"Certain Individuals Ineligible

"(g) Notwithstanding subsection (a), no individual shall be considered a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of such family's benefits if, after notice by the Secretary that it is likely that such individual is eligible for any payments of the type enumerated in section 2153(a)(2)(A), such individual fails within 30 days to take all appropriate steps (including acceptance of any employment offered under any of the conditions specified in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of section 2111(c)(2)) to apply for and (if eligible) obtain any such payments and the benefits payable with respect to such family shall be reduced by reason of such individual's failure in the same fashion as that prescribed in subsection (c).

"Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam

"(h) For special provisions applicable to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, see section 1108(e).

"INCOME

"Meaning of Income

"SEC. 2153. (a) For purposes of this part, income means both earned income and unearned income; and—

"(1) earned income means only—

"(A) wages as determined under section 203(f)(5)(C);

"(B) net earnings from self-employment, as defined in section 211 (without the application of the second and third sentences following subsection (a)(10), and the last paragraph of subsection (a)), including earnings for services described in paragraphs (4), (5), and (6) of subsection (c); and

"(2) unearned income means all other income, including support and maintenance furnished in cash or otherwise and including—

"(A) any payments received as an annuity, pension, retirement, or disability benefit, including veterans' compensation and pensions, workmen's compensation payments, old-age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits, railroad retirement annuities and pensions, and employment insurance benefits;

"(B) prizes and awards;

"(C) the proceeds of any life insurance policy to the extent that they exceed the amount expended by family members for expenses of the insured individual's last illness and burial or $1,500, whichever is less;

"(D) gifts (cash or otherwise), support and alimony payments, and inheritances, except that gifts or inheritances received by a family member in a form not readily convertible to cash (as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary) may, at the option of such family member, be considered as resources for purposes of this title; and

"(E) rents, dividends, interest, and royalties.

"Exclusions From Income

"(b) In determining the income of a family there shall be excluded (in the same order as the numbered paragraphs of this subsection)—

"(1) subject to limitations (as to amount or otherwise) prescribed by the Secretary, the earned income of each child in the family who is, as determined by the Secretary under regulations, a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment;

"(2)(A) the total unearned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $60 in such quarter, and (B) the total earned income of all members of a family in a calendar quarter which, as determined in accordance with such criteria, is received too infrequently or irregularly to be included, if such income so received does not exceed $30 in such quarter;

"(3) the first $720 per year (or proportionately smaller amounts for shorter periods) of the total of earned income of all members of the family plus two-fifths of the remainder thereof;

"(4) an amount of earned income of a member of the family equal to all, or such part (and according to such schedule) as the Secretary may prescribe, of the cost incurred by such member for child care which the Secretary deems necessary to securing or continuing in manpower training, vocational rehabilitation, employment, or self-employment;

"(5) an amount of earned income which in accordance with a scheduled prescribed by the Secretary which takes into consideration only the family's total earned income which is not excluded by other paragraphs of this subsection and the number of members in the family, in order to take appropriate account of Federal taxes which are withheld from or must be paid on such earned income;

"(6) subject to section 2156, any assistance (except veterans' pensions paid by the United States) which is based on need and furnished by any State or political subdivision of a State or any Federal or other public agency (including relocation assistance under section 2114(b)(3)), or by any private agency or organization exempt from taxation under section 501(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 as an organization described in section 501(c) (3) or (4) of such Code;

"(7)(A) allowances under section 2115(a), 2117(c), or 2132(c);

"(B) allowances of the types described in such sections which are paid by a State or political subdivision thereof to a member of a family receiving benefits under this title, to the extent that such allowances do not exceed $30 per month;

"(8) any portion of any grant, scholarship, or fellowship received for use in paying the cost of tuition and fees at any educational (including technical or vocational education) institution;

"(9) home produce of a member of the family utilized for its own consumption;

"(10) one-third of any payments received for the support of children who are family members, or as alimony paid to family members; and

"(11) any amounts received for the foster care of a child who is not a member of the family but who is living in the same house as the family and was placed in such home by a public or nonprofit private child-placement or child-care agency; and

"(12) any amounts paid to or on behalf of a member of the family because of or to be used for meeting the health care costs of such member.

Notwithstanding any other provision of this part, the total amount which may be excluded under paragraph (4) in determining the income of any family for any year shall not exceed the lesser of—

"(i) $2,000 plus $200 for each child who is a family member in excess of three such children, or

"(ii) $3,000,

or a proportionately smaller amount for a shorter period.

"RESOURCES

"Exclusions From Resources

"SEC. 2154. (a) In determining the resources of a family there shall be excluded—

"(1) the home, to the extent that its value does not exceed such amount as the Secretary determines to be reasonable;

"(2) household goods and personal effects, to the extent that their total value does not exceed such amount as the Secretary determines to be reasonable; and

"(3) other property which, as determined in accordance with and subject to limitations prescribed by the Secretary, is so essential to the family's means of self-support or to the self-care of a member of such family as to warrant its exclusion.

In determining the resources of a family an insurance policy shall be taken into account only to the extent of its cash surrender value; except that if the total face value of all life insurance policies on any person is $1,500 or less, no part of the value of any such policy shall be taken into account.

"Disposition of Resources

"(b) The Secretary shall prescribe the period or periods of time within which, and the manner in which, various kinds of property must be disposed of in order not to be included in determining a family's eligibility for benefits. Any portion of the family's benefits paid for any such period shall be conditioned upon such disposal.

"MEANING OF FAMILY AND CHILD

"Meaning of Family

"SEC. 2155. (a) Two or more individuals—

"(1) who are related by blood, marriage, or adoption,

"(2) who are living in a place of residence maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home, or who live together as a family although not in a fixed or permanent place of residence,

"(3) all of whom are residents of the United States, and at least one of whom is either (A) a citizen or (B) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence, or lawfully present in the United States pursuant to section 212(d)(5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act of 1952, as amended (8 U.S.C. 1182(d)(5)), and

"(4) at least one of whom is a child who is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals, shall be regarded as a family for purposes of this title and part A of title IV. A parent (of a child living in a place of residence referred to in paragraph (2)), or a spouse of such a parent, who is determined by the Secretary to be temporarily absent from such place of residence for the purpose of engaging in or seeking employment or self-employment (including military service) shall nevertheless be considered (for purposes of paragraph (2)) to be living in such place of residence. Notwithstanding any other provision of this title—

"(A) no two or more individuals in any household shall be considered a family for purposes of this title if the individual who is the head of such household attends a college or university on a full-time basis (other than such an individual who is a student as part of an employability plan developed by the Secretary of Labor pursuant to section 2114(a)); and

"(B) no individual shall (except as provided in the preceding sentence) be considered a member of a family for any of the purposes of this title with respect to any month during all of which such individual is outside the United States; and for purposes of this clause after an individual has been outside the United States for any period of 30 consecutive days, he shall be treated as remaining outside the United States until he has been in the United States for a period of 30 consecutive days.

"Meaning of Child

"(b) For purposes of this title, the term 'child' means an individual who is neither married nor (as determined by the Secretary) the head of a household, and who is (1) under the age of eighteen, or (2) under the age of twenty-two and (as determined by the Secretary) a student regularly attending a school, college, or university, or a course of vocational or technical training designed to prepare him for gainful employment.

"Income and Resources or Noncontributing Individual

"(c) For purposes of determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits for any family there shall be excluded the income and resources of any individual, other than a parent of a child, or a spouse of a parent, who is a family member, which, as determined in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary, is not available to other members of the family; and for such purposes such individual—

"(1) in the case of a child, shall be regarded as a member of the family for purposes of determining the family's eligibility for such benefits but not for purposes of determining the amount of such benefits, and

"(2) in any other case, shall not be considered a member of the family for any purpose.

"United States

"(d) For purposes of this title, the term 'United States', when used in a geographical sense, means the States and the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam.

"Recipients of Assistance for the Aged, Blind, and Disabled Ineligible

"(e) If an individual is receiving benefits under title XX, then, for the period for which such benefits are received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the benefits of the family under this title and his income and resources shall not be counted as income and resources of a family under this title.

"STATE SUPPLEMENTATION

"SEC. 2156. (a) If, in any State, the amount which a family of a given size with no other income would receive as benefits under this title, is less than the adjusted payment level applicable to a family of the same size under the plan of such State approved under part A of title IV, for January 1971 or the month prior to the month of enactment of this title, such State shall make a supplementary payment to each family described in subsection (c)(2)(D). The amount of such supplementary payment shall be computed as prescribed in subsection (b)(1).

"(b)(1) The amount of the supplementary payment made pursuant to subsection (a) shall not be less than the difference between—

"(A) the adjusted payment level applicable to such family for January 1971 or, if higher, the month preceding the month of enactment of this title under the State plan approved under part A of title IV, and

"(B)(i) the benefits, if any, paid to such family under this title, plus (ii) any income not excluded under section 2153(b) in determining such benefits (or which would not be excluded if the provisions of such section were applicable to such income).

"(2) For the purposes of this section, the 'adjusted payment level' under the State plan approved under part A of title IV with respect to any month means the amount of the money payment which a family (of a given size) with no other income would have received under such State plan plus—

"(A) the bonus value of food stamps available to a family (of the same size) in such State for such month, as defined in paragraph (3), and

"(B) at the option in the State, a payment level modification, as defined in paragraph (4).

"(3) For purposes of this section, the term 'bonus value of food stamps available to a family' of a given size with respect to any month means—

"(A) the face value of the coupon allotment which would have been provided to a family (of the same size) under the Food Stamp Act of 1964 for such month, reduced by

"(B) the charge which such family would have paid for such coupon allotment.

if the income of such family, for purposes of determining the charge it would have paid for its coupon allotment, had been equal to the adjusted payment level under the State plan (including any payment level modification with respect to the plan adopted pursuant to paragraph (2) (but not including any amount under this paragraph)). The total face value of food stamps and the cost thereof in any month shall be determined in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture in effect for such month.

"(4) For purposes of this section, a 'payment level modification' with respect to any State plan approved under part A of title IV means that amount by which a State which for January 1971 made money payments under such plan to families with no other income which were less than 100 per centum of its standard of need could have increased such money payments without increasing (if it reduced its standard of need under such plan so that such increased money payments equaled 100 per centum of such standard of need) the non-Federal share of expenditures as aid for such month (as defined in paragraph (5)) under the plan of such State approved under such part A.

"(5) For purposes of this section, the 'non-Federal share of expenditures as aid' for any specified period under the plan of a State approved under part A of title IV is the difference between—

"(A) the total expenditures in such period under such plan for aid (excluding emergency assistance under section 406(c)(1)(A) of this Act, foster care under section 408 of this Act, and expenditures authorized under section 1119 of this Act for repairing the home of an individual who was receiving aid under such plan (as such sections were in effect prior to the enactment of this title)), and

"(B) the total of the amounts determined under section 403 and section 1118 of this Act, and under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950, for such State with respect to such expenditures in such period.

"(c)(1) Each State which is required by subsection (a) to make supplementary payments shall enter into an agreement which satisfies paragraph (2) and which may, at the option of the State, provide that the Secretary will, on behalf of such State, make such supplementary payments to all faimlies described in paragraph (2)(D) (or to all such families and to any other families specified by the State who are or, but for their income or resources, would be eligible for benefits under this title).

