say that, when we are trying to control that rate of growth and allow a rate of growth which is sustainable which allows the trust fund to remain solvent, we are being irresponsible?

The irresponsibility lies with those who continue to allow the costs to escalate uncontrolled at a 10-percent rate of growth and, therefore, would lead to bankruptcy of the system. The way we are planning to control those costs is through competitive bidding, using the marketplace, giving seniors options which they presently do not have, to go out and choose different forms of health care delivery; being absolutely clear at the same time that, if they want to stay in the system they want today, if they want to stay in fee for service, they can do that.

What has been the experience that leads us to believe that by giving seniors more choices we will end up being able to control the rate of growth in health care costs? It is what has happened in the private sector. The private sector, over the last 5 years especially, has seen a major move of employee insured groups going from fee for service into some sort of coordinated care delivery, some sort of fixed cost insurance program. The experience has generated some fairly clear guideposts for us in the public sector as we attempt to give our seniors who are getting Medicare today the same type of options that those of us in the Senate have, and that many people in the private sector have, which is the opportunity to choose different types of health care delivery services.

This chart that I have here reflects what has happened in the private sector as we have seen a movement of approximately 60 percent of the population from fee for service into different types of coordinated care, or care with a fixed cost paid up front. This red line is the rate of inflation in health care costs. The blue bars indicate the rate of enrollment in managed care types of plans. As you see with the managed care enrollment going up, the rate of health care costs, inflation, has gone down. In fact, it has dropped by about 50 percent. It has dropped so much that, for example, in the Federal employee plan, which is the plan that basically we are tracking at least in concept—not specific but in concept—with what we are going to offer senior citizens, last year the Federal employee plan had no health care inflation. This year it will have no health care inflation. Last year it actually had a drop in health care inflation. So there was actually a negative increase in premium costs.

That is why we believe that when we give seniors the option to participate in a marketplace, why when we bring the marketplace forward to compete for the seniors' dollars, we will see the type of efficiency which is inherent in a capitalist system, in a marketplace system, in the type of approach which the Senator from Iowa has said will work in a narrow band. It will work in a broad band also.

Therefore, under our plan we are essentially going to be able to address not just the narrow costs of how much a bandage costs but the broad costs, the overall health care delivery system cost for our senior citizens. That, of course, should be our goal. Why should it be our goal? Let us get back to why that should be our goal—controlling the rate of growth of health care costs. Because, if we do not control that rate of growth, once again it is important to emphasize the fact that the hospital trust fund goes broke. It goes bankrupt.

Once again, I want to point out that I keep hearing this number on the other side of the aisle that all we need is $89 billion to adjust the Hospital Health Care Trust Fund. That number is simply not accurate according to the trustees' report. The trustees' report was very definitive in stating that in order to get actuarial solvency of the hospital trust fund of the most minimal nature, the absolute bare minimum actuarial solvency, you need an adjustment that amounts to $387 billion over 7 years, not $89 billion.

So by using the method of creating competition for seniors, we expect to be able to control the rate of growth of costs. And we are really not controlling it all that much, quite honestly. We are talking about still allowing the rate of growth of Medicare to be 6.5 percent, essentially the same rate of growth of health care that the President wanted. As pointed out earlier by Senator NICKLES on this floor, the President's budget, as it was sent up, allowed for a rate of growth in Medicare which was essentially the same as our rate of growth in Medicare.

Why did the President send those numbers up? Because the President understands or at least his trustees understand that a rate of growth which we are presently suffering from—the 10-percent rate of growth—is unsustainable, and will lead to bankruptcy. You have to slow that rate of growth. But a 6.5-percent rate of growth is a huge—an absolutely huge—infusion of money into the Medicare system. That infusion of money—I will return to another chart which I had earlier—which represents $349 billion of new spending on Medicare over the next 7 years will be the type of dollars necessary to generate competition in the marketplace for our senior citizens as they go out in the marketplace and look for different types of health care to obtain.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute and 6 seconds remaining.

Mr. GREGG. I am running out of time. I probably will not have time to touch on it. But let me simply say in concluding on this point that the plan which we as Republicans have put forward is a plan which fundamentally strengthens the Medicare system.

It says to seniors that we are going to give you an opportunity to participate in similar programs that Members of Congress and Federal employees have, the opportunity to go out in the marketplace and look at different health care plans and decide which one is best for you.

And remember, we also say in our plan that if you, the senior, happen to purchase a health care program which costs less than what it presently costs us as a Federal Government to pay for your fee-for-service health care, we are going to let you keep the savings.

For example, in New England, for the average senior we are paying about $5,000. To the extent that senior is able to go out and find a health care plan that has to supply the same basic benefits and will probably supply many more—eyeglasses, some sort of drug benefit—to the extent that senior gets that plan because the marketplace prices that plan at a lower price, say they get it for $4,500 instead of $5,000, we are going to let the senior under our plan keep up to a minimum 75 percent of that $500 or possibly the whole $500, which is another huge marketplace incentive to control costs because it makes seniors thoughtful and, yes, cost-conscious purchasers of their health care.

It also creates in the marketplace a tremendous dynamic to compete for those senior dollars, which is the whole theory behind what we think is known as capitalism and what we think will generate, first, better and higher quality care and, second, care which will be more cost-effective and therefore will be affordable and therefore will guarantee the solvency of the trust fund.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GREGG. I thank the Chair.

The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. President, I join my colleagues tonight to debate this most important provision of the Senate reconciliation bill that is before us and the Republican proposal that I am so proud to support because of the kind of elements that we have put before the American public as truly positive change, while at the same time recognizing I think some of the very real needs that many of our citizens have.

The one that the Senator from New Hampshire has just addressed and the one I will spend some time with this evening that I think is critical for us to understand, of course, is Medicare and the changes we are proposing to bring stability and strength to the system and the kind of choice and independence that the seniors of this country, who are the recipients, the beneficiaries of this program, have expected and deserve to expect from their Medicare program.

The Senator from Iowa this evening has introduced a competitive bid bill in the antifraud and abuse provision of Medicare reform, and for a few moments this evening I think it would be very important to spend some time with that and to understand it.

The Senator from Michigan has put forth an amendment that addresses many of the provisions and adds to many of the provisions of the Republican proposal as it relates to Medicare reform; that I think is a tremendously positive approach; that in combination with the 10 reforms already in our legislation, when scored by the Congressional Budget Office, represents a proposed savings to Medicare of $4.1 billion.

Now, I must say that I am told the amendment of the Senator from Iowa has not been scored, and I wish he were in the Chamber so that I could seek that out with him, and if he returns I will ask him that question, because as we strive to balance the budget and keep ourselves on course as the American people have asked us to, it is important that amendments that come to the floor, if they are credible, if they really want to vote on them, ought to be scored. Ours has been, and it does represent a $4.1 billion savings.

What is significant about that is representative of what is going on in health care delivery today in this country and the fact that there are dedicated efforts at defrauding both the American taxpayer and the consumer of Medicare benefits.

Senator COHEN was in the Chamber this afternoon or later this evening. He serves as the chairman of the Senate Special Committee on Aging. I have the privilege of serving on that committee with him. Over the last several years, both he and Senator PRYOR, who chaired that committee before him, and I and others who have served on that committee have held a series of hearings to try to ferret out and understand the kind of waste, fraud, and abuse especially being perpetrated on the seniors of this country that would have the kind of impact on Medicare that it currently has.

Let me give you a couple of figures, Mr. President. As much as 10 percent of U.S. health care spending or about $100 billion is lost each year to health care fraud and abuse. That is a phenomenal figure. And yet we believe it is reasonably accurate. Over the last 5 years, estimated losses from these fraudulent activities have totaled $408 billion.

Now, that is not the only program or benefit that would have gone to the senior. That is tax money. That is the hard-working, tax-paying American citizen's dollar that some charlatan is making off with because they have learned to game the system and because we have not been able to catch them in gaming the system, or at least we certainly have not caught them at the level that I think all of our taxpayers would want.

So the 10 provisions that are in our Medicare reform bill, that were spoken to earlier this evening, along with the additional provision in the amendment from the Senator from Michigan, will register a savings of about $5 to $6 billion, and that is significant. That is big dollars where I come from, big dollars in anybody's estimation, and when it comes to delivering health care needs to our seniors, those are truly important dollars.

One of the things that is most significant in all of this, while we create brand-new bureaucratic schemes to ferret out all of this, is the very simple concept with which the Senator from Michigan has come forward. That is that individual Medicare beneficiaries report suspected fraud and abuse and we create an incentive program to allow them to do that.

Let me tell you why that is important. I think if every Senator would stop for just a moment, they could remember almost instantly that within the last several months they have had 1, 2, 3, 5, 10 letters from Medicare recipients in their State questioning whether their bill was accurate, whether they had been bilked out of a service that was not delivered and whether in fact their account had been charged.

Mr. President, less than 3 months ago, a former citizen from my State, who now lives in California, called my office one day. I had not heard from this man in years. He had happened to be from my hometown. He is now retired and living in California, and he had major surgery, and he is on Medicare. For some reason, he thought something was wrong with the billing; that he not only had been overcharged but there were fraudulent charges involved.

He sent me all of his material and said, "Senator, I know I no longer live in your State but we have known each other over the years. Would you look into it?"

Mr. President, we looked into it. It was thousands of dollars of billing that he was questioning. Within a period of about a month, we had discovered, in working with HCFA and working with Medicare, that this was, in fact, fraudulent billing.

Now, that is only one example, and I have chosen not to use his name tonight because I did not ask his permission, but I have done that on many occasions in working with my constituents, and I know nearly every Senator in the Senate has. We recognize without question that the current structure of Medicare simply cannot get at the kind of waste, fraud, and abuse that is current and prevalent within the program, and in trying to secure it, trying to make it stable, being able to turn to our citizens and say to them that Medicare will be there in the out years, strong and ready to serve them and their needs, we must get at these programs. They must result in the kinds of savings, more importantly, the kind of tightening up of it, that I think is so critically necessary.

So the 10 provisions we have talked about, certainly the one that the Senator from Michigan has offered that creates the incentives for the beneficiaries themselves to become involved, working with Federal, State, and local law enforcement units to combat especially the fraud sides of the program, are going to be increasingly valuable, and this is what I am proud to say we have offered. It has been scored. It saves $4.1 billion over the period of this legislation, and that is of critical need to all of us.

Mr. President, may I inquire how many minutes are remaining in my time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute.

Mr. CRAIG. As we continue the debate over the next 12 to 14 hours, Mr. President, I hope that those citizens of our country who are watching will recognize the importance of what we do; and that is, for the first time in my time in public service for the State of Idaho, that this Congress will truly bring about a balanced budget proposal, and one that will set our Government in motion toward a balanced budget.

This is exactly what the American people were asking for last November. They were asking us not only to change the way Government thinks and acts, most assuredly the way Congress thinks and acts, but to do the kinds of things that we are doing in the Medicare reform, to clean it up, to stabilize it, to give them choice, to give them the freedom of not just fee for service, but the kinds of options that the private citizen of this country has, and to keep the program.

We know we can balance the budget and allow these programs to continue to serve the truly needy in our country and those that are direct participants, like the Medicare beneficiaries, and to do so in a way that allows the program to remain strong and assures that in the long term we will be able to have a balanced budget, turn to the American people and say, "We've done it. Your debt is now under control." Let us then begin to work on debt structure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to lay the pending amendment aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President. I send a motion to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions that the Committee on Finance report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) with identical language, except that the Committee on Finance shall strike sections 7462, 7463, 7464, and 7465 of the bill. The Committee on Finance shall also include provisions which offset the revenue losses from the striking of such sections with an elimination of corporate tax welfare provisions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey is recognized for one-half hour.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I know that this debate is being held opposite the eighth inning of the World Series. And I will keep all Members in the Senate guessing as to what the score is, so we can focus on the issue before us, which is the earned-income tax credit.

Mr. President, the earned-income tax credit is a way to provide tax relief to working Americans of modest income. It is the most significant tax relief provided to working Americans of modest income that we have seen in the last 20 years. It has given many who are striving to make a better life for themselves and their families under very difficult circumstances the money they need to send their kids to parochial school, the money they need to maybe buy a little bigger apartment, pay the utility bills. It gives them the money that allows them to continue up the ladder of upward mobility.

Mr. President, the bill that we are considering now raises taxes on those working Americans. It essentially defers the third year of the tax cut that was passed in 1993 for those working Americans. In 1981, we passed a tax cut that benefited disproportionately the wealthy, and Democrats constantly made the debate that we should defer the third year of that tax cut because the wealthy did not need more tax relief.

We now have a proposal where the third year of a tax cut is about to be provided to working Americans of modest income, and the Republicans are attempting to defer that tax cut for working Americans of modest income.

Mr. President, I oppose this effort. I opposed it in the committee. I think that it is shortsighted. I think that it is not progrowth. I think it is not profamily. I think to raise taxes on families earning under $28,000 a year in income is an antifamily, antigrowth measure.

Mr. President, in this bill, according to the Department of the Treasury, almost 50 percent of the tax breaks go to people making more than $100,000 a year; at the same time, families with incomes below $30,000, which represent over 40 percent of the American families, face a tax increase.

Now, Mr. President, if this were the only measure in this bill, this tax increase on working families, I would oppose it. If it were the only measure in the bill, I would oppose it. But it is not the only measure in the bill. There are many other provisions that benefit many special interests, but there is one provision, in addition to this tax increase on working Americans of modest income, that I think draws the distinction between the parties very clearly, and that is the estate tax provision in this bill.

The estate tax is, of course, a tax assessed when one passes one's estate on to one's heirs. There is a $600,000 exemption, meaning that if you have an estate, when you pass away, if it is under $600,000 you pay no estate tax. Every year only 1 percent of those who die pass on estates of more than $600,000. Only 0.2 percent of those who die in a year pass on estates of more than $2 million.

Embodied in this bill that increases taxes on families working and earning under $30,000 a year, is a tax cut for estates of $5 million, a tax cut of $1.7 million on average. Let me repeat that. In this tax bill is a tax cut of $1.7 million for estates valued at $5 million.

Once again, Mr. President, the distinction is stark. While on the one hand, a $1.7 million tax cut is given to estates of $5 million, we have a tax increase on families earning under $30,000. I personally cannot understand the politics of this. I do not understand the politics of why. I do not understand the politics of really to whose advantage it lies, except those who get the $1.7 million tax cut.

So, Mr. President, the amendment that I have offered says, "Let's not increase taxes through eliminating the earned-income tax credit." I will get to that in a minute.

But the other thing that this tax cut does is, frankly, increase the national debt. Let me repeat that. This tax cut increases the national debt. This is a deficit reduction package. A deficit reduction package is for the purpose of reducing the national debt. This increases the national debt.

Why? Because in the budget resolution, there is a provision that says if there is an economic benefit from all this budget cutting, then that economic benefit, in its total amount, will be spent as a tax cut. That is what the budget resolution said.

The CBO says if we enact this budget with these budget cuts that it will save about $170 billion that according to the budget resolution, over a period of 5 to 7 years, would be used for a tax cut.

But this tax cut costs $221 to $224 billion. So this tax cut adds about $54 billion to the national debt over this period. There is no disputing those numbers. There are no mysterious letters from the Joint Tax Committee. There are no nuances on words, no playing on the difference between income, Social Security, and excise. There is just a stark number, a $54 billion more increase of the national debt.

So it seems to me that on two grounds, this is not merited. First, because it gives it away to estates of $5 million a $1.7 million tax cut and raises taxes on families earning under $30,000.

In addition to that, it increases the national debt by $54 billion over the period of this bill. But that is not the worst when it comes to the question of the national debt, because immediately after the window of 7 years, there is an explosion of debt.

For example, the capital gains provision will cost about $40 billion in the first years, which is about $5 to $6 billion a year, but in the remaining years, it costs $30 billion. So it jumps from $10 billion, $11 billion, $12 billion a year. Or take the IRA proposal; the backloaded IRA cost $7 million in the first 7 years, and $12 billion, a little less than $2 billion a year, and in the next 3 years costs $21 billion, which is another $7 billion a year.

So talking about the budget deficit, this is an explosion of the debt, an explosion of the debt in the outyears. On both those grounds, I strongly oppose these provisions.

The question is, is this a tax increase? We have a very skillful maneuvering being exercised by the other side. The distinguished Senator from New Mexico reported his numbers that for people earning under $75,000, 72 percent of the tax cut goes to people earning under $75,000 a year. True. But let us look a little deeper. The bulk of that goes to people earning between $30,000 and $75,000. The tax increase on families earning under $30,000 is still there.

In other words, what the distinguished Senator from New Mexico said can be true and still not refute the fact that there is a dramatic tax increase on families earning under $30,000.

Then, of course, we have this famous joint tax study which concludes that less than 1.5 percent of all households will have an income tax increase as a result of EITC reforms. "There it is," says the Senator from New Mexico and the Senator from Delaware, "only 1.5 percent have an income tax increase."

Maybe, but what about Social Security taxes? If you are earning $25,000 a year, the income tax is going to be a big problem; you are going to pay it. The big tax you pay is a Social Security tax, and the earned income credit is for the purpose of offsetting taxes and Social Security taxes. So everything that the Joint Tax Committee says in their letter can be true and a $20 billion increase in Social Security taxes can still be valid.

So, Mr. President, anyway you cut this, this results in a tax increase for families earning under $30,000 a year. In my State, which has the second highest per capita income, that means about 13 percent of the families in my State will have a tax increase.

I saw the distinguished Senator from New Mexico on the floor saying 40 percent of the families in his State would have a tax increase because they earn under $30,000 a year. That is because their per capita income is lower.

So, Mr. President, we are going to hear a lot about errors and yet in the opponents' provision, only $1.6 billion deals with anything related to compliance. If they are so interested in fraud and error, why are they not doing more to deal with compliance?

In the amendment I have suggested. I keep $1.6 billion in compliance measures. And then, of course, the other side will show a graph. "This is a gigantic explosion of growth in this program, an explosion of growth."

Mr. President, when you give somebody a tax cut, you lose revenue. In 1993, we chose to give families earning under $30,000 a year a 3-year tax cut, which means that tax cut grows. So when you see the chart that they might show that shows a figure with a line going up saying "Growth of EITC," translate in your mind: Increasing tax cut for families earning under $30,000 a year. Yes, and if you do not want to give them a tax cut, then you would support the Republican position. If you believe they should have the third year of their tax cut, just as the wealthy had the third year of their tax cut under the bill passed in 1981, then you would support the Democratic position. Do we want to raise taxes on working families or not? Which is the progrowth, profamily policy? I do not think that there is much of an argument on the other side.

They will say, "Oh, no, we have a child credit." Bravo. Let me compliment them. I wish they had supported my amendment in the Finance Committee that would have stricken everything in this bill except the child credit, the adoption credit, the student loan interest deduction. They voted against it. Why? Because you want to have that other provision in the bill, the estate tax provision.

Remember? A $5 million estate gets an average tax cut of $1.7 million. That is why you did not support the amendment and simply have a tax cut for working families, because you wanted the tax cut for estates of $5 million. Strike it from the bill, show us that you want only tax cuts for working families. If not, admit to what this game is all about.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. I yield myself 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, you have heard a great deal of demagoging during the past few days from the President, from congressional Democrats, and from the Treasury Department, a lot of bogus claims about our tax package. We are here this evening to bring you the truth about the Republican tax package. The bottom line is this: American families will be better off next year under our tax package than they are today. Our tax relief package is the biggest tax cut for middle-income families in more than a decade.

Mr. President, I agree with the President of the United States when he says that the tax increase of 1993 was a mistake—the largest tax increase in the history of this country. I would hope that there would be bipartisan support for our tax cut, in view of the President's message.

Under our reform, more than 98 percent of all U.S. households will receive either a tax cut or no tax increase. And this includes our reforms to the earned income tax, the $500 per child credit, and the marriage penalty relief in the Senate Republican bill. Those are the facts.

I challenge the Administration and Congressional Democrats to prove their assertion that 51 percent of all taxpayers would receive a tax increase under our bill. This assertion has no basis in fact, and it seriously strains the credibility of the Treasury Department. The Joint Tax Committee analysis, released today, shows that the facts are on our side. Republicans are focusing the earned income credit on the working poor with children—the people for whom it was originally intended. We give a tax cut to most families that pay income tax, and we preserve the EIC for those who need it the most. The indisputable fact is that more than 98 percent of all U.S. households will either receive a tax cut or have no tax increase with the Senate Republican bill.

The earned income credit program started in 1975 in an environment focused on reforming welfare policies for families with dependent children. Senator Long was a driving force behind the establishment of the earned income credit program, and this program provided cash assistance to working low-income families with children. The Finance Committee report on the Tax Reduction Act of 1975 stated that the program should be of importance in inducing individuals with families receiving Federal assistance to support themselves. There is no doubt that since the inception of the earned income credit, its focus has been on hard-working, low-income families with children.

In 1993, the program strayed from its original intent of helping working families with children, when President Clinton expanded the program to include childless, able-bodied working adults. My colleagues across the aisle often point out that President Reagan supported the program. Yet, when President Reagan lauded the earned income credit, the program only covered working parents of children and cost about $2 billion in 1986.

Today, the program makes payments to childless adults, and its costs have skyrocketed to over $20 billion. The reforms of the earned income credit contained in the Republican Senate bill will return the program to its original goals, those lauded by Senator Long and President Reagan, of a welfare program focused on low-income working families with children.

My colleagues across the aisle should realize that this will help children. Under our bill, the earned income credit will be available only to individuals who are eligible to work in the United States. Illegal aliens will no longer benefit at the expense of hard-working taxpayers.

Make no mistake about it, Mr. President, EIC is a cash transfer program, a welfare program, administered through the Tax Code, rather than through a Federal agency like the Department of Labor. If Congress were to reduce the amounts paid to food stamps, no one would say that Congress is raising taxes. Changes to the EIC are the same as changes to the Food Stamp Program. We are not raising taxes on EIC recipients.

The Democrats are arguing that changes to the EIC will raise people's taxes. In response to these concerns, I have asked the Joint Committee on Taxation to perform a detailed analysis of the Senate proposal to reform the EIC. This information is now available, and I released it earlier today to the public.

Mr. President, the purpose of the changes in EIC is to focus the program on the working poor with children. We do make four policy changes. We eliminate any EIC payment for individuals with no children. As I indicated, this program was intended to help families with children, and that should continue to be the policy of this program. We also prevent illegal aliens from obtaining this benefit. We also provide that outside income should be considered in determining whether or not one is eligible for the EIC. Why is tax-free interest not considered in determining eligibility? Why is tax-free Social Security or pensions not considered in determining eligibility for the earned income credit? Fourth, we take steps to eliminate the fraud and abuse in this program. Unfortunately, this program has had deplorable rates of fraud and abuse, as high as 30 to 40 percent a year. Recently, there has been, hopefully, some improvement in that. But it is estimated that it could still be as high as 20 percent. People are outraged and shocked with the waste, fraud, and abuse in food stamps or AFDC, but they only amount to 5 to 6 percent. In this program—the EIC—it amounts to as high as 20 to 30 percent.

Now, some Democrats have claimed the EIC reform results in those in the lower-income brackets—51 percent or less—paying higher taxes. That is totally false, inaccurate, and misleading. As I mentioned, I recently wrote the Joint Committee on Taxation to answer a number of questions. I pointed out that on Thursday, October 19, 1995, an article appeared in the Wall Street Journal entitled "Tax Analysis Now Shows GOP Package Would Mean Increase For Half the Payers."

Is there any validity to the assertion that the Senate Finance Committee revenue recommendations would result in a tax increase for one-half of all households?

In responding to this question, please consider the impact of the earned income credit reforms approved by the Senate Finance Committee in a separate markup last September.

We received the answer, and the answer says, "No factual basis exists for the assertion, since retracted, contained in the Wall Street Journal of last week asserting that one half of all households would experience a tax increase under the Senate Finance Committee revenue recommendations."

Even if one were to include the effects of the EIC reforms previously approved by the Senate Finance Committee, our analysis indicates that less than 1.5 percent—let me repeat that, 1.5 percent—of all households would experience an income tax increase.

I think that shows the falseness of the claim that 50 percent of the American families would suffer a tax increase because of this package we are considering today.

Now, during the Senate Finance Committee's markup of revenue recommendations on October 18-19, 1995, various assertions were made with respect to the impact of the EIC reforms previously approved by the committee.

I asked the Joint Committee on Taxation to address the following questions: Would any households receiving an EIC today pay more income taxes under the combined efforts of the Senate EIC reform, $500 per child credit, and marriage penalty relief? If so, provide how many households will be impacted in this manner and explain why.

The answer is that, "with respect to the Senate Finance Committee's previously approved EIC reform, our analysis of the combined effects of the Senate Finance Committee EIC reforms, the $500 child credit, and marriage penalty relief for 1996 indicate that less than 1.5 percent of all households will have an income tax increase as a result of the EIC reforms."

Would families with children who are currently eligible for the maximum EIC—that is, families with earnings under $12,000 —continue to receive in future years at least as much EIC as they now receive?

Again, the answer is, "families who are currently eligible for the maximum EIC with children and having adjusted gross income under $12,000 will receive an even larger EIC next year and thereafter. For example, the maximum EIC for a family with one child will increase from $2,094 in 1995 to $2,156 in 1996. The maximum EIC for a family with two or more children will increase from $3,110 in 1995 to $3,208 in 1996."

This is illustrated here on the chart. It shows, for example, that a family with children that has income of $10,000 would receive this year $3,110; that would go up to $3,208 in 1996. The same is true for a family with children that has income of $15,000. This year they would get $2,360; that would rise to $2,488 in 1996. Not only would they continue to get EIC, but it would continue to increase.

Mr. President, let me just again emphasize that the claim that people with incomes below $30,000 would have a tax increase is totally false. First, what the Democrats are doing is calling a reduced welfare check a tax increase.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator is expired.

Mr. ROTH. I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Second, if someone receives a check from the Government for $50 in 1995, and then in 1996 under our reforms receives a check for $75, that is $25 higher. Republicans and most people would call that a bigger check from the Government. But the people on the other side of the aisle call it a tax increase if the person was supposed to receive a check for $100 in 1996.

What we are doing is slowing the rate of growth of this program. In the last 10 years this program has grown something like 1,000 to 1,200 percent. The tax credit which was 14 percent plus 5 years ago is now 36 percent.

What we are trying to do is to slow down the rate of growth so that we can balance the budget.

Now, I listened, Mr. President, with great interest to my Democratic colleagues' description of what we are doing. People are saying that they do not like the tax package. They make fun of the changes in the estate taxes. Just let me say, as I have gone around back home and talked to the family farmer or to the owner of a family farm, as I talk to the owner of a small business, one of their greatest concerns is that they are not going to be able to turn over that farm or that business to their children.

What we are seeking to do in our changes in the estate taxes is to make that possible, make it possible for the family farm to continue as it has in the past, or to make it possible for the entrepreneur who is successful in creating a small business to leave it to his children.

We think our package is a humane package. We are proud of the fact that it means tax cuts for the American people. We agree with President Clinton when he says that the big tax increase of 1993 was too high.

Mr. President, I yield back the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, at the outset of the comments of the Senator from Delaware, he talked about telling the truth versus bogus claims. Then he refers to a Joint Taxation Committee study to try to refute some comments made by the Senator from New Jersey.

If we want to talk about bogus claims, the Joint Taxation Committee—which I might add is chaired by the majority party —sends a statement saying there is no linkage and no increase, but refers only to income tax.

Here you have another sleight-of-hand, bogus effort to avoid the reality, the same way the reality is being avoided right now with the debate on the thousands of pages that takes place during the World Series. It is a great way of avoiding accountability.

The fact is that the earned income tax credit is a credit not just against income tax but also against the payroll tax. The Joint Taxation Committee says nothing about the payroll tax impact. So, in effect, it is another sleight of hand.

If you want to talk about bogus—you just heard the chairman of the committee say, Mr. President, that we are going to slow down the rate of growth of the program.

What is the program? The program is a tax cut for working poor—by his own admission—when what he has come to the floor and said is we will slow down the capacity of working poor Americans to participate because we are not going to give as much of a tax cut to them. It is that simple. This is not complicated. We are going to slow down the rate of growth in the tax cut for working poor Americans, but we are going to increase the tax break for people who have it already in America. That is what this is all about.

If you happen to have a $5 million estate, you are going to get a $1.7 million tax break. But if are a working poor person—and I have 194,000 families in Massachusetts that will be affected by the cut in this program, 194,000 families in Massachusetts are going to pay $370 more in taxes because they want to slow down the rate of growth in the program. That may not be a lot to the person who has a $5 million estate, but let me tell you something, for somebody who is working, working, working—which is what we all talk about here—to get off of welfare and make it, $370 is a lot of money. People count those nickels and dimes when they are in that position. It is whether or not they are riding on the T.

There was a front-page story in the New York Times, I think last Monday. It talked about the impact of the earned income tax credit on working people. Here was a woman in New York City who, because she got the tax credit for working, was able to cut back on her apartment rent. She went back and got rid of a $700 rent, went down to a $400 rent so she could add it to the money that she got from the earned income tax credit. Do you know what she did? She bought herself a 15-year-old car so she could drive outside of the area that is served by public transportation so she could get a better job that earned more money. And that is exactly what she did. She broke out of poverty by making hard choices because she had the earned income tax credit.

Our friends are coming along here. They are giving people who earn $300,000 a very nice, fat break. And they are taking away from the people who earn $30,000 or less.

There is no way for them to cut it any other way. Is there some fraud in the program? Yes, there is some fraud in the program. Can we cure that without reducing the program for eligible people? Sure we could. But that is not what they are choosing to do. They are going to throw everybody in the pot of fraud.

I keep hearing about illegal immigrants. That is a nice hot button in America now. I do not know many people who think illegal immigrants ought to be getting a lot. But that has now entered into this debate. That is not what we are talking about here.

It just is beyond comprehension that in this country we are going to play such games with definitions and reality when everybody understands what the reduction means.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I really hope we are going to have a better sense of fairness here than is being exhibited in this approach to people who are working and trying to break out of the cycle of poverty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, if I might just yield myself 1 minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. ROTH. The one question we asked of the Joint Tax Committee is:

Would families with children living below the poverty line continue to receive an EIC in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes?

And the answer is that:

Families living at or near the poverty line, one-child families with earnings under $12,500 and two-child families with earnings under $15,500, would continue to receive an EIC in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes, including both employee and employer shares.

So the answer is that EIC more than offsets the payroll and other taxes of the family.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BRADLEY. Will the Senator yield at that point for a question?

Mr. ROTH. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. The Senator said—would the Senator read again, once again, what was it the Joint Tax Committee said about the various taxes that were offset?

Mr. ROTH. The question was:

Would families with children living below the poverty line continue to receive an EIC in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes?

And the answer is:

Families living at or near the poverty line, one-child families with earnings under $12,500 and two-child families with earnings under $15,000, would continue to receive an EIC in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes, employee-employer shares.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, no one disputes what the Senator has just said. EIC is available for families under to $28,000. He is saying at the same time this is nothing but a welfare program. He is saying, fine, we will keep the welfare part of this. But if you start to make it a little bit—sorry. We will not offset your payroll taxes.

I mean, that is not an answer to the problem that we posed. Yes, they posed it so that if you have poverty and you are right at the poverty level and you have family now, you have kids—not if you are single and poor, but if you have kids, then, yes, it will offset the Social Security earned income. Of course, you do not pay a whole lot of income taxes in poverty. You pay virtually no income tax when you are in poverty.

So you only have Social Security. So the earned income would offset Social Security in poverty. But not at $28,000. Not when the family starts to make a little money. Not when they are making $20,000, $25,000, $28,000, $29,000. Not there, no, no, no. That way, you pay more taxes. Welcome to the middle class, the Republican middle class.

You are middle class. You begin to make it? Pay more taxes. If you have that estate of $5 million, you get a $1.7 million tax cut. That is the story here. There is no other story. It has not been refuted. A 3-year tax cut in 1993 for working families? Republicans say do not give them that third year. Do not give them that third year of tax cut.

Pro-family? Pro-growth? Hardly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BROWN). The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, how much remains on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 10 minutes and 8 seconds remaining.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I would like to answer my colleague from New Jersey. He said, "What about a family that makes $28,000." Under current law they have a great big earned income tax credit of $116. But, look out, they pay income taxes of $1,665.

Under our proposal they are going to get a $1,000 tax cut. Under the proposal of the Senator from New Jersey, they get $165. My figures calculate they come out better by $835, under our proposal. And that is only dealing with the tax credit for children. It does not include the fact we are reducing the marriage penalty, so that gives them another $100, I will just tell my colleague from Massachusetts said you did not calculate the fact that you are offsetting payroll taxes.

My friend is wrong.

Mr. KERRY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. NICKLES. He will not yield.

Mr. KERRY. Will he yield for a correction?

Mr. NICKLES. I will not. I want to answer a couple of allegations that were made. When somebody said you did not refute it, I want to refute a couple of them.

Mr. KERRY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. NICKLES. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is advised that the request should be made through the Chair, when addressing another Member.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, a couple of statements were made that the Republicans do not know that the EIC is used to offset payroll costs. That is wrong. This program not only offsets income taxes and payroll taxes, in most cases it offsets them and gives a check back.

In looking at incomes of less than $15,000—my colleague from New Jersey is right—in most cases, income tax liability is zero. But this not only offsets income tax, but it also offsets the so-called FICA, or payroll taxes.

Does it offset what an individual pays? That is 7.65 percent of their payroll. Yes, but it also offsets what the employer pays. That is 15.3 percent.

So not only does it offset all payroll taxes, but it offsets it them by 233 percent.

This is a program that is writing out checks. This is a program, Mr. President, that will cost $23 billion this year, $3 billion of it offsetting taxes, and $20 billion were cash payments—Uncle Sam writing checks. This cash outlay program now exceeds the cost of Aid for Families with Dependent Children, a program that costs $18 billion. This program costs $20 billion.

Families making $25,000 pay income taxes. For families that are paying income taxes, we give a tax cut. If they have children, we give $500 per child. That is pretty easy to figure. You have two children. That is $1,000. If they have four, that is $2,000. So our tax cut is very family friendly and very positive.

I want to mention some of the reforms that we make on EITC because they are long overdue, and they are part of our overall budget plan. We do have a budget. We have a budget that is balanced. President Clinton's budget is not balanced. We had a vote on it, thanks to my colleague from Pennsylvania. His budget is not balanced. We use the Congressional Budget Office for estimating purposes. He said he was going to use the Congressional Budget Office, and they say at the end of 7 years his budget has a deficit of $210 billion. At the 7 years, our budget has a $13 billion surplus.

We will have a balanced budget. President Clinton does not have one, certainly not by using the Congressional Budget Office. My colleagues on the Democrat side do not have one. They disowned the President's budget. They do not have their own budget. It is nonexistent.

Mr. SANTORUM. Will the Senator from Oklahoma yield for a question just so I understand the point he just made? It is an interesting point. I am not too sure I was fully aware of it. What the Senator is suggesting is that the earned income tax credit for low-income Americans actually pays out money in excess of all their Federal tax obligations. Is that correct?

Mr. NICKLES. That is correct.

Mr. SANTORUM. The new definition of what is a tax increase is when the Federal Government does not pay out more money to you, and you already do not pay, that is a tax increase. So if you are entitled to get more welfare—let us call it what it is. It is a welfare check. It is a check not to offset taxes, but it is a cash payment to families or to individuals. If you were expected to get more money, then by not giving them more money, we are giving them a tax increase even though they do not pay taxes.

Mr. NICKLES. The Senator is exactly right.

Mr. SANTORUM. That is an amazing statement. How can anyone call not getting more money from the Federal Government when you pay no taxes a tax increase?

Mr. NICKLES. I appreciate the statement.

Mr. SANTORUM. I would love the Senator from New Jersey—I know he is a Rhodes scholar—but redefine for me, please, how someone who does not pay taxes——

Mr. NICKLES. I say to my colleague that I have the floor.

Mr. SANTORUM. On his time, I would love to have him answer that question.

Mr. NICKLES. I only have 6 minutes. I have several points that I want to make. The point being when someone says they are offsetting FICA, the amount not only offsets FICA, but 200 percent, actually 235 percent of FICA, and that includes employer and employee. The employees actually only pay half of that amount. In reality, it is about four and a half times what an employee pays on FICA.

The cost of this program is exploding—my colleague from New Jersey said he knows the Senator is going to stand up and show how this program has exploded. I grinned at him because I am. This program cost less than $2 billion in 1985; in 1986, less than $2 billion. Today the program costs $23 billion. That is 11 times what it cost in 1986.

This is an entitlement program. What is the definition of an "entitlement" program? It is when you pass a law under which, if you met certain criteria, you are going to get a check. That is what the EITC is. It is a cash payment program—$23 billion in payments.

Actually, I will give the exact figure. In 1995, the figure is $23.7 billion, over $20 billion of it is a cash outlay with Uncle Sam writing checks—not reducing somebody's cash income taxes and/or payroll taxes on a monthly basis. It is Uncle Sam, in 99 percent of the cases, writing a check once a year, a cash outlay program that I mentioned before which exceeds Aid for Families with Dependent Children. AFDC is paid out in a monthly basis to help low-income families. This is a lump-sum payment that is paid out at the end of the year at a cost of $20 billion.

This program was lauded by President Reagan and others when it was a $2 billion program and when the maximum benefits were $435. The maximum benefit in 1985 was $550. By 1990, it had increased to $953. It was actually $1,500 in 1992, and President Clinton doubled it again. It went up to $3,110.

So we are talking about a program, if you have two or more children, where your maximum benefit went from $500 to over $3,000.

Some people said these Republicans have just slashed this program, and people are going to receive less. I saw a program on CBS tonight, they interviewed a woman who had a couple of kids. She had a couple of jobs. I compliment her. They made her think that she was going to get less money than she got this year. The facts are, if she is getting $3,110 this year, next year she gets over $3,200, and the next year she gets over $3,300. Under our proposal the benefit rises from $3,110 to $3,888, an increase of over $700 in the next 7 years.

So we did not freeze this program. We did not cut it. We do say some people should not be eligible because we found hundreds of thousands of people that make over $30,000 a year who are qualifying for it. They should not be. We found out that illegal aliens are receiving benefits, and they should not. So we eliminate them.

Frankly, we agree with Senator Russell Long that we should drop the benefit for individuals without children. This program was always formulated with the idea of helping individuals and families with children.

We are reforming the system. We are trying to target the assistance to those people who really need it. But then we allow the system to grow. That is my point. It really is bothersome to have individuals stand up and say, you are increasing somebody's taxes when I know what the facts are. I will read the figures. If you have two or more children, the maximum benefit today is $3,110. The maximum benefit next year is $3,208. The maximum benefit the next year is $3,312. And, again, it increases over $100 per year to the maximum benefit. In the year 2002, it is $3,888, a significant increase every single year. It grows with inflation.

So how can people say, "Well, you are increasing taxes"? It does not make sense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. NICKLES. Has all time expired on our side on this amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. NICKLES. I will wait until my colleague from New Jersey concludes. At that point in time, I will send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 5 minutes, 20 seconds remaining.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, the assertions by the other side that the child credit is more generous than the earned income tax credit for families with children at all income levels bewilders me. I have four kids. I make $15,000 a year. I have a very tiny income tax liability, very tiny. The child credit is not refundable. I get no benefit at all from the child credit—zero. I lose about $3,500 in benefits with the loss in the EITC at $28,000.

The Senator picks the absolute perfect number. Why? Because the earned income tax credit loses its value the higher the income level. So when it gets to $28,000, it is not worth anything. At that point, clearly the child credit is more valuable. That is not policy. That is mathematics.

Then the issue of—well, the chart that the Senator had with the growth of the EITC, it grows because we are giving them bigger tax cuts. That is why it grows. So you put that chart up, and you see the bars go higher and higher. That means a bigger tax cut for families earning under $28,000 a year. If you do not want a tax cut, then you want to support the program that would curtail this. Deny the third year of the tax cut. That is what you are saying essentially.

Basically, the tax cut for working families was put in in 1993. It was phased in over 3 years and the other side is saying do not give the third year.

That is why it grows. Once you get to the next year, it is flat because the tax cuts will have been provided. There will be no more tax cut in the fourth year. It is not some kind of conspiracy. It is mathematics. You give a bigger tax cut, you lose more revenue. We chose to give a big tax cut to offset Social Security, to offset income taxes for working families. And you know what. There are a lot of provisions in the Tax Code that say you get a credit against income. They are largely corporate. The other side is not calling that welfare. That is not welfare. But somehow when it offsets the income of a working family with kids, that is welfare.

Mr. President, it is beyond me; 78 percent of the earned income tax credit goes to offset Social Security and income tax. The other portion is a refundable credit to those families making $13,000, $14,000 a year who otherwise would not get anything.

The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania is correct. If you want to give those families something because they are working, but they do not pay any income tax and they are at a low enough income, they do not pay enough Social Security tax, you have to make it refundable and then you have to appropriate the money.

That is what we do here. And this vast amount of money that is appropriated, as the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma says, is appropriated because there is not a way to offset the Social Security taxes. It is pretty simple. It is not complicated. And it boils down to whether you want to give a break to families with children or whether you do not.

There is the big deal about families that do not have children. We do not want to give them anything. If you are making $16,000, $17,000 a year, you do not have any kids, somehow or another you do not get anything here. Forget it. You are not worth it. You are struggling. You are working hard. But somehow you do not qualify for this. In fact, we do not care about it. We do not care what your Social Security taxes are. Somehow you are a nonentity.

We do not think that. We think that if you earn under $28,000 a year, you ought to get a break, particularly in a bill that gives $1.7 billion in relief for estate taxes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

AMENDMENT NO. 2958

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. NICKLES], for himself and Mr. BROWN, proposes an amendment numbered 2958 to the instructions of the BRADLEY motion to commit S. 1357 to Finance Committee:

Strike all after "Finance" and insert:

"With instructions to report the bill back to the Senate forthwith including a provision stating:

"The maximum earned income credit for a family with one child will increase from $2,094 in 1995 to $2,156 in 1996 and the maximum earned income credit for a family with two or more children will increase from $3,110 in 1995 to $3,208 in 1996.";

"And the effective date for section 7461, 'Earned income credit denied to individuals not authorized to be employed in the US', shall be moved to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1994."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. NICKLES addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, this is an amendment offered by myself and Senator BROWN that tried to clarify a couple things.

One, we want to state very clearly exactly what we did in the bill and that is an increase in the earned income credit for individuals with one child from $2,094 in 1995—that is present law—to $2,156 in 1996.

That is an increase of about—whatever the difference is—$60 some-odd, and an income credit for a family of 2 from $3,110, to $3,208. That is an increase of about $100—$98. So we make that very clear.

The second part of that is we say we want to deny benefits to illegal aliens and make the effective date December 31, 1994. Some people are shocked to find out that they were eligible. I was surprised. But I looked at a GAO report, and it said:

Illegal alien receipts. IRS expects more than 160,000 illegal aliens received the EIC in 1994.

We ought to stop that. Right now it is legal.

It says:

The Internal Revenue Code does not prohibit illegal aliens from receiving EIC if they meet prescribed eligibility requirements.

Well, they should be, and so let us make that illegal. If they are here illegally, why in the world should we be giving them a check, especially a check if you are talking about to the tune of $3,000. So let us tighten that up. That is a loophole that needs to be tightened. We need to tighten up loopholes.

Senator ROTH mentioned several. I compliment Senator ROTH because he has shown great courage and leadership in trying to tackle the fastest growing entitlement program in Government. No other program is growing as rapidly, as fast as the so-called EIC. No other program costs over 10 times as much as it did 10 years ago and continues to explode. So it needs to be reformed. And no other program that I know of has error rates and fraud rates at such astronomical levels as the EIC.

This is a GAO report that is dated March 1995: "Earned Income Credit Targeting to the Working Poor."

Well, we should target. I just read from a couple of their highlights. It says the IRS did a study in 1994 on electronic returns only. They said 29 percent of the returns received too much EIC, and 13 percent were judged to have received intentional errors. In other words, that is fraud. It also mentioned, it says that the most recent taxpayer compliance measured showed that about 42 percent of EIC recipients received too large a credit and about 32 percent were not able to show that they were entitled to any credit. One out of three in the comprehensive study were not able to show they were entitled to any credit. And that is about 34 percent of the total EIC.

What other program has a 34 percent failure rate, or 30 some-odd-percent error rate? This program does. And part of it is because the cost has just exploded. You have a program that grows at 10 times the rate it was just a few years ago, and you have a program where the maximum benefit is six times what it was 10 years ago, you realize you have a program that is rife with fraud and needs to be reformed. It has not been yet. The IRS is trying to tighten down around the edges, but they have not been totally successful. They may have reduced it somewhat, and I compliment them, but they have a long way to go if you have an error rate of 30, 40 percent. And so we need to make some changes. Senator ROTH has made many of those changes.

We say that we must count almost all income. We find hundred of thousands of people who receive benefits that make a lot more than the income eligibility called for, people making a lot more than $30,000, some making more than $50,000. They have interest income that is tax free. It does not count toward their income eligibility and therefore they can continue receiving EIC benefits.

Mr. President, we need to make some reforms and we need to make clear that we want to target these benefits to those people who are truly needy. That is the kind of reforms that we are making today.

I want to answer my colleague from New Jersey. He said, what about the—maybe I could get his attention. My friend from New Jersey asked about a couple that made $15,000. Well, in 1995, they received an EIC of $2,360. In 1996, under our reform proposal, they are going to have an EIC of $2,488. That is a $128 increase.

Now, my colleague from New Jersey would like that increase to be $400, but we have it increased by $128. They have an increase. And, again, they did not pay any income taxes. They are getting a return in excess, or at least 100 percent of all their FICA taxes, including what their employer paid, and we are giving them $100 more than they had last year. That is not a tax increase.

My colleague from Pennsylvania said, "Well, how in the world can you call something a tax increase if you are giving somebody $3,000, and next year you are going to give them $3,200? How can you call that a tax increase?"

Well, let us just take, for example, that you have a rich uncle. The rich uncle wants to encourage certain behavior, saying if you work a little bit, he is going to give you a bonus. If you work about $10,000 or $12,000 worth, he is going to give you a $3,000 bonus because he wants you to work. Is that not nice?

The uncle says, "I'm going to give you $3,000. Next year I am planning to give you $3,500." But your uncle's board of directors said you cannot afford that, you are breaking the bank. So instead, they gave you $3,000 next year—actually $3,100 next year instead of giving you $3,500. "We cannot afford it. Let's give him $3,200. Let's keep it to a more moderate growth. Give him an increase, $100, but not $400 or $500. Don't do that; the program is growing too fast. But it is a bonus."

It does not have anything to do with taxes. This is far in excess of any tax liability, either FICA or income tax. That recipient said, "You increased my tax base. I hoped I was going to get more money." I do not think so.

This body is going to show, I believe, that we have the courage to curtail the growth of Medicare, which is a very popular entitlement program. And we are going to have that program grow about 7 percent per year. We have a program here that continues to grow. The total growth in the EIC program is going to grow about 10 percent over the next few years. The out-of-pocket costs in fiscal year 1995 are about $20 billion. It will be about $23 billion in the year 2002. That is an increase of 15 percent in 7 years.

That is an increase in outlays, so the program grows. It does not grow as fast as some people would like. President Clinton and others would like it to grow up to $30 billion. Well, frankly, we cannot afford that. We can never balance the budget if we do not have the courage to at least control the growth of entitlement programs. And this is the fastest, most fraudulent entitlement program in Government.

We need to curtail its growth. That is what we are trying to do. We allow the EIC benefits to go up for individuals with two or more children. They do not grow as fast as some people would like. President Clinton and others would like it to grow faster. We cannot afford it. So we allow the benefit to go up by over $100 a year.

For individuals who have one child, we make no change. Individuals that have one child get the exact same benefit as they get under present law, under our proposal or President Clinton's proposal. We did not make a change. We did eliminate the benefits for individuals without children.

And I think about that. I have kids that could qualify. Other people do. We are expanding eligibility by several million people. How much money are we talking about? We are talking about $308, I think, this year, giving that benefit to lots of people. And you say, "Why do you care about that? That is a small amount of money."

Well, look at what this program cost a few years ago. The maximum payment on families with two or more children was $500 in 1985. Today, 10 years later, it is $3,000. What is the benefit going to be for that individual that happens to be $300 or $400 today? Ten years from now maybe it is $3,000. We will have a program again that continues to escalate.

This program, Russell Long mentioned it. I have an article in which he states this program should not have been expanded. Russell Long was one of the fathers of this program. He said it should not have been expanded for individuals without children.

I might mention in the 1993 tax bill, there was no Republican that voted for it, and when it passed the Senate it did not have a benefit for individuals without children. That was added on in the House. And, unfortunately, the Senate concurred with the House in conference. But it was not in the bill that passed in the Finance Committee in the Senate nor in the bill that passed on the floor of the Senate. It was added in conference. That was a mistake. It was a massive expansion of entitlement, added entitlement to several million people.

So we changed that. We eliminate illegal aliens. And we say we should count almost all income. You should count tax-exempt interest as far as determining who is eligible for this program. You should count other income in determining who is eligible. We allow eligibility, and the amount of income to determine eligibility, to increase.

Right now you qualify for this program if you have income up to $26,673. Some people say, "You really cut that back." No. The facts are, under our proposal, by the year 2002 you can have income up to $29,200 and qualify.

Now, that does not grow quite as fast as President Clinton would like for it to. He allows people to receive the benefit if they have income equal to $34,600. Let us think about that. Are we going to have Uncle Sam writing checks—remember, 85 percent of this program is Uncle Sam writing a check, not reducing anybody's taxes, but writing checks—for families that have incomes less than $34,000. You are going to be talking about a majority of American families. And old Uncle Sam is going to be paying people. So we use this income for a massive income redistribution program.

Contrast that to what we are trying to do on the Republican side. We are saying, "No. We are going to give a tax cut for families, a tax cut for people who pay taxes," not just come up with schemes to have a negative income tax and have Uncle Sam write big checks at the end of the year. No. We are going to try to reduce all families paying taxes, reduce their taxes so they can take the tax reduction on a monthly basis and keep more of their own money. That is what we are talking about doing. That is what is fair.

Then my colleague from New Jersey, or one of my colleagues, was denigrating the fact that we made some changes on the inheritance tax, said how terrible that was. Maybe they should come into my State and talk to some of the members of the Oklahoma Farm Bureau or Farmers Union or some of the wheat growers, because you have a situation where inflation has built up the value of some of these farms and ranches, estates, machine shops, whatever, to say they are worth something.

Uncle Sam comes in and says, "We want to—" Somebody dies. They want to pass the property on to their family, and Uncle Sam says, "Well, we want 18 percent of it or we want 55 percent of it." That makes it very difficult to pass on to succeeding generations.

So what did we do? Well, we said for a family estate, let us increase right now the exemption from $600,000 and increase that over 6 years to $750,000. We increased that amount $25,000 per year. And then we also say if it is a family-held business, we want to encourage that. We happen to be profamily, and we happen to be probusiness. We want to encourage family-owned corporations, whether it is a janitor service or whether it is a car dealership or whether it is an insurance company. We want to encourage family ownership, whether it is a farm or a ranch or a dairy operation. We want to encourage that.

We say, if they are going to pass the property on to their own heirs, they should be able to have a better deal. So we raise that estate exemption up to $1.5 million. And we cut the rate down for those between $1.5 million and $5 million so they can keep it in the family and not have to sell it, not have to sell a family business just to pay an inheritance tax. I think that is a fair and a good idea.

I think that is profamily and that is going to encourage growth and encourage a father, instead of saying, "Well, I might as well spend the money because I cannot pass it on. I do not want to give it to Uncle Sam," we want to encourage people to build up businesses, to expand, to hire more people, to create more jobs, and give that to their children, and let their children build it up and be second, third, fourth, fifth generations in some of these family-owned operations or businesses.

Now, we limit it really to the lower size family operations. We did not help the people that have the very largest estates. But I think we were very family friendly. And I think this entire tax bill is very family friendly. And again I want to compliment the chairman for crafting, I think, a very good, targeted approach, one that has 70-some-odd percent—three-fourths of this package is very family friendly. If you look at the tax credits for children, you look at the gradual reductions in the marriage penalty, you look at the estate tax exemptions that we make for family-owned farms and ranches and businesses, this is a very family friendly tax bill, probably the most profamily bill that Congress has ever seen.

I would encourage my colleagues to support it and to reject those who say we should not make any reduction whatsoever in the growth of EIC, which is the fastest growing, most fraudulent program that we have in Government today.

MORNING BUSINESS

(During today's session of the Senate, the following morning business was transacted.)

TARGETED JOBS TAX CREDIT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I want to ruminate for a few minutes about the Work Opportunities Tax Credit, now called the WOTC, which is the substitute for the Targeted Jobs Tax Credit, which expired at the end of last year.

Mr. President, the TJTC had some problems, but let me tell you, it got the job done. It encouraged employers to put kids and young adults to work. Youth who probably would not have gotten their first job but for TJTC.

I have a letter, Mr. President, from a good friend of mine in Montana. W.E. Hainline operates 4 B'S Restaurants across Montana and several other Western states. They serve good food and employ a lot of young adults.

Bill has had a lot of experience in the TJTC area. In fact, the 4 B'S is nationally recognized as a leader when it comes to hiring disadvantaged and handicapped youth, many of whom had their first job with 4 B's.

Bill can tell you about these kids and how they went on to other jobs and to success in many fields. In fact, that is what TJTC was about, and what we want to achieve with WOTC—we want to move kids off of the streets, off of welfare and we want to keep them out of the criminal justice system.

Bill is concerned, as am I Mr. President, that the WOTC is currently contained in the Reconciliation Bill before us, will not do the job. Bill notes in his letter that WOTC:

As written, virtually eliminates most companies from participating in [WOTC] by ignoring the youth group (18 to 24 year olds) not located in an empowerment Zone.

Mr. President, I joined with Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN last week in an amendment that would have expanded WOTC to create two new categories of youths which employers could hire under WOTC: individuals 18 through 24 receiving or living with families on food stamps; individuals 18 through 24 who are non-custodial parents of a child residing in a family receiving AFDC or successor programs; and individuals 18 through 24 who are receiving Supplemental Security Income.

Senator MOSELEY-BRAUN and I are working with Joint Tax to find the money to include these youths in WOTC.

Mr. President, as always, Bill Hainline hits the nail on the head. I request that his letter to me be printed in the RECORD. Bill has the credentials. He has used the TJTC program. He knows what it takes to make it work. I would encourage my colleagues to read their letter and to heed what he has to say. Replacing TJTC with WOTC will accomplish little if employers, like Bill, do not utilize the WOTC program.

If that happens, kids are the big losers.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RESTAURANTS, INC.,
Missoula, MT, October 17, 1995.

Hon. MAX BAUCUS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC:

I understand that the Senate Finance Committee is proposing a new TJTC bill, which was similar to the one developed by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Their bill, as written, virtually eliminates most companies from participating in the new program by ignoring the youth group (18 to 24 year olds) not located in an empowerment zone, not to mention the increased retention period from 120 hours to 500 hours.

Those two changes would preclude most Montana companies from participating in the proposed program as there are no designated empowerment zones in our state that I am aware of, nor would the proposed tax incentive offset the expense of tracking an eligible employee for 400 hours. After all, the objective of the program is to give people on government assistance, job training to take advantage of all employment opportunities. Why should the initial employer train those types of people for other employers to receive the tax credit?

In my opinion, the proposed bill eliminates all employers, not located in an empowerment zone, from participating in the new program. The cost of identifying new hires eligible under the remaining categories, and the expense of tracking those eligible for 500 hours, would far exceed the tax benefits proposed.

The only way our company could effectively participate in the new program would be with the inclusion of 18 to 24 year olds that were "means tested", and the retention period is lowered to either 200 or 250 hours.

The above changes to the program would allow all Montana employers to participate equally with large city employers and insure that all people, with employment barriers, have an equal opportunity to seek employment for any profession they choose.

I would greatly appreciate you informing me if these changes can be effected.

Sincerely,

W.E. HAINLINE,
President.

THE SUMMIT BETWEEN PRESIDENT CLINTON AND CHINA'S PRESIDENT JIANG ZEMIN

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I rise today to call attention to yesterday's summit meeting between President Clinton and Chinese President Jiang Zemin in New York.

Last summer, relations between the two countries fell rapidly and unexpectedly to their lowest point since the Tiananmen massacre, largely over the visit of Taiwan President Lee Teng-hui to Cornell University, his alma mater. Most of us in the Senate, myself included, supported that visit as a private one for a distinguished alum. I continue to believe that the Chinese leadership in Beijing overreacted to the visit and allowed the bilateral relationship to unravel unnecessarily. I was sorry that Beijing chose to react to Lee's visit by withdrawing the Chinese ambassador to the United States, suspending ongoing bilateral discussions on proliferation, canceling visits of United States officials to China and visits of Chinese officials to the United States, and by canceling bilateral discussions with Taiwan. But now, after several months of discord, it appears we have the opportunity to bring some stability back to the relationship and I support the President's decision to hold this summit in New York.

I did not believe that this summit meeting would produce a significant breakthrough on any of the issues with which we continue to disagree with Beijing, including Tibet, ballistic missile proliferation, nuclear testing, suppression of dissent in China, and trade issues. It did not. Recent press reports state that Chinese leaders had demanded certain concessions from the United States, such as written assurances that members of Taiwan's top leadership will never again be granted a visa to the United States or that the United States will refrain from criticism of China's human rights record in international fora. The administration rightly gave no such assurances. These are important policy issues, with significant domestic and international ramifications for both governments. Both governments seem convinced that the other is being unreasonable and obstinate. It is unrealistic to expect any major accords could have come under current circumstances.

This is an unfortunate state of affairs between two of the world's most influential countries and hopefully a passing one. But for the time being we must focus on keeping the relationship steady and effective. That is why a summit meeting between the two presidents was so important at this time. The United States raised all of the issues that we believe to be important and let the Chinese leadership know our commitment to them, and we should continue to do so. But it was also right to listen to President Jiang's concerns and to strive for mutual understanding, if not mutual agreement. Those who criticize our President for failing to win major concessions likely fail to recognize the realities of the current relationship and the necessity of strengthening contacts at all levels that will outlast this period and carry forward a stronger relationship in the future. I commend the President for holding the summit yesterday and hope that this meeting will mark the beginning of a more solid and productive period of United States—China relations.

THE BAD DEBT BOXSCORE

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, before discussing today's bad news about the Federal debt, how about another go, as the British put it, with our pop quiz. Remember? One question, one answer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). The Senator from Minnesota.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the motion by Senator BRADLEY. Let me start out by saying, last night I think we had a good technical discussion and an important policy discussion. I must say, I think all of my colleagues are enormously impressed with Senator BRADLEY's mastery of the material.

Mr. President, what I would like to do today in the 5 minutes that I have, is to talk about this vote before us in a slightly different context. I say to my colleague from Wisconsin, my good friend, I have been thinking about the first class I will teach again at the college or university, community college, or University of Minnesota. In this class, which I hope to teach in 7 years from now, the first lecture is going to be about this week. It is going to start out with a definition of politics, and I am going to say politics is, in part, about values and what we all care about, and we can have honest disagreements.

The second part of the lecture I am going to give when I go back to teaching is going to be titled: Who decides? Who is asked to sacrifice? And how do these decisions take place? That really summarizes this motion that the Senator from New Jersey has offered, which I am so proud to be a cosponsor of.

A question: Who decides that we are going to have $245 billion of tax giveaways to people already high-income and wealthy, least in need of those breaks? And whose parents, or whose children, go without adequate health care? It is that simple. Or, Mr. President—and this refers to some amendments that I will later on make sure that colleagues vote on—who decides that we are going to, essentially, leave untouched this area of corporate welfare, that if you have a $5 million estate, you are going to get a tax cut, as my colleague from New Jersey pointed out last night, to the tune of $1.7 million?

But at the same time that you have that kind of tax giveaway, at the same time you have special tax loopholes and breaks for oil companies, or insurance companies, or you have citizens who work abroad in other countries that do not have to pay any taxes on the first $70,000 they make, or special breaks for pharmaceutical companies and, at the same time, Mr. President—and there is no better example—a $5 million estate. How many people ever have that, and you get a $1.7 million tax break.

Who decides that we are going to have that kind of tax giveaway to the wealthiest of the wealthiest citizens in this country, and not those whose children go hungry and whose children are not able to afford a higher education?

In the lecture that I give, when I teach again, I am going to continue to raise these questions. I will ask the question: Who decides that we are going to raise taxes for more than 200,000 people in Minnesota, families in Minnesota, with incomes under $30,000 a year, hard-pressed people and, at the same time, we are going to let the one person in my State—or maybe two—with a $5 million estate get $1.7 million in a tax giveaway?

• This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a Member of the Senate on the floor.

We make choices here. and these are the questions: Who decides? Who benefits? Who is asked to sacrifice?

In my State of Minnesota. I say to my colleague from New Jersey. we have an interesting situation where back in 1991 we decided that we would have a 15-percent EITC at the State level, tied to the Federal EITC. So working families in Minnesota get an added benefit.

The final point in my lecture: How did this decision get made? I would tell you that what we have going on here in the U.S. Senate is deficit reduction based on the path of least political resistance, deficit reduction in inverse relationship to economic justice. If you have the big bucks. if you have a $5 million estate, you get the tax breaks. If you are low or moderate income, your taxes are raised. or you cannot afford health care. or you cannot afford to send your kid to college.

Mr. President, it is clear that the big givers are getting their way. The heavy hitters are getting their way. All these large financial institutions and corporations are not asked to tighten their belts at all. Mr. President, what we have here is decisionmaking. democracy for the few. not democracy for the many.

This motion brings back some fairness and justice to this process.

Mr. BRADLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the senior Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. KOHL. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I rise today as a strong supporter and original cosponsor of Senator BRADLEY's motion. It presents a straightforward tradeoff to the Senate. It says restore the tax credit for lower income working families in exchange for cutting some of the tax breaks available to healthy corporations.

Before I get into the arguments for this motion, I want to say a brief word on this budget, in general.

Mr. President, like many of my colleagues, I cannot agree with the priorities established in the budget bill before us today. But what I find more disturbing than the bill itself is the partisan and destructive direction the debate over this budget has taken.

We have polarized in extreme political positions firing slogans and half-truths at each other. The two parties agree on many basic principles that could underpin a balanced budget plan. There are billions of dollars and miles of middle ground between the Democratic and Republican budget battle stations. Yet we have chosen to stay locked in our traditional partisan positions.

I want to use the few minutes I have today to talk about the ample room for compromise in the current budget debate. I want to remind my colleagues about the principles that bring us together as public servants—rather than those that drive us apart into our partisan political camps.

First, we believe in balancing the budget. This is a year in which a majority of the Senators voted for a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution and a vast majority voted for a 7-year balanced budget plan. Whether we talk about 7 or 10 years, most of us agree it is time to stop adding to our national debt. Whether we cut defense or domestic programs, most of us agree that Government should spend less.

Second, we believe that the growth of spending on Medicare and Medicaid must be restrained and doing so will involve difficult cuts. I have heard no one deny that the aging of our population and out-of-control health care costs have put into jeopardy these two basic health care programs. I do not think anyone is seriously suggesting that we can continue to let them grow at their current rates.

How much we cut this year, how much we put back into Medicare and Medicaid, how we make those cuts are all legitimate items for debate. Whether cuts need to occur at all is not debatable.

Third, we believe that our economy needs to grow and grow in a manner that rewards families who choose work over welfare. A huge majority of this Senate just voted for a welfare bill—a bill included in the budget before us—that radically changes welfare into a flexible program that moves people into jobs. A majority of those who have served in this and past Congresses have support the earned income tax credit, a tax incentive for families that work. Encouraging work—rewarding work—supporting working families. These ideas are not Democratic or Republican. They are American.

On these three points of agreement alone, we could build a credible balanced budget plan. And if we did that, this Congress would be praised for its responsibility, its leadership, and its service.

Furthermore, producing a bipartisan budget plan—without partisan bickering, without vetoes, without shutting the government, without press conference—would respond to what people outside the beltway are demanding I strongly believe that Americans want to see us debate the budget, not use it to divide our country.

Americans are sickened by the hostile rhetoric, the blind partisanship, the misleading use of figures and facts. They are demanding some honesty, some comity, and some real attempts to craft a balanced budget that a huge majority of them and us can support.

That said, Mr. President, the budget before us is not the place to start a fruitful debate on balancing the budget. It has been written without the input of our party, the President, or any outside witnesses brought in for public hearings. It contains too many tradeoffs that I believe are unfair and unbalanced—and that I believe most Americans would believe are unfair and unbalanced.

Mr. President a report recently released by the Census Bureau showed the gap between our wealthiest families and low-income families growing to the widest point recorded since the Bureau began taking such measurements in 1967. That income disparity is a cancer that is eating away at economic productivity and the standard of living in this country. Any responsible balanced budget plan would take it into account and would certainly not make it worse.

The budget before us makes it worse. The bottom 51 percent of tax filers—those with incomes of less than $30,000—would be worse off under the Senate package than under current law, according to Joint Tax Committee data. Further, wealthy taxpayers—those with incomes above $200,000—would gain an average of $5,088 per taxpayer in the year 2000. How can I justify asking a sacrifice from so many while I myself would get a big tax break under this bill?

Mr. President, this basic unfairness—this basic unbalance—is the primary reason I will vote against this budget, and why I do not believe it can form the basis for the compromise we so sorely need. I can and will ask and stand for sacrifices for the common good as long as they are shared sacrifices. But I will not support a bill that imposes real pain on many to provide gain for a few.

Mr. President, I am afraid that we are missing an historic opportunity because of our focus on short-term political benefit. If we gave up our infatuation with sound bites and brinkmanship, we have the chance to pass a balanced budget, to undo the economic damage of the last decade. As this debate proceeds, I urge my colleagues on both sides to move toward the position most Americans have already taken: Stop tearing each other down and start building a future for this country with a bipartisan and fair balanced budget.

Mr. President, like many of my colleagues, I cannot agree with the priorities established in the budget bill before us today. But what I find more disturbing than the bill itself is the partisan and destructive direction the debate over this budget has taken. We have polarized in extreme political positions, firing slogans, and half-truths at each other. Americans are sick of the blind partisanship and misleading use of figures and facts. They are demanding some honesty, some cooperation, and some real attempts to craft a balanced budget that a huge majority of them and us can support.

That said, Mr. President, the budget before us is not the place to start a fruitful debate on balancing the budget. It has been written without the input of both parties, the President, or any outside witnesses brought in for public hearings. It contains too many tradeoffs that I believe are unfair and unabalanced—and that I believe most Americans would believe are unfair and unbalanced.

Mr. President, this basic unfairness—this basic unabalance—is the primary reason I will vote against this budget, and why I do not believe it can form the basis for the compromise we so sorely need. I can and will ask for sacrifices for the common good as long as they are shared sacrifices. But I will not support a bill that imposes real pain on many to provide gain for a few. I cannot justify asking for a sacrifice from so many when I, myself, would get a big tax break under this bill.

Our time is limited, so let me offer three brief arguments for the amendment on the earned income credit before us.

First, the amendment would make the balanced budget plan more fair. According to Joint Tax Committee data, the budget before us makes most taxpayers with incomes of $30,000 or less worse off than they are under current law. Compare that with the top 1 percent of taxpayers—those with incomes above $200,000—who would receive a tax break of an average of $5,088 under this budget plan.

The primary reason for this imbalance is the cut in the earned income tax credit [EIC]—the only tax break targeted to low-income working families.

No one here would claim that balancing the budget is easy or can be done without sacrifices by many people. However, how can we ask a majority of the taxpayers to accept a balanced budget plan in which they lose and a small, wealthy minority wins? That is not balanced, and, once it is fully understood, I do not believe it will be supported by most Americans.

Second, the amendment before us keeps a bipartisan promise we made to working families. The EIC was enacted during the Ford administration and supported by every President since then. The EIC represents a bipartisan commitment to keeping low-income working families with children above the poverty line. In short, the EIC makes work pays better than welfare.

I have heard almost every Member of this body talk about the importance of moving people from welfare to work. And we need to do that in a manner that is not bureaucratic and not burdensome to business. The EIC does this. If we cannot agree in this body to keep our promise to working families by preserving the EIC, I am afraid there is going to be very little we can agree on.

Finally, the amendment before us cuts fat without cutting muscle. Some have characterized the EIC as a program plagued by uncontrolled growth and fraud. If that were the case, we should certainly cut it back dramatically. But that is not the case.

Only 5 percent of the cuts in the EIC proposed by the budget are related to fraud—and our amendment keeps those cuts intact. The rest of the cuts re reductions in taxes that go directly to working families.

The average annual Federal tax hike proposed in this budget for the 262,000 Wisconsin families who get the EIC would be $457. No one, I hope, is claiming those families—many of whom make around $12,000 a year—are defrauding the Government. No one, I hope, is suggesting that their one tax credit ought to be first on the budget chopping block.

Mr. President, we are all agreed that we have to balance the budget, and to do that, we have to reduce entitlement spending. But we have to do so in a way that makes sense and is fair. Cutting an established bipartisan tax credit that encourages work over welfare does not make sense. Cutting it while increasing tax breaks for corporations and the wealthy is not fair. I urge my colleagues to support the Bradley motion.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today to speak out against the Republican proposal to raise taxes on working families and in support of the Democratic amendment. The Republican tax plan raises taxes on families making $30,000 while give a big fat tax cut to people with $5 million estates.

We talk a lot about getting people off welfare. But I believe if we are serious about moving people from welfare to work, then work must pay them enough to pay the bills. When mom or dad works 40 hours a week they should be able to pay the bills. They should be rewarded for working hard. The earned income tax credit does that, it rewards hard work by families. It allows these struggling families to have hope for a better future.

Yes, we talk a lot about welfare reform. We talk a lot about family values. But look what we do. I believe what we explicitly state as our values we should implicitly reflect in our public policy. What is our public policy? This Senate is already on record against even debating an increase in the minimum wage. And now this Senate is about to approve cutting a tax credit that helps these very same working men and women who depend on the minimum wage.

What are we saying to these families? We are saying even as you struggle and work hard, we are going to raise your taxes. And why? Is it because we want to balance the budget? That is what the Republicans say, but that is not the truth. The only reason we are raising taxes on working families and slashing Medicare is so that the Republicans can pass a big tax cut for people making $100,000 or $200,000 a year.

Mr. President. In order to fund a capital gains tax cut for the wealthy, the plan before us would cut the earned income tax credit by $42 billion and call it reform. It would increase the tax deductions for capital gains by $33 billion and call it fair.

The earned income tax credit is designed to reward work. For every dollar a low income worker earns at a job, he or she receives a tax credit. The size of the credit ranges from 7 cents to 36 cents per dollar, based on your family size. This credit is gradually phased-out as income rises so that there is always an incentive to earn more and work more. In short, the EITC helps to offset the heavy burden that taxes can place on a family that counts every single penny. It is tied only to income that is earned on a job. It provides a tax break to those who need it most, low-wage earners.

But all of this is being changed by this reconciliation bill. Single workers will be cut off. Families with one or two kids will have their credit reduced and their taxes increased.

And what does this mean? To the people of my State of Maryland it means tougher times. These cuts in the EITC mean that over 270,000 Maryland taxpayers will pay more while those at the top pay less. These cuts in the EITC mean that by 2002, people of my State will pay an average of $345 more in taxes. It means that 120,000 Maryland families with two kids will have their tax bill go up by $474 a year.

Lets talk about what this tax increase means to real people. For Rhonda Clark, a 26-year-old mother from Baltimore, it means that even though she has worked hard to get off welfare and to raise her two young kids, even though she has played by the rules, life is about to get harder. For Rhonda, this tax increase means she will have less money to pay for child care for her two young kids. Inflation will go up, but Rhonda's tax credit will be reduced in 1996 by $367.

The EITC has a long history of bipartisan support. But that is about to change too. This tax credit has been endorsed and expanded by Presidents and Congresses of both parties. President Ronald Reagan called it, "The best antipoverty, the best profamily, the best job creation measure to come out of Congress." This credit rewards work. It is a bonus for the good guys because it is based on hard work. We should be praising it today. Not attacking it. Not cutting off workers, cutting off families, and cutting off hope.

Let us reflect in our public policy what we have stated as our values. Let us keep faith with working families by supporting the earned income tax credit.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the earned income tax credit is a valuable tax credit for our working families. As enacted by the Congress in 1993, the EITC would provide a tax credit for over 21 million workers and their families this coming year. Working families with earnings of up to $28,500 per year would be eligible. These are families who play by the rules and work hard each day to get by. These are the same families who are disproportionately affected by the Republican cuts in domestic spending.

The earned income tax credit is the result of a bipartisan effort to create a disincentive to people from remaining on public assistance rather than working at lower wage jobs, and was hopefully a major aspect of welfare reform. President Reagan called it the "best antipoverty, the best pro-family, the best job creation measure to come out of Congress." Reagan proposed a significant expansion of the credit in the 1986 tax reform bill.

The House of Representatives has proposed a $23 billion tax increase on these same families by repealing the 1993 earned income tax credit expansion for families with two or more children, and by denying the EITC to families without children. Fourteen million EITC recipients—nearly half of the EITC recipients with children—would be adversely affected. Families with two or more children would be hardest hit.

The proposal before the Senate makes even more severe cuts. The proposal would increase taxes on 17 million households to raise $42 billion. A report by the Treasury Department shows that under the Senate proposal, 21 percent of families currently eligible for the EITC would lose their eligibility by the year 2005.

On a national level, the proposal will mean an immediate $300 average tax increase. For the 7.4 million families with two or more children, a $410 tax increase will occur. And the average tax increase will continue to go up over time, reaching $644 by the year 2005. These families include 18.5 million children.

In Massachusetts, 194,000 working families would face an average tax increase of $321 in the year 2002. For families with two or more children, the increase would reach $440.

Two-thirds of the proposed tax increase in the EITC would be achieved by repealing the final phase of the 1993 expansion for families with two or more children—an expansion promoted by President Reagan in 1986 and President Bush in 1990.

Also included in the Republican bill is a proposal to tax social security payments received by approximately one million widowed, retired, and disabled taxpayers who care for about 2 million of their own children, grandchildren, or other children. These social security recipients would face an average increase of $850.

The 1993 expansion was designed to keep a family of four with a parent working at the minimum wage above the poverty level, assuming the family also received food stamps. And we still haven't been able to achieve that.

The standard of living of working families has continued to deteriorate since 1979. In 1996, the real value of the minimum wage will decline to its lowest level in 40 years. Without an increase in the minimum wage, the EITC must do the job of raising the after tax incomes of working families.

We have heard too much rhetoric about the level of fraud and abuse. The facts do not bear out these accusations. Any fraud and abuse that had taken place has been largely eliminated through steps taken by the IRS to reduce erroneous claims. There is no more fraud and abuse with this credit than there is in capital gains claims of the rich.

Other improvements to the credit have been made consistently over the past several years. Most recently, it was altered to deny eligibility to those with $2,500 or more of taxable interest and dividends.

There has also been too much rhetoric about the fact that the rate of growth of the EITC is out of control. That is not the case. With the 1996 expansion, the CBO projects that the EITC will grow at less than 4.5 percent per year. This growth is due largely to inflation. As a percentage of gross domestic product, the cost of the EITC will decline after 1997.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I rise in strong support for the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

It restores $43 billion in cuts over the next 7 years in the earned income tax credit in the Senate Republican reconciliation bill.

At a time when many working Americans are struggling to make ends meet, the Senate Republican budget would hike Federal taxes on low- and moderate-income working families. It would also raise some State taxes on these same working families.

This is a double whammy on working families.

This Federal tax increase will also raise taxes in seven States that have a State earned income tax credit tied to the Federal credit, including my home State of Vermont.

This bill will raise both State and Federal taxes on 27,000 Vermont working families earning less than $28,500 a year.

As a result of this double tax jeopardy, working Vermonters will lose $64 million in Federal earned income tax credit benefits and an additional $16 million in State earned income tax credit benefits over the next 7 years.

On average, about 63 percent of Vermont taxpayers would see their taxes rise under this bill because of these earned income tax credit cuts.

Under the Senate bill, a Vermont family of four earning $15,610 a year, the 1995 poverty line, would lose $4,500 of earned income tax credit benefits over the next 7 years—$3,600 cut in the Federal earned income tax credit and $900 cut in the State earned income tax credit.

A Vermont family of four making $22,000 a year would fare even worse—suffering a loss of $1,208 in State earned income tax credit and a loss of $4,831 in Federal earned income tax credit over the next 7 years.

It is very doubtful that the Vermont General Assembly can afford to increase the State earned income tax credit to make up this loss, with even more Federal cuts on the way.

Workers are treading water or worse against the rising tide of inflation and low wages. Now is not the time to cut a tax credit that will raise Federal and State taxes on low- and moderate-income families.

Instead, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment to restore the earned income tax credit.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, as the Senate debates S. 1357, the fiscal year 1996 budget reconciliation bill, I am concerned that the tax changes and spending priorities put forward seek to balance the budget on the backs of senior citizens, working families, the working poor, and our Nation's children. The Republican proposal for a $270 billion cut in Medicare, a $182 billion reduction in Medicaid, and a $43 million tax hike for families earning under $30,000 a year to finance $245 billion in tax giveaways—over half to individuals earning over $100,000 annually—clearly outlines the number one priority of the Republican plan: tax relief for a privileged few.

The details of the legislation stand in stark contrast to the intended goal of reducing the Federal budget deficit. The fears I expressed during debate on the budget resolution have been confirmed; the brunt of deficit reduction in this bill comes at the expense of our responsibility to make work pay, the education and well-being of our youth, the retirement security of our parents, and our commitment to long-term investments in productivity, education, and job training. This approach is shortsighted and threatens to reverse progress made in genuine deficit reduction and tax fairness over the past years.

The tax increases contained in the reconciliation bill hit hardest on working American families. In particular, the $43 billion reduction in the earned income tax credit [EITC] will raise taxes for 17 million working Americans and their families. The most effective way to improve the economic well-being of the middle class and working poor is to promote policies that reward work and lessen dependency. Resources should be focused on economic policies and public investments that enhance productivity, create well-paying, skilled private sector jobs, and restore economic mobility and prosperity to working Americans.

Yet the Republican plan cuts the earned income tax credit by $43 billion over 7 years; reversing longstanding bipartisan support for policies that make work pay. The earned income tax credit helps low-and-middle-income working families who have seen their wages decline since the 1980s and serves as a safety net for middle-class families confronted with a sudden loss of income. The EITC helps these families through economic difficulties and encourages policies that make work pay.

Mr. President, despite the tremendous number of new jobs created last year and the 2-year decline in the national unemployment rate, the earnings of many Americans have remained stagnant. In fact, over the last decade most working families have seen their standard of living erode. People are working harder and longer to make ends meet. The number of working poor families and individuals living at or below the poverty line continues to grow.

The 1993 expansion of the EITC was designed to lift a family of four, in which a parent works full-time, year-round at the minimum wage, to the poverty line. This $43 billion tax increase on millions of working families—many just above the poverty line who are struggling to work, raise their families, and avoid welfare, will destroy an important incentive that encourages work and self-sufficiency. The proposed cut in the EITC would increase Federal income taxes on millions of low-income working families with children. The Treasury Department estimates that 17 million low-income American taxpayers will see an immediate tax increase averaging $281 per year under the Republican proposal. When fully implemented, the Republican proposal would boost the average tax bill for working taxpayers by $457 per year.

In 1996, working families with more than one child will see their EITC reduced by $270. A working family with two children earning $20,000 or less would see a $372 tax hike. Working poor families with one child and taxpayers without children also will see a tax increase under the GOP plan. The elderly, disabled, and retired who receive Social Security and have an average income under $10,000 will see their taxes climb by an average of $859 under the Republican plan. Over 1 million low-income working families—and over 2 million children—would suffer as a direct result of this proposal.

Working families with children that have low and moderate incomes face three strikes under this bill. The reduction in the earned income tax credit, cuts in Medicaid, and ineligibility for the $500 per child tax credit will hit millions of working families and millions of children hard. Over 30 million children, 44 percent of our Nation's young people, would receive no benefit or only partial credit and not the full $500 proposed.

Mr. President, what message are we sending to working men and women? By raising income taxes on millions of Americans struggling to make ends meet and committed to work over welfare and making tax breaks paramount, the Republican reconciliation plan establishes disincentives to hard work and threatens the economic security of millions of American families.

I urge the defeat of S. 1357.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Washington State.

Mrs. MURRAY. Thank you, Mr. President. It is always a pleasure to be working with my colleague from New Jersey, Senator BRADLEY. It is unfortunate, though, today, that what we are trying to do is to fix the Republican budget and attempt to restore the earned income tax credit.

Mr. President, this Republican budget will cut $43 billion from the earned income tax credit, and in so doing, this budget will be raising taxes on those earning less than $30,000 a year.

I have to tell you, this is totally incomprehensible to me that while the Republicans are touting this budget and all the glory of its tax cuts, they are raising taxes on hard-working American families.

Where is the logic in this? As one of my colleagues recently stated, this is nothing more than reverse Robin Hood—taking from the poor in order to pay for tax breaks for the most wealthy in America.

The impact of this proposal is astounding. The numbers are staggering. This budget will raise taxes on 17 million families across America. In my home State, low-income working families with two children will see a $452 tax increase in 2002 and a $522 tax increase in 2005.

What kind of message does this proposal send to our hard-working families? Does it provide security and hope? Or does it tell them they are on their own? Does it tell these families that are working to stay above the poverty line that we no longer reward hard work and support their efforts?

Mr. President, the EITC has always received bipartisan support because it is a commonsense tax credit. It rewards work. It provides a real incentive. It gives people the means to move from the welfare rolls to the work force.

As we all know, in 1986, Ronald Reagan praised the EITC. I remember him saying, "It is the best antipoverty, best profamily, best job creation measure to come out of Congress."

As in President Reagan's day, many of today's hard-working American families are trying to make end's meet, send their kids to school and provide some hope for the future. Average Americans are worried today about their jobs. They are anxious about their cost of education. And there is genuine concern out there about the costs of health care. It is astounding that the other side has chosen this time to reduce the EITC.

Mr. President, this tax increase is not a big deal to some of our colleagues here in the Senate, but, believe me, these are real increases to average Americans.

As I have said many times throughout this budget process—I will say it again now—this budget has no conscience nor provides any hope. It hurts the little guy, those who need help, those who are struggling to make a living and provide for their children, and it rewards the rich.

Taking away this tax credit adds insult to injury. The EITC keeps people off welfare. It offsets other forms of formal assistance. It gives American parents the security they need to enter the work force.

We cannot balance the budget on our working poor, our elderly and our children, and we cannot justify cutting taxes for the wealthy while increasing taxes on the poor. We should put things back in perspective and help those who really need our help.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this amendment. It tells working families we are in their corner. It says we are against increasing their taxes and we are for insuring their financial security.

I commend my colleague from New Jersey and urge all of our colleagues to support this sound, commonsense amendment.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, in 1993, Congress decided to give a 3-year tax cut to families earning under $30,000 a year. That is the earned income tax credit.

What the other side attempted to do is to say, "Do not give these working families earning under $30,000 a year the third year of their tax cut." That is essentially what this debate is about.

As I said last night, I would oppose their effort to raise taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year if it was a free-standing amendment; but in the context of this debate it is virtually unconscionable because of the estate tax provision in this bill. I have not heard anyone on the other side defend this provision. If you have a $5 million estate you pay $1.7 million less in estate tax because of the changes in this bill. I have not heard one person on the other side of the aisle stand up and credibly defend why we should give less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the estates in this country a $1.7 million tax cut while we are raising taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year. I have not heard that defense. Maybe it exists. I have not heard it.

The distinguished Senator from New Mexico read a letter from the Joint Tax Committee, as if the letter clinched the case. And the letter of course says that 72 percent of the tax benefits in this bill go to families earning under $75,000 a year. That is true. One does not dispute that. But that is not a refutation of the fact that taxes are increased on families earning under $30,000 a year. It means that the tax cut for those with incomes between $30,000 and $75,000 is large enough to offset the tax increase for those earning under $30,000.

Then, finally, there was this nice phrase here in the letter from the Joint Tax Committee, "Only 1.5 percent of all households will have an income tax increase;" an income tax increase.

Mr. President, people who earned under $30,000 a year last year paid $114 billion in Federal taxes. Guess how much of the $114 billion was income tax? It was $12 billion. Mr. President $12 billion out of the $114 billion was income tax.

What other taxes do they pay? They are working people. They pay Social Security taxes. For years we heard from the other side that the cruelest tax of all is the tax on working Americans, the Social Security tax. What they are doing is essentially raising the effect of the Social Security tax on those working people, because the earned income tax credit offsets Social Security taxes and income taxes and excise taxes paid by families earning under $30,000 a year. And the Joint Tax Committee did not refute that. The letter refers only to income taxes, not Social Security taxes.

So let us be clear here. Let us be clear. There has not been one refutation of the fact that the earned income tax credit offsets Social Security taxes. And when you repeal it, you are essentially raising Social Security taxes on families earning under $30,000 a year. Why do this in the context of a bill where estates of $5 million get a $1.7 million tax cut? Tell me how is that good policy.

Then, of course, we are going to see a chart later, the famous growth chart, that will show that the earned income tax credit has increased dramatically in the last 3 years, how it is exploding since 1986. Every time, Mr. President, every time we hear that argument about the earned income tax credit exploding, remember, Mr. and Mrs. America, what they are saying is that working families are getting a bigger and bigger tax cut and they do not like it. Republicans want to reduce their tax cut. They want to raise taxes on working families.

So when you see that chart going up, that is not a chart of the growth of the earned income tax credit. That is a chart of taxes going down for working families in this country.

So when the distinguished Senator from Oklahoma puts that chart up—and I hope he puts that chart up at some point today—remember those bars that go higher and higher: Lower taxes on working families in America.

Mr. President, this is one of those moments that is so clearly defining that it really is even reachable by my own rhetorical skills. You do not have to be a great speaker when you have all the facts on your side, when you have no refutation on the other side, and when the choice is so clear—a $1.7 million tax cut for estates of $5 million? That is less than one-tenth of 1 percent of the estates in this country in any given year. So the contrast is clear: a tax cut of $1.7 million for estates versus a tax increase on working families.

The other side says, "We did not increase it on families. We only increased it on single people earning under $30,000." Well it is true that single people are clearly getting a tax increase. That is true. But I can also give you plenty of examples of where you increased taxes on working families. Anybody who is single under 30, yes, you get a big tax increase—a big tax increase. Not a small one, a big one. And for many families, it is also true.

Mr. President, this is an issue that I think bears a very strong vote in support of our effort to protect this tax cut for working families. Mr. President, I am prepared to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, who is on the floor now in support of this amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey is kind as always.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I am going to be on the floor again today because the Republican rhetoric is not matching the reality and the Republican rhetoric is that the children's tax credit will help families.

In reality, too many families will be excluded from this credit because it is not refundable.

In fact, over 20 million children will not receive the full benefit. And these children are in families earning less than $30,000, families that need tax relief the most to make ends meet on a tight family budget.

To add insult to injury, not only do Republicans deny the credit to such hard working, low-wage families, Republicans are paying for it by imposing a tax increase on them with a $43 billion cut from the earned income tax credit [EITC].

The Republican leadership continues to claim that their tax package helps middle-class American families. And this sounds good, but I want to know how they define the middle class?

In my State of West Virginia, we believe that parents who go to work every day, and struggle to raise their children are middle class, admirable, and deserving of support and encouragement. Over 65 percent of our taxpayers are working hard but earn less-less than—$30,000. For such families they will lose, not gain under this bill.

West Virginians have a basic sense of fairness and common sense. They will know that this package and its claim of middle class tax relief are false when they fill out their tax forms in April 1997.

Just 2 years ago, these working families were promised tax relief. Now Republicans are reneging on that deal and raising taxes on families earning less than $30,000. For families with two or more children, their taxes will go up an average $483. For families with one child, taxes will go up an average of $410. This will hit over 77,000 families with children in my State of West Virginia alone.

But such numbers can be numbing. Let us get beyond the rhetoric, and look at real families.

A real family, like the Helmick family of New Milton, West Virginia, will be worse off, not better. The Helmick family has 6 children, ranging in age from 15 to 4. Mr. Helmick works full-time as a truck driver for a local construction company, and Mrs. Helmick is a full-time homemaker. In the past, they have used their EITC to buy baby furniture and to buy a used truck so Mr. Helmick has reliable transportation to get to work. Mr. Helmick will not get to claim the full tax credit for his children, and he will lose EITC benefits under the Republican plan.

This is a real working family that will be hurt, not helped.

And families like the Helmicks who can not claim the child credit and are hurt by the cuts in EITC, probably will not be claiming capital gains tax breaks either. For them, this package does little more than renew their cynicism since it reneges on promises made just 2 years ago when we told families to play by rules, go to work instead of welfare and we will offset your payroll taxes so that you do not have to raise your children in poverty.

I feel badly for 65 percent of families in West Virginia who will be hurt rather than helped by the Republican tax proposal.

I thank the distinguished Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey has 3 minutes and 18 seconds remaining.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I have one final point.

The purpose of the earned income credit was to offset income taxes that working families pay—working people—and Social Security taxes that working families pay, and excise taxes that working families pay. That is the purpose of it.

The other side has said this proposal that they have offered does not increase income taxes on 98 percent of the people.

