Technical Note

The estimates of coverage, contributions, and benefits in this series are based for the most part on reports by private insurance companies and other nongovernment agencies. Many of the reports include data for persons who are no longer employed as wage and salary workers because of retirement, temporary lay-off, sickness, or shifts in jobs. No attempt has been made to adjust the data for any overstatement that might result from their inclusion, except that the coverage estimates for pension plans have been adjusted to exclude annuitants.

Contributions under insured pension plans are on a net basis, with dividends and refunds deducted. Those under noninsured plans are, for the most part, on a gross basis, and refunds appear as benefit payments. For pay-as-you-go (unfunded) plans, contributions have been assumed to equal benefit payments. Estimates of per capita contributions are derived by dividing total annual contributions by the average number of employees covered during the year.

The number of beneficiaries under pension plans relates to those receiving periodic payments at the end of the year and thus excludes those who received lump sums during the year. The amounts shown for retirement benefits under noninsured plans does include (1) refunds of employee contributions to individuals who withdraw from the plans before retirement and before accumulating vested deferred rights, (2) payment of the unpaid amount of employee contributions to survivors of pensioners who die before they receive in retirement benefits an amount equal to their contributions, and (3) lump-sum payments made under deferred profit-sharing plans. Because the source of the data from which the estimates have been developed does not permit distinction between these lump-sum benefits and the amounts representing monthly retirement benefits, precise data on average monthly or annual retirement benefit amounts cannot be derived.

Notes and Brief Reports

State and Local Government Employment Covered Under OASDHI*

More than two-thirds of the 9.2 million employees of State and local governments in the United States, as of March 1968, were covered under the Federal social security program—oldage, survivors, disability, and health insurance (OASDHI).¹ Approximately 8.5 million workers—or roughly 9 out of 10 of all in this type of employment—had retirement protection either through OASDHI or a State-operated staff retirement system or under both. (For a summary of the main provisions of the Social Security Act with respect to coverage of State and local government employment, see page 35.)

About 4.4 million workers were in the group with "dual" coverage, almost 2 million were covered under staff retirement systems, and 1.8 million had OASDHI coverage only. Most of the nearly 700,000 persons not covered by either system are believed to be part-time workers, the newly hired, or those not eligible for coverage under the staff retirement systems.

The majority of all State and local government employees work for local (other than county) governments, and they constitute the largest group with OASDHI coverage. Those working for States account for one-fourth of all State and local government employees and about the same proportion of the total with OASDHI coverage. County workers make up only about one-eighth of all those in State and local government employment but represent nearly one-sixth of those having OASDHI coverage.

Table 1 shows that OASDHI coverage is relatively highest among county government workers and lowest among local government employees (with county employees excluded). In contrast, county workers are least likely to have coverage under staff retirement systems (including dual coverage) and State employees the most likely.

¹ Data discussed here are limited to the 50 States. In March 1968, 138,000 employees of the governments of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands were also covered by OASDHI.

The States vary widely in the proportion of State and local government employees with OASDHI coverage—from close to 100 percent to less than 1 percent. The data in table 2 show that in 10 States—Alabama, Idaho, Iowa, Maryland, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, Utah, Virginia, and Washington—95 percent or more of all those employed by State and local governments have the protection of OASDHI. At the other end of the range, Massachusetts and Ohio have elected coverage for less than 1 percent of those working for the State or a local government.

In the tabulation that follows, the 50 States are distributed according to the percentage of their State and local government employees with coverage under OASDHI. As the figures show, in one-third of the States that program covered 80–89 percent of all these government employees. Ninety percent or more of the county workers were protected by OASDHI in 7 out of 10 of the States.

GROWTH OF COVERED EMPLOYMENT, 1951-68

Beginning January 1, 1951, social security coverage was made available for those employees of State and local governments who were not members of a staff retirement system. By the end of 1954, about 1 million persons, or 20 percent of all State and local government employment, were covered under OASDHI. Amendments in that year made coverage possible, starting in 1955, for those working in positions covered by an existing retirement system. By 1958, more than half of all State and local government employees had OASDHI coverage, and the number covered was triple the 1954 figure. By 1963, the number had risen to 4.5 million; it represented almost two-thirds of all those working for State and local governments.

Since 1963, the number with OASDHI coverage has risen steadily. The proportion covered has grown very little, however, because the total number of employees also went up steadily. No appreciable growth in the proportion covered can be expected until some of those large States that have less than half of their employees covered by OASDHI extend their agreements to bring more of this type of employment into the program.

SOCIAL SECURITY COVERAGE PROVISIONS

Coverage of State and local government employees under OASDHI, which is voluntary on the part of the State, is effected through an agreement between the State and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Employees of the State and its political subdivisions (county and local governments) are brought under the agreement by means of "coverage groups." The State makes the decision as to which groups to cover and the effective date of coverage.

Coverage groups are of two types:

Absolute-with employees who are in positions not under a State staff retirement system. When such a group is brought under the State's agreement, coverage is extended to all eligible employees in the group, without regard to the desires of the employees, either individually or as a group.

Retirement system—with employees whose positions are under a State staff retirement system. Employees in these groups vote to determine whether or not they will be covered under OASDHI. The regular referendum procedure extends coverage to the entire group if a majority of the eligible members so vote. At the present time, however, 20 States are authorized to provide coverage for only those who desire it, plus all new members of the group.

All State and local government employees are eligible for coverage under OASDHI, with the following exceptions: (1) Employees hired to give them relief from unemployment; (2) patients or inmates of a hospital, home, or other institution; (3) employees whose work would be excluded from OASDHI coverage if it were performed for a private employer (except for certain agricultural labor and work by students).

The State may also, at its option, exclude from coverage certain services (part-time, fee-basis, elective positions, etc.) performed by employees of any coverage group.

When State and local government employees are covered by an agreement, they have the same rights and obligations as any other worker covered under OASDHI. A State may terminate an agreement after 7 years of coverage have been provided. An agreement may be modified to increase (but not reduce) the extent of coverage.