"(2) Any agreement between the Secretary and a State entered into pursuant to paragraph (1) shall specify the level of payment up to which families will be supplemented and shall provide that—

"(A) in determining the eligibility of any family for supplementary payments on the basis of the income of the family, all the provisions of section 2153(b) will apply, except that, with respect to any quarter, if benefits are paid to such family for such quarter under this title, such benefits will not be excluded from income in applying paragraph (5) of such section,

"(B) the determination of the amount of supplementary payments for which a family is eligible will be made without regard to any reduction in benefits under this title by reason of the application of section 2151 (c) or (g), and

"(C) in the case of any family whose benefits under this title have been reduced, by reason of the application of section 2151 (c) or (g), the supplementary payments for which such family is eligible will be reduced by an amount which bears the same ratio to such payments as such reduction bears such benefits (if they had not been so reduced),

"(D) such payments will be made to all families residing in the State who are receiving, or would, but for their income or resources, be eligible to receive benefits under this title, except that the State may, at its option, exclude—

"(i) families in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed, or

"(ii) if families in which both parents of the child or children are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is employed would not have been eligible for payment under part A of title IV as in effect prior to the enactment of this title, such families and families described in clause (i), and if the agreement provides that the Secretary will, on behalf of the State, make the supplementary payments to families receiving benefits under this title, shall also provide—

"(E) such other rules with respect to eligibility for or amount of the supplementary payments, and such procedural or other general administrative provisions, as the Secretary finds necessary to achieve efficient and effective administration of both the program which he conducts under this title and the State supplementation.

"(d) Any State which has entered into an agreement with the Secretary under this subsection which provides that the Secretary will, on behalf of the State, make the supplementary payments required by subsection (a), shall, subject to section 503 of the Social Security Amendments of 1971, at such times and in such installments as may be agreed upon between the Secretary and such State, pay to the Secretary an amount equal to the expenditures made by the Secretary as such supplementary payments.

"(e) If any State, which is required by subsection (a) to make supplementary payments, does not make such payments in accordance with the provisions of subsections (b) and (c), or fails to make payments to the Secretary in accordance with subsection (d), the Secretary shall make such supplementary payments and, for this purpose, may withhold such amounts otherwise due such State under section 1903 as are necessary, in addition to the amounts, if any, such State is expending for supplementary payments, so that payments may be made in the amount prescribed in subsection (b) to all families described in subsection (c)(2)(D).

"PART D—PROCEDURAL AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

"PAYMENTS AND PROCEDURES

"Payment of Benefits

"SEC. 2171. (a)(1) Benefits under this title shall be paid at such time or times and in such installments as will best effectuate the purposes of this title, but in no event will such benefits be paid less often than monthly.

"(2)(A) Payment of the benefit of any family may be made to any one or more members of the family, or, if the Secretary finds, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing (which shall be held in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as a hearing under subsection (c)(1) and (2)) to the family member or members to whom the benefits are (or, but for this provision, would be) paid, that such member or members have such inability to manage funds that making payment to such member or members would be contrary to the welfare of the child or children in such family, he may make payment to any person (including an appropriate public or private agency) who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family. The Secretary shall investigate each case in which he has reason to believe that a family receiving payments under this title is unable to manage such payments in accordance with its best interest.

"(B) If the Secretary makes payment under subparagraph (A) to a person who is not a member of the family, he shall review his finding under the preceding sentence periodically to determine whether the conditions justifying such finding still exist, and, if they do not, he shall discontinue making payments to any person who is not a member of the family. If it appears to the Secretary that such conditions are likely to continue beyond a period specified by him, he shall take any steps he may find appropriate to protect the welfare of the child or children in the family.

"(C) No part of the benefits of any family may be paid to any member of such family who has failed to register as required by section 2111(a), or who fails to accept services or employment or participate in training as required by section 2111(c), or who refuses to accept rehabilitation services as required by section 2117(b) or section 2132(b); and the Secretary may, if he deems it appropriate, provide for the payment of such benefits during the period of such failure to any person (including an appropriate public or private agency) who is interested in or concerned with the welfare of the family, without making the finding required by subparagraph (A).

"(3) The Secretary may establish ranges of incomes within which a single amount of benefits under this title shall apply.

"(4) The Secretary may make, to any family initially applying for benefits under this title which is presumptively eligible for such benefits and which is faced with financial emergency, a cash advance against such benefits in an amount not exceeding $100, or the amount of the benefits, with respect to a period of one month, for which such family is presumptively eligible, which is greater.

"Overpayments and Underpayments

"(b) Whenever the Secretary finds that more or less than the correct amount of benefits has been paid with respect to any family, proper adjustment or recovery shall, subject to the succeeding provisions of this subsection, be made by appropriate adjustments in future payments to the family under part A or part B or by recovery from or payment to any one or more of the individuals who are or were members thereof. The Secretary shall make such provision as he finds appropriate in the case of payment of more than the correct amount of benefits with respect to a family with a view to avoiding penalizing members of the family who were without fault in connection with the overpayment, if adjustment or recovery on account of such overpayment in such case would defeat the purposes of this title, or be against equity or good conscience, or (because of the small amount involved) impede efficient or effective administration of this title.

"Hearings and Review

"(c)(1) The Secretary shall provide reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to any individual who is or claims to be a member of a family and is in disagreement with any determination under this title with respect to—

"(A) eligibility of the family for benefits, the number of members of the family, or the amount of the family's benefits, or

"(B) the refusal of such individual to register for or participate or continue to participate in manpower services, training, or employment, or to accept employment or rehabilitation services, if such individual requests a hearing on the matter in disagreement within thirty days after notice of such determination is mailed or otherwise given, except that the Secretary may extend the time for requesting a hearing if he finds that good cause exists therefor.

"(2) Determination on the basis of such hearing shall be made within ninety days after the individual requests the hearing as provided in paragraph (1), or within thirty days following the final day of the hearing, whichever is sooner.

"(3) The final determination of the Secretary after a hearing under paragraph (1) shall be subject to judicial review as provided in section 205(g) to the same extent as the Secretary's final determination under section 205.

"Procedures; Prohibition of Assignments; Representation of Claimants

"(d)(1) The provisions of section 207, section 206(a) (other than the fifth and sixth sentences thereof), and subsections (a), (d), (e), and (f) of section 205 shall apply with respect to this part to the same extent as they apply in the case of title II.

"(2) To the extent the Secretary finds it will promote the achievement of the objectives of this part, qualified persons may be appointed to serve as hearing examiners in hearings under subsection (c) without meeting the specific standards prescribed for hearing examiners by or under subchapter II of chapter 5 of title 5, United States Code.

"Applications and Furnishing of Information by Families

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall prescribe such requirements in the case of families or members thereof for the filing of applications, the suspension or termination of benefits, the furnishing of other data and material, and the reporting of events and changes in circumstances, as may be necessary to determine eligibility for and amount of family assistance benefits. A determination of the eligibility for and amount of benefits payable to any family shall be made, and notice of such determination provided to such family, within 30 days after application therefor has been filed in accordance with such requirements.

"(2) Each family who received benefits under part A or part B in a quarter shall be required, not later than 30 days after the close of such quarter, to submit a report to the Secretary containing such information and in such form as he may prescribe in order to enable him to determine eligibility for and the amount of the benefits payable to such family with respect to such quarter as provided in section 2152(d).

"(3) In order to encourage prompt reporting of events and changes in circumstances relative to eligibility for or amount of family assistance benefits, and more accurate estimates of expected income or expenses by members of families for purposes of such eligibility and amount of benefits, the Secretary shall prescribe the cases in which and the extent to which failure to so report or delay in so reporting shall result in a reasonable penalty.

"Furnishing of Information by Other Agencies

"(f) The head of any Federal agency shall provide such information as the Secretary needs for purposes of determining eligibility for or amount of benefits, or verifying other information with respect thereto.

"PENALTIES FOR FRAUD

"SEC. 2172. Whoever—

"(1) knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in any application for any benefit under this title,

"(2) at any time knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact for use in determining rights to any such benefit,

"(3) having knowledge of the occurrence of any event affecting (A) his initial or continued right to any such benefit, or (B) the initial or continued right to any such benefit of any other individual in whose behalf he has applied for or is receiving such benefit, conceals or fails to disclose such event with an intent fraudulently to secure such benefit either in a greater amount or quantity than is due or when no such benefit is authorized, or

"(4) having made application to receive any such benefit for the use and benefit of another and having received it, knowingly and willfully converts such benefit or any part thereof to a use other than for the use and benefit of such other person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

"ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 2173. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor may each perform any of his functions under this title (or section 1124) directly through arrangements with each other or with other Federal agencies, or by contract with public or private agencies providing for payment in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in such installments, as he may deem necessary.

"ADVANCE FUNDING

"SEC. 2174. (a) For the purpose of affording adequate notice of funding available under this title, appropriations for grants, contracts, or other payments under part A and part B (other than benefits under section 2113 or 2131) are authorized to be included in an appropriation Act for the fiscal year preceding the fiscal year for which they are available for obligation.

"(b) In order to effect a transition to the advance funding method of timing appropriation action, subsection (a) shall apply notwithstanding that its initial application will result in enactment in the same year (whether in the same appropriation Act or otherwise) of two separate appropriations, one for the then current fiscal year and one for the succeeding fiscal year.

"OBLIGATION OF DESERTING PARENTS

"SEC. 2175. In any case where an individual is separated from his spouse or has deserted or abondoned his spouse or his child or children and such spouse or any such child (during the period of such separation, desertion, or abandonment) is a member of a family which receives (as a consequence of such separation, abandonment, or desertion and during such period as the Secretary may specify) benefits under this title, such individual shall be obligated to the United States in an amount equal to—

"(1) the total amount of the benefits paid to such family during such period with respect to such spouse and child or children, reduced by

"(2) any amount actually paid by such individual to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse or child or children during such period, if and to the extent that such amount is excluded in determining the amount of such benefits; except that in any case where an order for the support and maintenance of such spouse or any such child has been issued by a court of competent jurisdiction, the obligation of such individual under this subsection (with respect to such spouse or child) for any period shall not exceed the amount specified in such order less any amount actually paid by such individual (to or for the support and maintenance of such spouse or child) during such period. The amount due the United States under such obligation shall be collected (to the extent that the claim of the United States therefor is not paid by such individual or otherwise satisfied), in such manner as may be specified by the Secretary from any amounts otherwise due him or becoming due him at any time from any officer or agency of the United States or under any Federal program. Amounts collected under the preceding sentence shall be deposited in the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts.

"REPORTS OF IMPROPER CARE OR CUSTODY OF CHILDREN

"SEC. 2176. Whenever the Secretary, in the performance of his functions under this title, obtains or comes into possession of information which indicates or gives him reason to believe that any child is being or has been subjected to neglect, abuse, exploitation, or other improper care or custody, he shall so advise the appropriate State or local child welfare agency and the head of the Federal department or agency (if such department or agency is not the Department of which the Secretary is head) which is most directly concerned with or exercises primary Federal jurisdiction over factual situations of the type involved.

"ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL COMMITTEES TO EVALUATE EFFECTIVENESS OF MANPOWER AND TRAINING PROGRAMS

"SEC. 2177. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor (in this section referred to as the 'Secretaries') shall jointly establish or designate such local advisory committees throughout the United States as may be necessary or appropriate to assist them in evaluating the effectiveness of the training and employment programs under this title, together with related child care, family planning, and other services, in helping needy families to become self-supporting and in otherwise achieving the objectives of this title. Each such local committee shall perform its functions within an area specified by the Secretaries at the time of its establishment or designation; but at least one such committee shall be established or designated in every State.