What about Social Security taxes? What about excise taxes? Are they saying those are not taxes? Are they not saying that a working family at the end of the month has less money in their pockets because they paid those taxes? A working family has less in their pockets after this proposal passes because of the Social Security taxes that they do not have offset, and the excise taxes that they do not have offset. And if you are a working single person, forget it. You are going to have a serious increase in taxes. Those are the facts. Those are the facts.

One repeat of a statistic: Of the $114 billion in Federal taxes paid by families and individuals earning under $30,000 a year, only $12 billion of the $114 billion are income taxes. We offset all the others. They offset only the $12 billion.

In the context of a tax bill, where an estate of $5 million gets a tax cut of $1.7 million, I really want to hear the other side defend that estate tax provision.

I want to hear them make the argument about the family farm because I will have an amendment later that will protect the family farm, and it will cost $700 million as opposed to $3 billion over 5 years. Then we will be able to see the difference between the two parties. Even on that issue, one wants to protect the family farm, and the other, of course, wants to give a little bit more benefit to business corporations, and not only the family farm. I can understand why that is good politics for some. It certainly is not good politics. And it is certainly not good policy in the context of a bill that raises taxes on working families that deserve a tax cut, not a tax increase.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, is there any time left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 27 seconds remaining.

Mr. WELLSTONE. If I could amplify a point made by the Senator from New Jersey, it is not good politics either because people in the country—in case anybody has not noticed—yearn for a political process that they can believe in, a political process where they think they are represented. This does not look like such a process. This looks like something good for big players, heavy hitters, those who have all of the influence, with the vast majority of the people shut out. This is not a regular person's standard with this kind of break.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, for the record, I would like to have the Chair advise the Senate of the time remaining on both sides overall.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 3 hours left for the Senator from New Mexico, and there are 4 hours and 45 minutes remaining for the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. As I understand it, we have now used up all time and completed debate on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Jersey. As I understand it, we are about then, per the previous agreement, ready to take up an amendment that I understand is to be offered by the Senator from Florida who I believe is in or near the Chamber with regard to Medicaid funding.

Is that the understanding that has been tentatively agreed to as far as the other side is concerned?

Mr. ABRAHAM. It is my understanding that Senator NICKLES reserved 10 minutes of time to speak on this topic. I am trying to ascertain whether he intends to use it.

Mr. EXON. On the EITC issue.

Mr. ABRAHAM. That is correct.

Mr. EXON. Then we would go to the Medicaid amendment.

Mr. ABRAHAM. That is my understanding.

Mr. EXON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. ABRAHAM. We are trying to determine if that reserved 10 minutes will be used or not.

Mr. EXON. Since Senator NICKLES is not here, in order to conserve time, could we temporarily set that aside and allow the Senator from Florida to proceed with his presentation?

Mr. ABRAHAM. We would be happy to enter into a unanimous-consent agreement, and we wish to reserve the 10 minutes of time for Senator NICKLES for whatever time later that he might be available.

I move that we temporarily lay aside the EITC motion so that we might proceed to the next motion. I believe it is, while reserving 10 minutes of debate on our side for the EITC.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what was the request on the EITC?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I do not think it is a request, simply a confirmation of an agreement reached last night for 10 minutes reserved for Senator NICKLES to comment further on the motion that the Senator from New Jersey has offered.

Mr. BRADLEY. There was a motion made last night? I do not think there was a motion last night relating to any time allotted to the other side.

Mr. ABRAHAM. The motion I believe is the motion of the Senator from New Jersey. I believe the agreement with regard to time on that motion is 10 minutes had been reserved.

Mr. BRADLEY. Reserving my right to object, my understanding is Senator NICKLES' amendment was on a second-degree amendment, and Senator NICKLES chose to withdraw his second-degree amendment. I do not think there was ever an agreement on time.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I propose to have Senator GRAHAM proceed. If he chooses to take time off the bill, we will for Senator NICKLES.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to time off the bill.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we can then proceed at this time in the usual fashion. I am pleased to yield 1 hour off the bill of time to be controlled by the Senator from Florida who wishes to address the matter, and I hope the Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, could I ask the ranking member a question? Is the 1 hour under the control of the Senator from Florida, or is it 1 hour equally divided?

Mr. EXON. Under the usual procedures, there is 1 hour under the control of the minority. I have just yielded that 1 hour to the Senator from Florida, and, of course, there is also 1 hour for the Senator from Georgia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inform the Members of the Senate that, since this is a motion, it is 1 hour equally divided between the sides. That would be 1 hour equally divided between the proponents of the motion, Senator GRAHAM, and 1 hour for the opponents under the control of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, in light of the limitations under which we will debate this matter, I will make a few opening comments, and then yield 5 minutes to my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. President, one of the most significant but not adequately focused upon aspects of this debate is the impact which this reconciliation will have on the most important Federal-State partnership in existence, which is the Medicaid program. This program represents for most States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would inquire: Has the Senator sent the motion to the desk?

Mr. GRAHAM. I have not but I shall in a moment.

This represents for most States 40 percent, or more, of all of their Federal grant in aid programs for highways, education, and law enforcement. Forty percent of all of the funds which come from the Federal Government to assist States in providing services to their people come through this one program of Medicaid.

It is the safety net under our entire health care system. While it represents well under 10 percent of health care spending in terms of the Federal commitment to Medicaid, it represents the safety net for virtually 100 percent of our health care system.

Yesterday, I heard some speakers talk about the fact that we are involved in this reform not just because we need to balance the Federal budget, which many of us, including this Senator, strongly support and have voted consistently for measures that will move toward the balanced budget and are very pleased at the report yesterday that for the third consecutive year we have reduced the degree of the Federal deficit, but beyond that goal of balancing the Federal budget, we need to rid ourselves of failures, of programs that were not functioning, that in some cases were even counterproductive.

Mr. President, while I will suggest some areas in which I believe the Medicaid Program can be improved, I will state emphatically this program is by no definition a failure. In one very dramatic area, infant mortality, this program has contributed substantially to a dramatic reduction in infant mortality in virtually every State. It has resulted in more babies being born at term, at full birthweight, fully able to begin the developmental process, and then it has helped poor mothers to be able to continue the health care for those babies after they were birthed.

This program is a program which has had flexibility to respond to changing circumstances which range in every degree from changes in population to changes in economic circumstances to natural disasters that impose unanticipated burdens upon a particular State.

I will talk later about my concern of the proposals in this reconciliation bill for the severe cuts in the Medicaid program, cuts which will reduce the annual average increase to 1.4 percent in comparison to the private sector's estimate that over this 7 years, private sector health care will increase at 7.1 percent per American citizen over each of the next 7 years; that that kind of disparity represents not a fine tuning of the Medicaid Program but, frankly, a collapse of the Medicaid Program and its ability to serve as the safety net. And finally, that the allocation of funds among the 50 States in the rigid block grant formula is inequitable, perpetuating inequities in distribution which exist in the current law as well as rendering the program unable to respond to changes in circumstances among our 50 States.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, with those introductory comments, I send to the desk a motion to commit with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions: to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to eliminate reductions in the Medicaid program over the seven year period beyond $62,000,000,000 and reduce revenue reductions for upper-income taxpayers by the amount necessary to ensure deficit neutrality. In addition, the Committee is instructed to achieve the Medicaid savings through implementation of a Medicaid per capita cap with continued coverage protections and quality assurance provisions for low-income children, pregnant women, disabled, and elderly Americans instead of through implementation of a Medicaid block grant.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the Chair. I thank my colleague from Florida. I rise to support this motion and ask unanimous consent to be included as an original cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I say to my colleague from Florida, I do not have much confidence about this 2,000 pages plus and what it is going to mean for people in my State of Minnesota that I represent.

The other day in the Chamber of the Senate I had an amendment. I did not mean for it to be symbolic. I thought there would be 100 votes for it. My amendment said that if by virtue of action we take in this reconciliation bill there are fewer children with medical coverage, also more children that are hungry, then we will revisit what we have done over the next year and we will take action to correct this damage. I could not get votes for that. I received 45 votes.

I come from a State with 425,000 Medicaid—we say medical assistance—beneficiaries, projected to be, I say to my colleague from Florida, 535,000 by the year 2002. My State of Minnesota does not have the slightest idea what in the world we are going to do in response to anywhere from $2.5 billion to $3.5 billion—we do not even know yet—of cuts in medical assistance. And I can tell you right now, in all due respect to my wonderful colleagues, in my not so humble opinion, I come from the greatest State in the United States of America. We have done some wonderful things. We are a compassionate State, and we will not walk away from the most vulnerable citizens.

So this a shell game for Minnesota, and for all too many of our States it is a shell game.

Mr. President, 300,000 children are medical assistance beneficiaries in my State of Minnesota, many of them in working families. We will not walk away from those children. So the counties are going to have to pick up the cost. It will be the property tax, Minnesotans.

In my State of Minnesota, we have done some wonderful things to make sure that people in the developmental disabilities community can keep their children at home, do not have to become indigent and poor to get assistance: that people with developmental disabilities may live lives with dignity. But I will tell you what is going to happen. With draconian cuts in medical assistance, my State will not walk away from this community. It all gets put back on the State, all gets put back on the counties. This is nothing but a shell game.

In my State of Minnesota, 60 percent—60 percent—of our medical assistance payments go to our nursing homes. I have been to a lot of those nursing homes, and a lot of the people who are the care givers ask the following question: Senator, what are we going to do with these reductions? We cannot live with these reductions and live up to standards. Are we going to let staff go? Are we going to redefine eligibility? Are there going to be fewer benefits?

This is not just the elderly. These are the children and the grandchildren as well.

This amendment really cuts right to the heart and soul of what we are about here. I was in a debate earlier. We have an estate relief tax break. For those Minnesotans who have $5 million in an estate, they are going get a tax break. I say to my colleague from North Dakota, of $1.7 million. Those are the kinds of giveaways we have. But at the same time we have draconian cuts in medical assistance for people with disabilities, for children and for elderly citizens. And in many ways, I say to my colleague from Florida, I think these reductions are perhaps the most problematical for the States we represent, the most problematical, the most awful, the most god-awful for the counties and local communities that we represent, because in my State of Minnesota we are not going to walk away from the citizens. Somebody is going to have to pay the bill. We are going to have to do it out of the local property tax, and that is going to be the most difficult way of all.

This makes no sense at all. This is, as I have said 1,000 times in the Chamber of the Senate, a rush to recklessness. This is a fast track to foolishness, and I wish my colleagues would look at their language and look at their statistics and look at their charts and read their sentences and understand what the consequences are going to be for the lives of the people we represent.

Let us have deficit reduction, but let us go after some other folks that can tighten their belts. Let us look at the subsidies to the oil companies, coal companies, pharmaceutical companies, insurance companies, estate breaks, and all the rest.

Let us not cut medical assistance to the point where we are denying quality health care for the people we represent. This is an extremely important motion. It is about fairness. It is about economic justice. And I say to my colleagues, it is also about good health care policy. The numbers should drive the policy. We need to have deficit reduction, but we cannot be reckless with the lives of the people we are here to represent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMAS). Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Maryland.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Thank you, Mr. President.

I rise in strong support of the Democratic leadership amendment, the Graham motion. My Republican colleagues constantly remind us of how important family values are. And I think family values are fantastic, especially the one that says, "Honor thy father and thy mother." I think it is not only a good commandment to live by. I think it is a good public policy to implement.

I believe when we say, "Honor thy father and thy mother," we should have this in our Medicare Program and in our Medicaid Program. A substantial part of the Medicaid Program goes to services to the elderly who are in nursing homes. We have watched this program grow. And it is an important safety net to the American middle-class families. We must preserve Medicaid to be a safety net for the people who have no other resources for long-term care and also for those who are disabled, disabled Americans who rely on Medicaid because they cannot get private health insurance.

My dear father died of Alzheimer's. I could not reverse the tide of him dying one brain cell at a time, but I vowed I would devote my life to fighting for a long-term care policy. That is what the Spousal Impoverishment Act was, a protection, and what we passed in 1988. I am glad that we do not repeal spousal impoverishment. And I hope it does not erode.

I regret that we are now going to cancel out the protections of nursing home grants that looked out for people who were in nursing homes, who were too sick to be able to protect themselves, the laws that prevent restraints and the laws that prevent abuse, that mandates standards, so that when people who have Alzheimer's or Parkinson's or other dementia diseases where we need long-term care, even though we cannot change the course of the disease, we can ensure that they are in a safe, secure environment. We can be sure of a lot of things if we pass the Graham motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is entirely appropriate that today we focus on the other real aspect of the Medicare debate, and that is Medicaid. Medicare reduces the support for our seniors by 22 percent. The Medicaid legislation reduces it by some 30 percent. Today I want to talk for just a few moments about the children who are going to be adversely impacted by the current legislation that is before the Senate, unless the Graham amendment is passed.

Among the children—in 1993—9.5 million were uninsured. The best estimate is that, under current law, the number of uninsured children will increase to 12.6 million in the year 2002. Under the Republican proposal, 4.4 million additional children will be uninsured in 2002 for a total of 17 million. Even under current law, there will be an upward flow in the number of children who lack health insurance coverage, but the Republican plan makes it even worse.

Just 2 years ago, on a bipartisan basis, under the leadership of Senator ROCKEFELLER, Senator RIEGLE, and others, the Finance Committee passed a program to provide comprehensive health services for children up to the age of 18 who were at or below 185 percent of poverty. We have one intervening election and look what happens? We basically pull the rug out from underneath the children of this country. Eighteen million of them now have coverage under Medicaid. Ninety percent of those children are in families that are in the work force, either full time or part time. These are hard-working men and women at the lower level of the economic ladder that absolutely depend on this program for the range of health services that are provided under the Medicaid Program. And effectively, under the Republican proposal that is before us today, we are saying, "No longer will there be the guarantees of the prescreening services, no longer will there be the range of different health services for the children in this country." And why are we doing it? To provide tax breaks for the wealthiest companies and corporations in this country and the wealthiest individuals in this country.

Not only are we pulling out the rug from underneath the children in this country, but, again, we are pulling out the rug from underneath the seniors by eliminating Federal standards in nursing homes. I was here in 1987 during the time that Congress held some of the most shocking hearings that we have ever had in the U.S. Senate, when we found out what was happening to our parents in nursing homes across this country. We found that there were shocking conditions. And Republicans and Democrats got together and passed minimal standards in order to make sure that our seniors were going to be able to live in nursing homes with some peace and dignity and quality care.

Under this Republican proposal, effectively, we are taking out those guarantees and taking out those standards and at the same time failing to provide the assurance for those seniors and those parents that there will be decent, quality care in the nursing homes of this country.

Mr. President, this makes no sense for the same reasons that the cuts in Medicare make no sense. The Republicans are taking the funds out of the protections for children and out of the protections for the seniors of this country, and using it for tax breaks for the wealthy individuals and corporations of this country. And, Mr. President, in order to remedy that, we should embrace the Graham motion. That amendment offers us the best opportunity to do so.

Medicaid is the companion program to Medicare, and the Republican assault on Medicaid is even more cruel and unfair than their assault on Medicare. The Republican plan would cut Medicaid by $187 billion over the next 7 years.

The country is up in arms over Medicare cuts that would mean a 22-percent reduction a year by the end of the budget period. By the end of that same period, Medicaid will be cut by a staggering 30 percent a year.

In large measure, the Republican cuts in Medicaid will strike another blow at the same groups hurt by the Republican cuts in Medicare—senior citizens and the disabled. Ten million elderly and disabled Americans are enrolled in Medicaid. Twenty-three percent of them—nearly one in every four—will lose their coverage. Seventy percent of all Medicaid spending under the program is for these two groups—the elderly and disabled—and much of it is for long-term nursing home care.

But there is also another group who will be especially injured by the Republican cuts—America's children. Seventy percent of Medicare spending is on the aged and disabled—but 70 percent of the people rely on Medicaid are children and their parents—a total of 18 million children and 8.1 million parents.

Every child deserves a healthy start in life. But under the Republican program, millions of families who have adequate medical care today will be forced to go without such care tomorrow. One in every five children in America depends on Medicaid. One in every three children born in this country depends on Medicaid to cover their prenatal care and the cost of delivery. These children are also guaranteed prenatal care, immunizations, regular check-ups, and developmental screenings. And, they are guaranteed the physician care and hospital care they need.

The vast majority of Medicaid-covered children—90 percent—are in families with working parents. Most of these parents work full time—40 hours a week, 52 weeks a year. But all their hard work does not buy them health care for their children, because their employers don't provide it and they can't afford it on their own. Even Medicaid fills only part of the gaps. Over 9 million other children are uninsured, and each day the number rises. Soon, less than half of all children will be covered by employer-based health insurance.

We tried to address this problem last year, but Republicans said no. Now, they are trying to undermine the only place where families without employer-provided coverage can turn for health care.

The Republican cuts in Medicaid will add 4 to 6 million more children to the ranks of the uninsured. When they are done—one in four American children will have no insurance at all.

These cuts will drastically increase the number of uninsured children. They will eliminate all the standards of quality that protect children today. The guarantee of prenatal care is gone. The guarantee of physician care is gone. The guarantee of hospital care is gone.

Under the Republican plan, senior citizens and the disabled are on the receiving end of a deadly one-two punch. Deep Medicare cuts, and even deeper cuts in Medicaid. Not only will one in four lose their Medicaid coverage, but they will be victimized by one of the cruellest aspects of the cuts—the elimination of any Federal quality standards for nursing homes.

Strong Federal quality standards for nursing homes were enacted by Congress with solid bipartisan support in 1987, after a series of investigations revealed appalling conditions in nursing homes throughout the Nation and shocking abuse of senior citizens and the disabled.

Elderly patients were often allowed to go uncleaned for days, lying in their own excrement. They were tied to wheelchairs and beds under conditions that would not be tolerated in any prison in America. Deliberate abuse and violence were used against helpless senior citizens by callous or sadistic attendants. Painful, untreated, and completely avoidable bedsores were found widespread. Patients had been scalded to death in hot baths and showers, or sedated to the point of unconsciousness, or isolated from all aspects of normal life by fly-by-night nursing home operators bent on profiteering from the misery of their patients.

These conditions, once revealed, shocked the conscience of the Nation. The Federal standards enacted by Congress ended much of this unconscionable abuse and achieved substantial improvements in the quality of care for nursing home residents.

Yet the Republican Medicaid cuts eliminate these Federal standards. It does not modify them. This bill does not reform them. It eliminates them. The House bill even repeals the nursing home ombudsman program that provides an independent check on conditions in nursing homes.

In addition, the cuts in Medicaid are so deep that even conscientious nursing home operators who want to maintain high quality care will be hard-pressed to afford the staff and equipment necessary to provide it.

It is difficult to believe that anyone, no matter how extreme their ideology, would take us back to the harsh nursing home conditions before 1987. But that is exactly what the Republican plan will do.

The Republican plan for Medicaid is an outrage. It says that society does not care about the most vulnerable groups in our country—senior citizens, children and people with disabilities.

In a very real way, Medicare and Medicaid is a lifeline for tens of millions of Americans who have nowhere else to turn. Without access to Medicare and Medicaid, many healthy children and many senior citizens will become sick and many will die. This bill can fairly be called The Sick Child and Dead Senior Citizen Act of 1995.

It is wrong, deeply wrong, to put millions of our citizens at much greater risk of illness and death in order to pay for tax breaks and special favors for the wealthy and powerful. Greed is not a family value. Republicans in Congress who intend to vote for these harsh and extreme cuts should think again before they wash their hands of their responsibility for the consequences of their votes.

These Republican proposals are too harsh and too extreme. They are not what the American people voted for last November. They should be rejected out of hand by Congress.

I withhold the balance of my time and yield it to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I would yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, thank you very much.

I think it is important to put the reforms that are proposed by the majority into context here and to try and speak about those reforms in rational language, instead of the panic and paranoia that has been expressed regarding those reforms.

It has been represented on the floor of the Senate today that the block grant program for Medicaid as proposed would be a collapse of the Medicaid system. I think that is an overstatement by a substantial amount.

Let me just address the issue of what kind of collapse could happen in the event we were to have the block grant program. We began in the State of Missouri, my home State, in which I had the privilege of serving as attorney general for 8 years and Governor for 8 years, a total of 16 years. During that timeframe we began to use managed care under a special waiver from the Federal Government to deal with the needs of those who needed assistance in regard to their medical needs.

And as a result of our experience with that, we have come up with some idea of how much we could do if we were given a block grant compared to what we were able to do under the Federal system of bureaucratic intermeddling and a one-size-fits-all Washingtonian Medicaid Program.

Now, it should be noted after I left the Governor's office almost 3 years ago now, my successor, who is a Democrat, maintained largely the same set of professionals to run the program, so that the individuals who will talk about the program from that experience are not partisan individuals. Earlier this year, the director of the program in the State of Missouri indicated if they had a block grant, they could increase the number of individuals covered from 600,000 under the Federal plan, to 900,000 if they had the flexibility of doing with the funds what a State could do under the flexibility of a block grant.

Now, I do not call the extension of medical services to an additional 50 percent a collapse of the system. I call this an empowerment of State and local governments to be able to do something that they may or may not deem necessary. It gives them the flexibility to meet the needs of the indigent rather than to define this in terms of a collapse.

I was interested with the statement, particularly because it was now a statement from an individual in a Democratic administration of a Midwestern State. And after it appeared in the newspapers around my State last January, I inquired of the individual who came to my office to talk about these proposals in the summer. And I asked him point blank, "Is this the fact that you could increase the coverage from 600,000 people to 900,000 people if you were absent the redtape, if you had the same amount of money on a block grant?" His direct testimony was "yes."

Now, that is not a collapse of the system. Now, it may be politically expedient to talk about scare tactics and to talk about collapses, but the truth of the matter is, we are not going to provide the basis for a collapse. We are going to provide the basis for meeting needs, and meeting them effectively. And just a few moments after we had the collapse theory expressed on the floor here today, we had the we would not have the slightest idea of what to do theory expressed on the floor today.

I cannot believe that a State as profoundly well disposed as Minnesota would not have the slightest idea in terms of how to meet the needs of their citizens. It is stunning to me. As a matter of fact, they could look to the State of Missouri, or a number of other States, to find out.

Let me just tell you some of the Missouri experience. As a matter of fact, even if we do not have this major reform, Missouri is going to try and continue to expand its ability to serve through managed care. Next year, Missouri would have half of all of its recipients on managed care.

What does the system look like? What does the system look like if States have the right to design the system, because they have been given a partial right in my home State? Here is what it looks like in St. Louis.

Last year, they decided to offer to Medicaid individuals the option for managed care. They asked companies that can provide that managed care to provide proposals. There were eight or nine companies that competed to provide proposals. Seven of them were authorized as a menu so that the people who have needs could get those needs met in a managed care system.

People choose the HMO. People choose the provider system that they want. Nine out of every ten recipients of the program make a choice. The other 10 percent have to be assigned by the State. They do not have enough interest in their medical care to even make their own choice, but they are assigned.

What is interesting to me is this: That at the end of every year, including our pilot program in Kansas City and St. Louis, individuals have a right to switch from one system to another.

If this were a draconian system, if this were an abusive system, if this were a system where there was lots of dissatisfaction, you would expect to see a lot of people switching at the end of every year. You would expect to see people trying to find a better way, looking for a different company, finding a different provider. You would expect to see a tremendous outpouring of rejection of the system of managed care that the block grant would really endow every State with the capacity to implement.

Do you know what? Do you know what the rate of changing providers is every year at the end of the year in the State of Missouri? The rate is 1 percent. There is a 1-percent dissatisfaction rate, individuals—well, they may not be dissatisfied, they may just try something else or they may move to a different part of the city so a different provider would be more convenient for them.

A 1-percent—1 percent—change rate does not indicate a system which is in collapse. It does not indicate a system which is in chaos. You do not have a 1-percent change rate if your system is one where they do not have the slightest idea about how to meet the needs. When you have a 1-percent change rate, you are really doing well.

I cannot imagine a federally operated system where 99 percent of the people were lauding the system and endorsing it by their sticking with the program, in spite of the fact they had six or eight other options from which to choose.

It has been said this is a shell game. Well, Mr. President, I say to my colleagues, it is a shell game all right to propose that this is chaos or this is collapse. We are not talking about reducing our commitment to individuals who are medically needy. We are talking about our ability to provide for ways of meeting their needs more substantially. If in Missouri we could expand from 600,000 to 900,000, just with ripping out the red tape, it is a shell game to say that we want to keep the old system.

Forty percent growth over the next 7 years in the resources—and if you could have a 50-percent increase in the number of recipients with the current amount of funds and you provide a 40-percent growth, this is empowerment, this is not shell, this is not collapse, this is not chaos, this is compassion, and I mean that seriously.

I just want to say that when we hear these arguments indicating that, "Oh, we're not going to be doing enough; there are children that are going to"—we have a system which is in collapse. We have a system which is in chaos. It says if to endow States with the capacity to correct the errors is going to promote collapse or chaos, we have collapse and chaos. That is what has happened in the welfare system of the United States. It not only collapsed financially, it has collapsed in terms of its humanity, and it is wasting resources. It is supporting in my State 600,000 people when the same resource could be supporting 900,000 people for medical care.

I might add that in the State of Missouri, this is not a State where we have to spend a whole lot of money to get the 99-percent satisfaction rate. Missouri is far below the national average when it comes to the kind of resources that are required to meet the needs of the medically needy.

So let us just try to set the record straight for a moment. Giving States the right and the opportunity to have cost reduction does not mean they are going to reduce the services. It may mean we are going to improve. It has in the State of Missouri, and I think it can in every other State.

Asking States to exercise their ingenuity in their capacity to rescue a failed system from the Federal Government does not mean we do not have the slightest idea about how we can meet the needs of individuals. I think that is an overstatement, even for Minnesota. I believe they will have a good idea, and I believe they can make it work.

This is an opportunity we have to change a failed system and to move from a failed system to a system that can succeed. It is not a tightfisted opportunity. It is not an opportunity that does not recognize that there will be additional needs. It is a system which provides for reasonable growth, but not unbridled expansion.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Florida, and I certainly support his motion to commit.

Mr. President, what happens to parents who are struggling to try to balance the raising of children and, at the same time, caring for aging parents under the Republican proposal? If a working family gets a new child tax credit but loses Medicaid nursing home coverage for an aging parent, what is the overall effect on that family? The child tax credit is $500 for some families. Not in West Virginia where two-thirds of our families would not get it.

Let us say for some families it is $500 a year, but the loss of Medicaid nursing home coverage in West Virginia would cost from $25,000 to $35,000 per family, because that is what a nursing home costs if you have to pay it yourself.

An example, Julie Sayers of Charleston, WV, cares for her mother who, as the Senator from Maryland was talking about, suffers from Alzheimer's disease, and she cared for her as long as she could at home, as children want to do, but when it came to the point that she could not care any longer, she had to take her mother to a nursing home.

Julie in this case gets a partial child tax credit, much less than $500 under the Republican package, but she cannot get Medicaid coverage for her mother in the nursing home. So what good is it, the child tax credit? What damage does the Medicaid cut do—$182 billion, $187 billion for a tax break for the wealthy.

Julie and her family are going to be a lot worse off under the Republican proposal, not better off, but worse off, and this is a real person caring for a real mother with Alzheimer's in West Virginia today.

Mr. President, I understand Medicaid needs reform, and Senator GRAHAM recognizes that there are responsible ways to reduce the rate of growth in Medicaid spending, but we really should not get down to the business of throwing seniors out of nursing homes. We really should not do that. That, in my judgment, is what the Republican amendment does.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, parliamentary inquiry. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 20 minutes. The Senator from Florida has 13 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

At this time, I will yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Tennessee, Senator FRIST.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise to speak against the amendment and in support of the underlying bill before us. I wish to take a few minutes to outline where we are going with Medicaid today. I have had the opportunity to spend some time in the private sector on Medicaid, and we have huge challenges there—challenges before me as a physician, before hospitals, before the beneficiaries and groups of people that, all too often, could fall through a safety net, and, in fact, today are falling through safety nets. Why? Because of excessive and burdensome regulations we put on the States that prevent the States from carrying out their mandate to provide that safety net through this joint Federal and State program called Medicaid.

The program is not working today. In fact, as most people know, only about half of the people under the poverty level are served by Medicaid today. It was Gov. Bill Clinton speaking before the House Operations Committee, in December of 1990, who said it, laid it out, clearly—as clearly as any of us could today. He said, "Medicaid used to be a program with a lot of options and few mandates. Now it is just the opposite."

The problem is that a well-intentioned program—once again, now 30 years old—has layered mandate upon mandate, regulation upon regulation, where we have tied the hands of our regulators, State governments, where they cannot carry out this important goal of serving people who are in need, or who cannot provide for themselves otherwise. The problem is crystal clear.

Again, it is one of these problems which has been laid out before us, which our Governors have told us about, which anybody who has participated in the system at a doctor-patient level, or at a level this Congress could recognize or should recognize. This underlying Republican plan will go a long way toward resolving that problem. The problem is that Federal spending has doubled over the last 5 years. It has doubled the amount of money that is put in from the Federal Government, without any observable improvement in services delivered.

The problem at the State level is that 20 percent, on average, of a State budget now goes to a Medicaid program, and that 20 percent is growing faster and faster and crowding out other State responsibilities.

Third, and probably most important, is the excessive regulation we impose by running this program and micromanaging this program out of Washington, DC, which results in waste, which some resources could be translated into very effective care for populations in need.

Now, the Republican Medicaid plan basically does one thing. It says we cannot micromanage the health care for the populations that have been defined out of Washington, DC. We have failed. We have not been able to control costs, and are only serving about 50 percent of the people under the poverty level.

What we have said overall in this bill is that we are going to give that responsibility to the States, to the people who are closer to home, who can identify the individual needs, strip away the thousands and thousands of regulations which tie the State's hands, and say you address the problem in the way that you see fit. But there are certain ramifications and certain general, broad areas that we say it is important to target.

In this bill we have said that 85 percent of current spending levels for mandatory services are for three distinct populations: One, families with pregnant women or children; two, individuals with disabilities; and, three, the indigent seniors.

The transformation of Medicaid will be, again, very simple. If we compare the old Medicaid to the new Medicaid program, in the past Medicaid has had an open-ended entitlement. Under the new Medicaid, we will move toward this concept of block grants, allowing States to control their dollars. Under the old Medicaid, we had Federal mandates with micromanagement, coming out of the beltway, out of the bureaucracy here in Washington. And under new Medicaid, we give States the flexibility to design the types of plans they think best identify the needs and meet the needs of their citizens.

Under the old Medicaid, it is expenditure-driven, increasing at a rate of about 17 percent a year, again and again. Under the new Medicaid, it will be needs-driven. Under the old Medicaid, there have been unlimited growth rates.

In my State of Tennessee, Medicaid grew by 40 percent just 3 years ago. There is no tax base that can keep up with 40-percent growth. Under the new Medicaid, Medicaid will continue to grow—continue to grow on a base year of 1995, in our particular plan, and grow at a rate of 7 percent next year, and then it will vary thereafter, according to formulas developed by the States.

Again, looking to my own State of Tennessee, what is one of the fundamental problems? On this chart is the Medicaid expenditure growth from 1986 out to 1993. You can see that, on average, as illustrated by the red going across, the growth in Tennessee has been about 22 percent. And remember, this growth of 20 percent is competing in a State budget for other issues, whether it is infrastructure or education; it is crowding out other State expenditures. In 1992, you can see, in one State we had growth rates in Medicaid of 44 percent. It was about 14 percent in fiscal year 1993.

Well, in Tennessee, we looked at three solutions: No. 1, raise taxes again and again and again. That is what we have done a number of times over the last decade. The American people have said, "We do not want to have our taxes raised again and again."

Second, we can go through massive health care reductions. In Tennessee, we said "no." Or we can undergo fundamental change. Tennessee is one of six States who got a waiver from HCFA in order to carry out a plan. The plan has had mixed results. Let me show you what the results have been overall. It was a program called TennCare.

Given the flexibility we want to give all 50 States—and only 6 have it today—there were 12 competing managed care organizations who, through a total demonstration project, assumed the care for about 1 million people in Tennessee. Primary care access has been improving over time under the program compared to the old Medicaid system. Nonemergency use of emergency rooms has gone down over time. The number of in-patient hospital days has gone down over time. And the overall budgetary expenditures have been met. In fact, growth there has been flat. But the exciting thing is that the quality of care has increased by overall objective standards and, not only that, the number of people covered has been markedly increased.

In 1993, before this reform plan, if you took the overall population of Tennessee, coverage was 89 percent. By using those Federal dollars sent to the State more wisely, more effectively, with all of the Government regulations stripped away, we were able to improve our overall coverage for all people across Tennessee from 89 percent to 94 percent.

So when you hear that by giving States more flexibility we are, in some way, decreasing access, you can look to Tennessee and say that we are one State that had regulations stripped away and were given that freedom to carry out a program that they thought best identified and covered the needs, and we were able to improve access across the State from 89 percent to 94 percent.

If we look at overall expenditures by allowing one State the flexibility to carry out their program, stripped away of the Federal regulations, we can see, when you compare Medicaid versus the new program called TennCare, which is in yellow here, the overall Medicaid projections growing at 20 percent a year, which are in the color red. The year is along the axis here. Starting from 1987, 1995 to 1998, we can see we have had this progressive growth up to 1995. If we had done nothing in Tennessee, the growth would have continued at 20 percent a year. But having an element of coordinated care, growth has been restrained over time. This is translated into savings for the American people, again, with good quality of care, and expanded coverage, in terms of the number of people covered.

So the final question is: Why can everybody not do what Tennessee did? Well, Oregon might want a different type of system; Hawaii might want another type of system; Missouri might want another system. Let us let people closer to home decide that, but we have to strip away the regulations.

In addition, the other comment might be, well, why cannot people get waivers like Tennessee did—and I participated in that process so I can tell you it is a huge burden to get the waiver.

In fact, on September 22, in a letter sent to the commissioner of the department of finance and administration in Nashville, TN, there are another 9 pages of terms and conditions for Tennessee to try to adhere under. We would do away with those regulations under the Medicaid proposal.

For all these reasons, I support the underlying bill and speak against the proposed amendment.

Mr. GRAHAM. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. President, I cleared it with the managers that I can have 2 minutes off bill debate time and I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mrs. BOXER. Thank you, Mr. President. I will speak to this issue for 4 minutes.

Mr. President, today we learned on the news that America is finally getting it. Mr. President, 57 percent of the people in the latest national poll say that the Republicans are gutting Medicare to pay for a tax cut for the rich.

It has taken awhile for the message to come through but people are waking up to the truth. The Republicans are gutting Medicare. They are gutting Medicaid. They are raising taxes on those who earn less than $30,000 a year to help fund a tax break for the wealthiest Americans. Those who earn over $350,000 a year do just great.

By the way, if you are one of those lucky people to have a $5 million estate, pop open that champagne because unless we Democrats prevail you are going to get millions of dollars back.

Today, the Senator from Florida is giving all Members a chance to modify this radical and extreme budget as it relates to Medicaid.

I have listened very carefully to Senator FRIST, to Senator ASHCROFT, and neither of them address the main issue addressed in this amendment, which is the devastating nature of these cuts, the very size of these cuts.

Let me put it into perspective. In America today, the Medicaid Program costs $90 billion a year. The Republicans want to cut $187 billion out of that. That is 2 years—more than 2 years of expenditures of the Medicaid program over a 7-year period. They are cutting 2 years of Medicaid out of 7 years.

I ask, as a person who works for a living, over a 7-year period, could you afford to be unemployed for 2 years?

Could you afford to lose that much income and pull your family together? I think it is clear that the answer is no.

Do you know what the cuts mean to California? Mr. President, $18 billion. Millions of children will not be served. Millions of working poor will not be served. Emergency rooms will close. Trauma centers will close.

My friends say, oh, there is so much room to be more efficient. California is the most efficient in the Nation. How do we get more efficiency out of a system that is already the most efficient?

The answer is that people will be kicked off the program. Who are these people who are on Medicaid? We should look at them. Who are these people on Medicaid? They are the most disabled people among us, the most disabled children among us—children with spina bifida, children with cystic fibrosis. They are the working poor who cannot get insurance. They are the down and out who maybe lost their job and need help.

By the way, they are the seniors. Two-thirds of the seniors in nursing homes are on Medicaid. I do not know if you have been to a nursing home lately, but buried in this bill is a provision to repeal national standards for nursing homes.

We are not only cutting all of this, we are gutting the standards.

Now, I heard Senator ROTH, the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, on the radio this morning saying, "These Democrats, they do not want change. They want the same old thing."

I want to respond to that. We Democrats want change, but there is a difference. We want good change. We want change that is good for America.

President Clinton has a record of change—more jobs, less unemployment, AmeriCorps, lower deficit for the first time 3 years in a row since Harry Truman. That is good change.

This is evil change. This is bad change. This is greedy change. Support our friend from Florida.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, the Senator from California spoke as if there were going to be decreases in the amount of funding.

I think it is important to just call to the attention of the American people that when we refer to cuts here in Washington we are referring to cuts in the amount of increase. We are not going to take 2 years out of the funding of the next 7 years. We are going to reduce the level of increase. We will still have a 40-percent increase in the amount of resource available.

It is important that we define the situation in terms that the American people would normally use. In that respect, we have a 40-percent increase in funding.

Mrs. BOXER. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Your comment referred to my argument and I choose not to yield.

The second thing that the Senator from California said, how can you get a system more efficient? I think it is clear, we allow States to develop the efficiencies that provide for as much as a 50 percent increase in the delivery of services.

The fact of the matter is, that is what has been shown in the pilot projects in Missouri. Our director of Medicaid says that if he could just get rid of the Federal regs he could move from 600,000 people to 900,000 people with the same amount of money. That is how you get more efficient—take the onerous one-size-fits-all Federal Government out of the picture.

I yield 6 minutes of our remaining time to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FRIST). The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, would it not be interesting to be some kind of out-of-touch observer and walk out and listen to the last day or so, the conversation. It is not a debate. It is posturing conversation.

I just walked in and listened. It would be pretty hard to follow. It would be pretty hard to try and establish from listening here what the goals were and what the purpose was, particularly from our friends on the other side of the aisle.

I think you have to conclude certainly we are not all coming from the same base of facts. I think you have to conclude that in some cases there is not even any clearly defined goals that are being pursued on that side of the aisle.

I think you would have to conclude there is quite a different philosophy—a philosophy of maintaining the status quo, of attacking the proposals without any particular plan, to continue the growth of Government and the size of spending. That would have to be the goal that you would assume from the conversation.

You would be confused when you hear constantly time after time this idea that you are reducing Medicare so that we can increase tax cuts.

The fact of the matter is that part A of Medicare is financed by withholding from wages. It goes into a trust fund. You have two choices when it is growing at 10.5 percent. You can either do something about the cost and reduce that rate of growth or you can add more to the withholding.

I do not hear that proposition being done. Those are the choices. It has nothing to do with taxes. It has nothing to do with balancing the budget. If the balanced budget was not in the picture, you would be talking about how do you take care of part A in Medicare. You do not hear that. That is a fact. That is a fact.

You can probably balance the budget it we stop using all the charts that we have out here, for one thing.

We do have a plan. The Republicans do have a plan. The plan is to balance the budget instead of more debt. A responsible thing we need to do for our kids as we go into another century, we have a plan to have some middle-class tax cuts instead of increasing—the largest increase we ever had—like last year.

I hope we get on into this earned-income tax credit, this 50 percent of people's taxes going up. That is just not the case. You might be reducing some of the payments that have been going under earned-income taxes—it is not increasing taxes. We know that.

We ought to be talking about Medicare solvency. That is what our purpose is. We ought to be talking about jobs and opportunity, instead of welfare dependency. That is what we are talking about here, making some changes that have not been made for years. My friends start by saying yes, we need changes, and then resist them. That has become the pattern here.

Let me tell you just a little bit about Medicaid in Wyoming. Republicans surely have taken a historic approach to it. In Wyoming, spending will rise on Medicaid from $110 million in 1996 to $168 million in the year 2002. That is not really a cut, is it? On an individual basis, the average Federal grant for each person in poverty will grow from $2,188 to $3,263, hardly a cut.

Certainly we need more flexibility. We have heard from some of the former Governors. We heard, of course, from the Governors in the States who say give us more flexibility and we can take these dollars and more effectively run the program. The Governors have asked for more flexibility. The Republican bill mandates benefits for low-income pregnant women, children up to 12, elderly and disabled as defined by the State—those are mandates that are there that, indeed, some of the Governors are objecting to.

Medicaid, as the Senator from Tennessee indicated, has exploded in terms of its growth rate; an annual rate of 19.1 percent between 1989 and 1994. You cannot sustain that kind of growth. So you need to look for ways to deliver the system, to deal with the core problems and that is helping to reduce the costs by giving more flexibility to States to shape their programs. The program in Wyoming for the delivery of Medicaid needs to be quite different than the program in West Virginia or Massachusetts, and we need the flexibility to do that.

So, Mr. President, we have talked about the benefits. States will meet a minimum spending level of Medicaid. For low-income pregnant women, children up to 12, elderly and disabled as defined by the State. States will be required to spend at least 85 percent of the amount they spend in 1995. They will be allowed to put together programs like AFDC and Food Stamps if they choose, to put together a package of benefits.

Regarding nursing home standards, the committee responded to the Governors' requests by granting them authority to write standards under Federal guidelines. States must establish and maintain standards for quality care, which must be promulgated through their State legislatures—people, I suppose, who have no caring for the elderly. I do not believe that. Most of you have served in State legislatures. Do not tell me the States do not care. I cannot believe what I hear from time to time about that.

So, we do need to make changes if we want to continue to have a program that delivers services. That is what it is all about. I think we ought to take a little look at the long-term goals and the breadth of the goals that are in this bill. They have to do with balancing the budget. They have to do with job opportunities. They have to do with dealing with some of the problems which have brought us to where we are.

I really wish we could talk just a little bit more about the facts. For instance, this tax business that we hear every time someone stands up. Tell me a little bit about part A of Medicare and how that gives a tax offset. I would like to know more about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. THOMPSON. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 90 seconds to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to make a few remarks about the effects of the proposal to reduce projected Medicaid expenditures by over $186 billion over 7 years on those in Alabama—poor mothers and children, the disabled, and the elderly—who count on Medicaid for their medical and long-term care.

First, and most importantly, the Republicans proposal, if adopted, would immediately place the Alabama Medicaid Program in a state of utter chaos. It would place a gun to the head of the Governor and State legislature. They would be forced to make immediate, savage cuts—about 21 percent—in the program. These cuts, over $386 million, would have to be imposed the current fiscal year, starting in the second quarter of the year.

Let me be very clear about this. These cuts would be imposed on the Medicaid budget that has been in effect since October 1, 1995. The only alternative available to these cuts would be an immediate major increase in taxes on the people of Alabama. This would not happen given the "no new taxes" pledge of our Republican Governor.

My second observation is that this sudden cut is only part of the almost $3 billion hit the Republican bill would impose on Alabama. I know the other side claims that Alabama and other States can easily handle these cuts by achieving greater efficiencies in the program. Well, sure they can, and I can tell you how. They can cut poor people off the program by restricting eligibility. For those who remain, access to care can be cut by simply reducing payments to providers, doctors, hospitals, and nursing homes, below the costs of their services. At that point, these services will no longer be available.

Finally, Mr. President, our Republican colleagues repeatedly assert that all of these cuts are not real, they are simply reductions in the rate of increase. However, as we have finally had an opportunity to examine the details of the bill, we find that in some important instances this is simply not the case. For example, the Medicaid proposal cuts funds going to hospitals that care for a disproportionate share of patients that do not have insurance or other means to pay for their care as reduced immediately by 56 percent. I repeat, this is a real cut of $185 million. According to Dr. Claude Bennett, President of UAB, almost 30 percent of Alabamians are medically indigent and responsibility for providing care to them falls largely upon their University Hospital. Dr. Bennett is correctly concerned that it can continue to shoulder this burden which will surely increase in the face of these cuts.

Now, I know, Mr. President, that in the backrooms the majority is continuing to cut deals in an effort to fix up this disaster. States are pitted against States. If Alabama gets its situation improved, which it must, the poor in some other States will suffer. The bottom line is this—these Medicaid cuts are simply too much, too soon. Our State will not be able to cope without hurting people. We must rethink what we are doing.

REAL FAMILIES VERSUS REPUBLICAN RHETORIC

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, Republican rhetoric is that working families will be helped, but I question if this will be true for real families in West Virginia.

This Republican package seeks to cut Medicaid funding by a whopping $187 billion over 7 years. But people deserve to understand what such harsh cuts mean. Medicaid covers poor children, pregnant women, the disabled, and low-income seniors who need nursing home care. What happens to these people and their families when we slash Medicaid funding?

Coming from West Virginia, when I think of a family, I think about the children, parents, and grandparents. What happens to parents struggling to balance raising children and caring for aging parents?

If a working family gets a new child tax credit but loses Medicaid nursing home coverage for an aging parent, what is the overall effect on that family? The child tax credit is $500 a year for some families lucky enough to qualify, but the loss of Medicaid nursing home coverage will cost those same families $16,000 to $30,000 a year.

For example, Julie Sayres of Charleston, WV cared for her mother who suffers with Alzheimer's disease as long as she could at home. But as her mother's illness got worse, she had to move to a local nursing home where Julie can visit her daily. Julie may get a partial child tax credit of $500 under this package, but if she cannot get Medicaid coverage for her mother in the nursing home when her mother's meager savings are exhausted, Julie and her family will be much, much worse off. That child tax credit will not cover even a month of nursing home care for her mother.

This is real story about a family hurt, not helped by this package.

In my State of West Virginia, over 21 percent of our residents rely on Medicaid, and I worry about what will happen to them and the health care system in my State as it tries to absorb more than $4 billion in cuts—West Virginia simply cannot afford this.

A headline from the Charleston Daily Mail last week reads: "[Medicaid] Cuts May Affect Infant Mortality."

This catches one's attention. It demands closer scrutiny and careful thought. The article reports:

With the help of Medicaid-funded programs, West Virginia's infant mortality death rate decreased from 18.4 deaths per 1,000 in 1975 to 6.2 deaths per 1,000 in 1994, better than the national rate of 8.0 deaths per 1,000 births.

Medicaid has greatly increased poor women's opportunities to get medical care, said Phil Edwards, the administrative assistant for the Bureau of Public Health's Division of Women's Services. "By making them eligible, they go in for prenatal care earlier than they would otherwise," he said. "Every dollar you spend on this side in prevention, you save four on the other side where you don't have to treat an at-risk patient," Diane Kopcial of the state maternal and child health office said.

Mr. President, I believe this article should make us all stop and think before we impose such cuts in Medicaid. Do we really want to jeopardize nursing home care for seniors? Do we really want to slide backward on infant mortality?

I do not want to go backward. I understand that Medicaid needs reform and our amendment recognizes that there are responsible ways to reduce the rate of growth in Medicaid spending. But we should not throw seniors out of nursing homes, deny poor mothers access to prenatal care and possibly return to times when our infant mortality rate rivals some Third World countries, or turn our backs on the disabled.

We should think about the real families in West Virginia and cross this country who depend on Medicaid for basic, vital health care.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full article from the Charleston Daily Mail, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Charleston Daily Mail, Oct. 20, 1995]

CUTS MAY AFFECT INFANT MORTALITY

The state Medicaid Crisis Panel began wrapping up its work as health officials expressed concern that federal cuts in the program could reverse progress the state has made reducing infant deaths.

The panel appointed by Gov. Gaston Caperton will recommend ways to cut $200 million out of the Medicaid program this year to balance the budget. It recommend long-term changes that should prepare the program to handle likely federal cuts.

Medicaid is a health care program for the poor and disabled. The federal government pays 75 percent of the cost and the state pays the rent.

At the insistence of Administration Secretary Chuck Polan, the Department of Health and Human Resources will prepare a priority list of money-saving measures it already is taking and those it thinks the state should take.

The list, with the amount each change would save, will be presented at the panel's meeting next Thursday.

The group will begin discussing its recommendations then, but will meet final time on Oct. 29 to reach an agreement, said Chairman from Haywood.

Meanwhile, state health officials and worried that proposed federal Medicaid cuts could increase infant mortality.

With the help of Medicaid-funded programs, West Virginia's infant death rate decreased from 18.4 deaths per 1,000 births in 1975 to 6.2 deaths per 1,000 births in 1994, officials said. The national rate is 8.0 deaths per 1,000 births.

Diane Kopcial of the state maternal and child health office said that when Medicaid expanded in the 1980s the state:

Recruited physicians to care for Medicaid patients.

Built a referral system with hospitals in Charleston, Morgantown and Huntington.

Began the Right from the Start program to serve Medicaid-eligible woman during their pregnancies and 60 days after they give birth. It also serves infants up to age 1. The program provides nutritional counseling, parenting education, and transportation to medical appointments.

The Women, Infants and Children program also provides nutrition and health education, free food and breastfeeding information for women and children under 5.

Medicaid has greatly increased poor women's opportunities to get medical care, and Phil Edwards, the administrative assistant for the Bureau of Public Health's Division of Women's Services.

"By making them eligible, they'll go in for prenatal care earlier than they would otherwise," he said.

"Every dollar you spend on this side in prevention, you save four on the other side where you don't have to treat an at-risk patient," Kopical said.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I rise today to join my Democratic colleagues in opposition to the Republican proposal to replace the joint Federal-State Medicaid Program with a block grant to the States.

Medicaid currently guarantees that 36 million low-income pregnant women, children, disabled, and elderly Americans have access to hospitals, physicians, nursing homes, and other basic health care. The Republican plan would eliminate this guarantee and cut Medicaid by $182 billion by the year 2002.

What the Republicans are proposing is to cut Medicaid and then lower the standards States must meet because they know that the standards cannot be met with the lower level of funding. In a recent letter to Members of the Senate, the National Association of Counties expressed quite correctly the natural consequence of this proposal. I quote from that letter:

We do not believe that States will find enough budgetary efficiencies without reducing eligibility. The flexibility given to States in the operation of the proposed restructuring will trickle down to counties in the form of flexibility to raise property taxes, cut other necessary services or further reduce staff.

The Republican plan endangers the future health, well being, and productivity of millions of low-income pregnant women, poor children, and disabled Americans. It jeopardizes the long-term care of millions of our elderly. And these sweeping policy changes have been proposed, passed out of committee—and may well be passed by the Senate—without one official public committee hearing.

Because of this, I joined with a number of my Democratic colleagues earlier this month in convening several hearings on the Medicaid and Medicare programs. We wanted to hear from the people who will be affected by the proposed changes. During those hearings, we heard some very moving testimony regarding the impact the Republican plan to cut Medicaid will have on the lives of average, hard working middle-class Americans. Since many Members were unable to hear this very moving testimony, I would like to insert in the RECORD one of the more compelling statements presented at these hearings by Ms. Mary Fitzpatrick from Dickson, Tennessee.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, so follows:

TESTIMONY OF MARY FITZPATRICK

My name is Mary Fitzpatrick. I live in Dickson, Tennessee, about 50 miles outside of Nashville. Once again, I am in Washington to speak on behalf of the rights and needs of citizens in nursing homes. I use the word "again" because it was eight years ago that I sat before members of Congress and described a pattern of neglect and poor care that led to my mother's death in a nursing home in 1984. I spoke then because I wanted to do whatever I could to prevent another human being from the pain and denial of dignity that my mother, Maggie Connolly, endured. I did not want any other family to have to bear the agony of watching a loved one suffer because of lack of basic services and a system that fails to protect frail, vulnerable people. And I want to spare others the despair my family felt trying to persuade the state of Tennessee to enforce nursing home standards.

The account I gave eight years ago helped achieve bipartisan support for the 1987 Nursing Home Reform Act. Imagine my shock in learning of the current proposal to undermine this law.

I cannot believe Congress would consider returning to a system that renders quality nursing home care an option for states, especially when I know what the state did for my mother—absolutely nothing.

Obviously, lawmakers in Washington are out of touch with ordinary people. And that's who people in nursing homes and their families are—ordinary individuals seeking a safe setting and adequate services during en emotionally, physically trying time.

Ordinary people understand the need to control the federal deficit. Ordinary people realize the importance of ensuring accountability for public dollars paid to the nursing home industry each year.

What is beyond our comprehension is how elected officials can support a proposal that will hurt people who can not speak out for themselves.

As I explained in 1987, after my mother's admission to the nursing home, my daily routine soon became one of cleaning up my mother's waste, bathing her and changing her linen as soon as I arrived each afternoon. The facility denied my mother this basic care. I even had to fight for the supplies to provide that care myself.

My mother raised three children, and until a stroke at age 47 had worked in a bag manufacturing plant. Prior to her admission to the nursing home, she suffered from Parkinsons disease and congestive heart failure and lost her ability to speak. In 1983, her condition quickly deteriorated. After a two week hospital stay, she became incontinent and her doctors advised us she would need to go to a nursing home. I favored a nursing facility near my home. Unfortunately, my mother's source of payment, Medicaid, was not preferred by that facility which refused her admittance.

Upon recommendation and a tour of the chapel, lunchroom and some of the residence floors, we chose a facility then called the Belmont Health Care Center. From day one, my brother, sister and I visited mother regularly. My brother even changed shifts so that he could see her each afternoon,. I would come by directly from work, missing dinner to stay until 8:30 or 9:00 p.m. Weekends also involved regular visits from family and friends. There was never a day during my mother's nursing home stay that she did not receive care and attention for several hours from family members or friends. Still, the problems began almost immediately.

On the third day of my mother's nursing home stay, I found her seated in her own waste in a wheelchair. Giving up on finding any staff to assist me, I changed mother's clothing and cleaned her up myself. Soon after I was unable to find any clean linens and was informed of a new policy allowing each residents just two sets of linens. I was persistent and was able to obtain some fresh linens. But there was always a shortage of supplies and on many days, I had to search the linen closets on several floors to find a single set of clean bed linens.

Within six weeks my mother developed her bed sore. Eventually the sores covered her body, making it impossible for her to lie without pressing on the painful skin ulcers. By the time she died eight months later at the age of 75, one of the original sores measured about three inches across and nearly two inches deep. The staff never carried out the instructions on regularly repositioning her. My brother, sister and I would turn her while we were there, but she was supposed to be turned every two hours around the clock. Nor was there sufficient staff to properly care for my mother's bed sores. Two nurses showed me how to clean the bed sores and told me where to purchase special medical dressing. I bought and used them regularly, but the nursing home administration continued telling me that they couldn't find out whether the pharmacy carried these dressings.

There were other problems. Residents like my mother who were unable to reach out for water could go for many hours without anything to drink. My mother's roommate told us how my mother once had dabbed a Kleenex and spilled water on a tray and held it in her mouth to relieve her thirst. Throughout this ordeal none of the family or friends caring for my mother knew where to go for help. Finally a friend located someone on the Tennessee Department of Health and Environment Nursing Home Inspections staff. I called him and explained our concerns about retaliation. He promised confidentiality and said someone would be out within the next few days. But it wasn't until a few weeks that a state inspector came. One of my complaints involved getting proper care for my mother's bed sores.

Then two days after the state inspector's visit I came to the facility and found my mother's sheets soaked in blood. She was lying on her side crying. I pulled back the covers and saw her bed sores had been debrided, which means surgically cut to remove the dead tissue. I was shocked to find that the procedure had been performed at the nursing home instead of the hospital. Given the seriousness of the bed sores, she must have been in agony. But when I asked what they could do for the pain, I was told, "Tylenol is all we can give."

I think mother probably went into shock. But, in any event, she died two days later on July the 7th, 1984. When I was getting ready to go to the funeral home the state inspector called me to say that they had been out a few days before to investigate my allegations of three weeks ago. He said I would be pleased to know that most of my complaints had been substantiated. I told him it was too late. My mother was dead.

The undertaker told me he had never seen a body is such bad condition, and that he had to enclose the lower half of mother's body in a plastic bag. One of the most disturbing things about this whole ordeal is that my mother was aware of what was going on, even though she could not express herself, other than through gestures and facial expressions. And, all the while, I was haunted by the fact that other people in nursing homes, both young and older, were going through the same hell that my mother went through.

It has been very difficult to have to relive this experience the second time around. But, it is even harder to accept the fact, Congress is preparing to destroy a law that would have saved my mother and so many others, so much pain and suffering. Thank you for the chance to speak. I would be glad to try and answer any questions.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, Ms. Fitzpatrick laid out before us in detail commonly found nursing home conditions before passage of Federal nursing home minimum quality standards. The Republican plan we are considering would repeal the minimum quality standards for nursing homes. In my view, such a proposal is mean spirited and illogical.

Morton Kondracke in a recent column described the consequences of this proposal:

> The Republicans need to face up to the fact that, if they go through with their planned reforms in poor people's healthcare, instances of abuse, neglect, broken bones, urine-soaked beds and filthy surroundings will multiply in the years to come.

Mr. President, those were the very conditions that led to the enactment of the 1987 legislation. And now they want to repeal these standards. They want to repeal them because they know that without them some nursing home—some, not all—but some nursing homes will be able to absorb the reduced funding by lowering their standards of care. They will return to the old days of mistreatment and nontreatment which Mary Fitzpatrick and Morton Kondracke described as a means of cutting costs to respond to the slashed funding. Other nursing homes—the ones that do not lower their standards—may simply stop serving those families which cannot afford to pay $50,000–$60,000 a year for nursing home care. And who will this affect? The 4 million elderly who depend on Medicaid for their nursing home care and their families.

Mr. President, our Government should not renege on its commitment to ensuring that millions of needy, disabled, and elderly Americans receive essential basic health care. The Republican proposal, which would eliminate such guarantees, could have disastrous consequences for many citizens, and I would strongly urge my colleagues not to go down this path.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the Democratic leadership amendment to restore over $125 billion to the Medicaid Program.

Our Republican colleagues constantly remind us how important family values are to them. I think that's great. Families are the backbone of our society. They provide nurturing and loving environments for our children. They provide stability and safety, and foster values we need to become better people and a better society.

What are family values? I'll tell you what I think they are. I think family values are honoring your mother and father. I think family values are honesty—keeping promises. Family values are care and dedication to the well-being of those you love.

Family values are not breaking promises, they are not telling your mother and father that they'll have to do without medical care, and they're absolutely not about risking the safety of your parents when you can no longer provide the care they need and have to put them in a nursing home.

Mr. President, there are 18 million children in the United States who depend on Medicaid. There are more than 900,000 elderly people who depend on Medicaid for their nursing home care. There are 6 million disabled Americans who depend on Medicaid.

The wealthy won't be affected by these draconian cuts. It's likely that the vast majority of the 100 Senators in this room won't be affected, nor will most of the 435 Members of the House.

The people who are affected are normal, regular, everyday Americans. Not big-time lobbyists; not big-money campaign contributors. The people who are affected are people like my neighbors, my mom, and the kids who go to St. Stanislaw's Catholic School right down the street from me.

Mr. President, there are 6 million disabled Americans who rely on Medicaid because they cannot get private health insurance. It's not because they don't want it. It's not because they can't afford it. It's because no private insurance company will cover them. Without Medicaid, where will they go? I believe that I am my brother's keeper. We have a responsibility to our fellow women and men. Make no mistake about it.

Mr. President, Medicaid is a program that benefits a broad spectrum of Americans. One in five children in America—18 million kids—receive their health coverage through Medicaid. One in five. Healthy children are the first step to a strong America. The next generation must be healthy in body and mind in order to make the large contribution to our society that we're all trying to prepare them for.

These kids don't understand Medicaid. They don't understand the process, and, quite frankly, they probably don't care. But their parents do. Their parents worry themselves sick about whether or not we're going to take away their ability to get medical care for their kids.

I worry myself sick about that too. But there's a difference. I have a vote on this floor, and I have the bully pulpit. And I want them to know that I'm on their side. I'm fighting for them. I want the parents of the 18 million children on Medicaid to know that I stand ready to help them help themselves.

I'm glad this legislation does not repeal the Spousal Impoverishment Act. I authored this act in 1988. And I'm here to tell you I'm standing sentry to make sure this critical protection is maintained.

My dad died of Alzheimer's disease. My mom, my sisters and I made use of a long-term care continuum in Maryland. We took Dad to a geriatric evaluation center at Johns Hopkins to be sure we knew what was wrong with him and how to keep him at home with us longer. We used adult day care to stretch out his ability to stay with us and to help with respite care for my mother—a heart bypass survivor. But we reached a point when we knew we couldn't give him the level of care that he needed. And we had to bring him to a nursing home.

I visited my dad all the time at his home. It wasn't a Cadillac, Gucci-style nursing home. Dad would have hated that. It was a real nursing home with real patients who had real families.

Over time I got to know those families. I listened to their stories—to their trials and their tribulations. I heard stories about how you had to spend down your life savings to $3,000 before you could qualify for help. Families had to go into bankruptcy while they were trying to practice family responsibility.

My dad wasn't the kind of guy who wanted a fancy tombstone. He wanted to make sure that what he left behind would help others. I made a promise that I'd try to change the cruel rules of Government that penalize families who have saved all their lives.

I'm so proud that with the help of great men like Lloyd Bentsen, George Mitchell, TED KENNEDY, and the members of the Finance Committee, we changed that law so that now you can keep your home, you can keep assets up to $15,000, and the spouse at home can have an income of up to $1,000 a month. So, I'm glad that this won't be repealed, and I want to make sure it never, ever is. I want all Senators to know that in this regard, we've done well by the American people.

Unfortunately, I cannot say the same for the rest of the bill. In this legislation we are repealing nursing home safety standards! That is horrific.

As I just said, my father was in a Chevy Cavalier nursing home—not a Cadillac nursing home. But we all knew that he would be fed, he would be taken care of, he would receive his medication, we wouldn't have to worry about restraints, we wouldn't have to worry about abuse. We knew that because of the standards, dad would be safe.

In 1983 Congress commissioned a study by the Institute of Medicine at the National Academy of Sciences. This study revealed shocking deficiencies in nursing home care. In 27 States, at least one-third of facilities had care so poor that it jeopardized health and safety.

Some nursing home residents have been treated in conditions which are worse than prisons. Worse than prisons!

In 1987 Senator PRYOR led the charge to enact the standards which now protect nursing home residents. He's still leading that charge, and I thank him for that.

Now we want to repeal those standards? Not this Senator. I will not, under any circumstance, allow anyone in this body to put the lives of men like my father at risk.

Saying "yes" to this amendment says yes to keeping promises, it tells our seniors, our children and the disabled that we care about their well-being. That we will help them if they've played by the rules and if they're making the effort to help themselves. And that we will not let those few nursing home profiteers put them at risk in the name of turning a buck.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mrs. FEINSTEIN. Mr. President, I rise today to support the amendment offered by Senator GRAHAM.

The bill before us creates a Medicaid block grant, a blank check, to States with virtually no rules, no specified benefits, no rules of eligibility.

The amendment would retain the current Medicaid Program, but impose a spending limit per individual recipient, an individual cap. This approach would hold down cost increases without undermining Medicaid as a health insurance program.

MEDICAID IN CALIFORNIA

Medicaid, called Medi-Cal in my State, pays for health care for 6 million Californians. Out of these 6 million, 38 percent are children. Medicaid pays the bills of over 60 percent of children in California's children's hospitals. At Oakland Children's Hospital, it pays for 70 percent.

Medicaid provides 70 percent of hospital care to the poor in my State. Of total Medicaid dollars, over 59 percent is spent on the elderly and disabled and 41 percent to families.

One million Americans are infected with HIV/AIDS. In California, there are over 150,000. Medicaid provides health insurance for 40 percent of all people with HIV/AIDS, including 90 percent of all HIV-infected children. In California, Medicaid pays for 50 percent of all HIV/AIDS care. Medicaid pays for 55 percent of HIV-related public hospital care and 41 percent of private hospital care.

In my State, Medicaid paid $719 million for emergency services for illegal immigrants, last year, according to the California Department of Health Services.

Medicaid is a fundamental health safety net in California, insuring everything from basic inoculations for poor children to sophisticated advanced treatment for AIDS.

MEDICAID COST INCREASES

As a former mayor, I know the difficulty of balancing budgets and keeping costs under control. And there is no doubt that Medicaid costs, along with general health care inflation, have grown at double digits, creating tremendous pressure on government budgets at all levels.

The amendment before us reins in Medicaid's growth, but instead of cutting $187 billion, it cuts $62 billion, one-third of the cut in the Republican bill.

WHY THE GRAHAM AMENDMENT IS BETTER THAN THE ROTH BILL

Why is this approach preferable to the committee bill?

First, it does put restraints on spiraling costs.

Second, it preserves coverage for those who cannot get health insurance on the private market because of costs or the individual's health condition.

Third, a per capita cap can respond to changing conditions—population growth, recessions, base closings, natural disasters, immigration.

CALIFORNIA AND FLUCTUATIONS

The per capita cap approach in this amendment would enable my State to respond to all the economic fluctuations that we live with daily.

Unemployment in California has not dropped below 7 percent since 1990. While the country added 3 million jobs between 1991 and 1993, California lost nearly 450,000.

Base closures and realignments have erased more than 200,000 jobs, sucking $7 billion out of the State's economy. Defense and aerospace industries are downsizing.

Some 6.5 million or 23 percent of our nonelderly population are without health insurance. In some urban areas, the uninsured rate is as high as 33 percent. Over half, 58 percent of the uninsured, are children and young adults.

Employer-provided health insurance is declining. Two-thirds of Californians employed by firms with fewer than 25 employees do not receive health insurance.

California is home to 38 percent of all legal immigrants in the U.S.

A flat block grant with a fixed pool of money cannot respond to changing needs like this. A formula that is responsive to numbers of beneficiaries, like this amendment, can.

NURSING HOME CARE

The amendment before us would preserve nursing home standards, standards that S. 1357 eliminates.

Responding to a National Academy of Sciences report, Congress in 1987 enacted nursing home standards to promote quality of life of nursing home residents and to prevent abuse and neglect. This bill repeals those standards, rules designed to prevent bedsores, dehydration, malnutrition, infection; rules designed to protect privacy and human integrity. These standards have reduced injury and cut the use of chemical restraints, which in turn has reduced costs.

In California, 65 percent of our 113,000 nursing home residents rely on Medicaid. This is 113,000 elderly and disabled people, patients with, for example, Alzheimer's, AIDS, and ventilator needs.

Twenty-one percent of nonelderly nursing home residents are disabled. Seventy-five percent of nursing home residents are women. The typical nursing home resident is an 83-year-old widow with multiple chronic conditions, such as crippling arthritis or osteoporosis.

We should not take away these minimal protections for the most frail and make them victims again.

MEDICAID—A MIDDLE-CLASS PROGRAM

Medicaid is health insurance for low-income Americans and the disabled. But it is important to understand the implications Medicaid has for the middle-class. Nursing home standards, which are required as a condition of receiving Medicaid payments, benefit every nursing home resident of whatever income.

By cutting Medicaid, we add to the rolls of the uninsured which means that more people show up in emergency rooms with exacerbated illnesses. We all pay for that.

Medicaid reimbursement to our public hospitals enables these hospitals to have up-to-date trauma centers and emergency rooms which serve Medicaid and non-Medicaid patients. These are critical institutions in many communities on which we all depend. Indeed, these institutions are at the economic core of thousands of communities and they provide jobs.

A BASIC PROTECTION

The committee bill makes drastic cuts in Medicaid and it revamps the program in a way that cannot respond to the growing needs of California and changes a steadfast program of health insurance to an arbitrary, ill-defined block of Federal funds.

The bill purports to transform Medicaid. I'm afraid that it destroys Medicaid.

I oppose the committee bill. I commend my colleague from Florida for his amendment and I support him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Washington 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Florida for this very important amendment he has brought before us today. It seems, so often when we come out on the Senate floor, we get caught up in the charts and graphs and "Senatese" terms that we hear so often and we forget what we are doing affects very real people and very real families across this country. I want to talk about one of those very real people. He is a young child. He is 21 months old. He lives in my State. His mother wrote me a desperate letter saying, "Please do not take away Medicaid."

Her son, Abe, was born with a severe medical disorder. He needs a modified ventilator to breathe 22 out of every 24 hours. In his short 21 months, he has had many surgeries to help put fingers on his hands, to help him breathe, to help him live. His mother said, without Medicaid, Abe would not be here.

This mother is desperate because she knows, as all of us do, that if we change this bill in the way that is being proposed by the Republicans, she will have to fight for Medicaid coverage with everyone else in my State who is desperately going to be looking for help, and it is very likely that Abe will not have his ventilator once this goes to our States.

I went out and I talked to hundreds of parents in my State who have children at Children's Orthopedic Hospital in my home State. These are parents who did not expect to have a child with a severe medical disorder. They did not expect to have a child with asthma, who was in the hospital every other week. They did not expect to have a child who had leukemia. And they did not expect that they would have to quit their job to stay home and take care of that child. They did not expect that their own medical insurance would run out within a very short time because of the limits on insurance. And they never expected to have to turn to the Federal Government to ask for help.

But I can tell you everyone of those parents needs our help and this amendment will send that assurance back to them. I urge my colleagues to support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, how much time is left on each side?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes for the Senator from Michigan and 7 minutes and 30 seconds the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I would prefer not to use our 2 minutes at this point.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that off of the general debate on the bill there be 3 minutes yielded, one of which will be yielded to the Senator from Wisconsin as well as 1 minute for debate of this motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Senator from Florida and I thank the Chair. If we do not make changes very quickly, I am very concerned that older people in our society are going to get the message from this budget that we have changed our attitude toward their contributions in building this society. What other impression are senior citizens supposed to get, when a huge percentage of balancing the budget is based on enormous, and I think in many cases unjustified, changes in Medicare, changes that will increase the premiums of seniors in this country well beyond what they would have been.

Equally bad is something that is being discussed, as we sit here today, over in the Senate Aging Committee, namely the completely unjustified elimination of the Federal nursing home regulations from OBRA 1987. What fiscal or other justification is there for saying to older people who now must be in a nursing home after a hard life, a life of work and contribution to country and family, that we are not going to be sure on a national level that people are protected from unhealthy and unsafe conditions?

Those of my colleagues who served in State legislatures, or served as Governors of their State, will certainly confirm that Medicaid makes up a huge portion of the State budget.

And, Mr. President, if they have any passing knowledge of their State's Medicaid program, they will also confirm that the bulk of the Medicaid budget, and the source of the greatest growth in that budget, is probably the growing demand for long-term care services, typically nursing home care.

This is certainly true for Wisconsin.

But, Mr. President, in Wisconsin, back in the late 1970's, we came to the realization that unless significant reforms were enacted, the rapidly increasing nursing home use would be too heavy a load for the States' budget to sustain prudently.

Through a bipartisan effort—and Mr. President, I stress bipartisan because Governors and legislators from both parties supported the effort—we made some significant reforms to our long-term care system.

The centerpiece of that reform was the creation of a home and community-based program, called the Community Options Program, or COP.

COP provides flexible, consumer-oriented and consumer-directed services that help keep the disabled of all ages in their own homes and communities.

It builds upon the existing set of so-called informal supports—the caregiving done by family members and friends.

Mr. President, the results have been dramatic.

Between 1980 and 1993, while Medicaid nursing home use increased by 47 percent nationally, in Wisconsin Medicaid nursing home use actually dropped 15 percent.

Mr. President, long-term care reform is the key to taming our Medicaid budget.

But that is not the route pursued in this bill.

Instead of a comprehensive reform that would help States cope with the growing population of those needing long-term care services, this bill cuts and runs.

It cuts the Federal Government's share of this growing burden by $182 billion over the next 7 years.

It runs away from the problem of a mushrooming population needing long-term care by block granting the program and dumping responsibility in the laps of State policymakers.

Mr. President, this is a prescription for disaster.

For 30 years, States have made policy decisions based on one set of rules.

Based on those rules, over those 30 years an infrastructure of long-term care has evolved that is heavily skewed toward expensive, institutional care.

That was not by accident.

The system that developed in that time produced the incentives that resulted in this institutional bias.

But, Mr. President, that infrastructure cannot change overnight.

And it certainly will not change simply because the Federal Government slashes funding and runs away from the problem.

Just the opposite is likely to happen.

Today, Medicaid is essentially a provider entitlement.

Providers of specific services are funded, and that infrastructure, which has been so influential at both the State and Federal level in writing the rules which produced the system we have today, is not going to disappear.

That skewed infrastructure is well situated at the State level to win the fight for the pool of resources this bill greatly reduces.

This bill is not reform; it merely makes a flawed situation even worse.

The same problems that exist in Medicaid today will exist under this bill.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support this motion to commit, and let the Finance Committee craft a product that will let States wean themselves off of their addiction to expensive institutional services and instead move toward helping families keep their disabled loved ones at home, utilizing consumer-oriented and consumer-directed home and community based care. So I hope we support the Graham amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I wish to reserve the balance of our time including the additional 2 minutes which were yielded for my close.

I yield to the Senator from Michigan for any final debate in opposition to the motion.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to just recapitulate the point that has been made on our side in the last hour of debate.

Our position is quite simple—that if States are given the kind of flexibility that has in part been given for waivers to run Medicaid Programs, they can bring down the rate of growth of these programs far more effectively than a Federal bureaucracy in Washington; that, indeed, the growth rates are growth rates that decrease but growth in spending that has been outlined in the reconciliation bill can still provide the sorts of benefits that all of us want to see for our citizens, if we let the States, the people closest to those in need, run these systems.

In my State of Michigan, our Governor, our legislature, and our department of social services insist that they can make our program even more efficient at the rate of growth that is proposed in this legislation if they are simply given the opportunity to do so. We have come to a point when health care costs are skyrocketing in the public sector but are being brought under control in the private sector through such things as competition and other market factors.

Let us give the States the chance to do some of the same things this legislation does. That is the reason we have included this approach and State flexibility in the reconciliation package.

At this point, I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the St. Louis Post-Dispatch from January 31, 1995, which bears testimony to the fact that:

Missouri also wants to start a managed care system for its 600,000 Medicaid recipients. It would use the money saved to provide medical coverage to another 300,000 Missourians who do not qualify for Medicaid coverage now and who also cannot afford insurance.

So it would really provide insurance for about half of the individuals who currently are uninsured in the State. That is what the promise of this potential is.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOP GEARS UP TO GRAPPLE WITH MEDICAID: STATES COULD DESIGN OWN PROGRAMS

(By Kathleen Best)

Republican Congressional leaders said they would take up legislation in the next few weeks that could dramatically change the way states provided medical services to the poor.

Illinois Gov. Jim Edgar said after a meeting with GOP Congressional leaders that they were willing to consider giving states lump-sum payments and letting them design their own health-care programs for the poor.

"Let us determine who's going to be in the program," Edgar said. "If the money's not there, then we'll have to make some tough decisions."

In return for greater state flexibility, the states would have to agree to hold down future costs, which they split with the federal government.

"They seemed very sympathetic and agreeable to giving us flexibility," Edgar said. "And they said they would like to try to get this thing going within the next few weeks."

Edgar, a Republican, is the lead negotiator of Medicaid for the Republican Governors Association. He met Monday with Sen. Robert Packwood of Oregon, head of the Senate Finance Committee, and with Rep. John Kasich of Ohio, the House GOP's point man on the federal budget.

Edgar said no firm agreements came out of the meeting. But he said both House and Senate GOP leaders "are willing to move much quicker than we had hoped for," in part to try to hold down increasing costs for the program.

Medicaid is now the third largest entitlement program in the nation after Social Security and Medicare. The health benefits to the poor cost states five to eight times more each year than providing cash, food and other benefits to poor mothers with children.

For the last few years, Medicaid also has been one of the fastest-growing programs. Illinois, for example, now spends more on Medicaid than it does on education. And Missouri spends more on Medicaid than on any other program.

Both states are seeking permission from the Department of Health and Human Services, to change their Medicaid programs. But those requests—both pending for months—remain unanswered.

Illinois wants to move to a managed care system that would encourage the poor to get medical treatment from health maintenance organizations or a designated family physician rather than seeking more expensive care in emergency rooms.

Missouri also wants to start a managed care system for its 600,000 Medicaid recipients. It would use money save to provide medical coverage to another 300,000 Missourians who do not qualify for Medicaid coverage now and who also cannot afford insurance.

Edgar said the reforms that he would push for would do away with the need for states to seek federal permission to make such changes. Such permission is now required because the federal government pays for 50 percent of Medicaid costs in Illinois and 60 percent of the costs in Missouri.

Federal reimbursement rates are based on the per capita income of a state, which means poorer states get more federal money.

"One of the major things driving the Congress right now is the bottom line—how do you balance the budget," Edgar said. "You can't balance the budget unless you attack the Medicaid problem.

"We're not talking about just throwing people off the rolls, but creating a more efficient program," he said.

Although Medicaid affects millions of poor Americans and accounts for billions of dollars in annual spending, the issue had remained on the sidelines of the welfare reform debate while Congress focused on changing the programs that provided cash, food and housing to mothers with children.

"The discussion of welfare reform has been far too narrow," Missouri Gov. Mel Carnahan said. "It really comes from some of the anecdotal talk about the welfare queen and all this sort of thing as opposed to really thinking through what you want to do—lifting people up to self-sufficiency and work."

President Bill Clinton, in a meeting Monday morning with the National Governors' Association, said he would be willing to consider some changes in Medicaid, but he provided no specifics, participants said.

Clinton promised the governors more flexibility in their welfare programs but insisted on safeguards for children.

Donna Shalala, secretary of health and human services, said later that if the federal government did not give states permission to experiment with Medicaid, "then we will have failed with welfare reform."

Edgar said he planned to meet again next week with GOP congressional leaders to work out a consensus on what needed to be changed. In the meantime, he said, he would talk to both Democratic and Republican governors.

He predicted that changes in Medicaid would not set off the same kinds of partisan wrangling that have kept the nation's governors from reaching an agreement on food, housing and cash assistance to the poor.

"Welfare is important, but if you really want to get to what drives most governors up the wall, it's Medicaid," he said.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD, another St. Louis Post Dispatch article, published on the 24th of November of last year, which is similar:

State officials estimate that that provision would result in health insurance coverage for 300,000 people who cannot afford it today—about half the State's uninsured.

That provision referred to is one which would waive Federal regulations and allow the State to design its own program.

I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GOP PLAN MAY LET MISSOURI ALTER MEDICAID—WAIVER WOULD ALLOW COVERAGE OF HALF OF STATE'S UNINSURED

(By Kathleen Best)

A promise by congressional Republicans to give the states more flexibility could help Missouri win federal approval of a dramatic shift in the way it provides medical services to its poor.

"Since this is a request for state flexibility, it is in line with the Republican agenda," said Donna Checkett, director of the Missouri Division of Medical Services.

Missouri wants a waiver of federal regulations that would allow it to rein in the cost of providing medical services to the poor at the same time it expands the program to include about half of the state's uninsured.

Health care for the poor would be provided through a new, managed-care system designed to hold down costs by, for example, encouraging people to seek treatment from family doctors, rather than going to emergency rooms, which are more expensive.

The state would contract with doctors, hospitals and health maintenance organizations to care for the state's 600,000 Medicaid participants.

In addition, Missourians who now earn too much to qualify for Medicaid but too little to buy private health insurance would be allowed to buy into the state-run program at reduced rates.

State officials estimate that that provision would result in health insurance coverage for 300,000 people who cannot afford it today—about half the state's uninsured.

Before Missouri can put the new system in place, it needs approval from the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services. With Republicans poised to take control of federal purse strings, department officials are likely to be encouraged to look favorably on such waiver requests.

Missouri made its formal application for a waiver last summer and is now answering questions about its proposal.

Checkett said the most nettlesome problems resolve around how to provide care for poor people with chronic mental illness.

"There have been a lot of questions—both from Washington and in the state—about whether individuals who are chronically mentally ill should go into managed care," she said.

"We're concerned about how to balance the protections we need to provide (for the mentally ill) with cost control."

The mentally ill tend to need lots of expensive medical care. But the nature of their illness often makes managing that care nearly impossible as some move in and out of institutions, sometimes living on the streets and occasionally disappearing from the system.

"Managed care is tricky with basically health people," Checkett said. "It's more challenging when you are dealing with the Medicaid population. When you are dealing with the mentally ill, you need to strike a balance very carefully and be very certain how appropriately you have balanced the cost interest with protecting a vulnerable population."

The state originally proposed setting up a pilot project that would carve out a package of behavioral health services for everyone on Medicaid that would be managed by a behavioral health organization.

But that approach resulted in howls of protest from mental health advocates and others, and has been, in effect, scrapped.

Chekett said no alternative plan had been decided, although negotiations were under way.

"Missouri is not alone in wrestling with this, I can guarantee you," said Checkett, who is chairman of the association representing state Medicaid directors.

"If you were to poll other states, you would find this issue of how to treat individuals with chronic mental illness has been a big one. It's been the hardest project I've ever worked on."

A final decision on the mental illness question will be made by Gov. Mel Carnahan and is expected by Jan. 15, when the state plans to present its answers to 259 questions posed by federal regulators.

Checkett said the other difficult questions on the list centered on how the state would provide managed care in rural areas of Missouri, where there are few doctors and fewer opportunities to impose cost controls.

"Those are questions we have ourselves and are working on," she said. "We hope we will be able to pay better rates for primary care under a managed care system, which would encourage more doctors to take on more Medicaid recipients."

Some doctors in rural areas now limit the number of poor patients they will see because the state pays proportionately higher rates for treating the poor at hospitals and in emergency rooms.

"Now, we spend $2.5 billion a year with a heavy bias toward institutional settings," she said. "We want to change that."

Checkett said she hoped that if all the answers are submitted by mid-January, the state can begin negotiating details of final approval in the spring. That schedule would coincide with a review by the Missouri Legislature. Legislators must appropriate the funds to pay for the revamped program.

But the same Republican majority in Washington that may make it easier for the states to experiment with new approaches may also throw a wrench into carrying out such plans.

GOP legislators already have begun talking about major changes in Medicaid and welfare funding, which could force Missouri back to the drawing board.

"I am concerned, just looking at Medicaid, that there will be serious discussion about entitlement caps," Checkett said. "I don't know what it means."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial which appeared in the St. Louis Post Dispatch entitled "Missouri's Wise Shift to HMOs," be printed in the RECORD.

It states, in part:

The Carnahan administration made the right move in deciding to use HMOs to provide medical care for the 154,000 St. Louis area residents eligible for Medicaid.

The potential of a waiver is similar to what we would have in a block grant.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the St. Louis Post Dispatch, Oct. 14, 1995]

MISSOURI'S WISE SHIFT TO HMO'S

Regional Medical Center appears to have won big in Missouri's decision to shift all Medicaid recipients in the St. Louis area into health maintenance organizations. The state itself is a winner, too.

The Carnahan administration made the right move in deciding to use HMOs to provide medical care for the 154,000 St. Louis area residents eligible for Medicaid. Otherwise, these patients would be cared for under fee-for-service programs with few ways to control costs. HMOs, by contrast, agree to treat patients for a fixed monthly fee, regardless of the services the patients require.

HMOs do this profitably by stressing prevention and managed care that denies patients access to unneeded and costly medical specialists, procedures and tests. The Carnahan administration estimates that the shift to HMOs could save the state as much as $11.6 million in the first 12 months. That may seem like a mere ripple in a Missouri Medicaid budget of about $2 billion, about half of which comes from state funds, but these savings mark an important step toward improved cost control.

Seven HMOs have contracts with Missouri to treat the state's Medicaid patients. Their monthly per-patient fees vary. The fee for Medicaid-eligible women between the ages of 21 and 44, for example, ranges from $120.30 to $127.35. The monthly per-patient fee for children between the ages of 7 and 13 ranges from $42.95 to $46.39.

Regional is a big winner because at least 33 percent of the 121,890 Medicaid patients have enrolled in HealthCare USA, the HMO coowned by Regional. Two other HMOs also are using Regional as the preferred provider of services under their plans. Some officials estimate that Regional could end up providing care for nearly half the Medicaid-eligible patients in the St. Louis area.

Whether these numbers will be sufficient to help Regional balance its budget and provide care for the uninsured is uncertain. In the last fiscal year, the hospital provided $40 million in care to indigent patients. This year, the hospital is facing a shortfall of at least $11 million because of reductions in federal funds for indigent care. In all probability, the city and county, which set up Regional, will have to cover this deficit.

Ideally, Regional's entry into the HMO business will help it pay more of its bills without having to rely on local subsidies. But the city and county must keep in mind that lots of the community's indigent patients don't have access to Medicaid. In other words, St. Louis and St. Louis County will continue to have an obligation to assist Regional in providing care for these patients.

Mr. ASHCROFT. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article from the Tennessean, published on October 24, 1995, which praises the success of Missouri's use of managed care for its Medicaid population.

I thank the Chair.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[FROM THE TENNESSEAN, OCT. 24, 1995]

TENNCARE COULD TAKE SOME NOTES

COVENTRY EXEC COMPARES PLANS

(By David A. Fox)

Tennessee may be in the vanguard of Medicaid reform with its TennCare program, but Missouri is the state that is pulling off Medicaid privatization most successfully, a local managed care executive said yesterday.

With a more incremental approach, Missouri has managed so far to avoid some of the problems that have plagued Medicaid reform here and in Florida, said Philip Hertik, chairman of Conventy Corp. Nashville-based Coventry, which does not participate in TennCare, is one of seven organizations that last month began enrolling St. Louis Medicaid members in private managed care plans.

In a speech to a national conference of the Health Industry Manufacturers Association at Loews Vanderbilt Plaza Hotel, Hertik cited several strengths of the Missouri plan to provide health care to the poor at a contained cost. Among them:

Missouri initiated its plan in just one area, rather than throughout the entire state.

It put the managed care contracts out for bid.

It prohibited marketing of the private plans directly to Medicaid beneficiaries.

A neutral company was chosen to gather data from each plan and distribute the information to Medicaid members for use in making their selection.

Missouri geared its plan only to the poor, beginning with people in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children program.

By contrast, TennCare began in January 1994 covering both the poor and uninsured statewide, at predetermined rates with aggressive marketing to Medicaid members. As a consequence, the $3.1 billion program serving 1.1 million residents started with great confusion among its members, with griping by providers whose reimbursements were slashed and with some apparently improper member-recruitment practices by at least one private health plan.

Hertik called the privatization of Medicaid "the biggest thing in managed care in the past 15 years" and one of several trends revamping the industry. With the companion trend toward privatizing Medicare, he forecast that market leverage increasingly will shift to managed care organizations and away from hospitals and other providers, such as home health, which traditionally have received a majority of their payments directly from government programs.

Probably the most obvious trend facing managed care organizations is the wave of mergers and acquisitions. But Hertik said this trend differs from consolidation waves in other industries that frequently are sparked by efforts to achieve operating efficiencies from such things as volume buying and the elimination of redundant services.

"All of this is aimed at market leverage, rather than just economies," he said.

The deals, including health maintenance organizations buying traditional indemnity insurors, are intended to increase the membership in local managed care plans.

"But having sheer size on a national scale and strong balance sheets don't necessarily make you the high-quality, low-cost provider in local markets where the purchasing decisions are made," he said. "It's just a little troubling knowing that its market leverage at the base of this consolidation."

Hertik also identified two other trends:

The reaching of "an inflection point" heralding "price competition as more the rule of the day" instead of boom-and-bust cycles in health insurance underwriting.

An emphasis by managed care companies in managing care, rather than just costs, by establishing clinical guidelines, practicing disease management and measuring outcomes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, has the Senator from Michigan completed his presentation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 14 seconds remaining for the Senator from Michigan, and 7 minutes and 30 seconds remaining for the Senator from Florida.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield the remainder of my 14 seconds.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, there is time we received, 3 minutes of general debate and 1 minute which was used by the Senator from Wisconsin. And I ask for the other 2 minutes, as well as the balance of our time on this amendment for my closing remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Thank you, Mr. President.

Mr. President, it has been an illuminating debate but almost as illuminating by what has not been said as what has been said.

What are some of the things that have been omitted? One of the major omissions is, how did the majority party arrive at the figure of $187 billion as the basis of its reduction in Medicaid expenditures by the Federal Government over the next 7 years? What was the source of that number? How was the calculation of the efficiencies and flexibilities that were going to be incorporated in this program used to derive the ultimate number of $187 billion?

The reason that there has not been an answer to that question is because there is not an answer to that question. The $187 billion was derived, not by a rational assessment of what would be the needs of the program or what will be the per capita increase in costs in delivering health care, but rather as a means of deriving a set of dollars to fund a tax cut for the wealthiest of Americans.

The fact is that the Medicaid Program has been operating at a per capita level of expenditure less than the national average in terms of all private sector health care spending, 7.1 percent in the private sector, 7 percent in Medicaid. This is what has been the level of Medicaid expenditure per capita. Under this bill, the proposal is to slash Medicaid from a 7 percent growth to a 1.4 percent growth.

Mr. President, I would defy anyone to say that is not going to result in a significant collapse of the Medicaid system's ability to serve the most vulnerable population in our country.

The second question that has not been discussed is, why has the Medicaid Program been growing at the rate that it has been growing?

Let me suggest three reasons, one that we ought to be very proud of, and that is that we are doing as a Nation a much better job of helping the poorest and most at risk of our children. Infant mortality in the United States has dropped by over 21 percent in the last decade. Infant mortality in America has dropped by over 21 percent in the last decade. We ought to be proud about that, and it has occurred because in large part we have extended Medicaid coverage to more and more at-risk mothers, and we have provided the kind of appropriate health care immediately after birth. We should not be ashamed of that.

Second, Medicaid has increased because of the aging of Americans. What has not been pointed out is that 60 percent of the Medicaid expenditures do not go to poor children and their mothers. Sixty percent of the expenditures go to the disabled and particularly to the frail elderly. In my State, 70 percent of Medicaid expenditures go to the disabled and the frail elderly.

That happens to be the segment of our population which is growing at the fastest rate. In most States the fastest growing generational component of the population is people who are over the age of 80—the very population that is most likely to need Medicaid assistance for long-term care.

The third reason for the increase in the number of persons on Medicaid has been the decline in private insurance coverage particularly for children. In 1977, 71 percent of the children of working Americans had their health care covered through their working parents. Today, in 1993, that number is down to 57 percent and projected in the year 2002 to be 47 percent. There has been almost a 1-to-1 increase in the poor children on Medicaid as there has been a decline in poor children covered through a parent's health care policy.

Those are three basic reasons why Medicaid has been increasing over the last few years, not because of oppressive Federal regulations.

Another thing that has not been discussed is the allocation formula. Would you like to see the allocation formula among the States? There it is. That is the arithmetic allocation formula contained in the Republicans' Medicaid proposal.

This formula, when you get through all the algebra, says that those States which today are receiving 4 and 5 times as much per capita as other States will continue to receive 4 to 5 times as much. We are seeing a pattern. We saw it in welfare reform and now we are seeing it in Medicaid, and that is identify the problem, decry the status quo, and then retain the funding formula of the current program. We did it in welfare reform, and we are about to do it again in Medicaid.

It would be like George Washington, after having won the American Revolution, saying, "but we are going to continue to pay tribute to George III." The very reason that we fought the war would have been forgotten.

Mr. President, we need to have a funding formula that treats all Americans fairly wherever they live. This bill of the Republicans continues basically the current funding formula into the indefinite future.

What is going to be lost under the Republican proposal? We are going to lose the flexibility of an effective State-Federal partnership—those States that experience growth, those States that experience economic decline, those States that experience a natural disaster. We had 12,000 people added to the Medicaid role in Florida within days after Hurricane Andrew because not only were their homes blown away, their jobs were blown away and they became eligible for Medicaid. And they needed it because of the disaster through which they just lived. That flexibility is going to be lost in this program. We are also going to lose the adequate funding of a Federal partner, and we are going to lose national standards particularly in the area of nursing homes.

It is not surprising that President Reagan said that the Medicaid Program should not be turned over to the States but that the Medicaid Program should be federalized in order to have a national standard of health care. Where are the voices for President Reagan today? This great advocate of a strong national program to protect the health of our children needs to be heard today.

I close by saying there is a better way. We are proposing in this motion, first, that we have a rational reduction in Medicaid. What we essentially are saying is that we will propose to restrain Medicaid to 1 percentage point less than the private sector rate of growth in health care spending. And with that 1 percent restraint, that is, that the per capita for Medicaid will be 6.1 percent per year over the next 7 years, we will save $62 billion. We think that we can make that kind of a change without ravaging the system, and we would distribute the money through a per capita cap.

This maintains the individual entitlement to Medicaid coverage and creates incentives to maintain health care coverage. It provides for funding into each of the four categories of principal

Medicaid populations, that is, poor children, their mothers, the disabled, and the frail elderly, so that we will not create what is, I believe, an inevitable result of the block grant approach which is going to be a war at the State level among those four groups of beneficiaries.

We would also allow for a continuation of innovative programs such as the program in the State of Tennessee. We believe that the kinds of flexibility that we would provide, which would make it easier for States to move into managed care and easier for States to use community-based services to meet the needs of the elderly, will produce some real economies and therefore reduce the rates of expenditure over the next 7 years, an attainable goal without collapsing the system.

It is interesting, Mr. President, that the proposal that I make today, the per capita cap alternative to block grants, is the proposal which was introduced in the Senate on June 29, 1994, by our distinguished majority leader, cosponsored by 39 Republican Members. A similar program was introduced by our colleague, the senior Senator from Texas, and the junior Senator from Rhode Island, also promoting a per capita cap on Medicaid as a means of reforming the system.

Mr. President, I believe that we have a program that will achieve significant savings without sacrificing the safety net that Medicaid has represented. We can have these reforms while retaining a program that is vital to 37 million of our most vulnerable Americans. What we will sacrifice is a little piece of the tax break that we are about to give to the wealthiest of Americans in order to assure minimal health care standards for the poorest and most vulnerable of Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that statements from scores of organizations in opposition to the Republican plan and in support of the proposal that is before us be printed in the RECORD and that an analysis of the mandates which are contained in the Republican proposal also be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 3, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The undersigned organizations are opposed to eliminating the entitlement status of individuals under the Medicaid program. The Medicaid program provides basic health and long term-care services to over 33 million American men, women, and children. Eliminating the entitlement status would jeopardize coverage for these seniors, families, children, and persons with disabilities, at a time when employers are dropping coverage and the number of uninsured persons continues to rise.

We understand that, in the interest of deficit reduction, savings must be achieved in the Medicaid program. However, extreme and disproportionate cuts in the Medicaid program will result in more Americans uninsured and in poor health, disincentives for providers to serve this population, and untenable cost shifting to state and local governments, providers and private payers. We stand ready to work with you on ways to achieve reasonable levels of savings without endangering the access of millions of beneficiaries to essential health care. We do not believe that ending the entitlement nature of the Medicaid program would achieve these objectives.

OCTOBER 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: As groups deeply concerned with the health and well-being of America's children and families, we are writing to express our fundamental opposition to the proposed House and Senate reconciliation bills' Medicaid provisions.

The physical and mental health of America's children today determines the social and economic health of the whole nation in the future. Unfortunately, our children's health is already at risk: we lag behind many other industrialized and some developing nations on key indicators like infant mortality, low birthweight, prenatal care, and immunizations. The Medicaid proposals in the reconciliation bills will make this situation far worse.

Already, nine and a half million U.S. children lack any health insurance. Even though just as many parents as ever are employed, children have been losing private, employer-based insurance at a rate of 1 percent a year for more than a decade. Medicaid has been making the difference, as its increased coverage of children from working poor and near poor families has kept the number of uninsured children from skyrocketing.

But as the drop in private insurance continues, if Medicaid shrinks instead of picking up some of the slack, children will lead in paying the price. With a $182 billion Medicaid cut, in the seventh year of the cut 6½ million children would lose eligibility if the cut is translated into eligibility reductions applied proportionately to all groups (e.g., children, people with disabilities, the elderly, and other adults). Then 19 million children would be uninsured in 2002. In fact, we fear that political conditions in state capitals will lead children to bear a disproportionately large share of any Medicaid cuts, so the number of uninsured children would be even larger.

The United States can invest now—in immunizations, preventive care and early treatment—or it can pay later in more expensive remedial care and the high social and productivity cost of children growing up unhealthy. We all support fiscal responsibility in the federal budget, but to balance the budget on the backs of children and destroy a system of assured health care that is fundamental to the health of millions of America's children and pregnant women is unacceptable.

Sincerely.

OCTOBER 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the nation's pediatricians and children's hospitals, the American Academy of Pediatrics and the National Association of Children's Hospitals urge you to make sure that regardless of how Medicaid is restructured Congress includes basic protections for the health coverage of children and adolescents.

This is the message we are seeking to bring to all members of Congress and the public in a new paid advertisement we are running this week in the national press. We are enclosing a copy for you. It outlines the protections children and adolescents need in coverage, medically necessary and preventive care, access to pediatric care, and immunizations under a restructured Medicaid program.

These kinds of protections make good sense, because children and adolescents represent over half of all recipients of Medicaid. In fact, Medicaid pays for the health care of one fourth of the nation's children and adolescents as well as one third of the country's infants. Protecting their health coverage, regardless of the state in which they live, is a low cost but high return investment not only in children's well-being today but also in the health and productivity of at least one third of the nation's future work force. Medicaid coverage for a child averages only one-eighth the cost of coverage for a senior citizen.

We were heartened by the bipartisanship of the Senate Finance Committee in addressing the need for children's coverage. It would require all states under a restructured Medicaid program to cover poor children and pregnant women. We believe most members of Congress share in this conviction.

Your vote on Medicaid legislation this year may be the single most important vote you will cast for the health of our nation's children in this decade. Please vote to protect America's most important resources: our children

Sincerely,

JOE M. SANDERS, Jr., M.D.,
Executive Director, American Academy of Pediatrics.
LAWRENCE A. MCANDREWS,
President and CEO, National Association of Children's Hospitals.

Enclosure.

HOW TO MAKE SURE THEY'RE STILL SMILING AFTER CONGRESS GETS THROUGH WITH MEDICAID.

It should go without saying that the key to having a healthy America in the future is keeping children healthy today.

Those of us who spend every moment of our working lives keeping children healthy want to say it anyway.

Because at this moment, Congress is making drastic changes to the Medicaid program, the most serious side effect of which is that the health care needs of millions of children will not be sufficiently guaranteed.

CONGRESS IS TAKING THE "AID" OUT OF MEDICAID

The Congressional block grant proposals could leave it to the States to determine who is eligible to receive benefits and what kind of benefits will be offered.

Today's system at least guarantees specific preventive health care benefits vital to the health and well-being of many children from poor and working families.

CONGRESS MUST BUILD IN CERTAIN BASIC GUARANTEES

Regardless of how Congress changes Medicaid overall, the following protections should be included:

1. Children and adolescents from low-income families must maintain guaranteed Medicaid coverage.
2. Medically necessary care, including preventive services, must not be compromised.
3. Children and adolescents must retain access to appropriately trained and certified providers of pediatric care.
4. children should be guaranteed all age appropriate immunizations.

Let's protect America's most important, most vulnerable resources: our children. Let's help keep them healthy. And smiling.

[From Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities]

A MESSAGE TO CONGRESS

CONGRESSIONAL MEDICAID "REFORM" PROPOSALS WILL HARM CHILDREN AND ADULTS WITH DISABILITIES AND THEIR FAMILIES

Member organizations of the Consortium for Citizens with Disabilities Health and Long Term Services Task Forces are extremely concerned about the impact that both the House and Senate Medicaid "reform" proposals will have on the lives of children and adults with disabilities and their families. We strongly urge you not to support these proposals and to carefully reconsider how to "reform" the Medicaid program so that children and adults with disabilities and other individuals with low and very low incomes are not harmed.

The proposals reported out of the House Commerce and Senate Finance Committees make harmful, fundamental changes to the Medicaid program—a program which now is the largest source of federal and state funding for services and supports for individuals with disabilities. It has been access to critically needed health and related services and to essential community-based long term services and supports—provided through the Medicaid program—that have enabled families to stay together and children and adults with disabilities to live fuller and more productive lives in their communities.

Specific CCD concerns relate to the following issues:

While the Senate proposal maintains a guarantee of health care coverage for low income individuals with disabilities, the House proposal completely eliminates the current individual entitlement status of Medicaid for people with disabilities.

Neither the Senate or House proposals would require states to provide any specific services, except for childhood immunizations.

Medicaid is no longer an entitlement and if there is no requirement for the provision of a full range of services, people with disabilities will lose access to critical health and long term services, and supports. For people with disabilities and serious health conditions, the lack of access to health and health-related services and supports will lead to an exacerbation of existing health problems and/or disabilities, as well as the emergence of additional health problems and secondary disabilities. For people with long term care needs, the lack of Medicaid coverage will lead to the loss of services and supports that help them to live more independent lives in the community—in some cases leading to homelessness and inappropriate institutionalization. In addition, families of children with disabilities will have their economic security undermined as they try to pay for essential health and long term services. It is important to remember—especially in a nation where the number of individuals insured through their employer continues to decrease—that for many people with disabilities, Medicaid has been the only health care coverage available.

While both proposals include state level "set-asides" for certain vulnerable populations, i.e. families with pregnant women and children, elderly individuals, and low income people with disabilities under age 65, the proposed funding formula for these set-asides would mean that states could not continue to provide the full range of services and supports that they now provide for children and adults with disabilities.

States would be permitted—within these broad categories—to determine what services to provide. According to the House proposal, for each set-aside category, states would have to spend 85 percent of the average percentage of the state's Medicaid spending from FY 1992 through FY 1994 devoted to mandatory services (what the state now must cover) for people in that category. According to the Senate proposal, for each set-aside category, states would have to spend 85 percent of the state's Medicaid spending in FY 1995 on mandatory services for people in that category.

This formula does not take into consideration spending on optional services (what the state now chooses to cover). For people with disabilities, this is a major blow. Current optional services are the ones most likely to be of critical importance to children and adults with disabilities and dollars currently spent towards them would not be counted towards the disability set-aside. Optional services include the following: speech, physical, and occupational therapy, psychological services, clinic services, prescription drugs, dental services, eyeglasses, prosthetic devices, rehabilitative services, home and community based services, ICF-MR services, personal care services, respiratory care services, and case management.

In addition to the loss of the personal entitlement to specific required services and the weak funding formula, both the House and Senate proposals eliminate consumer and quality assurance protections and federal oversight in Medicaid services or Medicaid funded facilities.

This includes elimination of federal nursing home and ICF/MR regulations and even the minimum requirement that funds be spent on active treatment for individuals in institutional settings rather than merely custodial care. While Congress continues to speak of the value of devolution and state's rights, the CCD remembers when states could not or would not provide needed services and supports for children and adults with disabilities and their families. There are well warranted and deep-seated fears in the disability community that the loss of minimum federal standards coupled with intensifying fiscal pressures will mean that some states return to institution-based custodial care with the consequent loss of individual freedom, rights, and quality of life. The public policy and the original intent behind federal oversight requirements currently attached to funding for certain Medicaid long-term services must be remembered and respected. The proposals also permit the states to move more people into managed care plans while at the same time removing current consumer protections related to managed care.

The CCD strongly urges you to carefully reconsider how to "reform" the Medicaid program and not to support the passage of the provisions in the Medicaid Transformation Act of 1995 as part of the budget reconciliation bill. We ask you not to eviscerate a program that has allowed millions of children and adults with disabilities to live fuller and more productive lives in the community because they now have access to both acute health care and needed long term services and supports. The CCD does not support the status quo on Medicaid. We do believe, however, that there are changes to the program that can be made that will not penalize those who now benefit from the program. These include the elimination of the current incentives for institutional care and the provision instead of incentives for home and community-based long term services and supports.

Finally, the CCD supports efforts to reduce the federal deficit. However, the CCD strongly believes that it is unfortunate that most of the programs on the table for deficit reduction are those of importance to children and adults with disabilities—such as Medicaid, children's Supplemental Security Income, housing, social services, jobs, and education. It is also unfortunate that Congress is endeavoring to balance the budget using only 48% of the federal budget and that 48% comes at the expense of programs of critical importance to the lives of people with disabilities.

The CCD asserts that the individual entitlement status of Medicaid to a mandated set of benefits for children and adults with disabilities must be maintained.

The CCD asserts that federal reimbursement should be maintained for the full range of acute and long term services and supports that are presently available, including optional services which states now choose to provide through their Medicaid programs. In addition, the states should be required to continue to contribute at least their current share of funds to finance Medicaid services and supports.

The CCD asserts that the federal requirements that states meet certain standards of care and continue appropriate quality assurance measures, as well as due process and other consumer protections must be maintained.

The CCD asserts that managed care should be an "option" and not the only avenue of services for people with disabilities and that strong consumer protections, including timely and appropriate access to all necessary services, supports, and providers must be ensured.

The CCD asserts that current incentives for institutional care built into the Medicaid program must be eliminated and replaced with incentives for the provision of home and community-based long term services and supports.

OCTOBER 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: As providers of long-term care services, we are concerned that the current Finance Committee proposal to impose a block grant financing mechanism for Medicaid fails to ensure that adequate resources will be made available to meet the needs of our nation's elderly, disabled, and infirm. We fear that the proposed annual increases in federal Medicaid funding for state programs will be insufficient to meet the quality of care needed by residents of long-term care facilities and subsequently reduce access to services. Furthermore, the failure to meet the resource needs anticipated in future years for these services will negate the many advances made in this area as a result of the enactment of the nursing home reform provisions of OBRA '87.

We urge you to support the retention of federal oversight of nursing home quality linked to a statutory provision ensuring that adequate financial resources are made available to meet prescribed levels of service. Although this linkage can take several forms, the current formulation which backs the nursing home reforms of OBRA '87 to a statutory direction that payors of services (both federal and state) must ensure the payment of adequate rates has proven a workable mechanism and should not be repealed.

Federal nursing home reform standards, joined with existing reimbursement standards have resulted in a steady improvement in the quality of long-term care services. Without such a linkage, this quality of care cannot be sustained. It is our sincere desire to move forward with the quality of care provided in nursing homes, and recognize that the ability to do so is dependent upon the provision of adequate financial resources.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COUNTIES.
Washington, DC, October 24, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Association of Counties (NACo) strongly opposes the block granting of Medicaid and the loss of a federal guarantee to benefits. Counties will be saddled with significant cost shifts as a result of capping the federal contribution to Medicaid.

We do not believe that states will find enough budgetary efficiencies without reducing eligibility. The flexibility given to states in the operation of the proposed restructuring will trickle down to counties in the form of flexibility to raise property taxes, cut other necessary services or further reduce staff. In many states, counties are required to serve individuals with no private or public health insurance. The cuts to the program will have the effect of increasing the costs of that state mandate.

Individuals will continue to have health needs, regardless of the payor source. That is why we have always supported the intergovernmental nature of the Medicaid program and the assurance that there is some minimum level of coverage guaranteed to eligible individuals, regardless of the state in which they reside. While we support the increased use of managed care and the further targeting of the disproportionate share program, we believe that provisions in the bill overall will harm many current recipients and the counties which serve them.

If you have any questions about our position, please call Tom Joseph, Associate Legislative Director, at 202/942-4230.

Sincerely,

LARRY E. NAAKE,
Executive Director.

BUREAUCRACY CREATED BY THE GOP MEDICAID PLAN

In the Medicaid debate, the GOP has stressed that offering states block grants will reduce federal and state bureaucracy. However, a review of the GOP Medicaid Plan indicates that it creates as much bureaucracy as it purports to reduce. Some of the bureaucratic initiatives included in the plan are important and necessary; however, the argument that the GOP plan reduces bureaucracy just doesn't add up. The following is a very conservative estimate of the total number of new bureaucratic requirements created by the GOP Medicaid plan:

Number of new requirements for each submitted Medicaid plan	32
Number of States and District of Columbia (times)	51
Total number of new requirements for all plans (=)	1,632
Additional committees, advisory panels, demonstration projects, etc. (+)	15
Total number of new bureaucratic requirements (=)	1,647

Note: The total does not include drug provider pricing reports or other federal and state drug-related reports.

Specifically, the proposal requires:

SECTION 2100

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I congratulate the excellent statement and arguments that have been made by my distinguished colleague from Florida on the matter at hand. I believe we are about ready to come down to the end of this and go on to the education amendment. But before we proceed, I wish to yield 1 minute to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. I thank our colleague from Nebraska.

Mr. President, I apologize for being tied up in the Committee on Banking and Housing. I think as we look at this legislation people have to ask the fundamental question of who is being hurt by this proposal. No one is suggesting we ought not to make reforms in these programs to make them more efficient. But when 4.4 million children over the next 7 years, as the estimates say, will lose the kind of protection that Medicaid has provided, that in my view goes too far. I think the American people are responding to that. It is extreme. Clearly, corrections need to be made, but this goes way beyond what most Americans think is right and fair.

If we are going to invest in the future and promote growth, then these young children who have no other safety net to protect them are going to be lost in that process. It is bad enough to place at risk 12 million Americans, 8 of whom are in effect adults with long-term care needs. But for almost 5 million children who may lose Medicaid in this country who are born into these circumstances and will start their lives in this way, I think is wrong headed; I think it is extreme; I think it is unfair; and I think it is dangerous for this country's future.

I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, after conversation with several Senators, including my distinguished colleague from Michigan, I think we have general agreement now that we will, under the previous order, move to the next order of business, which is the so-called education amendment.

The time under that amendment will be controlled by the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, who I think is ready to offer the amendment. In the interest of conserving time—we have had a general agreement—and I ask unanimous consent at this time that instead of the 2 hours, 1 hour each side, on the education amendment, that the time be reduced to 90 minutes or 45 minutes per side. I propose that as a unanimous consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Is there objection?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, the majority does not object. We support the 90-minute time agreement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair. I hope at this time the Chair could recognize the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

AMENDMENT NO. 2959

(Purpose: To strike those portions of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources reconciliation title that impose higher student loan costs on students and families, by striking the 85 percent fee imposed on colleges and universities based on their student loan volume, restoring Federal interest payments on subsidized student loans during the 6-month grace period in which graduates look for jobs, eliminating interest rate increases on parent (PLUS) loans, and eliminating the 20 percent cap on direct lending, and to provide an offset by striking the provisions that dilute the alternative minimum tax)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk shall report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] for himself, Mr. SIMON, Mr. PELL, Mr. DODD, Mr. HARKIN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. WELLSTONE, Mrs. FEINSTEIN and Mrs. MURRAY, proposes an amendment numbered 2959.

On page 1409, beginning with line 8, strike all through page 1410, line 25.

On page 1421, beginning with line 15, strike all through page 1423, line 13.

On page 1424, beginning with line 2, strike all through page 1425, line 16.

Strike chapter 3 of subtitle B of title XII.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 6 minutes.

Mr. President, we are 2 days into this debate on the budget recommendations of our Republican friends in the U.S. Senate. We had an opportunity yesterday to debate the issue of whether we are going to cut $270 billion out of the Medicare program in order to give tax breaks for the wealthy individuals and corporations.

Today we had the debate about whether we are going to take $180 billion away from the neediest children in our society and from the seniors of our country who have made such a difference to our Nation and put them at greater risk.

The third element in this whole Republican proposal is to deny, or move towards denying, the sons and daughters of working families the opportunity to achieve the American dream, that is, in the area of higher education.

The whole debate on higher education was a key debate in the 1960's between President Kennedy and President Nixon. During that time, this country went on record to provide help and assistance to the young people of this country. We reserved three-quarters of a Federal assistance program for grant money and one-quarter for loans. The programs built on the enormous success that this country saw at the end of World War II. We expended, in today's dollars, $9 billion on education assistance to those who came back and fought in World War II.

It is an interesting fact, Mr. President, that the analysis of this program proved it was a remarkable success. In fact, every dollar was actually given in grants—not loans—and returned some $8 to the Federal Treasury.

This Nation was committed to higher education. This Nation was committed to the young people of this country, to their hopes and dreams for a future America. But under the Republican proposal, effectively what they are saying is, "We're going to take some $10 billion away, away from the students of this country, and make it more complex, more difficult, and in many instances deny the dreams of those young people." For what reason? For the reason of providing the tax breaks for wealthy corporations and wealthy individuals.

That is what this is about, Mr. President. That is what this is about. The amendment that we have offered today responds to that provision of the Republican bill.

First of all, the provision that institutes a new student loan tax that requires colleges and universities to pay the Federal Government an annual fee of .85 percent of their student loan volume is struck. In addition, the amendment strikes provisions that eliminate the interest-free grace period, a concept that has been supported by Republicans and Democrats since the student loan program began.

We also strike the increased interest rates on parents in the PLUS loans, which are necessary loans for parents that do not have great assets. Striking the increased interest rates will help those parents continue to take advantage of the PLUS loans. Finally, the amendment strikes provisions capping the direct loan program at 20 percent of loan volume. The program is now at almost 40 percent participation.

The amendment takes us back to the existing law which will permit any college in this country, in any State, to choose to participate in the direct loan program. Not under the Republican program.

What we are saying is: If colleges, their boards of trustees, parents, faculty, teachers, young people want to move toward a direct loan program, that choice ought to be available at the local level. The Republican proposal denies colleges and universities and their communities the right to choose a loan program that works for them. That right to choose was a bipartisan agreement that was made in 1993. I believe that denying colleges and universities the right to choose is unwise and unfair.

And, Mr. President, we offer a full offset for this change to the Republican proposal, so that our amendment is budget neutral. We will return help and assistance to the students of our country by striking the provisions of the Finance Committee's reconciliation bill that dilute the alternative minimum tax on corporations.

The alternative minimum tax on corporations sets a minimum corporate tax liability. It was passed in 1986 because many corporations were escaping any kind of tax payment. And you know what the Republicans did? They relaxed it to benefit corporations by $9.2 billion. And so the Senate of the United States will have a chance today to say, "Do we want to relax the alternative minimum tax for corporations by $9.2 billion or do we want to provide the help and the assistance for the sons and daughters of working families?"

We have effectively voted on this amendment before, and we are going to see if the whiplash of the Republican leadership is going to march—force the Republicans to march in lock step to reject what they have supported in May: a reduction in the cuts to students.

We are taking the changes in the alternative minimum tax that provided easier payments for the largest corporations of this country and using them for the deficit reduction requirements for education and leaving these programs alone. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. President, I do not think we have to make the case, or should have to make the case, that education is central to the American dream. But under the Republican proposal, they change that dream into a nightmare. The idea that the Republican proposal is a shared sacrifice is malarkey.

They say, "There's a shared sacrifice in our Human Resources Committee's proposal." The shared sacrifice is two-thirds—two-thirds of the burden is going to be on the sons and daughters of working families. Half of them earn below $20,000 a year; two-thirds of them below $40,000. It is interesting to note that these are the same people whose taxes are going to be increased under the EITC. These are the same people that are going to have to provide additional help and assistance to their parents to increase the copayments and the deductibles.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 more minutes.

Again, these are the same people whose taxes will be increased under EITC, as Senator MOYNIHAN clearly pointed out when he put the chart before the U.S. Senate and the American people. We are already going to have to pay increased payments under this bill.

What do our Republican friends have against working families? They raised the EITC that goes to the low-income, working families. And now they are denying the opportunity for education for many of the sons and daughters.

Mr. President, I want to just point out that a $250 increase in the cost of college will cause roughly 20,000 fewer students from working families to enroll. Because there are almost $1,000 in additional costs to working families just in the grace-period provisions of the Republican proposal, 80,000 young people in this country will not go to college because of the increased burden that their families will not be able to pay.

Now, there will be a time when someone says, "This is really a very minor slap on the wrist for these families." They will point out, "Look, you are only talking about $900 for the grace period, only $500 more under the PLUS loans, and only $25 under the institutional loans."

Mr. President, that all adds up. In my State of Massachusetts, working families will have to pay more than $200 million in additional costs. That is wrong. It is a transfer of wealth from working families to the already wealthy individuals in our country. Therefore, I hope that this amendment is agreed to. It is a responsible amendment. We have debated this issue many times and we have said that we believe that education is fundamental to the future of America and young Americans. Why should we dampen, and in many instances extinguish, the hopes and dreams of the sons and daughters of working families?

That is the choice here. We can strike the alternative minimum tax or we can dock the sons and daughters of working families.

I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island who has been a former chairman of the Education Committee and who has made such a mark in education policy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHCROFT). The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I thank my colleague. I am very, very pleased to be an original cosponsor of this critically important amendment. What we are talking about here is a capital investment in the future of our Nation. Passage of this amendment would accomplish the objective of taking students and their families, not completely, but partially out of harm's way.

First, it would strike the first-time-ever fee on institutions of higher education. This fee of .85 percent, based on the total amount of money borrowed by students and parents at every institution of learning, is an unprecedented move and a cost that would undoubtedly be passed along to students in higher fees. Once established, I am afraid that it will increase over time.

Second, this amendment would strike the increase on the interest rate in the Parent Loan Program. Some argue that the increase would be so small as to be insignificant. I disagree.

A parent who borrows for 4 years of college at a typical 4-year public university will borrow a total of $27,000. If those loans are repaid over 10 years, the increase in the interest rate will mean those parents will have to pay an additional $1,400. If they take advantage of extended repayment, the cost could well increase to $2,800. Neither of these figures is insignificant.

A parent who borrows at a private university will borrow more than $66,000. Repayment over a 10-year period will mean an additional $3,400 that parents will have to pay because of the increase in the interest rate. If repayment is extended over 20 years, the additional cost to the parent will be nearly $6,900, or $7,000.

Third, the amendment would strike the 20-percent cap on the Direct Loan Program. This would leave alone the direct loan conference agreement of 2 years ago. It would mean that we would continue to have a spirited competition between direct and regular loans, a competition that has brought students improved services, better rates and more benefits.

And fourth, the amendment would strike the elimination of the interest subsidy during the grace period. This is of vital interest to students who have just completed their education and are out looking for a job. Proponents argue that the cost of eliminating the grace period will be small, but to a student who is just beginning a job, every dollar counts.

In terms of the package, I point out that while one change might appear small, the combined impact of the four changes addressed in this amendment is considerable. Students and their families will feel the impact of these changes. Instead of taking them out of harm's way, it will place them directly in the line of fire. We can avoid that outcome if we adopt this amendment. I urge my colleagues to join me in voting for it. If ever there was a capital investment amendment to improve the competitive ability of our Nation, this is it.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 minutes to our friend and colleague and former member of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, JEFF BINGAMAN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is recognized.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Thank you very much, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for yielding me time.

Mr. President, I am in strong support of the Kennedy-Simon student loan amendment. It does deal with a very serious problem that I see in this budget reconciliation bill.

Very simply, what we are talking about here is $10.8 billion that is to be reduced or eliminated out of the funds that will otherwise be made available to students over the next 7 years, students who want to go to college and who do not have the financial means with which to go to college.

That $10.8 billion is presented by the Republican majority as being fairly shared. We are going to try to charge some of that to the loan industry and some of that to the students and families themselves.

I have a chart here, Mr. President, which I think makes the point pretty clearly that the cost, that $10.8 billion, is not fairly shared. What this chart shows is that something like 30 percent of this entire $10.8 billion, $3.1 billion specifically, will be additional costs to the loan industry; 70 percent of the entire cut in education is costs to students and their families. That is $7.6 billion over 7 years.

Let me talk about some of the specific things that we are doing to increase the costs to students and families during that time, because some of it is precedent setting and, in my view, it is a very bad precedent and reflects very badly on our country.

One which has been referred to by both the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Rhode Island is that we are starting, for the first time, to charge interest on the loan from the day of graduation. That may seem like a small item and, in some larger global sense, it may be, but it signifies something about what the Congress is about in this reconciliation bill.

Always before, the idea was when students graduated from college, we would give them a 6-month grace period in which to get a job, in which to begin to receive regular monthly paychecks, before they were charged the interest on that loan.

But we are eliminating that in this legislation. Here the idea is that we can pick up $2.7 billion over the next 7 years by eliminating that grace period and starting to charge that interest from the day they graduate. I think that is a shortsighted, mistaken and wrong policy decision.

A second item that I particularly want to focus on that I think is perhaps even a worse precedent is this whole idea of charging a tax to schools that want to make a student loan. In my State, the schools that are making Federal student loans are generally schools that are trying to provide education to moderate-income families and students. They would be charged, under this bill, .85 percent, nearly 1 percent of the value of the loan, at the time the loan is originated.

When I bought a house, I remember that they charged me a loan origination fee. You always shop around to see where can you get the fewest points, where will they charge you the fewest points for your house loan. The Government has never charged points for student loans before. We have never charged origination fees when we made a loan to a student to go to school.

This year, for the first time, we will begin to charge an origination fee. Now we charge it to the institution. The school itself has to pay the student loan and, of course, that builds in an incentive for the school perhaps to look for more financially capable students. They do not have that cost. They do not need to worry about origination fees if they get students that, in fact, do not need student loans. I think it is a very bad precedent. I think when you start charging an origination fee for a student loan, it is a sad day in our Nation's history. That is exactly what we see proposed in this bill. That would, supposedly, result in the Federal Government picking up $2 billion over the next 7 years.

We are increasing the interest rates on family interest. That is another $1.5 billion. And then by capping the amount of direct student loans that can be made, presumably we are going to pick up $1.4 billion.

Mr. President, this amendment would strike the most onerous provisions of the reconciliation bill by striking the provisions that increase the costs of loans for students and their families.

The Republicans propose that almost 70 percent of the $10.8 billion cuts in the current student loan system be shouldered by students and their families. Only $3.1 billion is borne by the loan industry and $100 million by cost sharing with States. The overwhelming majority of these cuts, shown in red on this chart, would be shouldered by the very students the program is intended to help. Only 30 percent of the cuts, shown in yellow on this chart, are imposed on banks, guaranty agencies, and secondary markets in the student loan industry. That means that directly or indirectly the wrong people suffer. It will cost needy students more to borrow.

The Kennedy-Simon amendment fixes that. It strikes all portions of the Labor and Human Resources Committee reconciliation title that impose higher student loan costs on students and their families. Let me show you how.

First, the amendment would restore a 6-month interest-free grace period following graduation. That means that interest would not accrue on student loans for 6 months after graduation giving students time to look for a job. This amendment strikes the Republican cut of $2.7 billion for the interest-free grace period. The amendment would thereby save an individual student between $700 and $2,500, depending on the length of study and amount borrowed.

Next, the amendment eliminates a new .85-percent fee on new student loans. It strikes the $2 billion Republicans would save by introducing this new loan fee. The Republican plan would force colleges either to absorb this new tax on student loans or pass it on as increased students fees. This would have meant about $25 every year for about 14 million students with new loans. It would have effectively penalized schools for accepting needy students.

Next, the amendment eliminates the rise in interest rates families pay for student loans. Without this amendment, the increase in PLUS loan interest rates could amount to up to $5,000 a family. This increase would be paid by the very families who lack other assets against which to borrow, and must therefore borrow most heavily from this program to afford 4 years of college.

Finally, the amendment eliminates the 20 percent cap on the direct loan program. The program is now at 30 to 40 percent and has made the student loan process much quicker and more efficient for participating students.

This amendment is good policy for the Nation. In New Mexico, it will be absolutely essential. It will enable a better education for some students who otherwise would not go to college. Colleges in New Mexico have volunteered my office the numbers of their students on Federal financial aid because, they tell me, they know is vital for the students they serve. They say three New Mexico colleges alone have well over 20,000 students receiving some form of Federal financial aid. At the University of New Mexico, there are about 10,000; at New Mexico State University, about 9,000; at Western New Mexico University, about 1,400. Other colleges have more.

More important, over 70 percent of all financial aid in most New Mexico colleges is Federal. In some it is almost the only source available. In New Mexico Highlands University and New Mexico Junior College in Hobbs there is very little financial assistance that is not Federal. These schools serve students to whom financial assistance is absolutely essential, whose families cannot sustain higher levels of personal debt. Other States may be richer than New Mexico. But in my home State, this amendment would make the difference in reducing the level of student and family debt to a point that working families feel it is within their reach. This would enable some students to go to college who otherwise might not go. Graduating from college is no longer a ticket to the good life; it has become a mandatory qualification for most entry-level professional jobs.

This bill strikes at the heart of the Federal Government's commitment to education; the Kennedy-Simon amendment renews that commitment to making college accessible to qualified students regardless of privilege. I urge my colleagues to adopt this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BINGAMAN. I urge my colleagues to support the Kennedy-Simon amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 28 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield myself such time as I may need to make a brief statement or two regarding this amendment. And then I will yield time to another Member on our side.

The chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and I were chatting here on the floor, and the Senator from Kansas indicated to me a couple of things. Members on both sides are probably aware that there are discussions going on now that may directly address much of the content of this amendment in a way that would be very similar to what is being proposed here. Those discussions are going on as we debate this issue.

There is likely to be, from our side, an amendment which would be responsive to some of these concerns, many of which were raised in the Labor and Human Resources Committee—Members on both sides of the aisle—during the debate.

For the students who are watching today and listening to our proceedings, or their families, I want to point out a couple of factors which, once again, the chairman of the committee reminded me of, which we discussed during our deliberations on this.

First of all, nothing in the reconciliation package will, in any way, affect the volume of loans available to students. In other words, the growth rate of student loan volume will continue unabated under the Republican package. Students who are hoping to get loans will have those loans available. We are not contracting the size of the loan volume. I believe it will be in the vicinity of $26 billion annually under this package.

In addition, I point out concerns that have been raised hear about the origination fee that is part of this package. There was an amendment, as the President will remember, brought before the committee that would have eliminated the origination fee. It was opposed and voted down. I believe every Member of the minority party voted against an amendment that would have eliminated those origination fees.

I want to, once again, point out just for clarification, insofar as the grace period issue is concerned, we are not asking students to begin paying back their loans upon completion of school. Our changes only go to the issues of when interest begins to accrue. Students will still have 6 months after they graduate before they are required to begin paying their student loans. Indeed, as I think everybody is aware, the overriding goal we have here in this reconciliation package, and more broadly in our budget, is to bring the budget into balance.

Mr. President, when we do that, we not only will bring down interest rates for the Federal Government, we also will bring down interest rates across America for everybody. When those interest rates come down, they will not just come down insofar as what we pay on the bills, it will be for what people pay on home mortgages and with respect to student loans. As those student loan interest rates come down, they will, I believe far more effectively, help students to finance their college education than anything we are doing here today, because a much lower student loan rate is going to mean far less total dollars spent by students than anything else we could do here in the U.S. Senate.

I also note that in our finance package here in the reconciliation bill, there also is a student loan deduction available to people who are paying student loans, for middle-income families. That, too, will help to offset the burdens of college education that middle-class families in this country pay.

So we are trying to be responsive. We are not reducing the volume rate. We are not requiring students to begin paying their loans earlier; and, most important, we are trying to balance the budget so that interest rates on student loans will be so low that they will help students in the kind of ways students want most, which is a total amount of money being paid back, lower than what they have to pay back today.

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, this is the first time I have come to the floor to comment on this reconciliation package. I guess the first thing we tried to look at with regard to this is the tax cuts and also the cuts in spending. One has to look at it from the standpoint of how it affects home. What does it do for my home State of Montana? There are some things not in this package that I think, if you want to do something about a farm bill, give farmers accelerated depreciation and income averaging, we would not need a farm bill, if you want to be fair with agriculture because of the conditions under which they work.

But in this package, I congratulate Senator DOMENICI, the chairman of the Budget Committee and, of course, the Finance Committee, for their exceptionally hard work to try to balance and make it fair. Tax relief for families is the biggest part of this tax relief provision. It goes to families. Now, we hear talk on the other side of the aisle this morning about a cutback in programs. Why do you think there are tax cuts in here? Because it allows families to make the decision on how they want to spend their money, not how it is spent here in Washington, DC; it is for them who live in the hinterlands. There is tax relief for senior citizens and small businesses.

When you look at my State of Montana, that is going right down the line where we need a little relief. And we close some loopholes for corporations. So they did exceptional work on this. We have heard about the tax break for the rich, corporate welfare, and all of this, those loopholes for the corporations. They have been closed. Frankly, I have not seen a lot of that. This tax package, as a total revenue cost over a 7-year budget, is around $245 billion. However the cost is reduced by elimination of those corporate loopholes, which saves the Government a little over $21 billion over 7 years. That net cost makes us back to $224 billion. We can get bogged down in figures. I know how easy that is.

We have to keep reminding America through this whole debate that the single largest revenue item in this tax package is a $500 per child tax credit, which has a cost of about $142 billion. What is wrong with letting families hang on to their money? They earned it. Sure, there are some Government services they want to pay for and it takes some amount of dollars to provide services that only Government can offer. We know that. But when they start making the decisions for all parts of your life, then that is where the real debate starts. Nobody is debating public safety here or doing some of the things for the society that has to be done.

This package provides for an adoption credit; a marriage penalty credit; deductions for student loan interest, for the first time; deductions for contributions to individual retirement accounts. These tax breaks—about $28 billion, or so—are 13 percent of the total cost of the package, and are targeted for folks who are middle-income folks. There is $40 billion in capital gains tax reform. There, again, we hear "cut taxes for the rich." Capital gains tax is a voluntary tax.

You do not have to pay capital gains tax. You do not have to pay it because you do not have to sell.

The real wealthy folks can get around it because they know how to move those things around with tax laws and different laws.

On capital gains, this helps even the homeowner whenever he sells his home and wants to retire. Everybody whose assets appreciate, pays capital gains taxes—that is, if they sell.

So it is not for the rich. It is for all Americans that are smart enough to get a hold of some assets that appreciate, and they pay taxes on them.

We visited with a very knowledgeable man from Kansas and he said over $7 trillion of assets would flow onto the market if the capital gains was cut in half. Imagine what that would do to the American economy. Imagine what that would do to the tax coffers of the Treasury of the U.S. Government, so that maybe we can do some things that we want to do.

We have to think a little bit—just think a little bit. Capital gains is basically a voluntary tax. Just a voluntary tax.

Another provision in this package, the estate and inheritance tax provision on that reform. Folks who leave estates—those estates have been taxed and taxed and taxed and the interest they make on that has been taxed and taxed and taxed and then when they die they are taxed again.

I think of all of the ranches and farms in the State of Montana where money had to be spent for insurance policies to protect themselves so they could pay the inheritance taxes so the farm or the ranch can stay in the family.

Needless, needless expense. They paid taxes on that land, and property tax, income taxes, investment taxes, and then when the key family member passes on there is another estate tax that has to be paid again.

Hard-working families—the only thing they have on these farms and ranches is just the land. They have not made a lot of money. They do not have a lot of cash. They just do not have a lot of cash.

In effect, these death taxes are robbing American communities of a tradition of values that local family-run businesses provide. I wholeheartedly support that provision. If you feel for a young man that is trying to start off in the agriculture business, my goodness, do not strap him with a debt that he cannot work his way out of.

If you think there is not some disparity there, I will give you just a little idea on what it is like to farm. I was walking down the grocery store aisle the other day and found out that Wheaties cost $3.46 a pound. Do you realize that we are only getting $2.50 a bushel for a bushel of wheat that has 60 pounds of wheat in it?

They wonder—it is a little bit of disparity here. You want that man to keep on producing food and fiber so the American people can eat cheaper than any other society on the face of this Earth.

A while ago I listened to my distinguished colleague from the other side of the aisle challenge the estate tax credit. Their argument is focused on the unfairness of giving a tax break to any estate that exceeds $5 million.

I have asserted the top one half of the top 1 percent of the American people fall into that category. They should not be getting a tax break in the first place. I agree.

I must depart from my distinguished colleagues on the other side of the aisle for two reasons. I believe any death tax is on its face unfair. If we are going to keep these small businesses, these farms and ranches in the families of traditional values, we have to take a look at what we do in the taxing situation.

Taxes that cost jobs—the alternative minimum tax, we did not get all that we needed in this, but if there is one place that creates jobs and opportunities, it is here. When you tax small corporations, small family businesses, make sure that they keep two sets of books to see which one is a higher set of taxes than the others, that takes away from this business of the ability to expand, to expand their business.

Under the committee's package, the method of depreciation is conformed but the useful life is not.

One major problem with this is that business will start to have to suffer the unnecessary costs of maintaining two sets of books on each depreciable assets of the performing two tax computations to determine that they do not fall into the alternative minimum tax bucket.

Two sets of books—needless, costly. We could be investing that in a bigger payroll. That is what creates jobs.

In conclusion, we should talk about some good things that are in this package. Talk about the good things that people are going to say we will keep more money in your neighborhood, for your quality of life, that you can make the decisions on how you want to spend the money and not be looking toward this 13 square miles of logic-free environment or answers that sometimes just do not work in our local communities.

That is what this debate is all about—where the power is, the power of the purse string. With the tax credits and some reform we will do the responsible thing and not the irresponsible thing of saying, "Let's wait until next year," or "Let's accept the status quo," and we know what the results of that are.

I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the education amendment offered by my colleague from Massachusetts.

I glanced through this two-volume reconciliation thing this morning and I found all kinds of things. Here is a provision for the Hetch Hetchy Dam. I have no idea where the Hetch Hetchy Dam is or what it means.

It has very little significance for the future of our country, but what does have significance for the future of our country is what we are doing in the field of education.

The Presiding Officer may be too young to remember the GI bill after World War II. There was a fight on the GI bill. The American Legion, to their credit, said "Let's have educational benefits as part of the GI bill." The other veterans organizations said, "Let's have a cash bonus for veterans."

Fortunately, the American Legion prevailed and we put the money into education. We lifted this Nation.

Now we face the same choice. Do we have a tax loophole here that is being put in, which the Kennedy amendment says, "Let's not put that tax loophole in," or do we put the money in education? The Kennedy amendment says put the money in education.

I want to address specifically the question of direct lending. Let me say to my colleagues on the Republican side, this is not a Democratic idea. The first person that suggested it is Congressman TOM PETRI, a Republican from Wisconsin.

My cosponsor of this legislation in the U.S. Senate was Senator David Durenberger, a Republican from Minnesota. When he was approached and said we ought to have the free enterprise system work and have the banks and the guaranty agencies profit from it, Dave Durenberger said, "This is not free enterprise: it is a free lunch." That is the reality.

There is not a school in the country, not a college or university, that is on direct lending, that wants to go back to the old system.

Colleges and universities like it, the students like it, taxpayers like it for reasons I will get into in a minute, and for my colleagues on the Republican side who say we like to do away with paperwork, I have heard speeches on both sides on that, every college and university says this does away with all kinds of paperwork. This is a change not just for a speech but for a vote. If the colleges and universities like it, if the students like it, if it is good for the taxpayers, why are we limiting direct lending? My friends, the only beneficiaries are the banks and the guaranty agencies and their lobbyists. And we have just seen in the newspapers that the banks have record-breaking profits. If we want to have a bank subsidy bill, let us call it that, but do not put the name of "student assistance" on it. Let us not play games.

Who are these people who are fighting direct lending? The Student Loan Marketing Association, Sallie Mae, created by the U.S. Congress. The salary of the chief executive officer of Sallie Mae, 3 years ago was $2.1 million. All they do is student aid, guaranteed by the U.S. Government. The guaranty agency, one in Indiana, USA—the chief executive officer earns $627,000. We pay the President of the United States $200,000. And that one guaranty agency is spending $750,000 on lobbying on this.

We face a choice. Are we going to help students and parents and taxpayers or the banks and the guaranty agencies? It is very, very clear. This is brazen, Mr. President, brazen. We have to help people.

Indiana University says there is 90 percent less paperwork with direct lending, 25 percent fewer errors, easier adjustments, faster disbursement. I have heard a lot of talk about unfunded mandates around here. This is an unfunded mandate you are imposing on colleges and universities. Iowa State University, for example, testified they have been able to take four people who used to work in student loans because of the all the paperwork and everything, and have them do other things. And they have been able to cancel some of their computers that they have, for $400 a month.

If I may have 1 more minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SIMON. It is very, very clear what the public interest is. "Banks Cash In, Taxpayers Lose on Loan Programs," USA Today says.

Government employees—we hear a lot, let us simplify. This is what we are told: 500 employees direct lending; 2,500 Government employees. That does count the guaranty agencies.

Then here is what CBO says about the 20 percent cap that is in here right now: Under current law, direct lending will save us, over 7 years, $4.6 billion.

What we did on the budget resolution, we said count administrative costs for direct lending but not for the old program. So, because of the phoniness—and even the Chicago Tribune says they are cooking the books here—you theoretically save $600 million. The real saving is a saving of $4.6 billion.

If we are interested in helping students, colleges and taxpayers, we ought to be voting for the Kennedy amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I believe that it is important constantly, during the course of this debate, to return to fundamental principles, to the broad policy goals which we as a nation ought to seek for the betterment of our society and for a brighter future for those who follow us. In returning to those fundamental principles, there is no better place to start than with this fundamental principle enunciated by Thomas Jefferson almost two centuries ago. And I quote our third President:

> The question whether one generation has the right to bind another by the deficit it imposes is a question of such consequence as to place it among the fundamental principles of Government. We should consider ourselves unauthorized to saddle posterity with our debts and morally bound to pay them ourselves.

The staff notes I have here with me this morning have, at one place, the notation "they," that is to say the opponents to this resolution, "do not wish to balance the budget." But I do not believe that to be true. I have not heard any argument at any time this year from a Member of this body that has not included in it at least lip service to the concept of a balanced budget. But, of course, there are three ways to that goal, or at least three kinds of oratory which give lip service to Thomas Jefferson's principle.

The first is to state the principle but always to have an objection to any course of action which will make that principle a reality. And that is the common approach of those who oppose the resolution we have before us today.

The second way, a way that seems to have very little support on the other side of the aisle but clearly actuates the President of the United States, is to define the problem out of existence. I will come back to that in just a moment.

The third way, the hard way, the difficult way, is actually to make basic changes in our laws and in our spending policies, that will in fact lead us to a balanced budget.

To return for a moment to the President's approach of defining it out of existence, I would also like to quote him. Just a little more than 2 short years ago, the President of the United States said:

> The Congressional Budget Office was normally more conservative about what was going to happen and closer to right than previous Presidents have been. I did this so we could argue about priorities with the same set of numbers. I did this so that no one could say I was estimating my way out of this difficulty. I did this because, if we can agree together on the most prudent revenues we are likely to get if the recovery stays and we do the right things economically, then it will turn out better for the American people than we said. In the last 12 years, because there were differences over the revenue estimates, you and I know that both parties were given greater elbow room for irresponsibility. This is tightening the reins on Democrats as well as Republicans. Let us at least argue about the same set of numbers so the American people will think we are shooting straight with them.

In those eloquent words the President said let us all agree that we will use the projections of the Congressional Budget Office.

That was then. This is now. Earlier this year the President presented a budget to us which never, in his own terms, included a deficit of less than $200 billion. Later, when it turned out that Republicans were serious about balancing the budget, the President said, "Me, too. I can do it. And I can do it without pain. I can do it without changing any major policies in the United States. I can do it by defining it out of existence. I will abandon my allegiance to the Congressional Budget Office. I will simply estimate that interest rates and inflation will be lower and revenues will be higher, and without any major changes at all we can balance the budget." So he defined the problem out of existence.

The day before yesterday in this body we had a straw poll, as it were, on whether or not the President's approach was acceptable. And it lost by a vote of 96 to nothing. The other side of this aisle, quite properly, rejects that approach. But it also rejects the approach of any significant changes. So, at this moment, nominally we are debating education. They do not want any changes. Previously we were debating Medicaid. They do not want any changes. Before that we debated Medicare. They do not want any changes. In fact, you can go down a litany of spending programs, and they do not want any changes. But they would like to have a balanced budget. It just is not a high enough priority.

Mr. President, to return to the Congressional Budget Office, we now know that we are not simply engaging in a game of whether or not it is appropriate to balance the budget. We know what the positive results of balancing that budget will be. The Congressional Budget Office says that if we actually change the laws appropriately interest rates will be sufficiently lower and economic growth will be sufficiently higher so that the Federal Treasury will be $170 billion better off by the time the budget comes into balance in the year 2002. That is only the Federal Treasury. That is not the other hundreds of billions of dollars which will be in the pockets of the American people because they have better jobs and higher wages.

That is what this exercise is all about. a better break for America.

So what are we proposing to do? We are proposing to say to the Americans, if we go through this process, if we make these changes. we are going to give that $170 billion back to you in lower taxes on working Americans, and a little more besides because we have been responsible enough to balance the budget.

So when we get right down to it, Mr. President, that is what this debate is all about.

First principles—the moral duty not to load our spending on the backs of our children and grandchildren; and the economic benefit—an economic benefit I suspect Thomas Jefferson did not suspect—of acting in a responsible fashion, both because we will create more opportunity for our people and because we can appropriately lower our taxes.

That is the difference between the two parties. That is the difference between a yes and a no vote on this resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURNS). Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 20 minutes and 54 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to my colleague.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the Senator for yielding.

I just could not help but hearing my friend from Washington saying we have a moral obligation. Yes. We do. We have a lot of moral obligations to our children and to the future. One of the most important obligations is to ensure that future generations have the ability to get a decent, sound education so that they can raise their families and so that they can compete in the world marketplace. That also is a moral obligation.

What this reconciliation bill does is pull the rug out from under that obligation that we have for future generations.

Mr. President, we hear a lot of talk about the tax breaks that are in this bill. Those of us on this side have been talking about the $245 billion tax breaks for the wealthy that will come at the expense of the elderly and Medicare cuts. There is an $11 billion cut in student aid in this bill, the largest cut in student aid in our history. But what we are not hearing about are the hidden taxes that the Republicans have in this bill, the "stealth taxes." This is what they are hitting students with to pay for those tax breaks for the wealthy.

This chart illustrates this right here. This budget adds about $700 to $2,500 of debt per student by eliminating the interest subsidy during the grace period. That is a hidden tax on our students. It also includes up to $5,000 in additional expense for families who use the PLUS program by raising their interest rates. It is another tax on students and their families. It imposes a direct Federal tax of .85 percent on colleges and universities participating in the student loan programs: a direct tax on colleges. Of course, they are going to have to pass that on to their students.

Last, of course, it forces schools out of the direct loan program that has been so successful.

So we hear about the tax breaks to the wealthy. We do not hear about the stealth taxes that are in the Republican bill, and mainly it falls on students.

Mr. President, there was an article recently in the Des Moines Register which I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Des Moines Register]

THE REALITY OF CUTTING STUDENT AID

(By Rekha Basu)

If you want to talk to Robin Kniech, you'd best catch the Drake University junior early, before she heads for class or checks in at one of her five jobs, which add nearly 40 hours to her already full load.

Between the baby sitting, secretarial and other work, Kniech just manages to eke out her $1,200 tuition contribution. The rest of the $14,100 is made up from merit-based scholarships and college loans.

Last week, which was Save Student Financial Aid Week, sponsored by Drake Democrats, Kniech was also out rallying students against proposed cuts to federal student aid. For her, it's a subject of more than political interest. Any cuts, however small, could tip the delicate balance she has crafted to get a college education.

"I don't have any financial support from my parents," says Kniech. "I don't have any more hours to squeeze, and if I were to lose $300 in aid, I probably wouldn't be in school."

Just when you start thinking there's no other sacred zone left for congressional Republicans to tamper with, along comes another. If it isn't school lunches or aid to families with minor children, or programs that give disadvantaged preschoolers a fighting start, if it isn't rolling back federal standards governing the care of elderly in nursing homes or the health care of low-income people, then it's gashes into the very programs that enable people to go to college so they can hope to get decent jobs. At Drake, several hundred thousands dollars could be lost, according to John Parker, director of financial planning. Some 60 percent of Drake students get need-based assistance.

This is a tough issue to get your arms around, given the rather confusing tangle of college-aid programs and formulas. But the bottom line is the GOP plans to take $10.4 billion out of student-loan entitlement programs and apply it to deficit reduction. The legislation targets Stafford loans—private loans secured by the federal government, which you might remember as Guaranteed Student Loans. That's what they were called when I got one for graduate school. A whopping 90 percent of Drake law students and 40 percent of undergraduates now get them.

It also hits loans to parents to help finance their kids' educations, and several loan programs originating with the federal government but administered by the university, such as the Perkins loan. That cut alone would knock off aid to 90 Drake students.

Some proposals that might seem benign can cut quite deep. One would force student recipients of subsidized Stafford loans (those given to the highest-needs students) to start accruing interest charges immediately on graduation, instead of after the six-month grace period they now have. The added debt could be just enough to derail Kniech's plans to join the Peace Corps. "This hits at high-needs students harder than anybody else," says Parker.

There's also a proposal to raise both the ceiling and floor on the major federal grant program, Pell grants, disqualifying some 250,000 students nationwide, costing 75 Drake students about $40,000, and affecting students' eligibility for other grants. And more.

If you're tempted to argue that a student like Kniech should set her sights on a less costly education, forget it. She couldn't afford community college. She'd have to pay more than twice what she's paying out of pocket.

Viewed piece by piece, the cuts may not look like much. And Drake Republicans have countered with flyers pointing to the programs which aren't slated for actual cuts (but contain no increases for inflation), or the growth in funding of the Pell grant program. But every cut matters to students struggling to stay afloat. "There are students at Drake who, if they had to come up with another $50 they just flat out couldn't do it," Parker says. And there's the precedent. As senior Tanya Beer put it, "I think we're moving more toward education for the privileged rather than education as a right."

The financial-aid story offers an interesting juxtaposition of GOP fact and rhetoric. While the cheerleaders of congressional Republicans like to rail about elitist liberals, the scheme unfolding in Congress is built around an unparalleled elitism, deliberately cutting off avenues for advancement for those starting out at a disadvantage, even as they are admonished to stay in school and work harder.

So excuse Robin Kniech if the politicians' lectures about working her way up ring a little hollow. She's keeping her end of the bargain, and a 3.8 grade-point average. She just doesn't have anything left to give up.

Mr. HARKIN. It is entitled "The Reality of Cutting Student Aid."

I will read a couple of items from it:

If you want to talk to Robin Kniech, you'd best catch the Drake University junior early, before she heads for class or checks in at one of her five jobs, which add nearly 40 hours to her already full load.

Between the baby sitting, secretarial and other work, Kniech just manages to eke out her $1,200 tuition contribution. The rest of the $14,100 is made up from merit-based scholarships and college loans.

"I don't have any financial support from my parents," says Kniech. "I don't have any more hours to squeeze, and if I were to lose $300 in aid, I probably wouldn't be in school."

John Parker, director of financial planning, said that 60 percent of Drake students get need-based assistance.

"There are students at Drake who, if they had to come up with another $50, just could not, flatout could not, do it," Parker said.

I think I will end on this note, a good note. The writer of the article said:

So excuse Robin Kniech if the politicians' lectures about working her way up ring a little hollow. She's keeping her end of the bargain, and a 3.8 grade-point average. She just doesn't have anything left to give.

Mr. President, here is what is happening at one of our regent universities, the University of Northern Iowa, the smallest of our three state universities. For the 1990-91 school year the average loan of a student per year was $2,589. That was in 1991. Today that is up to $4,395, and, if this reconciliation bill passes, that is going to climb even higher. This bill just piles more debt on students. That is going to discourage students from going to school and seeking a higher education.

Who does it hit? It hits moderate- and low-income families the hardest. That is why we have to defeat this reconciliation bill and make sure that these students can get a decent education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized.

Mr. DODD. Thank you, Mr. President. I appreciate my colleague yielding me this time.

Mr. President, I am a cosponsor of this amendment and strongly support this amendment. Many good arguments have already been made here this morning. In fact, the chart used earlier by my colleague from New Mexico I think makes the case. Seventy percent of the cuts proposed in the bill before us will fall on students and their families; 30 percent are industry losses.

I suppose in the context of a huge budget, some may say what is $7.6 billion in all of this? I suppose there are not many people here in this body who would understand what this will mean to millions of Americans. The impact seems relatively minor when you start talking about $100, $300, or $500 a year. But they are not minor costs for most Americans.

There is a failure to appreciate, whether it is Medicaid, Medicare, higher education, that while these numbers of $90, $100, $200, $2,000, or $2,700 do not seem like anything large in the context of people of the upper-income levels, to working families in this country, these amounts make the difference between getting an education, getting health care, losing the job, or falling back into poverty. And for many of these families, they will be hit time and time again by the provisions of this bill—they will pay more for health care, receive less earned income tax credit and pay more for college.

Our colleague from North Dakota the other day offered an amendment on the cuts in Medicare. He said cannot we forgo the tax breaks for people making in excess of $250,000 a year? The savings to us would be $50 billion over 7 years, if we just said nobody over $250,000 gets a tax break. We could have saved $50 billion, if we had followed that amendment. But this Senate said no. We are even going to provide the tax breaks for people making in excess of a quarter of a million dollars.

Just think what that $50 billion would do. We would not have to be debating this amendment. Mr. President, $7 billion of that $50 billion could go to these middle-income families out there that are going to feel the pinch in higher education.

Mr. President, we all appreciate and know that in a global economy in the 21st century we are going to have to produce the best-educated, and the best-prepared generation that this country has ever produced if we are going to be effective. That is common sense. Everyone ought to understand that.

Yet as you increase these costs on these families, we are going to watch students fall through the cracks. We are going to lose that talent and ability merely because we want to provide a tax break for people making in excess of a quarter of a million dollars. I do not know anyone who believes, if you have to make a choice as to which of those two groups you benefit when there are scarce resources, it ought not go to people earning a quarter of a million dollars rather than to those of modest means pursuing higher education.

I think it is regretful; I think it is sad, indeed, that this institution could not make the simple decision of saying to those at the highest incomes: Wait a while. Maybe next year or the year after we can provide a tax break for you. But right now we need to assist families struggling to meet the costs of higher education.

This $7.6 billion is going to fall heavily on those families out there trying to make ends meet, trying to send their kids to college and trying to make difficult choices that make this possible.

Let me just quote one recent survey. It shows that business that made an investment in the educational attainment of their work force—as reported by corporate managers—resulted in twice a return in increased productivity of a comparable increase in work hours and nearly three times the return of an investment in capital stock. That is corporate managers talking about the importance of investments in education. I hope this amendment is adopted.

There are 11 million young Americans who are in our public higher education institutions. Cannot we today offer some relief, some hope for them even if it means saying to those making more than a quarter of a million a year, you are going to have to wait a while to get your break, to see to it that those 11 million families, those 11 million children get the opportunity for a decent education? That choice ought to be clear.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time I yield 10 minutes to the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I wish to thank my colleague from Michigan. I compliment him on his leadership. I just mention that many of the allegations and statements that are made are certainly not taking a look at the overall big picture.

I wish to help students, too. I understand that there may be a leadership amendment that is going to make some modifications in the proposals that are being discussed. I think I will wait for the discussions on the specifics until that amendment is offered. It will be accommodating some of the concerns that have been raised because I think all of us—I happen to have four kids, two of whom are in higher education right now. That costs a little money. But I will tell you the best news we could give my kids that are going to college is to balance the budget.

We only have one proposal before us to balance the budget. That is the proposal that the Republicans have put forth that will give us a balanced budget. I remember going to a town meeting not too long ago and somebody who was about 23 years old raised their hand and said: Senator, will I ever see a balanced budget in my lifetime?

They were just as serious as they could possibly be. Later today, or maybe tomorrow, we are going to be voting on a balanced budget. But there is only one. President Clinton does not have a balanced budget. We do. When you think of somebody going to college and talking about college loans, what a heck of a deal it is right now that they inherit such enormous national debt. Let us at least stop it.

The only proposal that we have before us to stop it is our proposal to balance the budget. Now, we may make some modifications in the proposal to alleviate some of the concerns that have been raised specifically dealing with student loans. So again I will leave that alone for the time being.

Let us talk about what we are doing for all American families. I heard my colleague say, well, this is $10 billion. We are giving American families $140 billion of tax cuts. If they have children, they get a tax cut under our proposal, $500 per child. If you have four children, that is $2,000. That is pretty significant. And families get to decide if they want to use that money for education, for transportation, or for other things. Families make that decision. I think that is important.

I also want to talk about the benefit of a balanced budget for the average American family. If you have a $100,000 mortgage—it seems like that is a large amount but that is not that unheard of today—you will have savings—it is estimated by independent sources that by having a balanced budget you will have a 2-percent interest rate reduction, maybe as high as a 2.7-percent reduction on a $100,000 mortgage. That boils down to savings of over $2,000 per year, actually $2,162 per year.

Also, if you have a student loan, let us say an $11,000 student loan, that is $216 in savings just in the fact that interest rates have come down. If you have a car loan of, say, $15,000, you have savings of $180. Those total savings of $2,500 per year if we are able to bring interest rates down by balancing the budget. So I think students have a real interest in seeing us balance the budget.

I also want to talk about some of the misstatements that have been made. Are families better off at different income levels? Because I heard some people say some lower-income families are getting a tax increase. That is totally false, totally, completely false. And so again I wish to look at what happens to families under this proposal. Families that make, say, $5,000, they do not pay any income tax. They pay zero income tax. Right now they get an earned income credit of $1,800. They get it under present law. That is what they are going to get under our proposal.

What about families making $10,000? They still do not pay any income tax. They get a $3,110 EIC. Next year they are going to get an increase that goes to $3,200.

What about families that make $15,000? Right now, they get a check from Uncle Sam of $2,300. They do not write Uncle Sam a check. They still pay zero income tax and next year they are going to get a bigger check, $2,488. So that is an increase. That is an improvement.

What about families that make $20,000? Well, they get an EIC of $832. With two children, they are presently paying zero tax. Next year, they are going to get from us, EIC goes up to $1,429.

You might say, why? Well, the tax credit reduces their tax deduction so they get a higher EIC.

What about a family that, say, makes $30,000. You have a lot of families making $30,000 that are sending kids to school. Right now, they are writing Uncle Sam a check for $929. Under our proposal, they will receive an EIC of $171 and pay no income tax. That is over a $1,000 improvement for that family. And actually every family beyond here will receive over a $1,000 improvement. Right now, if they are writing checks for $2,000, they will write a check for $900. That is over a $1,000 improvement.

A $40,000 family would write a check to Uncle Sam right now with two children, $3,500. Under our proposal, they will write a check for $2,400. Again, they save $1,100. They save in the child credit. They also save from the reduction in the marriage penalty.

A family making $50,000 would write a check for $5,000. Under our proposal, they will write a check for $3,900. They will get a $1,100 savings. They can use that money for education. Our whole propose is targeted at families, and families can decide how to spend that money. And people with children are concerned about education. We are going to let them keep their money so they can decide how it should be spent. I think that is awfully important.

We have heard a lot of rhetoric that bothers me because it is not factual. Lower-income groups are going to have their taxes raised. Not true. In many cases they are alluding to earned income credits, and so on. Those grow. I happen to be pretty familiar with them. I am going to put them in the RECORD. Maybe everybody can be familiar with them. These credits are growing every year. We give taxpayers a tax cut if they have children and they want their children to go to school.

It is interesting; after the debate we had last night, somebody called my office about 11 o'clock and said: I am kind of embarrassed because my daughter, who is going to school, going to college received an earned income credit of $300. He said the reason why I am embarrassed is because I am a millionaire. But in present law they qualify. Does that make sense? I said, well, why would your daughter qualify? Well, she forgot to tell them that I gave her $18,000 to support her college education. But under present law she can qualify if she does not report that income. Now, we try to tighten down on EIC, so we report other income and say that income should be counted.

Right now with EIC, you qualify under the program if you make less than $26,000. Under our proposal we allow that to grow to $29,000. Some people say that is a Draconian change because the administration wants you to qualify for EIC if you make $34,600. That may be the majority of people in Alabama; that may be the majority of people in Michigan, maybe in Oklahoma. There are a lot of people in our State that make less than $34,000.

So we curb the growth. Right now you can qualify if you have income less than $26,000. We allow that to grow under our proposal to $29,000. But the administration wants it to grow to $34,000.

I had a millionaire call me last night and say, "My daughter received a benefit that I don't think she should have. I think you're right. I think a lot of people are receiving this benefit that shouldn't. Let's try to target our assistance to those people who really need the help."

That is what we are trying to do, target our assistance. Some 70 percent of this package is directed at American families that make less than $75,000 per year. Those are the families that are sending their kids to school. So let us be responsive. Let us be helpful. And let us make some of the changes that are necessary to make our economy grow.

At the same time, let us balance the budget. I am really excited about the opportunity to balance the budget. I am bothered by the fact that the President of the United States had a press conference yesterday and he said, "Look how great we are doing. The deficit has come down 3 years in a row. We are making real progress."

What he forgot to show is what happens in the future. According to the Congressional Budget Office, his deficit grows. He talks about $164 billion in 1995, and it is less than it was the year before. I think that is great. I do not think he is entirely responsible for that. But what happens in the outyears? Well, the Congressional Budget Office says that it will be $210 billion in the year 2002. He forgot to tell everybody the deficit is going to go from $164 billion to $210 billion and over $200 billion almost every year, according to the Congressional Budget Office.

That is not acceptable. There is a change. Some of us are very, very sincere. We mean it. We want to balance the budget. Some of us voted for a constitutional amendment to make us balance the budget, and we failed. We lacked one vote in the Senate. But we also said we should do it whether this amendment passes or not.

Many people on the other side of the aisle said, "We should pass a balanced budget. We don't need a constitutional amendment to make us do it." And if we had the right composition in this body, they would be correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHELBY). The Senator from Oklahoma has spoken for 10 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. I ask for an additional 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma is recognized for an additional 2 minutes.

Mr. NICKLES. It would be correct if we had the composition in the body that would vote for a balanced budget. But I will tell my colleagues, we cannot balance the budget unless or until we are willing to contain the growth of the entire budget. And we have already had votes to say, "Oh, let's don't reduce the rate of growth in Medicare. Oh, we're cutting $270 billion in Medicare."

The facts are, in Medicare, this year we are spending $178 billion in Medicare, and in the year 2002 we are going to spend $286 billion in Medicare. That is a significant increase. It is a 7 percent increase over that entire period of time, 7 percent per year.

"Don't cut Medicaid, for crying out loud. No. Medicaid is too sensitive." They forget to tell people Medicaid in the last 4 years has grown as much as 28, 29, 13, and 8 percent. Make that in 5 years then 9 percent. Medicaid has exploded in costs. Many States have figured out ways to dump their liability on the Federal Government. It used to be a 50-50 share for most States. Now they are figuring out ways to make it 70 percent Federal Government, 30 percent State. We are trying to reform that and curtail that growth.

Mr. President, I think it is awfully important we balance the budget, and I compliment my colleagues for the proposal we have before us today. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, may I inquire as to how much time is left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan has 8 minutes 40 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Will the Senator yield me——

I ask unanimous consent. Mr. President, to have printed in the RECORD several charts and other material.

Re: Earned Income Tax Credit.

Once again we bring to your attention a piece run by today's Washington Post that refutes the shrill political posturing of the White House.

(By James K. Glassman)

A PROGRAM GONE BONKERS

The road to a $5 trillion national debt is paved with good intentions.

Look at the Earned Income Tax Credit (EITC). Launched by Gerald Ford, lauded by Ronald Reagan, expanded by George Bush and Bill Clinton, it's based on welfare principles that even a Republican (or a professed New Democrat) can love. The only problem is that, like many other good ideas in Washington, it's gotten completely out of hand.

Currently, the EITC is the fastest-growing program in the federal budget. It will cost the Treasury $24 billion this year, up from less than $2 billion 10 years ago.

In their giant reconciliation bill—the final budget measure of the year—Republicans are trying to restrain this growth. Under the Senate version, EITC costs will rise to $32 billion in 2002. In the budget language of Washington, that's a cut. In any other language it's an increase—although not so large as projected under the current law, which has costs rising to $36 billion by 2002.

The EITC is a sort of negative income tax. If you fall into a certain earnings bracket, you don't pay the government; the government pays you.

The idea of the EITC is to put more money in the pockets of low-income working families. If you don't work, you don't qualify. Since the benefits are paid in cash and the rules are simple, the Internal Revenue Service can administer the EITC easily and cheaply.

Believers in the free market like the notion that the EITC doesn't force recipients to use funds for a particular purpose like other federal programs (housing, food stamps). Instead, it gives them money and lets them make their own choices.

The EITC is not only the fastest-growing entitlement program, it's the broadest. In 1986 some 7 million families were covered by the EITC, and the average-outlay by the government was $281. This year 18 million families are covered at an average of $1,265. In 1986 the maximum credit taxpayer could receive was $550; today, it's $3,111.

In Mississippi, a whopping 39 percent of families receive the EITC; in Texas, 26 percent; California, 22 percent. With this kind of penetration, the EITC follows a welfare tradition invented by Franklin Roosevelt: To keep a program alive, make sure money flows not just to the poor but to the middle class. That's been the key to success for Social Security, Medicare, student loans and farm subsidies.

The EITC was begun as a modest program to help offset the burden of payroll taxes on the poor and, through its unique structure, to encourage them to work more. But the philosophy soon became: "Hey, if a little bit is good, then more is better," says Bruce Bartlett, an economist who served in the Bush Treasury Department.

Today, the EITC is enjoyed by families making as much as $26,672 a year, and that doesn't include outside income. Under the tax law that President Clinton promoted and signed two years ago, by 2002 families making $34,612 will qualify for EITC benefits. The Senate wants to scale that figure back to $30,200—which seems pretty sensible for a government that already owes its creditors $4.9 trillion.

At its core, the EITC is a massive income transfer scheme. New IRS figures show that in 1993 the top 5 percent of American earners paid 47 percent of the federal income taxes, up from 37 percent in 1981. Meanwhile, the bottom 50 percent of earners—thanks in large measure to the EITC—paid 5 percent of the taxes.

The EITC, in other words, has created a veritable tax holiday for about half the families in America.

Many would say that's fair. But there's another question raised by the EITC: Does it really encourage work? There's doubt.

For 1996, families with two or more children will earn credits of 40 percent of their income until they reach earnings of $8,910 annually. Then, they max out at a credit (in nearly all cases, a cash payment) of $3,564. So far, so good. Clearly, there's a big incentive to work, since a dollar paid on the job becomes $1.40 in the pocket (minus modest payroll taxes).

If you earn between $8,910 and $11,630, you still receive the maximum credit. Then the disincentive begins—you start losing 21 cents of credits for every additional dollar you earn. When your income reaches $28,533, your credits hit zero.

Again, this sounds fair. But the problem is that the EITC forces lower-income Americans to face marginal tax rates that are higher than those faced by the richest Americans.

As Bartlett wrote recently in a brief for the National Center for Policy Analysis: "Families with incomes between $11,000 and $26,000 are being taxed at the rate of 60 percent on each additional dollar earned. . . . This total tax rate includes federal, state and local taxes plus the reduction in the EITC."

And these high marginal taxes definitely discourage work. Economist Edgar Browning of Texas A&M reported in the National Tax journal that nearly half of all families receiving the EITC has less income than they would have had without the tax credit—because the credit enticed them to work less. And a University of Wisconsin study found that "on balance the EITC reduces the total hours worked."

Is there a solution to the EITC conundrum? One answer is to remove the phase-out of benefits: Simply give all taxpayers an extra 40 percent credit for the first $10,000 or so of income. But that would be hugely expensive. Another answer is to kill the EITC entirely. But that would be politically impossible.

The third course is to try to restrain a program gone bonkers. That's what the Republicans are doing. At the same time, however, they should admit that the EITC isn't quite so glorious as they once thought. Maybe luring people out of poverty is something that government just can't do.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I must oppose the reconciliation bill we consider today because it impacts on parents, students, and families in ways they cannot afford; that is why I support and cosponsor Senator KENNEDY's amendment to strike the student loan provisions in this bill that impose higher college costs on students and working families.

Mr. President, the Labor Committee's proposal to save $10.85 billion through changes in the Federal Student Loan Program is simply unacceptable. It strikes a blow at the Federal Government's role in providing an opportunity structure for our Nation's youth. It threatens the future economic opportunity for young people who are today's students and tomorrow's work force, and it rejects help to those who practice self-help.

The Labor Committee's reconciliation proposal is another strike at this Nation's opportunity structure. The Republicans want to levy on new tax on colleges and universities. The Republicans want colleges to pay a .85 percent tax on their total student loan volume. That is outrageous.

It does not make a difference whether that tax is .85 percent or 2 percent as originally proposed by committee Republicans. A tax is a tax. Colleges and universities will still have to pay a new tax to the Federal Government every year.

Mr. President, colleges and universities all across my State of Maryland are adamantly opposed to this new tax.

This new tax means that the University of Maryland in College Park will have to pay approximately $255,000 in taxes on its student loan volume each year. The University of Maryland in Baltimore will have to pay approximately $180,000.

Private independent colleges will be especially hard hit. These colleges do not get substantial State financial support. This results in higher student loan volume. So, Loyola College in Baltimore will have to pay approximately $95,000 to the Federal Government.

It means that Johns Hopkins University will have to pay about $204,000 and Western Maryland College will pay about $25,000 in taxes on student loans each year.

Where will colleges get this money? They may be forced to pass on this new tax burden to students in the form of increased tuition, reduction in scholarships, or elimination of student services or programs.

College tuition has already skyrocketed. Our undergraduate students borrow the maximum of $17,125 a year just to be able to afford a college education, to have access to increased opportunities and to achieve the American dream. But this reconciliation bill will leave some students out in the cold.

This is unacceptable. It is not only a tax on colleges, but a tax on opportunity. Students in this country are told every day—do well, work hard, get a good education and you will be rewarded. But this kind of tax sends the wrong message to students trying to get ahead and trying to get ready for the future.

Mr. President, the Congress passed the Higher Education Act amendments in 1992 to bring help to those who practice self help. It was meant to be Federal help to middle class families who are drowning in debt and trying to send their children to college.

Yet, imposing a new tax is not only a hit on colleges and students, but also a hit on parents trying to help pay for their child's college education. This reconciliation bill increases the interest rate that parents will pay on loans and increases the overall cap on that interest.

Mr. President, promises made must be promises kept. By cutting student loans, we are cutting the promises we made to students, to parents and to colleges.

I believe in rewarding the good guys in our society who work hard and play by the rules. That means giving help to middle-class families where moms and dads struggle—maybe even working two jobs—to pay tuition to send their son or daughter to college.

Mr. President, these families are paying loans on top of loans. We cannot turn our backs on them now.

Our students need our support through Federal financial aid programs or through innovative initiatives like national service. But, we are doing away with those opportunities too.

National service gives students an alternate way to afford college, and at the same time, national service helps meet some of our community's most critical needs.

As an appropriator, I know firsthand how hard it is for the Government to come up with a balanced check book. But education must be our No. 1 priority. It is with me. It is for parents and students who balance their own check book every day and every semester. It should be a priority for this Congress.

Mr. President, college is no longer a luxury. It is a necessity just to stay competitive in the job market. It is a dream come true for parents of first generation college students to see their children walk across the stage. I believe we should give people the chance to pursue their dream through earned opportunities. To rob them of this opportunity is robbing America of its future.

I hope every member of the Senate will support Senator KENNEDY's amendment to strike the student loan provisions from this bill. It is an important investment to this Nation's students and it is important to America's economic future.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, first I want to thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his great leadership on preserving student aid. He has moved quickly at every opportunity to stick up for students and parents, and his amendment today is sorely needed.

Mr. President, student aid has a proud history in this country. Much of my generation went to college on the GI bill. Then we passed the Higher Education Act of 1965, helping boost college attendance to today's levels. Of the 13 million students in college today, half of them receive Federal grants and loans under that Act.

Economically, budgetary, morally, this bipartisan policy of making student aid a priority has been right. Economic analysis shows that we have benefited 8 for 1 on our GI bill investment. Recent analysis shows that the investment in education is twice as productive as other workplace investments. And the lower income people in our society should not be shut out of an affordable college education. We need to make every effort every year to make sure that our higher education assistance policy builds our country rather than dividing it.

But Republicans have come this year with the proposition to students that everyone has to help balance the budget. Students should take some time in the library and study this bill. Everyone does not pay. Students—particularly low-income students—are asked to pay $10.8 billion more. But others—particularly those who can pay for college out of their pockets—get new tax breaks. These tax breaks and increased spending in other parts of the budget are much larger than the student loan cuts. In other words, this Congress could easily choose not to make students pay more, but the Republican leadership thinks it is more important to give more to certain constituencies before the next election, all the while crying balancing budget.

Let me be specific about how Congress could avoid cutting student aid in this bill:

First, we could lower the brand new tax break in this so-called budget-balancing bill from $245 billion to $235 billion.

Second, we could trim back the proposed defense increase of over $50 billion.

Third, we could refuse to provide a new tax break for corporations currently paying the minimum allowed, which is what is offered in this amendment.

The fact is, all of these alternatives—and many others—are unacceptable to the Republicans that wrote this budget because student aid was a much lower priority to them than new tax breaks.

Mr. President, these student aid provisions are shameful. If students and parents knew what was in this bill, they would think we had gone off the deep end. This is not the way we balance the budget, it is the way we pander for the next election and put the budget out of balance in the long run. I urge my colleagues to support the Kennedy amendment to maintain our investment in education.

Mr. AKAKA Mr. President, I rise to express my deep concern about cuts in education programs included in the reconciliation bill.

The bill before us cuts $10.8 billion from the student loan program. These proposals include a 1 percent fee hike in PLUS loans, elimination of the grace period for recent graduates, the imposition of a 20 percent cap on direct student loan volume, and an .85 percent school tax based on the institution's student loan volume. If you wanted to undermine deliberately higher education, it would be difficult to come up with a more destructive list of proposals. Plain and simple, these education cuts are irresponsible.

Mr. President, the 1 percent fee hike for PLUS loans is regressive and could add $5,000 to a family's indebtedness for a college education. This may not mean much, but to a family struggling to make it on $25,000 a year, it could deprive a student of a college education. Moreover, this measure discriminates against families who haven't achieved the dream of home ownership, and who cannot take out home equity loans to finance college.

Eliminating the grace period for recent graduates is similarly ill-conceived. This provision would saddle graduates with additional financial burden at the most critical time in their careers. It could force graduates to settle for lower paying, less desirable jobs immediately upon graduation rather than providing them a reasonable opportunity to secure higher paying employment that better matches their skills and desires.

The proposal to cap the direct loan program at 20 percent of the total student loan volume is misguided in three respects. First and foremost, it would discourage additional schools from participating in the program and reduce the opportunities for thousands of economically disadvantaged students who would not be able to qualify for guaranteed loans.

Second, the 20 percent cap will ultimately drain the Treasury of billions of dollars because reinsurance fees and other subsidies will be paid to banks, secondary markets, and guaranty agencies. Direct loans have been a money saver because they cut out the middleman, reduce administrative overhead, and increase accessibility. Only the banks and other financial institutions stand to profit from the changes in this bill.

Third, capping direct loans will effectively limit one of the most important side benefits of the program—providing competition to the banks. Without the direct loan program, the lending industry would be free to raise interest rates on their own student loan instruments, increasing borrowing costs to those who choose, or are forced to choose, private lending sources. This in turn is likely to lead to additional defaults, the costs of which will be borne by the taxpayer. I would be curious to learn how proponents of free enterprise explain this clearly anticompetitive initiative.

Mr. President, the last major GOP education initiative is the proposed 0.85 percent tax on schools. Like the other proposals, this is a regressive inititaive that will discourage schools from participating in the direct loan program, force them to pass on the costs to students through increased tuition, and require them to tap into their already dwindling student financial aid budgets. Again, as with the other initiatives, this provision will disproportionately impact students from low- and middle-income families. It is ironic that as Republicans trumpet a $245 billion package of tax cuts that largely favor wealthier Americans, they seek to impose an indirect tax on students and families who can least afford it.

Mr. President, these are some of the reasons why I oppose the education provisions contained in this measure. When added to the proposed wholesale reductions in discretionary education programs—from Head Start to Goals 2000, to campus-based aid—they constitute a plan to reduce access to quality education and harm our ability to compete in an increasingly sophisticated international marketplace.

Reducing investment in education, which is already inadequate, will inevitably limit economic growth and undermine the standard of living of middle-class Americans in the 21st century. And it will close the window of opportunity for the economically disadvantaged among us who are pursuing the American dream.

Mr. President, reducing our commitment to an educated, skilled work force in the name of deficit reduction is shortsighted and terribly misguided. As this country struggles to find its way in a global marketplace dominated by cheap foreign labor and high technology, withdrawing our investment in education amounts to economic suicide.

This budget proves that Republicans are more committed to protecting the interests of the haves than in accommodating the aspirations of the vast majority of Americans who want only to improve the quality of their lives through hard work and education. Again, I believe this is a pennywise, pound-foolish approach that is shortsighted, mean spirited, and will cost the taxpayer money in the long run.

If this budget is implemented, students of modest means may have to forgo a college education; others who are fortunate enough to achieve their baccalaureates may have to forgo their dreams of pursuing graduate study. And those students who leave college in the future will be saddled with huge debt burdens at a time when they are least likely to be able to afford payments.

The proposals contained in this measure, in concert with the proposed reductions in fiscal year 1996 education appropriations measure, will ensure that our future work force is less educated, less productive, and less well off. This in turn will reduce the Nation's tax base, placing further upward pressure on the deficit—exactly the opposite effect from the stated purpose of this budget plan.

This wholesale disinvestment in our most important resource, our young people, is not merely shortsighted, it is blind. Blind to the imperatives of the new global marketplace, blind to the effect that cuts in education will have on our ability to prosper in an increasingly complex world, and blind to the effect it will have on our deficit.

But competitiveness, economic viability, and individual opportunity will not be the only victims of the proposed cutbacks in education. Our sense of civil community, of history, of tolerance, the ability to conduct informed, rational discourse—these are also the potential victims of this harsh and ill-conceived budget plan.

For education is not just about making enough to feed the kids or to buy a new car or to own a home—it is also about preparing ourselves to carry out the responsibilities of citizenship in the world's oldest republic.

Mr. President, no sane nation embraces ignorance. Yet, this is what the proposed resolution would have us do. I therefore urge my colleagues to reject this war on knowledge by opposing the education proposals contained in this measure that threaten our future.

Mr. KENNEDY. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 14 minutes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I am prepared to yield our time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was just going to yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Washington, and then we go with your side.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Fine.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield?

Could I ask the Senator from Michigan how much time will be yielded to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. ABRAHAM. The remainder of our time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. OK. Thank you.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington is recognized for 4 minutes.

Mrs. MURRAY. Thank you, Mr. President.

I thank my colleague from Massachusetts for this amendment.

As I sit here and listen to this debate today, I cannot help but wonder how many of our colleagues depended upon financial aid to advance their education and build the foundation for their careers. This is a highly educated body. And judging from the vast array of degrees that are conferred upon my colleagues, I would have guessed that many were dependent upon Federal assistance to finish their schooling.

However, the proposal to eliminate $10.8 billion in student loans forces me to question whether any of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle ever relied on financial aid to get an education. I can tell you I would not be here today without Federal assistance that made my college education possible.

I will also tell you that working families will be the hardest hit by this gutting of our student loan program. These middle-income families often do not qualify for full scholarships and cannot afford to pay full tuition, particularly when $20,000 a year for tuition is today's norm in higher education. Why sacrifice our Nation's future by limiting educational opportunities for young people?

This bill could have targeted the student loan industry, but instead 63 percent of the bill's student loan cuts fall directly on students and their parents. Take for example the increased rates on PLUS loans that are taken out by parents. I can tell you as a parent of two children entering the post-secondary world, I am concerned that families across this land will find these new loans out of reach. This aid is particularly important to those families without enough equity in their homes to take out a tax-deductible home equity loan.

Mr. President, I am extremely concerned with the proposal to eliminate a small, but very important, element to those entering our work force. All of us realize the difficult challenges facing today's college graduate. The limited prospects of employment, coupled with financial independence, on top of an already mounting educational debt put many of our graduates today in fiscal hardship before they are ever able to contribute back to our society.

To help these individuals during this difficult time, we have provided a 6-month grace period on their loan once they finish school. This is not loan forgiveness. It does not lead to increased deficits or defaults. It simply provides a new college graduate a few months to find a job and begin the process of becoming a contributing member of our society.

Some say this is a minor provision, appreciated by few students. I will tell you, at the University of Washington, in Seattle alone, 12,000 students will feel the impact of this grace period. It means $2.4 million to those students.

Finally, Mr. President, let us discuss a program that is working. The direct loan program is producing enormous benefits for all. In a recent survey, 112 campuses using the direct lending program were polled, and 90 percent reported satisfaction with the program.

During this academic year more than 1,350 schools are making borrowing easier for their students through the direct loan program. It is praised by students and college presidents alike for its speed, efficiency, and lack of bureaucracy. Why are we capping this success at 20 percent of total loan volume when we know it works? Let us give direct lending a chance to work for our schools and its students.

Mr. President, these cuts in our student loan programs are not economic savings. They are only going to shortchange our country's future. When we sacrifice our next work force for the sake of quick economic savings, we all mortgage our economic prosperity. The cuts in student loans are a direct impact to every single working family who wants to know that their child will be able to go on to college in this country that we are so proud of.

Mr. President, I yield back my time to the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield the remainder of our time to the Senator from Idaho.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho.

Mr. CRAIG. I thank my colleague from Michigan for yielding.

Mr. President, I find that the debate that is currently going on on the floor interesting but not balanced. And I say that because, while we talk about our children and the great compassion that I think this Senate and this Congress has always demonstrated toward young people in need, there is another side to the story that must be told if we are to speak of balance.

There is no question that we want as many of our young people as well educated as they can possibly become. We should encourage that kind of an environment. Clearly, the student loan program that is embodied within this package today will continue to educate as many as are currently being educated with the flexibility of growth to include more. While it changes the parameters of the obligation, it would be grossly unfair for anybody to portray that we are stepping away from or stepping back from our commitment to disadvantaged young people today seeking higher education.

What is glaringly absent from the debate on the other side is the rest of the story. I will tell you that having an education, having a degree in an economy that does not create a job and hire you is the greatest of tragedies.

The budget that we are seeking to bring about, in promises kept to the American people, is a budget in balance, and there is not an economist in this country today that will disagree that a budget imbalance causes the economy of this country to be more productive, more job creating, having the ability to pay higher wages and to hire the master's degrees and the doctorate degrees that oftentimes today go wanting and in their search for a job cannot find themselves able to pay the student loan.

The future of our children, Mr. President, and our grandchildren does not depend on a student loan. It depends on the economy of this country and the vitality of that economy that produces the student loans that creates the jobs that offers the future and the opportunity.

Most economists agree today that our current debt structure creates a 2-percent drag on our economy, and that 2-percent drag costs us hundreds of thousands of high-paying jobs annually as we work to increasingly compete in a world marketplace.

I find it absolutely amazing that this President will argue a $200 billion deficit and a debt that heads toward $5 trillion and says that that is growth and that is opportunity and that is going to create a productive economy.

Let me tell you what that kind of $200 billion deficit does to the average child of today, the college student of tomorrow, the job seeker in the future.

The average child today will pay $5,000 additional taxes over their lifetime with that $200 billion deficit. The Clinton budget projects deficits of that range out through the year 2000, and that alone adds up to an additional tax burden of $40,000 in the lifetime of that child. Those are statistics from the National Taxpayers Union.