"(b) Each local advisory committee established or designated under subsection (a) shall, as specified by the Secretaries, consist of persons representative of labor, business, the general public, recipients of benefits under this title, and units of local government (including Indian tribal organizations, where appropriate) not directly involved in administering employment and training programs under this title, and shall have a chairman elected by the committee from among its members. Members of each local committee shall be selected in such manner, and serve for such terms, as may be specified by the Secretaries.

"(c) Each local advisory committee established or designated under subsection (a) shall submit to the Secretaries at regular intervals a report on the effectiveness of the programs and services referred to in subsection (a) in the area within which it performs its functions, together with its recommendations for improving such effectiveness and such additional information as the Secretaries may request in connection with such programs and services.

"(d) The Secretaries shall provide each local advisory committee established or designated under subsection (a) with the funds necessary for the reasonable expenses of its members in the performance of its functions. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.

"INITIAL AUTHORIZATION FOR APPROPRIATIONS FOR CHILD CARE SERVICES

"SEC. 2178. Of the sums authorized by section 2101 to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, not more than $1,500,000,000 in the aggregate shall be appropriated to the Secretary of Labor to enable him to carry out his responsibilities under section 2112(a) and to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to enable him to carry out his responsibilities under sections 2133(a) and 2134(ac)."

CONFORMING AMENDMENTS RELATING TO ASSISTANCE FOR NEEDY FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

SEC. 402. (a) The heading of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"TITLE IV—GRANTS TO STATES FOR FAMILY AND CHILD-WELFARE SERVICES"

(b) The heading of part A of title IV of such Act is amended to read as follows:

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS

PART A—EFFECTIVE DATES AND GENERAL PROVISIONS

EFFECTIVE DATE FOR TITLES III AND IV

SEC. 601. The amendments and repeals made by titles III and IV of this Act and by this part and parts B and E of this title shall become effective (and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (25 U.S.C. 639), is repealed effective) on January 1, 1974, except as otherwise specifically indicated, and except that—

(1) sections 2133 and 2134 of the Social Security Act, as added by section 401 of this Act, shall be effective upon the enactment of this Act,

(2) nothing in this Act or the amendments made thereby shall be construed to authorize any Federal payments under title XXI of the Social Security Act, as added by this Act, with respect to any family in which both parents of the child or children are present and neither parent is incapacitated—

(A) for any period prior to July 1, 1974; or

(B) for any period after July 1, 1974, if either House of the Congress, at any time after December 31, 1973, and before March 31, 1974, passes a resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the making of such Federal payments; and

(3) appropriations for administrative expenses incurred during the fiscal years ending June 30, 1973, and June 30, 1974, in developing the staff and facilities necessary to place in operation the programs established by titles XX and XXI of the Social Security Act, as added by this Act, may be included in an appropriation Act for such fiscal year.

PROHIBITION AGAINST PARTICIPATING IN FOOD STAMP OR SURPLUS COMMODITIES PROGRAM BY RECIPIENTS OF PAYMENTS UNDER FAMILY AND ADULT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 602. (a) Section 3(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No person who is determined to be an eligible individual or eligible spouse under section 2011(a) of the Social Security Act, and no member of a family which is determined to be an eligible family under section 2152(a) of such Act, shall be considered to be a member of a household or an elderly person for the purposes of this Act."

(b) Section 3(h) of such Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(h) The term 'State agency', with respect to any State, means the agency of State government which is designated by the Secretary for purposes of carrying out this Act in such State, or, if and to the extent that the Secretary so elects, the Federal agency administering title XX or XXI of the Social Security Act in such State."

(c) Section 10(c) of such Act is amended by striking out the first sentence.

(d) Clause (2) of the second sentence of section 10(e) of such Act is amended by striking out "used by them in the certification of applicants for benefits under the federally aided public assistance programs" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "prescribed by the Secretary in the regulations issued pursuant to this Act".

(e) Section 10(e) of such Act is further amended by striking out the third sentence.

(f) Section 14 of such Act is amended by striking out subsection (e).

(g) Section 416 of the Act of October 31, 1949, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No person who is determined to be an eligible individual or eligible spouse under section 2011(a) of the Social Security Act, and no member of a family which is determned to be an eligible family under section 2152(a) of such Act, shall be eligible to participate in any program conducted under this section (other than nonprofit child feeding programs or programs under which commodities are distributed on an emergency or temporary basis and eligibility for participation therein is not based upon the income or resources of the individual or family)."

(h)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1974.

(2) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may by regulation provide that the amendments made by subsection (a) and (g)—

(A) shall not apply with respect to individuals and families in any State until the expiration of such period of time (not exceeding 30 days) after December 31, 1973, as he finds necessary to avoid the interruption of such individuals' and families' income in the transition from the programs of assistance under prior law to the programs of assistance under title XX or XXI of the Social Security Act (as added by this Act); and

(B) shall not apply (in such cases as he may specify) with respect to individuals and families first becoming eligible for benefits under title XX or XXI of the Social Security Act after December 31, 1973, until the expiration of such period of time (not exceeding 30 days) after the first day of such eligibility as he finds necessary to avoid the interruption of such individuals' and families' income.

(3) In any case where the Secretary postpones the application of the amendment made by subsection (a) for a period of time as provided in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (2), each individual or family with respect to whom the postponement applies (and who had been certified to receive a coupon allotment under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, or who had been found eligible to participate in any program conducted under the Act of October 31, 1949, for the month immediately preceding the first day of such period) shall be authorized to purchase during such period the same coupon allotment (at the same charge therefor) or to receive for such period the same amount of food commodities which such individual or family had been certified to receive for such month immediately preceding the first day of such period.

LIMITATION ON FISCAL LIABILITY OF STATES FOR STATE SUPPLEMENT

SEC. 603. (a) The amount payable to the Secretary by a State for any fiscal year pursuant to its agreement under section 2156 of the Social Security Act shall not exceed the non-Federal share of expenditures as aid for quarters in the calendar year 1971 under the plan of the State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act (as defined in section 2156(b)(5) of such Act, as amended by this Act).

(b) Subsection (a) shall only apply with respect to that portion of the supplementary payments made by the Secretary on behalf of the State in any fiscal year which are required to be made pursuant to section 2156.

SPECIAL PROVISIONS FOR PUERTO RICO, THE VIRGIN ISLANDS, AND GUAM

SEC. 604. (a) Section 1108 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) In applying the provisions of—

"(A) subsections (a), (b), and (e)(1) of section 2011,

"(B) subsections (a)(2)(D) and (b)(2) of section 2012,

"(C) subsection (a) of section 2013.

"(D) subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 2152,

"(E) subsections (a)(2)(C) and (b)(2) of section 2153, and the last sentence of subsection (b) of such section, and

"(F) the last sentence of section 2154(a), with respect to Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam, the dollar amounts to be used shall, instead of the figures specified in such provisions, be dollar amounts bearing the same ratio to the figures so specified as the per capita incomes of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam, respectively, bear to the per capita income of that one of the States which has the lowest per capita income; except that in no case may the amounts so used exceed the figures so specified.

"(2)(A) The amounts to be used under such sections in Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Guam shall be promulgated by the Secretary between July 1 and September 30 of each odd-numbered year, on the basis of the average per capita income of each State for the most recent calendar year for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce. Such promulgation shall be effective for each of the two fiscal years in the period beginning July 1 next succeeding such promulgation.

"'(B) The term 'State', for purposes of subparagraph (A) only, means the fifty States and the District of Columbia.

"(3) If the amounts which would otherwise be promulgated for any fiscal year for any of the three States referred to in paragraph (1) would be lower than the amounts promulgated for such State for the immediately preceding period, the amounts for such fiscal year shall be increased to the extent of the difference; and the amounts so increased shall be the amounts promulgated for such year."

(b)(1) The Secretary shall make the promulgation described in section 1108(e)(2) of the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (a), between January 1 and March 31, 1973, which promulgation shall be effective for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1973.

(2) This subsection shall become effective upon enactment.

(c)(1) Section 248(b) of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 (Public Law 90-248) is repealed.

(2) The amendment made by this subsection shall apply to expenditures made in quarters following the quarter in which this subsection is enacted.

(d)(1) Section 1108(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by—

(A) striking out "and each fiscal year thereafter" in clause (1)(E) thereof and inserting the following new subclause immediately below such clause (1)(E):

"(F) $30,000,000 with respect to the fiscal year 1973 and each fiscal year thereafter;" and

(B) striking out "and each fiscal year thereafter" in clause (2)(E) thereof and in-serting the following new subclause immediately below such clause (2)(E):

"(F) $1,300,000 with respect to the fiscal year 1973 and each fiscal year thereafter;"

(2) Section 1108(b) of such Act is repealed.

(3) The amendments made by this subsection shall become effective upon enactment.

DETERMINATIONS OF MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 605. Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 221(a) and 241 of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"DETERMINATIONS OF MEDICAID ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 1124. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may enter into an agreement with any State which wishes to do so under which he (or the Secretary of Labor with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under part A of title XXI) will determine eligibility for medical assistance in any or all cases under such State's medical assistance in any or all cases under such State's plan approved under title XIX. Any such agreement shall provide for payment by the State, for use by the Secretary in carrying out the agreement, of an amount equal to one-half of the cost of carrying out the agreement, but in computing such cost with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under title XX or under part A or part B of title XXI the Secretary shall include only those costs which are additional to the costs incurred in carrying out such title or such part."

ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF LABOR FOR THE OPPORTUNITIES FOR FAMILIES PROGRAM AND CHANGE IN THE EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE—COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURTIY

SEC. 606. (a)(1) There shall be in the Department of Labor an Assistant Secretary for the Opportunities for Families Program, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and shall be the principal officer of the Department in carrying out the functions, powers, and duties vested in the Secretary of Labor by part A of title XXI of the Social Security Act (and by parts C and D of such title with respect to the families and benefits to which part A of such title relates), including the making of grants, contracts, agreements, and arrangements, the provision of child care services, the adjudication of claims, and the discharge of all other authority vested in the Secretary by such parts. The Assistant Secretary for the Opportunities for Families Program shall have sole responsibility within the Department of Labor, subject to the supervision and direction of the Secretary of Labor, for the administration of the program established by part A of such title.

(2) Section 2 of the Act of April 17, 1946 (29 U.S.C. 553), is amended—

(A) by striking out "five" in the first sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "six"; and

(B) by inserting before the period at the end of the last sentence the following: ", and one shall be the Assistant Secretary of Labor for the Opportunities for Families Program".

(3) Paragraph (20) of section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by striking out "(5)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(6)".

(b)(1) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code (relating to positions at level V of the Executive Schedule), is amended by striking out:

"(51) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(2) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code relating to positions at level IV of the Executive Schedule), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(96) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(3) The amendments made by the preceding provisions of this section shall take effect on the first day of the first pay period of the Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which commences on or after the first day of the month which follows the month in which this Act is enacted.