Mr. President, in my opinion, that is the future. This Senator is going to vote for a dynamic program of student aid, but he is not going to deny that student the same opportunity that that student's parents had in their lifetime: to seek a better life, to have a job, to be productive, to be creative. That is our reality, and that is what we promise the American people.

So I suggest to all of us today that this really is a debate about the child and the child's future and his or her opportunity to be productive, to have a rewarding experience in their life, because just like the security of Medicare and just like the security of Social Security, they are all bound inextricably to the productivity of an economy. Not debt, not layoffs, not a sluggish economy that is not able to get up to speed and to be competitive in a world marketplace.

I am absolutely amazed that we cannot strike that balance or that we have to struggle so hard to argue that a balanced budget makes sense. Somehow this deficit syndrome that the President has caught himself in and is unable to escape—while he argued yesterday, "Look at the productivity, look what I have done," what he failed to say, "In the outyears, I am going to have to ask the American people for another large tax increase, because while my tax increase of a year ago has forced the deficit down, the Government has not changed its spending habits. And every program that I offer in my budget," i.e., the President, "I want more spending and more Government and more growth in the most nonproductive sector of our society."

The American people last November said it very clearly. They said, "Sorry, Mr. President, you're wrong: you've got to change and our Government has to change and we have to make sense of something, because we sense our vitality is slipping away, our ability to make a living is slipping away."

I do not dispute what the other side is saying about the less ability of the American family to pay for their child's education, but have they ever stopped to ask why there is less ability, why can the family of today not provide as much for the child as the family of 20 or 30 years ago? There is an obvious reason. They cannot provide the lifestyle. The economy has been dragged down by a debt structure and a Government that consumes ever greater a proportion of the gross national product of our country in the most nonproductive of ways.

I do not dispute the need for Government, but I do dispute its size, I do dispute the debt, I do dispute the deficit, because economic common sense says, and most economists agree, that if this Government can live within its means, our economy will be a much more productive place. I say to my fellow Senators, and we all know what that means. That is opportunity, that is jobs, that is productivity, that is the average family being able to care for their children and having the pride to say to their children, "You are going to have a better life; you are going to have greater opportunity; we want you to have that college degree, and we can assist you in doing so because our lives are better lives."

That is the issue at hand. It is the debt. It is the question of deficit. It is the drag on the economy and the nonproductive way that we have found ourselves increasingly caught up in, unable to provide those kinds of opportunities.

I applaud what this side is attempting to do in response to the American people and future generations to come.

You see, Mr. President, I have parents—like we all do—who grew up in the Depression days, and they tell me about the phenomenal difficulties and the attitudes that for a generation that experience provoked on the American scene; that somehow they thought less of themselves and less of their ability to produce because of the phenomenal negative economic experience that that generation went through.

Can we assume that that could never occur again? Well, we should not, and that is what Republicans and Americans are doing today in their effort to produce a balanced budget to control the growth of Government and say to future generations, "We heard you and we provided an economy that will give you the opportunity you seek."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I am delighted to join my colleague from Massachusetts in supporting this amendment. As I listen to some of the rhetoric on the floor, I really feel like this is Alice in Wonderland out here. This is not a debate about whether we are going to reduce the deficit or balance the budget. The Republicans keep coming back and saying, "By God, the only way we are going to deal with the deficit and the budget is to do these things."

The choice here is how we are going to balance the budget. They want to spend more money on B-2 bombers.

They want to continue the Market Promotion Program. They want to take a $5 million asset on a trust fund and give people a $1.7 million tax break. It is a question of how we are doing it.

What we all understand is, we should not be doing it at the expense of students and at the expense of the colleges and universities that have entered into the Direct Loan Program so that you can put more money back into the pockets of the lending institutions. It just does not make sense.

The Senator from Idaho stands up and says, "We are going to take a lesser amount of money, but we are still going to be able to give you the same amount of education." I wish he had been there yesterday when the chancellor of the University of Massachusetts and the folks from Lowell, MA, and New Bedford and Fall River, which have 15 percent unemployment, working class people came in and said to me, "Senator, if these cuts go through, our kids are going to drop out of school." And they are going to drop out of school because they are going to have $5,000 of additional costs in interest on the PLUS loan that is going to be $700 to $2,500 of debt because they eliminate the interest subsidy on the 6-month grace period. They are going to have a transfer tax on colleges and universities participating in the student loan program, and they are going to end, for half the universities, direct participation.

Mr. President, those kids cannot go to school paying that additional money. But they are giving the money to people earning more than $300,000, and to all of these other interests. They are continuing additional defense spending. The question is how we will balance the budget. It should not be done on the backs of the future generation in education.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, has leader time been reserved?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. I ask unanimous consent that I may use a portion of that leader time without it being charged against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF WAR CRIMES

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, today's Washington Post reveals shocking news about what happened to the men of Srebrenica after this so-called safe area fell to Bosnian Serb forces in July. Twelve thousand men from this U.N.-designated safe area tired to flee to Bosnian Government-held territory and more than half were brutally butchered by forces under the command of Gen. Ratko Mladic.

Yesterday's Christian Science Monitor reported that Serb officers—from Serbia—actively participated in the massacre of Moslems from Srebrenica.

No doubt about it, General Mladic and his forces are directly responsible for these war crimes. But, these reports beg the question: What was the role of the Yugoslav Army in this attack on Srebrenica and the subsequent massacre of Moslems. And more importantly, what was Slobodan Milosevic's role in these savage war crimes?

Reportedly Mladic is often in Belgrade—where he coordinates with senior Serb officers, including the Chief of Staff of the Yugoslav Army. The Yugoslav Army has continued to actively assist Bosnian Serb forces. And Bosnian Serb and Serb air defenses are integrated.

The bottom line is that the Congress—and the American people—need to hear what the administration knows about the relationship between Bosnian Serb forces and the Yugoslav Army, and the relationship between Mladic and Milosevic. Have we been told everything the administration knows about Milosevic's possible culpability in this hideous war crime?

Frankly, I am highly skeptical that the buck stops at General Mladic. In any event, these questions need to be answered by the administration now.

Next week, the proximity talks will begin in Dayton and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic will attend. We need to know whether we are rolling out the red carpet for a war criminal. We need to know who the administration is dealing with—the butcher of the Balkans or the peacemaker of the Balkans?

Furthermore, the President should publicly commit his administration to ensuring that these war crimes will not be swept under the rug as part of the price of peace settlement. If Milosevic is responsible for war crimes, he should be held accountable—even if this complicates the peace negotiations.

Mr. President, if the administration fails to effectively address the matter of war crimes in the former Yugoslavia, the Congress will. The fiscal year 1996 foreign operations bill includes an amendment I offered on the Senate floor which would prohibit bilateral assistance to any country that provides sanctuary to individuals indicted the U.N. War Crimes Tribunal on Yugoslavia. It also instructs U.S. representatives in multilateral institutions to vote against aid to any country that provides sanctuary to indicted war criminals.

The United States is the leader of the free world—this requires not only political, but moral leadership. We cannot repeat the United Nations's grievous error of looking the other way when confronted with enormous crimes against humanity.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my leader time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have 30 seconds to thank the majority leader for his statement.

Mr. DOLE. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thank the majority leader for his statement made on these war crimes, these atrocities. I do not believe that those who committed these crimes should be able to get away with it. I think it would be a terrible mistake for the world.

I appreciate the power of what the majority leader says. I very much appreciate his focus on the war crimes.

THE BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. When I heard what my colleague from Idaho said, I could not be in more profound disagreement. The debate is not on a balanced budget, deficit reduction; it is on a Minnesota standard of fairness. This agenda here is not connected to the reality of the lives of people that we represent back in our States: "Senator, I am a student at Moorhead State, I work three minimum-wage jobs. The college years are not the best years of my life."

"Senator, I am a nontraditional student. I am older than you and I lost my job; I am going back to school, and I do not have much money. If you cut my financial aid, I will not be able to get back on my own two feet."

"Senator, I am a single mother, and I am going back to school, and I have two small children. If you cut my financial aid, I will not be able to move from welfare to workfare."

I hear it in community colleges; I hear it in public universities; I hear it in private schools. I asked my colleagues, I say to my colleague from Massachusetts, during markup, "Have you held town meetings in the campuses? Do you know what the consequences of what you are doing here in the Senate will be for students in this country?"

Mr. President, this is outrageous.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the text of a petition from 515 students at Inver Hills Community College and Lakewood Community College.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PETITION FOR SAVING OUR STUDENT LOAN PROGRAM

Students are concerned about federal financial aid cuts Congress proposes to higher education. If these cuts are made, they will affect my ability to go to college and find a living wage job. Please help me continue to have an education that is affordable and accessible. The economic security of our nation depends upon a well-educated work force. America's future rests in your hands.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I simply say it loud and clear, and I will shout it from the mountaintop. I only have probably 30 seconds left. If you want to do deficit reduction, cut the subsidies for the pharmaceutical companies, cut the subsidies for the oil companies, cut the subsidies for the insurance companies, cut the subsidies for the tobacco companies; do not spend more money on stealth bombers and Trident and all of the rest, and do not have tax cuts that disproportionately go to the wealthiest people.

Do not do deficit reduction by denying all too many young people—and not-so-young people because many of our students are older—their opportunity for a higher education. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of the Kennedy amendment. It speaks to basic economic justice. I hope 100 Senators vote for it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has 5 minutes 12 seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself 4 minutes, Mr. President.

Mr. President, I want to repeat what I mentioned at the outset, that our amendment is budget neutral. We have been asked about that.

Mr. President, in the final few moments, I have been amazed by the silence of our Republican friends in defending an indefensible policy. Silence in defending a policy that will put a stranglehold on the sons and daughters of working families trying to achieve a better education. The most that was said in defense of this indefensible policy, Mr. President, by one Member of the Republicans, is that this proposal is "changing the parameters of the obligation." Let me tell every working family in my State and across the country the truth. This Republican proposal is going to mean more dollars out of your pocket and more obligations on the students of this country.

In the final breath, Mr. President, there is an extraordinary reliance by our Republican friends on raising the revenues. In their proposal, they put a tax—described by the majority of the Republicans as a "fee"—on every educational institution in this country. They would mandate a tax on every educational institution. The cruelest part of all is that the amount of that tax increases as they provide more and more assistance to the neediest students that go to those schools. The institutional tax goes in the opposite direction of every educational policy that we have made in the last 30 years. It requires more and more payment by the sons and daughters of working families and the neediest families. That is just an extraordinary admission, Mr. President, of a bankrupt effort by our Republican friends by taxing these working families.

In the Republican proposal, working families are going to have to pay more out of their hard-earned income because of the tax increase in the EITC. Then, the same working families are going to pay more out of scarce resources for the copays and the deductibles we will have to have.

Because of reductions in Medicaid, these working families are going to pay even more to provide health care coverage for their children.

For what reason? To give a tax break for the wealthiest individuals and the wealthiest corporations. That is what this is all about. They are taking the money out of the pockets of the neediest families in this country and transferring it to the wealthiest individuals. That is the parameter of the obligation that our Republican friends refer to when they try to justify their position.

Mr. President, this bill and these cuts are too harsh and too extreme. But, in addition to their cold heart, Republicans are now getting cold feet. The verdict of the American people is coming in.

Republicans are being found guilty beyond a reasonable doubt of hurting senior citizens on Medicare; guilty of hurting helpless elderly patients in nursing homes; guilty of punishing innocent children on welfare; guilty of closing college doors to the sons and daughters of working families; guilty of pandering to polluters and endangering the environment; guilty of massive giveaways to powerful special interest groups; guilty of taxing low-income workers; guilty of taxing hard-pressed college students to give tax breaks to millionaires.

Whatever became of the anti tax Republicans? I say shame, shame on the Republican Party for using their majority power to hurt the vast majority of Americans. This bill will be dead on arrival at the White House, and we ought to bury it right here in the U.S. Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope we have an opportunity to vote on this amendment soon.

What is the Chair's understanding about when we will be able to have a disposition of this amendment?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, if I could answer briefly the Senator's question. It is a good one.

We have been trying to work on this since yesterday afternoon. It appears we are very close to agreement that allows us to start voting up or down on these amendments sometime early this afternoon and very late into the evening.

Mr. KENNEDY. Would the Senator yield half a minute on the bill?

Mr. EXON. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have heard that my Republican colleagues are trying to doctor up some different proposal on student loan cuts. We have had months to change the proposal. I hope we will support this amendment that represents the best judgment of parents, educators, and working families.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for his excellent presentation, and I agree with his remarks. I agree with his conclusion. I hope we can move in an expeditious fashion.

I yield 8 minutes off the bill to my colleague from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have been puzzled here for nearly a day and a half because we have some very important decisions to make in the U.S. Senate, one of which deals with Medicare, and we are not voting on them.

Reconciliation is a process that provides us 20 hours. We offered an amendment that does not take great skill to read. It does not take many staff people to read it. It is very simple.

It says, "Let's reduce this tax cut for the wealthy and use the savings to reduce the cut on Medicare for the elderly." That is a very simple proposition.

It has been almost 30 hours since it was offered yesterday on the floor of the Senate, and no vote. Why no vote? Is it hard to understand? Are people still reviewing this? No, that is not why. What we have is a stall.

I understand we may be getting close to an agreement, and I hope we are, because if we are not, we are going to start reading this legislation—maybe two or three times. It is 1,949 pages, given us Tuesday night to come to the floor Wednesday morning.

Most people here do not have the foggiest notion of what is in it. Most of us have some suspicion about what is in it. Most of us believe that this, handed to the wealthier families in America, will provoke significant smiles because they will find some awfully good news in here for their families. Drive a Mercedes Benz, make half a million a year, there is awfully good news in here for you.

If you are an elderly person, dependent on Medicare or a poor person on Medicaid or a middle-income family trying to send your kids to school, or a poor mother who has a child in Head Start, the news here is pretty grim. It says we cannot afford you. It says you better tighten your belt because this is coming your way, and this is not good news for you at all.

I think some of the pieces of the puzzle are starting to come into focus about who is fighting for whom. Whose side are you on?

Here are a couple pieces of that puzzle. This was in the paper yesterday. One of the new Republicans over in the House of Representatives says "the Democrats once again have it all wrong when they claim the GOP's proposed $500 tax credit for families earning up to $200,000 is a tax cut for the rich." He says those folks are lower middle class.

Heineman, former Raleigh Police Chief, told the Raleigh News and Observer that his salary of $133,000 plus $50,000 a year in police pensions "does not make me rich. It does not make me middle class. In my opinion that makes me lower middle class."

This new Republican, this fellow that has new ideas and came with a notion of change says, "When I see someone who is making anywhere from $300,000 to $750,000 a year, that's middle class." He said, "When I see anyone above that, that's upper middle class." Oh, really? These are the new ideas? Middle class at $750,000 a year? Now I can understand why they tell us their tax cut is aimed at the middle class. Now it is clear to me. I understand how these pieces to the puzzle start to fit.

Another big piece—in fact, it is the centerpiece for this puzzle in this morning's newspaper—the Speaker of the House, speaking candidly to Blue Cross Blue Shield, an insurance company, says this in talking about Medicare:

Now let me talk about Medicare . . . we don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart.

Let me say that again. The Speaker of the House says, and these are people who say, "We love Medicare; we want to save Medicare."

We don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart and we don't think that's the right way to go through a transition. But we believe it's going to wither on the vine because we think people are going to voluntarily leave it.

Now, put these pieces into the puzzle and see if you do not start getting the message. These are people who are going to save Medicare? No, I do not think so.

Round one. They do not get rid of it in round one. But guess what? This is a 10 rounder, and by the end of this match they plan on getting rid of Medicare. This is all about the middle class—yes, their middle class—somebody making $750,000 a year.

I said, good news and bad news around here. I was watching Star Wars the other night with my children. I have not seen that for a long time. Does anyone remember the characters in Star Wars, R2-D2 and C3-PO? I was thinking, if children in this society had names with numbers maybe they would do better; right?

Let me give some numbers that do well. I said that a lot of folks do not do well in this. A lot of kids do not do well. Fifty-five thousand kids, all of whom have names, will no longer be in Head Start because the majority cannot afford them in the Head Start program. A kid by the name of Tim or Martha or Tom, they get bad news, no Head Start program.

But if you had an initial like a B-2 or an F-15 or a UH-60 Blackhawk—go down this list. I do not have time. But this is a list, all of which represent spending add-ons; in other words, money that the Defense Department did not ask for, for helicopters, amphibious ships, fighters, bombers, star wars, and on and on and on that the Defense Department said they did not want, they did not need, and they did not order.

Guess what? The conservatives say, "We insist you buy it because we got the money to pay for it." And then they bring 2,000 pages out here to the floor and say, "We are sorry. We are broke. You are poor? You are young? Out of luck."

So we say to them on Medicare, on our first amendment, offered nearly 30 hours ago, how about establishing priorities here? How about at least forgetting the tax cut notion you got for the wealthiest Americans and using some of that money to provide Medicare for the elderly? Do you know what, 30 hours later we cannot get a vote. Why can we not get a vote? Is it because they cannot understand the amendment? No. It is because they are stalling. They do not want to vote on the amendment.

One way or another, somehow we are going to vote on this amendment. We might stand here for 6 days, but we are going to vote on this amendment, and we are going to vote on the education amendment, and we are going to vote on the next amendment which is fiscal responsibility, which says do not give a tax cut until we have a balanced budget.

I am a little disappointed about what has been going on the last 30 hours. I can understand a shuffle when I see it. I can understand a stall when I see it. But nobody ought to claim to us they do not understand this issue. After 30 hours you would think everybody understands it well enough to have a vote.

So, it is 10 minutes to 1. How about a vote at 1 o'clock? Why do you not give the elderly in this country an opportunity? Express yourselves and give us an opportunity to express ourselves about tax cuts for the rich and Medicare cuts for the rest? Let us decide if we are going to have a vote soon.

If we are near an agreement, I say fine. I want us to have an agreement and get through this. But I say, at the end stage of this process, that I happen to know and all of you in this room know what is really at work. We have a Medicare amendment on the floor. The Speaker of the House gives a speech to Blue Cross/Blue Shield. He says he wants to save Medicare. And here is what he says in his speech. "We don't get rid of it in round one because we don't think that would be politically smart."

We understand what that means about round two. That is why this is important. That is why there is some passion in this debate, about a lot of folks who have reached their senior status in life and fear they are going to get sick and they are not going to have the money to deal with that illness. This is important.

Mr. President, I ask for 1 additional minute.

Mr. EXON. I am sorry. Another 30 seconds. I am trying to conserve time on this side.

Mr. DORGAN. I yield the floor to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I will yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I listened very carefully to the very distinguished Senator from North Dakota. What is the date of that speech the Speaker made when he said that this is only round one to get rid of Medicare?

Mr. DORGAN. The speech apparently was given the other night, October 24.

Mr. SARBANES. On the same day, October 24, Senator DOLE made a speech. Listen to this. "I was there, fighting the fight, voting against Medicare—1 of 12—because we knew it wouldn't work in 1965."

So you have the Republican leader in the Senate and the Republican leader in the House, both of whom have been trying to portray themselves as helping Medicare, now bragging about the fact that they are against Medicare or that this is only the first round in getting rid of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will advise the Senator 30 seconds has expired.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, as I understand it we are now prepared to go to the next item that will be offered by the Senator from Arkansas with 30 minutes equally divided; is that correct?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Yes. We are prepared to do that.

Mr. EXON. So I hope the Chair could recognize the Senator from Arkansas, following 1½ minutes that I would like to yield at this time to the Senator from Vermont.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DEWINE). The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I have repeatedly said on the Senate floor that balancing the Federal budget is so important we need to set our partisan differences aside.

Unfortunately, balancing the budget was the most serious problem facing our country—until today.

The American people are fed up with Washington—and how can you blame them.

The single working mother who is holding two jobs to take care of her children should expect nothing less than having the Federal Government pay its own bills.

Vermonters must balance their checkbooks each month, why should the Government that they send their taxes to not be held to the same accountability.

Mr. President, Republicans laud this budget reconciliation bill that we are debating today as the solution to the deficit problem.

Well, this bill may balance the budget but the wake it leaves behind threatens to irreparably divide our country. This bill is a cruel prank on hard working Americans who have asked Congress to get our budget in order.

The Republican leadership has answered the call to balance the budget with a plan that radically redistributes the wealth of our country.

Playing on the desires of hard working Americans, the Republican leadership has seized the opportunity to protect the wealthiest in our country.

This plan balances the budget on the backs of the people who are working the longest hours, in the lowest paying jobs.

Ironically, as these Americans have shouted out the loudest about getting our fiscal books in order, they will be the ones who feel the pain the most.

Under the guise of saving Americans from the burden of debt, the Republican leadership has devastated programs that help hard working men and women realize the American dream of economic opportunity.

We are told that in order to save programs, we must first kill them so that 7 years from now they will emerge solvent and robust.

It is a leap of faith that I cannot make, much to my embarrassment, because my distinguished colleagues in the majority have been telling us what a bold and courageous moment in time that they are seizing.

They are the self appointed saviors out to rescue us from the trillions of dollars of debt accrued during the Reagan-Bush administrations. They never mention that latter part—no doubt an oversight—and in the press of time, it is perfectly understandable why the subject never arises.

A case in point is education. This bill makes short-sighted cuts in education. It cuts student loan programs by $10 billion over the next 7 years.

Students will be hit with 70 percent of these cuts—increasing the costs to the 20,000 Vermonters receiving higher education and their families by at least $5,800 over the life of a student loan.

Congress should be working to make education more affordable—not less.

These additional financial burdens will discourage many students from continuing their education after high school.

The Contract With America has sealed the fate of the next generation of Americans. They may never have the chance of post high school training or a college education—the key to a better paying job.

Mr. President, the list of programs that the Republican leadership are slashing under the thin guise of reform is long.

This bill is a back door version of the New Federalism, the short-lived brainchild that was the predecessor of the Contract With America. Congress piles up the rhetoric while dumping the tough decisions on the States.

Governors are increasingly wary of this, because the cost for maintaining any of these programs will rest squarely on the local taxpayers.

We know that Medicaid is a life-line to provide essential health care to low-income pregnant women, children, the disabled, and the elderly.

It is also the safety net that rescues middle-class families when a factory closes down and the jobs that are available do not provide health insurance.

It spares middle-class families from choosing between nursing home care for a parent or financing the college education of a son or daughter.

I think we all agree that the Medicaid reform proposal before us turns the program over to the States, at greatly reduced funding levels.

Despite all the disclaimers from its supporters, I remain unconvinced that it is anything more than a recurrence of policies that once made poor farms and orphanages the sanctuaries for low-income children and families in America.

I agree that States should have more flexibility, but not at the cost of our national responsibility. Our States will find themselves hundreds of millions of dollars short of funds to provide necessary health care over the next 7 years.

Vermont already has flexibility through the Federal waiver process.

Vermont's plan continues the Federal/State partnership nature of Medicaid and enables Vermont to cover 15,000 more of the State's growing number of uninsured.

This bill will nullify Vermont's initiatives to administer the program more economically.

The budgetary pressure on States to make cuts in eligibility and benefits will be very strong. On average, States will lose 30 percent of their Federal Medicaid payments by the year 2002.

There is no provision in this bill that would provide Vermont, or any State, with additional resources in times of economic downturn or recession when the Medicaid rolls have historically increased.

Vermont will lose 10 percent on average over the next 7 years and cuts are backloaded so that Vermont will lose 27 percent in the year 2002.

This cut is estimated to reduce Federal Medicaid payments to Vermont by $205 million over the next 7 years.

If the sharp reductions in Federal Medicaid funding cannot be offset by managed care savings or cuts in payments to providers, States will have to cut benefits or severely limit the number of people eligible unless they are willing to pay a much larger share of the cost of the program with State funds.

Competition among States may contribute to the pressure to restrict eligibility.

Without Federal standards, many predict a race to the bottom where no State wants to be seen as providing broader coverage or more generous benefits than its neighbors.

While there was much talk about this bill partially retaining an entitlement for low-income pregnant women, children, and the disabled, the truth is that the bill fully follows through on the Contract With America proposal to provide no assurance to any low-income American that they will get the health care they need.

This fact was certified by the Congressional Budget Office earlier this week.

The plan also repeals requirements that now protect nursing home residents from being restrained, drugged, or forced to live with substandard care in disreputable homes.

It replaces these safeguards with 50 separate State regulations with no standard minimum requirements.

I have been pleading for Congress and the President to join in bipartisan negotiations on balancing the budget without jeopardizing the success of our health programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BUMPERS] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion is as follows:

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. President, I move to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to delay the effectiveness of any revenue reductions until the first fiscal year in which outlays no longer exceed revenues.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, this is very simple and straightforward. The Members of this body should vote for this on a purely intellectual basis, without regard for partisanship. That is hard for me to say, and I know it is hard for people around here to respond to that kind of request. But it simply says: Do not cut taxes until you balance the budget.

I can remember not too many months ago when that idea had great credence in this body, on both sides of the aisle. I had even hoped at one time that the chairman of the Budget Committee who crafted this whole thing, Senator DOMENICI, would join me, today, with this amendment saying we are not going to cut taxes until we balance the budget. Here is what Senator DOMENICI said on May 29, this year, just a few months ago.

"We are working through some very, very tough terrain," he said, acknowledging that most battles lie ahead. "But I am convinced that most people share our view that we must balance the budget first before we cut taxes."

Here is a chart for anybody who chooses to look at this thing economically and sensibly. Here it is. You cut taxes in accordance with $245 billion, the figure that is bandied about here, and if you cut taxes by $245 billion over the next 7 years you add $293 billion to the national debt and our children and grandchildren will pay interest on that $293 billion as far as you can see.

I do not want to mix Social Security in this, but when you add this $300 billion, also bear in mind there are about $656 or $660 billion in Social Security surpluses that are going to be used. To say we are going to have a balanced budget when we are using Social Security surpluses, when we are $78 billion short even by the Republicans' own numbers, it is a scam to lead the American people to believe that we are going to have a balanced budget. If we never have another deficit after 2002, our grandchildren and great-grandchildren are going to pay interest on this tax cut.

You know, the reconciliation bill provides $5,600 per year—listen to this—$5,600 per year in tax cuts for the wealthiest 1 percent of the people in this country, and the bottom 50 percent wind up with less money than they had before this reconciliation bill passes.

What does that say about the values of the U.S. Congress, about their attitude—not toward people with stocks who get dividends and interest, but about working people who sweat and toil every day to keep this Nation going, who get nothing out of this except increases, lowered standard of living?

Do you know something else? This bill stands squarely on the shoulders of 50 brave Democrats who, in August 1993, passed a reconciliation bill. I want you to think about this. If it were not for 50 brave Senators who stood on their hind feet and voted to raise taxes on the wealthy and to cut spending accordingly, the Republicans would be faced with raising another $1.081 trillion to balance the budget.

The senior Senator from Texas, a candidate for the Presidency, said we want all of those people in the back of the wagon to get out and help the rest of us pull. They were. Every single Republican in the Senate was in the back of the wagon that day when a lot of people lost their jobs a year and a half later for doing something so sensible. And here they are still in the back of the wagon taking advantage of $1.8 trillion that the Democrats provided, the most courageous, sensible thing that the President of the United States has proposed since he has been President.

Mr. EXON. Will the Senator yield for a second for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. BUMPERS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. EXON. I ask unanimous consent that the unanimous-consent request not be charged to either side. In order to try to accommodate as many people as possible we are trying to shrink down this time.

I ask unanimous consent that, rather than one-half hour of time on this amendment, it be reduced by 5 minutes each to 25 minutes per side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INHOFE). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend and say, to accommodate a lot of people, we have subtracted 5 minutes.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, our friends on the other side of the aisle have the best of both worlds. They can criticize and carp about that bill in 1993, and yet they have never tried to undo one penny of it; did not undo the gas tax, did not undo the 36-percent tax rate increase, have not done anything about the surcharge, and they get the benefit of over $1 trillion in balancing the budget because 50 Senators stood up—and 2 of them are not with us today because they did; and about 17 Members of the House are not with us today because they did.

This tax cut is the height of fiscal irresponsibility. That is the reason we call it the fiscal responsibility amendment, to do away with the tax cut until we balance the budget. We have the rest of our lives to cut taxes. Our first chore is to keep faith with the people of this country.

If you eliminate the tax cut, you do not balance the budget in the year 2002 even by the Republican figures. You can do it in 2001. That would be shocking.

But the most important thing I want to say, Mr. President, is do not cut taxes when we are running this kind of a deficit. Balance the budget, and then talk about taxes. When you are talking about tax cuts, talk for a change about working people and real middle-class Americans.

Mr. President, I yield the floor. Does anyone wish time?

I yield to the distinguished Senator from Michigan 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I thank my friend from Arkansas.

This tax package which is contained in the massive budget reconciliation bill is ill timed. It is inequitable. It provides the $224 billion tax break which, when fully phased in, would go disproportionally to the wealthiest among us. Indeed, more than half of those tax breaks would go to the wealthiest 14 percent of Americans, and we are talking about the fully phased in tax package. In that tax package, while the upper 14 percent get over 50 percent of the tax reductions, 14 million Americans of modest means would actually get a tax increase.

This maldistribution is reason enough to reject this tax package. But it becomes all the more unacceptable when one considers the extreme lengths to which the majority has gone to pay for these large tax breaks. Senior citizens are hit hard, students are hit hard, and working people are hit hard. But, above and beyond those flaws, there is the simple fact that we in this tax package would be providing tax cuts before assuring the reality of the deficit reduction that is projected. In other words, under this bill we would be spending the money before it is in the bank.

We have seen this before. In 1981, President Reagan introduced the Economic Recovery Tax Act which had large tax cuts, and also had projections, aspirations, hopes, and plans that the budget would be balanced by 1984. The tax cuts were not made dependent upon those projections taking place. If they had been, we would have been a trillion dollars better off in those years. But it seems to me that history is so recent that we ought to take its lessons and say to ourselves that we have to get deficit reduction under our belts before we enact tax cuts. This time let us make sure that projections of deficit reductions turn out to be true before we do the easier part.

On October 18, the Congressional Budget Office Director, June O'Neill, wrote the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee to provide the critical certification which the budget resolution calls for. The claims of a balanced budget are based on that certification, and the tax cut is based on an argument that we are reaching a balanced budget by 2002, which in turn is based on that certification. But when you read the certification, it is a bunch of hedges.

The Congressional Budget Office letter says, "Based on estimates using economic and technical assumptions underlying the budget resolution, assuming the level of discretionary spending specified in that resolution, the Congressional Budget Office projects . . ."—and later on the letter says—"the Congressional Budget Office projects that the resulting reductions in interest payments will be $50 billion in the year 2002 and $170 billion over the 1996-2002 period." Then the Congressional Budget Office says, "Those projections were based on a hypothetical deficit reduction path." It is based on those hypothetical estimates, projections, that the balanced budget claim is made for the year 2002. But even more significant, for the purpose of this amendment which is pending, it is based on those hypothetical paths, projections, and estimates that the tax cut is being defended.

This letter does not certify much except that the Congressional Budget Office has a long list of wiggle words which are available to us. And it is the foundation; it is that certification again which is the foundation for the assertion that the budget is going to be in balance in the year 2002. And you cannot help that because you have to have projections and estimates. But what we can avoid doing is providing a tax cut before we know in fact that the budget is going to be balanced.

So what this amendment says is hold off the tax cuts until we balance the budget. In fact, let us put the money in the bank before we spend it.

And, let's not be fooled by the happy talk about reaching a balanced budget. It is not balanced by any commonsense or legal definition. We know already, as Congressional Budge Office Director June O'Neill's letter to Senator CONRAD acknowledges, this plan falls short of balancing the budget by $105 billion in the year 2002. This is because the Republican majority's budget uses the surplus in the Social Security Trust Fund to mask the real Federal deficit.

The law, section 13301 of the Congressional Budget Act, states:

[T]he receipts and disbursements of the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund shall not be counted as new budget authority, outlays, receipts, or deficit or surplus for purposes of:

(1) the budget of the United States Government as submitted by the President,

(2) the congressional budget, or

(3) the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985.

And, the law further states:

The concurrent resolution shall not include the outlay and revenue totals of the old age, survivors, and disability insurance program established under Title II of the Social Security Act or the related provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 in the surplus or deficit totals required by this subsection or in any other surplus or deficit totals required by this title.

We're not only spending the dollars before they are in the bank, we are spending them earlier and faster than we are even projected to have them to spend.

Nearly half of the savings in this budget are projected to come in 2001 and 2002, while the tax breaks are set in law now. In fact, the budget resolution assumes $440 billion in discretionary spending cuts over 7 years. Only $18 billion of that would be cut next year, less than 5 percent. We know from past history what happens when tax cuts are put in law now while most of the actual cuts are to take place later.

Some of our Republican colleagues have appeared, in public statements, to agree that a tax cut should be put off until we are sure deficits will drop as predicted. Let's join together on a bipartisan basis and do just that.

I yield the floor.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Wisconsin 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. FEINGOLD. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, this amendment is simple and straightforward. It eliminates the fiscally irresponsible and reckless tax cut that is the core of this fatally flawed reconciliation package.

All the other provisions of the reconciliation bill, in my view, flow from this singular act of fiscal irresponsibility. Cuts to Medicare and Medicaid, student loans and the earned income tax credit, as well as the other provisions in this measure, all driven by the need to fund a quarter of a trillion dollar tax cut, are so out of proportion to any consensus the public would support that I think they doom any hope their supporters might have of really balancing the budget.

Mr. President, just as we are beginning to climb out of the hole that was dug 14 years ago, somebody wants to shove us back in.

Mr. President, we have made remarkable progress in lowering the Federal budget deficit during the 103d Congress. The President's deficit reduction package produced $600 billion in lower deficits and got us about half the way there—almost half the way there to a balanced budget, from over $300 billion to about $160 billion. In fact, Mr. President, but for the debts rung up during the 1980's, we would be in balance today.

But we still do not have a balanced budget, and we cannot afford any tax cut—not the President, not the House, not the Senate tax cut. We need to balance the budget. That should be our first priority.

Actually, Mr. President, this bill is really an alchemist's dream. Those who have crafted this measure have finally invented a machine that makes gold. The reconciliation bill really amounts to just that. It is a machine that makes gold. All you do is feed health care services for the most vulnerable among us in our Nation, and out comes gold.

Of course, Mr. President, not everyone shares equally in that bounty. The gold from this machine largely benefits the best off in our Nation. The better off you are, the more you get. The less well off you are, the less you get.

I am not going to dwell any further on the distribution issues relating to the tax cut. As I have noted many times on this floor, this issue comes to me as an issue of pure fiscal responsibility. Even if the benefits of tax cuts were more fairly distributed. I would oppose it. We cannot afford to cut taxes while we still face a Federal budget deficit of $160 billion. Nobody out there believes that makes fiscal sense. It is the opposite of sense. And you cannot spend $1 three times. You cannot say you are spending the dollar to save Medicare and then you are going to use the same dollar to eliminate the deficit and then you are going to use the dollar for tax cuts. You can only spend it once. This budget uses it not to save Medicare, not to reduce the deficit, but to fund tax cuts. For that reason, I regard this as the most important amendment in this process, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. BUMPERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. I wonder if the minority leader has a speaker here he wishes to recognize at this point?

Mr. ABRAHAM. Is the Senator referring to me?

Mr. BUMPERS. Yes.

Mr. ABRAHAM. He mentioned the minority leader.

Mr. BUMPERS. Majority leader. I am sorry; I have a hard time breaking the habit.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I will have somebody here shortly. If the Senator has a short speech, we would be ready to go after that.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Like the previous amendments, this one is also painfully simple. It is an amendment that will not take a dozen staff to explain, an amendment that will not take a great deal of research, an amendment that probably should not take a great deal of thought. No one can misunderstand what this is. This amendment says we ought not do a tax cut until the budget is balanced. Do not serve dessert before the main course.

It is a pretty simple proposition. My expectation is they will not want to vote on that either. We have been here 30 hours. They do not want to give a vote on Medicare so we will not get a vote on this. One of these days we will, I guess.

Let me talk about the proposed tax cut. This is the center pole in the tent called Contract With America. This is the center pole of the tent, the tax cut. And I understand why. It is enormously popular. Go take a poll and ask people: Would you like a tax cut? Heck, yes, I would like a tax cut; the bigger the better.

So I understand why it is there. This is about polls and focus groups and finding out what is popular—let us give a tax cut. I wonder how the American people would feel if they were told that every dollar of this tax cut will be borrowed in order to give it. In other words, we are going to increase the Federal debt during these 7 years with this plan by $660 billion roughly—this plan, a $660 billion increase in the debt and then a $245 billion tax cut. In other words, every single dollar plus much more will be borrowed. We will borrow money, float bonds to give a tax cut, a substantial portion of which will go to upper income Americans.

I think most people would say, well, that does not make much sense. But that is not what this debate is about—sense. If it were about sense, we would not even have to offer this amendment. We would have people say let us do the honest work and the tough work, the heavy lifting to balance the Federal budget. Let us do that. When we are done with that, then let us talk about the Tax Code, what is wrong with it, how do we fix it, who gets a tax cut.

That is not what we are doing. What we are doing is pretending to balance the budget and saying now that we pretend to balance the budget, we will offer up a tax cut. Unfortunately, we have a letter dated October 20 from the Director of the Congressional Budget Office. I asked, is the budget in balance in the year 2002? The answer is no—$105 billion deficit in 2002. That is, of course, if you take the Social Security trust funds and put them in the Social Security trust funds where they should be. If you take them out and use them as operating revenue, then you balance the budget.

I guess those who took remedial accounting and believe that double entry bookkeeping means you can use money twice in two different places at the same time. I guess they are comfortable and they can sleep with this. But, of course, if you were in private business and said, let me take the money out of my employees' pension funds and use it on my operating statement, you would be doing years at hard tennis at some minimum security prison. Instead, it is "budget technique" to say, let us misuse Social Security trust funds, show a balanced budget in the year 2002 by misusing that money, and then claim we have a balanced budget so we are going to give a tax cut. Every single dollar of this tax cut will be borrowed in the next 7 years and every Member of this Senate knows it. They can pretend they did not hear or they did not know; it escaped their attention. But they know it. This amendment is very simple. It is called a "fiscal responsibility amendment." It says, let us do the tough, honest work first, get the budget balanced, really balanced, and then let us decide how to fix our tax system.

Having said all of that, I hope one of these hours we will get a vote first on Medicare and then on the sequential amendments because these are not difficult for anybody to understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I need. I will be very brief, and then I will yield further time on our side.

Mr. President, the fact is it is not surprising that the minority is arguing against tax cuts. They are the party that raised taxes in this country in the last Congress by a record-setting $270 billion. In my State and across America, everywhere I go, the people I talk to say we need a tax cut to make ends meet. The middle-class squeeze we talk about on the floor all the time is in no small measure the result of the fact that today in America average families send $1 to Washington for every $4 they earn versus $1 for every $50 they earned back in the 1950's and the 1960's. Those are the families who are paying the bills and paying the taxes.

As we go through the belt-tightening process here in Washington to bring down the deficit, we believe it is only fair to let those hard-working families keep more of what they earn. What we have been presented with today is an amendment that says to all of those families: Wait. Wait, American families, hard-working families, for your $500 tax credit. Wait, spouses who work in the home, before you get your IRA. Wait, to people who want to adopt and need a little help making an adoption feasible. Wait, to jobseekers who need the opportunities created by progrowth tax cuts.

We believe the waiting should be over. We say this: If America's taxpayers want to wait for the Democrats and President Clinton to produce a tax cut, fine. But we have already gone through a lot of waiting for the tax cut that was promised in the 1992 campaign by the President. It has never been delivered. The waiting that this amendment suggests will have to continue will also be undelivered. We are prepared to allow hard-working families to realize tax savings now.

At this time I yield 6 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, we have entered a new age in American politics. All of us know that. The days are long gone when elected officials can get elected, duck controversy, avoid hard choices, and, yes, hide from the judgment of the people. Governing in 1995 requires hard choices, adherence to principle and accountability. As party defections increase, as State legislatures and governorships change hands, my former colleagues on the other side of the aisle scratch their heads and ask why. The answer is simple, Mr. President. On the other side of the aisle there is no accountability and no willingness to make hard choices.

Instead, I believe they remain wedded to the status quo politics and policies that have led this country to the verge of bankruptcy.

For 60 years the other side has steadily created a Federal monster that now handles $1 out of every $4 in our economy. While the growth of the Government that past half century is stunning, it should come as no surprise to all of us. The politics of the status quo promoted on the other side of the aisle operates on the simple premise that the American people will always trade their freedom and their hard-won dollars for the promise of Government security.

"Tax and spend." Yes, Mr. President, "tax and spend, and the docile American people will never resist. Tax and spend, tax and spend, and the American people will never support the reform or repeal of a Government program. Make the American people dependent on the Federal Government for everything from income and health care to business subsidies, and they will never resist or even reject us."

These, Mr. President, I believe, are the maxims by which the agents of the status quo operate. But, Mr. President, the agents opposed to change have vastly underestimated the American people. The reason, Mr. President: The price of a balanced budget is so high that the American people will reject any politician who attempts to do the right thing and bring the budget into balance. They are dead wrong. We are allowing families to keep more of their hard-earned dollars, and we are ending welfare as we know it, and, above all, we are balancing the budget. The agents of change have a solemn obligation to do the unheard of, keep their promises. And I believe we will.

Mr. President, I would just like to show two charts in the short time I have of what parents can purchase with a $500-per-child tax credit in America.

For example, with a $500 tax credit, items parents can purchase: a winter jacket, $30; winter boots, $30; athletic socks, $6.50, six pairs of those; a sweat shirt, $12; books, $100; a tutor for their child, $230, 32 hours. That is $498.50. We checked it out.

We also have another chart for the $500 tax credit. Parents can purchase 847 jars of baby food or, Mr. President, 2,370 disposable diapers or approximately 6 months of electric bills.

The $500 tax credit for working families in America is real, and they need it.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in strong support of the fiscal responsibility amendment. Mr. President, we should not cut taxes until we balance the budget. This reconciliation legislation cuts taxes before the budget is balanced. This is like eating dessert before dinner.

I support a balanced Federal budget and I have voted for significant deficit reduction over the past 2 years. But reducing the deficit cannot be accomplished if we are simultaneously cutting taxes for the wealthiest of Americans.

This is fiscally irresponsible. This highlights the Republican's real priority in this reconciliation bill—cutting taxes for the wealthiest Americans.

Balancing the budget must be based on principles that uphold basic values. Protecting our seniors, providing opportunities for our young people, and protecting the ladders of opportunity for working families are my guiding principles. This reconciliation legislation violates those principles by gutting Medicare and Medicaid, cutting student loans and repealing the earned income tax credit [EITC].

The fact is Mr. President, the Republican tax cut would add nearly $300 billion to the national debt by 2002. All but the last few billion of the tax cut is borrowed money, under the Republicans own deficit reduction timetable.

This reconciliation bill is fiscally irresponsible—and don't think otherwise. Requiring the budget to be balanced before we cut taxes is the responsible, fair and principled action to take. That's what this amendment ensures. This amendment also ensures that future tax cuts will be targeted to low and moderate-income working American families, not the wealthiest Americans. That is why I support this amendment and urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. President, the tax cuts proposed by the Republicans are fiscally disastrous. I urge my colleagues to vote for fairness and common sense and vote for this amendment.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I have long believed that it would take courage and wisdom to develop and implement a plan that would lead to a balanced budget. Without the courage to make tough choices and the wisdom to place budget policy above partisan politics, our ability to develop an equitable plan that can stand the test of time and public opinion is severely limited.

While I give our Republican friends credit for bringing this package to the floor, I must say that a certain element of this plan does not reflect courage, wisdom or equity. A particular concern to me is the tax breaks which have been included in the bill.

Mr. President, it does not take courage to cut taxes. That is one of the easiest votes a legislator can cast. What takes courage is to revisit politically popular tax cuts at a time we have a nearly $5 trillion debt, and even a unified balanced budget is at least 7 years away if we get there at all. And for all the talk about fiscal responsibility recently, how can we endorse a $245 billion tax cut that makes balancing the budget much more difficult and adds to the debt over the next 7 years?

Mr. President, I was one of three Democrats who supported the original Senate budget resolution this year because I strongly believe that we have a responsibility to make tough choices that are necessary to balance the budget.

Unfortunately, during the budget resolution conference between the House and the Senate, fiscal responsibility gave way to political expediency as tax breaks were added up front and the deep spending reductions moved into the next century. Were these particular changes wise? In my judgment, absolutely not.

I think most in this Chamber would agree we should not be cutting taxes until we prove capable of carrying out these spending reductions and actually balance the budget.

If we get further down the road and decide spending reductions, particularly Medicare and Medicaid, in this plan are politically unsustainable. I fear, Mr. President, that we will abandon the spending cuts and leave the tax cuts in place at a time when their cost will begin to explode. And as we have seen before, the end result will be we will simply be further away from a balanced budget.

The last point I would like to address is equity. Including the tax cut in this plan is not equitable. At a time when we are asking the American public to sacrifice by restraining the growth of programs which benefit low- and-moderate-income individuals, how can we, in good conscience, adopt a tax cut which, according to the Treasury Department estimates, will disproportionately benefit upper-income Americans? I simply cannot agree.

Including $245 billion in tax cuts in this budget package is not courageous, it is not wise, and it not equitable. I would implore my colleagues to reject the proposition that we should have tax cuts before we have a balanced budget.

With that, Mr. President, I yield the floor, and I thank the Chair.

YOU'RE RIGHT MR. PRESIDENT, YOU RAISED TAXES TOO MUCH!

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, why after shackling American middle-class families with the largest tax increase in history, has Bill Clinton finally admitted that he made a mistake? Why does his confession come just days before Congressional Republicans are scheduled to meet in conference to finish one of the largest tax cut proposals since the Kemp-Roth income tax rate reductions brought our economy roaring back in the 1980's?

Because Bill Clinton knows his taxes did not deliver on his promise to improve the economy, bring down interest rates, and thereby reduce the deficit.

Tax increases never do.

History proves that increases actually poison economic growth while tax cuts unlock capital, encourage savings, improve investment, and create jobs, opportunity, and growth.

Kemp-Roth led to the longest peacetime economic expansion in history. Eighteen million jobs were created, along with four million new businesses. Family income rose and home ownership boomed as interest rates and inflation fell. At the same time, Treasury revenues doubled, not because Americans were paying a higher percentage of their income to taxes, but because Americans had higher incomes.

We must unlock this kind of growth again. Only by creating an environment where our economy can expand can we simultaneously cut the deficit and meet necessary Government obligations.

Last spring the House passed a 7-year $354-billion tax reduction package. 76 percent of which, would go to family relief, and 24 percent to job creation. The plan offers a $500-a-child tax credit, encourages savings and investment, and offers other incentives for economic growth.

The proposal recently passed by the Senate Finance Committee cuts taxes by $245 billion, offers relief for our middle class—with over 70 percent of the $245 billion going to families making less than $75,000 a year—and, like its House counterpart, contains incentives that will encourage savings, investment, capital formation, and business growth. These provisions mean more jobs for Americans, greater economic security for our families, and stability in our communities.

Of the $245 billion Senate relief package, a full $223 billion will go to families. The remaining $22 billion will strengthen businesses and lead to increased employment opportunity. It will also improve America's ability to compete in the global community, with other nations that provide their businesses with strong incentives to compete with us.

The four pillars of both proposals are: First, a $500 child tax credit; second, restoration and strengthening of Individual Retirement Accounts; third, relief from overbearing estate taxes on families and businesses; and, fourth, reduction of the top rate of capital gains on individuals and corporations.

These measures meet our promise to the American people that in Washington we will change business as usual. The current system double-taxes savings, thwarts investment, hinders productivity, increases prices, stifles wages, and hurts exports. It is complex, controlled by special interest groups, and places disincentives on work.

Our proposals represent a major step toward correcting these deficiencies, and because we have cut spending, our bill balances the budget while making room for tax relief. The House has acted. Now, the full Senate must pass the Finance Committee's proposal. Following a House-Senate conference to iron out any differences between the bills, both Chambers must pass this historic reform, and the President must sign it into law.

Americans need relief. Our economy needs a shot in the arm. Even Bill Clinton has admitted as much. We call on him to join us in our efforts to unleash the potential our economy has to move us into a bold and exciting future.

He admits he made a mistake. Working together, we can fix it.

Martin Feldstein, former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers and professor of economics at Harvard University spells out in a very livid fashion what the 1993 tax increases really did in an article in The Wall Street Journal. I request that article be included in the RECORD in its entirety.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From The Wall Street Journal]

WHAT THE '93 TAX INCREASES REALLY DID

(By Martin Feldstein)

President Clinton was right when he recently told business groups in Virginia and Texas that he had raised taxes too much in 1993, perhaps more so than he realizes. We now have the first hard evidence on the effect of the Clinton tax rate increases. The new data, published by the Internal Revenue Service, show that the sharp jump in tax rates raised only one-third as much revenue as the Clinton administration had predicted.

Because taxpayers responded to the sharply higher marginal tax rates by reducing their taxable incomes, the Treasury lost two-thirds of the extra revenue that would have been collected if taxpayers had not changed their behavior. Moreover, while the Treasury gained less than $6 billion in additional personal income tax revenue, the distortions to taxpayers' behavior depressed their real incomes by nearly $25 billion.

HOW IT HAPPENS

To understand how taxpayer behavior could produce such a large revenue shortfall, recall that the Clinton plan raised the marginal personal income tax rate to 36% from 31% on incomes between $140,000 ($115,000 for single taxpayers) and $250,000, and to 39.6% on all incomes over $250,000. Relatively small reductions in taxable income in response to these sharply higher rates can eliminate most or all of the additional tax revenue that would result with no behavioral response.

If a couple with $200,000 of taxable income reduces its income by just 5% in response to the higher tax rate, the Treasury loses more from the $10,000 decline in income ($3,100 less revenue at 31%) than it gains from the higher tax rate on the remaining $50,000 of income above the $140,000 floor ($2,600 more revenue at 5%); the net effect is that the Treasury collects $600 less than it would have if there had been no tax rate increase.

Similarly, a couple with $400,000 of taxable income would pay $18,400 in extra taxes if its taxable income remained unchanged. But if that couple responds to the nearly 30% marginal tax rate increase by cutting its taxable income by as little as 8%, the Treasury's revenue gain would fall 67% to less than $6,000.

How can taxpayers reduce their taxable incomes in this way? Self-employed taxpayers, two-earner couples, and senior executives can reduce their taxable earnings by a combination of working fewer hours, taking more vacations, and shifting compensation from taxable cash to untaxed fringe benefits. Investors can shift from taxable bonds and high yield stocks to tax exempt bonds and to stocks with lower dividends. Individuals can increase tax deductible mortgage borrowing and raise charitable contributions. (I ignore reduced realizations of capital gains because the 1993 tax rate changes did not raise the top capital gains rate above its previous 28% level.)

To evaluate the magnitude of the taxpayers' actual responses, Daniel Feenberg at the National Bureau of Economic Research (NBER) and I studied the published IRS estimates of the 1992 and 1993 taxable incomes of high income taxpayers (i.e., taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes over $200,000, corresponding to about $140,000 of taxable income). We compared the growth of such incomes with the corresponding rise in taxable incomes for taxpayers with adjusted gross incomes between $50,000 and $200,000. Since the latter group did not experience a 1993 tax rate change, the increase of their taxable incomes provides a basis for predicting how taxable incomes would have increased in the high income group if its members had not changed their behavior in response to the higher post-1992 tax rates. We calculated this with the help of the NBER's TAXSIM model, a computer analysis of more than 100,000 random, anonymous tax returns provided by the IRS.

We concluded that the high income taxpayers reported 8.5% less taxable income in 1993 than they would have if their tax rates had not increased. This in turn reduced the additional tax liabilities of the high income group to less than one-third of what they would have been if they had not changed their behavior in response to the higher tax rates.

This sensitivity of taxable income to marginal tax rates is quantitatively similar to the magnitude of the response that I found when I studied taxpayers' responses to the tax rate cuts of 1986. It is noteworthy also that such a strong response to the 1993 tax increases occurred within the first year. It would not be surprising if the taxpayer responses get larger as taxpayers have more time to adjust to the higher tax rates by retiring earlier, by choosing less demanding and less remunerative occupations, by buying larger homes and second homes with new mortgage deductions, etc.

The 1993 tax law also eliminated the $135,000 ceiling on the wage and salary income subject to the 2.9% payroll tax for Medicare. When this took effect in January 1994, it raised the tax rate on earnings to 38.9% for taxpayers with incomes between $140,000 and $250,000 and to 42.5% on incomes above 250,000. Although we will have to wait until data are available for 1994 to see the effect of that extra tax rate rise, the evidence for 1993 suggests that taxpayers' responses to the higher marginal tax rates would cut personal income tax revenue by so much that the net additional revenue for eliminating the ceiling on the payroll tax base would be less than $1 billion.

All of this stands in sharp contrast to the official revenue estimates produced by the staffs of the Treasury and of the Congressional Joint Committee on Taxation before the 1993 tax legislation was passed. Their estimates were based on the self-imposed "convention" of ignoring the effects of tax rate changes on the amount that people work and invest. The combination of that obviously false assumption and a gross underestimate of the other ways in which taxpayer behavior reduces taxable income caused the revenue estimators at the Treasury to conclude that taxpayer behavior would reduce the additional tax revenue raised by the higher rates by only 7%. In contrast, the actual experience shows a revenue reduction that is nearly 10 times as large as the Treasury staff assumed.

This experience is directly relevant to the debate about whether Congress should use "dynamic" revenue estimates that take into account the effect of taxpayer behavior on tax revenue. The 1993 experience shows that unless such behavior is taken into account, the revenue estimates presented to Congress can grossly overstate the revenue gains from higher tax rates (and the revenue costs of lower tax rates). Although the official revenue estimating staffs claim that their estimates are dynamic because they take into account some taxpayer behavior, the 1993 experience shows that as a practical matter, the official estimates are close to being "static" no-behavioral-response estimates because they explicitly ignore the effect taxes on work effort and grossly under estimate the magnitude of other taxpayer responses.

CURRENT PROPOSALS

In Congress had known in 1993 that raising top marginal tax rates from 31% to more than 42% would less than $7 billion a year, including the payroll tax revenue as well as the personal income tax revenue, it might not have been possible for President Clinton to get the votes to pass his tax increase.

Which brings us back to President Clinton's own statement (half-recanted the next day) that he raised taxes too much in 1993. Congress and the president will soon be negotiating about the final shape of the 1995 tax package. The current congressional tax proposals do nothing to repeal the very harmful rate increases of 1990. Rolling back both the personal tax rates and the Medicare payroll tax base to where they were before 1993 would cost less than $7 billion a year in revenue and would raise real national income by more than $25 billion. Now that the evidence is in, Congress and the president should agree to undo a bad mistake. •

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield the Senator from Florida 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, we have just heard a speech about change versus the status quo. This is one place in which we are all together. This is the status quo. This is deja vu all over again. We started this process of saying that we were going to meet deficit reduction targets and committed to the American people our frugality and our dedication to their attainment.

We did it under what was called Gramm-Rudman. And in the years from 1986 to 1990, those 5 years, we had deficit-reduction targets for Gramm-Rudman that were supposed to bring us to a balanced budget early in this decade.

What did it, in fact, bring us? More enormous deficits. And every year of Gramm-Rudman, from 1986 to 1990, we failed to meet the deficit reduction target. In fact, the total amount of our excess deficits, deficits beyond the target, was $201 billion over those 5 years.

Did we change that pattern after President Bush went to Andrews Air Force Base and negotiated a new deficit-reduction plan? We did not—in 1991, 1992, 1993, again, failure to meet the deficit reduction targets in excess of $150 billion in just those 3 years.

Mr. President, we delude ourselves, we repeat the status quo, not engage in change if we are saying that we are going to give ourselves this tax benefit before we demonstrate, first, that we have a serious, credible plan for balancing the Federal budget that is not just smoke, mirrors and ideas in the minds of a few people, but rather concrete law that has been passed, signed by the President and is a firm national contract and commitment to its attainment, and, second, a period of demonstrated fidelity to that plan and performance under that plan.

I am the grandfather of eight young boys and girls. I know one thing about children: They like to eat their dessert before they will eat their spinach. That is what we are being asked here to do, is eat the cake and ice cream before we have the carrots and peas. I think we should not go down that path one more time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. The Senator from Alabama's speech was earlier. It was helpful. I have to pick up some groceries on the way home. But I did not find it to be terribly helpful in this debate, saying that Democrats have no accountability, that Democrats are not willing to make hard choices, that we are for the politics of the status quo. That is just bunk.

I just stood out on the Capitol steps a little while ago endorsing a Democratic proposal that balanced the budget in 7 years, making very tough choices but without this tax cut. And one of the hard truths that we have to face right now is, the truth of the matter is Republicans in America, Mr. President, not Republicans in this Congress, by the New York Times poll this morning, Republicans in America oppose the tax cut. Indeed, more Democrats in America support the tax cut. And the most revealing thing of all is that the lower the income goes of working people, the more they favor a tax cut. Unfortunately, they do not benefit from this tax cut.

Indeed, as a consequence of change in the earned income tax credit, and according to the Republican Joint Tax Committee, every family under $30,000 will have a tax increase.

It is remarkable, Mr. President, in addition to not needing to cut taxes, we have got plenty of tough choices to make, and I hope we are able to vote in a bipartisan fashion for tough choices, that break the status quo of deficit financing and move us to a balanced budget.

But those are not the only goals that we need to move toward. That is not the only status quo that we need to make. We had another million Americans that moved into the ranks of the uninsured in 1994. We have another 1.5 million that will move to be uninsured in health care as a consequence of what is happening in the health care industry.

Almost 50 percent of the babies born in the State of Texas are paid for by Medicaid, working people, Mr. President, as a consequence of the status quo. There are lots of changes that need to be made. I am willing to make tough votes to change the status quo and move to a balanced budget, but not with a $245 billion tax cut that does not benefit the Americans that need to be benefited.

Mr. BUMPERS. How much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three and a half minutes.

Mr. BUMPERS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I thank my colleague for yielding.

Mr. President, really what we are suggesting with this amendment is two concepts here: It is fiscal responsibility and equity. I know that there are those who believe that these tax breaks are critical. Some, I believe, honestly believe, I think, this is going to create some sort of a massive new growth, although there are no studies that I know of that indicates that is the case at all. But the cruel, hard facts here, Mr. President, are that what we are talking about is a deficit that will increase.

According to the hand-selected head of the Congressional Budget Office by our friends on the other side, they have said this produces a deficit, this proposal, in excess of $93 billion. So for those who are seeking fiscal responsibility, the inclusion of $245 billion in tax breaks does not get us there.

So, Mr. President, on the question of fiscal responsibility, this is irresponsible. On the issue of equity, what we are doing here with this proposal is we are taking significant cuts, far beyond what is needed to restore the integrity of Medicare or Medicaid, in order to pay for tax breaks, the bulk of which go to people at an upper-income category and simultaneously increasing the tax obligation of those people at the working class category.

If you make $30,000 or less, you have got a $352 tax increase. That is what is in this bill. It is in black and white, a $352 tax increase.

If you are the top 1 percent of income earners, your tax break is almost $6,000. That is not equitable, Mr. President. It is not fiscally responsible, and it is not equitable. And for that reason, we urge our colleagues to support this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, let me just close by saying that I can remember when there were about 10 Republicans last summer who were strongly opposed to a tax cut until we balanced the budget. I do not think the majority leader was very keen for it. And the Senator from New Mexico, chairman of the Budget Committee, was devoutly opposed to it.

So what happened along the way? I can only conclude that NEWT GINGRICH said, "This is the major part of the contract. You do not have any choice. You have got to abandon all economic reason and sanity and vote for this tax cut."

It is the height of fiscal irresponsibility to do it. But even more importantly, it is a social disaster. It makes the working people of this country second-class citizens. They are in the second tier. I do not want to say the idle rich, but the rich who do not work, who get their income from the sweat of somebody else's brow, they are in the first-class tier.

Mr. President, the real tragedy is the American people are not asking for this. If you look at the New York Times poll this morning, the American people are strongly opposed to a tax cut until we balance the budget.

Here is a USA poll taken in December of 1994. Seventy percent of the people in this country said, "We want the budget balanced before you cut taxes."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, what is the parliamentary situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan controls 19 minutes. The time has expired on your side.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time, we are prepared to yield back the remainder of our time. I inquire before I do as to whether the Senator from Nebraska is prepared to proceed with their next amendment? If not, until they are ready I will probably be putting in a quorum call request without the time running against either side.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time. I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I ask unanimous consent that the time not run against either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Texas, to be taken off our time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, if you are looking at our budget which is now before the Senate, it addresses two basic facts that I believe alarm all working Americans.

The first fact is that the average family in America with two little children, which in 1950 was sending $1 out of every $50 it earned to Washington, DC, is today sending $1 out of every $4 it earns to Washington, DC. And if over the next 20 year, we do not start a new spending program nor eliminate an existing one, to pay for the Government we have already committed to will mean that in 20 years the average working family in America with two children will be sending $1 out of every $3 they earn to Washington, DC.

Bill Clinton looks at that trend and says, "Great, let's accelerate." We look at it and say, "It has to be stopped and it has to be reversed." And that is exactly what we do in our budget.

The second figure is a very simple fact and it is an alarming fact. A baby born in America today, if the current trend of Government spending continues unabated, will pay $187,000 of taxes in their working lifetime just to pay interest on the public debt. That is not just economic suicide, that is immoral, and we are determined to stop it.

Here is basically where we are. We have written a budget that over 7 years comes into balance. President Clinton has trumpeted the fact that the deficit today is down, but he does not show us that his own budget office shows that under his budget, and the Congressional Budget Office shows convincingly, that the deficit now skyrockets under the Clinton budget. He has sent us not one but two budgets, and under both of those budgets, the deficit explodes.

We have proposed a budget that achieves balance in 7 years, and now the President is saying to us that unless we increase spending on programs that we do not need and we cannot afford that the President is going to veto our budget.

Well, Mr. President, let me say as one Member of the Senate, there is no circumstance under which I am going to go back and rewrite our budget. There is no circumstance under which I am going to agree to increase spending, to continue the deficit spree that threatens the future of our country and that threatens the future of our children.

We have proposed a budget that cuts taxes. It gives a $500 tax credit per child for every working family in America. What it means is that if we are successful next year, every working family in America that pays taxes that has two children will get to keep $1,000 more of what they earn to invest in their own children, to invest in their own family, to invest in their own future.

Now Bill Clinton says the Government can spend the money better than that family can spend the money. We reject that. We think history proves that notion is wrong and we are confident that the people who do the work and pay the taxes and pull the wagon in America agree with us.

Our $500 tax credit per child, our elimination of the marriage penalty will mean that the average working family in my State will get to keep $1,100 more of their hard-earned income to invest in their own future, to invest in their own children, and we want that to happen.

We talk so much about balancing the budget, but it has been so long since we have done it that people forget what the benefits of a balanced budget are. First of all, since we are balancing the budget and cutting taxes, the first benefit for a working family with two children is they get to keep $1,000 more of what they earn.

But a balanced Federal budget would mean on an average mortgage of the average working family, that their mortgage payments per year over the next 20 years would be $1,664 less per year. In buying a new car every 4 years and financing it, as most working Americans have to do, they would pay $180 less in interest costs for buying that car every year because we balanced the budget.

Because we will have more growth when income is going into expanding the economy, that is $1,385 of income for every working family.

You add it all up and the average family in America gains, I repeat, gains $4,229 a year directly from a balanced budget. It means over 1.75 million more jobs annually and reducing the national debt mortgage on our grandchildren by $66,000.

This budget is a choice: Do you want more income, lower interest rates, higher growth, more jobs, less debt on your grandchildren and to keep more of what you earn?

We say, "Yes." The Democrats say, "No, Government can do it better."

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana [Mr. BAUCUS] moves to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions to report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) making changes in legislation within that Committee's jurisdiction to reduce revenue reductions attributable to tax breaks benefiting upper-income taxpayers over the next seven years in an amount necessary to avoid unfair cuts in Medicare payments to rural hospitals and other rural health care providers, to maintain federal support at the levels recommended by the President of the United States for federal agriculture and nutrition programs, and to maintain levels of federal support for education and child care in rural America.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time allotted be reduced to 15 minutes, equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, on behalf of our side, we will agree to that.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the whole country knows about the Medicare cuts in this budget, and the threats they present to rural hospitals and to health care for seniors.

A lot of people know that a few days ago, the House Speaker NEWT GINGRICH called this bill the round one in a long-term plan to kill Medicare.

Many people know how deeply it will cut student loans and assistance for elementary and secondary education.

THE 1995 FARM BILL

But very few people know that this year, the budget is also the farm bill. It will reauthorize all the commodity programs and the Conservation Reserve Program. It will eliminate several more. Altogether, for the next 7 years, it sets our national agriculture policy.

It is supposed to keep rural economies stable. And it should guarantee consumers a safe and dependable food supply at a reasonable price. But on the Senate floor today, we have something entirely different.

I am sorry to say it, but laying everything about Medicare, tax increases on people making less than $30,000 a year, education and the rest aside, this is a terrible farm bill.

WRITTEN IN SECRET

First, it is partisan. It is a hard-line, ideological approach to agricultural policy, not an effort to bring people together and take the best from everyone.

Second, it is secretive. It was written behind closed doors. And very, very few Americans even know it is up on the floor today.

At an absolute maximum, the agricultural part of this budget will get a grand total of 50 minutes for debate. It is a scandal, but it is not a surprise. Because if this were my bill, I would not want to say much about it either.

But in any case, I want to welcome all my colleagues to the debate on the 1995 farm bill. I imagine the other side will be awfully quiet. But we're here to make up for it.

We are going to use these 45 minutes to tell the truth about the big, gobbling, turkey out here on the Senate floor. And then we'll give the other folks a second chance.

Our motion to recommit will restore the traditional, bipartisan approach to agricultural policy. We can work together, restore some fairness and moderation. And if we adopt this motion, our friends on the other side of the aisle can have something to be proud of when they go home and talk to their farmers.

SEVEN LEAN YEARS TO COME

If you have read Genesis, chapter 41, you know the story of Joseph's dream. He compared the 7 years to come with:

seven kine . . . poor and very ill favoured and lean-fleshed, such as I never saw in all the land of Egypt for badness.

These seven ill-favored cattle ate up the good cattle, just as seven ears of corn, "withered, thin and blasted with the east wind" ate up seven good ears of corn. So Joseph could tell that the future would bring 7 years of trouble—7 lean years, in which "all the plenty shall be forgotten in the land of Egypt."

Well, we may not be as wise as Joseph. And the days of inspired prophecy may be gone. But on the other hand, we have a lot more than a dream to go on. We have hard facts and numbers. And these facts and numbers tell us that our farmers have 7 pretty lean years ahead.

This bill makes dramatic cuts in farm supports, which have already been cut 60 percent in the past decade. If this turkey survives Thanksgiving of 1995, the year 2002 will see us fund just half of today's Conservation Reserve Program. Bad for farmers, bad for hunters, bad for recreation.

The Emergency Livestock Feed Assistance Program will end. Our deficiency payments—the safety net our producers need in tough times—will be capped. In the very worst years, when our producers need help most, it won't be there.

Then look at nutrition. School lunch, daycare meals, and meals for senior citizens are all cut. And these are not surgical strikes—these are repeated blows with a meat axe.

These cuts affect more than farmers. They affect all of rural America. Schools, grocers, bankers, fuel dealers, equipment and automobile dealerships, and even our local and county governments will all feel the pinch.

And we are doing all this at a time when our competitors in Europe are not giving up a thing. They already give their farmers over 10 times the export subsidies we provide.

This budget cuts the Export Enhancement Program by 20 percent, and market promotion by 30 percent. We will end up exporting less, and that means lower incomes for farmers.

KEEPING YOUNG PEOPLE OFF THE LAND

Finally, maybe the most painful item of all. That is the apparent exclusion of beginning farmers from all these services. This spring I went to a lot of high school graduations in rural Montana. Places like Geyser, Hobson, Stanford, Opheim, Harlem and Dodson.

We have some great kids in these communities. They are looking forward to a career in agriculture like their parents. They want to work and provide for their families on their own land.

This bill shuts them out and puts them at a competitive disadvantage. Combine that with the trouble young farmers have in obtaining credit, and the message they get from this budget is clear. There is no place for you in production agriculture. There is no place for the small family farm in America.

OUR AMENDMENT: A SECOND CHANCE

Well, we can do better. And with our amendment, we will do better.

Our amendment is very simple. It says, go back to the drawing board. Take it back to the Finance Committee. Restore some sense and moderation to agricultural policy, nutrition and our rural economic approach as a whole. The amendment doesn't dictate how we should do it, but it gives us a chance to take a second look and get it right.

Let us remember the story of Joseph. He saw the 7 lean years coming. He told Paraoh about his dream. And Paraoh listened to Joseph. He changed his agriculture policy, promoted production, and stockpiled corn. And therefore Egypt got through the 7 lean years.

We can do the same, if the folks on the other side will listen, we can take advantage of this second chance. We can vote for the motion to recommit, and come back with a moderate, nonpartisan farm policy that is good for everyone. I hope it will get the Senate's support.

Thank you, Mr. President, and I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. Mr. President, there is kind of a joke in Illinois that goes: "Just outside of Chicago, there's a place called Illinois."

That joke, or that phrase, used in the tourism industry, is based upon a notion that when people think of Illinois, they often first think of Chicago, and the rest of the State is overlooked. And that part of the State, the part "just outside of Chicago," is rural. That part of the State has vital agricultural industry. That part of the State is where you will discover more rural communities than any other State in the Nation except Texas.

In fact, when you discover that fully half of the 11.5 million people of Illinois live in the places outside of Chicago, that, I think, paints a more accurate picture of what Illinois is about than what our popular mythology would lead you to believe.

The reason I mention that, Mr. President, is that what happens in this bill, in this Reconciliation Act, with regard to rural programs is, therefore, vitally important to the State that I was elected to represent.

I hope always to represent all of that State and speak to the interests of rural Illinois—speak to the interests of what we call downstate as much as any other part of my State. That part of Illinois, just outside of Chicago, is a part of Illinois that I am determined to see is not overlooked. But being overlooked, I think, captures the general feelings shared by many rural Americans this year when it comes to Federal dollars and Federal attention this part of the country needs and deserves.

Mr. President, rural Illinoisans understand the meaning of shared sacrifice. No group of Americans should be asked to share a disproportionate burden of cuts any more than any other group. Rural Illinoisans have told me, and I have been around my State in town meetings, the deficit reduction should be a priority for this Congress. They understand that no Federal program should be off limits, that nothing should be excluded from review, and that everything should be on the table.

However, they also understand that shared sacrifice is something that means everybody. Shared sacrifice is exactly what this reconciliation bill fails to accomplish.

Some Americans will see huge and significant tax cuts from this bill. But more than half of all Americans, including most rural Americans, will see no tax cut at all. What is more, the net effect of the overall bill is to tighten the economic vise on rural America.

The $13 billion in farm program cuts proposed by this bill means that Illinois farmers will lose over three-quarters of a billion dollars in economic protection. With $113 million in title I education cuts, rural Illinois loses $3 million at a time when many rural school districts face a funding crisis. The cuts proposed for grants and loans for water and waste disposal programs mean thousands of rural Americans will not have access to safe drinking water.

I understand my time is concluded. I would like a further minute to finish up.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Illinois.

Ms. MOSELEY-BRAUN. In closing, Mr. President, for rural America, this bill, in fact, is "Robin Hood in reverse." The cuts on the rural programs are needlessly excessive, and given the fact that the tax breaks called for in this bill are absolutely inconsistent with our objective of deficit reduction, I believe we should recommit this bill back to the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, just outside of Washington is a place called rural America, a place populated by hard-working Americans who are willing to do their share—and then some—to achieve real deficit reduction, but who cannot afford the loss of economic opportunities this bill entails.

Surely we can do better than this bill.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to talk about safety nets. The policy relative to agriculture is designed around a safety net. They have target price tied to some degree to the cost of production. This is a policy that has been established where there is no payment in good years. When you have a bad year, you need a safety net.

The proposal in the House eliminates the safety net. The proposal in the Senate puts gaping holes in the safety net for farmers. The idea of doing away with farm programs over a period of time, in my judgment, fails to realize the calamities, the disasters, that farmers face. They are subject to weather, they are subject to foreign competition, to price changes, all sorts of disastrous effects that can occur to the market.

I think we are making a serious mistake. We have cut agriculture programs from $30 million in 1986 down to $9 million last year. Here we come along with a $13.7 billion further cut in agriculture over 7 years. I think it is too much. We are not doing right by the farmer. We are doing away with the policy of safety net.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I yield a minute of my time to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 1 minute to the Senator.

Mr. HEFLIN. I want to mention, also, the safety net in regard to rural hospitals and the people.

In effect, what we are doing under the Medicaid and Medicare situation, we are eliminating a safety net for hospitals for rural America. In my judgment that is a mistake.

Safety nets go across the board. In my judgment, this bill is wrong in regard to what it does to rural America.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, 2 minutes is hardly any time at all.

Let me just put it to you this way. This is thoughtless. This is not a farm bill. It is not agricultural policy. It is slash and burn. It is $48 billion over the next 7 years. It plays off children and nutrition programs against family farmers, against the environment. It is a 50-percent cut in the Conservation Reserve Program, which in my State of Minnesota and I bet every State, has brought together those that love outdoor recreation and the environmentalists and the farmers.

This is really, Mr. President, the opposite of a careful policy—the very opposite of a careful policy. What we have here is the worst of all worlds—keep the farm prices low, then have some subsidy. Have the subsidy in inverse relationship to need, with taxpayers having to pick up the cost.

Mr. President, why do we not understand that rural people are not going to stay out of sight and out of mind? Why are we picking on the people that we think do not have the voice, picking on the people we think do not have the power, picking on people who are not the heavy hitters, not the players, are not the big contributors.

That is what this is about. We should not have these tax cuts that go to wealthy people. We should not have a Pentagon budget that is $7 billion over what the Pentagon wanted, and we should not lavish subsidies on most of the major large corporations and financial institutions in the country.

Rural people in Minnesota, the people of greater Minnesota, ask for one thing and one thing only: A fair shake. There is no fair shake and there is no fairness to this plan.

That is why I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this amendment.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, I rise to support this motion to recommit. I am deeply concerned about the Republican budget proposal and its all-out assault on rural America. I understand the need to balance the Federal budget. In fact, I've supported balanced budgets. But, I do not think we should do it on the backs of our working families and farming communities. They deserve better treatment than that. Just because the voice of rural Americans is not heard as loudly on Capitol Hill as others does not mean they can be ignored.

This Republican budget attacks rural communities in my State of Washington on a number of fronts. Republican cuts to Medicare will force 157,700 older and disabled rural Washingtonians to pay higher premiums and higher deductibles for a weakened second class Medicare Program. The cuts will increase the severe financial pressure on rural hospitals in Washington. The average rural hospital will lose $5 million in Medicare funding over 7 years, forcing some to close their doors. In addition, the American Medical Association has stated that the Medicare cuts "will unquestionably cause some physicians to leave Medicare". Rural America is already suffering from a shortage of doctors when compared to the Nation as a whole and it will only become worse under this budget. Rural Americans will be paying more for less, and that is unacceptable.

In addition, Medicaid cuts will eliminate coverage for children, nursing home residents, and people in need of long-term care. As many as 2.2 million rural Americans, including 1 million children will be denied medical coverage in 2002 if the Republican plan is adopted. Gordon Lederer, a farmer in Latah, WA, sits on the board of directors of the Tekoa Care Center. Patients pay $90/day at Tekoa, and Mr. Lederer said that the board does not know how the Care Center will continue to provide service to the community if the cuts to Medicaid are enacted.

Mr. President, cuts to the earned income tax credit will cripple working families and their ability to provide for their children in rural Washington. The Republican cuts to EITC raise taxes on 49,945 working families in rural Washington by an average of $388 in 2002, imposing a $1.4 billion tax increase on rural Americans overall. And there's more.

The 25 percent cut to farm programs will reduce farm spending in my State of Washington by $290 million, drastically reducing support for commodity programs. I am particularly concerned about the reductions in the loan rate for wheat. These reductions could threaten the viability of farms in my State. In fact, I just heard from Mack and June Crow, wheat farmers from Oaksdale, WA. Their son now runs the family farm and they are deeply concerned about the impacts of the farm program cuts on their farm's income and hence, their ability to survive. Farms are a symbol of American bounty recognized worldwide. They are a major part of Washington State's export-based economy. Most importantly, they are a way of life that roots us and grounds us in our history and our land. To balance the budget on the backs of family farmers is not only unfair, it is un-American.

Republican cuts to education programs will deny basic and advanced skills education to 937 children in rural Washington. Small town schools in Washington are already having difficulty making ends meet. A 17 percent cut in title I funds will deny these schools crucial assistance as they struggle to adequately prepare our children for the future.

In addition, cuts to rural nutrition, housing, and transportation programs as well as cuts to programs designed to protect the environment and public health add insult to injury, and will further undermine our rural Americans attempts to secure a solid future for themselves and their children.

Mr. President, this Republican plan to balance the budget unfairly targets rural Americans. It burdens them with far more than their fair share of cuts. I therefore encourage my colleagues on both sides of the aisle who care about rural America to support this motion to recommit.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, today my colleagues and I offer an amendment to the budget reconciliation bill that reaffirms our commitment to rural America. This budget before the Senate today will devastate the hard-working farmers and ranchers that provide our Nation's food supply. It will also decimate the main street businesses, schools and hospitals that make up our rural communities. The agricultural cuts in this budget are too extreme, are unfair to rural America and should be restored. Our amendment proposes to do just that.

No one should be fooled. The agricultural provisions in this bill represent the bulk of the farm bill. Buried in this 2,000-page document is the heart and soul of agricultural policy for the next 7 years. There were no hearings during the development of this bill and no opportunity for Democratic input. Now we do not even get a vote on farm policy. It is all rolled up in this enormous budget bill. Everyone knows this is not the way farm bills have been developed in the past.

This farm bill rips the safety net out from under our hard-working producers by cutting $13.4 billion from farm programs over the next 7 years. In South Dakota that translates into a loss of $460 million for our producers. Nationwide net farm income is projected to decrease over $9 billion over the next 7 years. Clearly family farmers who are already disappearing at the rate of 600 per week cannot tolerate this level of income reduction.

The pain of this budget does not stop at the farm gate. It bleeds into our rural hospitals. Ten to fifteen rural hospitals are projected to close in South Dakota if the proposed Medicaid/Medicare cuts are enacted. Some people already have to drive over 50 miles to reach a hospital or doctor. After this budget goes into effect they will have to drive even farther. Add to that the fact that over 2 million rural residents nationwide will be denied Medicaid, and anyone can see that this budget is a recipe for a health care disaster in rural America.

The sad truth of this situation is that it does not have to be this way. This severe level of cuts was required only to finance the lavish tax breaks for the wealthiest of Americans who do not need them. This amendment my colleagues and I are offering provides the opportunity to send the agricultural provisions back to the drawing board and to do it right.

Rural Americans deserve better than what they are getting under this budget. Farmers and ranchers are committed to balancing the budget as long as it is done fairly. Reducing farm income to pay for tax breaks is not remotely fair. No one is asking for a handout—only as fair shake. This budget gives rural America, the very heartland of the Nation, little more than a cold shoulder. We can and should do better than that.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, as I have said previously, this bill is about choices: 2,000 pages of making choices.

All across this country people got up this morning and ate breakfast food. Some ate rice that was crisped, called rice krispies. Some ate flaked corn, called corn flakes; wheat that was puffed, puffed wheat.

It is interesting. We have folks that raise these crops. They plow and raise wheat and corn. Down South they raise rice. Then we have a lot of folks that process it—the ones that put the crisp in it, put the flake in it, put the puff in it.

The big agrifactories have plenty of reason to smile at this. This bill is a really nice deal for them: tax cuts, major advantages.

But, the folks who get up in the morning and plow, they do not have much reason to smile. They get big cuts.

The President said $4.2 billion in cuts. We agreed to that.

But the Republican majority came along and more than tripled it. You cannot write a decent farm program that way. They painted themselves in the corner.

So instead of bringing a farm bill to the floor, which we have always done before, for the first time in history they threw it into a reconciliation bill and hoped nobody would notice.

Their approach is to say to farmers, do not worry. If you are a family farmer in trouble, move to downtown. That is their answer.

It is not an answer for North Dakota, in my judgment. A lot of farm families rely on us writing a decent family farm program. These people work hard, and all they are asking for is a fair shake.

We ought not to ask them to bear the entire burden of all the budget cuts. They have had a 60 percent cut in support prices alone in recent years. Now we are told to take a much higher proportion of cuts than virtually any other area of the Federal budget.

Frankly, it is not fair and it is not right. It ought not be done.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago I spent a crisp Monday morning at Claude Bourbeau's farm in St. Albans, VT, with Secretary Dan Glickman and a number of Vermont dairy farmers. I wanted to give him a chance to visit with some hard-working honest folks who will be severely affected by this budget bill.

Many of those farmers are concerned about this budget. I am too. I told the farmers that they lose thousands of dollars a year in revenue under the Senate Republican plan.

I asked the farmers, "Which of you could afford a cut like that?" Not a single hand went up.

It turns out that I was underestimating the impact when I was in Vermont. Just this morning, the Food and Agricultural Policy Research Institute and Texas A&M University released a new study.

This new, independent study says that under the Senate Republican plan, a typical 70-cow dairy farmer in Vermont would see net cash income fall by $9,050—from $31,120 to $22,070—in the next year. The House Republican plan is even worse—it would cost a typical farmer $17,850. Farm income would decline from $31,120 in 1995 to $13,270 in 1996. Under these plans, typical dairy farmers will lose 30 to 60 percent of their annual incomes. These farmers are already working dawn to dusk just to get by.

These numbers are consistent with a new analysis that USDA released a couple of days ago.

When those farmers in St. Albans hear how bad these cuts are, they will be stunned.

This budget is a war on rural America in many ways.

Over 27,000 working families in Vermont alone will see their taxes increase because the Republicans are scaling back the earned income tax credit.

The typical rural hospital will lose $5 million a year or more in Medicare. In rural Vermont, doctors and hospitals will lose $290 million in Medicare funds. I am afraid that doctors will simply abandon the small towns.

Schools in rural Vermont will lose $1.2 million in education funding. Our schools cannot afford that kind of hit.

Republicans want to create giant tax breaks for rich people and big corporations. The average rural family is not wealthy enough to benefit from the Republican budget. In Vermont, 63 percent of taxpayers earn less than $30,000—those are the people who will see their taxes increase.

According to Congressional Research Service, over half of all heads of households working in the agricultural sector qualify for the earned income tax credit, which Republicans cut.

In 1994, 328,000 farm families qualified for the EITC. Many of these were farm laborers, but 100,000 were farm operators and managers. Over one-third of all farm operators and managers nationwide will see their taxes increase under this Republican budget.

This Nation's farmers are struggling, and this budget says to them, "Tough luck."

The Finance Committee cut the EITC but it passed over $200 billion in tax breaks. Most of those tax breaks will benefit families earning over $100,000 a year. Only 3 percent of rural households earn that kind of money.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, how much time remains?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Four minutes.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, this plan for rural America is the equivalent of dropping a neutron bomb in the middle of rural America. Remember the neutron bomb? That is where the buildings remain standing but the people are gone. That is what will happen in much of rural America if this farm plan and this plan for rural America ever becomes law.

The Republican plan would force farmers off the land. In a low-price year, it would mean a 60 percent reduction in net returns to farmers in my State. It would close hospitals in rural areas. The hospital association in my State has just done a survey and they say 26 of the 30 rural hospitals in North Dakota would go to negative returns on their Medicare patients. It would shutter nursing homes and represents unilateral disarmament in the world trade battle over agricultural trade.

We would pull the rug out from our producers at the very time our competitors are already supporting their farmers at a level three times ours. That would be a profound mistake, not only for the rural parts of this country but for the trade balance of the United States.

Agriculture is one of the two areas in which we still enjoy a substantial trade surplus. We ought not to wave the white flag of surrender in this trade fight. We would never do it in a military confrontation. We should not do it in a trade battle.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, at this time I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, obviously I rise to oppose the motion that is before us. It may be well intended, but let me tell you, the simple truth is that this amendment will hurt the very people, the very rural America, and the very family farms that, according to their statements, it is intended to help.

People on the other side of the aisle probably do not intend it this way, but the fact of the matter is, with their tax policy, they do not believe in taxation, they believe in confiscation. Because, when you leave high estate taxes, when you leave high capital gains taxes and the impact of inflation on each, you are in a situation where, when you tax inflation, it is confiscation and not taxation.

The estate tax laws, the way they are—and they have not been changed for 15 years; the capital gains tax laws, and they have not been changed since 1986—are tying up a lot of property in rural America that will not move because people are not going to pay confiscatory, high rates of taxation. One sure thing, if you do not need the income and you do not have to sell, you are not going to sell and give it all to the Federal Treasury, because in most of the farms of America, the lifetime of savings is tied up just to create an income and a job for one family.

So, if you want to help rural America, we have to transfer the property from one generation to another, and I do not know how you are going to do that if you do not do it by increasing the exemption and encouraging people to sell their property.

People suggest what we are doing in this reconciliation bill on farm policy is wrong.

The fact is that the President's budget is not good for agriculture because it does not achieve balance in the next 7 years.

The Food and Agriculture Policy Research Institute ran some numbers on the impact of a balanced budget on farm income. They estimate that by the year 2002, under a balanced budget scenario, farmers will save $2.3 billion per year due to expected reductions in interest rates. It is important to note that farming is a very capital-intensive industry and benefits greatly from low interest rates.

Furthermore, FAPRI's preliminary numbers indicate that farmers' cash flow will increase $300 million per year due to the increased economic activity resulting from the balanced budget.

So the net positive impact on farm income from a balanced budget will be $2.6 billion per year. This gain will be lost if we adopt the President's budget numbers.

Mr. President, another vital point that my Democratic colleagues fail to mention is that their doomsday numbers on agriculture assume that the cuts will be made to the program as it is currently structured. They would want you to believe that the Republicans are taking $13.4 billion out of farmer's pockets.

This assumption reveals a lack of understanding about how farm programs work and a failure to recognize the important reforms contained in this bill. The next farm bill will significantly reduce the regulatory burden on farmers, allow farmers to plant for the marketplace, and continue to aggressively promote new markets and new uses for agriculture commodities.

Specifically, farmers will no longer be required to idle productive land because of a mandate from Washington. Furthermore, farmers will have the flexibility to produce whatever commodity they chose in response to market signals. These reform measures, along with reducing the regulatory burden and finding new markets for our products, will lead to an increase in farm income in the future.

It is true that Government payments to farmers will be reduced. But the future of U.S. agriculture must rest on the ability of farmers to earn income from the marketplace. The reforms to the farm programs contained in this budget reconciliation package achieve this goal and will allow our farmers to flourish.

So I urge you to vote against this motion. I yield the floor and yield the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CRAIG). Who yields time?

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Wyoming.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, we have moved away again a little bit and have gone into posturing this afternoon, I guess not unusually. There has been a good deal of misinformation floating around this budget and its effect on rural areas with respect to health care. Contrary to what we have heard, there are several provisions designed to recruit providers and to ensure that 24-hour emergency care is available, which we have not had in my State, even though the Senator from Montana has had some in his.

It is interesting, also, that several of the provisions talked about here my friends on the other side of the aisle supported last year when they were in the Clinton health care plan—reducing the updates for inpatient hospital services, section 4101. The Republican plan does not apply 2 percent reductions to all hospitals like the Clinton health care plan did. Rather, it receives the 1 percent reduction.

The copayment for health care services—this is a fee we have heard a great deal about—somehow it was not as devastating last year when it was in Clinton health care plan, section 4134.

But, happily, there are a number of provisions that are most helpful. One is the limited services hospitals. Frankly, there are going to be a continuing number of these in rural areas. With hospitals that are built relatively close together, you simply cannot support the hospital as a coservice hospital because there is not enough utilization. And we have had some experience with this. Under this bill, they can be reorganized and downsized into emergency rooms, or stabilizing facilities, and be reimbursed by HCFA—that is a very important change—so that you will have the facility in the town that cannot afford to have a full-blown hospital.

Medicare-dependent hospitals. The Clinton 1993 budget let this program expire, but the Republican plan reinstates it. The purpose is to assist high Medicare patient loads in Iowa, Wisconsin, Kansas, and other Midwest States. But it also has the extension of the sole community hospital. The Republican plan plans to extend these special payments to hospitals that have 50 beds or less and are 35 miles or more away from the nearest hospital. Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and other Rocky Mountain States receive the most money.

Medicare HMO payments. It intends to put these on an equal footing and to put some parity in these payments. These HMO payments in Medicare were based on the fee-for-service history. In one instance, in Bronx County in New York, the payment was $678 a month as opposed to South Dakota where it was $177. We need to find some equity in that. This program does that.

Medicare bonus payments, payments to primary care physicians to help hold primary care providers in rural areas, a 10- to 20-percent increase there if they practice in health care professional shortage areas.

These are the things that are in this bill to help rural health areas. Specifically, we have been working on it for several years with our rural health caucus, both in the House and in the Senate.

Telemedicine grants. We are going to find that we can save a great deal of money and provide better services by using telemedicine. There are some grants here that allow for that to be developed as well as to develop systems within rural States to deliver services.

So, Mr. President, contrary to what we have been hearing for the last few minutes, there are some substantial rural health additions to assist in delivering rural health services.

I urge the defeat of this amendment. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. BAUCUS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, I yield now to our distinguished leader in agriculture, a strong spokesman in our country for agriculture. I yield 2½ minutes and to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. BAUCUS. I yield the remaining time.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President. I thank the Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, in times past, when rural America was hit with droughts or floods, we brought disaster bills to the floor of the Congress. These bills were to ease the suffering of rural communities in hard times and to help stop disasters.

Yesterday morning we were handed this, a brand new 2,000-page disaster bill. But this bill does not cure a disaster in rural America: it provokes one. This is a disaster bill for agriculture. We were supposed to have a farm bill this year with a full debate on a sound food and agriculture policy for the Nation. Instead, agriculture has now been slipped into these 2,000 pages—I bet no one has really read the darned thing—and we have had no opportunity for real debate or amendments.

Once again, agriculture is being forced to take unfair and unreasonable cuts amounting to 25 percent over the next 7 years —even though agriculture has already been reduced significantly and commodity programs amount to about one-half of 1 percent of the budget. One-half of 1 percent, but commodity programs take a 25 percent cut over the next 7 years. Tell me if that is fair.

This is a disaster bill for rural health care. We all know that access to quality, affordable health care in rural communities has been a serious problem for years—especially for seniors. This disaster bill, with its drastic Medicare cuts, makes it even worse in rural America.

This is a disaster bill for America's farm families, who are already having a tough time making ends meet. Net farm income in real dollar terms will be at its lowest level this year since 1986, in the depths of the farm crisis. This disaster bill makes it worse by lowering farm income another $9 billion, according to USDA estimates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The majority controls 15 minutes 30 seconds.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think we are in the process of trying to work out a unanimous-consent agreement that will start us voting. So I am going to suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. HARKIN. May I finish my statement? May I have enough time to finish my statement?

Mr. DOMENICI. How long does the Senator wish to speak?

Mr. HARKIN. For a minute and a half. I was on a roll, and I did not want to stop.

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course; 2 minutes. Can the Senator pick up the roll?

Mr. HARKIN. I will pick up the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is yielded 2 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I thank the chairman for yielding me an additional amount of time because I did want to make another point—that this 2,000-page bill really destroys our basic commodity programs that we have had to put a safety net under our farm families. It puts a hard cap on deficiency payment rates, doubles the percentage of unpaid base acreage and decimates USDA's ability to respond to price-depressing surpluses.

What if commodity prices and farm income fall as they did in the 1980s? Under this disaster bill, if corn prices fall to $2 a bushel an Iowa farmer with a 350-acre corn base—which is a modest size—would lose over $10,000 of income protection compared to the current farm bill. And, if corn prices fell to $1.80 a bushel, which is not out of the question, that farmer would lose over $17,000 in income protection compared to what we have now in the law.

Also, this is a disaster bill for hungry kids. The nutrition cuts in this bill are excessive and unsupportable. It is unconscionable that this bill is cutting our commitment to school lunches, school breakfasts, summer meals, and the special milk program.

Mr. President, these drastic cuts to rural America are driven by ideology and not by common sense. They are unfair, unreasonable, and unconscionable.

Enough is enough. Rural America is already paying its fair share for deficit reduction. So this amendment offered by the Senator from Montana is to send this disaster bill back to the Finance Committee with instructions to pare back the upper income tax windfalls, and to reduce the assault on rural America.

It is time, Mr. President, to put common sense ahead of ideology and to put the interests of rural communities over the interests of a privileged few.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. COVERDELL. Mr. President, our side yields back its time, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. DOLE. I have been informed by Senator DASCHLE, the Democratic leader, that they will limit their amendments that they will offer after all time has expired, and with that commitment I now ask unanimous consent that all first-degree amendments pending to motions to recommit and all pending second-degree amendments be withdrawn.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. This will leave the following issues that need to be disposed of by rollcall votes that have been debated yesterday and up to this point today: The Rockefeller motion concerning Medicare, followed by the Abraham amendment concerning Medicare fraud, and the Bradley motion concerning EITC; the Graham, of Florida, motion concerning Medicaid; Kennedy amendment concerning education: Bumpers motion concerning deficit reduction; Baucus motion concerning rural restoration.

Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that all votes in this sequence after the first vote be limited to 10 minutes in length, with 2 minutes for explanation between each vote to be equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask that Senator KASSEBAUM or her designee now be recognized to offer a first-degree amendment concerning education and the time be limited to 10 minutes equally divided in the usual form, with no amendments in order to the amendment, and the vote occur immediately following the vote on or in relation to the Kennedy amendment in the voting sequence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. I further ask unanimous consent that the next 10 Republican amendments and the next 10 Democratic amendments be limited to 10 minutes equally divided in the usual form, with no amendments in order to any of the next 20 amendments offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Let me explain to our colleague where we go after the voting sequence that will occur after 10 minutes of debate by Senator KASSEBAUM or her designee. Republicans will be entitled to offer the next three amendments in a row as a result of a previous agreement. Then each side will alternate until the remaining amendments, limited to 10 minutes each, have been debated.

The Senate will then begin voting on those debated amendments, and then begin voting on all amendments Members are going to offer which would have no debate time. We would just offer it. There will be a little explanation. It will be the majority leader's intention to keep the Senate in until approximately midnight tonight and resume the voting sequence until concluded on Friday.

We could vary a little bit either way this evening depending on how much progress we make. And I have discussed this with the Democratic leader. It is our hope that we could finish voting and have final passage by midafternoon tomorrow. That will depend, of course, on whether Members on the other side feel compelled to continue to offer amendment after amendment after amendment when all time has expired. But that will be determined later. And I thank the Democratic leader for his cooperation.

I will be happy to yield to the Senator from South Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The minority leader.

Mr. DASCHLE. I thank the majority leader for that explanation, and that is in keeping with our agreement. We have three tiers of amendments. We have just completed our work on the first tier, for which now there will be votes, without second-degree amendments.

Once those votes have been completed, we will go to the second tier, for which there will be debate of up to 10 minutes on either side. I should say 10 minutes total for 10 amendments on the Democratic side and 10 amendments on the Republican side.

That will then expire all of the time. We will then go to the third tier of amendments for which there will be no time, and we will encourage Senators to write the purpose of their amendments clearly enough to allow the clerk to read the purpose and give us the opportunity then to vote.

We would also expect that on occasion the managers might find the need to explain a particular amendment. But there would be no time for discussion of that third tier set of amendments.

I think this is a very good agreement. It is what we had hoped to achieve now for some time. I appreciate the cooperation of all of our colleagues on both sides of the aisle. I think this will allow us to accommodate our work and accommodate many of the priorities we have been talking about now for several hours.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I just say to my colleagues this would not be a good day to be absent. Neither will tomorrow be a good day to be absent. I assume there will be anywhere from 40 to 60 votes between now and tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. BAUCUS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. BAUCUS. May I inquire of the majority leader when the vote on the Bumpers deficit reduction amendment and Baucus rural restoration amendments will occur. I was a little bit confused as I listened to the leader read the list and then say the Kassebaum amendment would come up after the Kennedy amendment. There was an ambiguous point as to when the vote on the Bumpers amendment and vote on the Baucus amendment would occur.

Mr. DOLE. They will occur after the Kassebaum amendment or her designee. So it will be KASSEBAUM or her designee, then BUMPERS, then BAUCUS.

Mr. BAUCUS. And then the other second-tier amendments?

Mr. DOLE. Then second-tier amendments. And then third-tier amendments, which we hope will find a way to the wastebasket.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, just one clarification, I ask the majority leader. I would expect that we will vote en bloc on the second tier. I wonder if it would not be appropriate to have a minute. 30 seconds on a side, just to remind everybody what that series of second-tier votes are prior to the time we vote. We may have done that. I do not have the agreement in front of me. We are going to do that on the first tier with 2 minutes on a side. We vote on the second tier and have 30 seconds on a side just to be sure people understand.

Mr. DOLE. I so amend my request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. One minute equally divided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute equally divided.

Mr. DOLE. Divided very quickly.

Mr. DASCHLE. That is right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I ask a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have agreed to this, have we not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I ask, yesterday, when the Abraham amendment was being discussed on fraud and abuse, we heard a comment from your side that it would be accepted. If that is still the case, we can just save a little bit of time. We are up against time constraints. I wonder if that is still the case.

Mr. DASCHLE. I would want to consult with our ranking member. It is my understanding we would be able to accept it, but let me confirm that after consultation.

Mr. DOMENICI. In any event, we are not precluding that and if the Senator could find that out, we would save a little bit of time.

Mr. President, I am informed that the other side ought not work too hard on that request. It may be that we do not want you to say yes to our request.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I would ask that the quorum call not be taken from either side as it relates to the time available on the bill, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The quorum call at this time will not be charged.

Mr. DOMENICI. It would not be because a vote is pending in any event. We are just following the rules?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico is correct.

The absence of a quorum has been noted. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DASCHLE. I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Hawaii off the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Hawaii has been yielded 3 minutes.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise to express my deep concern about the provisions in the reconciliation bill relating to Medicare and Medicaid. In my judgment, the proposals are a danger to the health of millions of Americans. House and Senate Republicans have called for a reduction of roughly $450 billion in health care expenditures over the next 7 years.

They argue that they are merely reducing program growth, not cutting Medicare. But the facts tell us a different story. We have very good estimates of what it will cost to fund the Medicare program over the next 7 years. The fact is that more people will become eligible and we will continue to have health care inflation.

The Republican proposal would cut Medicare below both the medical inflation rate and the private sector rate by cutting $270 billion, for tax breaks, from what is needed to fund the Medicare program. We are not just scaling back Medicare, we are eroding its foundation.

Medicare experts estimate that keeping part A solvent through the year 2006 requires $89 billion in cuts, not the $270 billion called for under the GOP proposal. Those who want to cut Medicare argue that cuts are necessary to get us to a balanced budget in 7 years. That puzzles me.

If the objective of this bill is to balance the budget, why are we simultaneously considering a plan to cut taxes by $245 billion over the same period? Clearly, the vast majority of the cuts are not needed to keep Medicare solvent, but are needed to pay for new tax breaks.

I am deeply concerned about the size of the Medicare and Medicaid cuts, and the fact that the savings will be diverted to provide tax breaks for the wealthy. But my foremost concern is the impact these proposals will have on the poor, elderly, and the disabled who will be drastically hurt.

Under the Republican proposal, Medicare premiums and deductibles will increase, and the quality and availability of care will be seriously compromised. Seventy-five and eighty-five percent of Medicare beneficiaries have incomes under $25,000, and the increase in out-of-pocket costs could make Medicare coverage unaffordable for many. Furthermore, the portion of cuts that do not fall on beneficiaries directly will be borne by the providers who deliver Medicare services. These cuts will be shifted to the rest of the population in the form of higher medical bills and higher health insurance costs.

I would also like to discuss briefly the provisions of the bill pertaining to the Medicaid Program. In addition to cutting $182 billion in Medicaid over 7 years, the proposal before us replaces the current Medicaid Program with a block grant capped at fixed dollar amounts each year. The bill would offer only minimal coverage and benefits, eliminate all Federal Standards for providers and delivery systems, and abolish the Federal standards set for nursing homes and institutions caring for the mentally retarded.

In 1987, national standards for nursing home care were established with broad bipartisan support. These standards were designed to protect nursing home patients because of the horrendous treatment many were receiving and because State regulations were inadequate. Yet the Republican plan to cut Medicaid by $182 billion contains a provision repealing the national standards for nursing homes, even though these standards have improved care substantially.

Mr. President, we all agree that we must balance the Federal budget. However, we must do it the right way. We must ensure a basic safety net and make adequate investments for the future. I question the priorities set forth in this legislation. This bill does not safeguard health care for our Nation's elderly, poor, or disabled; it does not ensure proper care of vulnerable people in nursing homes; and it certainly does not make adequate investments in our future.

Mr. President, I sincerely hope that we recognize the tremendous benefits these programs have made in our society and urge that we continue the fight for dignity and security for our Nation's most vulnerable as we work to balance the Federal budget.

I yield the floor.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this budget bill is a raw deal for Vermont. It makes deep and unnecessary cuts in Medicaid, Medicare, student loans, and dairy programs that will devastate our economy for years to come. And it will raises taxes on 63 percent of working Vermont families. This is the wrong way to try to balance the budget.

This bill cuts Medicaid by $182 billion over the next 7 years and turns this vital program into a block grant to the States. Over the next 7 years, these cuts will reduce Federal Medicaid payments to Vermont by $205 million. This plan defaults on our guarantee that seniors would receive health care assistance when they need it the most.

Vermont's acceptance of this enormous responsibility would leave the State hundreds of millions of dollars short of funds to provide necessary health care over the next 7 years.

The plan also eliminates requirements for nursing homes to provide proper health standards, a loophole that will be seized by some to lower the quality of care and life in these institutions.

It is not an easy decision to place a parent or a spouse in a nursing home, but often it is the only alternative to ensure that they get proper care. And it will be even more difficult if the Republican plan prevails.

The bill cuts Medicare by $270 billion over the next 7 years. It will cut payment rates to providers and hospitals.

make seniors pay higher premiums and increase deductibles. Vermont will lose $356 million in Medicare payments over the next 7 years, losing $88 million in 2002 alone.

In Vermont, 73 percent of our elderly population have incomes of less than $15,000. And 1 dollar of every 5 dollars of that fixed income is spent on health care. Yet Republicans are cutting Medicare and Medicaid to finance tax cuts that will mostly benefit Americans making over $100,000 a year—less than 3 percent of Vermonters make that kind of money.

Republicans have the gall to tell us that these massive cuts are supposed to "preserve, protect and strengthen Medicare." I think William Wells of Rutland, Vermont, who recently wrote to me, had the right response to this claim.

With true Vermont common sense, Mr. Wells wrote: I have heard politicians say "they want to save Medicare." Their way of saving Medicare is like a hunter 'saving' a moose by shooting it and having it mounted by a taxidermist. It is still there but no longer functional.

Let us be honest with the American people. Congress can balance the Medicare budget and keep the system solvent—but the cuts must be gradual and spread over a longer period of time.

For 30 years, Medicare and Medicaid have contributed greatly to the decline in poverty and improved the health of seniors in America. We are now asked to turn our backs on the elderly and distribute the "savings" among our wealthiest citizens.

Mr. President, I will oppose any plan that attempts to dismantle the health care delivery system that has served our Nation's seniors so well.

This bill also makes short-sighted cuts in education. It cuts student loan programs by $10 billion over the next 7 years. Students will be hit with 70 percent of these cuts—increasing the costs to the 20,000 Vermonters receiving higher education and their families by at least $5,800 over the life of a student loan. Because of rising tuition costs, Congress should be working to make education more affordable—not less.

These additional financial burdens will discourage many students to continue their education after high school. The Contract With America has sealed the fate of the next generation of Americans. They may never have the chance of post-high-school training or a college education—the key to a better paying job.

This bill also makes deep cuts in our dairy program. The Senate plan scraps the price support system for butter and nonfat milk and sharply limits the price supports for cheese. Under the bill, the average Vermont dairy farm will lose more than $7,000 a year in revenue. These dairy cuts will deal another blow to Vermont's dwindling family farms.

At a time when many working Vermonters are struggling to make ends meet, the Senate Republican budget would hike Federal taxes on low- and moderate-income families by cutting $43 billion from the earned income tax credit—a program that rewards work and compensates for low-wages.

This Federal tax increase will also raise State taxes in seven states, including Vermont, that have a State earned income tax credit tied to the federal credit. As a result, 27,000 Vermont working families earning less than $30,000 a year—about 63 percent of Vermont taxpayers—will be forced to pay higher taxes. This is a double whammy on working families.

Mr. President, this budget bill is a raw deal for Vermont. It will leave my home State in an economy crisis for years to come. And I will urge the President to veto it.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 is proof that this Congress is willing to make the difficult decisions that are needed to balance our Federal budget. That there is agreement between Congress and the executive branch, between Republicans and Democrats, and between the House of Representatives and the Senate, of the need to balance the budget at a date certain is a victory in and of itself. While we may not all agree on how to accomplish that feat, we are at least all proceeding toward a common goal.

This legislation continues the effort that is already underway in the Appropriations Committee to balance the budget. To date the Appropriations Committee has reduced Federal spending by $24 billion. My colleagues who have worked to put this legislation together know full well that reducing spending is not an easy task. However, given the size of the national debt, all members know that we must act now and make those tough choices.

The prime example that we are ready to make tough choices is proven in this bill's attempt to reign in the exponential growth in entitlement spending. Earlier this year I stated on this floor that I was sobered by the demise of the Bipartisan Commission on Entitlements and Tax Reform. The Commission was unable to agree on a specific set of recommendations on how to address the issue of continued entitlement growth. I am very happy that the taboo of reforming entitlements may finally be gone. Entitlement spending will continue to grow from 49 percent of the Federal budget in 1995 to 59 percent of the total budget in 2002. Based on these numbers it is clear the entitlement beast has not been slain, but at least the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 takes us in the right direction on the entitlement issue.

Like many Members in this chamber, I have some disagreements with the spending decisions in this legislation ad drafted. One of those areas of disagreement relates to the $11 billion reduction in education spending over 7 years. Some members have argued that this cut is small in comparison to total spending in this area, or that the impact is painless on a per person basis. What these arguments fail to consider is the critical role education plays in the success of the Nation's children, the success of this Nation's industries, and the success of this Nation's standing in the world community. Education is an investment in the future. The Senate would be shortsighted to cut this investment short. I plan to work with my colleagues to ensure that this provision can be fixed before the Senate finishes its work on this legislation.

I am also concerned that this legislation deals a blow to States that have been innovative in addressing the rise in health care costs. The State of Oregon began an experiment in 1994 to expand health care coverage to more Oregonians. The Oregon Health Plan, as it is known, has increased access to basic health care to more than 120,000 low-income Oregonians. This has been accomplished by making rational choices about the effectiveness of health care services and making the delivery system more efficient. Already Oregon has seen significant results. Our costs per beneficiary are 10 percent less than the national average; hospital charity care has decreased by 30 percent; emergency room visits are down by over 5 percent; and our welfare caseloads have decreased by 8 percent in the past year. Unfortunately the legislation before the Senate would inadvertently penalize Oregon for being innovative in its delivery of medical services. I am working with the leadership to ensure that this type of creativity and effective governing is not penalized.

There are a number of tough choices in this legislation and the authors should be commended for their work. However, given the fact that 15 percent of the current budget is spent to pay interest on the debt, these tough choices need to be made. We have before us a proposal that will do the job. While I would like to see some reordering of priorities in the legislation, I am looking forward to working with my colleagues to assure that a balanced budget becomes a reality.

PENSION REVERSIONS

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today in opposition to a provision in the budget reconciliation legislation before us that could put at risk the pensions of hard-working Americans. Specifically, I refer to the provision allowing corporations to take money out of funds deemed overfunded by the IRS for deductibility purposes, and use that money for other employee benefits, without paying an excise tax. Of course, because money transferred in this manner is fungible, the money could actually be used for almost any purpose.

The principal problem with this provision is that pensions funds considered overfunded by IRS for tax policy consideration are not overfunded on an actuarial termination basis. As I understand it, this means that while the plans have enough money to meet their current ongoing obligations, if for some reason the plan terminated, the people who had paid into that plan would have no guarantee that the plan could provide the pension benefits that they earned over the years. In such a case, the U.S. taxpayer, through the Pension Benefit Guarantee Corporation [PBGC], would be forced to step in and pay the benefits.

Mr. President, we know that workers are concerned about their ability to retire with a decent standard of living. We also know that our Nation is suffering from a lack of savings and capital for economic expansion, and that institutional investors like pension funds are the single largest investors in capital. It therefore makes absolutely no sense to me to provide an incentive to decrease pension security, savings, and available capital through provisions like the one included in the budget reconciliation legislation before us.

I think we should be doing more to promote sound pension plans, and expand coverage for American workers. This provision seems to me to be doing just the opposite: putting existing plans at greater risk without expanding coverage. In the time since this and a similar House provision have come to the public's attention, numerous pension experts, including the American Academy of Actuaries and the PBGC, have expressed concern about the effect this provision could have on pension fund soundness. I have also heard from constituents expressing similar concerns. For all of these reasons, I urge my colleagues to strike this provision.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, in many respects this is an amazing debate we are having today, a debate I was not sure I would ever see—should we, or should we not, pass a bill which will get our budget into balance over the next 7 years.

It is historic. It is bold. It is unprecedented. And judging by the reaction, it is real.

Unfortunately, $5 trillion in debt has piled up waiting for this day, so even with this action, we are still passing on a huge debt to our children and their children.

When I first got to Washington, after coming from State government where we had to balance the budget every year, I was amazed at the cavalier attitude taken by so many about budget crisis.

It did not take me long to learn that walking away from budget problems had become so ingrained that success was defined as holding the deficit to only $200 billion—meaning we only added $1 trillion to the debt every 5 years.

Unfortunately, that is where President Clinton remains today. While we are willing to put before the public the real questions—when do we stop adding to the debt? When do we get serious about slowing the growth of runaway programs? When will Congress be willing to actually say No to a special interest, or a pet program and say "Sorry, I'm worried about adding to my kid's debt."

No one said it would be easy—but with the leadership of Senator DOMENICI, and the willingness of Members to stand up and vote for action instead of just talking a good game—this Senate will soon take that step.

Make no mistake, the step is a big one, as for the first time in 25 years Congress has the opportunity to pass a budget which will get us to a surplus—rather than just keep adding to our debt.

The budget before us is tough. It sets priorities. It recognizes that government cannot do it all. And it makes the statement that the time has come for leaders of today to start paying attention to the financial and economic devastation thy are creating for tomorrow's generations.

We have heard many speeches about the need to cut spending, reduce the deficit, and get our Nation's books into balance. Everyone who looks at our nearly $5 trillion debt recognizes the need to do something so that we don't keep piling on that debt for our children and grandchildren.

Over the next few days the American people will have a rare opportunity to see exactly what the political leadership's visions for our country's future are.

Too often Congress legislates for the present, ignoring the costs for the future. Political expediency replaces thoughtful debate, and at the end of the day it is with shock and dismay that the public finally realizes what has occurred—and recognizes what additional debt they or their children will be forced to pay.

It takes a long time to build up a $5 trillion debt. And even starting today it will take 7 years to get us to a balance, meaning that we won't even begin paying off a dime of debt until 2002.

Some would like us to put off the tough choices for a little longer. Others have abandoned finding a solution to the real budget crisis we are facing in their zeal to make political points. And still others claim to be on board with the concept of balancing the budget—they just don't like our approach.

But as I have said before—talk is cheap. If you say you want to balance the budget, let's see your plan.

If you say you understand Medicare is going broke, and must be fixed, let's see your plan.

Unfortunately, what we have seen and heard so far is much heat—and no light.

Medicare is one of the best examples. Medicare today is paying out in claims more than it is collecting in premiums. It is only because of the interest earned on the trust fund's surplus that Medicare is not insolvent right at this moment.

This means that as I speak, for every dollar a senior is paying in, more than a dollar in claims is being paid out. So why is everyone not saying stop, something has to be done?

Next year even including the interest earned on the trust fund's won't be enough to pay out all the claims. Thus next year Medicare will be insolvent, and it will be forced to start eating into its rainy day fund—the money which has been built up in order to be available for the baby boomers who start to retire in the next decade.

And then if nothing is done, by the year 2002 the surplus will be gone and the entire program will be bankrupt and will be forced to shut down.

So again I ask, why is the President not saying we must do something to fix this drastic problem—not just delay it again like has been done so often before—but actually fix it?

Why are my colleagues in the Democratic party not saying let us get to work on this problem?

Instead they want to paper over the problems in Medicare, only fiddling around the edges, while making no effort to make fundamental changes in the program as we realize must be done. We want to make savings by giving seniors a real choice—they offer a 2-year bandaid to get them beyond the next election.

So what does our bill do? It takes on the task of reforming and overhauling Medicare—both to protect it for today's seniors, as well as preserve it for tomorrow's. It also expands choices, and bring the program of the 1960's into the health care system of the 1990's. And it gives us 25 years of additional solvency—versus the 25 months of the Democrats' plan.

How much clearer can the choice be? A thoughtful long-term solution—or a get-me-through one more election BandAid.

Mr. President this debate is much bigger than Medicare. It is much bigger than Medicaid, agriculture, civil service retirement, or welfare. It is about what financial legacy we want to leave to our next generations.

It is about whether people believe that $5 trillion in debt is enough, and whether we in Congress have the courage to hit the spending brakes.

I hope we do. And hope that the President will find the courage to do the same.

Finally, I would like to express my opposition to the amendment that the senior senator from Arizona has indicated he plans to offer.

That amendment would, allegedly, eliminate 12 pork programs—a goal I would support if it delivered on that promise. Unfortunately, however, the amendment would target several programs which are critical to our international competitiveness and our ability to create high-paying export jobs. Let me quickly touch on just a few examples:

First, the amendment would require the Export Import Bank to raise loan fees which would have the impact of making Exim financing uncompetitive vis-a-vis other countries' export finance agencies. That means U.S. companies will lose deals and U.S. workers will lose jobs.

Second, it would reimpose recoupment fees on commercial sales of military equipment overseas. The Bush administration eliminated this fee because it was making U.S. export uncompetitive and costing jobs. It makes no sense to reimpose it.

Third, it would cancel NASA's subsonic and supersonic research programs. These programs are aimed at ensuring U.S. aerospace companies retain their technological edge into the 21st century. If it becomes technically possible, it will be economically viable to build only one supersonic airplane. I want that plane to be built by Boeing or McDonnell Douglas, not by Airbus.

CAPITAL GAINS—FAIRNESS

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we need to consider some very important facts concerning the fairness of the capital gains tax rate reduction in the reconciliation bill before us.

We have heard some statements here on the Senate floor over the past few days by some of our colleagues who believe that a broad-based capital gains tax rate reduction somehow favors the rich at the expense of middle- and lower-income taxpayers. I want to set the record straight on this issue.

WHO PAYS CAPITAL GAINS TAXES?

First, Mr. President, let us start by examining who pays capital gains taxes in this country.

The fact of the matter is that most of the tax returns reporting capital gains come from taxpayers in the lower- and middle-income categories.

Since there are varying views as to where the middle-income category begins and ends, I have prepared two pie charts contained within chart 1 to illustrate who these taxpayers are.

The pie on the left shows that, on average, from 1985 to 1992, 62 percent of all returns reporting capital gains came from those reporting $50,000 or less of adjusted gross income [AGI]. I repeat, 62 percent. This amounted to more than 5½ million taxpayers per year.

The pie on the right, Mr. President, shows the same information for taxpayers with higher incomes, but still within what most would consider as the middle-income category.

As you can see, 79 percent of all returns reporting capital gains came from those reporting $75,000 or less of AGI. On average, this was over 7 million taxpayers per year.

Capital gains realization is hardly the exclusive domain of the rich.

Actually, these figures dramatically understate the number of people in the lower- and middle-income categories who will benefit from the capital gains deduction.

It is estimated that about 44 percent of all people reporting capital gains recognize such gains in only 1 out of 5 years, on average.

In 1986 alone, of the 7.6 million returns reporting capital gains, 3.1 million of these taxpayers reported no capital gains in the previous year.

THE "OCCASIONAL RECOGNITION PHENOMENON"

Since many taxpayers do not have capital gains each year, it is obvious that there are millions more of lower- and middle-income taxpayers than this chart indicates who will benefit from a lower capital gains tax rate.

This occasional recognition phenomenon also illustrates why the numbers cited for the rich are consistently overstated by capital gains tax cut opponents.

By only looking at 1-year segments, capital gains tax cut opponents erroneously conclude that once a taxpayer experiences an unusually large capital gains recognition in a particular year, he or she will stay in the rich category forever. Such is simply not the case.

Take, for example, a typical farming couple in Cache County, UT, who has struggled over the years to make ends meet and finally decides to sell the farm and move to the warmer climate of southern Utah.

Even though this couple may never have reported more than $30,000 of farming income in any given year, in that 1 year of sale they will be lumped in with the rich because they reported a $250,000 of gain on the sale of their farm.

To conclude that this couple is rich because they realized a large capital gain in only 1 year of their life is ridiculous. Yet, this is exactly the basis for many of the statistics given by my friends on the other side of this issue.

One study looked at those reporting over $200,000 of income per year from 1981 to 1984. Taking just single-year snapshots of the realizations, such taxpayers accounted for almost 40 percent of all capital gains reported.

However, when the entire 4-year period was considered as a whole and the occasional nature of recognitions was taken into account, their proportional share dropped to just 22 percent.

Thus, the more years that are included in the comparison, the smaller the share of gains going to the so-called rich.

Let me repeat, Mr. President, studies that show lower- and middle-income taxpayers who receive an occasional larger capital gain as being rich are misleading.

OPPONENTS IGNORE BENEFIT TO LOWER- AND MIDDLE-CLASS TAXPAYERS

Now, I am the first to admit that some who are truly wealthy will benefit from a lower capital gains tax rate, and rightly so, as I will discuss in a few moments.

However, the impact of the benefits of a capital gains tax cut to the wealthy are greatly overstated, while the positive benefits to lower- and middle-income taxpayers are mostly ignored by those who oppose this change.

For example, a Treasury Department study estimates that nearly half of the dollar value of all capital gains are reported by taxpayers reporting wage and salary income of $50,000 or less.

Moreover, the same study estimates that three-fourths of all tax returns with capital gains are filed by taxpayers with wage and salary income of less than $50,000. Yet, to listen to capital gains tax opponents, one could conclude that only the rich would be affected by a lower rate.

Mr. President, to get a better feel for how many lower- and middle-income taxpayers will actually benefit from the capital gains deduction in this bill, consider the following.

It is estimated that about 12 million lower- and middle-income workers participate in some sort of stock equity plans with their employers—12 million.

Moreover, many millions of Americans own investments in stocks, bonds, and mutual funds. In fact, as of September 1994, there were 93.6 million mutual fund accounts in America. It is interesting to note that 52 percent of the 30.2 million families owning mutual funds report incomes of $50,000 or below and that 80 percent of those families report incomes of $75,000 or below. This is middle America. This is the teacher who married the police officer planning for their future.

In addition, millions of people in the lower- and middle-income categories own homes and rental properties that could be subject to capital gains taxes upon sale. This bill will benefit all of these taxpayers.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX RATE DIFFERENTIALS

Mr. President, it is well known that in 1986, Congress raised the capital gains tax rates on the rich, from a 20-percent top rate to a 28-percent top rate. What is lesser known, however, is that we raised capital gains taxes on middle-income taxpayers as well.

For example, a family of four earning the median income saw a 50-percent increase in their capital gains tax rate. A family of four earning twice the median income—and these would be the upper middle class rather than the rich—saw a 47 percent increase in their capital gains tax rate.

In 1990, Congress once again created a differential between the top tax rate on capital gains income and the top tax rate for ordinary income.

By putting in a new 31 percent bracket, but keeping the top rate on capital gains income at 28 percent, we once again began to favor capital gains income—for some.

The differential was further increased in 1993 when Congress created the 36 and 39.6 percent tax brackets and again capped the capital gains tax rate at 28 percent. The result is that taxpayers in the highest brackets currently enjoy a lower rate on capital gains, but those in the 15 percent and 28 percent brackets do not.

As you can see from chart 2, Mr. President, this bill remedies this situation by giving those in the lowest tax brackets the largest percentage reductions in their effective capital gains tax rates.

I will also say, while I believe that we should have direct lending stay in as it creates great competition for the programs, and am in favor of having a rate higher than 20 percent that is in the bill now, I could not go with the Democratic amendment because it essentially opens up direct lending fully. I will therefore be voting against the Kennedy amendment. But I will be voting in favor, obviously, of the Kassebaum-Snowe-Jeffords amendment.

Our amendment restores the 6-month grace period, eliminates the .85 percent institution fee, and lowers the interest rate on PLUS loans. Reducing the labor committee's instruction from $10.85 billion over 7 years to $5 billion.

Let me lay aside the issue of reducing education cuts for one quick moment and explain why this amendment is so important.

The amendment offered by my democratic colleagues restored direct lending to current law—or a transition to 100 percent. I simply could not support such a provision.

I have always been a supporter of testing the direct lending program and am on record as opposing the labor committee's bill to limit it to 20 percent. Twenty percent in my view is too small, it cuts out schools that currently participate in the program—that to me is wrong.

However, as I stated during debate of the 1993 reconciliation, I believe in a slow, implementation of direct lending. It should be undertaken thoughtfully and carefully. The amendment offered by my democratic colleagues is tantamount to a phase-in of direct lending. A phase-in suggests something very different than a thoughtful analysis of the two programs. My fear is that we have already made the decision to go full force without really looking at the advisability of such a move. It is like saying "ready, fire, and then aim."

For this reason I support a firm cap on direct lending. That cap, in my mind should be set at a point which protects the schools that are current participants and allows some room for growth. I suggest that number be set between 30-40 percent.

Mr. President, that is not the amendment we are currently considering. I offered that suggestion to my colleagues as a bipartisan approach. Unfortunately, that amendment coupled with billions of dollars in additional student aid, was rejected by the democrats and interestingly also by groups purporting to represent higher education. In particular the council on education.

I am truly disheartened that today we may have lost an opportunity to demonstrate to this Congress, the administration and the people of this country that education is not a partisan issue. Unfortunately, we gave up the chance to show that politics takes a back seat to sound policy.

I wish we could have put differences aside and discussed the real issue—reducing the labor committee's instruction and restore funding for education.

Certainly, we must balance the budget but we must cut expenditure not investment. That is what this amendment does. It strikes the .85 percent institution fee, restores the 6-month grace period, and eliminates the increase in the PLUS interest rate. Support for this amendment will provide savings to parents, students, and institutions.

Eliminating the interest subsidy during the 6-month grace period could increase the debt of an undergraduate who borrows the maximum $23,000 by almost $1,000, resulting in additional payments of nearly $1,400 over the life of the loan. For a graduate student who borrows the maximum $65,500, the result would be $2,700 in additional debt and almost $4,000 in additional payments.

Raising the interest rate and the interest rate cap on PLUS loans would increase the total payments of parents who borrow $20,000 for their children's education by $1,300.

It simply doesn't pay to cut education.

Consider the following: More highly educated workers not only earn more, but they work and pay taxes longer then less educated workers.

Between 1973 and 1993, median family income dropped by over 20 percent for families headed by a person with a high school diploma or less; but it held steady for those families headed by someone with 4 years of college; and increased for families head by someone with 5 years of college or more. (Mortenson, June 1995)

We need to encourage our young people to pursue higher education both to keep us competitive and to help balance the budget.

Higher education funds cannot be cut any further.

Unfortunately, the opportunity for individuals to go on to postsecondary education is getting slimmer and slimmer. Pell grant awards have not kept pace with college costs. Students have had to increase borrowing in order to make up the difference.

In 1985-86, the actual maximum Pell grant of $2,100 paid 58 percent of the total annual cost of attendance for a 4-year public institution $3,637. In 1993-94, the maximum Pell grant of $2,300 paid only 36 percent of the total cost, $6,454.

Because Federal grant programs have grown much more slowly than the cost of attending college, loans now, 1994-95 account for 56 percent of all student aid, up from 49 percent in 1985-96.

Borrowing has skyrocketed in recent years to such an extent that the amount borrowed through the FFEL program from 1990 to 1995 is greater than the total amount borrowed from its inception in 1965 through 1989.

With such statistics it is no wonder that polls show more and more students and families deciding that college is simply out of their reach. In fact, close to 20 percent of students consider leaving school because of debt. Considering the impact on our economy and the future earning potential of individuals with a postsecondary degree, this statistic is most disheartening.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment and tell the nation that the issue of education spending is a bipartisan issue.

I see that the Senator from Maine has arrived. I am happy to yield to her.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I have 5 minutes, as I understand it. I will speak for 2 minutes and then yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, this is, first of all, an extraordinary moment because it is an initial victory for the students of this country and their parents that our Republican friends are hearing their message about the unfair, unwise, unjustified additional burden on working families. So that is the good news.

The bad news is that what Senator KASSEBAUM's amendment will effectively do is to say to the 1,400 schools that now have direct lending that half of them are out. Half of them are out. There is no suggestion about how you are going to cut those out.

Under our amendment, we are leaving the choice to the schools, to the colleges. It is so interesting that our Republican friends want to close the option for local control out. We leave it up to the schools. If they want to get in, they can—maximum choice—and we leave it up to the schools to have competition between the direct loan program and the guaranteed loan program.

Under the amendment of the Republicans, they will be preserving the $77 billion that will flow through the guarantee agencies and guarantee $5 million in profits. That is not competition. Where is the voice for competition among the Republicans? Where is the description about what colleges are going to be in and what colleges are going out?

The amendment that has been introduced by myself and Senator SIMON goes back to what was agreed to in terms of direct loans in 1993. We permit the colleges that want to get in, and we establish a ceiling. That was bipartisan. Someone tell me what happened in the 1994 election that was to say that we are going to jiggle the system and force the students into the guaranty system.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I agree this is a step forward. But it eliminates—cuts down to 20 percent direct lending. This is, frankly, a brazen kind of pandering to the banks and the guaranty agencies. There is not a college or university in this Nation that has a direct lending program that does not want to keep it. And as our friend and former colleague, DAVE DURENBERGER, said, "This is not free enterprise, the old system, this is free lunch for the guaranty agencies and the banks." We write into the law their profit.

In terms of the taxpayer, we wrote the budget resolution so that you would count the administrative cost for direct lending but not for the guaranty student program. CBO says, under current law, that leaving this 20 percent, as the Kassebaum amendment does, will cost the Nation $4.64 billion. All colleges and universities, again, who are in the program like it. It saves a huge amount of paperwork. Students like it, parents like it, taxpayers like it.

The Kennedy amendment is budget neutral. We do not add to the deficit. Why are we doing something that colleges like, students like, and taxpayers benefit from? We are doing it for one reason and one reason only: To benefit the banks and the guaranty agencies.

If we want to call this a bank assistance bill—and they have record-breaking profits right now—we ought to do that. If we want to call this an assistance to guaranty agencies, we ought to do that; but if we want to call it an assistance to students bill, then we ought to vote for the Kennedy amendment. Let me just point out that this idea came from Congressman TOM PETRI, a Republican from Wisconsin. DAVE DURENBERGER, Republican from Minnesota, was the chief cosponsor of this.

This should not be a partisan thing. I hope Members on both sides will vote for the Kennedy-Simon amendment. It makes sense for everyone. I just appeal to you on behalf of America's students.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do I have 30 seconds?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. THOMPSON). Ten seconds.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is a clear attempt to strike one of the initiatives of President Clinton—eliminate National Service, eliminate Goals 2000, eliminate direct lending for education.

Our Republican friends cannot stand a good idea when they see one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time under the amendment has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the Congressional Budget Office dated October 26 saying there has been no scorekeeping activities that try to prejudice one of the programs versus another: that is, that guaranteed one versus another.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. CONGRESS.
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE.
Washington, DC. October 26, 1995.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In your letter of September 5, 1995, you asked the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) to respond to several questions regarding the Credit Reform Act and section 207 of the 1966 budget resolution related to the treatment of administrative expenses in the student loan programs. Attached are CBO's responses to your questions.

If you wish further details, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Deborah Kalcevic.

Sincerely,

JUNE E. O'NEILL,
Director.

RESPONSES TO QUESTIONS FROM CHAIRMAN DOMENICI

The Credit Reform Act of 1990 provided that the federal budget would record the cost of direct loans and guaranteed loans on a subsidy basis rather than a cash basis. The act defined the subsidy cost of a loan to equal the present discounted value of all loan disbursements, repayments, default costs, interest subsidies, and other payments associated with the loan, excluding federal administrative costs. Federal administrative costs of loan programs continued to be accorded a cash-accounting treatment. Estimates of proposals affecting student loans made from 1992 through early 1995 used the accounting rules established in the Credit Reform Act.

The budget resolution for fiscal year 1996, adopted in June 1995, specified that the direct administrative costs of direct student loans should be included in the subsidy estimates of that program for purposes of Congressional scorekeeping. Since June, for estimating legislation under the 1996 budget resolution, the Congressional Budget Office (CBO) has used this alternative definition of subsidy costs. In addition, changes in economic and technical estimating assumptions complicate the comparison of estimates made at different times. The following questions and answers explore the implications of the change in accounting for direct student loans.

Question 1: The President proposed, and signed into law in 1993, the Federal Direct Student Loan Program to replace the guaranteed lending program. What was the time frame adopted for the phase-in of that program when it was initially enacted and what savings estimate was provided by CBO?

Answer: The President's fiscal 1994 budget proposed expanding the direct student loan program from a pilot program (which was about 4 percent of loan volume) to a program that would provide 100 percent of all student loans by the 1997-1998 academic year. As part of the request, the President proposed to lower interest rates to borrowers as of July 1997, substantially increase the annual capped entitlement levels for direct loan administrative costs, and subsidize schools for loan origination. The budget proposed no changes in the guaranteed loan program except to phase it out. CBO estimated that the proposal would save $4.3 billion over the 1994-1998 period. These estimates were completed using the CBO February 1993 baseline economic and technical assumptions. The President's proposal became the policy assumed in that year's budget resolution.

The legislation passed by the Congress differed significantly from the policies assumed in the budget resolution. The bill met the requirement to save $4.3 billion by limiting the volume in the direct lending program to 60 percent of the total and substantially cutting subsidies in the guaranteed loan program. Specifically, direct loans were to represent 5 percent of total volume for academic year 1994-1995, 40 percent for 1995-1996, 50 percent for 1996-1997 and 1997-1998, and 60 percent for 1998-1999. The legislation also provided that the ceiling could be exceeded if demand required it.

Question 2: In his FY96 budget, the President proposed an acceleration of that plan so that all student loans would be provided directly from the government no later than July 1, 1997. What "additional" savings did CBO estimate for the accelerated phase-in under the Credit Reform Act?

Answer: The President's fiscal year 1996 budget request included a proposal to expand the direct student loan program to cover 100 percent of loan volume by July 1997. This proposed change was estimated to save $4.1 billion from the CBO baseline over the 1996-2002 period. That baseline incorporated CBO's February 1995 economic and technical assumptions and the direct loan phase-in schedule provided under current law. This baseline reflected the rules that are currently in law for estimating the cost of credit programs.

The 1996 budget resolution specified that the direct administrative costs of direct student loans should be included in the subsidy estimates for that program for purposes of Congressional scorekeeping. This change conformed the treatment of the administrative costs of direct student loans with that for guaranteed student loans. For purposes of Congressional budget scorekeeping, the change overrides the Credit Reform Act, which requires that the federal administrative costs for direct loan programs be accorded a cash-accounting treatment.

For estimating legislation under the 1996 budget resolution, CBO modified its baseline for direct student loans to include in the subsidy calculations the present value of direct federal administrative costs, including the loans' servicing costs. This change means that direct loans issued in a given year have their administrative costs calculated over the life of the loan portfolio, with adjustments for the time value of the funds. Therefore, the subsidy costs of any year's direct loans will include the discounted future administrative costs of servicing loans which may be in repayment (or collection) for as long as 25 to 30 years. The inclusion of these administrative costs in the subsidy calculations for direct loans increases the subsidy rates for these loans by about 7 percentage points. Consequently, the resolution baseline for student loans is higher than the current CBO baseline. Under the assumptions of the budget resolution baseline, the President's 100 percent direct lending proposal would save $115 million over the 1996-2002 period.

Question 3: What would be the long term costs, under scoring rules in effect prior to the 1995 budget resolution, for the above proposal? How would those savings be affected over the life of the loan? How would those costs be compared with the same volume of loans made under the guaranteed program?

Answer: The response to the first part of this question is addressed in the previous answer. Compared to the CBO baseline, the President's 1996 budget proposal was estimated to save $4.1 billion over the next seven years. In order to provide an estimate of a proposal to return to 100 percent guaranteed lending by July 1997 under either the CBO or the resolution baseline, we would need more detail than has been provided on how the program would be restructured.

Question 4: Did the credit reform amendment adopted as part of the budget resolution direct the Congressional Budget Office to exclude any costs for guaranteed loans?

Answer: This year's budget resolution addressed only the budgetary treatment of the administrative costs of direct student loans. By defining the direct administrative costs of direct loans and requiring these costs be calculated over the life of the loan portfolio, the resolution allowed for the costs of direct and guaranteed loans to be evaluated on a similar basis. Thus, all of the program costs for both programs are included in the resolution baseline and are accounted for in the same way, whether they are calculated on the basis of subsidy or cash-based accounting.

Question 5: Are there any expenses of direct or guaranteed loans that are currently excluded from the government subsidy costs that would be more appropriately be included in that subsidy? If so, what are they and why have they been excluded from the subsidy cost? For example, some have argued that the credit reform amendment did not include the administrative cost allowance which is paid to guarantee agencies.

Answer: Indirect administrative costs—those not directly tied to loan servicing and collection—are included in the budget on a cash basis for both programs. Some have asked whether these costs would be more appropriately included in the loan subsidy calculations. Although it might be appropriate to include some or all of these costs in the subsidy calculation, as a practical matter it is not straightforward to determine which costs to account for in this manner. For the most part the costs of government oversight, regulation writing, Pell grant certification, and other similar expenditures are personnel costs of the Department of Education or contracted services. In addition, many of the costs, such as program oversight, are not tied to a single loan portfolio but affect many portfolios and both programs. Allocating these costs to specific portfolios and programs for specific fiscal years would be difficult.

The Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA-93) eliminated administrative cost allowance (ACA) payments to guaranty agencies. Until that time, the volume-based payments were always included in the subsidy costs of guaranteed student loans. However, OBRA-93 gave the Secretary of Education authority to make such payments out of the $2.5 billion capped entitlement fund for the direct loan program. Any expenditures from this fund would be accounted for on a cash basis. If the Secretary chose not allocate any funds for this purpose, then there would be no payments to guaranty agencies.

As part of its current services budget estimates, the Department of Education announced plans to use funds available under the capped entitlement to pay administrative cost allowances to guaranty agencies at one percent of new loan volume for the next five years. Both the CBO baseline and the budget resolution baseline include these planned administrative expenses on a cash basis under the capped entitlement account at the Department's current services levels.

It makes little budgetary difference whether these payments are computed on a cash or subsidy basis. Because the payments are made at the time of loan disbursement, their estimated costs on a cash basis or subsidy basis would be essentially the same. As a result, over the 1996-2002 period the cost of the student loan programs and the budget totals would be changed only marginally by accounting for these payments on a subsidy basis.

Question 6: What possible mechanisms exist to reclassify these costs as part of the federal subsidy, to be scored on a present value basis?

Answer: The guaranty agency cost allowance could again be made an automatic government payment under the guaranteed student loan law. Including the current cash-based indirect administrative expenses for both the direct and guaranteed loans in the subsidy estimates would require amending the Credit Reform Act, but it would be difficult to estimate a wide range of federal personnel-related expenses over a 25- to 30-year period. Determining whether some types of expenditures that are now accounted for on a cash basis should be included in the subsidy calculation would require a more thorough review of the current expenditures of the Department of Education than has been conducted to date.

Question 7: Does the credit reform rule adopted as part of the budget resolution provide the proper framework to fairly assess all direct federal expenses of guaranteed and direct loans?

Answer: In general, the Credit Reform Act amendment allows direct comparisons between the costs of the guaranteed and direct loan programs.

Question 8: Some have claimed that savings associated with the Goodling proposal to repeal direct lending were a result of excluding administrative costs of guaranteed loans. What is the primary reason for the $1.5 billion in savings associated with the Goodling proposal under the new scoring rule?

Answer: On July 26, 1995, CBO prepared an estimate of the original Goodling proposal. The proposal had three components: (1) eliminate the authority for new direct student and parent loans effective in academic year 1996-1997; (2) change the annual and cumulative budget authority levels under Section 458 to reflect the elimination of indirect administrative cost anticipated for new direct loans and the termination of payments of Section 458 funds to guarantee agencies and limit the funds to $24 million annually; and (3) reestablish an administrative cost allowance (ACA) for guarantee agencies at 0.85 percent of new loan volume or 0.08 percent of outstanding volume, with an annual limitation on ACA subsides of $200 million. Assuming an enactment date of October 1995, the proposals would reduce outlays for student loans by $227 million for fiscal year 1996 and by $1.5 billion over the 1996-2002 period.

Relative to the budget resolution baseline, shifting loan volume to guaranteed loans would save $855 million over the 1996-2002 period. Administrative expenditures would be reduced by $1.97 billion over the next seven years by lowering the cap. Of this amount, $824 million reflects the elimination of the discretionary guaranty agency payments, and the remainder reflects the elimination of the discretionary guaranty agency payments, and the remainder reflects the elimination of the indirect costs for the phased-out direct loan program. Reestablishing the ACA for a 100 percent guaranteed loan program would cost $1.3 billion over seven years.

Although the Goodling proposal would have eliminated most of the funds to funds a oversee the phased-out direct loan program by reducing the capped entitlement level for these funds, it did not address the level of appropriated funds that would be necessary to oversee the larger guaranteed loan program.

Question 9: Did the Goodling proposal to eliminate the direct loan program and make changes to the guaranteed program you were asked to score, address all federal administrative costs of direct and guaranteed loans? When you applied the new scoring rule, were you able to properly categorize those expenses to provide a completed fair calculation of the cost differential?

Answer: All of the cost analyses of the Goodling proposal for both the direct and guaranteed loan programs were completed using the same budgetary treatment for both programs. The Goodling proposal, however, did not address the level of discretionary appropriations necessary to oversee the larger guaranteed loan program.

Mr. SIMON. Will my colleague yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. SIMON. Under the scorekeeping in the budget resolution, you say count the administrative costs for direct lending but not for the guaranteed program, and we asked CBO, how do you score it under current law? There is a savings of $4.6 billion under direct lending.

Mr. DOMENICI. There is a statement in the letter from CBO on that issue.

Mr. SIMON. I will read it, and I thank my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. I want 30 seconds to say thanks to Senator KASSEBAUM and the other Senators who worked on our side. I think they have come up with a very good amendment, and I think ultimately the students across America who have been concerned will find they have done an excellent job in taking care of an overwhelming percentage of their issues.

We thank you for it.

AMENDMENT NO. 2950

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be 2 minutes of explanation equally divided on the Abraham amendment.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order in the Chamber?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chamber will be in order.

The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, the next amendment before us is very simple.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the remarks do not mean anything if we cannot hear them. May we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chamber will be in order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I thank you, Mr. President.

The next amendment I will offer is pretty straightforward. It basically creates a mechanism by which the Medicare beneficiaries can be rewarded for assisting us in ferreting out the waste, the fraud, and abuse in the Medicare program.

Under the amendment, the Secretary of HHS has the responsibility of setting up two programs—one program that in effect is a whistle-blower program which would provide bonuses to Medicare beneficiaries who will identify Medicare fraud and abuse. The other program would be designed to provide bonuses to Medicare beneficiaries who identify waste, and to streamline and make more efficient and less costly the Medicare system.

Mr. President, I think this will help us to achieve cost savings in Medicare while at the same time providing benefits to Medicare beneficiaries who assist us in that effort.

I urge its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to Senator HARKIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Senator from Nebraska for yielding.

As I said, I support the Abraham amendment. It is not a bad amendment. It is a good amendment. There is nothing wrong with it. I would just point out it is sort of voluntary on the Secretary's part. It does not mandate that they have to do this. It says the Secretary may set these up. That is fine, as far as it goes. I would just say that probably later on today or tomorrow, the amendment that I had offered to the Abraham amendment last night will be coming up for a vote, which provides for some tough measures. We will talk about that later. This amendment is a good amendment. I intend to support it. It is in keeping with trying to give the Secretary more power to cut down on waste, fraud, and abuse.

So it is a good amendment. We will certainly support it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

So, the amendment (No. 2950) was agreed to.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BRADLEY MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I understand that the Bradley motion is next. I would appreciate, if possible, the Chair recognizing the Senator from New Jersey for the purpose of a 1-minute statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, this amendment eliminates the tax increase on people making under $30,000 a year. This bill contains a tax cut for estates of $5 million, a tax cut in the amount of $1.7 million.

We are not touching that tax cut, but we are trying to prevent the tax increase that will come in this bill for people making under $30,000 a year. The EIC offsets income taxes, Social Security, and excise taxes. The other side has talked only about income taxes.

Last year, with $114 billion in Federal taxes, only $12 billion of that was income taxes from people making under $30,000 a year. Why increase taxes on those hard-working Americans? These are Americans who work every day, and they pay their taxes, and they support their families.

This motion is progrowth and profamily. It deserves to be supported because it is a tax cut for individual working families.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield our time to Senator NICKLES.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, one, let me just tell my colleague from New Jersey, and other colleagues, there is no tax increase for individuals making less than $30,000. That claim has been refuted by the Joint Tax Committee. It is totally false, and people making that claim should really be ashamed of themselves.

Mr. President, I am going to put in the RECORD the facts. The facts are, the earned income tax credit grows even under our proposal. It grows. The maximum benefit that anybody can receive today is $3,100. It grows next year to $3,200. And in 7 years it grows to $3,888. It is an increase.

This is a program that is a cash outlay program. Eighty-five percent of this program is Uncle Sam writing checks, not reducing liability, but writing checks. And it is the most fraudulent program we have in Government today. GAO said 30 to 40 percent of it was in fraud and in error.

It needs to be reformed. That is what we do. This program should be reformed. These proposals that we have made, I think, are the right things to do for American families.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GRAHAM MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GORTON). The pending business is the motion of Senator GRAHAM to commit the bill with instructions. There are 2 minutes of debate equally divided.

The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, this reconciliation proposal is filled with risk—risk of the unknown, risks that have consequences that are beyond our ability to forecast. There is no area in this entire legislation that has a greater risk to the people of this country than the proposals in Medicaid.

We are proposing to cut Medicaid by $187 billion—I repeat, a program which, last year, had a total Federal expenditure of $89 billion, we are going to cut, over 7 years, by $187 billion. It is at risk because we are proposing, for those funds that are left, to place them in an inflexible block grant, without Federal participation, in terms of dealing with unexpected circumstances, and we are freezing in many of the inequities that have made this program inappropriate in the past.

Mr. President, we are putting at risk poor children, our elderly and, particularly, the States of America, as they are all being removed from the safety net that Medicaid has provided.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the biggest risk is that we not balance our budget, and that we continue to spend your children's and grandchildren's money to pay for programs we cannot afford.

Obviously, this program is growing so fast, it is unsustainable. Anyone who thinks it is being cut is not hearing the facts. We are going to increase this program to more than $94 billion next year, $124 billion in 2002. And over the entire period of time, this program will increase at a rather healthy rate, while most programs in the National Government are either frozen or reduced.

It is time that we reform this system so we can deliver on what we promise. But we also have to deliver on a promise to get interest rates down, to have growth and jobs for our children. We cannot have the status quo and do that also.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

The Senate will be in order.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Until conversations cease, we will just have to hold up.

The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I thank the Chair. This is an easy choice. My amendment strikes all provisions of the bill that increase the cost for students and families, and preserves choice and competition in the student loan program at the local level.

Senator KASSEBAUM's amendment rightfully pulls back the unfair and extreme provisions that increase the costs for students. It wrongfully prevents schools from choosing the loan program that best serves their students at the local level, and wrongfully provides a Government-mandated monopoly to the powerful special interests in the student loan industry.

I hope my amendment will be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the Senate will vote on an amendment offered by Senators KASSEBAUM, JEFFORDS, and SNOWE that removes all cuts affecting students. The Senate Republicans do this without raising taxes or taxing investment. The Republican plan will result in lower interest rates which will benefit all students and all Americans. That is what our entire deficit reduction package is all about.

I yield any time I have and I move to table.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Could I be advised how long that vote took?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The last rollcall lasted approximately 13 minutes.

Mr. DOLE. Let me remind my colleagues three times 60 is a long time—we were about 3 minutes late on that vote—if we start slipping these votes for everybody who wants to step out for 5 minutes. If we just stay in the Chamber, we can do this in 10 minutes. I say to my colleagues, we are going to start ringing the bell here in 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. It also slows down the Senate when conversations are going on during debate time.

AMENDMENT NO. 2962

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The issue before the Senate is amendment No. 2962 by the Senator from Kansas, [Mrs. KASSEBAUM]. There are 2 minutes equally divided.

Senator KASSEBAUM will be recognized when the Senate is in order.

The Senator from Kansas is recognized.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I yield the time remaining to the Senator from Maine [Ms. SNOWE].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair. I thank Senator KASSEBAUM for yielding.

Mr. President, I want to first recognize several of my colleagues who have been instrumental in helping to craft this amendment and reach a compromise on student loan funding.

First, the chairwoman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KASSEBAUM, who has been a real leader on this issue. She has had to make difficult choices and tough decisions throughout this process—especially meeting instructions of $10.8 billion in savings for her committee, so I thank her for her work and for offering this amendment.

Second, the majority leader and the chair of the Budget Committee, Senator DOLE and Senator DOMENICI—for meeting our concerns and being responsive to our requests all along. Their support was obviously instrumental in crafting this amendment.

Finally, one of the main cosponsor of this amendment, Senator JEFFORDS of Vermont, for his concern, his support, and his compassion for the needs of America's students.

Mr. President, let there be no doubt about it, we are setting a course for America for the next 7 years and beyond as we debate the measure before us today. That is a heavy responsibility.

But the image of a better America, a stronger America, and a more fiscally secure America is incomplete for the next generations without one critical component: that is, a commitment to education funding and to students.

I believe one of our duties in this process is to keep the American Dream alive for our generation as well as the next generation of students—because we all know that educating today's students is also about preparing tomorrow's workers.

While I firmly believed that balancing the budget is the greatest legacy we can bequeath to our children and grandchildren. I do not believe it requires the sacrifice of educational opportunities to the children and students today.

Let us be clear about this: our two objectives—balancing the budget and providing quality educational opportunities—are not mutually exclusive entities.

I believe we can identify and set budget priorities within the framework of a balanced budget. I believe it is possible to be fiscally responsible and also be visionary about our education needs into the next century for the next generation.

That is basically what this amendment accomplishes. It is prudent. It is responsible. It's fair. And it maintains our commitment to excellence in education.

The amendment we are offering today would restore $5.9 billion in student loan funding that is sorely needed by America's youth to continue their education.

Basically, we are removing the most onerous and punitive provisions on students that are currently contained in this package.

Those provisions we are targeting for removal include the following: the imposition of a 0.85 percent fee on the student loan volume of institutions of higher learning; the provision increasing the interest rate on parent PLUS loans from T-bill plus 3.1 percent, to T-bill 4.0 percent; and—most importantly—the provision charging interest on student loans during the so-called 6-month grace period.

I believe we must support this amendment because student loans level the education playing field for so many in this country. In the world of education, student loans are the great "enabler". They afford everyone the equal opportunity to profit from a college education.

I should know. I owe my education and much of my career in public service to the student loan program, which sustained me at the University of Maine.

Now, it is important to add that the Senate has already gone on record and has made a strong statement in support of increased student loan funding.

Back in May, when the Budget Committee reported out a resolution that included a cut of more than $13 billion in student loan funding over 7 years—and when the House reported out a version that included a cut of over $18 billion, I joined several of my colleagues in taking action—because student loan funding programs would clearly result in leaving some needy students locked out of our Nation's colleges and universities, and therefore locked out of America's work force and a successful career.

And, with bipartisan support from both sides of the aisle, my colleague from Illinois, Senator SIMON, and I authorized and passed an amendment that restored $9.4 billion for student loans. No other amendment, except one, received as much bipartisan support during the consideration of the Senate budget resolution.

We should reaffirm that same level of commitment again today, and with this amendment, we now have an opportunity to do so.

If we pass this amendment, the Senate's strong support for this level of funding will be a strong instruction to the Senate conferees to maintain this level of funding during the upcoming House-Senate Reconciliation conference.

Now, I know that many of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle would have wanted more, especially when it come to direct lending. Obviously, there is a difference of opinion on direct lending.

While the amendment we are offering restores critical funding for loans, it maintains the bills current cap on direct lending at 20 percent. I could support raising this cap to 30 percent, which would cover the 1,300 education institutions currently involved in the direct lending program.

However, the sole purpose of this amendment is to restore funding for student loan programs. other opportunities may arise on the floor today or tomorrow to increase the cap on direct lending.

I have worked with many of my colleagues across the aisle, and I know that—in the final analysis—we share the same goals on funding for student education. That is the most important—the most critical-issue here.

Why is this amendment important to our students and to our future as a nation? What is the value of student loans?

it is unmistakable. Student loans have a tremendous impact on our nation's economy . . . on personal incomes . . . on careers . . . and especially on providing education to needy citizens.

Student loans have given millions of young Americans a fighting chance at reaching their own American Dream: in 1993, it gave 5.6 million Americans that chance, and that was almost double the number of loans made 10 years earlier, when it was 3 million, in fact, statistics show that almost half of all college students receive some kind of financial aid—many through student loans.

They have become especially important considering that the cost of college education and post-secondary education has become a very, very expensive proposition for students, as well as their families.

For example, a College Board survey says that 1995-1996 is the third straight year that tuition costs have risen by 6 percent. Since this rise outpaces income growth in America, there's heavy borrowing for a college education—up an average of 17 percent yearly since 1990.

Each year, college costs rise 6.6 percent for private college while we have recorded a rise in disposable personal income of only 4.4 percent. That 2 percent disparity is what is making student loans a pipe dream for our college-bound students.

In fact, since 1988, college costs have risen by 54 percent—well ahead of a 16 percent increase in the cost of living. And, more tellingly, student borrowing has increased by 219 percent since that time.

Without student aid, increasing costs make higher education out of reach for millions of Americans.

We should not have to bankrupt the families of students in order to allow them to send their children to receive a solid college education.

You see, when we allow students to get the loans they need to complete their college education, we are making a sizable, long-term investment in not only personal incomes, but our economy as well.

Men and women who continue their education beyond high school, as we have seen in study after study, have consistently earned more money on average each year than those who do not.

In 1990, for example, the average income for high school graduates was almost $18,000. For those who had 1 to 3 years of a college education, earned on the average $24,000. Those who graduated from college and received a college diploma received on average salary of $31,000.

According to the U.S. Department of Commerce, a person with a bachelor's degree will average 50 to 55 percent more in lifetime earnings than a person with a high school diploma.

The entire country benefits, as well from student loans. For every $1 we invest in education we get enormous returns as a result. Back in 1990, another study was conducted that analyzed the school assistance that was provided to high school students back in 1972.

For every $1 that the Federal Government invested in the student loan programs at that time, the Government received $4.3 in return in tax revenues.

According to a study by the Brookings Institute, over the last 60 years, education and advancements in knowledge have accounted for 37 percent of America's economic growth.

At a time in which education is becoming paramount in this global arena, where it is going to make the difference for an individual and the kind of living that can be enjoying for themselves and their families, education puts them on the cutting edge.

Most of all, it puts America on the threshold of competition for the future.

If we deny individuals the opportunity to receive an education because they lack the financial assistance or the access to financial assistance. clearly. we—as a nation. a superpower. and the world's greatest democracy—are going to suffer.

Today, let's make sure that we retain policies that will make higher education accessible to millions of low—and middle-income families.

Today, let us make a significant contribution to students pursuing a higher education. Thank you. Mr. President.

Mr. President and Members of the Senate. I am very pleased to have joined Senator KASSEBAUM and Senator JEFFORDS offering this amendment that essentially restores $5.9 billion to the student loan program. This essentially reaffirms the position that has been taken by 67 Members of this body when we had a vote on this issue last spring to the budget resolution.

This amendment removes the provision that increases the origination fee on student loans. It removes the provision that allows interest rates to accrue during the so-called 6-month grace period, and it also eliminates the provision that allowed interest rates to increase on the PLUS loans from 3.1 percent to 4 percent.

I think we all acknowledge that college costs have increased in this country. In fact. since 1988. they have increased more than 54 percent—16 percent beyond the growth of income for most families in America. That has resulted in increased borrowing of 219 percent for individuals and families all across this Nation so that their family and their children can pursue higher education.

I think it essential for this country to retain the policies that ensure access for low- and middle-income families through these policies.

I also ask unanimous consent to include as cosponsors of this amendment Senators ROTH, DOMENICI, PRESSLER, STEVENS, and SPECTER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Ms. SNOWE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Maine has expired.

Mr. FRIST. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Kassebaum amendment which strikes from the budget reconciliation bill the provisions relating to a .85 percent school fee, the elimination of the grace period interest subsidy, and the PLUS loan interest rate increase.

Mr. President, I am committed to balancing the budget—this is probably the single most important thing we can do for our children and our country. Today's students will save money if we succeed in balancing the budget. According to Federal Reserve Chairman Alan Greenspan, a balanced budget will lower interest rates by 1-2 percent for everyone.

I am pleased that the leadership has found offsets which will make the Kassebaum amendment revenue neutral. It will allow us to balance the budget without imposing additional costs on students, their parents or schools.

This bill also benefits students by allowing those who have paid interest on education loans a credit against income tax liability equal to 20 percent of such interest up to $500.

As the father of three young children, I believe that education is one of the most important issues facing our nation today. We must continue to offer students across the country the opportunity to excel and obtain their goals. Many students depend on the federal student loan programs as their only chance to go to college. This amendment will allow us to preserve those programs without imposing additional costs on students.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished Senator from Illinois, Senator SIMON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I shall vote for the Kassebaum amendment, but I have to say I am doing it with real mixed feelings because it fails to address something that every higher education association favors, and that is direct lending. The colleges and universities in your States want direct lending. The bankers in your States and the guarantee agencies do not want it because they have a cushy deal going right now.

The Kassebaum amendment is an improvement over the resolution as it is right now, so I will vote yes for it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The Senator from New Mexico.

BUMPERS MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The order of business is the Bumpers motion to commit to the Committee on Finance with instructions.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, in 1981. this body. all but 11 Senators, voted for a massive tax cut on the argument that it would help balance the budget. Eight years and $2 trillion later. we all knew we had made a massive mistake. We are about to repeat it, though not quite the magnitude of that.

This amendment simply says what my good friend from New Mexico, the chairman of the Budget Committee. said on May 30 of this year, that there is one thing our side has agreed on: There will be no tax cut until we balance the budget.

Senator DOMENICI was right on May 30. and to vote a different way now is wrong.

The New York Times this very morning shows that a vast majority of the American people, even the wealthy who benefit most from this, are all opposed to a tax cut until we balance the budget. It is fiscal responsibility, and that is the reason we call this the fiscal responsibility amendment.

I yield the floor. Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, this amendment, I think, points up the difference between the two parties. We have a balanced budget. It has been certified by the Congressional Budget Office. Once we adopt this reconciliation instruction, we will have a balanced budget. Then it is time to give the taxpayers of America some relief.

We get a $170 billion economic dividend for getting a balanced budget. What should we do with that money? Should we spend it, or should we give it back to Americans. especially families who are having difficulty raising their children because we whittled down their deduction such that they are kind of on their own?

I believe it is right when you have made savings and have a balanced budget, according to the Congressional Budget Office, that you ought to give money back to the people and not let the dividends sit around so we can spend it. The people want to spend their own money. It happens to be theirs, not ours.

Mr. President, I move to table the Bumpers motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BAUCUS MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, according to the pending business, the next item of business is the rural restoration motion.

I yield to the Senator from Montana for 1 minute.

Mr. BAUCUS. Mr. President, the budget bill before us is a raid on rural America. It cuts the farm program and begins to eviscerate, obliterate the farm program by cutting $13.4 billion over 7 years, 25 percent cut. The budget bill cuts health care, disproportionately affecting rural America because our hospitals have so many seniors. Medicaid is cut, hurting rural America. There is already a tendency for people to leave the farm and go to the city to seek some job to survive. We here should be sensitive to rural America, not insensitive, by raiding rural America. This bill before us raids rural America, accelerates the transfer of people from rural America to the city, which is something we should not do.

So my amendment simply says to the Finance Committee, go back and restore some of these provisions that affect rural America, but still balance the budget.

I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, under the proposed reforms in this bill, the Federal Government will be spending and continue to spend $64.8 billion in outlays over the next 7 years for commodity-related programs.

Farmers will benefit the most of all groups of Americans if interest rates come down because they rely most on borrowed money, as compared with any other group of business men or women in the country.

Farmers and rural America will also benefit from the capital gains reduction in this bill.

In addition, this amendment instructs the Finance Committee to make changes in programs that are not even within their jurisdiction.

Mr. President, since that makes it not germane, I raise a point of order that this motion violates the Budget Act.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending motion, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a minute? We were looking for what these amendment are. Can we have those? It just says "Finance Committee amendment," and we do not know what it is. We need a little bit of information. That was required of us last night.

I am grateful to the Senator. I thank him.

AMENDMENT NO. 2964

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding the need to raise the Social Security earnings limit)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona (Mr. MCCAIN), for himself, Mr. DOLE, Mr. COATS, and Mr.

NICKLES, proposes an amendment numbered 2964.

At the appropriate place in the Act, add the following:

SEC. . SENSE OF THE SENATE.—The Senate finds that

(a) The Senate has held hearings on the social security earnings limit in 1994 and 1995 and the House has held two hearings on the social security earnings limit in 1995;

(b) The Senate has overwhelmingly passed Sense of the Senate language calling for substantial reform of the social security earnings limit;

(c) The House of Representatives has overwhelmingly passed legislation to raise the exempt amount under the social security earnings limit three times, in 1989, 1992, and 1995;

(d) Such legislation is a key provision of the Contract with America;

(e) The President in his 1992 campaign document "Putting People First" pledged to lift the social security earnings limit;

(f) The social security earnings limit is a depression-era relic that unfairly punishes working seniors; therefore,

(g) It is the intent of the Congress that legislation will be passed before the end of 1995 to raise the social security earnings limit for working seniors aged 65 through 69 in a manner which will ensure the financial integrity of the social security trust funds and will be consistent with the goal of achieving a balanced budget in 7 years.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment signals the Senate's intent to move forward expeditiously on reforming the earnings test. The majority leader has let it be known that he will move this matter soon, as early as next week depending on the action of the House of Representatives. I appreciate the leadership of the majority leader, and I also want to thank former Finance Committee chairman, Senator Packwood, and Senator MOYNIHAN for their help and for their support on this matter.

Additionally, I want to note that the House of Representatives today passed a similar amendment by the overwhelming vote of 414 to 5.

Mr. President, the Social Security earnings test was created during the Depression era when senior citizens were being discouraged from working. This may have been appropriate then when 50 percent of Americans were out of work. But it is certainly not appropriate today. It is not appropriate today when seniors are struggling to get ahead and survive on limited incomes. Many of these seniors are working to survive and make it on a day-to-day basis.

Mr. President, most Americans are amazed to find that older Americans are actually penalized by the Social Security earnings test for their productivity. For every $3 earned by a retiree over the $11,160 limit, they lose $1 in Social Security benefits. Due to this cap on earnings, our senior citizens, many of whom are existing on low incomes, are effectively burdened with a 33-percent tax on their earned income.

I want to point out this only applies to people who have to go to work. If someone is very rich and has a trust fund, pension, stocks, all of the gain that is accrued from that is not taxable. It only applies to low-income and middle-income Americans who in our society today have to go to work tragically for a broad variety of reasons.

Mr. President, there has been a lot of partisanship back and forth today, some regrettably and some of it is a natural happenstance when a revolution is taking place because that is basically what this is all about.

Let me point out that I heard a lot of pleas and cries in behalf of seniors on the part of friends on the other side of the aisle. In 1987, I came to the floor of this body and sought repeal of the Social Security earnings test. There was a hearing in the Finance Committee chaired by former chairman and former Secretary of Treasury Bentsen.

In 1988, I brought this amendment to the floor, and in 1989 I brought it to the floor, and in 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, and 1994. And each time on the other side of the aisle it was turned down.

I am happy to say that now this side is in the majority. In both bodies we will repeal the onerous and outrageous earnings test which on the other side they failed to do.

Mr. President, if I sound a little excited about that, it is because we have had a lot of rhetoric today about how cruel Members on this side of the aisle are to senior citizens.

The best way, the most effective way that we can help senior citizens today is for those who seek to go to work and have to work for a broad variety of reasons to be allowed to keep their earnings. And, by the way, it would only be raised up to $30,000.

Mr. President, there is a couple who are friends of mine who live near me in northern Arizona. They are low-income Americans. They have a son who had prostate cancer. The son has a daughter that he has to take care of in a home. My friend's wife had to go back to work in order to support her son and her granddaughter. She went to work in a hospital where she has been working. She dramatically increased her hours because she is now helping her son who had prostate cancer and was out of work. And she gets what? She found out 2 weeks ago that she owes the Federal Government $1,200 because she exceeded the $11,000 limit.

So her ability to care for herself, her husband, her son and her granddaughter is dramatically penalized because this earnings test puts her in the highest tax bracket of anyone in America, amongst the richest.

Mr. President, as I said before, there is also a myth that repeal of the earnings test would only benefit the rich. Nothing could be further from the truth. The highest effective marginal rates are imposed on the middle-income elderly who must work to supplement their income.

Mr. President, finally it is simply outrageous to continue two separate policies that both keep people out of the work force who are experienced and who want to work. We have been warned to expect a labor shortage. Why should we discourage our senior citizens from meeting that challenge?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, in order to move things along, we have a great amount of work to do, we yield back our allotted 5 minutes.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that editorial endorsements from several newspapers, and also from various organizations, ranging from the Seniors Coalition to the National Council of Senior Citizens, and others, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EDITORIAL ENDORSEMENTS

Chicago Tribune: The skill and expertise of the elderly could be used to train future workers, while bringing in more tax dollars and helping America stay competitive in the 21st century.

Los Angeles Times: As the senior population expands and the younger population shrinks in the decades ahead, there will be an increasing need to encourage older workers to stay on the job to maintain the nation's productivity.

The Baltimore Sun: The Social Security landscape is littered with a great irony: While the program is built on the strength of the work ethic, its earnings test actually provides a disincentive to work . . . One consequence of this skewed policy is the emergence of a gray, underground economy—a cadre of senior citizens forced to work for extremely low wages or with no benefits in exchange for being paid under the table.

Dallas Morning News: Both individual citizens and society as a whole would benefit from a repeal of the law that limits what Social Security recipients may earn before their benefits are reduced.

The San Diego Tribune: The benefit-reaction law made some economic sense when Social Security was established in the 1930s and the government wanted to encourage the elderly to leave the labor force and open up jobs for younger workers. But with declining birth rates and the nation's need for more, not fewer, experienced workers, the measure is bad for the nation as well as its older workers.

Wall Street Journal: The punitive taxation of the earnings limit sends the message to seniors that their country doesn't want them to work, or that they are fools if they do.

The New York Times: . . . it is not wrong to encourage willing older adults to remain in the work force.

The Orange County Register: Indeed, repealing the tax might actually increase revenues. More people would be working, paying more taxes of all kinds, including the Social Security tax. If our government bureaucrats want us to keep paying their salaries, the least they can do is make it possible to work in the first place.

Houston Post: Equity and common sense demand that this disincentive to work be scrapped.

The Cincinnati Enquirer: No American should be discouraged from working, as long as he wants to and is physically able to do so.

The Indianapolis Star: On the face of it, the game appears rigged in favor of those who stop working at 65 and against those who keep working, in favor of well-to-do retirees and against middle- and low-income retirees who need a part-time job to help with expenses.

Forbes: Moreover, people are living longer; the economy is hurt when artificial barriers block the full use of our most productive asset, people.

Detroit News: Work is important to many of the elderly, who are living longer. They shouldn't be faced with a confiscatory tax for remaining productive.

WHY PUSH THEM OUT OF WORK?

CONGRESS SHOULD ELIMINATE OUTMODED SOCIAL SECURITY EARNINGS TEST

There are more than 40 million Americans age 60 or older, many of whom are eager to work beyond normal retirement age but can't afford to, thanks to an outmoded earnings test applied to Social Security recipients. The Senate, in a provision attached to the extension of the Older Americans Act, has voted to eliminate this punitive restriction. The measure now goes to a congressional conference committee, where House conferees will have a chance to accept the Senate's provision. They should do so, and the House should adopt it. Millions of workers would be the better for it, and so would government and society.

Current law says that people between the ages of 65 and 70 who draw Social Security and who earn more than $9,720 a year must lost $1 in Social Security benefits for every $3 they earn over that limit. This rule effectively applies to those workers a 33% marginal tax rate—higher than anyone else must pay—but there is more. Sen. John McCain (R-Ariz.) says that when federal, state and other Social Security taxes are factored in, the tax bite approaches nearly 70%. If that isn't age discrimination, McCain suggests, nothing is.

There is no earnings ceiling for Social Security recipients age 70 or older. It's nonsensical to have one for those younger. Maintaining the arbitrary ceiling and taxing away 33 cents out of every dollar earned from those who exceed it drives millions of productive workers into forced retirement. The nation's economy is not so robust that it can afford to lose willing, able and experienced employees. Federal and state treasuries are not so flush they can pass up the revenues that could be had from taxes on the higher earnings of older workers.

Why chase people who want to work out of the labor force? Why make this pool of talent lie stagnant? The earnings ceiling is an echo of an earlier time when it was argued that older workers had to be pushed into retirement to make jobs available for new entrants into the work force. Demographics and the needs of the economy have changed. Millions of those older workers want to go on working without being punished if they earn too much. The time has come to let them do so.

[From the Arizona Republic, Nov. 17, 1991]

AGE DISCRIMINATION: LIFT EARNINGS CAP

Congress dotes on its anti-discrimination record. How then to explain why its continuing prejudice is targeted at a particular minority?

The earnings cap on Social Security benefits is a form of discrimination. "The earnings test translates into an effective tax burden of 33 percent," Sen. John McCain told a Senate committee. "Combined with federal, state and other Social Security taxes, it can amount to a stunning tax bite of nearly 70 percent."

The cap on earnings—set at $9,720 for retirees age 65 to 70—is "age discrimination of the worst kind," the senator said, and that "is plainly wrong." For every $3 earned above the cap, seniors lose $1 in benefits.

As Mr. McCain points out, it is foolish to maintain a policy that keeps people with experience and a willingness to apply their skills out of the work force, especially when the country faces economic stagnation and declining international competitiveness.

Punishing people for working is wrong in an even more fundamental way. It violates an American principle known as the work ethic. Surely it is poor social policy to maintain disincentives to productive labor. Better to let seniors who have something to contribute slip back into harness. Besides, many of them need the extra income.

The Bush administration argues that eliminating the earnings test would cost $3.9 billion in fiscal 1992. Sen. McCain disagrees. He argues that lifting the cap would save money, both through the collection of additional taxes on the earnings of seniors and administrative savings.

A Senate-passed measure to lift the cap is now in a conference committee, where it must be reconciled with a House-approved bill that would not eliminate the earnings penalty. If the House cares anything at all about fairness, it will end the discrimination now in place and free older Americans to work.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Jan. 5, 1991]

END SOCIAL SECURITY EARNING CURBS

(By U.S. Rep. J. Dennis Hastert)

When a country doesn't support its stated goals by adopting policies to achieve those goals, its aims become unattainable. Such is the case with our goal of restoring U.S. competitiveness in the global market. We say we want to regain our competitive edge, yet we follow obsolete policies that preclude us from fielding the most productive work force possible.

The most pernicious example of this practice is the continued application of the Social Security Earnings Test, a Depression-era relic that penalizes senior citizens who work after they retire. By forcing seniors to forfeit one-third of their Social Security benefits after they earn more than a ridiculously low amount, the Earnings Test tells the elderly we no longer value their expertise and experience.

Seniors between 65 and 70 who earn more than $9,360 are slapped with a 33 percent penalty. In short, the government siphons $1 in penalties for every $3 a productive senior earns over the limit. When coupled with federal taxes, seniors who earn a penalty $10,000 a year are faced with a 56 percent marginal income tax rate—twice the rate of millionaires.

The Social Security Earnings Test is age discrimination, pure and simple. Not only does it discriminate against one age group, it also afflicts the seniors who need extra income the most. Seniors can receive stock dividends and interest payments without losing Social Security benefits, but those who work at low-paying jobs to make ends meet are punished for attempting to remain financially independent.

At a time in our nation's history when the operative buzz word is "competitiveness," policymakers are hypocrites when they preach the gospel of working harder while retaining outdated policies that strip our labor force of productive and experienced workers. Just as business leaders must modernize their factories, congressional leaders must update public policy.

The Social Security Earnings Test was instituted in the 1930s to discourage seniors from working and make room for younger Americans to enter the work force. Whether this was a good idea at the time is hardly relevant; as the U.S. population ages, seniors are becoming an increasingly important segment of the labor force. The government should support them, rather than financially penalize them, for remaining active and productive.

By the end of this decade, there will be 1.5 million fewer members of the work force aged 16 to 24. Coupled with this trend is the fact that there is a sharply increasing number of older persons relative to the working population. To respond to these challenges, the United States needs to attract more people to participate in the labor force.

I have introduced legislation that would help our businesses adapt to the demands of the international marketplace by making our work force more productive. My bill, H.R. , the Older Americans Freedom to Work Act, has a majority of House members as co-sponsors, as well as considerable support in the Senate (Sen. Rudy Boschwitz, R-Minn., introduced the Senate version). But many in the House leadership remain opposed to it. The Ways and Means Committee chairman, Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill.), and Social Security subcommittee chairman, Rep. Andrew Jacobs (D-Ind.), are laboring under the incorrect assumption that repeal of the Earnings Test will lead to a shortfall in government revenue, when exactly the opposite is true.

If the Earnings Test is repealed, more seniors—up to 700,000, according to the National Center for Policy Analysis, an economic research group—would rejoin the work force, expanding the tax base and increasing the amount of tax revenue the government receives from these returning workers and taxpayers. As a result, the NCPA reported, the annual output of goods would increase by at least $15.4 billion.

The NCPA, in concert with the Institute for Policy Innovation, another research group, revealed these findings in a recently published report, "Paying People Not to Work: The Economic Cost of the Social Security Earnings Limit."

Repealing the Earnings Test would also be a federal revenue gainer, the groups reported. "Government revenue would increase by $4.9 billion, more than offsetting the additional Social Security benefits that would be paid," the report stated.

The few remaining naysayers who continue to oppose repeal of the Earnings Test base their opposition on the belief that Social Security is an insurance policy. Specifically, Jacobs argues that benefits should be allocated only to those who are "retired"—and if someone is still working, and hence not "retired," he or she should not receive full benefits.

This reasoning ignores the difficulty seniors encounter in attempting to survive solely on Social Security or working at a job; seniors frequently need both to make ends meet. Because economic realities necessitate more money than Social Security or, say, a job at McDonald's provides, the Earnings Test must be repealed. Jacobs is simply out of step with the realities of the cost of living in the 1990's.

It is disturbing that two powerful committee chairmen are in a position to block landmark legislation that has the official support of a majority in the House.

It would be one thing to have the Older Americans Freedom to Work Act deliberated on the House floor and tabled. At least then the merits—or what some believe to be the lack thereof—would have been put in the open and subject to public inspection.

But a powerful minority of House leaders are doing everything in their power to make sure this bill is never debated on the House floor. Because of their refusal to allow deliberation on the proposed repeal of the Earnings Test, one can only conclude that they are fearful open discussion would lead to an even greater groundswell of public support and a demand that Congress move swiftly to approve the bill.

As our country takes steps to make itself more economically competitive for the 21st Century, it is clear that we will have to use every available resource, especially in the U.S. work force. Remaining competitive in the next century requires adopting policies that foster economic vibrancy and doing away with outdated policies that inhibit it. Repealing the Social Security Earnings Test will both encourage a large portion of the population to remain productive and help bolster the economy. The realities of our economic situation demand that we do so.

AIR FORCE SERGEANTS ASSOCIATION, INTERNATIONAL HEADQUARTERS,
Temple Hills, MD, January 8, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The Air Force Sergeants Association strongly supports your amendment to S. 243 to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test. We have written to the House and Senate conferees expressing this support and are ready to assist in any way possible.

Sincerely,

JAMES D. STATON,
Executive Director.

THE SENIORS COALITION,
Washington, DC, January 26, 1995.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: I wanted to take just a moment to thank you for introducing the Senate measure to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test.

The Seniors Coalition has made this issue the cornerstone of our legislative agenda over the past three years. We have worked closely with Rep. Dennis Hastert in the House of Representatives and will continue to work with the House Republican Conference now that the Contract With America addresses the earnings limit.

I am enclosing for your information our Issue Paper on the earnings limit, as well as my recent testimony to the Ways and Means Social Security Subcommittee. The Seniors Coalition is ready to assist you in any way possible to ensure the success of your measure. This issue is very important to our two million members and they love being asked to get involved with legislative issues.

WALT DISNEY WORLD CO.,
June 9, 1994.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Senate Russell Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN. We fully support your proposal to eliminate the Social Security Earning Limit for senior citizens age 65 to 69. Furthermore, we favor additional relief for senior citizens in the age group 62 to 64 who are faced with an even more stringent limit on their earnings.

In today's society, Social Security is a supplement to a senior's income which is traditionally pension and investments. Unfortunately, some must continue to work to maintain a quality of life that is becoming evermore expensive.

Our opinion is formulated by the following compelling issues:

Our nation is faced with a shrinking labor supply for one of the fastest growing sectors of the economy—the service sector. Many seniors are fully capable of and interested in filing these openings.

As stated in your fact sheet, we should not have a system that has built-in disincentives that inhibit seniors from working.

The current "cap" of $8.040 does not permit a senior in the 62-64 age group to work in a minimum wage ($4.25/hour) job for an entire year without incurring a penalty on the last 10% of their income.

Seniors represent a growing part of our population who possess skill and attributes that employers are seeking. Seniors offer experience and an excellent work ethic to an employer.

Also, in light of the health care reform issue that is on everyone's mind, by raising the earnings "cap," this will allow seniors to avoid the Catch-22 of not being able to work enough hours to qualify for health care at most corporations.

In conclusion, we believe that seniors should always be able to work in a minimum wage paying job full time (40 hours per week) without being penalized. To ensure that this is not a future problem, we recommend that the Social Security Earnings Limit be indexed at 25% above the annual full time income based on prevailing federally mandated minimum wage. Currently, that would increase the cap to $11,050. Internally, this would allow us to hire a senior, have them work 30 hours per week, and penetrate the rate range to the second step before reaching this new ceiling.

Thank you for the opportunity to express our views on this important issue.

Sincerely,

DIANNA MORGAN.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF SENIOR CITIZENS,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: We urge your support of an early and positive vote for S. 3008, the Older Americans Act (OAA) reauthorization. We believe that further delay in reauthorizing the Act is a disservice to the millions of seniors and their families who depend on vital OAA programs.

The National Council of Senior Citizens, comprised of five million seniors active in five thousand clubs and Councils, has made passage of the OAA reauthorization one of our highest priorities for this Session. The Council has historically supported a sound Social Security retirement test amendment has caused a yearlong delay in final passage of the OAA. The two issues should be separated now and support of S. 3008 is the best way of resolving this matter.

Inaction on S. 3008 will be the cause of further loss of resources and a weakening of the national commitment to meet the needs of older persons at risk. We trust that we can count on your vigorous support of S. 3008.

Sincerely,

LAWRENCE T. SMEDLEY,
Executive Director.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH FEDERATIONS,
Washington, DC, July 23, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Council of Jewish Federations, I am writing to urge the immediate passage of the reauthorization of the Older Americans Act. S3008. Millions of older citizens depend on the programs funded in this Act for community and social services, nutrition programs, senior centers, legal assistance, homebound care and assistance, research and demonstration, and employment opportunities.

As a network of over 200 Jewish Federations and their affiliated social service agencies, we are charged with the responsibility for providing thousands of elderly people with a life of quality. The Older Americans Act, with its coordination between local, state, and federal agencies, enables us to do this.

The Older Americans Act, originally enacted in 1965, has been a framework for providing vital nutritional and social services to the elderly community for over 25 years. At a time when seniors are growing as a population, the Older Americans Act should not be pulled from them. By passing the Older Americans Act the Senate will move one step further along in the process necessary to ensure that the elderly may continue to receive the quality care they need.

We urge you to pass this critical legislation immediately.

Sincerely,

MARK E. TALISMAN,
Director.

OLDER WOMEN'S LEAGUE,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: On behalf of the Older Women's League, I am writing to urge you to pass the Older Americans Act, S.3008, before Congress adjourns.

I cannot stress strongly enough how important it is to pass the Older Americans Act. The reauthorization of this legislation and its programs is critical to providing continuing supportive services for millions of older Americans, most of whom are low-income and women. Without final passage, important new programs cannot be initiated and the White House Conference on Aging cannot take place. Amendments of particular importance to OWL are those requiring data collection on long-term care workers, and supportive services for family caregivers.

From its inception, the Older Women's League has sought changes in Social Security that would make the system more equitable for women. While OWL has endorsed the Social Security provisions attached to the OAA conference bill passed by the House of Representatives, we believe that these and other changes to Social Security should be dealt with in a more appropriate legislative measure. We hope to continue working with Congress next year to make Social Security equitable for beneficiaries, particularly women.

Passage of the Older Americans Act is long overdue. The Act is the cornerstone of services for this country's most vulnerable older population. Congress must reaffirm its commitment to assure the quality of life sought for older Americans as declared in Title I of the Act.

Sincerely,

LOU GLASSE,
President.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON THE AGING, INC.,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR: The National Council on the Aging, Inc. urges you to support for immediate Senate action to reauthorize the Older Americans Act, S. 3008.