TRANSITIONAL ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

SEC. 607. (a) In order for a State to be eligible for any payments pursuant to title IV, V, XVI, or XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to expenditures for any quarter in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, and for the purpose of providing an orderly transition from State to Federal administration of assistance programs for adults and families with children, such State shall enter into agreements with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor under which the State agencies responsible for administering or for supervising the administration of the plans approved under titles I, X, XIV, and XVI and part A of title IV of the Social Security Act will, on behalf of the Secretaries, administer all or such part or parts of the programs established by sections 301 and 401 of this Act (other than the manpower services, training, employment, and child care provisions of the program established by part A of title XXI of the Social Security Act as added by section 401 of this Act), during such portion of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, as may be provided in such agreements; except that no such agreement shall apply, in the administration of the program established by section 401 of this Act, with respect to any family in which both parents are present, neither parent is incapacitated, and the male parent is not unemployed.

Federal Employment of Certain State and Local Employees

Employee eligibility for appointment

(b)(1)(A) During the period described in subparagraph (C) of this paragraph, a department or agency of the United States may appoint to perform its authorized functions under this Act any individual described in subparagraph (B) of this paragraph to a position in the competitive service of the United States, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, otherwise governing such appointment, except that an appointment to a position in grade GS-16, GS-17, or GS-18 shall not be made without the approval of the Civil Service Commission. Except as this subsection may otherwise provide, an appointment hereunder shall be subject to regulations of the Civil Service Commission pertaining to the appointment of incumbents of positions brought into the competitive service.

(B) An individual is eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A) if, within the ninety-day period preceding the date of that appointment—

(i) he was an employee of a State or any political subdivision of a State who was compensated in whole or in part from sums paid under title I, X, XIV, or XIX, or part A of title IV, of the Social Security Act, or under an agreement entered into in accordance with subsection (a); and

(ii) he was the incumbent of a position all or a major part of the duties of which (I) were directly related to determining on behalf of the State or political subdivision the eligibility of persons for assistance payments from sums paid to the State under such provisions of the Social Security Act or such agreement, or directly related to the making of such assistance payments (other than medical assistance payments) or (II) were in support of such determinations or the making of such assistance payments (other than medical assistance payments) and the department or agency making the appointment finds that the individual was or will be separated from employment with the State or political subdivision, or has suffered or will suffer a loss or reduction of pay or grade in that employment, because of the enactment of this Act.

An individual who meets the requirements of the preceding sentence because he is or was the incumbent of a position all or a major part of the duties of which are directly related to, or in support of, the determination of eligibility of persons for medical assistance payments shall, notwithstanding the preceding sentence, be ineligible for appointment under subparagraph (A) unless, prior to his appointment, the State by which he is or was employed has entered into an agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare under section 1124 of the Social Security Act (as added by section 505 of this Act).

(C) An individual shall also be eligible for appointment under subparagraph (A) if, within the ninety-day period preceding the date of that appointment, he was an employee of a State or any political subdivision of a State and was the incumbent of a position all or the major part of the duties of which were related to determining eligibility for—

(i) food stamps made available under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, or

(ii) assistance payments to individuals under the program of assistance and services to Cuban refugees operated pursuant to the Migration and Refugee Assistance Act of 1962 (22 U.S.C. 2601, et seq.).

(D)(i) In the case of an individual described in subparagraph (B), the period referred to in subparagraph (A) shall begin with the date of enactment of this Act and end, except as provided by clause (ii) of this subparagraph, with the close of the ninetieth day after the amendments and repeals to which section 501 is applicable become effective with respect to the program or part of a program in which the individual is employed.

(ii) In the case of an individual who is employed in a program or part of a program administered by a State under an agreement entered into under subsection (a), the period established by clause (i) shall end with the close of the ninetieth day after the date upon which the agreement expires.

(E) The Civil Service Commission may extend any period established by this paragraph (1) insofar as necessary to complete the transition for which subsection (a) provides.

(F) An individual appointed under subparagraph (A) who is required by that appointment to change his place of employment may be paid, in accordance with regulations of the appointing agency prescribing criteria for payment, such as travel, transportation, and related expenses and allowances (or any portion thereof) as would be provided under subchapter II of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, in the case of an employee of the United States transferred in the interest of the Government.

Conditions of appointment in special cases

(2)(A) Except as provided by subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, an individual appointed under paragraph (1) (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the "appointee") may receive, at such time as Civil Service Commission regulations may provide, a career or career-conditional appointment to the competitive service without regard to the duration of his service immediately prior to his appointment if, on the last day of his employment described in paragraph (1)(B) prior to that appointment, he held a status comparable to that of a career or career-conditional employee under a merit system of a State or political subdivision of a State.

(B) An individual who is not a citizen of the United States may be appointed under paragraph (1) and retained without competitive status for not more than 5 years if, prior to his appointment, he has filed a petition for naturalization under section 334 of the Immigration and Nationality Act. If he acquires citizenship within the 5-year period, he shall thereafter become eligible to acquire competitive status subject to applicable Civil Service Commission regulations.

Compensation of appointees

(3) (A) (i) Notwithstanding section 5333 of title 5, United States Code (pertaining to new appointments) and section 5334 of title 5, United States Code (pertaining to pay on change of position), the basic pay of an appointee shall be at that rate of the grade of his position, or of a prevailing wage schedule if applicable, which is equal to his rate of compensation from a State or political subdivision of a State on the last day of the employment described in paragraph (1) (B) prior to his appointment under paragraph (1), or, if there is no such rate, at that rate which exceeds his former rate by the least amount.

(ii) If there is no rate within the grade of his position, or under a prevailing wage schedule if applicable, which equals or exceeds his former rate, he shall receive basic pay at his former rate (but not to exceed the rate for GS–18 as limited by 5 U.S.C. 5308) for a period of 2 years from the date of his appointment, subject to conditions equivalent to those set forth in clauses (A), (B), and (C) of section 5337(a) of title 5, United States Code. If such equivalent conditions continue to obtain at the end of that 2-year period, the rate of basic pay of the appointee shall be reduced to the maximum rate prescribed for the grade of his position by section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, or by the prevailing wage schedule applicable to it.

(B) The period of service required for an appointee to qualify for the benefits of section 5335 of title 5, United States Code (pertaining to periodic step-increases), or for comparable benefits under an applicable prevailing wage schedule, shall be computed from the date of his appointment under paragraph (1).

Credit for prior service

(4) In determining the length of an appointee's service to be credited for purposes of Civil Service Commission regulations pertaining to career tenure, probationary period, rate of annual leave accrual, group life or health insurance, and retention credit in reductions-in-force, credit shall be given for service with the State or political subdivision of the State by which the appointee was employed on the last day of his employment described in paragraph (1) (B) prior to his appointment under paragraph (1).

Sick leave

(5) (A) Subject to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph, an appointee shall be credited with sick leave equal to the balance of sick leave outstanding, in the service of the State or political subdivision by which the appointee was employed, on the last day of his employment described in paragraph (1) (B) prior to his appointment under paragraph (1), except if he has been compensated for that sick leave, or if it has been applied so as to increase the actuarial value of any vested interest of the employee in a retirement system of that State or political subdivision.

Sick leave credited under subparagraph (A) shall not be credited as unused sick leave for purpose of section 8339(m) of title 5, United States Code (pertaining to computation of annuity), and shall be available for use as sick leave by an appointee only after he has exhausted any accruals of sick leave under section 6307 of title 5, United States Code. An appointee who is separated from the Federal civil service with a balance of sick leave credited under subparagraph (A) shall not, during any subsequent period of Federal civil service employment, be recredited with any portion of that balance.

Retirement annuity

(6) The annuity, computed under subsection (a), (b), (c), or (d) of section 8339 of title 5, United States Code, of an appointee eligible thereof shall be increased by $10 for each full month of service credited for retirement annuity purposes, by the State or political subdivision by which the appointee was employed, on the last day of his employment described in paragraph (1) (B) prior to his appointment under paragraph (1), except if (A) the appointee has qualified for or is eligible to qualify for an annuity or other payment on account of retirement (for reasons of age or disability) from such State or political subdivision in consideration of such service, or (B) the appointee is credited for retirement annuity purposes, by such State or political subdivision, with less than 24 full months of such service. The term "annuity" as used in the remainder of section 8339, and the other sections of chapter 83 of title 5, United States Code, to apply to the annuity of an appointee entitled to the increased annuity provided by the preceding sentence, or that of his survivors, shall be deemed to describe an annuity as so increased.

STATE SUPPLEMENTARY PAMENTS DURING TRANSITIONAL PERIOD

SEC. 608 (a) In order to be eligible for any payments pursuant to title IV, V, XVI, or XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning after December 31, 1973, and for the purpose of assuring that needy families will not suffer an automatic reduction in their aid by reason of the enactment of this Act, any State which as of January 1, 1974, does not have in effect agreements entered into pursuant to section 2156 of the Social Security Act which either specifies the payment levels thereunder or are federally administered shall, for each month beginning with January 1974 and continuing until the close of June 1973 or until the State (whether before or after the close of December 1974) enters into (and has in effect) an agreement pursuant to such section which specifies such levels or is so administered, or otherwise takes affirmative action to the contrary on the basis of legislation (other than legislation which prevents the State from entering into such agreement), make supplementary payments meeting the requirements of such sections to each family which is eligible for benefits until title XXI of such benefits and such supplementary Act, to such extent and in such amounts as may be necessary to assure that the total of such benefits and such supplementary payments is at least equal to—

(1) the amount of the aid which would be payable to such family under the plan of such State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, as in effect in June 1971, or if the State by affirmative action modifies such plan after June 1971 and before January 1974, as in effect after such modification becomes effective, if such plan (as so in effect) had continued in effect through such month after December 1973, plus

(2) the bonus value of the food stamps which were provided (or were available) to such family under the Food Stamp Act of 1964 for June 1971 or for the month in which a modification referred to in paragraph (1) becomes effective.

For purposes of this subsection, an agreement entered into pursuant to section 2156 of the Social Security Act is federally administered if it provides that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will, on behalf of the State, make the supplementary payments under such agreement to families eligible therefor.

(b) Supplementary payments made as provided in subsection (a) shall be considered as assistance excludable from income under section 2154(b)(6).

PRETESTING AND EVALUATION

SEC. 609. (a)(1) For the purpose of developing the most effective, economical, and efficient administration of the Opportunities for Families Program established by the amendments made by section 401, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor shall jointly conduct programs of pretests and evaluations of the Opportunities for Families Program in accordance wtih the succeeding provisions of this section.

(2) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, after consultation with the Secretary of Labor, shall establish pretest programs under which payments will be made to families, as defined in section 2155(a) of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, under the conditions and in the amounts that would be applicable to such families under title XXI of the Social Security Act (as so amended). Any such program may be established in any one or more States or political subdivisions of a State. In the case of any such program, such families shall include and be limited to families (as defined in such section 2155(e))— parent is incapacitated or

(B) which have previously participated in such program under this subsection and in which the father is present and is not incapacitated, and the members of which would be eligible for payments under title XXI of such Act (as so amended).

(2) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may, in the case of a State in which he intends to establish a program under this subsection and whose State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act provides aid to families with dependent children in which the father is unemployed, enter into an agreement with such State which will specify the circumstances, if any, and conditions under which payments will be made to such families under such plan notwithstanding the conduct of such program. To the extent that any action (or failure to take action) by such State or a political subdivision thereof is specified under the agreement, such action (or inaction) shall not constitute noncompliance with any requirement of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, or with its State plan approved thereunder.

(3) In any program established under paragraph (1), the Secretary of Labor shall, after consultation with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, provide or assure the provision of any manpower services, training, or employment programs, or child care, family planning, or supportive services, as authorized to be established or provided by title XXI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act.

(4) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor may carry out their functions under paragraphs (1) and (3) directly or through contracts with (A) the State or local agency administering, in the political subdivision or subdivisions involved, a State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, or (B) any other public (Federal or non-Federal) or private agency.

(c) In determining the States or political subdivisions to which programs under subsection (b) will apply, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor shall consider the relative effectiveness of a program in that location in achieving the purposes of this section.

(d)(1) If a program is established under subsection (b) in any political subdivision of a State which makes payments under its State plan approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act with respect to families with dependent children in which the father is unemployed, the State shall pay to the Secretary, for each quarter of a calendar year in which such program is conducted, an amount equal to the average quarterly non-Federal share of such payments (as defined in paragraph (2)) made in such political subdivision for the second, third, fourth, and fifth quarters immediately preceding the quarter in which such program is initiated.

(2) For purposes of this section, the term "non-Federal share of payments with respect to families with dependent children in which the father is unemployed", in the case of any State, means the defference between—

(A) expenditures under the State's plan approved under part A of tittle IV of the Social Security Act as aid to such families and

(B) the amount determined under section 403 or section 1118 of of such Act and under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950, for such State with respect to such expenditures.

(3) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare may reduce any amount due a State under such section 403 or such section 9 by the amount such State is required by paragraph (1) to pay him.

(e)(1) The sums appropriated pursuant to subsection (a) shall also be available to enable the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor to evaluate, directly or by grant or contract, the programs carried on pursuant to subsection (b).

(2) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor shall jointly submit to the President and the Congress, before December 31, 1973, a report of their evaluations under this subsection. Such report shall include a description of the extent to which such programs were successful in achieving the purposes of title XXI with respect to families included in such programs, including details as to changes in income of such individuals, the numbers of such families applying for benefits, employment experience of eligible family members, an analysis of administrative experience under such programs, and any other data and material which they may consider appropriate and of assistance in implementing the provisions of such title.

(f) In the administration of thest programs under this section, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor shall provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information identifying participants in such programs to purposes directly connected with the administration of such programs.

FACILITIES AND EQUIPMENT

Exemption From Certain Provisions of the Economy Act During the Implementation of Title XX and XXI

SEC. 610. (a) Section 322 of the Act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), shall not apply to any lease made by the General Services Administration within three years after the date of enactment of this Act for the purpose of acquiring space for any Federal department or agency in connection with the implementation or administration of title XXI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act.

AUTHORITY TO ACQUIRE TEMPORARY FACILITIES

(b) In addition to any other authority the Administrator of General Services may have, he is authorized, for a period of three years after the date of enactment of this Act, to enter into agreements, upon such terms and conditions as he deems to be in the interest of the United States, to acquire, by purchase, lease (with or without an option in the Government to purchase), or deferred payment purchase contract, personal property consisting of movable, modular, or prefabricated structures, buildings, facilities, or similar property to be placed on Government-owned or leased land for the purpose of providing space for any Federal department or agency in connection with the implementation or administration of title XXI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act. No such lease agreement or deferred payment purchase contract shall bind the Government for a period in excess of ten years. All such deferred payment purchase contracts shall provide that title to the property shall vest in the United States at or before the expiration of the purchase contract term, and that any installment payment made under the contract shall be applied to the contract price, including any interest specified therein.

ACCOUNTABILITY FOR EQUIPMENT AND OTHER PROPERTY PURCHASED UNDER CERTAIN SOCIAL SECURITY ACT PROGRAMS

(c) The Secretary may, in such cases and subject to such conditions as he determines appropriate, waive any obligation that would otherwise exist to account to the United States for equipment or other property purchased in whole or in part with Federal funds made available under section 3, 403, 1003, 1403, or 1603 of the Social Security Act because of the provisions of this Act amending part A of title IV of the Social Security Act to delete the provisions therein pertaining to money payments.

COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENT OF BENEFITS UNDER TITLE XXI OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

SEC. 610A. (a) In accordance with the succeeding provisions of this section, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall adjust the amounts prescribed for determining eligibility for and the amount of benefits payable to families under title XXI of the Social Security Act in order to compensate for annual increases in the cost of living.

(b)(1) Between July 1 and September 30 of each calendar year, beginning with 1974, the Secretary shall increase the dollar amounts prescribed in subsections (a)(1) and (b)(1) of section 2152 of the Social Security Act (as added by this Act) by the percentage by which the average level of the price index for the months in the calendar quarter beginning April 1 of such year exceeds the average level of the price index for months in 1973, and such amounts, as so increased, shall be the amounts employed in carrying out such subsections in months in the following calendar year.

(2) As used in this subsection, the term "price index" means the Consumer Price Index (all items—United States city average) published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

(c) The amounts prescribed in section 2152(c) of such Act (as so added) shall be similarly increased for months in each year (and, as so increased shall be the amounts employed in carrying out section 2152(g) for months in such year).

(d) In the case of any State which is required to make supplementary payments to families pursuant to section 2156 of the Social Security Act (as added by this Act), the adjusted payment level (as defined in subsection (b)(2) of such section) applicable to a family of a given size, shall, in the case of any calendar year, be increased by the same dollar amount as amounts in subsections (a)(1) and (b)(1) of section 2152 of such Act (as so added) with respect to a family of the same size are increased pursuant to subsection (b) for such year, and the adjusted payment level (as so increased) shall be in effect for purposes of carrying out section 2156 of such Act (as so added) for months in such year.

PART B—NEW SOCIAL SERVICES PROVISIONS

ADOPTION AND FOSTER CARE SERVICES UNDER CHILD-WELFARE SERVICES PROGRAM

SEC. 611. Effective July 1, 1973, part B of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"ADOPTION AND FOSTER CARE SERVICES

"SEC. 427. (a) For purposes of this section—

"(1) the term 'foster care services', with respect to any State, means—

"(A) payments for foster care (including medical care not available under the State's plan approved under title XIX or under any other health program within the State) of a child for whom a public agency has responsibility, made to any agency, institution, or person providing such care, but only if such foster care meets standards prescribed by the Secretary, and

"(B) services and administrative activities consistent with such standards as the Secretary may provide, related to the foster care of children, such as finding, evaluating, and licensing foster homes and institutions, and providing services to enable a child to remain in or return to his own home; and

"(2) the term 'adoption services' means—

"(A) services and administrative activities, consistent with such standards as the Secretary may prescribe, related to adoptions, including activities related to judicial proceedings, determinations of the amounts of the payments described in subparagraph (B), location of homes, and all activities related to placement, adoption, and post-adoption services, with respect to any child, and

"(B) payments (subject to such limitations as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe) to a person or persons adopting a child who is physically or mentally handicapped and who, for that reason, may be difficult to place for adoption, based on the financial ability of such person or persons to meet the medical and other remedial needs of such child.

"(b) In the case of any State which is eligible for payments under section 422, the Secretary shall, from the amounts allotted therefor, make payments to such State in an amount equal to 75 per centum of any expenditures for adoption services or foster care services.

"(c) There are authorized to be appropriated, in addition to sums appropriated for purposes of this section pursuant to section 421, for grants to States for adoption services and foster care services, $275,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1974, the sum of $300,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1975, and the sum of $320,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1976, and each fiscal year thereafter.

"(d) From the sum appropriated pursuant to subsection (c), for any fiscal year, there shall be allotted to each State an amount which bears the same ratio to such sum as the number of children under age 21 in such State bears to the number of such children in all the States.

"(e) Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the allotment to any State for any calendar quarter beginning on or after July 1, 1973, will be reduced by an amount equal to any reduction in expenditure of State funds for child welfare services under part B of title IV in that quarter below the average State expenditure under this part for the four quarters in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1972."

PART C—PUBLIC ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS EFFECTIVE IMMEDIATELY

ADDITIONAL REMEDIES FOR STATE NONCOMPLIANCE

SEC. 621. (a) Section 1116 of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(e) In any case in which the Secretary determines that a State has failed in a substantial number of cases—

"(1) to make payments as required by title I, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX or part A of this title IV, or

"(2) to make payments in the amount prescribed under the appropriate State plan (which complies with the conditions for approval under such title or part), he may require the State to make retroactive payment to all persons affected by such failure in order to assure, to the maximum extent possible, that with respect to each such person the sum of the aid or assistance actually received during the period in which such failure occurred plus such retroactive payments are equal to the amount of aid or assistance he would have received for such period had such failure not occurred, but such payments shall not be required with respect to any period prior to the date of the enactment of the Social Security Amendments of 1971. Expenditures for such retroactive payments shall be considered to have been made under the State plan approved under such title or part for purposes of determining the amount of the Federal payment with respect to such plan. In any case in which the Secretary does add such a requirement for retroactive payments pursuant to the preceding provisions of this subsection, the State shall disregard the amount of such retroactive payments for purposes of determining the amount of aid or assistance payable to such persons after such failure has been corrected. The Secretary may prescribe such methods of administration as he finds necessary to carry out a requirement for retroactive payments imposed under this subsection and such requirement and methods shall be deemed necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan under which such failure occurred.

"(f) In any case in which the Secretary has found, in accordance with the procedures of title I, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX, or part A of title IV, that in the administration of the State plan approved under such title or part there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision which is required by such title or part to be included in such plan, the Secretary may prescribe such methods of administration as he finds appropriate to correct such administrative noncompliance within a reasonable period of time, and upon obtaining assurances satisfactory to him that such methods will be undertaken (including a timetable for implementation of such methods which specifies a date by which there will no longer exist such administrative noncompliance), he may, instead of withholding payments under the title or part with respect to which such failure occurred, continue to make payments (in accordance with such title or part) to such State with respect to expenditures under such plan (for so long as he remains satisfied that the timetable is being substantially followed).

"(g) If the Secretary has reason to believe that a State plan which he has approved under title I, X, XIV, XVI, or XIX, or part A of title IV, no longer complies with all requirements of such title or part, or that in the administration of such plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any such requirements, the Secretary may (in addition to or instead of withholding payments under such title or part) request the Attorney General to bring suit to enforce such requirements."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

(2) by adding after clause (ii) the following new clause:

"(iii) in the case of any parent (of a child referred to in clause (ii) receiving such aid who has been deserted or abandoned by his or her spouse, to secure support for such parent from such spouse (or from any other person legally liable for such support) utilizing any reciprocal arrangements adopted with other States to obtain or enforce court orders for support, and".

(b) Section 402(a)(21) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "each parent" in clause (A) and inserting in lieu thereof "each person who is the parent",

(2) by inserting "or is the spouse of the parent of such a child or children" after "under the State plan" in clause (A),

(3) by inserting "or such parent" after "such child or children" in clause (A)(i), and

(4) by striking out "such parent" each place it appears in clause (b) and inserting in lieu thereof "such person".

(c) Section 402(a)(22) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "a parent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "a person",

(2) by striking out "a child or children of such parent" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "the spouse or a child or children of such person", and

(3) by striking out "against such parent" and inserting in lieu thereof "against such person".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, or, in the case of any State, on such later date (not after January 1, 1974) as may be specified in the modification made in the State's plan approved under section 402 of the Social Security Act to carry out such amendments.