Today, we are joining forces with many other national organizations to seek your help in passing a clean Older Americas Act.

For the past two decades, the OAA has provided vital services including congregate and home-delivered meals, transportation, information and referral, advocacy assistance, visiting and telephone reassurance, homemaker services, legal and employment services.

Failure to take action on the reauthorization means that none of the many significant improvements in OAA services crafted after long Congressional scrutiny will be initiated. Inaction has already had an effect on the current appropriation process in the House.

The delay in passing the OAA jeopardizes those services that allow millions of older Americans to maintain their independence and dignity. This year's amendments, many of which enhance services under the Act, cannot be implemented until it passes. Failure to pass the reauthorization will create a major rift in the covenant between Congress and the older population of our country.

I cannot stress strongly enough the importance of passage of S. 3008, the Older Americans Act at this time.

Sincerely,

DR. DANIEL THURSZ,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF AREA AGENCIES ON AGING,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: On behalf of the members of the National Association of Area Agencies on Aging, I am writing to urge you to take immediate action to pass the Older Americans Act reauthorization legislation, S. 3008. Thousands of older Americans in Arizona and millions of elders across our nation depend on the services provided under the Act—information and referral, supportive services, nutrition programs, transportation, in-home care and assistance, and the long-term care ombudsman program.

Senate inaction on S. 3008 is placing low-income, minority, and frail elders in jeopardy. Because of resulting funding problems, older persons are being denied services, there are increases in service waiting lists, and higher levels of unmet need.

As you are probably aware, passage of the Older Americans Act has been stalled by provisions to amend the exemption level of the Social Security earnings test. For the past nine months Congress has been unable to reach an agreement on the earnings test issue. We strongly believe it is time Congress moved beyond this impasse by decoupling the earnings test from the Older Americans Act—by passing S. 3008. Further delay will do a disservice to older persons who depend on Older Americans Act services. We, therefore, urge you to take the necessary steps to obtain immediate passage of this crucial legislation.

Sincerely,

CHERYLL SCHRAMM,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF RETIRED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES,
Washington, DC, September 9, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The National Association of Retired Federal Employees (NARFE), and its nearly 450,000 members, is greatly concerned that the Older Americans Act has not yet been reauthorized.

Today, we are joining forces with many other national aging organizations to seek your help in passing a clean Older Americans Act, S. 3008. Unless the Act is reauthorized soon, we fear that service programs that benefit low-income, minority and frail elders will be jeopardized.

We hope that you will join with us to urge passage of S. 3008 so that Older Americans Act programs for community and supportive services, nutrition programs, senior centers, legal assistance and elder opportunities serving millions of older Americans will be able to continue uninterrupted.

Sincerely,

HAROLD PRICE,
President.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF STATE UNITS ON AGING.
Washington, DC, August 28, 1992.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: The National Association of State Units on Aging urges your support for immediate Senate action to reauthorize the Older Americans Act, S. 3008. While the Older Americans Act itself has received almost unanimous support on the floor of both Houses, it has been held captive for months by a host of seemingly never ending congressional procedural roadblocks and controversial and non-germane amendments.

Failure by the Senate to act swiftly will result in an unconscionable reduction in funds available across the nation to provide meals, transportation, in-home services, jobs, advocacy for nursing home residents, elder abuse prevention and similar, often life-sustaining, services to millions of low-income and frail older persons.

NASUA's members are the nation's 57 state agencies on aging, designated by Governors and state legislatures to represent and serve older persons in their states. They have tried to explain to older persons that these frustrating delays do not indicate a lack of congressional support for this program which is so important to them. However, their questions have turned to anger, their frustration to disillusionment.

Once again, we urge the Senate's immediate passage of S. 3008. Swift action can still avoid unnecessary and unwarranted reductions in Older Americans Act service funds and rescue literally years of congressional work to strengthen the Act from being lost when this Congress adjourns in a few short weeks.

Thank you for your consideration of our views on this issue of critical importance to millions of older persons.

Sincerely,

DANIEL A. QUIRK,
Executive Director.

NATIONAL COMMITTEE TO PRESERVE SOCIAL SECURITY AND MEDICARE,
Washington, DC, October 25, 1995.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: Last year, Congress authorized a Commission to study the Social Security Notch Inequity as a way to examine the merits of the arguments for and against legislative action.

The National Committee welcomed the opportunity this Commission presented to adjudicate the merits of this long standing issue.

The Congress is to be congratulated for its efforts to bring this Commission to life.

This year, the leaders of both parties in both Chambers have made all of the eight Congressional appointments.

This month as a part of the Labor/HHS Appropriation Conference report, Congress appropriated $1.8 million so that the Commission can carry out its mandate and report back by the end of the year.

As soon as the President appoints his four members and designates a Chairperson, the Commission will proceed.

I hope that you will agree that the Notch Commission, when activated, will study the issue and note findings which will produce a recommendation. Please do your part to move this Commission into action.

Sincerely,

MARTHA A. MCSTEEN,
President.

THE RETIRED ENLISTED ASSOCIATION,
Alexandria, VA, January 14, 1992.

Hon. JOHN MCCAIN,
U.S. Senate, Russell SOB, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR MCCAIN: On behalf of the more than 54,000 members of The Retired Enlisted Association (TREA) it is my pleasure to offer TREA's support to you in your efforts to repeal the Social Security Earnings Test.

We of TREA appreciate your willingness to address what we believe is a penalty imposed upon older Americans having a strong work-ethic.

Should you or a member of your staff have any specific tasking suggestions for this office on this issue, please don't hesitate to contact me.

Very respectfully,

JOHN M. ADAMS,
MCPO, USN (Ret.),
Director of Government Affairs.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand this amendment is stacked now. We do not vote on it now. We go next to another Republican amendment. We had a change in what our next amendment would be. But the Democrats have been advised. This will be the Helms amendment. Senator HELMS is ready on the floor, and they have a copy of it on the other side.

AMENDMENT NO. 2965

(Purpose: To allow senior citizens to continue to choose their doctors)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS) proposes an amendment numbered 2965.

On page 461, line 13, after the period, insert the following:

"(3) POINT-OF-SERVICE COVERAGE.—If a Medicare Choice sponsor offers a Medicare Choice plan that limits benefits to items and services furnished only by providers in a network of providers which have entered into a contract with the sponsor, the sponsor must also offer at the time of enrollment, a Medicare Choice plan that permits payment to be made under the plan for covered items and services when obtained out-of-network by the Individual."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I am sure that I am not alone in my strong feelings that the senior citizens of America must not be deprived of their right to choose their own doctors.

The text of my amendment has been modified to address both my strong desire to preserve the right of the senior citizens and the concerns of a number of Senators relating to options.

The pending amendment stipulates that if a Medicare choice plan offers a closed plan HMO within the Medicare margin, that plan must also offer a point-of-service plan enabling senior citizens to exercise their freedom of choice regarding the selection of physicians.

Three summers ago, I had a little encounter with some remarkable medical doctors, who are also my personal friends, in my hometown of Raleigh. I was at that time, of course, free to choose the team of surgeons who performed my heart surgery.

The point is that all senior citizens enrolled in Medicare should have the same choice that I had. And the pending amendment will enable senior citizens to preserve their right to choose their doctors.

Most Americans, whether their health is insured by private firms or by Medicare, enjoy their freedom to decide which medical professionals will perform their care and treatment. In reforming Medicare, Congress must make sure that senior citizens know their options and can choose their doctors and other medical providers instead of being required to accept somebody else's lineup of physicians and surgeons.

Mr. President, the Senate is considering major reforms to save Medicare and prevent its being pushed over the cliff. Medicare must be reformed before it goes bankrupt. We agree on that. Otherwise, the Medicare trust fund will be flat broke when the 21st century rolls around just a few years hence.

America's senior citizens—and I am one of them—depend on the health care coverage provided by the Medicare system, and those of us in Congress have a duty to make sure that they will not be forced to give up their right to choose their doctors. It is vital to their future security that our senior citizens retain this right. The power to choose will place senior citizens firmly in control of their health care.

Senior citizens may be enticed to join an HMO because they will gain coverage for prescription drugs and eyeglasses and hearing aids—coverages not presently provided by Medicare.

However, without some moderating legislation, senior citizens could very well find themselves locked into coverage that limits them to services provided by HMO-affiliated doctors, other professionals and hospitals. No longer would senior citizens have the freedom to choose their own doctors.

So, Mr. President, these are the reasons why I am introducing this amendment, to make sure that all Medicare-eligible Americans who choose to enroll in an HMO know their options of choosing the closed panel HMO or the point-of-service plan offered by the same insurance company.

Mr. President, consider if you will the predicament of a patient who requires heart surgery, and whose HMO will not approve the cardiologist with whom the senior has built up a long-standing relationship. My amendment will enable women being treated for breast cancer to have more options when choosing a lower cost plan that will allow them to continue to see the specialists familiar with them and their conditions. For this reason, more than a hundred patient advocacy groups have voiced their support for this amendment.

Point-of-service plans provide a safety valve to protect seniors who find themselves in the position of needing to see a doctor of choice. A point of service plan enables patients to see physicians and specialists inside and outside the managed care network. If seniors citizens are satisfied with the care they receive within the network, they will feel no need to choose outside doctors and specialists.

Mr. President, CBO has given me repeated assurances that a built-in point-of-service feature—the technical term for freedom of choice—would not increase the cost of Medicare. In fact, in testimony before the Senate Budget Committee, CBO stated that "the point of service option would permit Medicare enrollees to go to providers outside the HMO's panel when they wanted to, and yet it need not increase the benefit costs to HMOs or to Medicare. . . ."

Moreover, the actuarial firm of Milliman and Robertson concluded that depending on the terms of the plan and a reasonable cost sharing schedule, there should be no increase in cost to the HMO. In fact, there could actually be a savings.

The fastest-growing health insurance product is a managed care plan that includes the point-of-service feature. In fact, in 1993, 61 percent of all HMOs offer a point of service option.

Building a point-of-service option into health plans under Medicare will not interfere with the plan's ability to contain cost, nor will it limit their efforts to encourage providers and patients to use their health care resources wisely. It simply will ensure that health plans put the patient's interest first.

We can save Medicare. We can extend its benefits while lowering the towering costs that beset us today. And my amendment, we can also preserve a basic American freedom to choose one's own doctor.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that at the expiration or yielding back of debate time on each amendment, the amendment be laid aside to consider the next amendment in order, and that when the next order of stacked votes begins, each amendment be voted on in the order in which it was offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and that it be charged to the 5 minutes on our allocated time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, could you hold up on the quorum?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator withhold?

Mr. EXON. Be glad to.

Mr. DOMENICI. Are we charging time because we have not given you this amendment?

Mr. EXON. We are having a great deal of difficulty. Since you have changed the order of offering amendments, our Senator was not alerted, and we are having trouble getting him here.

Mr. DOMENICI. Would you like to have 5 minutes and charge it to no one while the Senator gets down here?

Mr. EXON. I would appreciate that.

Mr. DOMENICI. We are just going to do that.

I ask unanimous consent we go into a quorum call for 5 minutes and that it not be charged to the bill or to either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. EXON. I thank my friend for his courtesy.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I have a very brief, 2-minute colloquy with Senator HELMS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. INHOFE. I say to Senator HELMS, just briefly, there was a little evolutionary process that we went through with this amendment. I think the amendment is very good, and I am in support of the amendment. Initially the Senator had it that under a managed plan, if a person wanted to leave the managed plan in one area of specialty, there was a split between the additional costs, if there were additional costs, of 70-30 percent. My suggestion in talking with the Senator and with his staff was it might be a better idea if we had a managed plan that allowed the market to take care of that differential so that if an individual went into a managed plan and at a later date wanted to go to another specialist, that individual would pay the differential himself so that the patient would have the choice of any practitioner he wanted to use and yet the savings of the managed plan would be effected.

My question would be, does the Senator think that perhaps this might avoid a duplication of all kinds of actuarial calculations, just to have one? And maybe we could talk about this or bring this up during the conference.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. The Senator's suggestion was excellent, and as he knows we undertook to adjust and modify the amendment to conform with the Senator's excellent suggestion.

Now, the HMO may set up a cost sharing plan in the manner that the Senator from Oklahoma suggested. A plan may require that the senior citizen pay up to 100 percent of the difference between what a network doctor would charge and what the HMO would pay for the doctor. And that is, of course, one of the many options.

My amendment is intentionally silent as to how an HMO should set its cost sharing schedule, but as the Senator has suggested, HMO's could set deductibles and other specific cost sharing arrangements.

So I commend the Senator on his suggestion. The modified version of the amendment is at the desk.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator from North Carolina.

I thank the Chair.

I would like to have a chance to look at that. I think we all want to accomplish the same low cost and choice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. INHOFE. I thank the Senator. I thank the Chair.

Mr. HELMS. I give the Senator a copy of the modified amendment which is now pending.

Mr. INHOFE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, Mr. President, could I get back to understanding where we are. We were on a 5-minute kind of recess waiting for the Democrats to have an opportunity and then we got a discussion going, which I think was good, for the record. Now where are we parliamentarywise?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 5 minutes remaining on his time on the amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank my friend and colleague.

I yield back the 5 minutes of time that was allotted to us in the interest of conserving time and moving ahead.

Let me say the next amendment that we have now, which we do not have, is the amendment to be offered by Senator BROWN, as I understand it. We are having a great deal of difficulty with this shifting back and forth, trying to accommodate an awful lot of people. We do not mind accommodating people, but it is very difficult for us to make a determination on these things and get the proper people here the way we are receiving the amendments, or not receiving them, before they are introduced.

Mr. HELMS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. HELMS. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Now, I say to Senator EXON, I am willing to accommodate whichever way he would like. We are not ready with the amendment that we styled for, the Finance Committee amendment. That is being worked on now. I mean, that is just a matter of fact. We cannot bring it until it is done.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOMENICI. Of course.

Mr. FORD. We have a Brown amendment, and Senator BROWN is not even on the list of 17 given to us. And the first four that were given to us——

Mr. DOMENICI. He is No. 17.

Mr. EXON. That is a question mark, yes.

Mr. FORD. BROWN is a question mark?

Mr. DOMENICI. We never thought he was a question mark.

Mr. FORD. That is a question mark on the list the Senator gave to us?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. Now, am I to understand that there will only be 10 out of the 17 that the Senator will give us?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. There are only going to be 10 that we will have 5 minutes on a side. Any that are left over go into the——

Mr. FORD. Third tier.

Mr. DOMENICI. The third tier with no time.

Mr. FORD. The only thing we have on the Brown amendment is a question mark?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. We just got it. We do not know who to go to here or to have debate or if we want to even debate. This is getting completely out of hand, and we are not doing it properly. We are not being fair to either side. I think that we should stop now and go back and get it in order. And we will have ours. You had the first three, and then we get one, and we can tell you who that is and what it is about.

But I think we ought to take a few minutes, get them in order so we will know and we can have a decent 5-minute debate on each amendment on the floor.

Now, I think the Senator from New Mexico agrees with me because he has been a little bit frustrated by not being able to get them in the order in which he told me that we were going to get them.

So, Mr. President, I urge that we just take some time to get the amendments, because we do not know what the Senator from Colorado is going to offer, except the question mark.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, may I suggest in the interest of an orderly process—I already yielded back 10 minutes of our time, which still holds—therefore, I would suggest possibly it might be a good idea to take a 15-minute quorum call without being further charged to each side, and to come up with an orderly process so we can move expeditiously ahead.

Would the Senator from New Mexico respond?

Mr. BROWN. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I am going to yield.

Yes, I say to Senator BROWN, I will be pleased to yield.

Mr. BROWN. I did not mean to interfere. I think the distinguished Senator from Kentucky raises a very valid point. As far as I am concerned, I would be happy to limit my remarks to 1 minute and then to defer for a response time, which would give the distinguished Senator some additional time to review it. I think this is very straightforward.

Mr. FORD. We do not even know what it is yet.

Mr. BROWN. I delivered a copy.

Mr. FORD. We just now got it.

Mr. BROWN. I will try to accommodate any way I can.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, first, let me say we are in very good shape, comparatively speaking. So, I hope nobody is taken in by my exaggerations, or perhaps the exaggerations of the other side, on how muddled we are. We are not muddled at all. We were going to offer a Finance Committee amendment which is a very important amendment. We have been very forthright. It is not ready.

Now, having said that, we do not have your No. 1 amendment from the second tier. We have a statement of it. We have the Biden tax credit. We have not seen it either. And the Breaux child tax credit has been circulating around, so maybe we have seen it.

Now, what we would like to do is to have Senator BROWN go next. And, I say to the Senator, his is an important amendment, so I would ask him not to take less than 5 minutes. The Senator is entitled to explain it.

So we have that. And there are two changes. Let me see if we can help to get something done. I do not like being in this position either. So what we need to do is to get the Brown amendment. Or does the Senator have it now?

Mr. BROWN. We have copies, and both sides have it.

Mr. DOMENICI. We ask the Senator that he give us the remainder of his first three that we do not have.

We would like 15 minutes; do it the Senator's way. And we will try to get our amendments and get them to the other side. We are having some difficulty because our people did not know exactly when they were going to come up. We drew some arbitrary lines on who was in and who was out, which is tough for some of them.

So, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we have a 15-minute quorum call—

Mr. WARNER. Will the Senator withhold?

Instead of the quorum call, could others address generalities in the measure rather than just have a quorum call put in? This Senator would require about 6 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI. Sure. Sure.

Mr. WARNER. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that we have 15 minutes without an amendment, divided equally, for any Senators, half on the other side, half on ours, that might want to speak to the bill, and that it not be charged to anything, because we are getting very short of time and it is sort of combined—our fault for the time. So let us not charge it to anyone.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WARNER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I have been listening with great attention and interest to this very important debate on both sides of the aisle regarding the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995.

I am pleased to support the budget which follows through on our promise to balance the budget by the year 2002, protect Social Security, and save Medicare from threatened bankruptcy.

While there has been much debate focused on the details of this massive package, I would like to address the promise to the American people, present and future, that this bill represents. This is not just a budget for another year. This is not a package of routine legislative changes. This is a historic commitment to America that deficit spending is about to come to an end and has been brought about during this first year of the Republican majority in the U.S. Congress.

The net result of a balanced budget will be lower interest rates for years to come and as many as 6 million new jobs. The reforms in this bill will give the States more control over critical entitlement programs that have become inflated with the Federal bureaucracy mismanagement of many years. These programs range from Aid to Families With Dependent Children to Medicaid. I strongly support these initiatives which will let the States decide how best to solve and serve the problems associated with their own citizens.

What is best for Virginia is not necessarily the same as what is best for another State. And this Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act will move more power and money out of Washington back to State governments and local communities where it properly, in my judgment, belongs.

I have received correspondence from many Virginians who support this bill because it will both balance the budget for the sake of future American families, particularly our children, Mr. President, and will pave the way for needed relief for the heavy tax burden on our present American families.

When this budget reconciliation bill is signed into law, we will not be at the end of the trail, but only at the beginning. We will have identified the path and the course, but each year we will have to make spending decisions that will keep us on the road that is being defined here today and tomorrow.

During my nearly 17 years as a privileged Member of this body, I have seen many instances where unforeseen spending requirements from hurricanes to peacekeeping operations have arisen and been funded by the Congress. These will surely occur from now until the year 2002 when the deficit is projected to disappear.

We are now committed to making our Government live within the funding levels contained in this bill. If emergencies occur, we will have to offset their costs with spending reductions. Those budget decisions will be as difficult in the year 2000 as they are this year. But this package is a commitment by the Republican majority and eventually by the entire Congress that we will stay the course.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX CUTS: A BOOST TO ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I rise in support of the capital gains tax cut provisions in the budget reconciliation bill that lies before us today.

I would like to focus my remarks on the economic effects that these provisions will have on our country.

Mr. President, what often seems to get lost in all of the debate about capital gains is economics.

Opponents of the capital gains tax cut seem content to promote class warfare while ignoring the economic effects of such a change.

It seems to me, however, that instead of worrying about whether the so-called rich will pay less in taxes under this bill, the most important thing to focus on is how to sustain and boost economic growth so we can balance the budget and create the jobs needed by the next generation.

The respected economic forecasting firm of DRI/McGraw Hill has studied our capital gains tax provisions very carefully. Their findings appear on this chart 1 following this statement.

First, we should note that between now and 1999, DRI projects that about 600,000 new jobs will be created as a direct result of the capital gains provisions contained in this bill.

Of paramount concern to all of us is the need to expand the job base so that no matter where one is on the ladder of success, there is opportunity to move up economically.

As this chart 2 shows, most of the new job creation taking place in this country is provided by new companies and those that are in the early phases of their growth cycles.

Look at the figures—while large companies are in the down-sizing mode, small and medium companies are expanding.

The expanding companies are not the long established blue chippers. There is more risk involved investing in these emerging enterprises than in mature companies.

By lowering the effective capital gains tax rates, the risk threshold for all investors will decrease and this will cause more equity funds to become available to companies that are in the growth stage.

To illustrate this dynamic, Mr. President, consider the following facts.

From 1969 to 1971, there were on average 510 new public offerings in this country per year.

From 1972 to 1976, when the effective capital gains rates jumped to just over 49 percent, only 145 new public offerings occurred on average each year.

When the effective capital gains rate fell to 20 percent between 1981 and 1986, the average annual new public offerings figure jumped to 577.

Between 1987 and 1992, when the capital gains tax rate jumped up again to 28 percent, the number of public offerings dropped to only 431.

While some growth in new company formations can be attributed to the fact that our economy was growing during those years, one wonders how much more it might have benefited if we had not increased the capital gains tax rate.

Obviously, there is a relationship between the capital gains tax rate and the rate at which new companies start and grow.

And, because these new and expanding companies are fueling most of our job growth—more than 70 percent of all new jobs are in small business—we can see that lowering the capital gains tax rate will increase the number of jobs in this country.

Mr. President, DRI has made three other projections on chart 1.

Because of the capital gains provisions in this bill, we should experience a 4.1 percent increase in our capital stock, a 5.1 percent increase in fixed investments and a 1.2 percent increase in labor productivity.

What does capital stock refer to? It refers to our investment in plant, equipment, and technology. Even a ditch digger needs a shovel.

While hundreds of millions of laborers around the world work for mere pennies per hour, how is it that most of our American jobs have not already been exported outside of our country? The answer is capital stock.

We have one of the highest ratios in the world of capital stock per labor hour worked.

In other words, for each hour a laborer works, we have more capital invested to support that worker in his or her job than most of our competitors around the world.

As a result, on a per capita basis, American workers are the most productive in the world.

This explains how our country grew from a predominantly agricultural economy to a predominantly manufacturing and services economy without reducing our agricultural output.

It has been estimated that at the turn of the century, about two-thirds of the American work force were in farming.

Today, only about 3 percent of Americans work in farming. Yet, our grocery stores and storage facilities are filled to overflowing even though the number of mouths to feed has gone up and the number of agricultural workers has gone down dramatically.

But for this tremendous infusion of capital stock into the equation, our American farmers would probably be about as productive and well paid as their counterparts in China.

Because of the capital investment supporting our workers, we have made their services more valuable which, in turn, has prompted higher real wage rates here than most other countries in the world.

Mr. President, the critical relationship between capital stock and real wage rates is illustrated by chart 3. Note that as our capital stock grows, real wages increase almost in lockstep. Thus, it is critical that we maintain growth in both capital stock, fixed asset investment, and worker productivity.

And, as the DRI projections show, the capital gains provisions of this bill will do just that.

Please note, Mr. President, the DRI projection in chart 1 that our collective cost of capital will drop by 8 percent as a result of the capital gains tax reductions in our bill.

Many believe that our relatively high cost of capital is a critical area of U.S. weakness when competing in the international marketplace.

Thus, in passing a capital gains tax reduction, we can take a meaningful step today toward narrowing this critical competitive gap and helping all Americans in the process.

It should go without saying that growth in our collective standard of living depends upon growth in our gross domestic product.

Mr. President, a 1.4 percent increase in GDP in the DRI projections contained in chart 1 might not seem like very much, but when applied to a $7 trillion economy, we are talking about an additional $100 billion of growth.

As can be seen from this chart 4, Mr. President, we treat capital gains more punitively than most of our major international competitors.

We can also see why the competitors in the Far East are gaining on us. We need to respond to this challenge in order to enhance our international competitive position.

Mr. President, much has been said about the wisdom of lowering capital gains taxes at a time when we are trying to balance the budget.

In my opinion, tax cuts and balancing the budget are not mutually exclusive, especially in the area of capital gains.

Before the Hatch-Lieberman capital gains proposal underwent minor changes in the Senate Finance Committee, the Joint Committee on Taxation projected that it would result in about $89 billion in lost Federal revenues over 10 years.

I very much doubt that this projection will be accurate, for a couple of reasons.

First, both the CBO and the Joint Committee on Taxation have a poor track record in estimating the revenue effects of capital gains tax rate changes, as can be seen from this chart.

In connection with estimated capital gains realizations for 1991, CBO originally projected realizations of $269 billion while the Joint Committee on Taxation projected realizations of $285 billion.

In reality, there were only about $108 billion worth of realizations for that year. In other words, the CBO was off by 60 percent and the Joint Committee on Taxation was off by 62 percent.

Estimating errors of a similar magnitude were made for 1990. In this case, the Bush Treasury Department projected capital gains revenues of $48 billion, while CBO projected $53 billion for that same year.

In reality, the revenue only amounted to $28 billion. The cumulative gap from 1989 to 1992 between the Bush Treasury's revenue estimates and what actually was realized totaled $85 billion. The CBO was $118 billion off the mark over the same period.

The problem is that the economic models used by CBO, the Joint Committee on Taxation, and the Treasury do not adequately take into account the macroeconomic feedback effects caused by changes in the capital gains tax rates.

This explains the wide divergence between their projections and reality.

It is a fundamental law of economics that people respond to incentives. If we tax a good or service more, people buy or produce less of it. If we tax capital more, we get less.

If we lower the tax on capital, we will create more of it.

For years, the revenue estimating agencies of the Federal Government have failed to adequately account for the feedback effects of taxation.

DRI has included these feedback effects in its estimate.

As the DRI study indicates in chart 1, rather than the loss projected by the Joint Committee on Taxation, we should actually experience at least a $12 billion increase in Federal revenues over the next 10 years.

Personally, I believe this estimate to be on the conservative side. I believe a 50-percent capital gains deduction will unlock the floodgates of capital gains realizations.

There is an estimated $8 trillion in unrealized capital gains in this country. Even if this bill only unlocks a small percentage of this vast mountain of capital, we will have unleashed a tremendous force for growth in our economy.

With the benefit of hindsight, it is easy to see that we made a serious mistake in raising the effective tax rates on capital gains after 1986.

Chart 5 shows the foregone realizations that we missed by the 1986 capital gains tax increase.

The lighter bars indicate actual realizations. Notice, Mr. President, how they drop off and stagnate after 1986 while the Standard and Poors stock index [S & P Index] continued to rise.

The dark bars represent what taxable capital gains realizations would likely have occurred if they had kept pace with the S&P Index, as they did before the capital gains tax increase.

This helps explain why our capital gains tax revenues have been so anemic since 1986.

After jacking up the top effective capital gains tax rate by 40 percent, from 20 to 28 percent, some might have expected a similar 40 percent increase in capital gains tax revenues.

However, we have only managed to generate an average of about 64 percent per year of the capital gains revenue received in 1986; 28 percent is clearly higher than the tax rate that maximizes capital gains revenues to the Treasury.

Mr. President, recent history has made it clear that there is a direct relationship between capital gains tax rates and the amount of revenue from capital gains realizations received by the Treasury.

Experience shows that reducing the capital gains tax rate actually increases government revenues.

Consider the period from 1978 to 1985. On November 1, 1978, the top capital gains rate dropped from an effective 49 percent to 28 percent. It fell again in the middle of 1981 to 20 percent.

Rather than experiencing a similar reduction in capital gains revenue, as some might predict, we saw the sharpest increase in such revenues since World War II.

Annual capital gains tax receipts grew from $9.1 billion in 1978 to $26.5 billion in 1985.

In other words, at the same time we experienced a 59 percent decrease in the top capital gains tax rate, our annual capital gains tax revenues increased by 191 percent.

Mr. President, some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle are, in effect, saying that no tax benefits should go to the so-called wealthy.

This is ludicrous. How do we expect to attain the economic objectives that we all are seeking if the wealthy stay on the sidelines as mere spectators, rather than as active participants?

Some of my colleagues seem to hold that no matter how beneficial a certain course of action is to the economy and to average Americans, that action is totally unacceptable if the rich get any benefit from it.

Abraham Lincoln once observed that you cannot help the weak by weakening the strong.

Likewise, we cannot help all Americans by punitively taxing wealth. Our progressive income tax already does a good job of that.

Trying to craft a set of incentives that exempts from coverage the very people whose conduct is critical to the attainment of our economic goals just will not work.

By giving an across-the-board capital gains tax deduction to everyone alike, we will encourage an efficient reallocation of resources in such a way as to stimulate economic growth for all Americans.

As I mentioned earlier, at stake in all of this is about $8 trillion of locked-in capital gains, which if unlocked, would produce substantial revenue gains to the Treasury, as well as create more jobs and economic growth for all Americans.

Let me close Mr. President, with a real-life example that indicates that all of the economic principles I have talked about actually work and are not just theories that sound good.

As a division of a major parent company, Sungard Data Systems had $30 million in annual sales but was losing money.

The parent company decided to sell this division. Venture capitalists believed that they could turn things around and return Sungard to profitability. The new buyers were correct.

After the sale, the new management generated over $440 million in revenues and about $70 million in operating income.

What used to be a 400-employee division before the sale turned into a 2,400-employee company after the sale. This represents a 500-percent increase in jobs.

Did the rich venture capitalists get richer from all of this? Of course they did. But most importantly, 2,000 people had good jobs that did not exist before. This is the way our economy has always worked.

This is America, where it is possible to create wealth for oneself by investing one's sweat, one's brains, and taking a risk. By so doing, the risk taker creates wealth and opportunity for those around him or her.

Now is not time to abandon the economic principles that made this country the greatest economic powerhouse the world has ever known.

Mr. President, I urge all of my colleagues to vote in favor of the tax package reported out of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that items referred to above be included in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

September 1995 DRI/McGraw Hill study projects the specific economic benefits that will result from a 50 percent capital gains deduction as follows:

150,000 new jobs created each year from 1997-2000.

4.1 percent increase in capital stock.

5.1 percent increase in fixed investment over 10 years.

1.2 percent increase in labor productivity.

8 percent reduction in the cost of capital.

1.4 percent increase in GDP over 10 years.

$12 billion increase in federal tax revenues over 10 years.

Who Generates the New Jobs?

Answer: New Companies and Those in the Early Stages of Expansion:

Small Companies: Added 1.6 million net jew jobs in 1993: and 25% job growth per year from 1989 to 1993.

Large Companies: Industries dominated by large companies had a net decrease of 200,000 jobs in 1993; and Fortune 500 companies lost about 3% of their jobs from 1989 to 1993.

U.S. AFFILIATED INSULAR AREAS

Mr. AKAKA. I would like to engage in a colloquy with the chairman and ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, and my good friend, the senior Senator from Hawaii, on a matter of very great concern to me—a provision in the House reconciliation bill that is inconsistent with House and Senate Appropriations Committee actions and would eliminate our ability to meet some of the most basic needs in the U.S. affiliated insular areas.

What the House Subcommittee on Native American and Insular Affairs has proposed, and the House has accepted, may appear to many to be relatively noncontroversial—the repeal of a $27.7 million mandatory annual appropriation to the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands [CNMI] for infrastructure improvement projects. The reality, however, is that this recommendation would wreck—before it can even be implemented—a carefully negotiated bipartisan, bicameral agreement made by the Conference Committee on Appropriations for Interior and Related Agencies.

After outlining the facts in this case, I would hope and urge that the Senate conferees conclude that this proposal is misguided and must be rejected.

In the administration's budget request it was recognized that the needs of the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands for Federal financial assistance were decreasing due to local economic growth. Therefore, the level of financial assistance could be decreased. However, the Administration and the Appropriations Committees also recognized that there continue to be significant future needs and obligations to be met in other island insular areas.

The first of these other obligations is fulfilling the intent of section 103(i) of Public Law 99-239, the Compact of Free Association Act of 1985, which obligates the United States to undertake radiation mitigation measures and to resettle the people of Rongelap who were irradiated during the United States' nuclear testing program in the Marshall Islands.

Second, Public Law 99-239 also authorizes immigration from the former Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands to the United States and its territories. In recognition of the impact which this immigration would have on social services, particularly in Guam, section 104(e)(6) of Public Law 99-239 authorizes compensation to assist in offsetting the negative impacts of immigration under the compacts.

Third, economic development in remote American Samoa is still unable to generate sufficient revenue to meet all of the territory's basic needs. Of greatest concern is the Environmental Protection Agency's estimated $30 million backlog in waste water construction. If these projects are not undertaken, then the community will face an increasing risk of contamination of its groundwater, as well as destruction of its protective and productive surrounding coral reefs. In addition, American Samoa's hospital facilities are nearing the end of their useful life. The Department of the Interior and the Army Corps of Engineers estimate renovation or replacement costs for healthcare facilities to be between $20 and $60 million.

Finally, the fourth obligation facing the Federal Government with respect to the islands is fulfilling our commitment to the CNMI. In 1992, the previous administration and representatives of the CNMI reached an agreement under which the Federal Government would provide $120 million in financial assistance to the CNMI, to be matched by $120 million from the CNMI, to meet the capital infrastructure needs of their rapidly growing population and economy. From 1993 to 1995 much of these funds were provided to the CNMI under the mandatory appropriation established by section 702 of Public Law 94-241, the Covenant to Establish the Commonwealth of the Northern Marianas. However, $77 million remains to be paid under the agreement.

Given the extreme pressure on the budget, how were these needs and obligations to the islands to be met? Fortunately, the administration proposed a solution which would allow the appropriations committees to avoid the nearly impossible task of meeting these needs through large annual discretionary appropriations. The proposal, contained in the Insular Development Act (S. 638), was to reallocate the CNMI's $27.7 million mandatory annual appropriation to meet needs among all of the islands. The Energy Committee held a hearing on this bill on May 25, 1995, and the full Senate passed the bill on July 20. The Office of Management and Budget and the House and Senate Appropriations Committees supported the proposal because it would allow for significant discretionary savings.

In short, there is a solution to a set of difficult problems. The administration's original concept was adopted and modified to specify priorities and funding levels among these needs. It was then agreed to on a bipartisan basis by the Conferees on Interior Appropriations, who could now also agree to eliminate discretionary funding to meet these needs.

Mr. President, it is with the greatest disappointment that I view the House recommendation to repeal the CNMI mandatory appropriation. This proposal completely wrecks the carefully crafted policy to meet the public health needs of Samoa, fulfill our commitment to the CNMI, compensate Guam for the negative social impacts resulting from compact immigration, and to acquit ourselves with respect to our commitments to the nuclear testing victims of Rongelap Atoll.

I would like to call on my good friend, the Senior Senator from Louisiana and the ranking member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, to confirm my presentation of the facts in this matter.

Mr. JOHNSTON. The Senator is absolutely correct. The provisions of the Interior conference report were the result of weeks of careful bipartisan effort. As ranking member of the authorizing committee I have been familiar with each of these issues for many years and have shared with the Senator from Hawaii the frustration of trying to find a solution. This is why I joined with my chairman, the senior Senator from Alaska, in writing to the chairman and ranking member of the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee urging that the administration's proposal, as modified and reported by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, be included in the Interior appropriations bill.

I have been dealing with territorial issues since I first came to the Senate in 1972, and I can assure my colleagues that although these islands are small and remote, their needs are just as real as those of the States. We have responsibilities to U.S. citizens and nationals and citizens of the former Trust Territory that we simply cannot turn our backs on. After three long years we have finally come up with a solution to meet four of our most pressing problems in the islands. I simply cannot understand how the House justifies its proposal, which would ignore these responsibilities and commitments.

Let me reassure my colleague from Hawaii that I will do all that I can to ensure that the Senate position prevails on this matter.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank my good friend and would also like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, whether my understanding on these matters is correct.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. I agree with the Senator's statement. In fact, I ask unanimous consent that the letter sent by our Committee to the Interior Appropriations Subcommittee requesting the adoption of S. 638 be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE, COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES,
Washington, DC, July 25, 1995.

Senator SLADE GORTON,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Interior and Related Agencies, Committee on Appropriations, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We are writing to you concerning the funding for the Department of the Interior's responsibilities for territories and insular areas, including the freely associated states. We are concerned over the action taken by the House in eliminating funding for staffing and for very important programs, such as technical assistance, operations and maintenance improvement, insular management control, and disaster assistance. Each of these programs, while relatively small, have proved to be of critical importance in assisting the various island governments. We understand that both the Departments of Defense and the Interior have also expressed their concern over this action.

The elimination of the salaries for all staff is perplexing. Including the FY '95 appropriation, there are over $900 million in funding for the territories and freely associated states that the Department of the Interior is responsible for. The Department has reorganized and placed responsibility under the Assistant Secretary for Policy, Management and Budget. As part of that reorganization, the core permanent staff has been reduced from 45 to 25. We believe that the staffing level should be kept to the minimum necessary to enable the Secretary to fully discharge his responsibilities. We have strongly suggested that they give serious consideration to using at least a portion of the savings to obtain details from other agencies to enhance the Department's ability to deal with problems in the islands and to reduce the need for permanent staff. We expect that further adjustments will be made in the future as the responsibilities of the Secretary change. The expected efficiency and greater emphasis on technical and financial management assistance to the areas will be completely frustrated by the House action.

We do not see how the reductions proposed by the House can be supported. As you may be aware, the Senate has passed S. 638, which in part would redirect the permissible uses of that portion of the current entitlement for the Northern Marianas not needed to meet the 1992 Agreement on future funding so that the excess could be used for long-term infrastructure planning. Those funds would also provide the ability to meet United States responsibilities in areas such as assisting in the resettlement of Rongelap. In part, the Committee felt that this action would increase the flexibility of the Appropriations Committee to address critical needs such as financial management. Enactment of that provision would also provide a significant portion of the infrastructure funding for American Samoa needed to meet critical health and safety concerns. Given the increasing pressures on the budget, we see no alternative other than reallocation of the excess CNMI funding if essential needs are to be met.

Accordingly, we urge you to reject the action taken by the House in eliminating funding for staff and for essential programs for the insular areas. If you agree with the action taken by the Senate with respect to the use of excess funding for the Northern Marianas, we suggest that you seriously consider adopting such a provision as part of the Appropriation measure.

Sincerely,

J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
Ranking Minority Member.
FRANK H. MURKOWSKI,
Chairman.

Mr. MURKOWSKI. Let me also reassure my colleague of my strong desire to see that our agreement, as set forth in the Appropriations conference report, not be undermined by the House reconciliation proposal which contradicts that agreement.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank the Chairman for his reassurance. Mr. President, finally I would like to ask the Senior Senator from Hawaii, for his support on this matter.

Mr. INOUYE. The Senator is correct. It comes as a great disappointment to me that just as the United States was finally coming to a resolution on how to meet its obligations on these issues, the House has proposed to repeal the source of funding that had been agreed upon.

I stand with my colleagues on the authorizing and appropriations committees in urging that the Senate insist on its position in conference—that the CNMI's mandatory funding be preserved in order to implement the bipartisan, bicameral agreement to reallocate these funds as set forth in the Interior Appropriations conference report.

Mr. AKAKA. I thank my colleagues for their support in ensuring that the Senate position prevails on this issue.

Mr. KEMPTHORNE. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of passage of the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995. This is not only good legislation. It is historic legislation. For the first time, in a long time, Congress has the opportunity to vote for a truly balanced budget—not just a theory, not just rhetoric but an action plan to realize the goal that many thought impossible.

Only once in the past 30 years has the Federal Government had a balanced budget. Every other year we "deficit spent" our way toward a national debt that now stands at nearly $5 trillion dollars. That is $19,000 of debt for every man, woman and child in the United States. Because the interest on the debt is threatening to consume ever larger portions of the budget, this national debt is currently one of the greatest threats to our children's future.

For the fiscal year that ended on September 30 the Federal Government ran a deficit of $161 billion. If nothing is done, and we don't change our spending habits, that deficit will rise to $256 billion by 2002. We must stop borrowing from the future and learn to live within our means. This budget reconciliation bill gives us the blueprint to accomplish that task.

While the American people made it clear that they wanted the Federal budget balanced, they also made it clear that they wanted meaningful tax relief. The Republican leadership heard that message loud and clear. Besides balancing the Federal budget by the year 2002, the Reconciliation Act of 1995 provides the biggest tax cut in history—more than $245 billion. Of these cuts 84 percent go to those making less than $100,000 and 70 percent go to those making less than $75,000. These tax cuts are real, significant tax relief for the families of America. For example:

A $500 per child under 18 tax credit for couples earning $110,000 or less annually.

20 percent credit of interest paid on student loans up to $500 per year, per borrower, for couples with an adjusted gross income of $60,000 or less.

Raising the income limits for eligibility for IRA's by $5,000 annually until they reach $100,000 for couples and $85,000 for singles and indexing for inflation and creating a $2,000 IRA for homemakers.

Capital gains reform that deducts 50 percent of the gain for individuals that have owned property at least 1 year, which effectively lowers the tax rate to 19.8 percent A reduction of the corporate rate on tax gains to 28 percent. Both changes are effective 10-13-95.

Estate tax reforms that will allow more Americans to continue operating family owned business after the death of the primary owner/founder. The first $1.5 million in value of family owned businesses and farms are exempt from tax and the tax on the next $3.5 million is reduced by 50 percent.

These tax cuts are both responsive and responsible solutions to the excessive taxation that is stealing the financial independence from American families across this country.

The Medicare portion of the budget reconciliation package is, in every sense of the word, true reform. It takes the current system, which is so obviously flawed and damaged beyond simple Band-Aid fixes, and transforms it into something which will truly work. It will work not only to meet the health care needs of current and future senior citizens, it will work to allow the marketplace, and therefore the people, to shape the future of health care.

We all know the level of political rhetoric which has surrounded the issue of Medicare reform. The fact remains, however, unless something is done, and done soon, Medicare will go bankrupt. This is not a political issue. This is not a matter of just whether or not Republicans want to change the system. It is a question of whether or not we have the courage to make the tough decisions needed to save the system. Simply delaying the pending bankruptcy for a couple of years will not be sufficient. We have had enough of that attitude. It is time to stand firm and to stop avoiding the difficult decisions before us. I believe the Republican Medicare reform package does just that.

The contents of the Medicare reform proposal have been significantly misrepresented. I believe it is important to point out what the measure reported out of the Finance Committee does.

The first thing the plan does is provide choice. For too long we have told this Nation's senior citizens that they may not have a choice. When they turn 65, they are placed on Medicare, whether they want it or not. Until recently, only a few were even allowed to choose managed care options instead of fee-for-service. I believe this is outrageous. To tell people in this country that they may not provide for their own health care as they see fit violates the basic principles of freedom for which so many of our seniors fought and sacrificed. Some have claimed seniors have all the choice they need, but that is simply not true. When older people are turned away from a health care provider's office because the provider no longer wishes to struggle with the regulations and bureaucracy surrounding the Medicare Program, they have no choice. This must simply change.

So what kind of choice will seniors get to make? Under the Republican proposal they can stay enrolled in the current Medicare program. Those wishing to go beyond the present system may choose from traditional fee-for-service indemnity health plans—(just like many of them had before retirement), coordinated care plans, and high-deductible health plans with medical savings accounts, also known as MSAs. In addition, the Medicare reform plan allows future enrollees to select from yet unforeseen health options as they become available, provided the plans meet minimum Federal standards. This, I would say to my colleagues, is the kind of choice most Americans already have. Do our senior citizens deserve any less?

The Medicare reform plan we are debating also addresses another issue, fraud, which Idahoans have told me should be one of the primary focal points of any reform effort. I am pleased our plan takes serious efforts to reduce health care fraud and abuse. Specifically, the bill provides for the establishment of coordinated efforts by Federal, State, and local law enforcement officials to combat fraud. The bill also instructs the Secretary of Health and Human Services to exclude individuals convicted of health care fraud from receiving payments under Medicare and Medicaid. Furthermore, the reform package would establish a new criminal statute, with specific criminal penalties, and would also increase fines and civil penalties for health care fraud.

With expanded choice and reduced fraud, one must wonder why there is so much opposition to our Medicare reform plan. I believe it stems from fear based on misinformation. In an attempt to set the record straight, I would like to take this opportunity to point out what the reform package does not do.

First, this proposal does not cut Medicare. Under the Republican plan, Medicare will continue to grow by 6.4 percent each year. Over the next 7 years, expenditures for Medicare will grow by nearly $2,000 per recipient. Only in Washington could a $2,000 increase in payments per person be labeled, by some, as a cut.

The GOP plan also does not force people to give up Medicare or to join managed care organizations. As I stated before, the plan offers seniors a choice. It lets them, rather than the Government, decide how one will receive health care. I believe this Nation's senior citizens can make those choices.

In addition, the spending reductions included in the Medicare reform package are not, and I will repeat this, are not, related to a tax cut. The bill explicitly states that savings generated from reforming the Medicare system may not be used for any purpose other than saving and preserving the Medicare system. Whether or not we adopt any tax cuts, we need these savings to preserve the system for current and future recipients.

Finally, to those who say smaller savings would be sufficient, I would ask them to define "sufficient." While the Democrat's proposal would prevent the system from going bankrupt in 2002, as it is currently on a pace to do, it would allow the system to fail only 2 years later. This attitude of "put it off until it is someone else's problem" is precisely why the United States is in the economic mess it is. As the Medicare trustee's said, "prompt, effective, and decisive action is necessary." Simply delaying the inevitable is not a solution.

I was pleased to note that my hometown newspaper, The Idaho Statesman, shares this view. In a recent editorial the newspaper stated, "Without enormous changes like those proposed by the GOP, the program will go broke soon after the turn of the century." The editorial went on to say, "somebody finally has the courage to begin fixing what's been broken for a long time."

Since before I first came to the Senate, Idahoans have told me they want Congress to face the important issues head on, to try to set this country on solid economic footing. The Medicare reform plan which the Senate Finance Committee approved does just that. It will not be easy, and it will not be painless, but it will achieve our goals. It will correct the financial difficulties the program faces, bring the efficiencies of the market into play, and give senior citizens the freedom to choose.

The Idaho Statesman's editorial ended with the following statement, "The numbers clearly show that Medicare, which served one generation well, cannot serve the next one without significant reform." The Republican package is just that, significant, and serious, reform.

The Finance Committee has also used this bill as a vehicle to redirect and energize the earned income tax credit. The EITC is a well-conceived and well-intended program designed to encourage work over welfare for low-income families. Unfortunately this worthy intent has been lost in what has become the fastest growing entitlement program we have. Just since 1986 it has grown from 7 million families receiving an average of $281 to 18 million families receiving an average of $1,265. The EITC no longer benefits only families with children but provides benefits to both individuals and families without children.

The Senate proposal redirects the EITC back to the truly needy, reduces the potential for fraud and abuse and puts money where we need it. in the hands of low income families with children. We will increase spending on the intended beneficiaries at the same time we save the taxpayers more than $32 billion.

I ask my colleagues to join me in supporting the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act. It is good, smart legislation that demonstrates to the American taxpayer that Republicans are serious about changing the business as usual attitude in Congress.

S-CORPORATION REFORM

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, as many of my colleagues are aware, there are a number of tax issues of significant importance to the 1.9 million American businesses that are S corporations that did not get resolved during the Finance Committee markup last week. Many of those issues—which include the current law's severe limitations on capital formation, growth, corporate streamlining, family business planning, estate planning, and tax simplifaction—are addressed in a bill I introduced earlier this year with my colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH. That bill, S. 758, the S Corporation Reform Act of 1995, has the bipartisan cosponsorship of a third of the Senate.

While it is unfortunate that none of the provisions of S. 758 were included in the bill reported by the Finance Committee and made part of the Budget Reconciliation Bill that is before us, I am pleased to note that many of these provisions were included in the tax bill passed by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President. I, too, share the concerns of my colleague from Arkansas and see S corporation reform as an important step in helping this nation's S corporations stay competive and grow. I firmly believe that S corporation reform is long overdue, and hope that we can work through the conference process and during the rest of this legislative session, not simply to adopt the key S corporation simplification provisions that have already been included in the House bill, but also to address and include several additional provisions that are critical components of S. 758.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I agree with my colleague from Utah. Specifically, I believe that it is very important that we extend the S corporation reform initiative in the budget process to include all the items in the House bill, as well as such provisions as:

The ability of S corporations to issue preferred stock and general convertible debt;

The ability of S corporations to form ESOPs, so their employees can share in the success of the business;

The ability of financial institutions to be shareholders of an S corporation's stock, which is often a critical element of obtaining financing for corporate growth; and

The ability of all members of a family to be counted as a single shareholder of an S corporation, since family-owned S corporations are frequently stifled as they continue to grow from one generation to the next.

I hope that these issues will be on the table for discussion, and that my colleagues will be willing to help S corporations—most of which are small and/or family owned businesses—be more effective competitors in the marketplace.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I understand the concerns of my colleague from Arkansas, and also hope that we will be able to resolve these and other critical issues in conference. I will be working closely with Senator PRYOR in the coming weeks on these very important legislative objectives.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, seeing no other Senators seeking recognition, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENNETT). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 which, for the first time in many years, controls entitlement spending, restrains the growth of Government and eliminates annual deficits.

What a refreshing contrast this balanced budget reconciliation bill is to the budget proposals submitted over the past 2 years by the President. Those budgets enacted the largest tax increase in history, contained no plan to balance the budget, significantly increased the national debt, failed to restrain growth in nondefense Government spending and proposed dangerous reductions in national defense spending.

Mr. President, the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 reverses direction on those policies which are strapping our economy and burdening all Americans with an overwhelming national debt.

I remind my colleagues that the national debt now stands at over $4.9 trillion. Outlays for interest on the public debt is well over $300 billion per year, exceeding outlays for any other Government Department or program, except Social Security.

Furthermore, failure to adopt this reconciliation act will result in annual deficits exceeding $200 billion for as far as can be projected. That is not an acceptable alternative. We must reduce Government spending. We must eliminate these annual deficits, and we must reduce the national debt. The Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act puts us on track to accomplish those objectives.

Mr. President. I support the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995. I vote yes for reducing the deficit. I vote yes for controlling the growth of Government spending. I vote yes for our families by reducing their tax burden. I vote yes for restoring the economic future of our Nation. Therefore, I will vote yes for this bill and encourage my colleagues to do likewise.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I was here listening to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina talking a moment ago. As always, I am impressed with his vigor, vitality, and enthusiasm and, indeed, his stamina.

I also found myself in agreement with much, if not most, of what he was saying. I agree that we should vote yes on deficit reduction, and I see my friend from New Mexico here. I want to tell him how much I admire him personally, the job he has done and the work that he has put in over the years on the Budget Committee, the years he has spent dedicating himself to budget reductions and trying to achieve a balanced budget for this country. So I do not want him in any way to regard the comments I might make in the next few moments as being in derogation of my respect and admiration for him.

I agree with what Senator THURMOND said; we have to vote yes on deficit reduction. I believe that. I believe we have to vote yes on cutting spending. I believe we have to vote yes on reforming programs which have heretofore been regarded as untouchable, being third rails we cannot touch. I think we have reached the point in our history where we have to look at virtually every program and not decide that any of them are immune from reform, from trimming, from cutting, maybe even elimination.

But there are other items in this package that I do not support. I do not support drilling in ANWR. I do not support opening that up. I do not, frankly, support calling for tax reductions at a time when we are calling for deep budget cuts. For me, it is the equivalent of putting our foot on the brake and putting our foot on the pedal at the same time. It is a personal decision on my part. I feel that I can support virtually all the cuts that are necessary to achieve a balanced budget by the year 2002.

I was pleased to hear President Clinton indicate that he, No. 1, believes we should strive for a balanced budget. Initially he said 10 years, then it was 9 years, and now I believe it is even 7 years. I think that is quite a concession on his part, that he agrees that we ought to have a balanced budget within a 7-year timeframe.

The dilemma that I face is like that of several other of my colleagues. This may be the only vehicle to date that we have for achieving a balanced budget by the year 2002. This may be only part of the process that is underway.

This may be act II of a three-part drama that has to be played out that was initiated by the Contract With America, as being part one in its adoption, and part two being our deliberations and debate, and, ultimately, votes here in the Senate and conference with the House, to present a package that will be sent to the President that most, if not all, of us anticipate will be vetoed by the President because it does not include some of his priorities. That may be act II.

Ultimately, we have to come to act III, which is where we sit down with the President and work out our differences—again, being committed to a balanced budget by the year 2002.

So I will listen with some interest as we proceed throughout the evening and into tomorrow as to whether or not I can support the final package. But I indicate today, as I did last evening, I think it is inappropriate that we have massive tax reductions at a time when we are trying to balance the budget and cut the deficit to achieve a balanced budget by the year 2002. And so I intend to support various amendments that will be offered.

I may, in fact, offer an amendment to strike the tax cuts in their entirety. But it may be that that matter has already been debated long enough on the Senate floor. It is my personal judgment that we ought to do everything we can to make the reductions that we have long deferred in making, that we ought to do it within a 7-year timeframe, that we should support our chairman in his efforts for what he has done to produce that.

But I must say, Mr. President, that I have great reservations about calling for substantial tax reductions at the same time we are asking for substantial cutbacks in programs.

So I will listen with interest as we proceed throughout the evening and tomorrow. But I indicate my great admiration and respect for Senator DOMENICI and the effort he has undertaken to produce a reconciliation package that, perhaps, is only part two or act II of the three-act drama that has to be played out.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The 15 minutes called for under the previous order has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Is Senator BROWN's amendment before the Senate, on which he has 5 minutes?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator needs to call that amendment up.

AMENDMENT NO. 2969

(Purpose: To provide that the $1,000,000 limit on deductibility of compensation paid to an employee is extended to employees of all businesses, and to use the resulting revenues to reduce the Social Security earnings penalty)

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN], for himself, Mr. ABRAHAM, Mr. SANTORUM, Mr. MCCAIN, and Mr. CRAIG, proposes an amendment numbered 2969.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 8 of subtitle I of title XII, insert the following:

SEC. . $1.000.000 COMPENSATION DEDUCTION LIMIT EXTENDED TO ALL EMPLOYERS OF ALL CORPORATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 162(m) is amended—

(1) by striking "publicly held corporation" in paragraph (1) and inserting "taxpayer (other than personal service corporations)",

(2) by striking "covered employee" each place it appears in paragraphs (1) and (4) and inserting "employee", and

(3) by striking paragraphs (2) and (3) and redesignating paragraph (4) as paragraph (3).

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995, except that there shall not be taken into account with respect to any employee to whom section 162(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 applies solely by reason of such amendments remuneration payable under a written binding contract which was in effect on October 25, 1995, and which was not modified thereafter in any material respect before such remuneration is paid.

(c) USE OF REVENUES.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commissioner of Social Security shall increase the earnings limit otherwise determined for each year under section 203 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 403) by an amount which takes into account the increase in revenues for such year as estimated by the Secretary of the Treasury resulting from the amendment to section 162(m)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 made by the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, this is a very straightforward amendment, and it deals with an area this Congress legislated on in 1993.

In 1993, Congress passed a tax provision that placed a limitation of a million dollars on the deductibility for publicly held corporations. The limit of a million dollars was on the amount they could deduct on the salary of an employee of that corporation.

I might say, just in retrospect, that statute had other provisions. In other words, it was possible to earn over a million dollars and have it deductible but only if it was incentive pay or fit into other provisions. So it is not an absolute limitation. But that limitation, in this Senator's view, was somewhat limited and deficient. It was deficient in that it was not applied evenhandedly, fairly; it was not applied to everybody who had a salary in excess of a million dollars; it was only applied to a special few. So the suggestion of the first half of this amendment is simply to be evenhanded and apply that same limitation to employees of all businesses. Again, the tax is on the business, not on the employees.

Mr. President, I might say two important things here. We have not changed any of the exceptions to this provision. In other words, included in it was a provision that allowed incentive payments, and so on. None of that has been changed.

In addition, included here is a provision that prohibits them from being retroactive. That is, if you have an employment contract signed prior to today, that is valid and not affected by this provision. But it does raise, according to the preliminary estimates we have, $800 million. That $800 million, according to the amendment, is then used to ameliorate the impact of the penalty on Social Security tax.

As I think Senators are well aware right now, above the threshold level a very high tax is placed on Social Security recipients, many of whom are not wealthy at all, but are low-income or middle-income and struggling, and they are put into a very difficult penalty situation. So this is a net, even with regard to tax revenue to the Federal Government.

What it does is take that $800 million that will be raised and use it to offset the earnings penalty. It will not eliminate the Social Security earnings penalty. My guess is it will only have a small affect on it. It will only increase the threshold a small amount of money. But that amount of money will go to working men and women, who retire without adequate resources and need that money and need to work to make their household expenses fit.

In my view, it is an excellent transfer. It applies even tax philosophy to those who receive over a million dollars in compensation. It provides evenhandedly and uses the money to ameliorate that Social Security earnings penalty that is so burdensome for so many working people.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we have reviewed the amendment and checked it with the Finance Committee sources. I am prepared to yield back the full 5 minutes in order to move this thing along. Once again, I would like to take the opportunity to thank the chairman of the committee for his diligence and consideration, in allowing a 15-minute discussion period when we worked this out.

Let me say this. We have unnecessarily delayed the process here, though, because both sides have not been as forthcoming as I think we should be—or that we intend to be, for that matter—in supplying copies of the amendments to the other side. I am not saying it is just on your side, it is on our side as well.

Suffice to say, I am ready to yield the remainder of my time. I believe—if the chairman agrees—that would take us to the Harkin amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, simply to affirm what the Senator from Nebraska says. I think it is, in fact, part of the agreement between the leaders that we will know what we are voting on, that we will have copies of these amendments. I have a list here of 17 of what are called Republican amendments, and three of them are question marks. There are all kinds of words. There is a word that says kickback, one that says taxes, health care, sugar. There is no way to make any kind of a judgment.

So I just affirm the view of the ranking member of the Budget Committee that we need to have these amendments. It is part of the agreement that we would have these amendments and our amendments in writing before we act on them.

Otherwise we are just singing in the dark.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I yield back the balance of my time and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second. The yeas and nays are ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2970

(Purpose: To strengthen efforts to combat Medicare waste, fraud and abuse)

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I believe the next amendment in order is the amendment to be offered by the Senator from Iowa, Mr. HARKIN.

Mr. HARKIN. Parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. How much time do we have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 5 minutes.

Mr. HARKIN. I have an amendment that I am sending to the desk, and I ask for immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. HARKIN], for himself, Mr. GRAHAM and Mr. BIDEN, proposes an amendment numbered 2970.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. HARKIN. I yield myself 2 minutes.

Mr. President, if you believe that waste, fraud and abuse in Medicare is just a small problem, then you want to just support the bill and the Abraham amendment that was added to it and vote "no" on this amendment.

If you have followed the hearings that I have held over the last 5 years showing that what GAO says amounts up to 10 percent of Medicare spending goes for waste, fraud and abuse, this is up to $17 billion a year.

If you have followed those hearings or read the numerous GAO and Inspector General reports, then you know we just cannot go after the small things in waste, fraud and abuse. We have to go after the big game. We have to take a truly comprehensive approach to combatting this bilking of the taxpayers and our elderly.

Now, the bill has some good provisions in it. I will not deny that. The Abraham amendment which I voted for is also pretty good. But that just takes a nick out of it. What we have to do is go after it with every thing we can. The taxpayers and the elderly deserve no less.

My amendment, cosponsored by Senators GRAHAM and BIDEN, both of whom who have worked hard to tackle this problem, makes a number of important changes. It requires Medicare within 6 months must use state-of-the-art commercial software to find billing abuse. GAO estimated the first full year savings of making this common sense idea at $640 million.

Next, my amendment prohibits Medicare payments for unnecessary and inappropriate items like fines owed by health care providers for violations of Federal, State or local laws, personal auto use, tickets to sporting events, entertainment, and other things like that. Believe it or not, Medicare still has no specific prohibition against paying for those kind of items.

Third, my amendment reforms payments to ambulances as recommended by the inspector general. It also reduces paperwork by requiring a standardized claim form for Medicaid and Medicare.

Most important, and the heart and soul of this, it requires competitive bidding for durable medical equipment, medical supplies, and oxygen paid for by Medicare. The Veterans Administration has been doing this a long time and the difference in payments is dramatic.

How can you say you do not support it in Medicare when you have it in the VA, when the VA spends 4 cents for the same bandage that Medicare spends 86 cents for? Oxygen—Medicare spends $3,600 for rental of oxygen; the Veterans Administration pays less than half that.

That is because the Veterans Administration has competitive bidding and Medicare does not. It is time we have good old competitive bidding in Medicare. That is what this amendment does.

I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. I compliment the Senator from Iowa.

Put bluntly, there is no legitimate reason not to be for this amendment. None. Zero. None. I challenge anyone to tell us why this amendment does not make sense.

Going after fraud should be our top priority, our first priority. The bill makes progress but it does not go far enough.

At least it is not what the Gingrich bill in the House does which makes it easier for health care providers to engage in fraud. Literally, not figuratively.

Last, the point made by the Senator, there is $18 billion in Medicare fraud a year and $16 billion in Medicaid fraud a year. I see no legitimate rationale for not tightening this up unless there is some outrageous special interest that thinks it would benefit from it. I see none. Prosecutors want it. Prosecutors ask for it.

I held a hearing in my State where I had the top prosecutors from Philadelphia and the top prosecutors from the State of Delaware. They point out that the House bill, which set them back decades—this bill would not do much. Our bill would make a significant impact on their ability to deal with health care fraud.

I thank my colleague for his leadership and allowing me the minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute and 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. HARKIN. I will reserve my time if the other side wants to speak.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 5 minutes in opposition to Senator COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, ordinarily I find myself in agreement with the Senator from Iowa, dealing with health care fraud, but I must say in this particular circumstance I have to rise in opposition, not because I am opposed to what he is seeking to do but rather I believe that while his proposal for addressing fraud and abuse in the health care system has merit, they also compromised some of the more important facets of the health care fraud bill we were successful in including in the Finance Committee package as such.

For the past several years, we have been holding hearings. As a matter of fact, it was a report that the minority staff issued on health care fraud which produced the estimates from GAO, as well as our own staff, showing that there is $100 billion being lost annually in our health care system.

As far as the Federal portion of that, it is anywhere from $27 to $40 million, depending on which Federal programs are included. We are losing billions of dollars through our health care system through fraud now.

What we have tried to do in the proposal that was agreed to by the Finance Committee is to structure it in a way that actually produces savings—this $4.2 billion.

The amendment of the Senator from Iowa, as I understand it—unfortunately, because of the time limitations we have, I believe some of my provisions have been deleted that are in the health care fraud bill. I am advised that CBO has concluded that this dilutes some of the $4.2 billion in savings.

One of the justifications for persuading the Finance Committee to include the health care fraud bill that I had authored was to get some savings. CBO now scores it at $4.2 billion. This at least raises a question as to whether or not we have diluted that and it calls into question in terms of how much we will save.

The Senator from Iowa may use a different method of calculating those savings.

What we have tried to do is structure it in a way which we could get the provider groups to agree. This has been no easy task. We have met with provider groups, with consumers, with health care advocates, with the FBI, with the Justice Department, with the White House.

We put together a package which we believe enjoys broad support which has been scored as saving $4.2 billion. Under these circumstances, I find myself compelled to rise in opposition not because I am opposed to what the Senator from Iowa seeks to do, but by virtue of the fact this may undermine to some degree and dilute to some degree, which I do not know what extent, the $4.2 billion which has currently been scored by CBO.

For those reasons I rise in opposition to the amendment of the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 1 minute and 50 seconds and the Senator from Iowa has 1 minute and 14 seconds.

Mr. HARKIN. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I am somewhat disappointed. I thought this was perhaps one amendment that we could get Republican agreement on.

This is a good amendment. There may be reasons to oppose it, but I do not know what they are and they have not been explained to me.

Mr. HARKIN. I am befuddled, Mr. President, because I say to my friend from Maine, the CBO—which I want on the record—the CBO has scored our amendment as saving more money than is in the bill. I want that on the record. That is so.

We did not weaken the provisions in the bill, we significantly strengthened them. For example, as I pointed out, we require the commercial software, we reduce the paperwork by having one claim form. We required the competitive bidding and we prohibit the Medicare payments for unnecessary things like personal use of automobiles, tickets to sporting events, things like that.

And CBO has certified that this amendment saves more money than the underlying bill's provisions.

Mr. COHEN. We are basically in accord with what we are seeking to do, but I have been advised that CBO indicates this would reduce the $4.2 billion by——

Mr. HARKIN. Absolutely not. CBO said today it would save $4.7 billion, considerably more than the underlying bill. Let there be no question about that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Iowa is expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back the balance of our time.

Mrs. MURRAY. Mr. President, the Harkin amendment to remove fraud and abuse from Medicare is a giant step in the right direction—saving taxpayer money, urging us toward a balanced budget, and striving for greater efficiency.

However, the amendment is based on a concept both necessary and controversial. This amendment would require competitive bidding for Medicare part B items and services.

I have heard from owners of numerous medical supply businesses in my State who tell me they will be driven out of business by this amendment provision. They tell me services will be cut to rural areas. They tell me services involved with setting up and instructing about medical equipment is essential for patients, and will be threatened under this amendment.

Senator HARKIN has made changes to his amendment language, to maintain access to services for rural and underserved areas. He has made changes to assure quality assurance standards, so that large companies are not able to undercut their competition simply by providing shoddy supplies and equipment.

He points out the large difference between prices for supplies at Veterans Administration hospitals—which have competitive bidding—and prices from providers under Medicare part B. He makes a good case for solving some of our Medicare cost problems with a clear goal to find efficiency through competitive bidding, rather than just a budget decision.

In light of these changes, I will vote for the amendment, but I want to be sure that we are doing everything we can to make this transition survivable for small business.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for 10 seconds in order to have items printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I would like to have printed in the RECORD various documents, including a letter from the inspector general of the Department of HHS and statements by the Secretary of the Department and the Attorney General. They all go to the point that we need to have as strong an antifraud position as possible in the Senate version of the Medicare bill, because the House version is woefully weak. I support the joint efforts of my colleagues from Iowa and Maine in assuring that goal.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the documents be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, OFFICE OF INSPECTOR GENERAL,

Washington, DC, September 29, 1995.

Re H.R. 2389: "Safeguarding Medicare Integrity Act of 1995."

Hon. BOB GRAHAM,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR GRAHAM: You requested our views regarding the newly introduced H.R. 2389, which we understand may be considered in the deliberations concerning the "Medicare Preservation Act." We strongly support the expressed objective of H.R. 2389 of reducing the fraud and abuse which plagues the Medicare program. The proposed legislation contains some meritorious provisions. However, if enacted, certain major provisions of H.R. 2389 would cripple the efforts of law enforcement agencies to control health care fraud and abuse in the Medicare program and to bring wrongdoers to justice.

The General Accounting Office estimates the loss to Medicare from fraud and abuse at 10 percent of total Medicare expenditures, or about $18 billion. We recommend two steps to decrease this problem: strengthen the relevant legal authorities, and increase the funding for law enforcement efforts. Some worthy concepts have been included in H.R. 2389, and we support them. For example, we support:

A voluntary disclosure program, which allows corporations to blow the whistle on themselves if upper management finds wrongdoing has occurred, with carefully defined relief for the corporation from qui tam suits under the False Claims Act (but not waiver by the Secretary of sanctions);

Minimum periods of exclusion (mostly parallel with periods of exclusion currently in regulations) with respect to existing exclusion authorities from Medicare and Medicaid; and

Increases in the maximum penalty amounts which may be imposed under the civil monetary penalty laws regarding health care fraud.

As stated above, however, H.R. 2389 contains several provisions which would seriously erode our ability to control Medicare fraud and abuse, including most notably: making the civil monetary penalty and anti-kickback laws considerably more lenient, the unprecedented creation of an advisory opinion mechanism on intent-based statutes, and a trust fund concept which would fund only private contractors (not law enforcement). Our specific comments on these matters follow.

1. MAKING CIVIL MONETARY PENALTIES FOR FRAUDULENT CLAIMS MORE LENIENT BY RELIEVING PROVIDERS OF THE DUTY TO USE REASONABLE DILIGENCE TO ENSURE THEIR CLAIMS ARE TRUE AND ACCURATE

Background: The existing civil monetary penalty (CMP) provisions regarding false claims were enacted by Congress in the 1980's as an administrative remedy, with cases tried by administrative law judges with appeals to Federal court. In choosing the "knows or should know" standard for the mental element of the offense, Congress chose a standard which is well defined in the Restatement of Torts, Second, Section 12. The term "should know" places a duty on health care providers to use "reasonable diligence" to ensure that claims submitted to Medicare are true and accurate. The reason this standard was chosen was that the Medicare system is heavily reliant on the honesty and good faith of providers in submitting their claims. The overwhelming majority of claims are never audited or investigated.

Note that the "should know" standard does not impose liability for honest mistakes. If the provider exercises reasonable diligence and still makes a mistake, the provider is not liable. No administrative complaint or decision issued by the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS) has found an honest mistake to be the basis for CMP sanction.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 201 would redefine the term "should know" in a manner which does away with the duty on providers to exercise reasonable diligence to submit true and accurate claims. Under this definition, providers would only be liable if they act with "deliberate ignorance" of false claims or if they act with "reckless disregard" of false claims. In an era when there is great concern about fraud and abuse of the Medicare program, it would not be appropriate to relieve providers of the duty to use "reasonable diligence" to ensure that their claims are true and accurate.

In addition, the bill treats the CMP authority currently provided to the Secretary in an inconsistent manner. On one hand, it proposes an increase in the amounts of most CMPs which mnay be imposed under the Social Security Act. Yet, it would significantly curtail enforcement of these sanction authorities by raising the level of culpability which must be proven by the Government in order to impose CMPs. It would be far preferable not to make any changes to the CMP statutes at this time.

2. MAKING THE ANTIKICKBACK STATUTE MORE LENIENT BY REQUIRING THE GOVERNMENT TO PROVE THAT THE SIGNIFICANT INTENT OF THE DEFENDANT WAS UNLAWFUL

Background: The anti-kickback statute makes it a criminal offense knowingly and willfully (intentionally) to offer or receive anything of value in exchange for the referral of Medicare or Medicaid business. The statute is designed to ensure that medical decisions are not influenced by financial rewards from third parties. Kickbacks result in more Medicare services being ordered than otherwise, and law enforcement experts agree that unlawful kickbacks are very common and constitute a serious problem in the Medicare and Medicaid programs.

The two biggest health care fraud cases in history were largely based on unlawful kickbacks. In 1994, National Medical Enterprises, a chain of psychiatric hospitals, paid $379 million for giving kickbacks for patient referrals, and other improprieties. In 1995, Caremark, Inc, paid $161 million for giving kickbacks to physicians who ordered very expensive Caremark home infusion products.

Most kickbacks have sophisticated disguises, like consultation arrangements, returns on investments, etc. These disguises are hard for the Government to penetrate. Proving a kickback case is difficult. There is no record of trivial cases being prosecuted under this statute.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 201 would require the Government to prove that "the significant purpose" of a payment was to induce referrals of business. The phrase "the significant" implies there can only be one "significant" purpose of a payment. If so, at least 51 percent of the motivation of a payment must be shown to be unlawful. Although this proposal may have a superficial appeal, if enacted it would threaten the Government's ability to prosecute all but the most blatant kickback arrangements.

The courts interpreting the anti-kickback statute agree that the statute applies to the payment of remuneration "if one purpose of the payment was to induce referrals." United States v. Greber, 760 F.2d 68, 69 (3d Cir. 1985) (emphasis added). If payments were intended to induce a physician to refer patients, the statute has been violated, even if the payments were also intended (in part) to compensate for legitimate services. Id. at 72. See also: United States v. Kats, 871 F.2d 105, 108 (1989); United States v. Bay State Ambulance, 874 F.2d 20, 29-30 (1st Cir. 1989).

The proposed amendment would overturn these court decisions.

However, the nature of kickbacks and the health care industry requires the interpretation adopted by Greber and its progeny. To prove that a defendant had the improper intent necessary to violate the anti-kickback statute, the prosecution must establish the defendant's state of mind, or intent. As with any intent-based statute, the prosecution cannot get directly inside the defendant's head. The prosecution must rely on circumstantial evidence to prove improper intent. Circumstantial evidence consists of documents relevant to the transaction, testimony about what the defendant said to business associates or potential customers, etc. These types of evidence are rarely clear about the purposes and motivations of the defendant. The difficulties of establishing intent are multiple by the complexity, size, and dynamism of the health care industry, as well as the sophistication of most-kickback scheme participants. Documents are "pre-sanitized" by expert attorneys. Most defendants are careful what they say. In most kickback prosecutions, the Government has a difficult task to prove beyond a reasonable doubt that even one purpose of a payment is to induce referrals.

If the Government had to prove that inducement of referrals was "the significant" reason for the payment, many common kickback schemes would be allowed to proliferate. In today's health care industry, very few kickback arrangements involve the bald payment of money for patients. Most kickbacks have sophisticated disguises. Providers can usually argue that any suspect payment serves one or more "legitimate purposes." For example, payments made to induce referrals often also compensate a physician who is providing health care items or services. Some payments to referral sources may be disguised as returns on investments. Similarly, many lease arrangements that indisputably involve the bona fide use of space incorporate some inducement to refer in the lease rates. In all of these examples, and countless others, it is impossible to quantify what portions of payments are made for nefarious versus legitimate purposes.

Where the defendant could argue that there was some legitimate purpose for the payment, the prosecution would have to prove beyond a reasonable doubt, through circumstantial evidence, that the defendant actually had another motive that was "the significant" reason. For the vast majority of the present-day kickback schemes, the proposed amendment would place in insurmountable burden of proof on the Government.

3. CREATION OF AN EASILY ABUSED EXCEPTION FROM THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE FOR CERTAIN MANAGED CARE ARRANGEMENTS

Background: There is great variety and innovation occurring in the managed care industry. Some managed care organizations, such as most health maintenance organizations (HMOs) doing business with Medicare, consist of providers who assume financial risk for the quantity of medical services needed by the population they serve. In this context, the incentive to offer kickbacks for referrals of patients for additional services is minimized, since the providers are at risk for the additional costs of those services. If anything, the incentives are to reduce services. Many other managed care organizations exist in the fee for service system, where the traditional incentives to order more services and pay kickbacks for referrals remain. In the fee for service system, the payer (like Medicare and private insurance plans) is at financial risk of additional services, not the managed care organization. While broad protection from the anti-kick statute may be appropriate for capitated, at-risk entities like the HMO described above, such protection for managed care organizations in the fee for service system would invite serious abuse.

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 202 would establish broad new exceptions under the anti-kickback statute for "any capitation, risk-sharing, or disease management program." The lack of definition of these terms would result in a huge opportunity for abusive arrangements to fit within this proposed exception. What is a "disease management program?" Does not that term include most of health care?

Nefarious organizations could easily escape the kickback statute by simply rearranging their agreements to fit within the exception. For example, if a facility wanted to pay doctors for referrals, the facility could escape liability by establishing some device whereby the doctors share in the business risk of profit and loss of the business (i.e., they would share some risk, at least theoretically). Then, the organization could pay blatant kickbacks for every referral with impunity.

If the concern is that the kickback statute is hurting innovation, as observed above, there is now an explosion of innovation in the health care industry, especially in managed care. No one in Government is suggesting that HMOs or preferred provider arrangements, etc., formed in good faith, violate the kickback statute. There has never been any action against any such arrangement under the statute.

4. INAPPROPRIATE EXPANSION OF THE EXCEPTION TO THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE FOR DISCOUNTS

Background. Medicare/Medicaid discounts are beneficial and to be encouraged with one critical condition: That Medicare and/or Medicaid receive and participate fully in the discount. For example, if the Medicare reasonable charge for a Part B item or service is $100, Medicare would pay $80 of the bill and the copayment would be $20. If a 20 percent discount is applied to this bill, the charge should be $80, and Medicare would pay $64 (80 percent of the $80) and the copayment would be $16. If the discount is not shared with Medicare (which would be improper), the bill to Medicare would falsely show a $100 charge. Medicare would pay $80, but the copayment would be $0. This discount has not been shared with Medicare.

Many discounting programs are designed expressly to transfer the benefit of discounts away from Medicare. The scheme is to give little or no discount on an item or service separately billed to Medicare, and give large discounts on items not separately billed to Medicare. This scheme results in Medicare paying a higher percentage for the separately billed item or service than it should.

For example, a lab offers a deep discount on lab work for which Medicare pays a predetermined fee (such as lab tests paid by Medicare to the facility as part of a bundled payment), if the facility refers to the lab its separately billed Medicare lab work, for which no discount is given. The lab calls this a "combination" discount, yet is a discount on some items and not on others. Another example is where ancillary or noncovered items are furnished free, if a provider pays full price for a separately billed item, such as where the purchase of incontinence supplies is accompanied by a "free" adult diaper. Medicare has not shared in these combination discounts.

H.R. 2389 Proposal. Section 202 would permit discounts on one item in a combination to be treated as discounts on another item in the combination. This sounds innocent, but it is not. Medicare would be a big loser. Discounting should be permissable for a supplier to offer a discount on a combination of items or services, so long as every item or service separately billed to Medicare or Medicaid receives no less of a discount than is applied to other items in the combination. If the items or services separately billed to Medicare or Medicaid receive less of a discount than other items in the combination, Medicare and Medicaid are not receiving their fair share of the discounts.

5. UNPRECEDENTED MECHANISM FOR ADVISORY OPINIONS ON INTENT-BASED STATUTES, INCLUDING THE ANTI-KICKBACK STATUTE

Background: The Government already offers more advice on the anti-kickback statute than is provided regarding any other criminal provision in the United States Code.

Industry groups have been seeking advisory opinions under the anti-kickback statute for many years, with vigorous opposition by the Department of Justice (DOJ), and the HHS Office of Inspector General (OIG) under the last three administrations, as well as the National Association of Attorneys General. In 1987, Congress rejected calls to require advisory opinions under this statute. As a compromise, Congress required HHS, in consultation with the Attorney General, to issue "safe harbor" regulations describing conduct which would not be subject to criminal prosecution or exclusion. See Section 14 of Public Law 100-93.

To date, the OIG has issued 13 final anti-kickback "safe harbor" rules and solicited comment on 8 additional proposed safe harbor rules, for a total of 21 final and proposed safe harbors. Over 50 pages of explanatory material has been published in the Federal Register regarding these proposed and final rules. In addition, the OIG has issued six general "fraud alerts" describing activity which is suspect under the anti-kickback statute. Thus, the Government gives providers guidance on what is clearly permissible (safe harbors) under the anti-kickback statute and what we consider illegal (fraud alerts).

H.R. 2389 Proposal: HHS would be required to issue advisory opinions to the public on the Medicare/Medicaid anti-kickback statute (section 1128B(b) of the Social Security Act), as well as all other criminal authorities, civil monetary penalty and exclusion authorities pertaining to Medicare and Medicaid. HHS would be required to respond to requests for advisory opinions within 30 days.

HHS would be authorized to charge requesters a user fee, but there is no provision for this fee to be credited to HHS. Fees would therefore be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

Major problems with anti-kickback advisory opinions include:

Advisory opinions on intent-based statutes (such as the anti-kickback statute) are impractical if not impossible. Because of the inherently subjective, factual nature of intent, it would be impossible for HHS to determine intent based solely upon a written submission from the requestor. Indeed, it does not make sense for a requestor to ask the Government to determine the requestor's own intent. Obviously, the requester already knows what their intent is.

None of the 11 existing advisory opinion processes in the Federal Government provide advisory opinions regarding the issue of the requestor's intent. An advisory opinion process for an intent-based statute is without precedent in U.S. law.

The advisory opinion process in H.R. 2389 would severely hamper the Government's ability to prosecute health care fraud. Even with appropriate written caveats, defense counsel will hold up a stack of advisory opinions before the jury and claim that the defendant read them and honestly believed (however irrationally) that he or she was not violating the law. The prosecution would have to disprove this defense beyond a reasonable doubt. This will seriously affect the likelihood of conviction of those offering kickbacks.

Advisory opinions would likely require enormous resources and many full time equivalents (FTE) at HHS. The user fees in the bill would go to the Treasury, not to HHS. Even if they did go to HHS, appropriations committees tend to view them as offsets to appropriations. There are no estimates of number of likely requests, number of FTE required, etc. Also, HHS is permanently downsizing, even as it faces massive structural and program changes. The possible result of the bill is a diversion of hundreds of anti-fraud workers to handle the advisory opinions.

For the above reasons, DOJ, HHS/OIG and the National Association of Attorneys General strongly oppose advisory opinions under the anti-kickback statute, and all other intent-based statutes.

6. CREATION OF TRUST FUND MECHANISM WHICH DOES NOT BENEFIT LAW ENFORCEMENT

Background: In our view, the most significant step Congress could undertake to reduce fraud and abuse would be to increase the resources devoted to investigating false claims, kickbacks and other serious misconduct. It is important to recognize that the law enforcement effort to control Medicare fraud is surprisingly small and diminishing. There is evidence of increasing Medicare fraud and abuse, and Medicare expenditures continue to grow substantially. Yet, the staff of the HHS/OIG, the agency with primary enforcement authority over Medicare, has declined from 1,411 employees in 1991 to just over 900 today. (Note: 259 of the 1,411 positions were transferred to the Social Security Administration). Approximately half of these FTE are devoted to Medicare investigations, audits and program evaluations. As a result of downsizing, HHS/OIG has had to close 17 OIG investigative offices and we now lack an investigative presence in 24 States. The OIG has only about 140 investigators for all Medicare cases nationwide. By way of contrast, the State of New York gainfully employs about 300 persons to control Medicaid fraud in that State alone.

Ironically, the investigative activity of OIG pays for itself many times over. Over the last 5 years, every dollar devoted to OIG investigations of health care fraud and abuse has yielded an average return of over $7 to the Federal Treasury, Medicare trust funds, and State Medicaid programs. In addition, an increase in enforcement also generates increased deterrence, due to the increased chance of fraud being caught. For these reasons, many fraud control bills contain a proposal to recycle monies recovered from wrongdoers into increased law enforcement. The amount an agency gets should not be related to how much it generates, so that it could not be viewed as a "bounty." The Attorney General and the Secretary of HHS would decide on disbursements from the fund. We believe such proposals would strengthen our ability to protect Medicare from wrongdoers and at no cost to the taxpayers. The parties who actually perpetrate fraud would "foot the bill."

H.R. 2389 Proposal: Section 106 would create a funding mechanism using fines and penalties recovered by law enforcement agencies from serious wrongdoers. But none of the money would be used to help bring others to justice. Instead, all the funds would be used only by private contractors for "soft" claims review, such as, medical and utilization review, audits of costs reports, and provider education.

The above functions are indeed necessary, and they are now being conducted primarily by the Medicare carriers and intermediaries. Since the bill would prohibit carriers and intermediaries from performing these functions in the future, there appears to be no increase in these functions, but only a different funding mechanism.

These "soft" review and education functions are no substitute for investigation and prosecution of those who intend to defraud Medicare. The funding mechanism in H.R. 2389 will not result in any more Medicare convictions and sanctions.

In summary, H.R. 2389 would:

Relieve providers of the legal duty to use reasonable diligence to ensure that the claims they submit are true and accurate; this is the effect of increasing the Government's burden of proof in civil monetary penalty cases;

Substantially increase the Government's burden of proof in anti-kickback cases;

Create new exemptions to the anti-kickback statute which could readily be exploited by those who wish to pay rewards to physicians for referrals of patients;

Create an advisory opinion process on an intent-based criminal statute, a process without precedent in current law; since the fees for advisory opinions would not be available to HHS, our scarce law enforcement resources would be diverted into hiring advisory opinion writers; and

Create a fund to use monies recovered from wrongdoers by law enforcement agencies, but the fund would not be available to assist the law enforcement efforts: all the monies would be used by private contractors only for "soft" payment review and education functions.

In our view, enactment of the bill with these provisions would cripple our ability to reduce fraud and abuse in the Medicare program and to bring wrongdoers to justice.

Thank you for your attention to our concerns.

Sincerely,

JUNE GIBBS BROWN,
Inspector General.

PRESS CONFERENCE OF ATTORNEY GENERAL JANET RENO ON HEALTH CARE FRAUD, OCTOBER 18, 1995

Attorney General RENO. Thank you, Secretary Shalala.

The House Medicare bill would make it more difficult for us to prosecute medical providers for fraudulent conduct against patients and the Medicare system. These provisions are totally inconsistent with the provisions in the Senate bill, which would facilitate our law enforcement efforts against health care fraud that harms us all, and particularly our most vulnerable.

I understand that some members of the House have indicated that law enforcement should not be criminally prosecuting health care providers who engage in fraud. I just don't understand that, for I believe that health care fraud is so detrimental to the health and to the pocketbook of all Americans that I made health care fraud one of my priorities in the Department of Justice. I believe perpetrators of health care fraud should not be immune from criminal prosecution because they commit a crime in an office, in a boardroom, in a laboratory, rather than in the street. White collar crooks who pay or take kickbacks endanger the health of patients and steal money from us all.

Experts estimate it may cost Americans as much as $100 billion a year. That is why we need stronger, not weaker, provisions in the House bill. The Senate bill, under the leadership of Senator Cohen and with bipartisan support, provides those strengthened provisions.

Particularly at this time, we need to preserve every Medicare trust fund dollar; we cannot allow Medicare money to be spent on bribes paid to doctors and others as inducement for the referral of Medicare patients. Even more importantly, we cannot allow financial inducements to corrupt the professional judgment of medical providers—providers who Americans have been taught to trust. Decisions which physicians make day in and day out—whether and where to hospitalize a patient, what laboratory tests to order, what surgical procedure to perform, what drug to prescribe, and how long to keep a patient in a psychiatric facility—affect the health and well-being of our elderly patients and our children. Allowing these decisions to be made under the influence of kickbacks is just plain wrong.

The House bill would place a very high, additional burden on the Government in its attempts to prosecute those who pay or receive kickbacks for the purpose of inducing the referral of Medicare business. Existing law requires the Government to prove that one purpose of the kickback was to induce the referral of health care business. The language of the House bill would require that the Government prove that the payment was made for the significant purpose of inducing the referral. That's language that would immunize arrangements that are dressed up to disguise the payor's motive. This would seriously undermine our efforts and it would place beyond the reach of prosecution many kickbacks which are calculated to induce referrals and which adversely affect the judgment of medical providers. From the perspective of Federal law enforcement and, I believe, from the perspective of patients who seek their doctors' advice, this result is simply not acceptable.

Ultimately, this isn't a choice between prosecuting violent crime and prosecuting health care fraud. Both of them do real harm to real people and both deserve vigorous enforcement action. I hope that the House legislation will support, not undermine, our efforts.

QUESTION. Why are the Republicans gutting the statutes?

Attorney General RENO. You would have to ask them, but I have heard it said that they said we shouldn't prosecute these cases while we have robbers and murderers on our streets. And my response is we need to do both with vigor.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, what's your theory about why this is happening up in the House?

Secretary SHALALA. Well, I have long ago learned not to anticipate the motivations, but they clearly are weakening our ability to get fraud out of the system, particularly—it's particularly damaging during an era, as the Attorney General pointed out, where we need to squeeze every dollar we can out of Medicare to invest in the trust fund. And the last things we should be doing is wasting money or letting people rip off the program.

QUESTION. [inaudible] uniform deadly health policy that you approved yesterday. Tell us, do you think it will clear up some of the confusion left over from the Ruby Ridge damage?

Attorney General RENO. Again, I think this is an important step forward because for the first time, all of the major law enforcement agencies in the Federal Government have joined together in a uniform policy. And I think it will help people to understand when deadly force can be used. It will apply to each agency and I am very delighted about that.

QUESTION. What is the real change that this policy makes?

Attorney General RENO. This policy will—the real change.

QUESTION. What's the difference from the way it would be.

Attorney General RENO. DIFFERENT DEPARTMENTS HAD DIFFERENT PROVISIONS AND THIS CONSOLIDATED IN ONE, I THINK, A VERY FIRM STATEMENT ON THE POLICY OF BOTH THE TREASURY AGENCY AND THE DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE.

QUESTION. What tangible impact do you expect the changes to have on the deadly force policy.

Attorney General RENO. I think it will enable those enforcement officers involved to understand when they can and can't use deadly force and I think the message will be clear.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, will you ask the President to veto this bill unless this is modified?

Secretary SHALALA. THERE ARE SO MANY PROVISIONS IN THE REPUBLICANS BILL THAT I HAVE ALREADY SENT A LETTER TO THE HILL, INDICATING THAT IF THEY ADOPT THE BILL AS IT'S NOW WRITTEN THAT I WILL RECOMMEND THAT THE PRESIDENT VETO IT. I WILL JOIN WITH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL AFTER WE REVIEW THESE PROVISIONS IN AN ADDITIONAL COMMENT FOR THE PRESIDENT, ADVISING HIM ON THE BILL. BUT THESE ARE SIMPLY UNACCEPTABLE AND I THINK THAT'S OUR POINT TODAY.