SEPARATION OF SOCIAL SERVICES AND CASH ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

SEC. 626. Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 221(a), 241, 505, and 512 of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEPARATION OF SOCIAL SERVICES AND CASH ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

"SEC. 1125. Each State, in the administration of its State plans approved under section 2, 402, 1002, 1402, or 1602, shall develop and submit to the Secretary on or before January 1, 1972, a proposal (1) providing that, to the extent services under any such State plan are furnished by the staff of the State or local agency administering such plan in any political subdivision of such State, such staff will be located, by July 1, 1972, in organizational units (up to such organizational levels as the Secretary may prescribe) which are separate and distinct from the units within such agencies responsible for determining eligibility for any form of cash assistance paid on a regularly recurring basis or for performing any functions directly related thereto, but subject to any exceptions which, in accordance with standards prescribed in regulations, the Secretary may permit when he deems it necessary in order to insure the efficient administration of such plan, and (2) indicating the steps to be taken and the methods to be followed in carrying out the proposal."

"(iv) the cost of carrying out the requirements of clauses (17), (18), (21), and (22) of section 402 (a); plus".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

SEC. 628. Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 221(a), 241, 505, 512, and 526 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 1126. (a) The Secretary shall, subject to subsection (c), pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, in addition to the amounts (if any) otherwise payable to such State under such titles, such part, section 1118, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950, on account of expenditures as cash assistance, an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(1) an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under the State plans approved under such title or such part A (as the case may be), as cash assistance for such quarter (not counting any part of such expenditures which is in excess of the amount of the expenditures which would have been made as cash assistance under such plans if such plans had remained as they were in effect for January 1971, or

"(B) an amount equal to 120 per centum of the amount referred to in clause (2), over

"(2) an amount equal to 100 per centum of the non-Federal share of the total average quarterly expenditures, under such plans, as cash assistance during the 4-quarter period ending December 31, 1970.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter under State plans approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act as cash assistance, referred to in subsection (a)(1), means the excess of—

"(1) the total expenditure for such quarter under such plans as (A) old-age assistance, (B) aid to the blind, (C) aid to the disabled, (D) aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, and (E) aid to families with dependent children, over

"(2) the amounts determined for such quarter for such State with respect to such expenditures under sections 3, 1003, 1403, 1603, 403, and 1118 of this Act and (in the case of a plan approved under title I or X or part A of title IV) under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950.

"(c) No payment under this section shall be made for any quarter to any State on account of expenditures, as cash assistance, under a State plan of such State if the standards, under any plan of such State approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, for determining eligibility for, or the amount of, cash assistance to individuals under such plan have been so changed as to be less favorable, to all (or any substantial class or category) of the applicants for or recipients of such assistance under the plan, than the standards provided for such purpose under such plan as in effect for January 1971, or, if more favorable to any such applicants or recipients, for any month after January 1971, and prior to the month in which this section is enacted."

"(ii) under the Railroad Rctirement Act of 1935 or 1937, or

"(iii) otherwise excluded from gross income, plus

"(B) in the case of any individual who has not attained age 72 before the close of the taxable year—

"(i) except as provided in clause (ii), one-half the amount of earned income received by such individual in the taxable year in excess of $2,000, or

"(ii) if such individual has not attained age 62 before the close of the taxable year, and if such individual (or his spouse under age 62) is eligible for a credit by reason of subsection (a)(2), any amount of earned income in excess of $1,000 received by such individual in the taxable year.

"(4) SPECIAL RULES FOR DETERMINING THE REDUCTION PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH (3).—

"(A) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the reduction under paragraph (3) shall be the aggregate of the amounts resulting from applying paragraph (3) separately to each spouse.

"(B) SEPARATE RETURNS OF MARRIED INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of a separate return of a married individual, paragraph (3)(B)(i) shall be applied by substituting '$1,000' for '$2,000', and paragraph (3)(B)(ii) shall be applied by substituting '$500' for '$1,000'.

"(C) NO REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS EXCLUDED FROM GROSS INCOME.—No reduction shall be made under paragraph (3)(A) for any amount excluded from gross income under section 72 (relating to annuities), 101 (relating to life insurance proceeds), 104 (relating to compensation for injuries or sickness), 105 (relating to amounts received under accident and health plans), 402 (relating to taxability of beneficiary of employees' trust), or 403 (relating to taxation of employee annuities).

"(5) SPECIAL RULES FOR INDIVIDUAL ELIGIBLE UNDER SUBSECTION (a)(2).—

"(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the section 37 amount of an individual who is eligible for a credit by reason of subsection (a)(2) shall not exceed such individual's public retirement system pension income for the taxable year.

"(B) In the case of a joint return where one spouse is eligible by reason of subsection (a)(1) and the other spouse is eligible by reason of subsection (a)(2), subparagraph (A) shall not apply but there shall be an additional reduction under paragraph (3) in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of $1,250 over the amount of the public retirement system pension income of the spouse who is eligible by reason of subsection (a)(2).

"(c) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) EARNED INCOME.—The term 'earned income' has the meaning assigned to such term in section 911 (b), except that such term does not include any amount received as a pension or annuity. The determination of whether earned income is the earned income of the husband or the earned income of the wife shall be made without regard to community property laws.

"(3) JOINT RETURN.—The term 'joint return' means the joint return of a husband and wife made under section 6013.

"(4) PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEM PENSION INCOME.—An individual's public retirement system pension income for the taxable year is his income from pensions and annuities under a public retirement system for personal services performed by him or his spouse, to the extent included in gross income without reference to this section, but only to the extent such income does not represent compensation for personal services rendered during the taxable year. The amount of such income taken into account with respect to any individual for any taxable year shall not exceed $2,500. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'public retirement system' means a pension, annuity, retirement, or similar fund or system established by the United States, a State, a possession of the United States, any political subdivision of any of the foregoing, or the District of Columbia.

"(d) NONRESIDENT ALIEN INELIGIBLE FOR CREDIT.—No credit shall be allowed under this section to any nonresident alien."

Technical Amendments

(b)(1) Section 904 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation on foreign tax credit) is amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h), and by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g) COORDINATION WITH CREDIT FOR THE ELDERLY.—In the case of an individual, for purposes of subsection (a) the tax against which the credit is taken is such tax reduced by the amount of the credit (if any) for the taxable year allowable under section 37 (relating to credit for the elderly)."

(2) Section 6014(a) of such Code (relating to tax not computed by taxpayer) is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(3) Section 6014(b) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking out paragraph (4),

(B) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4), and

(C) by inserting "or" at the end of paragraph (3).

(4) Sections 46(a)(3)(C), 56(a)(2)(A)(ii), and 56(c)(1)(B) of such Code are each amended by striking out "retirement income" and inserting in lieu thereof "credit for the elderly".

(5) The table of sections for subpart A of part IV of subchapter A of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 37 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec 37 Credit for the elderly."

Effective Date

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1971.

(19) by striking out the semicolon and everything that follows in the second sentence of section 1905(b) and inserting in lieu thereof a period.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 650. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, sections 410 and 411, parts B, C, D, and E of title IV, and title V of this Act shall be effective at such time as the Congress may determine in subsequent legislation.

On page 8, line 18, strike out "402" and insert in lieu thereof "410".

On page 10, line 21, strike out "403" and insert in lieu thereof "411".

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I am not sure I want to object, but I would like to familiarize myself with the amendments prior to that time.

Mr. RIBICOFF. This is the basic Ribicoff proposal I spoke of last week. It is my amendment No. 1614, which I intended to call up today. It is being put in as a substitute to the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia, and this will join the issue of the entire welfare proposal in title 4.

Mr. LONG. I must object for the record, but I believe in due course after I study the amendments I will be willing to agree to the consent request. I simply want to reserve my rights at this point.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order of the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, following my earlier colloquy with the distinguished Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), I modify my amendment to H.R. 1 to permit a test of the House version of the family assistance plan as well as the version in the Ribicoff amendment.

I send to the desk a modification of my amendment, and ask that it be so modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

The modifications are as follows:

1. Section 401(a)(1) as added by the amendment is modified to read:

(1) The term "family assistance test program" means (A) a program patterned after that contained in title IV of H.R. 1, 92d Congress, 1st session, as passed by the House of Representatives, or (B) a program patterned after that contained in amendment No. 1614, 92d Congress, 2d session, introduced in the Senate on September 28, 1972,

2. Section 401(b)(1) as added by the amendment is modified so that the last sentence thereof reads as follows:

One of such programs shall be a family assistance test program as defined in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, one of such programs shall be the family assistance program defined in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and two of such programs shall be workfare test programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Connecticut, as modified.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment as notified which is the pending business, submitted by the Senator from Virginia this past Saturday be withdrawn and in its place there be substituted a similar amendment to be offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) that the Senator from Virginia has cosponsored.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—would the distinguished Senator from Virginia also include in his unanimous consent request that my substitute proposal for the Senator from Virginia's become the substitute proposal for the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, so that we can have the same chronology as now pertains?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Yes. I include that as a part of my unanimous consent request. I may say that the proposal which will be offered by the Senator from Delaware is virtually identical, I might say it is identical, to my own amendment. It is identical in principle and virtually identical in language to the one I offered, Saturday. I merely want to make it the Roth-Byrd amendment, rather than the Byrd-Roth amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, one more request. I ask unanimous consent that my amendments to the substitute amendment be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Now can we get back on the track?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask the distinguished Senators whether or not in their opinions there will be a disposition of the substitute, or both the substitute and the amendment in the first degree, today?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is impossible to say at this point. We will simply have to see how the debate goes, and see if the Senate seems to be ready to vote before the day is over.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, it is my understanding that there cannot be a vote on this amendment or the substitute today. I was wondering, inasmuch as we have the Defense appropriation bill, if we could not have a discussion on this amendment for a reasonable time and then, if it is not culminated by that time, we ought to go on to the Defense appropriation bill.

Mr. LONG. We are not asking unanimous consent to vote or not to vote. It seems to me we just ought to debate the amendment and the substitute for the amendment, and after we have debated for a while, we can see whether the Senate appears to be in a mood to vote on this issue, and if not we will go to the Defense bill.

Mr. PASTORE. That is exactly the point I am making. I thought I had made it very clear. But I hope we will not dillydally here all day without accomplishing anything. There is not going to be a vote on it today, and here we are: We have the Defense bill that is ready to move, and I was wondering if we cannot get going on the things where we can get results.

Mr. LONG. Frankly, Mr. President, I hope we can vote on this amendment today, but we will have to wait and see.

Mr. PASTORE. I do, too.

Mr. LONG. First, though, the Senator wants to discuss his amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. But I hope we will find out about 1 o'clock, and not at 6 o'clock this evening.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I think both Senators have put their finger on the point here that I wanted to develop. If it is possible to vote on the substitute and the amendment in the first degree today, I would hope that we could do so. I realize we will not know that until there has been some debate. But once debate has been completed on those two amendments, possibly we can vote on them today. That is my understanding. If not, it may be possible, I would hope, to reach an agreement today to vote on those two amendments at a certain hour tomorrow. I would hope that would be the case. I know that Senators at the moment are not ready to respond to that, and I am not stating it as a question at this time; but I would hope that it could be developed later.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, may I respond to the distinguished assistant majority leader and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island?

I think we are approaching the moment of truth on welfare reform. We have been with it for 3 years. I do not see in this body great interest in welfare reform, nor do I see great interest in welfare reform in the executive branch. My feeling is that the Senate has made up its mind as to what it wants to do.

I doubt whether we are going to be able to get enough people on this floor to listen, or enough Senators to become involved to discuss this amendment with the completeness it deserves. I think the point made by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island is well taken. I would suggest for consideration by the chairman of the Finance Committee, the Senator from Delaware, the Senator from Virginia, and the Senator from Utah that we discuss this amendment and welfare reform as far as we can go today; it will be in the RECORD; I would hope that Senators who are not here during the day will have an opportunity to look at the RECORD and read the debate tomorrow morning; and I would foresee a strong possibility of reaching an agreement sometime to vote by mid-Tuesday afternoon on the various proposals. At that stage, I would say the voting should go compartively rapidly.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Do I understand the Senator to say he hopes an agreement will be reached today?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Today.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. To vote tomorrow?

Mr. RIBICOFF. To vote tomorrow. I think that would be better for the Senate and better for the country, because, as I say, I am a realist, and when I look around this floor, I realize the complications. I regret to say I believe most Senators are going to vote on the issue viscerally instead of intellectually.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I want to compliment the Senator from Connecticut. He has never indulged in dilatory practices on this floor. I know he has a very earnest amendment; in fact, I believe I voted for it last time, and I shall vote for it again. I think most of us are familiar with it, and he is quite right.

What I was trying to obviate was the idea that there would just be discussion today. Any time that word gets out, you know what happens on the floor. The absenteeism is almost staggering.

I would hope Senators would get the impression that those of us who come here at 9 o'clock on Monday morning and leave here at 8 o'clock on Friday night ought to be considered, too.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I wonder if it would be a reasonable request that no later than 1 p.m. today—and it could be much earlier, depending on whether or not Senators wish to talk on the pending question—the pending business be laid aside and the Senate proceed to the consideration of the defense appropriation bill.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, this is a vitally important piece of legislation. There are billions of dollars involved. It is a very complicated piece of legislation, and a very technical piece of legislation. I am just wondering whether the Senate wants to, in a matter of 2 hours and 10 minutes, cease debate on a matter of this magnitude and go on to something else.

Mr. BENNETT. For today only.

Mr. PASTORE. For today only.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. But then I assume we would want to devote a great deal of time tomorrow to debate. If Senators do not want to do that, we will be getting this down to a piece of major legislation, passed twice by the House, considered by the Senate Finance Committee in 1970, 1971, and 1972, and brought here to the Senate floor with the idea of just a very brief debate.

If that is what the Senate wants to do, I do not think I shall object, but I just want to point out that I think we are dealing pretty cavalierly with a very important subject.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am pleased to yield to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I say that if my request is acceded to, we would go on to the Defense appropriation bill no later than 1 o'clock today, or possibly earlier, and at some point toward the end of the day, if Senators wished to again debate the now pending question, they would have the opportunity to do so, even if the Senate had to stay in session late for them to debate the question, without any votes, of course.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, we are on this question now. The Senator from Virginia wants to discuss it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. And may do so.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I want adequate time to discuss it.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. How much time would the Senator like?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I probably will not use it, but I would like to have an hour.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? There is no criticism of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I did not take it as criticism.

Mr. PASTORE. Well, I mean he got a little heated up, which he usually does not do. Something rubbed him the wrong way.

But that is apart from the question. We are here, and we want to listen to what he has to say. The Senator is absolutely right; this is an important question. But he will recall that we all stayed here Saturday afternoon on the Defense bill, and we stayed and we stayed and we stayed. Then something happened, and around 4 o'clock we were sent home. That was the pending business. That has been taken off, and we have come back to H.R. 1, which is fine. I am not finding any fault. All I am saying is that we should begin to think in terms of getting our work done.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is exactly what the Senator from Virginia was suggesting, that we stay on this bill and try to get it handled.

Mr. PASTORE. We have been on this bill for 2 weeks, and we have not reached the other end of the tunnel. I think we have been at the Rubicon here for a couple of months, but nobody has ever crossed it, and I am trying to cross the Rubicon; that is all.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The bill just came in 2 days ago.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, may I say to my distinguished colleague, for whom I have the highest respect, that, frankly, we have on the floor today just about the Senators who are interested in one phase or another of welfare reform. I wish 100 Members of the Senate were interested in welfare reform. But, unfortunately, from 3 years of experience, living with this matter and working with it, the Senators on the floor today represent the interest of the U.S. Senate in what happens to 25 million people.

What has happened is that welfare reform has become another code word in America. It was busing, now it is welfare, and the Senate of the United States and the administration are taking a powder. They are afraid to discuss this issue. It is an issue that everybody wants to hide under the sheets.

What I am saying is that I would hope that we would be debating this important issue for one solid week. But as I look around the Chamber, I do not hear any speeches, any discussion, beyond the Senators who are on the floor today.

So far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote at any time. But I would not deny a moment of time to the concerned Senators, with different philosophies, who have worked so hard on welfare reform.

I have the highest respect for the Senator from Virginia, for the chairman, for the ranking minority member, for the Senator from Arizona, and for the Senator from Delaware, all of whom have worked hard on different phases of this program.

But we can add it up, I say to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island: We have the Senator from Virginia for an hour, the Senator from Delaware for an hour, and I have another three-quarters of an hour. I can answer questions, if anyone has them. I suppose the distinguished chairman has an hour. The distinguished Senator from Utah might have an hour. And that is it. And yet we are talking about the future of 25 million people.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, my request was not made with any desire to deny any Senator an opportunity to speak at whatever length he wishes to speak.

I ask unanimous consent that, at no later than 2 p.m. today, the pending bill be set aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the Defense appropriation bill, the time to be equally divided between the Senator from Louisiana, the manager of the bill——

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I did not think we were going to have a time limitation.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending bill be set aside no later than 2 p.m. today and that the Senate proceed then to the consideration of the Defense appropriation bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, can the Senator make it definitely at 2 p.m., so that we will know?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No, because the debate might peter out earlier, as they say in West Virginia, and it could then come to a close and the bill laid aside.

Mr. McCLELLAN. So we all have to sit around and wait for something to peter out that may not peter out?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. No. If we made it precisely at 2 p.m. and it petered out by 12:30, we would then have to sit around and wait an hour and a half.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I will be amenable.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, at the request of the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG) that he, Mr. SPONG, be added as a cosponsor of the amendment jointly sponsored by the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the Senator from Delaware send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. ROTH. Yes.

The amendment reads as follows:

TITLE V—PROGRAMS FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

PART A—TESTING OF ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

AUTHORIZATION FOR CONDUCT OF TEST PROGRAMS

SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this part—

(1) The term "family assistance tests" means (A) the programs contained in title IV of H.R. 1, 92d Congress, 1st Session, as passed by the House of Representatives, or (B) the program referred to in clause (A) as amended by amendment No. 1614, 92d Congress, 2nd Session, introduced in the Senate on September 28, 1972,

(2) the term "workfare test program" means the program contained in parts A and B title IV of H.R. 1, 92d Congres, 2d Session, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance on September 26, 1972, and

(3) the term "family" means a family with children.

(b) (1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized, effective January 1, 1973, to plan for and conduct, in accordance with the provisions of this section, not more than three test programs. One of such programs shall be the family assistance test program defined in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, one of such programs shall be the family assistance program defined in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and one of such programs shall be the workfare test program.

(2) Whenever the workfare test program is commenced, there shall commence, on the same date as such program, both family assistance test programs. Except as may otherwise be authorized by the Congres, no test program under this section shall be conducted for a period of less than 24 months or more than 48 months, adn to the maximum extent practical each such test program shall be conducted for the same length of time.

(3) Any such test program shall be conducted only in and with respect to an area which consists of one or more States, one or more political subdivisions of a State, or part of a political subdivision of a State, and shall be applicable to all the individuals who are residents of the State or the area of the State in and with respect to which such program is conducted.

(4) During any period for which any such test program is in effect in any State or in any area of a State, individuals residing in such State or the area of the State in which such program is in effect shall not be eligible for aid or assistance under any State plan or program for which the State receives Federal financial assistance under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

(5) The Secretary, in determining the areas in which test programs under this section shall be conducted, shall select areas with a view to assuring—

(A) that the number of participants in any program will (to the maximum extent practicable (be equal to the number of participants in any other such program; and

(B) that the area in which any family assistance test program is conducted shall be comparable (in terms of size and composition of population, of average per capita income, rate of unemployment, and other relevant criteria) to an area in which a workfare test program is conducted.

(c)(1) No test program under this section shall be conducted in any State (or any area thereof) unless such State shall have entered into an agreement with the Secretary under which the State agrees—

(A) to participate in the costs of such test program; and

(B) to cooperate with the Secretary in the conduct of such program.

(2) Under any such agreement, no State shall be required to expend, with respect to any test program conducted within such State (or any area thereof), amounts greater than the amounts which would have been expended with respect to such State or area thereof (as the case may be), during the period that such test program is in effect, under the State plan of such State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act. For purposes of determining the amount any State would have expended under such a plan during the period that any such test program is in effect within such State (or any area thereof), it shall be assumed that the rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan would be equal to the average rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan for the 12-month period immediately preceding the commencement of such test program.

(d)(1) The Secretary shall, upon completion of any plans for and prior to the commencement of any test program under this section, submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a complete and detailed description of such program and shall invite and give consideration to the comments and suggestions of such committees with respect to such program.

(2) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Secretary shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any 6-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs. Each such report shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommenadations and comments of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

(3) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be condutced by this section, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with (A) the Secretary's evaluation of such programs and such comments or recommendations of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable and (B) his recommendations (if any) for legislation to revise or replace the provisions of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

(e)(1) The Secretary shall—

(A) in the planning of any test program under this section; or

(B) in assembling information, statistics, or other materials, to be contained in any report to Congress under this section;

consult with, and seek the advice and assistance of, the General Accounting Office and the General Accounting Office shall consult with the Secretary and furnish such advice and assistance to him upon request of the Secretary or at such times as the Comptroller General deems desirable.

(2) The operations of any test program conducted under this section shall be reviewed by the General Accounting Office, and the books, records, and other documents pertaining to any such program or its operation shall be available to the General Accounting Office at all reasonable times for purposes of audit, review, or inspection. The books, records, and documents of each such program shall be audited by the General Accounting Office from time to time (but not less frequently than once each year).

(3) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Comptroller General shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any 6-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs which shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Comptroller General with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

(4) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with his evaluation of, and comments and recommendations (if any), with respect to such programs.

(f) In the admiration of test programs under this section, the Secretary shall provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information identifying participants in such programs to purposes directly connected with the administration of such programs (except that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the furnishing of records or information concerning participants in such programs to the Committee on Finance of the Senate or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives).

(g) For the purpose of enabling the Secretary to formulate operational plans and to conduct test programs under this section, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary.

(h) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a commitment, on the part of the Congress, to enact (at any future time) legislation to establish, on a permanent basis, any program tested pursuant to this section or any similar program.

On page 852, line 4, strike out "(c)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)".

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Sidney Johnson, a member of the staff of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, be permitted the privilege of the floor during consideration of H.R. 1.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator please repeat that? What committee was that?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. We would like to have Mr. Johnson here, on behalf of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) during discussion of the child care provisions in title 1.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Is this just for that?