QUESTION. Are all these are provisions for Medicare and Medicaid violations only or do some of them include kickback statutes that cover general medical operations, not Government programs?

Attorney General RENO. No, it covers some Government programs. We would like to see it expanded to others: to the Federal Health employees benefits program, to the CHAMPUS program on behalf of the Department of Justice.

QUESTION. But it doesn't cover kickbacks——

Attorney General RENO. In the private sector.

QUESTION [continuing]. Not involving Medicare or Medicaid?

Attorney General RENO. That's correct.

QUESTION. Do you know, as a practical matter, how the change in the standard of proof would affect the prosecution?

Secretary SHALALA. I think the cases that we gave you as an example we would probably not be able to prosecute.

Attorney General RENO. If I can prove one purpose is to induce the referral of Medicare business, that's one thing. But to have to prove that the significant purpose is to induce the referral of Medicare business significantly heightens the standard. I think it produces confusion as to what is meant by significant. And I think it undermines what the kickback statute is trying to prevent.

Any time you bribe someone to get business you are impairing or presenting a chance for the impairment of judgment. That should never—the fact that you get money for referring business, particularly medical business, should never be a factor in the physicians' or the providers' judgment. It should be what is in the best interest of that patient, what is the most cost-effective medical treatment. And a significant purpose or one purpose, it is critically important that there not be bribery to secure Medicare business.

QUESTION. How does that, in turn, make it harder to prosecute?

Attorney General RENO. I might be able to prove that it is one purpose, but having to prove that it is the significant purpose heightens the standards of proof.

Secretary SHALALA. In fact, the Inspector Generals—all of them have signed on to a letter to the Hill that basically said it would bring those kinds of cases to a standstill because it raises the bar pretty high.

QUESTION. It sounds like it would make it pretty easy for those involved in the kickbacks to get around it, doing something illegal by masking and not making——

Attorney General RENO. All they would have to do is disguise it and say it's for this reason or for that reason or it has something to do with the patient's care and I might not be able to prove that it is a significant purpose. It has that chance of disguising what is really a bribe.

QUESTION. Attorney General Reno, on another subject, what is the Justice Department's position on the U.S. Sentencing Commission's guidelines on crack cocaine versus powder cocaine and the pending legislation that deals with that?

Attorney General RENO. We have said and made clear that prosecutors, police officers, and most of all, the residents of communities across this nation that have been impacted by crack cocaine, understand that the marketing and distribution systems and nature of the drug have had a terrible, terrible impact on many neighborhoods and that its impact reflects the need to have some distinction in the manner in which crack is treated. But the Justice Department has made clear that it favors a review of the 101 ratio, to adjust it, to make it fairer.

It is our hope that legislation that is pending now which rejects the one-to-one ratio because of the impact on communities across this nation also would provide—ask the Sentencing Commission to study it again in this coming year to come up with a recommendation that reflects the impact of crack on the community but also achieves fairness.

QUESTION. What would you suggest would be a good ratio?

Attorney General RENO. We are going to be reviewing with all concerned—as part of—I serve as part of the ex officio members of the Sentencing Commission—that balance.

QUESTION. Secretary Shalala, given that the [inaudible] is taking a completely different approach, isn't there every reason to believe it will be worked out in Congress?

Secretary SHALALA. We long ago have learned not to depend on one House versus another House. I think we are pointing the contrast out between this House bill, which is going to the floor tomorrow, and our ability to work in a bipartisan manner with the Senate. Obviously, we hope in conference we will be able to work it through, but we want to make it very clear that what the House is doing is unacceptable. And most members of Congress probably don't know what's in the bill, since it was moved so quickly.

QUESTION. Have you considered asking the American Medical Association to join you in urging the Republicans to change this?

Secretary SHALALA. There are numerous organizations that have now spoken out on this issue. Most of them have been the State Attorney General, for example, and the Inspector Generals. The American Medical Association, with a handful of important exceptions, have joined us on all issues that are related to fraud and abuse because they are absolutely opposed to, number one, having to police themselves; and number two, I think they very much favor anything we can do to help them to clean up the profession.

QUESTION. So where exactly are they on this?

Secretary SHALALA. You will have to go ask them.

QUESTION. Are you talking about the American Medical Association or American medical associations of various types?

Secretary SHALALA. Well, of various types.

QUESTION. Not the American Medical Association?

Secretary SHALALA. I don't know the position of the AMA at this moment.

QUESTION. [inaudible.]

Secretary SHALALA. Well, the self-referral changes that are being referenced is whether a doctor can own a laboratory and then refer his own patients to a laboratory in which he has a financial interest. That law was changed a number of years ago because of the abuse that was found in the system. There were 45 percent more referrals if the doctors owned the lab. And that was barred by the law. And the American Medical Association has favored repealing the law which we are, of course, opposed to.

QUESTION. Are there any examples of fraud cases that stand out that would be good to pinpoint, related to this?

Attorney General RENO. One of the cases—where is Jerry Stern—is NME case of last year. Our recovery in that case was $379 million and that was based in significant part on this provision that we are trying to defend today in terms of kickbacks.

QUESTION. Do you have any idea what would have happened had the law been [inaudible]?

Attorney General RENO. I think, again, you can't quantify it. But any time you have to prove that some—rather than just one purpose, that it was the significant purpose, you raise the bar real high. Thank you.

(Whereupon, at 1:55 p.m., the press conference adjourned.)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, could I ask if it will be in order to ask for the yeas and nays or to table the Harkin amendment even if we now proceed to the amendment of the Senator from Arizona?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be in order to do that when the amendment recurs for a vote.

The Senator from Arizona.

AMENDMENT NO. 2971

(Purpose: To eliminate corporate welfare in Federal programs)

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], for himself, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. THOMPSON, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. FAIRCLOTH, proposes an amendment numbered 2971.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President I yield myself 4 minutes of the 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, this is a bipartisan amendment, which has been endorsed by the Citizens Against Government Waste and Citizens for a Sound Economy, which would terminate or substantially reform a dozen Federal programs identified by the Progressive Policy Institute and the Cato Institute as amongst the most egregious forms of corporate welfare in the Federal budget. These amount to savings of about $60 billion over the next 7 years. They are the Marketing Promotion Program, the advanced light water reactor, Forest Road Construction Program, highway demonstrations, military export sales, broadcast spectrum auction, Export/Import Bank, the B-2 bomber, Travel and Tourism Administration, sub- and supersonic research——

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a friendly inquiry?

Mr. MCCAIN. I only have 4 minutes. I say to my colleague.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. May I have 5 seconds?

Mr. MCCAIN. If you ask unanimous consent, I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Can the Senate get a copy of your amendment now? We have nothing.

Mr. MCCAIN. Absolutely.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I do not want to embarrass the U.S. Senate.

Mr. MCCAIN. I will make sure the Senator gets a copy of the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. We delivered a copy of the amendment.

Mr. MCCAIN. A copy of the amendment, I understand, has been delivered to the Senator from West Virginia. I certainly understand his frustration if he did not have a chance to see the amendment.

Mr. President, continuing—sub- and supersonic research; terminates the NASA program which conducts aircraft design activities, which can be undertaken by the private sector; oil and gas research and development; rural electric utilities service.

Mr. President, there is nothing new about these programs. They are items we have been discussing on the floor of the Senate for many years. They each have one thing in common; in a time of fiscal necessity, we can no longer afford them.

We are considering historic legislation to place the Federal budget on a 7-year path toward balance and to reform unsustainable entitlement programs which threaten to bankrupt our Nation. If we are going to restore fiscal sanity and if we are going to ask poor people to take cuts in their programs, if we are going to reduce the rate of growth of many, many programs that have been designed as a safety net for those less well off in our society, if we are going to have credibility with the American people, we had better go after this corporate pork and we better do it soon. Otherwise, we will open ourselves to justifiable criticism that we take care of corporate America while we do not take care of citizens who are less fortunate than we in our society.

I think it is an important amendment. I think it is going to put the Senate on record as to exactly where we stand on some of these programs that have clearly, clearly not required Federal funding in order to continue.

We owe a debt of gratitude to the Cato Institute and Progressive Policy Institute. Although they represent different ideological perspectives, they joined together to identify corporate welfare programs and to articulate the destructive role that they play in the Federal budget and the economy.

As time is limited on debate, I offer these insights as offered by these groups. The Cato Institute says:

Corporate welfare is an enormous drain on the Federal Treasury for little economic benefit.

The Progressive Policy Institute says:

The President and Congress can break the [budget] impasse and substantially reduce most spending and projected deficits * * * if they are willing to eliminate or reform scores of special spending programs and tax provisions narrowly targeted to subsidize influential industries.

I reserve my 1 minute.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, at a time when deep cuts are being proposed in Medicare, Medicaid, education, the earned income tax credit, welfare benefits, and other important programs for senior citizens, children, and working families, it is essential to see that corporate welfare—government subsidies to wealthy corporations—bears its fair share of the sacrifices needed to put the Nation's fiscal house in order.

I welcome the opportunity to work with Senator MCCAIN and other Senators in this bipartisan effort. We have identified a dirty dozen examples of corporate welfare that ought to be ended or drastically reduced.

My hope is that the current efforts will become the foundation for a longer-term initiative to deal more effectively with the wider range of corporate welfare provisions on both the spending side and the tax side of the Federal budget.

At a time when we are cutting billions of dollars from health benefits for the elderly, it makes no sense to continue to give away billions to wealthy telecommunications corporations by failing to obtain fair market value by auctioning electronic spectrum.

At a time when we are imposing billions of dollars in taxes on our working families, it makes no sense to spend billions of dollars on additional B-2 bombers that the Pentagon doesn't want and the Nation doesn't need.

At a time when we are imposing new burdens on education, it makes no sense to confer excessive subsidies on oil and gas companies.

At a time when we are cutting benefits for the disabled, it makes no sense to continue to provide subsidies for major companies to market their goods overseas.

Our current amendment will end these and several other forms of corporate welfare. It also calls for a base-closing type Federal Commission to deal with this equally flagrant type of corporate welfare—the lavish Federal subsidies dispensed to wealthy individuals and corporations through the Tax Code.

Over the next 7 years, these tax subsidies will cost the Treasury a total of $4.5 trillion. Yet they undergo no annual review during the appropriations process or during reconciliation. Once enacted, they can go on forever, with no effective oversight by Congress.

The Commission we are proposing will examine all existing tax subsidies and make recommendations to Congress that will be subject to a "yes" or "no" vote by the Senate and the House.

I commend Senator MCCAIN and our other colleagues for their work on this important issue, and I am hopeful that the Senate will approve our amendment. Our action on this legislation is part of a longer-term initiative to insist on congressional scrutiny of all Federal subsidies.

At a time when so many individuals and families are being asked to bear a heavy burden of budget cuts, there should be no free rides for special interest groups and their cozy subsidies.

Mr. KOHL. Mr. President. I rise in reluctant support of the amendment from the Senator from Arizona to cut spending from 12 programs.

I am supporting the amendment because, at a time when we are debating a budget bill to cut programs and assistance for the most needy in our society, I find it hard to pass up an opportunity to cut billions of dollars from programs like the B-2 bomber, and oil and gas subsidies.

However, while I will support this amendment, I am extremely unhappy with the decision by the proponents of this amendment to cut loan programs for rural electric cooperatives, who depend on those funds to keep utility rates reasonable for rural residents.

I am equally unhappy with the choice of the proponents of this amendment to eliminate the Market Promotion Program, on the heels of the successful effort to eliminate the corporate subsidies from that program, and target it toward small businesses and cooperatives.

So while I must reluctantly vote in support of this amendment to cut billions of dollars, if it does prevail, I will work to have the Rural Utility Service loans and the Market Promotion Program restored in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, this amendment has very broad jurisdictional problems with a whole series of committees. It is the opinion of this Senator that probably the primary committee of jurisdiction would again be the Finance Committee. Therefore, I will yield to a member of the Finance Committee, the Senator from West Virginia, for remarks to be included in our 5 minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I appreciate the action of the ranking member of the Budget Committee.

This amendment which we have not yet—let me say first of all, it will be my hope that our side will not take a position on this, because we are simply unaware of what it is. In fact, it appears to be many, many things.

It starts out with the elimination of the Market Promotion Program for agriculture, I think. It appears to be part Agriculture, part Finance, part Commerce Committee. It gets into the termination of the Advanced Light Water Reactor Program. I am thoroughly unqualified to review that. It talks about timber access roads. That is an Energy Committee matter. It talks about United States Travel and Tourism, USTTA. That is something I strongly support. Other Members may not. I suspect the Senator from Arizona does not.

There is a private sector funding for certain research and development by NASA relating to aircraft performance. That is the formal title. What that means I have absolutely no idea, and I have no way of finding out in the next 2 or 3 minutes.

There are many other things—the recoupment of certain Department of Defense costs for equipment sold directly by contractors to foreign countries and international organizations.

So, my plea would be for all my colleagues to take this 21-page amendment, between the time now—having no position on it, as would be my recommendation to my ranking member on the Budget Committee—and the time that we vote, and Senators make up their minds as best they can.

I am absolutely unable, having had this for a period of 2½ minutes, to make heads or tails of it, since it is many things and, I suspect, many things to many people. This is not, it strikes me, in terms of process, one of the Senate's finer moments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, following up the inquiry that was made just a few moments ago by the chairman of the committee, I would also presume we have not made up our minds on this side of the aisle on this amendment. I also assume that, without taking action now, it would not preclude us from making a point of order which might lie against this amendment at some future date before the vote is taken; is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order can be made when the amendment comes up again.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does Senator MCCAIN have any additional time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 51 seconds.

Mr. MCCAIN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona.

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, for the benefit of the Senator from West Virginia, we did distribute this amendment much earlier today. I am sorry he did not get it.

Also, I would like to point out that Senators FEINGOLD, KERRY, and KENNEDY are also cosponsors of this amendment. So some Members on his side of the aisle obviously are aware of it.

I am also aware that a budget point of order can be lodged against this amendment, and I do not expect it to pass, Mr. President. I am being very frank. But I will tell you what. We are going to be on record as to what we support and what we do not support in the way of corporate pork and whether we are really willing to make the sacrifices necessary to reduce this unconscionable debt of $187,000 per child in America while we support corporations all over America with taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arizona's time has expired.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Is there any time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is a minute and 40 seconds available to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. We have 40 seconds left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A minute and 40 seconds.

Mr. EXON. I am prepared to yield that back in a moment.

Mr. MCCAIN. The Senator from West Virginia——

Mr. EXON. I see the majority leader in the Chamber. Is he seeking recognition?

Mr. DOLE. No.

Mr. EXON. I yield back the remainder of our time.

I thought Senator ROCKEFELLER was finished.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. In responding to the Senator from Arizona and what I am sure is a very good-faith—I know is a very good-faith effort, if Senators FEINGOLD, KENNEDY and others are in fact cosponsors of it, one would never know by looking at the amendment because only the name of the Senator from Arizona is listed. And this is part of what I am talking about. If we are going to make serious decisions about the enormous variety of programs, we have to do this in some kind of more intelligent way. Now, the rules may preclude us from doing that because the agreement has already been made, but this is many things to many people.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Has all time expired?

Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 30 seconds.

Mr. EXON. Reserving the right to object, the yeas and nays are being requested. Again, I want to make it clear that would not preclude us from making a point of order before the vote is taken. That is correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. EXON. I thank the Chair.

Mr. DOMENICI. I thank the Senator from Arizona. We imposed on him this afternoon, having called down and you were not ready, and I apologize for that.

Mr. MCCAIN. Is it appropriate for the Senator from Nebraska to make a point of order at this point and we move to waive the point of order, or does that take place at the time of the vote?

Mr. EXON. I simply say we are looking at this. I do not know whether we are going make a point of order against this or not.

Mr. McCAIN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. EXON. We are simply reserving the right to do that at a certain time, and I will not give that up at this juncture.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

Mr. DOMENICI. Parliamentary inquiry. Is it not Senator BYRD's amendment that is next pursuant to the previous agreement?

Mr. FORD. That would be the Senator's prerogative.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am just asking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no specified list and therefore presumes it is to up to the managers of the bill.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, Senator BYRD will be next in line, and I am pleased to yield to him whatever time we have on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for up to 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2972

(Purpose: To strike the reductions in highway demonstration projects and to provide an offsetting revenue increase)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. BYRD], for himself and Mr. FORD, proposes an amendment numbered 2972.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Strike section 6002.

On page 1746, line 11, strike "2001" and insert "2000".

On page 1747, strike the matter between lines 7 and 8, and insert:

For calendar year:	The percentage is:
1995	100
1996	80
1997	60
1998	40
1999	20

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, less than 4 years ago, Congress passed the Intermodal Surface Transportation Efficiency Act, ISTEA. That legislation modernized our Federal Aid Highway Program by targeting available resources on the most critical needs. The bill before us would rescind $712 million for certain highway projects funded in ISTEA and previous appropriation acts. This represents a substantial retreat from the commitments made in ISTEA and in those appropriations acts.

Mr. President, my amendment will restore full funding for these important highway projects in 48 States. By rescinding these Federal funds, the bill before us would require States to cough up an additional $712 million for these projects. In effect, this would cause States to have to increase their matching share from 20 percent to as much as 32 percent in order to complete these projects.

Currently, the Department of Defense shows a total unobligated balance in excess of $10 billion for ongoing military construction projects, yet no one—no one—suggests that we should rescind 15 percent of these unobligated balances in defense and thereby ensure that these projects cannot be completed.

If we seek to reduce our Federal budget deficit by worsening our investment deficit in our Nation's infrastructure, we will have done absolutely nothing to improve our national prosperity. We will only dig our Nation into a deeper hole characterized by excessively congested and deteriorating roads and bridges.

According to the Department of Transportation, there are currently more than 234,000 miles of nonlocal roads across the Nation which require improvements immediately or within the next 5 years. Additionally, 118,000 of the Nation's 575,000 bridges, more than one in five, are structurally deficient. Our current highway capacity is being stretched beyond its limits, and what is our response at the Federal level? Just as is the case with our Federal budget deficit, we are leaving the mess to our grandchildren.

To fully offset the effects of the restoration of these critical highway projects, my amendment includes a modification to section 12803 of the reconciliation bill which phases out the tax deductions presently allowed for the interest paid on company-owned life insurance policies over the period 1996 to 2001. Companies have used this loophole to earn profits at the expense of the taxpayer by insuring employees, then borrowing on the policy and deducting the interest on company tax returns. Both the Senate and House bills proposed to phase out this loophole.

My amendment would simply require the phaseout in the Senate bill to be completed in 4 years rather than 5 years. My proposal would retain the key employee exception as contained in the Senate bill. My amendment would restore highway moneys to 48 States, and I urge its adoption.

Now, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. BUMPERS and Mr. PRYOR be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Now, Mr. President, 48 States will lose money unless my amendment is adopted. They will lose money for highways. I do not blame the committee that had to meet its instructions and did so by rescinding $712 million in highway funds. But I have provided an offset, and therefore I hope that this amendment will be adopted.

I have received letters of support of my amendment from the American Road and Transportation Builders Association, the American Trucking Association, and the Associated General Contractors of America.

Mr. President, let me just read a few of those States that lose money. Alabama will lose $12.8 million; Arizona, $2.8 million; Arizona, $31.5 million; California, $43.8 million; Connecticut, $5 million; Florida, $27.9 million; Georgia, $10.8 million; Hawaii, $3 million; Idaho, $8 million; Illinois, $29 million; Indiana, $8 million; Iowa, $9 million; Kansas, $9 million; Kentucky, $4.6 million; Louisiana, $13.8 million; Maine, $10.9 million; Maryland, $12.6 million; Michigan, $23 million; Minnesota, $23.5 million; Mississippi, $2.9 million; Missouri, $9.3 million; Montana, $3 million; Nebraska, $2.8 million; Nevada, $5.8 million; New Hampshire, $4.3 million; New Jersey, $29.3 million; New York, $40 million——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from West Virginia has expired.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I have on each desk the table of the amount that the various States would lose. I ask unanimous consent that this table, along with three letters in support of my amendment, be printed in the RECORD. I urge adoption of the amendment.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICAN ROAD & TRANSPORTATION BUILDERS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC. October 26, 1995.

DEAR SENATOR: The documented backlog of highway and bridge needs in the United States was estimated at more than $290 billion by the Department of Transportation in its 1993 report to the Congress. Despite this huge deficiency in infrastructure investment, the reconciliation bill (S. 1357) now before the Senate would reduce funding for highways by $522 million in fiscal year 1996 and an additional $165 million in fiscal year 1997.

The 4,000 members of the American Road & Transportation Buildings Association (ARTBA) strongly urge that you support an amendment to S. 1357 to be offered by Sen. Robert C. Byrd that would preserve existing funding levels.

Cutting highway funding at this time would be in conflict with the conference report on the fiscal 1996 transportation appropriations bill (H.R. 2002). That measure reflects the importance of highways to the country by increasing funding for their improvement. The federal highway program was, in fact, the only mode to receive a higher funding level than in fiscal 1995.

According to the Federal Highway Administration, America's highways provide 88 percent of the nation's personal transportation in addition to a large proportion of its commercial movement. Congress is expected shortly to approve designation of the National Highway System, a 159,000-mile network of roads intended to be the nation's backbone transportation system and the focus of federal highway investment in the years ahead. Clearly, this is no time to cutting already-inadequate funding for highway improvements. Furthermore, most of the proposed reduction is for activities supported by the Highway Trust Fund, a pay-as-you-go financing system supported by user fees. The sought budget savings can be found in other areas less crucial to this country's future.

ARTBA's nationwide membership is involved in the planning, design, construction, financing and operation of all forms of transportation facilities. It includes contractors, engineers and planners, equipment manufacturers, materials suppliers, public officials, financial institutions and educators. Again, we urge you to support Senator Byrd's amendment to S. 1357.

Sincerely,

T. PETER RUANE,
President & CEO.

AMERICAN TRUCKING ASSOCIATIONS,
Washington, DC. October 26, 1995.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate.
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: I am writing to indicate the support of the American Trucking Associations for your efforts to restore $712 million in badly needed highway funding.

A Department of Transportation report estimated that the backlong of highway and bridge needs in the United States was in excess of $290 million. The conference report on the FY '96 Department of Transportation Appropriations bill (H.R. 2002) recognized this problem by increasing highway funding. Your efforts to restore that funding is in line with the priorities set out in H.R. 2002.

We support your amendment to S. 1357, the Budget Reconciliation Act, and urge your Senate colleagues to approve this amendment.

Sincerely yours,

TIMOTHY P. LYNCH.

THE ASSOCIATED GENERAL CONTRACTORS OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC. October 26, 1995.

Hon. ROBERT C. BYRD,
U.S. Senate.
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BYRD: The 33,000 members of the Associated General Contractors of America strongly support your amendment to S. 1357 that will restore much needed funding for highway projects.

Your recognition of the problems that the existing provision (section 6002) will cause the highway program are greatly appreciated. As you are so keenly aware, your amendment restores $715 million in highway funding for 48 states (only Alaska and Delaware escape the cuts included in Section 6002). Elimination of this funding mid stream will simply delay needed construction and could cost as many as 36,000 jobs.

In addition to eliminating current funding for projects (many of which are under construction) that have been previously approved by both the House and Senate. Section 6002 also sets a bad precedent by using highway trust fund money to offset the general fund deficit and will adversely impact the baseline for highway funding which could lower the amount of resources made available for critical highway construction in the future.

Thank you for your continued vigilance in ensuring adequate investment in the Nation's Surface Transportation Programs.

Sincerely,

STEPHEN E. SANDHERR,
Executive Director,
Congressional Relations.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I was not privy to drafting the provisions in the Finance Committee, and from the Environment and Public Works Committee. I wonder if Senator CHAFEE might take half my time and explain this as he sees it.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, this provision that is referred to as a loophole was entirely legal over the years that it was enforced, and in the Finance Committee, after considerable negotiation in what we are doing in retroactively repealing something, if you would, the belief was that doing it over 5 years was a fair method of proceeding.

And the belief was that to do it in 4 years—a very abbreviated time—was just not fair. So, Mr. President, this is an intricate, complicated system, and a complicated piece of legislation. But we felt in the Finance Committee that indeed there was considerable pressure to give a longer time to phase it out. But we arrived at 5 years thinking that was a fair way of doing it, and the 4 years just does pose a severe problem and difficulty upon those who chose to use this type of company-owned life insurance policies. So, Mr. President, that was the rationale for going to the 5 years.

Mr. BYRD. Would the Senator yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, the House phases it out in 4 years. The Senate phases it out in 5 years. So either way it gets phased out. I suggest we phase it out in 4 years, and apply that money to these infrastructure projects in 48 States of the country. Let us cast a vote for America and the future of America.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I do not want to look at this in terms of whether we are voting for America or not. People would not want to stand up here and suggest they were not voting for America. I suspect they believe the amendments are for America.

What I am saying, Mr. President, is that we are doing something retroactively. And it was our belief that 5 years was the fair way. Now, I suppose you could do it in 1 year. But that does not make it any fairer. So, Mr. President, that was the basis on which we did the 5 years in the Finance Committee.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

How much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Two minutes and 20 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would just make a couple of quick points. Senator BYRD knows that I have great respect for him and I am fully aware of his constant and persistent desire that we spend money on infrastructure. But I think the only possible way, assuming it is not subject to a point of order, that this amendment should be adopted is if the U.S. Senate thinks that the demonstration highway projects were a good thing.

The demonstration highway projects did not treat all States equally. As a matter of fact, by being demonstration projects, some States got a lot more than others. So the distinguished Senator is now looking at that and saying some States would lose and some States would gain, but this is not a formula where everyone was allowed demonstration projects. This is a nonformula.

The demonstrations were established by committee or by appropriation or in that way. And anybody interested in whether this is a fair distribution among our States can just look at the list which I do not chose to read here tonight, but there are some very disproportionate returns of money to certain States and very little to other States that should have the same amount on population and highways. But the demonstrations were not set out in any fair way in the beginning.

So if you think the highway demonstration programs were great, then obviously you ought to put them back in here whereas the committee decided that they did not think they ought to be in and we ought to save money. So that is going to be the issue. That is if it is not subject to a point of order. And the reason I say "if," my instinct tells me it is, but then I think of who offered it, and I am quite sure he made sure it was not subject to a point of order.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. If we do not adopt this amendment, then we are retroactively wiping out those infrastructure projects in 48 States of this country. I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment. I did not mention Pennsylvania, $111 million; Ohio, $22 million; Texas, $29 million; Virginia, $14 million; West Virginia, $66 million. I have only read some of them.

Mr. DOMENICI. The Senator mentioned West Virginia?

Mr. BYRD. I mentioned West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Mexico has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not going to ask for the yeas and nays or move to table. I will wait for the vote, the time that it comes up.

Senator CHAFEE, I believe, is the next one.

Does the Senator have a copy of Senator CHAFEE's amendment?

Mr. EXON. We do. I might say at this time, following Senator CHAFEE's presentation, I will yield our 5 minutes, which is the jurisdiction of the Finance Committee, to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair would be good enough to tell when I have used 3 minutes.

As I understand it, we have 5 minutes on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct.

Mr. CHAFEE. If the Chair could tell me at the end of 3 minutes, I would appreciate it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator is offering an amendment, he needs to send it to the desk.

AMENDMENT NO. 2973

(Purpose: To guarantee coverage under the medicaid program for low-income aged, blind, and disabled individuals eligible for supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of the Social Security Act)

Mr. CHAFEE. I am sending the amendment to the desk, an unprinted amendment, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHAFEE], for himself and Mr. CONRAD, proposes amendment numbered 2973.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I would ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 767, strike lines 12 through 15 and insert the following:

"(3) provide for making medical assistance available to any individual receiving cash benefits under title XVI by reason of disability (including blindness) or receiving medical assistance under section 1902(f) (as in effect on the day before the date of enactment of this Act); and".

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am offering this amendment on behalf of Senator CONRAD and myself. What it does, it guarantees Medicaid eligibility for low-income individuals with disabilities. Under the language reported by the Senate Finance Committee. States are required to provide coverage to persons with disabilities.

However, and here is the hitch—the States are given complete latitude in establishing the definition of who is disabled. It could be only those who are quadriplegics who are blind are considered disabled. I mean, they can have any definition the States wish. What our amendment does is it sets a minimum standard by requiring States to provide coverage to children and adults with disabilities who receive benefits under the Supplemental Security Income Program [SSI].

But here are the important words, the SSI Program, as amended by the welfare reform bill which we passed here a month or so ago, we passed here by a vote of 87 to 12. So this is a very restricted group. This is not the SSI group that we worry about that included substance abusers, for example. That is not in this category. Only the neediest individuals qualify for SSI. They all have incomes below the poverty level and indeed currently they have to—they cannot be above 75 percent of the poverty level and qualify. Now, this is a pretty low-income group.

Why is this amendment important? Without this requirement, States will have the ability to exclude from coverage a group of individuals who depend on this Medicaid coverage as their only source of health insurance coverage. There is no place else they can go. You say get private insurance. Well, they first cannot afford it. And second, they all have preexisting conditions, and so therefore would not be qualified.

Mr. President, there is no mandated benefit package in this proposal. These are the facts. We do not mandate a benefit package. We leave that up to the States. All we are saying is, you have to cover this group. And how do you describe this group? You describe them by the SSI description as we had it in the welfare program. So, indeed, with no mandated benefit package, the States could say, "For this group there will be one aspirin a year." That could be done. But at least you have to cover everybody in the group with whatever the benefit package is.

Mr. President, I think it is very important to remember that we are giving the States, over the next 7 years, $800 billion—$800 billion, Mr. President. And they are going to receive their allocations based on the fact of those whom they covered in 1995, and in the group that they covered in which they got their money are these disabled. So, Mr. President, these are a very, very low-income group in our society. They are being cared for very frequently by their parents and others, kept in the community. And without this safety net they would have to in many cases be institutionalized at a far higher cost. I hope my colleagues will join me in preserving this critical safety net.

I yield time to Senator CONRAD.

Mr. CONRAD. Mr. President, I am proud to join Senator CHAFEE in offering this amendment. Mr. President, simply put, this provides health care support to the most severely disabled individuals in our society. Senator CHAFEE and I received a letter of support from the Consortium for Citizens With Disabilities, 30 national organizations that work to support the disabled. They said, and I quote:

> We believe that your amendment to establish a minimum floor of eligibility for children and adults with disabilities is a fundamental component of ensuring a basic safety net for low-income people with severe disabilities.

Mr. President, health care is not an option for these people, it is a necessity. They have it today. They should not be at risk for losing it tomorrow.

During Finance Committee deliberation, we received this communication. It said:

> Mr. Senator, if you are a person with mental retardation, these services are not optional. Remember, this is a lifelong condition which cannot be cured like substance abuse or unemployment. Also remember, it is not a self-inflicted condition, but rather one that a person is born with.

Mr. President, States should not cut severely disabled people from Medicaid. That is the premise of this amendment. I hope our colleagues will support it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, first, I want to compliment the Senator from Rhode Island, because actually it was the Senator from Rhode Island and myself in the Finance Committee who put up this amendment, which won 17 to 3, and then it sort of disappeared. It particularly disappeared with respect to the disabled. It should be understood the Senator is entirely correct in his amendment, and I urge my colleagues to support his amendment.

On the other hand, it is also important to understand that by voting for this amendment that we are not going to be making a prince out of a frog; that the underlying Medicaid bill which encompasses this amendment is, in the judgment of this Senator, a disaster.

This amendment will help. I do not want to in any way diminish that. This is pregnant women, children, and the disabled, and it is a guarantee. The guarantee was not there before.

The Senator is right when he says the States now have to make a determination under the current law what "disabled" means. Good heavens, 50 different definitions coming in on "disabled."

The point is, it is a good amendment in a bad bill. The States will still lose 30 percent of their Medicaid funding. In the case of my State, it is a little more than that. On nursing home protection, Federal standards are wiped out. That really does bring up the specter, and some say, "Well, you are just making a fuss over this." What a fuss. The standards we passed in 1987 by which you could no longer tether, that is tie down, an elderly person in a nursing home or drug into passivity an elderly person, is wiped out. So that is now possible under the underlying bill.

These are terrible things. Children with primary care needs, early detection, early protection, no immunization—it is not a good bill. But the amendment is good and the Senator from Rhode Island has suggested an amendment that ought to be adopted.

So I just simply make that point and compliment the Senator significantly for now getting the word "guaranteed" coverage into the legislation. I compliment him on that and urge my colleagues to support the Senator's amendment.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Has all time been used on the amendment before us?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska controls 1 minute, 50 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, if I could have just a portion of that.

Mr. EXON. I will be glad to yield half of it to my colleague.

Mr. DOMENICI. Wait a minute; wait a minute. How do we get all 10 minutes in favor of the amendment? I do not want to argue against it. You cannot allocate the time to the other side if they are in favor of the amendment. Is that not the rule? If it is not, I am mistaken.

Mr. EXON. I do not think the rule specifies that. But in a matter of fairness, I agree to the chairman's—who wishes to speak in opposition?

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, it is such an outstanding amendment. I do not think there is any opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am not so sure but you are right. But I want to make sure we do not have all 10 minutes. I thought we were going to save 5.

Mr. CHAFEE. Why do we not save time and just adopt it?

Mr. DOMENICI. We cannot do that right now. It may come to pass.

Mr. EXON. I yield half my time to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield? Will the Senator from Rhode Island correct the misstatement of the Senator from West Virginia about pregnant women, children and disabled as opposed to the elderly?

Mr. CHAFEE. I am going to stick what we have here, which is we are solely dealing with low-income individuals with disabilities. Mr. President, I tell you, when you are talking 75 percent of poverty, you are really talking about poor people.

But the key thing I want to stress here is these folks are being cared for in the community very frequently by their parents. And do not think these are 6-year-olds and their parents are 35. Their parents are frequently 65 and these individuals are 40 years old. But they are being cared for in the community, because they have this safety net of Medicaid coverage that is there in case they get ill. Otherwise, I am certain that they would end up in institutions at a far greater cost to the public and all of us.

So, Mr. President, I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. COHEN. Will the Senator yield? I indicate my support for the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired. If the manager wishes to speak in opposition, he is entitled to have 5 minutes restored in opposition.

Mr. DOMENICI. I do not choose to speak in opposition. Does any Senator want to speak in opposition? What I would like to do is take my 5 minutes and I would like to yield 2 minutes of that to Senator COHEN. He can speak in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ten minutes has expired in support.

Mr. DOMENICI. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator have 2 minutes to speak in favor of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The manager is entitled to 5 minutes in opposition. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I thank my friend. I rise in support of the CHAFEE amendment. Senator CHAFEE has tried valiantly to include the poorest of the poor in our system, and for anyone to object to having the disabled included—I might say, it does not go far enough perhaps, because as I understand the Senator's amendment, it includes pregnant women and children and does not include elderly; it includes disabled but it leaves it up to the States to define what "disabled" is.

I know the Senator was eager to use the SSI determination for "disabled." Is that the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CHAFEE. That is right. It has already been adopted. Pregnant women and children up to the age of 12 and 100 percent of poverty, that is covered. And also the disabled are to be covered, but the definition of "disabled" was not made.

Mr. COHEN. My understanding is now you have included the definition that has been acknowledged under the SSI determination.

Mr. CHAFEE. As changed by the welfare bill.

Mr. COHEN. Then please let me lend my strong support for that, and I want to thank my friend from New Mexico for allowing me a moment or two to express my support.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, is this the proper time to ask for the yeas and nays?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It would be appropriate.

Mr. CHAFEE. I do so. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I want to thank everyone.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thought he was next. I was mistaken. I believe Senator BREAUX is next.

I yield our 5 minutes to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana.

AMENDMENT NO. 2963

(Purpose: To provide for a partially refundable child tax credit)

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk and ask it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. BREAUX] proposes an amendment numbered 2963.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1469, beginning on line 2, strike all through page 1471, line 20, and insert the following:

SEC. 12001. CHILD TAX CREDIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subpart C of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 is amended by redesignating section 35 as section 36 and by inserting after section 34 the following new section:

"(b) ADJUSTED GROSS INCOME LIMITATION.—The aggregate amount of the credit which would (but for this subsection) be allowed by subsection (a) shall be reduced (but not below zero) by 20 percent for each $3,000 by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $60,000.

"(d) CERTAIN OTHER RULES APPLY.—Rules similar to the rules of subsections (d) and (e) of section 32 shall apply for purposes of this section."

"(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for such subpart C is amended by striking the item relating to section 35 and inserting the following new items:

"Sec. 35. Child tax credit.
"Sec. 36. Overpayments of tax."

"(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, my colleagues, the largest item in the Finance Committee bill, by far, is the $500 per child tax credit. It cost $141 billion over 7 years. That is a lot of money. Some people think we should not have a tax cut at all. But this bill is going to have a tax cut in it. The largest one is going to be a per child tax cut at $500 per child. I would think that all of us, if we know it is going to pass, should at least agree on one thing—the largest number of families that need it should get it.

Here is what my amendment does. It addresses a problem that is very real. Simply stated, the Republican proposal only is a credit against income tax. It is not a credit against the largest tax that people pay in this country, that is, the payroll tax. For 75 percent of American families, they pay more in payroll tax than in income tax. This child tax credit is not an offset against the payroll tax. This chart shows that. The blue line is the payroll taxes that people pay on average. The orange line is an estimate of their income tax.

So you see, families making $16,000, all the way up to families on this chart making almost $27,000, are paying far more in payroll taxes than they are paying in income taxes.

The figures show that under the Republican proposal, something like 44 percent of all the children in America would only get a partial or no credit at all, because the credit is only against the income tax. Many families do not even pay that much in income tax.

If you have a family that has two children, that is a $1,000 credit. But if they are only paying $700 or $500 in income tax, they do not get to use the credit. Therefore, simply stated, my amendment makes the $500 per child tax credit a credit against both the income tax or the payroll tax. We spend the same amount of money—not a dime more, not a dime less. But we cover 44 percent more children. We cover about 31 million more children living in families, and if we are going to spend this money for a credit, let us make sure they get it.

The second chart tells you what we are talking about when we look at family earnings and how much they pay in income taxes—the actual numbers. A family making $20,000 a year is at about $458 in income tax. That would not even pay for the credit for one child. But that same family is spending over $1,500—$1,530—in payroll tax. My amendment says that the $500 per child tax credit can be used as a credit against the payroll tax, as well as an income tax, so that the family making $20,000 will get some of the benefits of this massive program that we are passing. What is wrong with saying let us make sure that the most number of children get the benefit?

I have seen some of the Republican charts that say, well, under this credit, this proposal, we get a huge credit against income tax. Sure, the problem that is most families pay more in payroll tax, and it is no offset whatsoever against the payroll tax. So for families making under $30,000 a year, for most of them it is no benefit at all.

Look at this chart. This is every State in the country. This is the median household income. In Louisiana, it is $25,000. Under the Republican proposal, if you are in a family making less than $30,000 a year, you are not going to get the benefit of a per child tax credit. So my proposition is very simple. If you want to add about 31 million more people to the rolls and give them the benefit, for the same amount of money—exactly the same amount of money—my credit goes out to families making up to $75,000 a year. It starts to phase out at $60,000 and eliminates it at $75,000 per family, but it makes it refundable against a payroll tax. By spending the same amount of money, we cover 31 million more children. I think that is what we are trying to do.

I got this wonderful note from the Christian Coalition saying they are going to target this amendment. They say, "We are going to portray this amendment as a vote to gut the $500 per child tax credit." It does not gut it; it is the same amount of money. We are just covering 31 million more children in this country by making it a credit against the payroll tax. They say they want to make sure they get the most number of people covered. That is exactly what my amendment does. They say, well, his starts to phase out at $60,000 per year. That is true.

but it goes up to the same amount, $75,000, that the original Republican proposal did. Just by making it refundable against the payroll tax——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BREAUX. Forty-four percent more children are covered.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield 2½ minutes to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, first let me say that I agree with the Senator from Louisiana in wanting to make this tax cut refundable against the FICA or payroll tax, because I argued many months and many times that we should do this and expand the tax credit, because FICA is one of the most regressive.

But this is not the way to do it. This is not the way to pit one group of hard-working, tax-paying families against another group of families that struggle every day to try and make ends meet, to provide for his or her family.

Nearly 75 percent of the tax credits in the Republican plan go to families making under $75,000 a year, those hard-working families who have been asked to pay.

This is the real crux of the argument: They have been asked to pay more of their income to Federal taxes every year, year after year. Our plan does target low-income families with increases in the EITC credit, already giving $24 billion this year, growing to like $30 billion, and in the next year, $40 billion plus. So those families are seeing an increase in their earned-income tax credit. They are getting tax relief or more money in their pockets.

But who is forgotten? The families forgotten are those making between $30,000 and $75,000 a year. They are forgotten for the EITC program. They do not get the benefits here. Yet, they are remembered one day of the year—tax day—when they are asked to spend more and more of their money. I would like to work with the Senator from Louisiana to try and define ways to shrink the size of the Federal Government, to save additional moneys, to be able to expand even farther the tax credits, to give more persons tax relief. But let us not pit one group who are asked to pay and pay, and pay more of their income, as well as their FICA. Their FICA taxes are also being deducted.

Let us give them credits and not pit one against the other. Let us not take money from the taxpayers. Let us work to shrink the size of the Government and give more Americans more of their money back in the form of tax credits. I would like to work with the Senator from Louisiana in doing that. But I do not support this, and I urge my colleagues to vote no on the amendment.

Mr. BREAUX. Will the Senator from New Mexico yield me 60 seconds? I do not think I have any time left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana has used his time. The Senator from New Mexico has 2 minutes 30 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment. First of all, everybody should know this amendment starts phasing out the child tax care credit at $60,000. The credit that we have in the Senate bill, when coupled with the earned-income tax credit, achieves the same goal as the Breaux amendment. It relieves the lower-income folks of the payroll burden. His would be to the contrary. The child credit and EIC is already in excess of the family's Federal payroll taxes. The employee and the employer share for families living at or near the poverty line. A family earning under $12,500, with two children, and families with earnings under $15,500 will have the same effect under our bill. Yet, we will be able to cover more Americans because we do not stop it at $60,000.

So I do not believe we ought to do this. Frankly, I am not a great fan of refundable anything because I believe they are rampant with fraud. We just got through a situation with EITC, and it is about 25 percent fraudulent because we are giving people a check back as a refundable tax credit. Some may be for that. I do not think it is a very good policy. The same thing will happen to this one if we do it this way.

Mr. GRAMS. If the Senator will yield, the Senator from Louisiana said more children would be covered. Actually, under his bill, because he would limit the age at 15 and not 17, as in our proposal, 5 million children between the ages of 16 and 17, whose families' income fall below $75,000 a year, would not be denied this child tax credit. It would cover fewer children and not more. So I think the whole crux of this plan is to give tax relief for families.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, in closing, I do not believe we ought to stop a child tax credit at 16 years of age. I have been through this, and that is about the time they start to get really expensive. There we are stopping it just about at that time, while in our bill we add two more years, which is much better in terms of really helping middle income families when they need it the most.

Mr. ABRAHAM. Mr. President, I will vote against the Breaux amendment. Although I have expressed support for making the $500-per-child tax credit refundable against the FICA tax, this amendment is the wrong way to achieve this objective. First, it dramatically limits the $55 credit for many middle-class families. Second, it limits the number of children who would qualify for the credit.

For families earning between $60,000 and $75,000, this amendment would unfairly prevent them from receiving the $500 child tax credit.

It is my hope that FICA refundability will be raised during conference and that a solution will be adopted which will provide much needed tax relief to all American families.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I move to table that amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think it comes to our side. Senator BOND is next.

Mr. EXON. When Senator BOND finishes, I wish to yield the 5 minutes on our side to the discretion of the Senator from Arkansas.

AMENDMENT NO. 2975

(Purpose: To increase the health insurance deduction for self-employed individuals and to strike the long-term care insurance provisions)

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank my good friend and eminent leader of the Budget Committee for this time. I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator PRYOR and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND], for himself and Mr. PRYOR, proposes an amendment numbered 2975.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 1553, beginning with line 13, strike all through page 1588, line 24, and insert:

SUBCHAPTER A—HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 12201. INCREASE IN DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) INCREASE IN DEDUCTION.—Section 162(l) is amended—

(1) by striking "30 percent" in paragraph (1) and inserting "the applicable percentage", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(6) APPLICABLE PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the applicable percentage shall be determined as follows:

"For taxable years beginning in	The applicable in percentage is:
1996 and 1997	60
1998 and thereafter	100."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BOND. There is a great injustice in our tax law, an injustice that I suspect everyone in this body has addressed at some time or another. That is the inequity in the deductibility of health insurance costs.

I do not think I need to tell my colleagues that corporations historically can deduct 100 percent of the health care insurance premium that they pay for employees, and the employees do not have to declare any of the employer-paid health insurance premiums as income. At the same time, the self-employed farmers, the small business men and women of this country cannot deduct more than 30 percent.

This body took a great step forward earlier this year when we reinstated for last year the 25-percent deduction and increased that to 30 percent. Frankly, that is not enough.

In my role as chairman of the Small Business Committee, I have heard from small businesses in my State and across the country who are concerned, and greatly concerned, rightfully so, about health care.

The occupant of the chair and I know, because we have worked on health care issues over recent years, one of the biggest problems we face are those who are uninsured, because they are limited to a 30-percent deduction as self-employed people for health care insurance premiums.

Under the amendment that I am offering today with Senator PRYOR, we will increase the deduction for self-employed to 60 percent next year, 60 percent the following year, and then in the year 1998, increase that to 100 percent. Mr. President, I believe that is the way to achieve equity and ensure that more of the self-employed are insured.

The offset to this provision—we seek to offset by taking out the new program for long-term care insurance included in the Finance Committee markup. I think it is a good idea down the road, or perhaps even before we complete work on this bill, to start providing some incentives for long-term insurance. I think it makes a great deal of sense. I think first we have to address the basic inequity.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Missouri for yielding to me, and I thank the distinguished manager, Senator EXON of Nebraska, for giving me the opportunity to address this issue.

We all know last spring the Congress passed and the President signed into law H.R. 831. This was a bill to restore the 25-percent health care deduction for the self-employed and for the farmers of America. As my colleagues may remember, Mr. President, this deduction had expired and the self-employed were receiving absolutely no health care deduction at all for a period of time. It was an absurd position in which to place small businesses and the family farm.

H.R. 831 also increased the deduction for 30 percent for 1995 and for all years in the future. It was a very good step, a positive step for small business and for the family farm.

I was proud, by the way, to join Senator ROTH and Senator BOND and others in a letter with 73 of our colleagues who promised not to offer or support any amendment on the floor. It was a strong statement, but we underscored our recognition of the importance of the health care deduction for the self-employed.

Last week when the tax bill came before the Senate Finance Committee, I was disappointed that the chairman's markup did not include any progress on the deduction front. I offered an amendment to increase this deduction to 50 percent—from 30 percent to 50 percent. I was further disappointed when this amendment failed on a party-line vote.

I am very proud to join with Senator BOND this evening on the floor of the Senate in an amendment to increase the self-employed deduction not to 50 percent, Mr. President, but to 100 percent. There is where it should be, and that is what our amendment does.

It is an issue of parity. It is an issue of increasing coverage for small business and for farmers, for making insurance more affordable. It would move the 30-percent rate to 60 percent in 1996 for deduction. In 1997, it would continue at 60 percent. By 1998, Mr. President, we would have a 100-percent deduction for small businesses, for the self-employed, and for the farm families of America. I think it would do more to basically make insurance more affordable and to provide insurance for many, many more millions of Americans that have labored under a very inequitable situation.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I thank my distinguished colleague from Arkansas, who has been a champion of this deduction for a long time. It is a pleasure to work with him on this amendment.

I want to advise my colleagues that we have received strong letters of support from a whole host of organizations—agriculture and small business, including the Farm Bureau Federation, ABC, Chamber of Commerce, H.E.A.L., Association for Self-Employed, Association of Home Builders, Cattlemen's Association, National Restaurant Association, NFIB, National Retail Federation, Small Business Legislative Council, Society of American Florists.

I ask unanimous consent this be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUPPORT THE BOND/PRYOR AMENDMENT

OCTOBER 25, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Small Business, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR BOND: We, the undersigned organizations, support your and Senator Pryor's amendment to Reconciliation to increase health insurance deductibility for the self-employed.

For years, large corporations have been deducting 100 percent of the cost of their health insurance while self-employed business owners like sole proprietors, Subchapter S corporations and partnerships have been limited to 30 percent—which was just increased five percent this year. This is simply unfair and must be changed.

We believe that before the Congress authorizes a costly, new deduction for any other kind of health care benefit self-employed small business owners and farmers should get 100 percent health insurance deductibility.

Thank you for your leadership on behalf of the self-employed. We look forward to working with you to pass this important amendment. We urge all of your colleagues to support your amendment.

Sincerely,

American Farm Bureau Federation, Associated Builders and Contractors, Chamber of Commerce of the United States, H.E.A.L. (Healthcare Equity Action League),[1] National Association for the Self-Employed, National Association of Home Builders, National Cattlemen's Association, National Federation of Independent Business, National Restaurant Association, National Retail Federation, Small Business Legislative Council, Society of American Florists.

SMALL BUSINESS,
LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL,
Washington, DC, October 24, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: We strongly support your amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care expenses.

As you know, sole-proprietors, partners and S Corporation shareholders can now deduct 30 percent of such costs. For many years, these individuals were not allowed to deduct health care costs at all. For a time, the deduction was 25 percent, but it was a temporary deduction and we found ourselves fighting each year to justify a provision that should not require a constant defense.

The prohibition on such deductions is an anachronism from the 1950s, based on an outdated concept of how business entities should be taxed under our system. In the modern day business environment, this policy is simply unfair. Frankly, we believe, if not for the issue of revenue, Congress would have already changed this law. It is time to address this inequity once and for all time.

The Small Business Legislative Council [SBLC] is a permanent, independent coalition of nearly one hundred trade and professional associations that share a common commitment to the future of small business. Our members represent the interests of small businesses in such diverse economic sectors as manufacturing, retailing, distribution, professional and technical services, construction, transportation, and agriculture. NATIONAL ASSOCIATION
FOR THE SELF-EMPLOYED,
Washington, DC, October 25, 1995.

Hon. KIT BOND,
Chairman, Senate Small Business Committee, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN BOND: It is my understanding that you intend to offer an amendment during the budget debate that would raise the health insurance deduction for the self-employed from the current 30 percent level to 100 percent. On behalf of the National Association for the Self-Employed, I completely support your efforts.

Raising this deduction level would create tax equity between corporate America and small business. Currently, large businesses can deduct 100 percent of the premiums they pay on behalf of their employees for health insurance coverage. The self-employed can only deduct 30 percent of their costs. And the self-employed who pay for their own insurance are primarily paying with after-tax dollars, effectively making the policies more expensive. A 100-percent deduction would give the self-employed the equity they deserve.

Also a 100-percent deduction would enable many self-employed to purchase a health insurance policy, a luxury many cannot currently afford. I believe passing a 100-percent deduction would significantly decrease the number of uninsured individuals in this country.

We have polled our 320,000 self-employed members and 100-percent deductibility of health insurance premiums is the No. 1 issue of concern to them. Please do not hesitate to call on me. I stand ready to assist your efforts in any way I can.

Sincerely,

BENNIE L. THAYER,
President/CEO.

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Small Business Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR KIT: The U.S. chamber of Commerce Federation of 215,000 businesses (96% of whom are small businesses), 3,000 state and local chambers of commerce, 1,200 trade and professional organizations, and 75 American chambers of commerce abroad strongly supports your small business amendment to the Balanced Budget Reconciliation bill. Your amendment would allow the self-employed and small businesses to deduct 100% of their health insurance costs, a benefit currently available only to large corporations.

As you know, the Chamber has long maintained that the self-employed and unincorporated small businesses should receive the same tax treatment currently available to corporations. Sound tax policy dictates full deductibility of premium of self-insurance cost as ordinary and necessary business expenses. There is no valid tax policy reason for treating the smallest businesses any differently. It is vitally important to the nation's economic security that the smallest businesses, frequently new and often struggling, should be granted a measure of security equal to that of larger corporations.

Once again, the Chamber commends your work on behalf of our nation's small businesses and looks forward to working with you towards resolving this issue. The inability of the nation's smallest businesses to deduct the full cost of their health insurance, and the inequity in being denied an advantage granted to their incorporated fellows, has been a thorn in the side of small business and the self-employed for years. It is time that thorn is removed and equality is restored.

Sincerely,

R. BRUCE JOSTEN.

PROMOTIONAL PRODUCTS
ASSOCIATION INTERNATIONAL,
Irving, TX, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the Promotional Products Association International (PPA), I wish to express our support for your amendment to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs.

Under current law, they may deduct only 30 percent of their health care costs, and the current deduction was only recently made permanent. For the millions of sole proprietors, partners, and S Corporation shareholders, including PPA members, this is an unfair penalty with no sound basis in tax policy.

The current policy dates back to another era in tax policy, when business entities such as sole proprietorships were viewed upon with great suspicion. Now, decades later, economic and social policy has evolved to the point where we find more and more individuals opting to structure their small business in such a fashion. These small businesses are an increasingly important source of strength in our economy.

It is time to give them the same opportunity to deduct their health care costs as any other business.

The promotional products industry is the advertising, sales promotion, and motivational medium employing useful articles of merchandise imprinted with an advertiser's name, logo, or message. Our industry sales are over $6 billion and PPA members are manufacturers and distributors of such goods and services.

Sincerely,

H. TED OLSON, MAS,
President.

NATIONAL HOME
FURNISHINGS ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the National Home Furnishings Association [NHFA], I wish to express our strong support for your amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs. It is long overdue.

It is unfair to penalize small business owners solely because they elect to do business as a sole proprietorship, partnership, or S Corporation, yet that is what the current tax code does with respect to their own health care costs.

As you know, for the first time this year, the self-employed can deduct 30 percent of their health care costs. For many years, they were not allowed to deduct even that much. We all know what health care costs these days, and it is simply unfair to impose such a harsh penalty which does not have any sound tax policy justification to support it.

The NHFA represents approximately 2,800 retailers of home furnishings throughout the United States. Thank you for your efforts on our behalf.

Sincerely,

PATRICIA N. BOWLING,
Executive Vice President.

WORLD FLOOR
COVERING ASSOCIATION,
Washington, DC, October 26, 1995.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER BOND,
Chairman, Committee on Small Business, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: On behalf of the World Floor Covering Association [WFCA], representing floorcovering retailers throughout the United States, I wish to express our strong support for our amendment to the budget reconciliation bill to increase the deduction the self-employed may take for their own health care costs. It is about time this inequity in our tax policy was resolved once and for all.

Mr. BOND. Now, Mr. President, I know there are a number of my colleagues who feel very strongly about the long-term care insurance program. We have had discussions about finding other offsets to this amendment so that we may be able to start on that long-term care prospect. I will be most anxious to work with my colleagues because I think everybody here at one time or another has expressed his or her strong support for the full deductibility of health care.

With that, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to modify the amendment prior to a vote on it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Reserving the right to object, I do not understand what that means.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, if I could respond.

Mr. DOMENICI. You mean, if you find another source of revenue?

Mr. BOND. There are minds far brighter than mine and people with far greater access to the intricacies of this measure who are embarking on a good-faith effort to find offsets to get them scored by the Joint Tax Committee.

I sincerely hope we can find a way to accommodate both the long-term insurance and the health care. I believe very strongly that the health care deductibility for self-employed must be done. I would like to be able to work with my colleagues who support the long-term insurance program so that can be accomplished.

At this point we do not have an offset. I want to make sure this measure is before us.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMENICI. Senator DOLE wants to be recognized in opposition.

Mr. DOLE. Only in opposition to the long-term care.

I think in this matter, a lot of the debate in the last 2 or 3 days has been long-term care—Medicare. Medicaid. We are trying to get the younger people involved in long-term care so that when they arrive at their senior years, they will have long-term care through the private sector.

It is something we have worked on in a bipartisan way in the Finance Committee for years. We finally have it in the bill. We believe it is a very good provision.

I do not object to the amendment that is pending. I hope they can find another revenue source. I support what Senator BOND and Senator PRYOR are trying to do. The self-employed should have the same rights as everyone else, the same deduction. I hope that if we can find another revenue source—because I really believe the long-term care amendment, although this is very important, is just as important, or we will be back here in 10, 15, 20 years, somebody will be back here wondering why we did not do something to get people interested in buying insurance and getting a deduction.

I hope we can resolve it before we have the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request?

Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, we said we had no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is agreed to.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think we were entitled to 5 minutes in opposition, because the other side was in favor. But I am just going to take a minute and say I compliment Senator BOND for what he is trying to do. But I, too, hope he will find another offset, because I truly believe, in the midst of a national debate on Medicare and Medicaid, much of which is long-term care, we have come to the conclusion that the missing link out there is that not many people have long-term care protection.

That is getting to be a bigger and bigger burden of our Government. We are going to be less and less able to do it. That we start, in this bill, moving in the direction of letting that happen for people who want to save for themselves and buy insurance and get an appropriate credit, seems to me to be very positive. I hope the Senator from Missouri, for whom I have great respect, would agree with that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I cannot disagree with a thing my distinguished colleague from New Mexico has said. I had the pleasure of meeting with business men and women in his State. Both of these are important in his State, my State, and the rest of the country.

I do want to make sure this bill has the deductibility phased in, full deductibility for the self-employed and small businesses. We are most anxious to work cooperatively with colleagues on both sides to accomplish this.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back any time I had in opposition.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas has 2 minutes and 9 seconds.

Mr. PRYOR. Will Senator EXON like some time?

Mr. EXON. I will wait until the Senator finishes.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, just for 1 minute. On many occasions we, all of us, I assume, have gone to town meetings or wherever and said we believe the self-employed, small business, farmers of our country need to have the same rights and same deductibility, especially in purchasing their health care coverage for themselves and their employees. This is exactly what Senator BOND and I are trying to craft tonight, that opportunity. I hope we can give that to these individuals who truly create the jobs in America and who really are deserving of this opportunity to participate in the health care system of America.

I hope we can work out something and I pledge my best efforts to do so.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, do I have any time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska has 1 minute and 15 seconds.

Mr. EXON. I would like to use that 1 minute, if I might, for a brief colloquy between myself and the chairman of the committee. I think we can jointly announce some good news. I think we are moving quite well here. The amendments I have next, that I think are agreed to on the other side—next will be Senator BIDEN, then Senator SNOWE, then Senator DORGAN, then Senator PHIL GRAMM of Texas, and then Senator KERRY of Massachusetts.

I am pleased with the way we are cooperating on both sides and the fact the Senators are here, prepared to offer their amendments in a timely fashion.

Is that the schedule for the next amendments, in that order?

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes. I would make sure and confirm on our side that, when we have done Senator GRAMM of Texas, it is my calculation that we will have had 8 of our 10, still leaving us with 2. If that is everybody's understanding, then I am perfectly in accord.

Mr. EXON. It appears to me that is accurate.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Will the Senator yield for just a moment? I did not hear the Senator from Nebraska. What was the order of the next 50 minutes, did he say?

Mr. EXON. The next amendments, 10 minutes each, equally divided. The next will be Senator BIDEN followed by Senator SNOWE followed by Senator DORGAN followed by Senator PHIL

Gramm of Texas followed by Senator KERRY of Massachusetts.

With that, I yield 5 minutes to Senator BIDEN, from the State of Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

MOTION TO COMMIT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I send a motion to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BIDEN] proposes a motion to commit with instructions.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the motion be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The motion is as follows:

MOTION TO COMMIT WITH INSTRUCTIONS

Mr. President, I move to commit the bill S. 1357 to the Committee on Finance with instructions that the Committee on Finance report the bill back to the Senate within 3 days (not to include any day the Senate is not in session) with identical language, except that the Committee on Finance shall include a provision in the bill which would provide tax relief to middle-class American families and which would help middle-class families meet the rapidly rising costs of a higher education by providing a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for the costs of a college education for individual taxpayers with adjusted gross income of not more than $90,000 and for married couples with adjusted gross incomes of not more than $120,000. The Committee on Finance should also include a provision which offsets the costs of this proposed tax deduction by restricting the growth of tax expenditures, except for the deductions for mortgage interest, health insurance, state and local taxes, and charitable contributions.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, this goal is straightforward. It is simple and I think consistent with what I heard everyone over the last 2 years talk about. We all stand before this body, in both parties—I do not question the motivation of anyone in either party—and we always talk about the need to give immediate relief to middle-class taxpayers. Admittedly, in this bill there is some relief for middle-class taxpayers in the tax portion, and that is the $500 child care tax credit. I would argue—I will not take the time now—the additional cost to middle-class families as a consequence of the cuts in Medicare and Medicaid will offset that, but that is a different question.

One of the things we also talk about is the goal and dream of every American family, whether it is the richest businessman or poorest welfare mother, and every middle-class family, and that is providing for the education for their children.

Frankly, as the Presiding Officer knows, it is getting harder and harder for middle-class families—and I mean that in a broad range, people making from $30,000 to $90,000 individually or up to $120,000 as a family—to be able to afford a college education. I would like to take a look at what is happening here, very quickly, in the limited amount of time that I have. This is what has happened since 1980.

The orange represents the cost of public college tuition. I want to make sure we understand now I am talking about State universities. I am not talking about private universities, whether the Syracuses or the Harvards or the Yales or the Georgetowns of the world, which are a great deal more expensive than the cost of public tuition and fees. And I am not even talking about room and board. I am not even talking about that—just college tuition and fees. Since the 1980's the college tuition and fees for public universities have increased 236 percent. The median household income in America has gone up 82 percent.

If you go back to 1980 you can see how every single, solitary year the gap is widening, in what I do not know anyone would disagree with is the ultimate middle-class dream most American families have, like the one my father had, he never went to college: give my son and my daughter a college education.

When I went to school, this gap was not so wide. If you take a look at what has happened in terms of, again, income for median families, middle-income families, in 1980, 4.5 percent of median household income was what it cost to send someone to college. Now that is almost doubled, it is 8.4 percent. That is for one child.

The bottomline is it is getting incredibly difficult for middle-class families, or any family to send their child to college. So the result is, in 1980, as I said, it took 4.5 percent of the median household income to pay for tuition and fees. I am not talking, now, about room and board. Today it takes 8.4 percent, almost double, just for tuition and fees for a public university.

Education is one of the best investments we can make in American society. I have voted for investment tax credit for businesses. I voted for tax credits for them buying machinery and all of those things which make sense in my view.

I can think of nothing that makes more sense than encouraging American families to invest in a post-high school education for their children. It seems to me it is about time they should get a break.

Mr. President, to reiterate, this motion to recommit is simple. It instructs the Finance Committee to include in the budget reconciliation bill a tax deduction of up to $10,000 for the costs of a college education.

Let me tell you why this is important. In my years of public service, I have found that no matter what differences may divide us, there is always one constant thing that unites us. We all have the same dream.

Think about it. No matter who you talk to—black or white, rich or poor—every American family dreams that their children will go to college. It was my dad's dream for his children, and it was, and is, my dream for my children. It remains the dream of every middle-class American family.

But, that dream is now at risk. This last summer, a poll was conducted of undergraduate students and parents with children in college. Of those surveyed, 87 percent—nearly 9 out of every 10 Americans—believe that the cost of college is rising so fast that it will soon be out of reach for most Americans.

It should be no surprise why the overwhelming majority of Americans believe that. At the rate we are going, it is true. It is getting harder and harder for middle-class Americans to afford a college education.

It makes you begin to wonder what exactly the word public means when you say "public higher education."

A college education is slipping out of reach of middle-class Americans. And, if they still want to fulfill the dream, it means that more and more young people must borrow more and more money to go to college.

One more statistic—and perhaps the one that boggles my mind the most. Of all the money ever borrowed under the Federal Government's guaranteed student loan program, 22 percent of it has been borrowed in the last 2 years.

Let me say that again. The guaranteed student loan program has been with us for 30 years. And, of all the money borrowed during that time, almost one-fourth of it has been borrowed in just the last 2 years.

We are saddling the next generation with enormous debt before their adult lives even begin. And, I am not talking about the abstract terms of the Federal debt. No, this is saddling the next generation with individual, personal debt.

When today's college students walk down the aisle at graduation, they are handed not only a diploma, but a big i-o-u. And, for too many, it is either that, or no college at all.

So, I have a very simple proposition. We should give a tax deduction of up to $10,000 per year for the costs of a college education. Under my motion to recommit, this tax deduction would be limited to single taxpayers with incomes under $90,000 and to married couples with incomes under $120,000. And, it would be paid for by limiting the growth—not cutting, just limiting the growth—in tax expenditures.

Mr. President, education is one of the best investments we as a society can make. It is one of the best measurements of future economic well-being. And, it is more important now than ever before. Previous generations could make a solid middle-class living with only a high school education. No more.

In fact, there was an interesting point made in a Wall Street Journal article last week. Working families save primarily by investing in human capital—that is, education.

Yet, when businesses invest in machine capital, they are not taxed. Middle-class families, when they invest in education, are taxed to the hilt. Education is treated as consumption, not investment.

And, as a Nobel Prize economist once put it, the tax code treats machines better than it does people.

It is time for that to change.

From the establishment of the land-grant university system in the late 1800's to the GI bill at the end of World War II to the creation of the PELL Grant and Guaranteed Student Loan programs in the 1960s, the Federal Government has been committed to seeing that young people desiring to go to college would not be turned away because of the cost. It was a national goal to see a college education within reach of every American.

Now, as that goal begins to slip out of reach for many middle-class families, it is time to renew our commitment to ensuring access to a college education for all Americans. I urge my colleagues to support this proposal.

I reserve the remainder of my time if I have any.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I regrettably disagree with my friend from Delaware. Actually, to pick out two of the many tax expenditures, that is, two mortgage deductions—that is a very large one—and health insurance and freeze all the rest seems to me totally unreasonable. Let me just go through a couple.

We are freezing pension contributions. That is one of the largest tax expenditures we have, and we think it is fair. Education that employees get from their corporations, you would freeze that deduction. The R&D tax credits for American corporations. The one thing they have asked for is that they get to deduct in a special way the research and development costs of their business, something needed to keep them competitive. Arbitrarily we decide those are all frozen so that we can provide this special tax treatment for those people with children going to college.

Now, we would like to do that. We would like to do a lot of things, but, frankly, to take the tax code and say all these other provisions that are good for our country, we just decide to freeze them so we can do that, in light of the fact that we have provided significant assistance to middle-income Americans—in this bill, there is a credit for student loan interest, a credit for 20 percent of the interest paid on the student loan during the taxable year if the taxpayer has an adjusted gross income of $40,000 to $50,000 as a single taxpayer, $60,000 to $75,000 as a couple—it is capped at $500 per year per borrower, $1,000 per return—that is pretty fair. With all the other things we are trying to do, it seems to me we ought to in a more orderly way look at such things as the pension deductions and the expenditures for education that employers give to employees, and many other good tax expenditures that are out there right now working for Americans.

So at the right time, I will move to table the amendment, but for now I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 53 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I know my friend has put a whole flock of kids through college, and so I know his commitment to college.

Let me just say very briefly my amendment restricts the growth of tax expenditures in those areas. It does not in fact freeze them.

No. 2, tell middle-class taxpayers that R&D is more important for corporations, which I support, than freezing—even if you were to freeze—than it is to be able to send their kid to college. Ask the average middle-class American taxpayer what is a better investment. Who is going to do the R&D if we do not get these kids to college?

Lastly, I say to my friend, the $500 cap on student loan interest is worthwhile and is necessary but it does not compare to $10,000 that a middle-class family would be able to deduct. They need help now. They need help now, Mr. President, and this is the most direct and immediate way to do it.

I thank the Chair. I thank my colleagues.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I think it returns to our side and Senator SNOWE has an amendment at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

Mr. EXON. Before Senator SNOWE is recognized, to expedite things, when Senator SNOWE finishes, I yield half of our 5 minutes to the Senator from West Virginia, who I understand also supports it.

I reserve the other half of the time in case any opposition surfaces.

Ms. SNOWE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine.

AMENDMENT NO. 2976

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Senate regarding the coverage of treatment for breast and prostate cancer under Medicare)

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Ms. SNOWE], for herself, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. SHELBY, Mr. BIDEN, Mr. MACK, Mrs. HUTCHISON, and Mr. GRAMM, proposes an amendment numbered 2976.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 606, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following:

SEC. 7058. SENSE OF SENATE REGARDING COVERAGE FOR TREATMENT OF BREAST AND PROSTATE CANCER UNDER MEDICARE.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) breast and prostate cancer each strike about 200,000 persons annually, and each claims the lives of over 40,000 annually;

(2) medicare covers treatments of breast and prostate cancer including surgery, chemotherapy, and radiation therapy;

(3) the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 (OBRA) expanded medicare to cover self-administered chemotherapeutic oral-cancer drugs which have the same active ingredients as drugs previously available in injectable or intravenous form;

(4) half of all women with breast cancer, and thousands of men with prostate cancer which has spread beyond the prostate, need hormonal therapy administered through oral cancer drugs which have never been available in injectable or intravenous form; and

(5) medicare's failure to cover oral cancer drugs for hormonal therapy makes the covered treatments less effective.

(b) SENSE OF SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that medicare should not discriminate among breast and prostate cancer victims by providing drug treatment coverage for some but not all such cancers, and that the budget reconciliation conferees should amend medicare to provide coverage for these important cancer drug treatments.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair.

I am offering this amendment in conjunction with Senators D'AMATO, SHELBY, BIDEN, MACK, HUTCHISON, and GRAMM that expresses the sense-of-the-Senate that the budget reconciliation conferees should amend Medicare to provide coverage for certain oral cancer drugs that are of enormous benefit to breast and prostate cancer victims. Currently, Medicare discriminates among breast and prostate cancer victims by providing certain drug treatment coverage for some but not all such cancers.

Back in 1993, when Congress expanded Medicare to help pay for the diagnosis and treatment of breast cancer, gaps in coverage were inadvertently created which denied coverage for certain oral cancer drugs. This is because in 1993, the Medicare OBRA provisions allowed the coverage of oral cancer drugs that were previously available in injectable or intravenous form.

However, half of all women with breast cancer, that is, 50 percent, and thousands of men with prostate cancer which has spread beyond the prostate, need hormonal therapy that is administered through oral cancer drugs that have never been available in injectable or intravenous form.

Let us consider the potential benefit of covering these oral estrogen-based cancer drugs for elderly populations.

Breast cancer and prostate cancers are very similar. First, both diseases strike approximately 200,000 Americans per year.

Second, both diseases take over 40,000 lives each year. While breast cancer affects 1 in 9 women, prostate cancer affects 1 in 11 men every year, and for both diseases the number of reported cases is rising rapidly. In fact, the number of reported cases of prostate cancer is increasing to an alarming degree, an expected 90 percent increase between 1983 and the year 2000.

Finally, these diseases are prevalent among women and men whose age makes them eligible for Medicare.

The Congressional Budget Office's preliminary analysis revealed the coverage of the breast cancer portion of this amendment at a savings of $156 million over 7 years.

So I am asking, Mr. President, that we support this resolution because I think it is the next logical step in fighting both breast cancer and prostate cancer. It does not make sense that we do not provide coverage for the next generation of drug treatment for both prostate and breast cancer treatment. It will save money in the long run under Medicare, and it certainly will make it easier to be administered to those patients, especially those who live in rural areas because it is an oral type of drug rather than having to be administered in outpatient or in inpatient facilities.

In 1991, Congress made a significant investment under the Medicare provisions for breast cancer screening. It only makes sense then to provide this kind of extensive coverage with the new kinds of drugs that are coming on the market that will be reimbursed under the Medicare system. By denying coverage for treatment to half the population of breast cancer patients, we are not taking full advantage of the investment that Congress has already made.

In 1994 alone, Medicare will have spent an estimated $640 million on breast cancer treatment. Yet, here we find that Medicare will not cover some of the treatments that could be provided for women because they do not reimburse an oral form of drug. In this case, for example, it is tamoxifen. Tamoxifen is a new drug on the market for the treatment of breast cancers at certain stages and yet because it was not available in intravenous or injectable form it cannot be reimbursed under the Medicare system because it is an oral drug. I do not think it makes sense. It certainly does not make sense for the future. It does not make sense for the lives and the health of the individuals who are victims of breast or prostate cancer.

So I would urge that the Senate go on record in preventing the recurrence of breast and prostate cancer by advocating that Medicare reimburse for such coverage.

Mr. President, I would ask for the yeas and nays, and I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include Senator COHEN, of Maine, as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BIDEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 2½ minutes.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield 10 seconds to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I wish to thank my colleague from Maine. As an original cosponsor of her amendment, I would like to point out two things very quickly.

One, this was an oversight in the first place. It was never intended that this drug should not be covered. And No. 2, it is vitally important to the health and safety of millions of Americans. I think it is a good amendment, and I am glad she is introducing it.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, let me put this in two forms. One is, I think this amendment has a virtuous purpose, and I will support it. It is a wish. It is just simply a wish. That is why it is put in the form of a sense of the Senate. We are hoping that the reconciliation conferees will approve Medicare. I support it. In fact, I worked on matters of this oral use of cancer pills and other things in the past.

But I would be very surprised, quite frankly, if we can in Medicare buy a single new aspirin, much less prostate cancer and breast cancer remedies, under the $270 billion cut which the underlying bill of the majority contemplates, let alone any more coverage whatsoever for cancer. And I think that Senator SNOWE understands that, making this, therefore, a sense of the Senate.

Keep in mind, please, my colleagues, that we are cutting $270 billion. We were devastating everything from graduate medical education to rural hospitals, to premiums, to original research in any area. You are going to find a lot of people—in fact, I notice our colleague from Massachusetts coming in—you will find a lot of people not going into research medicine to come up with new cures for prostate cancer or breast cancer because of what is happening to graduate medical institutions.

But all we had to do to get this amendment and to be able to pass this amendment was, in fact, to do what the Democrats wanted to do, which was simply cut $89 billion from Medicare. But, no, they wanted to cut $270 billion in order to be able to——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KYL). The Senator has used his 2½ minutes.

The Senator from Nebraska controls the time.

Mr. EXON. I will be glad to yield—has the Senator finished? Does the Senator need more time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. One minute.

Mr. EXON. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Medicare, let us face it, has been put on the chopping block. These are huge, huge cuts that are going to be made in the next 7 years that our people have absolutely no concept of. And here we are talking about adding on services. I am for that. I am for Senator SNOWE. She is an excellent Senator, and her sense-of-the-Senate resolution is excellent and it should be supported.

But the division on the one hand of the virtue of that purpose and the utter devastation of Medicare is a very awkward coupling, to say the very least. I hope and pray Medicare can do more for breast cancer, for prostate cancer, but I will guarantee you it cannot so long as we are cutting $270 billion out of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, since no others are seeking time, I will be glad to yield back our time.

Is there any time on this side?

Ms. SNOWE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include Senator JEFFORDS as a cosponsor of this amendment, and I will yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. Has all time been yielded back on both sides?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not all time has been yielded back yet.

Mr. EXON. May I request all time be yielded back? I yield back our time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Does the Senator yield back all his?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine yields back. All time is yielded back.

Mr. EXON. I believe the next order of business would be an amendment offered by Senator DORGAN of North Dakota.

I yield 5 minutes to him at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2977

(Purpose: To end deferral for United States shareholders on income of controlled foreign corporations attributable to property imported into the United States)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN], for himself, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. REID, Mr. FEINGOLD and Mr. BUMPERS, proposes an amendment numbered 2977.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DORGAN. This is a very important amendment. It is one that actually has previously been passed by the House of Representatives a few years ago. My amendment simply ends something called "deferral" for someone who closes their plant in the United States, moves it to a tax haven country, makes the same product and ships it back to the United States. This is about moving jobs overseas.

We have had a circumstance in this country for some while where we say to somebody, "If you close your manufacturing plant in America, move the jobs overseas, make the same product, ship it back to the United States, we will give you a tax break. Stay here and you pay income taxes. Move your jobs overseas and do your manufacturing overseas, we will give you a tax break."

We have lost 3 million manufacturing jobs during the same time that Singapore has experienced a 46-percent increase in manufacturing jobs. That is not a coincidence. We give a tax break for people to ship their jobs overseas.

Let me give you an example of that. Here is a company that I will not identify. I will just tell you it makes pants, a pants company. This company had 280 of its employees apply for trade adjustment assistance a few months ago.

What does that mean? It means they lost their jobs because of overseas competition. The same company, whose employees now have lost their jobs here in this country, same company, describes with its filings what it does, performs most of its sewing and finishing now offshore in order to keep production costs low. It means they have moved their jobs out of this country.

Then it says in its financial reports, this same company has undistributed retained earnings of $21 million, November 1994. No tax has been paid on them because the management intends to indefinitely reinvest them in foreign countries.

What does this mean? It means they get a tax break. They would have paid $7 million in taxes had they stayed in this country and manufactured. But, no, we say to them, "If you move your operation outside of this country, move your American jobs elsewhere, give the jobs to foreigners, shut your plant down here and move your jobs overseas, we'll give you a tax break."

My legislation is very simple. It says, end the tax break for people who want to move their jobs overseas. End the tax break. It does not make any sense. No one, in my judgment, can honestly defend this kind of practice.

Use the money that we develop as a result of this amendment to reduce the Federal debt. That is what this amendment is about.

This amendment I offer on behalf of myself and Senators KENNEDY, REID, FEINGOLD, and BUMPERS.

I have heard a lot of debate about a lot of financial issues, but I never heard anyone in this country who can defend a part of the Tax Code that says, "We will be willing to provide a tax break if you will only close your doors to your manufacturing plant in the U.S.A. and ship the jobs to some foreign land."

If we cannot end this sort of thing, how can we talk to the American people about good jobs? Sixty percent of the families in this country now have less income than they did 20 years ago. Why? Because good jobs are moving overseas. There are a lot of reasons for that, but at least one of those reasons is we have an insidious, perverse incentive in our Tax Code to reward those with a tax break who would move their jobs overseas.

This amendment very simply says, "Let's at least stop that. Let's decide jobs in this country are important. We want to retain good jobs, good-paying jobs, manufacturing jobs. Let's stop the flight of American jobs out of America." And one way to do that, among many others, is to decide to straighten out the Tax Code.

The fact is, President Clinton during the last campaign talked about this issue. We have had people on all sides of the political aisle talk about it. I was helpful in getting this passed through the House of Representatives in 1987, I believe it was. It subsequently was dropped. It was subsequently dropped in conference. This bill had extensive hearings. I held a hearing on this bill in the U.S. Senate. So this bill meets the criteria. We understand what this is about. This amendment makes sense. I hope that this amendment will have the support of Members of the Senate. This makes good sense for our country.

Mr. President, with that I yield the floor.

Mr. ABRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. I yield such time as he may need to the Senator from Delaware.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I rise in opposition to the amendment proposed by Senator DORGAN. In doing so, let me say at the beginning, I am not happy with companies that move abroad to a tax haven or cheap labor for the purpose of manufacturing products that are sold back to the United States. None of us can be happy with the export of American jobs.

At the same time it is important to understand that we are in the global economy and that if we are to provide well-paying, good jobs for our people, it is important that we become a vital force in the global economy that is now emerging. The United States must become competitive in this global economy.

My concern with the Dorgan amendment is that in hearings held before the Finance Committee in the past, Treasury has testified that this kind of legislation is very difficult to administer.

It has been pointed out, for example, what do you do in the case of a plant that sells both to the United States and to other companies abroad? Obviously, we want to encourage American business to compete in foreign markets, but would that company be entitled to the deferral, or how would you administer it?

Let me say that it is my intent, upon the completion of reconciliation, to look at a number of these important and complex international trade questions. We have purposely avoided in this reconciliation containing any amendments or provisions dealing with foreign trade or international matters. And as I have indicated, one of our reasons for taking this approach is that this is a matter of extreme complexity, of greatest importance to our economy and the creation of jobs in America. For that reason, we have not, as I said, included any provisions involving international trade matters in this legislation. For that reason, the Dorgan amendment is not appropriate as part of this legislation.

Again, let me say that it is my intent as chairman of the Finance Committee, which has jurisdiction over trade, that we will be holding a series of hearings dealing with the kind of problems that are raised by this amendment. But until we have a better idea of how to address this problem so that we do not, in the process of trying to correct one problem of people fleeing abroad to tax havens that sell back here, that we do not hurt those who are going abroad for a legitimate purpose, to become competitive in international markets.

So, for these reasons, I must respectfully disagree with this amendment. I yield back any remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has 30 seconds remaining.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, we do not need to study this; we need to stop it. Anybody who thinks that a tax break for moving American jobs overseas is good for this country probably thinks Elvis is living in a trailer park in St. Louis.

Nobody I know believes it is good tax policy to spend $2.2 billion in the next 7 years encouraging companies to shut their doors here and move their jobs overseas. What kind of nonsense is this? If we cannot support an amendment like this, we ought to turn off the lights and lock the door in this place.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from Michigan has 20 seconds remaining.

Mr. ABRAHAM. We yield back the remaining time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time is yielded back.

Mr. DORGAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There appears to be a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ABRAHAM. At this time, I believe the next item in order will be the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2978

(Purpose: To provide States additional flexibility in providing for Medicaid beneficiaries)

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Texas [Mr. GRAMM] proposes an amendment numbered 2978.

On page 767, strike all after "(2)" on line 6 through "(4)" on line 16.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for one moment? After the Senator has made his presentation, I yield 5 minutes to Senator ROCKEFELLER in opposition to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas is recognized.

Mr. GRAMM. Mr. President, the whole logic of block granting Medicaid so that States could run the Medicaid Program with less money than if we had kept it as an entitlement is a belief that States can run the program better. In fact, both Democratic and Republican Governors have come to the national capital and said to us: "If you will let us run Medicaid, we will provide better health care and we will do it cheaper and we will share the savings with you."

On a bipartisan basis, they have supported our efforts to block grant Medicaid to the States, the logic being that States are capable of making decisions about running Medicaid, the logic being that the Governor and the legislature of the various States love people who receive benefits from Medicaid in their State at least as much as we do. They know those people more intimately than we do, and, obviously, those people are capable of putting them out of office directly, whereas they may not be able to vote against a Senator from another State.

In the markup in the Finance Committee before I became a member, an amendment was added that created a new entitlement. This is an entitlement imposed upon the States. The entitlement basically says that while we are giving States the ability to run Medicaid, that we are going to intervene at the Federal level and mandate that no matter how they structure their programs they have to provide three entitlements. Specifically they are told by us that there are three groups of people that they must cover.

There are groups that we would not want to cover; there are groups that the States would cover. But every Governor I know is outraged about this provision that mandates a State-mandated program for pregnant women, for children under the age of 12, and for disabled individuals.

The point is this: Not that anyone wants to deny service to pregnant women or children under 12 or disabled people, but who are we in Washington to decide how the States are going to run this program? Is it not the ultimate arrogance for Washington to believe that only we care about pregnant women, that only we care about children under 12, that only we care about the disabled, and if we let the uncaring Governors, if we let the uncaring legislators run their program in their State, they are not going to take care of their own people?

I totally and absolutely reject this. This amendment flies in the face of everything we are trying to do in Medicare, everything that my party stands for, and I think this Big Brother Washington approach has to end.

I do not believe we are going to strip this rotten amendment out of this bill, but I want to have a vote on it. The whole logic of the Medicaid reform is we are going to let the local leaders who know their people best and who care the most make the decisions. The idea that we are creating a new entitlement and we are imposing it on the States, and now in a new provision we are going to, in essence, let people go into Federal court and sue the States on these issues. I think that clearly is a retreat from what we promised the States when we gave them less money to let them run the program, and I reserve whatever seconds may remain on my time.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this amendment should absolutely be defeated on both sides. It has this wonderful kind of a kind-hearted title to it. It talks about "flexibility." The purpose is, of course, to get rid of all of this. If the Senator wants to have a vote on getting rid of Medicaid or getting rid of care for pregnant women, for children under the age of 12, or the disabled, why does he not suggest that?

We have been through this so many times before. "Let the States decide what being disabled means." So then you have 50 different ideas of what a disabled person is, and it is complete chaos. I really do believe this is a country which has not given up on the idea that if a child is sick, no matter what its family's income is, that the child should get care. If a poor person is ill, or needs a test because something is desperately wrong and nobody knows what it is, America is the kind of country where you should be able to get that test without worrying about something called "flexibility."

I believe that health care is about giving people the opportunity to grow up to be what they really want to be. Health care is an enormous part of that. This Senator, in what appears to be a "kind" amendment, but what is really, in the judgment of this Senator, a very mean-spirited amendment, would just get as far away from doing anything for pregnant women and children and the disabled as the Senator possibly could. It is an amendment which should be absolutely crushed.

I yield the remainder of my time to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas says this is a new entitlement. Let us look at what the present law is. The present law mandates that, in every State of the Nation, the State must provide Medicaid coverage for every child 5 and under up to 133 percent of poverty, and for those over the age of 5, it is up to age 12 and lower, to 100 percent of poverty; and that increases it by a year each year so that by 2002, every child up to the age of 18 will be mandated coverage. So this is no new entitlement.

Second, the Senator from Texas says, "What arrogance for us to say to these States they must cover children up through the age of 12, 100 percent of poverty and below. What right have we to levy such a mandate on the States?" What he fails to mention is that we are sending the States $800 billion over the next 7 years—not million, but billion, with a "b."

When you send out money like that to the States, it seems to me you are entitled to ask for something. What do we ask for? We say they must cover poor children, 100 percent of poverty, up through the age of 12. Do we say what kinds of coverage, what the health care package is? No. It could be the most modest package. Indeed, one aspirin a year could be the health care package.

So to say this is arrogance, when we demand that the States cover this little group, come on now. I thought this was being offered with a sense of humor, but I see the Senator is serious about this.

So, Mr. President, I hope this amendment is resoundingly defeated because we have to stand for something around this place. When we send out $800 billion, we are entitled to ask for something on behalf of the States' poor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, what is the time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia has 23 seconds. The Senator from Texas has 48 seconds.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I yield back my time.

Mr. GRAMM. I want to conclude the debate.

Mr. President, we are reducing funding for the existing Medicaid Program by $187 billion. The Governors agreed to this reduction. But on one basic part of the agreement, they asked that if we were going to reduce funding that we let them run their program, which they are funding in conjunction with us.

Now what is happening is the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Rhode Island are saying, OK, we are giving you less money, but we are going to tell you how you have to run this program. As for this talk of "getting rid of Medicaid"—nobody is talking about getting rid of Medicaid. And "mean spirited"—I flatly reject the notion that the Senator from West Virginia loves the children in Texas or Rhode Island more than the Governor of Texas and the Governor of Rhode Island loves the children in their own States.

The tide of history is moving against the "Washington knows best" policies advanced by the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Rhode Island, and this provision may stick today, but its days are numbered. We have to stop telling the States how to run programs in their own jurisdiction, based on our own arrogance that only we know best and only we care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I believe, under the agreement, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KERRY is next. I yield to him 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized.

AMENDMENT NO. 2979

(Purpose: To increase the Federal minimum wage)

Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] for himself and Mr. KENNEDY, proposes an amendment numbered 2979.

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC. . MINIMUM WAGE.

(a) FINDINGS.—

"(1) The federal minimum wage has not been raised since 1991; and

"(2) The value of the minimum wage, after being adjusted for the bite of inflation, is at its second lowest annual level since 1955, with purchasing power 26 percent below its average level during the 1970s and 35 percent below its peak value in 1968, and unless it is increased it will in 1996 have its lowest value in over 40 years; and

"(3) The value of the minimum wage as a percentage of the average nonsupervisory wage averaged 52.2 percent during the decade of the 1960s, 45.8 percent during the decade of the 1970s, 40.4 percent during the decade of the 1980s, and currently is 37.7 percent; and

"(4) The minimum wage earned by a full-time worker over a year fails to provide sufficient income for a family of three to provide that family a standard of living even reaching the national poverty level, and, in fact, provides an income that equals only 70 percent of the federal poverty level for a family of three; and

"(5) There are 4.7 million Americans who usually work full-time but who are, nevertheless, in poverty, and 4.2 million families live in poverty despite having one or more members in the labor force for at least half the year; and

"(6) Nearly two-thirds of minimum wage workers are adults, and 60 percent are women; and

"(7) The decline in the value of the minimum wage since 1979 has contributed to Americans' growing income disparity and to the fact that 97 percent of the growth in household income has accrued to the wealthiest 20 percent of Americans during this period; and

"(8) The effects of the minimum wage are not felt only among the lowest income workers and families but also are felt in many middle-income families; and

"(9) The preponderance of evidence from economic studies of the effects of increases in federal and state minimum wages (including studies of state minimum wage increases in California and New Jersey) at the end of the 1980s and in the early 1990s suggests that the negative employment effects of such increases were slight to nonexistent; and

"(10) Legislation to raise the minimum wage to $5.15 an hour was introduced on February 14, 1995, but has not been debated by the Senate—

"Now, therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should debate and vote on whether to raise the minimum wage before the end of the first session of the 104th Congress."

Mr. KERRY. I yield myself 3 minutes, Mr. President. I emphasize that this is a sense of the Senate, No. 1; and, No. 2, it does not set a specific figure at this time, though many of us would like to.

It simply says that the Senate will go on record as being prepared to debate and vote on the raising of the minimum wage, which was introduced last February, that we will vote on it before the end of this first session.

Why is that important, Mr. President? Well, from 1979 until 1995, 79 percent of the increase in household income in America has gone to the top 20 percent—the 20 percent wealthiest Americans. The minimum wage which, during the 1960's, was at about 52 percent of the nonsupervisory wage, and during the 1970's was at about 45 percent, and during the 1980's was at about 40 percent, is today at 37 percent of the nonsupervisory wage.

That means, Mr. President, that for those two-thirds of the people on the minimum wage who are adults—60 percent women—they are working at 70 percent of poverty level in this country today—70 percent of poverty level. Now, the whole theory of this country for years was based on the notion that we would value work, and if people went to work they would be able to break out of poverty. During the 1960's and 1970's, we respected that by keeping the minimum wage commensurate with the poverty level.

But ever since 1991, where we only caught up to a small percentage of the decrease of the prior 9 years, when there was no increase, we have had another 13 percent decline in the value of the purchasing power of the wage. So the wage, today, has a 26-percent purchasing power of what it had previously, and it is about to be at a 40-year low. In over 40 years, by 1996, if we do not change the minimum wage, it will never have been so low.

Mr. President, if you are going to be pro-family, if you are going to be pro-work, if you are going to be pro-community, you have to respect the notion that somebody ought to be able to take home a decent wage for an hour's work and for a week's work. The fact is, Mr. President, that under the current constraints, it is impossible for people to be able to do that, and we must go on record as really being pro-family, in an effort to try help them. I yield 1½ minutes to the senior Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I join with my colleague in urging the Senate to accept the sense-of-the-Senate resolution. Members can wonder why this is appropriate. Included in the legislation is the earned income tax credit, which is a program to try to provide some relief for the working poor. That program helps to provide assistance, particularly with heads of households who have children.

The minimum wage is for those families that do not have many children. The minimum wage provides the greatest advantage for the single heads of household.

This amendment is prochildren because 70 percent of those that work full-time have children in their families. This amendment is for women, working women, because 60 percent of all minimum wage earners are working women.

This is for full-time workers. Mr. President. Sixty-six percent of all minimum wage recipients are full-time workers.

Once again, if we care about children, if we care about working women, if we care about making work pay in America, we will support this amendment.

Mr. KERRY. I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 5 minutes remaining and the Senator from Massachusetts has ½ minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back my time.

Mr. KERRY. The minimum wage worker today will earn $8,500 for full-time work. The poverty line is $12,500. Every economist, conservatives and liberals alike—at Harvard, and Friedman, say you have to have a combination of the earned income tax credit and the minimum wage to truly permit people to break out of poverty.

We can do this, as every study shows, without losing jobs—in fact, as New Jersey showed, creating further employment.

I hope my colleagues will go on record as being willing simply to debate and vote on this issue.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator from New Mexico in his typical gracious and wonderful way be willing to give me 15 seconds?

Mr. DOMENICI. As the evening passes, I am getting less and less gracious.

I ask Senator KERRY of Massachusetts, did he mention a great economist from the University of Chicago in his wrap-up?

Mr. KERRY. I did not mean to. I meant to mention the one from Harvard.

Mr. DOMENICI. It was not Friedman from Chicago?

Mr. KERRY. No.

Mr. DOMENICI. Because he does not think this works at all. He thinks this makes for more people—I do not have any time left and we will get on with a vote.

Mr. KERRY. There are 101 economists and 3 Nobel laureates, and 7 past presidents of the Economic Association who endorse this increase.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 2980

(Purpose: To make technical amendments to title V)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President I have an amendment on behalf of the Energy Committee, for Senator MURKOWSKI, the chairman, and Senator JOHNSTON, the ranking member. It is a technical amendment that will correct the reconciliation statute that the Energy Committee passed. I believe it is acceptable.

I send the amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. DOMENICI] for Mr. MURKOWSKI, for himself, and Mr. JOHNSTON proposes an amendment numbered 2980.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

(1) On page 304, line 20, delete "follows:" and insert in lieu thereof "follows (except that all amounts in excess of $20,000,000 in fiscal year 2003 and all amounts in fiscal year 2004 shall not be available for obligation until fiscal year 2006):".

(2) On page 361, line 7, delete "thereafter," and insert in lieu thereof "thereafter, except for fiscal years 2003 and 2004,".

Mr. DOMENICI. Am I correct, I say to the whip, is this acceptable?

Mr. FORD. I do not know. I have not seen it. Apparently, the Budget Committee ranking member is willing to accept it.

Mr. EXON. We have no objection. I agree to accept the amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back my time.

Mr. EXON. I yield back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. DOMENICI. Is it appropriate under the unanimous consent that we adopt this amendment, or must we hold it?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is a unanimous consent agreement to adopt the amendment, that may be done.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, we should keep it going. It is the ninth amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. We will put it in the sequence in this particular position.

Mr. EXON. According to my list we have Senator KENNEDY next.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have one amendment remaining.

I want to state to the distinguished ranking member, Senator EXON, the majority leader requests that we do some of your amendments, giving us additional time. They are not yet finished in terms of drafting. It must be one with at least 5 minutes on a side.

Could you proceed to the Kennedy-Wellstone-Pryor and reserve our one remaining?

Mr. EXON. That sounds reasonable.

Mr. DOMENICI. If we come in perhaps after 30 minutes and are ready, we could intervene.

Mr. EXON. I see nothing wrong with that. We can move on to the Kennedy amendment, the next amendment on my list. I yield 5 minutes to Senator KENNEDY.

AMENDMENT NO. 2981

(Purpose: To strike the provision allowing the transfer of excess pension assets)

Mr. KENNEDY. I send to the desk an amendment on behalf of myself and the Senator from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY], for himself and Mrs. KASSEBAUM, proposes an amendment numbered 2981.

Strike section 12807.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 2½ minutes.

Mr. President, this proposal allows corporations to remove money from pension plans and use it for nonretirement purposes. That particular proposal is included in the Republican measure that is now before the U.S. Senate.

The Republican budget, therefore, hits older Americans not once but twice. The Medicare cuts are an outrage and so is the raid on workers' pensions. No one can claim they are saving the pension system. The pension system is not broken. We have no right to give away $20 billion of pension funds that do not belong to us and do not belong to the Federal Government.

The $20 billion that the Republican budget gives away belongs to workers and retirees who have given up wages to have that money contributed to their pensions. The bill is an invitation to corporate raiders and greedy executives to loot the pension plans of their workers and retirees.

What looks like overfunding today can be underfunding tomorrow. The Senator from Kansas, Senator KASSEBAUM, put it well several years ago when she said, "If stocks and bonds drop in value, as they will at some point, these surpluses could evaporate like the morning mist."

The history of the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation over the past 20 years makes it clear that today's well-funded company can become tomorrow's massive pension bankruptcy.

Congress should be worried about plan underfunding, not how to give away surplus assets that have been built up for retirees. The danger of underfunded plans is what Congress ought to be addressing.

We passed the Pension Protection Act last year to strengthen pension funding. It makes no sense to turn around a year later and weaken pension funds in a way that puts both retirees and taxpayers at risk.

This issue presents a stark choice about who we represent here in the Senate. Which side are we on? Are we on the side of the workers and retirees who struggle to find some economic security in their old age? Or on the side of the wheeler dealers, corporate raiders, and the super rich? I want the Senators to say no to this raid on retirees and defeat this unconscionable attack on the pension funds.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I want to take a few moments this afternoon to discuss a provision in the reconciliation package that has attracted relatively little attention to this point.

As many of my colleagues know, the House reconciliation bill includes a measure designed to generate approximately $10 billion in tax revenue by doing away with penalties Congress imposed in 1990 on pension fund withdrawals. The House proposal generally allows companies to take money from pension plans that are more than 125 percent funded and use those funds for any purpose, without informing their workers.

In response to a wave of corporate takeovers and pension raids in the 1980's, Congress in 1990 imposed an 50-percent excise tax on pension fund reversions, except in limited circumstances. The idea was to make it costly for companies to take assets from their pension plans. And, in fact, the raids on assets ceased almost entirely. Before this change, however, about $20 billion was siphoned from pension funds in just a few years, many pension plans were terminated, and thousands of workers saw their pensions replaced by risky annuities that provided lower benefits.

The reconciliation package before us includes a pension reversion measure that is similar to the House proposal. Under the Senate bill, excess pension assets could be withdrawn—with little or no penalty—to fund active and retiree health benefits, underfunded pension plans, disability benefits, child care, and educational assistance plans.

Mr. President, this represents a significant change in pension policy.

I understand that there are approximately 22,000 pension plans covering 11 million workers and 2 million retirees that have assets in excess of 125 percent of current liability, and that the Joint Committee on Taxation estimates that the pension reversion provisions contained in both the House and Senate bills could result in the removal of tens of billions of dollars in assets from these plans.

Therefore, while the Senate proposal clearly is more limited than the House proposal, I nevertheless must oppose it. I understand there will be an amendment to strike this provision that will be offered by the ranking member of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, Senator KENNEDY. I want to make clear to my colleagues that I intend to support that amendment.

The Senate Committee on Labor and Human Resources, which I chair, shares jurisdiction over the Employee Retirement Income Security Act [ERISA] with the Committee on Finance. In the past, the Labor Committee has taken an active role in pension security and pension reversion issues. In fact, the provision reported by the Finance Committee contains modification to title I of ERISA, which clearly fall within the Labor Committee's jurisdiction.

Yet the Labor Committee did not consider the pension provisions contained in the legislation before us. And neither the Finance Committee nor the Labor Committee has held hearings to consider modifications of this nature in the pension reversion area.

Mr. President, as I said, the Senate proposal clearly is more limited than the House proposal. I also believe that there may be valid reasons to revisit the pension reversion penalties that were imposed in 1990.

However, given the actions that led to the imposition of the excise tax, I strongly believe that any modifications in this area should be given full consideration by the committees of jurisdiction and that we should weigh heavily the genuine possibility of adverse consequences to plan participants, the Federal pension insurance program, and the national savings rate that may result from a change in pension policy of this magnitude.

Therefore, I intend to support the KENNEDY amendment and I urge my colleagues to do the same.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. In an earlier debate I mentioned this is legislation filled with risk. We have now identified another one of those areas of risk. Have we forgotten so soon? It was just a matter of a few years ago when we were having pension plans across America fail because they were underfunded.

In many cases, they failed because they had been used by corporate raiders as a means of financing mergers and acquisitions which then destroyed the jobs of the very people for whom the pension fund was intended to protect.

I cannot believe in 1995 we are about to not only make it easier but, I am going to suggest, positively encourage this type of behavior. Why would we encourage this behavior? If a chief financial officer of a corporation failed to take advantage of this program, he or she ought to be fired for corporate malfeasance.

Here is what we are about to do. We allow a corporation in profitable years to overfund their pension, to put in more than is required in order to meet that year's annual pension amount. Then, when the corporation in a business cycle has a not-so-good year, we are allowing them to reach in and withdraw those funds.

What is the significance to the U.S. Treasury? They take a full deduction when they put the money in the pension. They pay no taxes when they take it out, because they had planned to take it out in a year in which they owe no taxes.

This is an outrage, Mr. President. It is a disgrace that it is part of this legislation. It has no part in a bill which is intended to balance the budget, to balance the budget of the Federal Government off the security and hard work of working men and women who depend on these funds for their well-being, and to turn it over to corporate raiders.

I urge adoption of this amendment.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the Republicans' revenue recommendations contain a slew of tax breaks for businesses that do not belong in a deficit reduction bill. One of the most egregious of these special tax breaks is a provision on corporate pension transfers that would allow employers to take billions of dollars in excess assets from pension plans to the extent of their costs for other employee benefits—such as health care for active employees—without paying the current-law excise tax. The proposal opens the door for up to $47 billion to be removed from the pension system, thereby endangering workers' retirement security and increasing the risk to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation [PBGC] and U.S. taxpayers.

The Republicans have included this provision among a small group of so-called corporate welfare reforms that raise revenue through restrictions on tax rules under which the affected companies currently operate. The pension transfer proposal, however, is hardly a reform: rather, it is a conspicuous corporate welfare program of its own. The proposal merely frees workers' pension funds to be used for general corporate purposes, such as executive bonuses or extra shareholder dividends.

Earlier this year, the Finance Committee devoted several weeks to hearings on how to increase our Nation's savings rate. We found that the savings rate is terribly low, and that the high rate of consumption was hurting the economy. Yet, the Finance Committee has now recommended to the Senate a provision that both weakens the retirement security of employees and removes assets from a key source of savings—employees' pension funds.

Despite Republican assertions to the contrary, the proposal poses a serious threat to the security of the affected pension plans. First, the pension transfer proposal generally would measure excess assets using a standard that is easily manipulated and thus, I believe, inappropriate for this purpose. Under the provision, a pension plan would be considered to have excess assets, eligible to be withdrawn, to the extent its assets exceed 125 percent of the plan's current liability. Under this standard, the employer is free to use a range of interest rate and mortality assumptions, and need not account for the effect of early retirement or contingent events such as plant shutdowns. Thus, an employer can choose favorable actuarial assumptions to minimize the plan's liabilities and maximize the excess assets it is entitled to withdraw from the retirement plan under the proposal. Consequently, the cushion provided by the proposal cannot ensure that adequate funds remain to fulfill the amount of the employees' accrued benefits.

The laxity of this standard is demonstrated in PBGC's analysis of several large plans. PBGC's analysis of 10 large plans revealed that a transfer in accordance with the provision in the bill could leave those plans with less than 90 percent of the funds needed to pay benefits on termination. PBGC would be expected to pay the difference, up to the guaranteed level.

Moreover, the current liability standard is highly susceptible to shifts in the stock or bond market. The stock market is currently at an all-time high; any subsequent drop in the market could have a significant adverse effect on a plan's asset values, thereby causing a plan that currently has excess assets under the proposal to become underfunded. Thus, a more substantial cushion is necessary than that provided by the proposal to protect against future market shifts.

The Republicans note that the standard used in this proposal is the same standard enacted for pension transfers for retiree health benefits in the 1994 Uruguay Round Agreements Act [GATT]. However, the two provisions are vastly different in scope. The potential transfers allowable under this proposal would dwarf the amount of transfers allowable for use in meeting retiree health costs under GATT. Care was also taken in GATT—unlike in the Republican proposal—to create a protective firewall that is, a maintenance of effort requirement. Thus, the proposal will increase considerably the risk of loss to the PBGC.

Finally, by exempting employers from the current law excise tax, the proposal encourages employers to use pension plans as tax-sheltered corporate piggy banks. Under current law, if an employer terminates its plan and takes a reversion, an excise tax of 50 percent of the reversion applies. One purpose of the excise tax is to recapture the tax benefit the employer enjoys from earnings that have grown tax-free on the contributions to the pension plan. In 1990, GAO found that an excise tax of between 17 percent and 59 percent was necessary—depending on the plan population and the underlying investments—for the Federal Government to recapture the tax benefit to employers when assets in a pension plan are withdrawn by the employer. In addition, the proposal removes the deterrent effect of the excise tax on plan terminations: An employer can first take the excess assets and subsequently terminate the plan, thus avoiding the excise tax because there would be no additional assets left to revert to the employer as a result of the termination.

Yet, employers under the committee's proposal are exempted from the excise tax, and are merely required to include the amount taken into income. Any company with a net operating loss carryover can offset the income from the pension transfer with its accumulated net operating losses. Thus, the tax paid by employers on a reversion under this proposal could be zero. Moreover, under this proposal, an employer can easily terminate its plan after draining it of excess assets, thus avoiding the termination excise tax altogether.

Senate Republicans argue that the use of the pension transfers under the proposal is restricted to meeting the costs of other qualified employee benefits—primarily health benefits for active employees. Make no mistake: This requirement is merely cosmetic. The proposal allows employees' pensions to be siphoned off for general corporate use. Nearly all employers who would take advantage of this proposal already provide health benefits to their employees. Thus, using these excess assets for existing health benefits merely frees up funds they would have spent anyway, to be used in turn for executive bonuses, extra shareholder dividends, or the like.

In light of all these defects, I believe the proposal is fundamentally flawed as a matter of retirement and tax policy, and strongly urge my colleagues to support my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The Senator from Massachusetts has ½ minute remaining.

The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield our 5 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. ROTH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware is recognized.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, excess pension assets do not belong to employees. The reason for this is that under a defined benefit pension plan, the employer promises to pay an employee a fixed monthly retirement benefit. Under current law, after these benefits are fully funded the employer can take out excess assets upon plan termination.

Excess pension asset transfers will not reduce or jeopardize workers' pensions. Only the most overfunded pension plans will be allowed to transfer excess pension assets. According to a former chief actuary of the PBGC, only 1 percent of plans covered by the PBGC terminate in a given year without sufficient assets. And after the passage of the stringent funding rules in last year's GATT legislation, it is reasonable to expect the incidence of plan failures will decrease in the future.

The proposal also contained several provisions designed to guard against plan underfunding. First, employers are required to keep a substantial cushion of excess pension assets in the plan. And I point out this is the same measure that President Clinton proposed for retiree health transfers in the Retirement Protection Act of 1994.

The other side has attacked this proposal. But is it not interesting that their own President proposed the same measure that is contained in the legislation before us tonight.

The minimum cushion is 125 percent of plan liabilities, and in many cases the cushion is as high as 150 percent of plan liability. In fact, a national actuary firm prepared a study that concluded that more than 70 percent of the overfunded plans will be subject to a cushion greater than 125 percent of plan liability. At these funding levels, the pension plan will always be at the full funding limit.

In fact, plans at the full funding limit are not permitted to make new contributions to the pension plan. Plan trustees are required to use a plan asset valuation method that results in the largest asset cushion. And, to guard against fluctuations in interest rates and stock market values, the proposal requires plan trustees to use January 1, 1995, or the most recent valuation date before the transfer, whichever results in the largest asset cushion.

Employers must use the excess assets to fund ERISA-protected employee benefit plans that cover a broad group of employees. That is a most important point that must and should be understood. Employers can only take out the excess assets to fund other ERISA-protected employee benefits that cover a broad group of employees. That is just common sense. And the plans that can be funded with excess assets are limited to—and let me spell them out—other retirement plans of the employer, including underfunded retirement plans; active and retiree health plans; child care; disability; and educational assistance.

This is a good plan, and, for that reason, I must oppose amendment of Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator KENNEDY.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield the final 30 seconds to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Senators JEFFORDS, MOYNIHAN, BINGAMAN, EXON, WELLSTONE, SIMON, and GRAHAM be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I rise in vigorous support of removing these provisions in this bill because we are dealing here with a very serious problem of pension plans. This will result in tens of billions of dollars being withdrawn from employee pension plans at a time when we are in absolute need of improving our pension capacity. It is done without any hearings. It is a matter that is within the jurisdiction of our committee. We would want desperately to make sure that what things are done are done correctly and appropriately.

I vigorously oppose the provisions that are in the bill and support the strike amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the next Senator on the list is the distinguished Senator from Minnesota, Senator WELLSTONE. I yield him 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized for 5 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2982

(Purpose: To scale back corporate welfare in the tax code by eliminating the deduction for intangible drilling and development costs for oil, gas, and geo-thermal wells, by eliminating the corporate minimum tax provisions, by eliminating the foreign earned income exclusion, and by eliminating the section 936 possession tax credit, and use the savings for deficit reduction)

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. WELLSTONE] proposes an amendment numbered 2982.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of chapter 1 of subtitle I of title XII, insert:

SEC. . REPEAL OF EXPENSING OF INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) this legislation, as reported by the Senate Committee on the Budget on October 23, 1995, significantly reduces funding for medicare and medicaid, student loans, food stamps, and other federal efforts critical to working families across the country, in order to pay for tax breaks to benefit primarily wealthy corporations and others;

(2) this legislation will significantly increase the tax burden on an estimated 17 million working families, by modifying the earned income tax credit, which has enjoyed longstanding bipartisan support;

(3) the Congressional Joint Tax Committee has estimated that tax expenditures cost the United States Treasury over $420 billion annually, and they estimate that amount will grow by $60 billion to over $480 billion annually by 1999;

(4) Congress should reduce the federal budget deficit in a way that is responsible, and that requires shared sacrifice by eliminating many of the special interest tax breaks and loopholes that have been embedded in the tax code for decades, making the tax system fairer, flatter and simpler;

(5) eliminating special interest tax breaks would enable Congress to do real tax reform, making the system fairer and more simple by flattening the current tax rate structure and eventually providing real tax relief for working families;

(6) the savings generated by eliminating these special tax breaks immediately can be used to reduce the deficit.

(b) ELIMINATION OF DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN INTANGIBLE DRILLING AND DEVELOPMENT COSTS.—Section 263 (relating to capital expenditures) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to costs paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.", and

(2) by striking subsection (i).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to costs paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

(d) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

On page 1550, beginning with line 13, strike chapter 3 of subtitle B of title XII, and insert:

SEC. 12161. REVENUE LOCK BOX.

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from striking section 12161 and section 12162 as contained in the Balanced Budget Reconciliation Act of 1995 as reported by the Senate Committee on the Budget on October 23, 1995, in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

At the end of chapter 8 of subtitle I of title XII, insert the following:

SEC. . ELIMINATION OF EXCLUSION FOR FOREIGN EARNED INCOME.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) of section 911 (relating to citizens or residents of the United States living abroad) is amended by striking "subtitle," and all that follows and inserting "subtitle—

"(1) for any taxable year beginning before January 1, 1996, the foreign earned income of such individual, and

"(2) for any taxable year, the housing cost amount of such individual."

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1996.

(c) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1997 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

Strike section 12805 and insert:

SEC. 12805. TERMINATION OF PUERTO RICO AND POSSESSION TAX CREDIT.

(a) REPEAL.—Section 936 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(j) TERMINATION.—This section shall not apply to any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995."

(c) REVENUE LOCK BOX.—

(1) AMOUNT OF DEFICIT REDUCTION.—Effective in 1996 and not later than November 15 of each year, the Director of OMB shall estimate the amount of revenues resulting from the enactment of this section in the fiscal year beginning in the year of the estimate and notify the President and Congress of the amount.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, this amendment scales back corporate welfare in the Tax Code by eliminating several loopholes, including the deduction for intangible drilling and development costs for oil, gas, and geothermal wells, the corporate minimum tax provisions, the foreign earned income exclusion, and section 936, the possession tax credit. It locks all of the savings away to be used for deficit reduction—and only for this purpose.

The savings from these amendments, all to go for deficit reduction, range between $60 and $70 billion, depending on whose estimates you use. I do not have time to go through each of these corporate welfare provisions, but let me simply say that over and over and over again this week we have been talking about basic fairness, and that closing these loopholes is an attempt to make the Tax Code fairer.

I will tell you right now, as people in the country look at this deficit reduction bill, they know that it is based upon the path of least political resistance. They know that it is disproportionately working families and middle-income people and low- and moderate-income people who have been targeted.

Mr. President, I do not know one citizen in Minnesota, or in any of our States, if the truth be told, who would not agree with the proposition that we ought to close some of these loopholes. And by closing some of these loopholes, with these benefits going primarily to large companies that do not need the benefits, that have not been asked to tighten their belts, instead of allowing these to continue we would have more money to slash the deficit further, to invest in law enforcement, in education, in children, in health care, in transportation, in child care, in child nutrition programs.

It is a matter of priorities. Donald Barlett and James Steele won a Pulitzer for their book here, "America: What Went Wrong?" They are two really fine investigative reporters for the Philadelphia Inquirer. And in the section of the book "America: Who really Pays the Taxes?" they have an interesting paragraph:

> For over 30 years, Members of Congress and Presidents, Democrats and Republicans alike, have enacted one tax after another to create two separate and distinct systems, one for the rich and powerful called the privileged person's tax law, and another for everyone else called the common person's tax law.

Mr. President, this amendment will move us back toward a Tax Code that treats people fairly. It is time for some basic fairness, and that is the meaning of this amendment.

I reserve the rest of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 2½ minutes remaining.

Who yields time? The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, it sounds good to talk about getting rid of depreciation and intangible drilling costs for the oil and gas industry in the United States until you understand that most of these go to independent producers, those who really find the diminishing supply of both oil and gas in America. These are not exceptional depreciation allowances. They are not some gift. They are absolutely necessary unless we want to make a decision that America's own oil and gas production should disappear and we should not have any.

We are importing oil now, about half of our needs, and that is growing. And speak of losing jobs and losing growth. This industry that we would now try to take away the last, the last thing they have that might give them a chance to survive, succeed, employ people and produce oil, has already lost 250,000 jobs since the oil slump began.

We fought Desert Storm, and make no bones about it, because oil is precious to the United States, because it is a commodity without which our American economy for now and the foreseeable future cannot work.

Now, why would we come to the floor in a balanced budget activity and decide that we are going to take away what will keep the little industry we have left for producing oil and gas and the men and women who work in it, produce it and make a living? To me, it seems absolutely absurd. It seems kind of like backward economics to go out there and pluck this industry, perhaps because there is none in some States, or perhaps people think when oil and gas is mentioned it is Exxon or that it is Mobil—nothing wrong with them, but obviously in the United States, the principal people working and producing oil and gas are independent producers. They are finding most of the new oil. They are operating most of the rigs out there now. And I might just say, at this particular time we have the lowest rig count since we started keeping records. That means that even with these allowances we are hardly keeping pace with producing any new oil in America's oil patch.

Now, Mr. President, Senator NICKLES wants to speak about a minute or so on this, and if the Senator would permit me, I will reserve the remainder of my time and let the Senator complete his with the hope that Senator NICKLES will arrive.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, I will just take a minute and then wait to respond later, if I could.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has 2½ minutes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. First of all, Mr. President, we have on the part of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle a proposal for exporting more oil now from the North Alaska slopes, at the very time we are saying we are worried about our own supply. That is already contained in this bill.

Second, this is typical of what happens when we try to scale back corporate welfare and close tax loopholes. Every time you take on a powerful interest like this as opposed to regular people, opponents claim that the sky is going to fall in. It is not true that this change would spell the demise of the oil and gas industry. Just like other industries and other businesses, they should be made to capitalize their costs, to write off their costs over a longer period of time—the life of the asset. This is a special exemption, just for one industry. That is what is going on here. And this is why people do not trust this process. Every time it is a powerful interest whose benefits are under fire, we hear all sorts of reasons why they cannot be asked to tighten their belts. But, boy, when it comes to Medicare, when it comes to education, when it comes to children, belt-tightening is all the rage. This amendment basically says, let us have a standard when it comes to some deficit reduction. Let us have standard of fairness.

I will reserve the rest of my time.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. I regret to tell my friend, Senator WELLSTONE, that average people use oil. Without oil for America, average people suffer. Medicare suffers. Hospitals close.

Does anyone recall when we were in the small embargo situation with Iran and the cars were piled up at our gasoline stations? They were even shooting each other in the excitement of trying to get up there and see if they could get some gasoline in their cars.

All the gasoline comes from oil. Why should we stop producing oil in the United States, take away the tax deductions that are legitimate that they have? They are just as legitimate as everybody else's deduction. They are not a gratuity or a gift. So it might be nice to say, let us take out after this industry, but it is amazing when this industry does not produce the very people who Senator WELLSTONE is so worried about are the ones who suffer because everybody suffers. Our standard of living suffers. Inflation goes rampant. And I do not want to take that chance.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). The Senator has 1 minute, 40 seconds.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I will take 30 seconds on this.

I remind my colleague that altogether this particular exemption is only about $2.5 billion over the next 5 years. This is a whole package, worth tens of billions, that says, let us close these tax loopholes. People in the country want us to.

Second, Mr. President, in all due respect to my good friend from New Mexico, this is exactly the line we so often hear: the sky is falling in. No one is talking about eliminating the oil industry. Nobody is talking about not having oil business. We are just saying, how about closing these tax loopholes so that when companies do not pay and——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's 30 seconds have expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I thought the Chair said I had 1 minute, 45 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am sorry. The Chair thought the Senator meant to notify him when 30 seconds expired.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I am sorry. Let me finish very briefly and reserve the remainder of my time.

Other people pay more.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. WELLSTONE. How much time is on the other side, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One minute.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield 1 minute to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senator NICKLES has 1 minute and 5 seconds.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment. I just heard about it. I understand he says, well, we want to take away this advantage, IDC. Really, what my colleague is saying is, you should not be able to deduct ordinary out-of-pocket, nonrecoverable business expenses. That is ludicrous. It should not happen. He happens to be wrong on that issue.

I think I heard my colleague say that he wanted to eliminate the 936 benefit that goes towards Puerto Rico. We do that in this bill. We do it in the bill over 7 years and over 6 years. There are two different ways you count that benefit. We phase it out over 6 or 7 years. I think it is a responsible provision. I guess he wants to do it immediately, but you have a lot of firms that have made investments. I think that would be very inappropriate.

My colleague may call it corporate welfare, but again I think this committee has taken some very responsible action in allowing people to deduct their out-of-pocket, nonrecoverable business expenses as should be allowed and phasing out the tax benefit that was directed towards Puerto Rico.

So I would urge the Senate to oppose my colleague's amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator has 1 minute.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Mr. President, facts are stubborn things. It is a fact that IDC's are a special exemption. With my amendment, you could still in this industry capitalize your costs, depreciate them over a longer period of time, just like with most other industries.

This is just a special exemption that most other businesses do not get. We have been talking about the tax rate in Puerto Rico. In 1993, I wanted to phase it out, even though I was sympathetic to concerns that doing so suddenly would be unfair. That didn't happen. And now, we have 7 to 10 more years provided for in this bill. My amendment says that by 1997 we have to eliminate it.

My amendment says, colleagues, that we have to make tough choices. Barlett and Steele have it right. What do you have? One person's tax code is called the "privileged person's tax law," and for everyone else, call it the "common person's tax law." It is time we understand: regular people pay more because these loopholes allow often very profitable companies—some of the largest and most powerful companies in the country—are paying less.

This is revenue that the Government does not collect. We ought to have deficit reduction here. This is between $60 billion to $70 billion of deficit reduction based on a standard of fairness. We would have more for education, more for children, more for health care, more for law enforcement.

This is a perfect example of whether or not we will be willing to vote for people we represent or whether or not we are too beholden to powerful special interests. That is what this amendment speaks to.

I ask unanimous consent that copies of my prepared statements on each of the four loopholes, elaborating on my policy rationale for closing them, be included in the RECORD before the vote.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, is all time expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is expired.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the good news is that according to my record—and I believe my colleague will agree—we have three amendments left in this tier 2 category: Pryor, Conrad and Roth, in that order.

Is that the Senator's understanding?

Mr. DOMENICI. Finance Committee—Roth. We have been calling it "Finance Committee." Yes.

Mr. EXON. Pryor, Conrad, Roth—Finance Committee.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Would the Senator from Nebraska yield for a moment, a split second?

Mr. EXON. Yes.

Mr. WELLSTONE. I ask unanimous consent that Senator FEINGOLD be included as an original cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. EXON. I now recognize Senator PRYOR from Arkansas for his amendment and yield him the 5 minutes.

Mr. DOMENICI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Could I yield myself 5 minutes and have an exchange with the Senator, a conversation that our leader asked me to have, if the Senator would?

Mr. EXON. Certainly.

Mr. DOMENICI. We have 17 amendments that are completed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has no time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Please?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I am informed the Senator from New Mexico has no time.

Mr. DOMENICI. Where is the time, all on the Democrat side?

Could the Senator yield me 4 minutes to engage in this conversation?

Mr. EXON. I will.

Mr. DOMENICI. I say to the Senator, Senator DOLE has suggested, since we have 17 amendments to vote on now, we would like to vote on them tonight—that will put us well beyond 12 o'clock, and we will vote on them all—that we put over two amendments until morning, and that be the Pryor amendment and what the Senator has heretofore called the Roth amendment. And we would not change anything about those amendments in terms of votes—5 minutes of debate, and everything else—but they would be two that we would not lay down tonight.

We would go ahead and put CONRAD's in, if you would like, and that would leave two amendments for tomorrow. And then we could use this evening to see what the remaining lists of amendments are. We have 2 hours or 3 hours that we are going to be down here. The Senator's side and ours could put together the list which would follow after the end of our second tier, which is the goal. The Roth——

Mr. EXON. I would have to check on it. Could we put in a brief quorum call and see if—this surprises me. I do not know whether there is objection to it or not.

I know Senator PRYOR is ready to go. Could we put in a quorum call for a few minutes?

Mr. FORD. Would the Senator yield for one moment? We have another amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Yes.

Mr. FORD. You talked about the Pryor amendment. We have the Simon-Conrad amendment that is also mentioned. The Senator says take that one tonight and have Pryor tomorrow?

Mr. DOMENICI. I called it Conrad. I am sorry.

Mr. FORD. I do not believe Senator PRYOR is going to be willing to move his away from tonight.

Mr. EXON. Wait a minute. How many amendments? We have Pryor, Conrad, Roth. Is it Conrad-Simon? All right. We have three amendments; right.

Mr. DOMENICI. We call it Conrad; he calls it Simon.

Mr. EXON. All right.

Mr. NICKLES. One wears a bow tie.

Mr. EXON. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further proceedings under the quorum call be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I understand they have two amendments on their side. We will hold our Roth amendment until morning. So we will proceed with theirs at this point.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I thank the chairman of the committee.

I now recognize Senator PRYOR, as I did previously, and have awarded him the 5 minutes on our side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. PRYOR. Thank you, Mr. President. I thank the Chair for recognizing me.

AMENDMENT NO. 2983

(Purpose: To provide for the continuation of requirements for nursing facilities in the Medicaid Program)

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, in this 2,000-page piece of legislation, the budget reconciliation bill of 1995, we would think that just about everything under the sun would have been thought of and included in this to consume some 2,000 pages.

But what we did not include in this reconciliation bill is something very, very vital, Mr. President, because those are the nursing home standards that we have had enacted since 1987, and if we fail to reenact those same nursing home standards on the Federal level, we will be failing to protect a very, very fragile and vulnerable asset, which is the elderly population of this country, some 2 million now residing in these American nursing homes.

Mr. President, I send the amendment to the desk. I send it to the desk on behalf of myself and Senator COHEN of Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

Mr. PRYOR. I have several cosponsors. I will not read all of those at this time. It will consume too much time.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], for himself, Mr. COHEN, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. CONRAD, Mr. DODD, Mr. FEINGOLD, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mrs. MURRAY, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SIMON, Mr. WELLSTONE, and Mr. KOHL proposes an amendment numbered 2983.

Mr. PRYOR. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 889, line 21, strike all through page 897, line 19, and insert the following:

"SEC. 2137. QUALITY ASSURANCE STANDARDS FOR NURSING FACILITIES.

"The provisions of section 1919, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this title, shall apply to nursing facilities which furnish services under the State plan.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, since we enacted OBRA 1987, we have seen a dramatic change in the care of the nursing home patients in our country. For example, we have seen a 38 percent decline in the number of physical restraints. Since the enactment of the OBRA 1987 nursing home regulations, which was, I might say, a bipartisan effort—the late John Heinz, former Senator Durenberger, former Senator George Mitchell, former Senator Jack Danforth from Missouri—we have seen a dramatic advance in all of the things that make the quality of care in nursing homes better; for example, in resident outcomes, a 50 percent increase in the number of dehydration cases that we have solved, and no longer do we find many of these patients dehydrated.

We see also just a characteristic of the nursing home population, Mr. President. And how are we going to afford to look them in the eye and say that we failed to adopt any Federal standards in the budget reconciliation bill and we are going to say to the 77 percent of those who need help dressing, to the 63 percent who need help in toileting, the 91 percent who need help bathing, "We are sorry, you can just make it on your own. We are doing away with all Federal standards. We are going to leave it to the States"?

But, Mr. President, the reason we have Federal standards today as a result of OBRA 87 is because the States were not meeting their obligation and their challenge.

Mr. President, I know that there are two or three of my colleagues who want to speak. I know that Senator ROCKEFELLER wants 30 seconds. I yield 30 seconds to Senator ROCKEFELLER.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. I thank the Presiding Officer and the Senator from Arkansas. If there was a sense upon my colleagues of nervousness just before Senator PRYOR offered his amendment—there was a lot of huddling—in the sense of what was going to happen, my colleagues noticed correctly. I think that there was an effort to try and not have a vote on this tonight, because this is one of the most important amendments that we will vote on in this entire, somewhat bizarre process.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Florida.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be listed as an original cosponsor of the amendment. I point out that the arguments against this amendment are going to be that we ought to let the States have unbridled responsibility, discretion as to how to set these standards.

I should point out that in the year 2002 in my State, which has the highest percentage of persons over 80 in the country, that we are going to have 35 percent less funds than is currently projected to meet the needs of our elderly, our frail elderly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM. If there is any prescription for abuse, it is a 35-percent cut in funds and no Federal standards.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. Without objection, the Senator's request is granted.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I yield 20 seconds to the Senator from Maryland, Senator MIKULSKI.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, my father was in a nursing home for 3 years. He had Alzheimer's. We could go and visit him and make sure he was OK. But one of the things we need to know is when people are in a nursing home, they are often too sick to care for themselves or they are too sick to say how they are being cared for. If we do not have Federal standards around safety and staffing to be sure that our—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am looking for Senator COHEN, our cosponsor on the other side. I do not see him.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 30 seconds.

Mr. PRYOR. If Senator MIKULSKI needs an additional 20 seconds, I will be glad to yield to her.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, the idea of safety is absolutely crucial, that we need adequate staff, but we need to have those standards so that if anyone is too sick to say how they are being cared for, we know that we are preventing their abuse, we know that they are receiving the right medication, we know that they are being adequately cared for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired. The Senator has 10 seconds left.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I want to conclude by thanking the distinguished Senator from Maine, Senator COHEN, for not only being a cosponsor, but also having labored for many years in this particular field. He supports strongly this amendment. I also would like—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thank you. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I also would like to acknowledge Senator BOXER of California who has truly spoken on many occasions and feels compassionate about this amendment.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, Senator CHAFEE is going to explain where we are. Let me just suggest, at Senator COHEN's suggestion, Senator CHAFEE, and others, the so-called Finance Committee amendment, which you are going to have an evening to look at, will have everything in it Senator COHEN wants and even further improvements than the one before us. So I do not want anyone to think we have done that after we defeat your amendment tonight, because it is in there and you all will see it when we get it circulated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Arkansas for his efforts in connection with the nursing home standards and, indeed, he and I have worked together in the Finance Committee. I voted with him in connection with his amendment, which was defeated 10 to 10.

Since then, in conjunction with Senator COHEN and others on this side, we have prevailed upon what you might call the managers of the bill to put in a very good Federal nursing home standard provision. As regards nursing homes, there are two provisions in here that I think are superior to the provision that Senator PRYOR has, although I am not intimately familiar with everything that he has.

One, in the provision that we have, we remove the costly and duplicative requirement that standards perform so-called preadmission screening and annual resident review, which is known by the acronym of PASARR, and that would not be included and it is my understanding that this is a rather good provision.

Second, we have a proposal that if the States have tighter inspection requirements than the Federal, then the States can apply to the Secretary of HHS for a waiver and have those tighter provisions included as the inspection requirements or the standard requirements for the nursing homes within that State.

You might say, "Well, how do they go about enforcing it?" We have a provision that it can be enforced by HCFA. So we think that this has a lot of provisions in it that have merit.

I urge those on the other side to take a look at this provision that is in the so-called managers amendment.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is still not quiet in the Chamber. The Senator is entitled to be heard.

Mr. GRAHAM. Will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. CHAFEE. Quickly, because it is on my time.

Mr. GRAHAM. I agree with what you just said. I would like to be able to compare the specifics of what is going to be offered with what Senator PRYOR and others have offered. When will we have that opportunity?

Mr. DOLE. I can respond. I think that language is ready now. I think we are working on some other language, but that language is ready. That is why we wanted to wait until the morning so we can compare that.

Mr. GRAHAM. The difficulty is we are going to get this sometime in the morning and then be expected to vote on it. We are going to vote on this amendment tonight; correct?

Mr. CHAFEE. I think the suggestion was to put the vote off until the morning and to give you a chance to look at this particular provision.

Mr. GRAHAM. The vote on Senator PRYOR's amendment off until tomorrow?

Mr. DOLE. Both.

Mr. DOMENICI. Both; we ask for both.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair advises Senators to please go through the Chair so we keep some control.

Who seeks time? There is 1 minute 28 seconds left.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me indicate that we have addressed this concern, and I think as Senator CHAFEE pointed out, if we really want to find the best provision, we ought to compare the two. We may not vote on the PRYOR amendment tonight. I will decide how many amendments we vote on this evening. So we will have an opportunity to look at the language in both.

If you are looking for a political vote, we can have the political vote, but if you are looking for the best provision—it was worked out with Senator COHEN, Senator SNOWE, Senator CHAFEE, and others on this side of the aisle. We think it is a pretty good provision. So I hope if we are interested in getting the best provision in the bill, we will do as Senator DOMENICI suggested: Wait until morning, have a vote, find out which is the superior provision, and then vote accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair apologizes. The Chair did not ask the Senator from Rhode Island if he would yield to the majority leader.

Mr. CHAFEE. Do I still have control of the time?

I would have been delighted to have yielded that time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I again apologize and give back 20 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Was there another question, or does that satisfy everyone?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There are 18 seconds left to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I ask Senator COHEN if he wants to say anything?

Mr. COHEN. I believe I will get 2 minutes to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no time left on the Democratic side.

Mr. EXON. I yield 2 minutes off the bill to the Senator from Maine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, let me specifically address the issue whether or not this is a political effort on the part of my colleague and friend from Arkansas, Senator PRYOR.

We had a hearing this morning dealing with nursing home standards. I want to say, for the benefit of all who are here, I have been working with Senator DOLE, Senator CHAFEE, Senator SNOWE, and others, to try to make sure that the standards that were set in place by OBRA 1987 go back into place, that we have Federal standards and Federal enforcement of the nursing home rights, as such. Senator DOLE has been most amenable to that.

I think Senator CHAFEE is correct that we have actually made some improvements in cutting back on some of the things that do not need to be there, that are costing money and are duplicative. One issue remaining in my mind is, in fact, the extension of the waiver, so-called, to the States that have higher standards than required by Federal law. The concern I have is that if such standards are so high that they therefore would apply for a waiver, what in fact would be the role of the Federal Government as far as oversight and enforcement? If there will be strict oversight and enforcement, I would recommend we support the bill that we offered as part of the managers' bill. If, however, that is a major loophole that would be seen as such by those in the business itself—the nursing home industry, providers and consumers—I would have problems supporting the substitute contained in the managers' bill. I have not seen the language.

I think Senator DOLE is correct. We ought to put this off until tomorrow so we can compare the language. If we are satisfied there will be adequate oversight and enforcement authority retained by the Federal Government, I would recommend to my colleague from Arkansas that we accept the managers' bill.

Mr. PRYOR. If my friend from Maine will yield, Mr. President, let me remind my colleagues that in the managers' amendment to be offered by Senator ROTH tomorrow, the nursing home provision is only a very, very small part of it. There is going to be, as I understand it, a change in the Medicaid formula, also encompassed in the managers' amendment. This is only a small section of it.

I think we should go ahead according to schedule. We have all been here all day, playing by the rules. Let us vote for the Pryor amendment and the Pryor-Cohen amendment tonight, and if we need to change it tomorrow, we can, and we can look at it tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. All time on the amendment has expired.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, we are down to the final amendment, as I understand it, we will be debating tonight. Therefore, I yield the 5 minutes on our side to Senator SIMON for his distribution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2984

(Purpose: In the nature of a substitute)

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SIMON], for himself and Mr. CONRAD, proposes an amendment numbered 2984.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the amendment is printed in today's RECORD under "Amendments Submitted.")

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, this is the amendment you have read about in the Washington Post when it says a "Good Budget Compromise." This is the amendment the New York Times has editorialized about. This says balance the budget, number one. And we have a comprehensive program to do that. Number two, we eliminate the tax cut.

Senator SPECTER said, "If you would have a secret vote, 20 Republican Senators would not vote for the tax cut."

To say we are going to balance the budget, and then start with a tax cut, is like having a New Year's resolution to diet and start with a great big dessert.

Third, we take the CPI and reduce it by one-half of 1 percent. At the Finance Committee meeting, Senator DOLE said, in talking about looking at the CPI, "This is something we should have addressed years ago." This is still below what the special economist said should be a drop of between 0.7 to 2 points.

Third, we help the less fortunate in our society. Instead of a savings of $270 billion in Medicare, it is $168 billion. Instead of $187 billion in Medicaid, it is $83 billion. Welfare reform—there is $36 billion more for poor people. Discretionary spending, $79 billion more. Veterans programs are assisted. Agriculture programs are assisted. Student loan programs are helped.

This is a balanced program that makes sense and it balances the budget in a prudent way. I hope we can move in this direction.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SIMON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from North Dakota, Mr. President.

Mr. CONRAD. I thank the Senator from Illinois. This is an amendment for those who disagree with cutting taxes by $245 billion at the very time we are adding $1.8 trillion to the national debt. This is the amendment for those who are concerned that the Medicare and Medicaid cuts are too severe. This is the amendment for those who oppose cuts in education. This is the amendment for those who want welfare to be work-oriented but protect the children. This is the amendment for those who are concerned about the raid on rural America contained in the underlying bill. This is the amendment for those who recognize that CPI overstates the cost of living. The advisory commission to the Finance Committee said it is overstated by .7 to 2.0. That means adding $600 billion to the national debt over the next 7 years.

Mr. President, I hope my colleagues will support this amendment to fairly balance the budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. DOMENICI. How much time do I have on the amendment, and how much time do they have?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico has 5 minutes; the minority has 1 minute 50 seconds.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, let me remind Senators of a couple of things. First of all, the Consumer Price Index provides $115 billion of the money needed to balance their budget. In addition, Medicare is getting cut, or hit, or reformed $168 billion. So we are doing both Medicare and CPI. And then, third, and equally as important, the fiscal dividend that is not supposed to be there until you are in balance—that is how we thought it worked, that you get to balance and you get a fiscal dividend—they take the $170 billion fiscal dividend, before in balance, and put it in their balanced budget.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair cannot hear the Senator.

Mr. DOMENICI. I am pleased that the Chair is concerned, and I thank him. I want to close by saying that I really do not believe this is the kind of budget we want to adopt here tonight. I think if anybody had a real chance to look through it and go into detail, they would agree with the Senator from New Mexico.

I want to go through the three. You get $115 billion by changing the CPI by .5. I was wondering a little while ago—my friends on the Democrat side were concerned because we had not given them our amendments. Most are one page. We just got this one now, in case anybody wonders, which is all right. I am not complaining. It is just that we do not know very much about it. These few little facts are about the best I can do.

Mr. FORD. Now you know how we feel when we have 2,000 pages.

Mr. DOMENICI. I think you got those pursuant to the rules. They were before you all. This was presented right here, tonight, to us. I do not want to take any more time. I will yield the remainder of my time.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I yield 50 seconds to my colleague from Virginia.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I thank my colleague and friend from Illinois. I will not make a full statement at this time. I will put one in the RECORD. Suffice it to say—I say this to my good friends on the other side of the aisle—this is where we ought to be going. This is a tough, fair, principled budget that reflects the kind of distribution that we ought to be looking toward if we are going to come up with a reasonable solution to the fiscal challenges that are facing the country today, and it does it without a $245 billion tax cut that we simply cannot afford and should not be giving under the circumstances.

I am pleased to join my fiscally responsible colleagues in offering an alternative that I think meets the test that this country is looking for us to meet.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SIMON. I yield myself the remainder of the time.

In terms of the fiscal dividends that Senator DOMENICI is talking about, we balance the budget also, so we have the same savings on interest.

In terms of the size of this—and I recognize this is not going to pass tonight—but I think this may be the basis for a compromise that we may move toward. I think there is a lot of common sense in this.

In terms of the CPI, it is less than was recommended to the Finance Committee by the economic experts, and what it means for a person who is in the median on Social Security getting $770, it would be a reduction of $3.85 for which that person gets more help on Medicare and Medicaid.

I think seniors would welcome this proposal.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yielded back my time, but I ask unanimous consent to retrieve 1 minute of it to yield to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I thank my colleague from New Mexico. I join him in opposition to this amendment.

Although I compliment the sponsors of the amendment for saying we should use an accurate CPI, they do not go as far as that that was proposed by a group of economists that said we should use from 0.7 percent even and maybe above 1 percent. Whatever the percent is, it should be accurate, and most estimates are that 0.5 percent, which would save something like $115 billion, is on the low side. So I compliment them for doing that.

I rise in opposition to their proposal because they want to spend $245 billion more so we do not tax more. I would like to give taxpayers a break for $245 billion and reduce spending to pay for it. That is the difference between the two.

I compliment them for a very significant element of this package and hope that ultimately we will use accurate CPI reflection in all of our cost-of-living adjustments.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as I understand, all the amendments have been offered that will be offered this evening in tier 2. The committee amendment will be offered tomorrow morning.

I now ask unanimous consent that the votes scheduled to begin now be limited to 8 minutes after the first rollcall vote, with 1 minute for explanation between each vote to be equally divided in the usual form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Let me persuade my colleagues we will have about 18 votes here. If we all stay in the Chamber we will probably save 20 or 30 minutes. There are not many places to go at 9:30 at night around here. They can watch the ball game right off the floor. Hopefully, we will accommodate one another by being here.

The first vote will be the normal 15 minutes plus 5 to give people time to come back from wherever they want to come back from.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the request include 1 minute before the first vote?

Mr. DOLE. One minute before each vote equally divided in the usual form.

We will start tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock, and we hope to have 7½-minute votes after the first vote, so we ask all Senators to remain in the Chamber—not overnight but be back here.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder if Senator EXON would join in requesting from his side what I request for our side.

We still have a third tier, which are all the amendments that will not get debated. We would like to use the evening now while we are here voting to have you get as many together so we know, maybe tonight or early morning, how many you have. And we have some. Perhaps we can give the Senators an idea, then, by midmorning on how many there are.

Mr. EXON. I advise my colleague we have been working on that. We were talking about it a few minutes ago in the Cloakroom. We do not have a definitive number. We have made major reductions generally in the area that we have been indicating to you in our series of negotiations about where we think we will end up. I do not know that I can give a specific number tonight. I will explore that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment is numbered 2964 by Senator MCCAIN and others: 1 minute, equally divided. Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. I yield back the time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back on this amendment? Does the Senator from Nebraska yield back the 30 seconds?

Mr. EXON. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back.

Mr. NICKLES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have been ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Did we order the yeas and nays on all the amendments?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there an objection for all the yeas and nays to be ordered at one time?

Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered on all amendments that have been debated so far.

AMENDMENT NO. 2965

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Ladies and gentlemen, the next amendment is amendment 2965 by Mr. HELMS, 1 minute equally divided.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. May we have order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There will be 1 minute equally divided on this amendment prior to the vote.

The Chair recognizes the Senator from North Carolina.

This is going to be a long night unless we can get quiet after these votes.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I think this is one of few times when both sides are in favor of an amendment. It is to protect the right of senior citizens to choose their own doctors if they wish.

I think the distinguished manager of the bill, Mr. DOMENICI, has a clarification.

Mr. DOMENICI. I would like to say for the Republicans, there is a technical error on the explanation. This amendment has been modified so that the language in our Whip Notice—it says, "if you don't comply, they are not eligible for Medicare reimbursement"—is out of this. It is not in this amendment. I think the amendment deserves to be adopted.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, this amendment pretends that the Republican budget's destructive plan for Medicare will preserve the senior citizen's ability to get their care through fee for service and continue to see his or her own doctor.

Now, it is fine to pretend, so vote for the amendment. It is all right. It is not going to do any harm. Make no mistake. There is no guarantee of anything in the Helms amendment for seniors and their future ability to see their own doctor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on every amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this will be an 8-minute vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This is an 8-minute vote.

Mr. DOLE. This is the test. If we all stay here, we may finish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SANTORUM). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays 20, as follows:

Mr. HELMS. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2969

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on agreeing to amendment No. 2969 offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN]. The yeas and nays are ordered.

There will be 1 minute equally divided on the question.

Who yields time?

Mr. DOLE. The time is running.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time is running. Who wants to claim the 30 seconds on each side?

Mr. BROWN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 26 seconds.

Mr. BROWN. The measure that is before the Senate takes a 1993 limitation on business' ability to deduct salaries in excess of $1 million and applies it, not to just publicly traded corporations to which it applies to now, it applies it to nonpublicly traded organizations and other business. It is a fairness question. It is grandfathered for any existing contracts, but I might say the money that is raised goes to reduce the Social Security earnings penalty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I yield back our 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2969.

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So, the amendment (No. 2969) was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. EXON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me observe that, out of the three votes, we have had two unanimous votes. Maybe some could be done by voice vote. It would save some time. Otherwise, we are going to stay on the eight-minute schedule, and I urge my colleagues to stay on the premises.

AMENDMENT NO. 2970

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending question is amendment No. 2970.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. President, this amendment is the fraud, waste, and abuse amendment. It saves $600 million, by CBO's estimate, more than the underlying amendment. This is a culmination of 5 years of hearings.

All of the things in this amendment were recommended by the Inspector General's office and by GAO. It saves more than $600 million. In sum, all I can tell you is what this does. It says that when the Veterans Administration pays 4 cents for a bandage and Medicare pays 86 cents, something is wrong. Let us pay the same thing as the Veterans Administration. That is what this amendment does.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield to Senator COHEN.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, the antifraud provision in the Finance Committee measure has been the product of over 3 years of effort on my part. I have had to work with Justice, FBI, the White House, providers, consumers, and they support the provision as written.

In addition to that, there is a deletion under my bill which would allow the criminal fines imposed under the violation to go back into the Medicare trust fund. That is deleted under the Senator's amendment.

I urge that we reject this amendment for a variety of reasons but, most of all, because it would make a last-minute change over something that is accepted by virtually everybody.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the pending amendment is not germane to the provisions of the reconciliation bill pursuant to section 305(b)(2). I raise a point of order against the pending amendment.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the pending amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays are ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 43, nays 56, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote the ayes are 43, the nays are 56. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion to waive the Budget Act is rejected. The point of order is well taken and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 2971

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The next amendment is amendment No. 2971. There are 30 seconds on each side for debate.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, this amendment removes about $60 billion worth of corporate pork over a period of 7 years. It has bipartisan support.

For the information of my colleagues, it does not include the auction of public safety spectrum. Obviously, that would be exempt from the auction of spectrum.

Mr. President, I understand the point of order may be lodged against this amendment. It makes no sense to lodge a point of order against an amendment that would reduce spending, which is what this legislation is supposed to be all about.

Mr. EXON. The pending amendment would add two new matters to the bill and violate the prohibition of nongermane amendments. I raise a point of order that the pending amendment is therefore not germane and thus violates section 305(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974.

I yield back the remainder of my time. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. McCAIN. I move to waive the point of order and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion.

Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The point of order is well taken and the amendment falls.

AMENDMENT NO. 2972

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment 2972, offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized for 30 seconds.

The Senate will please come to order.

The Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, my amendment restores $712 million rescinded by the bill in 48 States in highway funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will suspend. Senators will please come to order.

Mr. BYRD. Senators will find on their desks a detailed table which shows the reductions that were made in each of the 48 States.

I restore this money by closing a corporate loophole. The corporate loophole is closed by the House by a phaseout in 4 years: closed by the bill by a phaseout in 5 years. I say, let us go with the House, phase out the loophole in 4 years and restore $712 million in highway funds to the 48 States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired. The Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, for those who thought the highway demonstration programs were good programs and all the projects were good projects, obviously you ought to vote for this.

They were never spread equally across the land. They had very significant preferential treatment, depending upon a lot of things. So I think the committee that decided to do this acted appropriately, especially since they applied the savings to a very good cause.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays have been ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

So, the amendment (No. 2972) was rejected.

Mr. DOMENICI. I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. DOLE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2973

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2973 offered by the Senator from Rhode Island, Senator CHAFEE.

The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I am pleased to be joined in this amendment by Senators CONRAD and FRIST. The reconciliation bill says States must cover the disabled but does not define who is disabled. This amendment adopts the same definition of "disabled" as we used in the welfare bill which we passed——

Mr. HARKIN. Point of order. The Senate is not in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

The Senate will please come to order. Those Senators in front of the Chair, please take your conversations to the cloakroom.

Mr. CHAFEE. Do I start my 30 seconds over?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 16 seconds remaining.

Mr. CHAFEE. Well, I will start. This amendment adopts the same definition of "disabled" as we used in the welfare bill which we passed 87-12. It does not include substance abuses. That is a mistake in the little chit that was circulated here. These individuals are at 75 percent of the poverty level or less. They cannot get health insurance. This safety net is essential to them if they are going to stay in the community.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Time has expired.

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, two excellent Senators are offering this amendment and trying to protect the basic Medicaid coverage for the very poorest, very oldest and disabled Americans.

I hope everybody will vote for it. But, again, you cannot turn a frog into a prince. The underlying bill would require 200 such amendments to make it agreeable. I hope people will support this.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Do we not get to speak against it, since both sides were for it? There was no opposition.

Mr. DOLE. I would ask unanimous consent to proceed for 30 seconds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. This is another infringement on the Governors. We are going to turn over these programs, make them entitlements, and give them block grants, and make it impossible for Democrats or Republicans to administer the program.

We had this argument. We discussed it long and hard with the Senator from Rhode Island. I hope we would defeat this amendment. If you do not have any faith in your Governor, then vote the other way.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The question is on agreeing to amendment No. 2973.

The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

So, the amendment (No. 2973) was agreed to.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2963

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on amendment No. 2963 offered by the Senator from Louisiana.

A motion to table is pending on which the yeas and nays have been ordered. Who yields time?

Mr. EXON. I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. President, I say to my colleagues, I urge my Republican colleagues to vote for this tonight, because NEWT GINGRICH is going to do it in conference. You all are going to be on record of voting against it. They are going to fix it in conference.

I suggest to vote against tabling, because you can add 44 percent more children who would benefit from the child tax credit. Without this amendment, you are cutting off 31 million youngsters who will not benefit from the tax credit. It is that simple. Guess what? They are going to do it in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield my time to Senator NICKLES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment. This amendment would build another entitlement program, another brandnew entitlement program into the Tax Code. According to the Joint Tax Committee, the Breaux amendment would increase outlays by $37 billion over 7 years. I urge my colleagues to vote no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to table the Breaux amendment. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 53, nays 46, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 2975, AS MODIFIED

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is amendment No. 2975 offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. BOND].

The Senator from Missouri has 30 seconds.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, pursuant to a unanimous consent agreement when I offered the amendment, I send a modification to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has that right.

The amendment is so modified.

The amendment (No. 2975), as modified, is as follows:

On page 1620 after line 1 insert:

SUBCHAPTER A—HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS

SEC. 12201. INCREASE IN DEDUCTION FOR HEALTH INSURANCE COSTS OF SELF-EMPLOYED INDIVIDUALS.

(a) INCREASE IN DEDUCTION.—Section 162(1) is amended—

(1) by striking "30 percent" in paragraph (1) and inserting "55 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, when I raised the question of deductibility of health insurance, I said we were looking for another offset. I have been able to work with the managers and the majority leader. They have enabled us to eliminate the offsets which would have taken out the long-term care insurance, and we are able to raise the deductibility for self-employed individuals and small business people from 30 to 55 percent. I believe that this is something we can work with in conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. BOND. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have already been ordered.

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am the cosponsor on this side of the Bond amendment. I strongly support this amendment. We hoped, originally, that we would be able to permit the self-employed to deduct 100 percent of their insurance premiums, and this looks like they are going to take about 55 percent. This is the best we could do, but it is better than in the past.

Mr. WELLSTONE. Can I ask what the offset is?

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, the time has expired.

Mr. DOLE. We did not need an offset. We found another area where they overestimated or underestimated, or whatever it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I wonder, will the Senator withdraw the yeas and nays?

Mr. BOND. We would like the yeas and nays since everybody is here.

Mr. DOMENICI. OK.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 99, nays 0, as follows:

So the amendment (No. 2975), as modified, was agreed to.

BIDEN MOTION TO COMMIT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to commit with instructions offered by the Senator from Delaware.

The Senator from Delaware is recognized for 30 seconds.

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, one thing all Americans say they care about is to get a college education for their children.

This amendment will allow—it costs $35 billion, roughly $5 billion a year, and it would allow a $10,000 per year deduction—maximum deduction—for the cost of college tuition for couples making up to $120,000, or individuals up to $90,000.

This is a genuine benefit for the middle class, and we do exactly what the Republican bill does. The way in which we get the money is restrict the growth of tax expenditures.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, has there been a motion to table?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. DOMENICI. I yield back any time I have. I move to table the Biden amendment and ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

Yeas and nays they were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to table.

The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. FORD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2976

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2976 offered by the Senator from Maine. Ms. SNOWE, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Senator from Maine.

Ms. SNOWE. I thank the Chair.

First of all, I would like to say that this amendment is cosponsored by Senators D'AMATO, SHELBY, BIDEN, MACK, MURKOWSKI, HUTCHISON, GRAMM, COHEN, and JEFFORDS.

This amendment is a sense of the Senate that would provide coverage under Medicare for breast and prostate cancer.

When changes were made in Medicare back in 1993, there was an inadvertent omission whereby oral drug treatment was not covered under Medicare for breast and prostate cancer. It is a cost-saving measure.

Mr. President, I will ask unanimous consent to vitiate the yeas and nays and ask for a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. I yield my time back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2976) was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 2977

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question occurs on amendment No. 2977 offered by the Senator from North Dakota.

The Senator from North Dakota is recognized for 30 seconds.

The Senator will suspend. The Senate will come to order.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, I yield 30 seconds to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. President, it is an extraordinarily simple amendment. We have in the Tax Code of the United States an incentive, a tax break, a tax deduction for somebody who closes their plant in this country and moves the jobs overseas to a tax haven, produces the same product with foreign workers, then ships the product back to the United States.

This simply gets rid of the tax break for companies that move the jobs overseas. If we cannot close this tax loophole, we cannot close any tax loophole. I would hope we will have an affirmative vote on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I yield back our time.

This amendment contains extraneous material and is not germane and therefore subject to a point of order under the Budget Act.

Mr. EXON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, pursuant to section 904 of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, I move to waive the applicable sections of that act for the consideration of the amendment, and I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to waive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. This will be the last vote this evening, and we will start voting tomorrow morning at 9:15. The first vote will be on the amendment by——

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, may we have order, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is correct. The Senate will please come to order.

This is the last vote. Senators will please listen.

Mr. DOLE. Senator GRAMM of Texas. The first vote will come on his amendment, and the first vote will be 20 minutes in length. Then we will go back to our 8 minutes after the first vote. We have had 20 votes today. I wish to thank my colleagues.

Mr. FORD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Are we going tomorrow by the schedule of amendments offered, and then we go down that line and then we are on, will be on the last ones?

Mr. DOLE. Right. We are going to go down—that is right, yes.

Mr. FORD. We go as introduced.

Mr. DOLE. Then we go to tier three.

Mr. FORD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DOLE. Then tier four and tier five.

Mr. FORD. Ten.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to waive the budget act. The yeas and nays are ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber who desire to vote?

The yeas and nays resulted—yeas 47, nays 52, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On this vote, the yeas are 47, the nays are 52. Three-fifths of the Senators duly chosen and sworn not having voted in the affirmative, the motion is rejected. The amendment falls.

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. ROTH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

LIST OF EXTRANEOUS MATTER (THE BYRD RULE)

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, pursuant to section 313(c) of the Budget Act, I submit a list of material considered to be extraneous under subsections 313 (b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), and (b)(1)(E) on behalf of the Committee on the Budget.

Section 313(c) of the Budget Act states:

The inclusion or the exclusion of a provision shall not constitute a determination of extraneousness by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

In addition, this list does not represent the Budget Committee's position on the program or policies represented in these provisions or a waiver of a point of order against these provisions. The Budget Act requires the committee to simply identify potential violations under three components of the Byrd rule and the committee has complied with the law.

That a provision appears on this list does not mean it will automatically be deleted from the bill. A Senator must raise a point of order against the provision and the Presiding Officer must sustain the point of order. The Byrd rule may be waived in the Senate by an affirmative vote of 60 Senators.

This list is a compilation of items identified by both the majority and minority staff of the Senate Budget Committee. The staffs did not agree on every item, but the differences were small when one considers the controversial and comprehensive nature of this bill. I want to thank the staff. The Byrd rule has evolved over the past 10 years and identifying those provisions that violate the rule is a very difficult exercise.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the list be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BALANCED BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1995—POSSIBLE EXTRANEOUS PROVISIONS: SENATE BILL

(Prepared by the Republican Staff of the U.S. Senate Budget Committee, October 1995)

EXTRANEOUS PROVISIONS—SENATE BILL

Provision	Comments/Violation
	AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY
Sec. 1113(a)(4), 1113(c), and (e) (2)	Clarification on peanut pool and sale, lease, or transfer of farm poundage quota for 1991 through 2000 crops of peanuts and allows non-quota peanuts to become available if market price exceeds 120 percent of loan rate; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 1115	Savings adjustment; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 1116	Sense of the Senate regarding tax provisions relating to ethanol; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
	ARMED SERVICES
	Naval Petroleum Reserve Sale (Elk Hills)
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(f)	Requirements on Elk Hills production until sale is completed; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(j)	Requirement that a sale cannot take place unless DOE provides a notice to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(k)	Expedited procedures for Congressional consideration of a resolution of approval of the sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(l)	Notice to Congress of noncompliance with deadlines; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421a(m)	Requirement that GAO monitor DOE sale and report to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
	Naval Oil Shale Reserve Sale
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421b(b)	Application of Sec. 7421(h), (j), (k), (l), & (m) to the Oil Shale Reserve sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 2; Sec. 7421b(b)(C)	Expedited procedures for consideration of joint resolution of approval of the sale; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 3002	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This section would require the Secretary of Treasury to report to the Congress on the feasibility of a private deposit insurance system.
Sec. 3001(d)	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This subsection outlines a merger of the two deposit insurance funds for banks (BIF) and thrifts (SAIF), but item (4) of this subsection makes implementation of all of subsection (d) contingent on a future act of Congress (which will be necessary to eliminate all thrift charters). Therefore, the entire subsection 3001(d) will have no effect when reconciliation is enacted.
	COMMERCE, SCIENCE AND TRANSPORTATION
Sec. 4001(a)(C), beginning on p. 207, line 1 with "unless" through "1998" on line 23.	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section 4001 directs the FCC to allocate spectrum to applicants by auction spectrum, but exempts certain parts of the spectrum from being sold at auction. Section 4001(a)(C) lists as one of the exemptions the spectrum to be used for advanced/digital television, with a qualification. That is, the FCC can't auction spectrum for digital TV "unless" the FCC submits within six months a new proposal for allocating this spectrum by auction and the Congress "takes action to approve the plan" (i.e. enacts a later law with the President's signature). Because the prohibition on auctioning spectrum for digital TV stands on its own and is unaffected by the possibility that Congress could always come back later and change the law, the language telling the FCC to do a new plan that would have to be approved by Congress has no impact on the receipts yielded by the auctions that are authorized in this bill, and therefore that language is extraneous.
Sec. 4002	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. This section would amend a schedule of regulatory fees charged by the FCC to broadcasters. These fees were established by OBRA '93 as permanent offsetting collections to be "credited to the account providing appropriations" to the FCC. Two months later, the Commerce-Justice-State appropriations bill for 1994 amended OBRA '93 by saying that these fees "shall be collected only if, and only in the total amounts, required in Appropriations Acts." Therefore, if there is no appropriations action, then these fees cannot be collected. Since future collection of the fees is contingent on future action by the Congress, changing the schedule of fees in this reconciliation bill has no budgetary effect, so the provision is extraneous.
Sec. 4021	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section limits the fee the Coast Guard can charge for inspection of small vessels. Provision does not sunset and causes outlays beyond the years in which savings are achieved through spectrum auctions.
Sec. 4022(a) Use of Interest for Oil Spill Recovery Institute.	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section provides for new direct spending by allowing interest in Oil Spill Liability trust fund attributed to the Oil Spill Recovery Institute (OSRI) be used by the Institute. Provision may or may not sunset, due to interaction with next provision, dealing with Section 1012 in Alaska. Provision will cause outlays beyond the years in which savings are achieved through spectrum auctions.
Sec. 4022(a) Use of Section 1012 in Alaska	Byrd rule (b)(1)(E): A provision which would, on net, increase outlays or decrease revenues in a fiscal year after the period covered by the reconciliation bill. Section provides for new direct spending beginning eleven years after enactment of the 1995 Coast Guard authorization bill by mandating principal attributed to the Oil Spill Recovery Institute (OSRI) in the Oil Spill Liability trust fund be used for oil spill liability and compensation activities in Alaska.
Sec. 4033	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section provides change in current law to the Local Rail Freight Assistance program allowing for disaster assistance for railroads.
Sec. 4034	Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues. Section provides for additional eligible state activities under the Local Rail Freight Assistance program.
	ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES
	Subtitle A—United States Enrichment Corporation
Sec. 5002	Enrichment Corporation statement of purpose; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5004(d)(2) & (3)	Enrichment Corporation amendments dealing with the scoring of the proceeds from the sale of the corporation; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5013(a)(1)(B)	Requirement that DOE accept low level nuclear waste from any operator of an enrichment facility; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5013(c)	Waiver of liability for State or Interstate Compact's requirement to accept low level nuclear wate from any enrichment facility; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
	Subtitle C—Arctic Coastal Plain Leasing and Revenue Act
Sec. 5202	Purpose and policy; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5207(d) second sentence	Special Areas reporting requirement to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Portion of Sec. 5215(b)	Reporting requirements (beginning with line 12 on page 48 through line 2 on page 49); Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.

Sec. 5300(a)(3)	Authorization of appropriations; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5300(a)(10)	Report to Congress on fee collections; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5301	Authorizes Secretary to enter into challenge cost-share agreements; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5302	Cost recovery for damage to National Park resources; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.
Sec. 5305(b)(2) second sentence	Reporting requirement to Congress; Byrd rule (b)(1)(A): Produces no change in outlays or revenues.

	VETERANS' AFFAIRS
	Veterans' Affairs Committee reconciliation language contains no Byrd Rule Violation

Note: Prepared by SBC majority staff, October 25, 1995 (12:55 pm) and by the Staff of the Committee on the Budget, pursuant to Section 313(c) requiring a list of items considered to be extraneous under subsections (b)(1)(A), (b)(1)(B), and (b)(1)(E). The inclusion or exclusion of a provision shall not constitute a determination of extraneousness by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. EXON. Mr. President, the chairman of the Budget Committee was kind enough to discuss with me in advance the list that he just submitted for the RECORD. I, in turn, have shared with him my view of which items in the bill violate the Byrd rule against extraneous matter in reconciliation.

There is a great deal of agreement on these two lists, but some differences persist. To make the RECORD more complete, I submit my list of extraneous provisions and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

At the close of debate on the bill, after Senators and the Parliamentarian have had a full, fair chance to review these lists, I intend to raise an omnibus point of order under the Byrd rule against a large number of provisions that we have determined to be extraneous. I ask unanimous consent that my list be printed in the RECORD to give Senators the maximum amount of notice as to which provisions are under review for that purpose.

There being no objection, the list was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BYRD RULE VIOLATIONS, RECONCILIATION 1996

Subtitle and Section	Subject	Budget Act Violation	Explanation
	TITLE: II
	COMMITTEE: ARMED SERVICES
	Compliance 1st Year: No; 5-Years: Yes; 7-Years: Yes
7421a.(a)	Sale Required. The sale of the Elk Hills, CA site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(E)	There is a loss of offsetting receipts in the outyears that is not offset with the title. Specifically, CBO estimates that selling the NPR will result in a loss of offsetting receipts in years 2003–05 of $1.02 billion. Thus, the provision produces revenue losses in years not covered by the budget resolution.
7421a.(e)	Treatment of State of California. Reservation of 7 percent of the sale of the Elk Hills site in the NPR to settle claims with the State of California.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision amounts to California's price for waiving its claim to the land within the NPR. This 7 percent set-aside does not score because the spending is subject to appropriations action.
7421.a.(f)	Maintaining Elk Hills Unit Production. Sets requirements for Elk Hills to maintain production till sale is complete.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision provides no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421a.(j)(3)	Notice to Congress. Establishes a sense of the Congress regarding the Secretary of the Energy's approval of the Elk Hills site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(A)	As a sense of the Senate, this provision produces no changes in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421a.(k)	Joint Resolution of Approval. Provides fast track authority for congressional approval of the sale of the Elk Hills site in the NPR.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision does not produce any change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.a(1)	Noncompliance with Deadlines. Requires the Secretary of Energy to notify Congress if the sale is delayed.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.a(m)	Oversight. Requires the Comptroller General to monitor the sale.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.b.(a)	Sale Required. The sale of reserves in the NPR other than that at Elk Hills, CA.	313(b)(1)(E)	There is a loss of offsetting receipts in the outyears beyond 2002 that is not offset within the title. Thus, the provision produces revenue losses in years beyond the years covered in the budget resolution.
7421.b.(b)	Administration of Sale. Applies subsections c, d, h, i, j, k, l, m, and n or section 7421.a. of this title to the sale of sites other than Elk Hills.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.
7421.b.(b)(C)	Joint Resolution of Approval. Provides fast track authority for congressional consideration of the sale.	313(b)(1)(A)	This provision produces no change in revenue or outlays and is thus extraneous.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of morning business, with Senators permitted to speak for up to 2 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADVISORY COMMISSION ON INTERGOVERNMENTAL RELATIONS

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am honored to serve as a member of the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations [ACIR]. In this era of "new federalism," the government must create a partnership with state and local governments that is based on balanced, decentralized decision making. These governments have been the laboratories for change for the last 20 years. A streamlined and more flexible intergovernmental system will offer significant opportunities for state and local governments to develop more innovative and cost effective methods of delivering programs and services. State and local governments are now ready to rise to the challenges of this new era in history—the Information Age—where experimentation and local control are needed.

For example, as this Congress moves to balance the budget and restore fiscal responsibility and accountability at the federal level, it cannot do so on the backs of state and local governments. My involvement in drafting Public Law 104-4, the Unfunded Mandates Reform Law, was an effort to relieve this burden. As a former Wyoming state legislator, I am well aware of the hardships the federal government places on states and localities.

I look forward to working with the other members of the ACIR in implementing the unfunded mandates reform law and sharing with my Senate colleagues the effects of federal policy making on state and local governments. Together, we can usher in a new era of government and restore federalism as the founding fathers intended over 200 years ago.

HUTCHISON (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2960

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mrs. HUTCHISON (for herself, Mr. MCCAIN, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. STEVENS, and Mr. LEVIN) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill S. 1357, supra; as follows:

At the appropriate place, insert the following:

(a) The Senate makes the following findings:

(1) Human rights violations and atrocities continue unabated in the Former Yugoslavia.

(2) The Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights recently reported that starting in mid-September and intensifying between October 6 and October 12, 1995 many thousands of Bosnian Muslims and Croats in Northwest Bosnia were systematically forced from their homes by paramilitary units, local police and in some instances, Bosnian Serb Army officials and soldiers.

(3) Despite the October 12, 1995 cease-fire which went into effect by agreement of the warring parties in the former Yugoslavia, Bosnian Serbs continue to conduct a brutal campaign to expel non-Serb civilians who remain in Northwest Bosnia, and are subjecting non-Serbs to untold horror—murder, rape, robbery and other violence.

(4) Horrible examples of "ethnic cleansing" persist in Northwest Bosnia. Some six thousand refugees recently reached Zenica and reported that nearly two thousand family members from this group are still unaccounted for.

(5) The UN spokesman in Zagreb reported that many refugees have been given only a few minutes to leave their homes and that "girls as young as 17 are reported to have been taken into wooded areas and raped." Elderly, sick and very young refugees have been driven to remote areas and forced to walk long distances on unsafe roads and cross rivers without bridges.

(6) The War Crime Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia has collected volumes of evidence of atrocities, including the establishment of death camps, mass executions and systematic campaigns of rape and terror. This War Crimes Tribunal has already issued 43 indictments on the basis of this evidence.

(7) The Assistant Secretary of State for Human Rights has described the eye witness accounts as "prima facie evidence of war crimes which, if confirmed, could very well lead to further indictments by the War Crimes Tribunal."

(8) The U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees estimates that more than 22,000 Muslims and Croats have been forced from their homes since mid-September in Bosnian Serb controlled areas.

(9) In opening the Dodd Center Symposium on the topic of "50 Years After Nuremburg" on October 16, 1995, President Clinton cited the "excellent progress" of the War Crimes Tribunal for the former Yugoslavia and said, "Those accused of war crimes, crimes against humanity and genocide must be brought to justice. They must be tried and, if found guilty, they must be held accountable."

(10) President Clinton also observed on October 16, 1995, "some people are concerned that pursuing peace in Bosnia and prosecuting war criminals are incompatible goals. But I believe they are wrong. There must be peace for justice to prevail, but there must be justice when peace prevails.

(b) SENSE OF THE SENATE.—It is the sense of the Senate that—

(1) the Senate condemns the systematic human rights abuses against the people of Bosnia and Herzogovenia.

(2) with peace talks scheduled to begin in the United States on October 31, 1995, and with the President clearly indicating his willingness to send American forces into the heart of this conflict, these new reports of Serbian atrocities are of grave concern to all Americans.

(3) the Bosnian Serb leadership should immediately halt these atrocities, fully account for the missing, and allow those who have been separated to return to their families.

(4) the International Red Cross, United Nations agencies and human rights organizations should be granted full and complete access to all locations throughout Bosnia and Herzogovenia.

(5) the Bosnian Serb leadership should fully cooperate to facilitate the complete investigation of the above allegations so that those responsible may be held accountable under international treaties, conventions, obligations and law.

(6) the United States should continue to support the work of the War Crime Tribunal for the Former Yugoslavia.

(7) the United States should ensure that any negotiated peace agreements in former Yugoslavia, particularly with respect to Bosnia, require all states of the former Yugoslavia to corporate fully with the War Crimes Tribunal and apprehend and turn over for trial any indicated persons found in their territories.

(8) ethnic cleansing by any faction, group, leader, or government is unjustified, immoral and illegal and all perpetrators of war crimes, crimes against humanity, genocide and other human rights violations in former Yugoslavia must be held accountable.

Mr. MCCAIN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 1357, supra; as follows:

On page 696, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

SEC. 7116A. MEDICARE WHISTLEBLOWER INCENTIVE.

(a) PURPOSE.—The purpose of this section is to—

(1) reduce and eliminate fraud and abuse under the medicare program;

(2) reduce negligent and fraudulent medicare billings by providers;

(3) provide medicare beneficiaries with incentives to report inappropriate billing practices; and

(4) provide savings to the medicare trust funds by increasing the recovery of medicare overpayments.

(b) REQUEST FOR ITEMIZED BILL FOR MEDICARE ITEMS AND SERVICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1128A (42 U.S.C. 1320a-7a), as amended by section 7131(a)(4), is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n) WRITTEN REQUEST FOR ITEMIZED BILL.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A beneficiary may submit a written request for an itemized bill for medical or other items or services provided to such beneficiary by any person (including an organization, agency, or other entity) that receives payment under title XVIII for providing such items or services to such beneficiary.

"(2) 30-DAY PERIOD TO RECEIVE BILL.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 30 days after the date on which a request under paragraph (1) has been received, a person described in such paragraph shall furnish an itemized bill describing each medical or other item or service provided to the beneficiary requesting the itemized bill.

"(4) FINDINGS OF FISCAL INTERMEDIARY OR CARRIER.—Each fiscal intermediary or carrier with a contract under section 1816 or 1842 shall, with respect to each written request submitted to the fiscal intermediary or carrier under paragraph (3), determine whether the itemized bill identifies specific medical or other items or services that were not provided as claimed or any other billing irregularity (including duplicate billing) that has resulted in unnecessary payments under title XVIII.

"(5) RECOVERY OF AMOUNTS.—The Secretary shall require fiscal intermediaries and carriers to take all appropriate measures to recover amounts unnecessarily paid under title XVIII with respect to a bill described in paragraph (4).

"(6) INCENTIVE PAYMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—If the fiscal intermediary or carrier recovers amounts in accordance with paragraph (5), the Secretary shall make an incentive payment (in an amount determined under subparagraph (B)) to the beneficiary who submitted the request for the itemized bill under paragraph (1) that resulted in such recovery. "(8) REQUIREMENT THAT BENEFICIARY DISCOVER INACCURATE BILL TO RECEIVE INCENTIVE PAYMENT.—No incentive payment shall be made under paragraph (6) to a beneficiary if the Secretary or the appropriate fiscal intermediary or carrier identified the bill that was the subject of the beneficiary's request for review under this subsection as being overpaid prior to such request.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to medical or other items or services provided on or after January 1, 1996.

• Mr. MCCAIN. Mr. President, earlier this session, I introduced S. 1325, the Medicare Whistleblower Act of 1995, to reduce provider fraud and abuse in the Medicare Program. The amendment I am submitting today improves upon that bill, and provides a strong incentive for beneficiaries to identify overpayments made by Medicare. An Abraham amendment which passed today, and which I supported, takes a similar approach to achieve this same objective. However, my amendment is preferable because it specifically delineates the whistleblower reward process and does not give the Secretary of HHS discretion not to make incentive payments. I hope that the conferees will adopt this amendment.

At Medicare town meetings throughout Arizona, I have heard over and over from senior citizens that the Medicare Program is rampant with inaccurate billings. They have told me, based on their personal experiences, that their Medicare bills frequently include services that they have not received, double billings for the same service, or charges that are disproportionate to the value of services received. Often, they have no idea what Medicare is being billed for on their behalf, and they are not able to obtain explanations from providers.

The perceptions of Medicare beneficiaries are confirmed by more systematic analyses. The General Accounting Office has estimated that fraud and abuse in our Nation's health care system costs taxpayers as much as $100 billion each year. Medicare fraud alone costs about $17 billion per year, which is 10 percent of the program's costs. A report by the Republican staff of the Senate Committee on Aging has documented a broad array of fraudulent activities, including false claims for services that were supposed to have been rendered after the beneficiaries had died.

The Medicare Program has many problems. A fundamental problem, and the source of many other problems, is that too few people are adequately concerned about its costs because the Government is paying most of the bills. One constituent informed me of a situation in which his provider double-billed for the same service and told him not to worry about it because Medicare is paying. This is an outrage and must be stopped. When Medicare overpays, we all overpay, and costs to beneficiaries and other taxpayers spiral.

This amendment addresses this fundamental problem of the Medicare Program. It gives beneficiaries an added incentive to carefully scrutinize their bills and to actively pursue corrections when they believe that there has been inappropriate billing of Medicare. In particular, beneficiaries would be financially rewarded if they uncover negligence or fraud to the benefit of us all. Although such provider fraud is not the entire problem, and there is other legislation that I support which also addresses beneficiary fraud, studies clearly indicate that provider fraud is most prevalent and the greatest concern.

The major problem with our current approach to detecting Medicare fraud is that it relies primarily upon bureaucrats who have no firsthand knowledge of what services were provided to a beneficiary and who have extremely limited time and resources to investigate. This approach can be expected to discover only the most apparent fraudulent activities. To discover most fraud, we must obtain the full cooperation of those who know what occurred at providers' offices and who have the time to pursue fraud—the beneficiaries. All they need is the ability and incentive to scrutinize their bills and actively correct inaccuracies.

Under this amendment, beneficiaries would have a right to receive in writing from their providers, within 30 days of when their request is received, an itemized bill for Medicare services provided to them. The beneficiary would then have 90 days to raise specific allegations of inappropriate billings to Medicare. The Medicare intermediaries and carriers would then have to review the bills and determine whether an overpayment has been made which must be reimbursed to the Medicare program. The beneficiary would receive a reward of 1 percent of the overpayment reimbursed up to $10,000. Because these rewards would be paid directly out of the overpayments, they would not increase costs to the Federal Government.

There are several important safeguards built into this legislation. The Secretary would be required to establish appropriate procedures to ensure that the incentive system is not abused by overzealous beneficiaries. An incentive payment would be awarded only to the extent that HCFA is able to recover the overpayment from the provider, and there would be no incentive payment if HCFA can demonstrate that it—for its Medicare intermediary or carrier—has identified the overpayment prior to receiving the beneficiary's complaint.

Some will argue that many seniors and other beneficiaries do not need personal rewards for fighting fraud, and in any event, this is a matter of national duty. While I agree with this contention, I also recognize that these individuals would not be able to identify and report fraud without having access to the itemized bills that this legislation provides. Moreover, I see nothing wrong with giving beneficiaries an added financial incentive. After all, we pay Federal employees for ideas that save the taxpayers money, and we pay private citizens for identifying fraud by defense contractors.

Mr. President, there is no inconsistency between this amendment and the Abraham amendment which passed today. Their objectives are entirely compatible. However, the Abraham amendment effectively delegates responsibility for planning the whistleblower program to the Secretary of HHS. I strongly believe that we should fulfill our legislative responsibility by specifying the parameters of this important antifraud program. Otherwise, we should not be surprised if we end up with something that we had not contemplated and which does not satisfy our objective.

Mr. President, I will not request a vote on this amendment, because we have already had a vote on the Abraham amendment. However, for the reasons that I outlined, I hope that the conferees will agree that this is a preferable whistleblower provision and that they will adopt it in the conference report. In so doing, I believe that the conferees should retain the provisions of the Abraham amendment that reward individuals for ideas that improve Medicare.●

"(ii) such property would be used as a component in other property which would be imported into the United States.

"(C) EXCEPTION FOR PROPERTY SUBSEQUENTLY EXPORTED.—The term 'imported property' does not include any property which is imported into the United States and which—

At the appropriate place in the bill insert the following new section:

"SEC . MINIMUM WAGE.

"(1) Findings. The federal minimum wage has not been raised since 1991; and

"(2) The value of the minimum wage, after being adjusted for the bite of inflation, is at its second lowest annual level since 1955, with purchasing power 26 percent below its average level during the 1970s and 35 percent below its peak value in 1968, and unless it is increased it will in 1996 have its lowest value in over 40 years; and

"(3) The value of the minimum wage as a percentage of the average nonsupervisory wage averaged 52.2 percent during the decade of the 1960s, 45.8 percent during the decade of the 1970s, 40.4 percent during the decade of the 1980s, and currently is 37.7 percent; and

"(4) The minimum wage earned by a full-time worker over a year fails to provide sufficient income for a family of three to provide that family a standard of living even reaching the national poverty level, and, in fact, provides an income that equals only 70 percent of the federal poverty level for a family of three; and

"(5) There are 4.7 million Americans who usually work full-time but who are, nevertheless, in poverty, and 4.2 million families live in poverty despite having one or more members in the labor force for at least half the year; and

"(6) Nearly two-thirds of minimum wage workers are adults, and 60 percent are women; and

"(7) The decline in the value of the minimum wage since 1979 has contributed to Americans' growing income disparity and to the fact that 97 percent of the growth in household income has accrued to the wealthiest 20 percent of Americans during this period; and

"(8) The effects of the minimum wage are not felt only among the lowest income workers and families but also are felt in many middle-income families; and

"(9) The preponderance of evidence from economic studies of the effects of increases in federal and state minimum wages (including studies of state minimum wage increases in California and New Jersey) at the end of the 1980s and in the early 1990s suggests that the negative employment effects of such increases were slight to nonexistent; and

"(10) Legislation to raise the minimum wage to $5.15 an hour was introduced on February 14, 1995, but has not been debated by the Senate—

"Now, therefore, it is the sense of the Senate that the Senate should debate and vote on whether to raise the minimum wage before the end of the first session of the 104th Congress.

At the end of chapter 1 of subtitle I of title XII, insert:

SEC. ___. REPEAL OF EXPENSING OF INTANGIBLE DRILLING COSTS.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Senate finds that—

(1) this legislation, as reported by the Senate Committee on the Budget on October 23, 1995, significantly reduces funding for medicare and medicaid, student loans, food stamps, and other federal efforts critical to working families across the country, in order to pay for tax breaks to benefit primarily wealthy corporations and others;

(2) this legislation will significantly increase the tax burden on an estimated 17 million working families, by modifying the earned income tax credit, which has enjoyed longstanding bipartisan support;

(3) the Congressional Joint Tax Committee has estimated that tax expenditures cost the United States Treasury over $420 billion annually, and they estimate that amount will grow by $60 billion to over $480 billion annually by 1999;

(4) Congress should reduce the federal budget deficit in a way that is responsible, and that requires shared sacrifice by eliminating many of the special interest tax breaks and loopholes that have been embedded in the tax code for decades, making the tax system fairer, flatter and simpler;

(5) eliminating special interest tax breaks would enable Congress to do real tax reform, making the system fairer and more simple by flattening the current tax rate structure and eventually providing real tax relief for working families;

(6) the savings generated by eliminating these special tax breaks immediately can be used to reduce the deficit;

(b) ELIMINATION OF DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN INTANGIBLE DRILLING AND DEVELOPMENT COSTS.—Section 263 (relating to capital expenditures) is amended—

(1) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following new sentence: "This subsection shall not apply to costs paid or incurred in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1995.", and

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

(2) REDUCTION OF DEFICIT.—On November 20 of each year, the President shall direct the Secretary of the Treasury to pay an amount equal to the amount determined pursuant to paragraph (1) to retire debt obligations of the United States.

The purpose of the Common Sense Balanced Budget Act of 1995 is to provide a credible proposal to balance the budget in seven years through real reductions in government programs, while maintaining a fundamental commitment to the needs of society. This proposal spreads the sacrifice, without dismantling Medicare, Medicaid, welfare, the Earned Income Tax Credit, discretionary spending, agriculture, education, or the environment.