Mr. RIBICOFF. During consideration of title 1.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Just for today?

Mr. RIBICOFF. This was requested by the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE).

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HANSEN. I ask unanimous consent that my staff member, Mrs. Marilyn Koester be permitted on the floor during debate and voting on H.R. 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, today I am calling up my welfare reform proposal as a substitute for Senator HARRY BYRD's pilot project proposal now pending before the Senate.

I fully agree with the distinguished Senator from Virginia that innovative programs should not be implemented on a nationwide basis until they are tested on an experimental basis.

But the proposal of the distinguished Senator from Virginia would leave the present welfare system intact for 2 to 4 years while different programs are being tried out. Allowing the present welfare system to continue for that length of time is intolerable. The present welfare system is bankrupting State and local governments and is not helping the truly needy.

We can all agree that we must help those who are unable to work. Millions of young children and their mothers, together with the blind, the disabled, and the elderly need help and they need it now. Pilot programs relating to those able to work will tell us nothing more about those who cannot work. Delaying reform for this part of the welfare system would be indefensible.

Therefore, under my proposal the program for unemployables would commence on January 1, 1974 and much of the existing cumbersome and inefficient welfare structure in this country would be swept away at long last.

The area where experimentation is needed is in the new area of Federal aid to the working poor. This is the question that has troubled many Americans and hamstrung our attempts at welfare reform. Scare stories have circulated about millions of new people added to the welfare rolls—suggesting that millions of bums and freeloaders will be milking the Government and the taxpayer of money. It is time to face this issue squarely.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut yield at that point?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I do not like to interrupt the Senator but I should like to clarify one point. The Senator from Connecticut mentioned the blind and disabled. They are in a different section. They would not be affected by my proposal.

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is correct, but I think that what we must make sure of is, when we are talking about piloting out, we are piloting out the phases of welfare that have been proposed by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and myself and the administration. The pilots would deal with the so-called working poor which is a new category. Keeping in mind that there are now 14 million people on the welfare rolls, we must make sure in the process that we are doing whatever we can to alleviate their problems and working whatever welfare reform we can on the system that now exists.

This is what troubles me.

Under all three proposals for welfare reform—the Finance Committee's, H.R. 1 and mine—there is a separation of employables from unemployables. Since the Finance Committee bill and my proposal essentially agree on who is unemployable—aged, ill, incapacitated persons and mothers with preschool children—our proposals for unemployables would cover the same numbers of people—about 10 million persons. These people essentially are present AFDC recipients who numbered 10.6 million people—7.7 million children and 2.9 million adults—in calendar 1971. The President's plan, mainly because it requires mothers with children over age 3 rather than 6 to work, would cover about 9 million people under FAP.

All three proposals would also assist those already working or able to work, but only mine would test this concept out before full national implementation. In any event, since these people would be working and receiving benefits they should not be characterized as on welfare. They are workers receiving additional assistance while they worked.

While it is clear by now that these millions of people receiving benefits should be characterized as workers rather than on welfare, it is also clear that we are all talking about helping millions of additional people. Such programs should be tried out first. And that is why I have proposed to pilot out the OFF program. If it does not work we can stop it from going into effect.

Therefore my new welfare reform amendment—No. 1614—provides for pilots to be carried out by the Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare and Labor. They would be designed to test out the basic features of the opportunities for families program which provides income supplements to the working poor.

Under the provision of amendment 1614 the Secretaries of HEW and Labor would establish pilot projects immediately upon enactment.

They would be required to report their findings to Congress and the President by December 31, 1973. Congress would then have until the end of March—90 days—to disapprove the OFF program. If either House of Congress passed a resolution stating that Congress does not favor the making of such payments, the OFF program would not be implemented. Absent congressional disapproval, however, the OFF program would go into effect on July 1, 1974. Such a trigger mechanism is similar to the congressional veto power contained in the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946.

It is time for Congress to take a hard look at just what is being proposed in this opportunities for families program. It is designed to assure that it is always more profitable to work than to remain on welfare.

Under present law there is an incentive to remain on welfare rather than go to work. This is because the low-income family headed by the father is not eligible for assistance if he is working full time but is poor.

Thus a family on welfare knows that if a member of the family goes to work it will lose all its welfare benefits. Under the present system, then, going to work often provides less income than welfare.

OFF is designed to end that problem which is a key element in the present welfare mess.

INADEQUACIES OF THE FINANCE COMMITTEE BILL

The Finance Committee bill separates the employables from the unemployables. There is a remarkable similarity between the definitions of the Finance Committee bill and mine as to who is considered unemployable. Basically the elderly, ill, incapacitated and their caretakers would be eligible for AFDC under the committee bill and FAP under my proposal.

The Finance Committee proposal retains the existing, widely discredited State AFDC programs for mothers with young children, and adds on top of it another program for families with an overlapping jumble of wage subsidies, social security tax rebates, work disincentives and subpoverty wage programs.

Rather than coordinate and improve the operation of our welfare program, the committee proposal compounds the lack of coordination by scattering new programs throughout the Federal Government. The new workfare programs would be administered by the Departments of Health, Education, and Welfare, Treasury and a new Federal Work Administration in addition to the 1152 administrative units at the State and local level which already handle the AFDC program.

ADMINISTRATION OF THE PROGRAM

The committee proposal would create an administrative nightmare—a welfare bureaucracy of gigantic proportions. Under the present AFDC system which would continue under the Finance Committee plan some 86,000 persons are employed in State and local governments to administer payments. Under present law the figure is projected to reach 100,000 by the end of calendar 1973.

The committee would add to this huge system a Work Administration which, according to the Finance Committee report (p. 350):

> Will also use 150,000 participants in the guaranteed employment program to perform administrative tasks.

The Works Administration would have to establish new local offices across the country. Additional thousands of employees would have to be employed in the Internal Revenue Service because it is that agency which administers the 10% work bonus. Under my proposal with its centralized network, uniform procedures and economies of scale, the manpower estimate is around 80,000—6,000 less than under present law.

For those unable to work, the Finance Committee would retain the AFDC system with all its flaws. But a guaranteed annual income concept is included in the committee proposal. Instead of receiving matching grants each State would receive a bloc grant. States would be required to provide a benefit level of $2,400 for a family of four, $2,000 for a family of three and $1,600 for a family of two. States with benefit levels below these levels would simply be required not to reduce payments below present levels. Thus southern States could continue to pay families $700 and $800 a year.

For those able to work a three-part system would be established. First, a Work Administration to administer a wage subsidy would be established. Second, a 10-percent work bonus under IRS direction would be created and thirdly, a guaranteed job program at very low wages would be created.

WAGE SUBSIDY

A wage subsidy would be paid by the newly created Work Administration equaling three-fourths of the difference between a low wage in private industry and the minimum wage. Thus, if the minimum wage is $1.60, an employee making $1.20 would get an additional 30 cents in wages, which is three-fourths of the difference between $1.20 and $1.60. The language of the committee bill always refers to three-fourths of the minimum wage. Yet, the committee report indicates that the bill would pay three-fourths of the difference between $1.50 and $2 an hour. They are making the assumption that the Federal minimum wage is $2. If the Federal minimum wage were actually $2 an hour, the employee making $1.50 an hour would get approximately 38 cents additionally from the Government. In either case such a subsidy would encourage employers to pay low wages since they could expect the Federal Government to pick up the cost of higher wages.

One strange thing about this provision is that there would be no subsidies provided to wages that were less than three-quarters of the minimum wage. Thus the lowest income members of the working poor would not be aided by this provision.

10-PERCENT PAYMENT

Participants referred to private sector jobs would receive an additional subsidy of 10 percent of wages covered by social security. This payment, made by the Internal Revenue Service, would only apply to the base hourly wage, not to the wage subsidy portion of hourly income. This payment would be phased out as income rises above the poverty line at a 25-percent rate, dampening any incentives to move above the poverty line. Thus the breakeven point for this provision—that is, that point of income where no more benefits are available—is $5,600. This provision alone could make at least 20 million people eligible for the "work" bonus. The breakeven point of $5,600 is about the same as the breakeven point under my original proposal—amendment 559—which received no sympathy from my colleagues on the Finance Committee.

Such a proposal rewards a family with $4,000 of earnings twice as much as a family with $2,000 and thus provides the least to those with the greatest need.

Administratively this proposal would involve the keeping of a huge volume of records and the maintenance and transfer of records between IRS, the Work Administration, and perhaps other agencies. Millions of tax records would become a part of the welfare maze.

The wage subsidy and the work bonus would be lumped on top of each other.

Thus a worker making $1.20 would first receive a 30-cent wage subsidy to make up three-quarters of the difference between his earnings—$1.20—and the minimum wage—$1.60. Then an additional 10-percent "bonus" computed on the base wage of $1.20—12 cents in this case—the employee's total hourly wage would then be $1.20 plus 30 cents plus 12 cents or $1.62.

This seems like a cumbersome and inefficient way to get to the minimum wage. It would be easier and less costly from an administrative viewpoint to just require all jobs to pay the minimum wage or at least combine the wage subsidy and the work bonus into one larger subsidy.

While I share the view of the committee that it is desirable to relieve the poor of the burden of paying social security taxes—I have publicly supported a social security rebate to impoverished working Americans—I cannot accept the committee proposal since it is part and parcel of an unworkable and inequitable overall plan.

The legislation I have developed would provide relief from both social security and income taxes through the earnings disregard feature. That is, in determining what is income for the purposes of computing the welfare payment, my proposal disregards the first $720 of income, 40 percent of additional income, and amounts paid for social security and income taxes.

May I say to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance that I think the most imaginative and constructive part of his suggestion is a rebate of social security taxes. He and I have no disagreement. I am sure both of us could easily work out a proposal where we could assure that those on welfare and the working poor would be rebated the social security taxes they pay. This is the least we could do. I hope before this legislation is finished, no matter what course it takes, that our distinguished chairman and I can work out this particular proposal because it is constructive. I commend him for his thoughts and ideas.

GUARANTEED JOB OPPORTUNITY

The third provision of the Finance Committee bill would establish a new Federal bureaucracy—the Work Administration—to create very low-wage jobs.

The Work Administration would attempt to provide job placement, job development, employability plans and manpower training. All employable adults registering for welfare would be required to become employees of the Work Administration as a condition of receiving assistance. The Work Administration would attempt to place registrants in private jobs.

Those not so placed in "regular" jobs would become direct employees of the Work Administration at $1.20 an hour, far less than either the poverty line or the Federal minimum wage. These employees would receive no wage subsidy or 10 percent supplement. In fact, the Work Administration employees would be in limbo between Federal and private employment—ineligible for social security, unemployment compensation or workmen's compensation.

The people placed in these guaranteed jobs would only be allowed to work up to a maximum of 32 hours a week at a wage rate of $1.20 an hour. That works out to a weekly wage of $38.40 or $1,920 a year. This is less than half the poverty level. Even if the jobs paid $1.50 an hour—three-quarters of a possible new minimum wage—the weekly wage would only be $48 or $2,400 a year. This is $1,600 less than the poverty level.

It intrigues me, Mr. President, when one considers the conservative cast of the Committee on Finance, to contemplate that they would set up this Government corporation with the responsibility over 1 million people; it is a bureaucracy of such magnitude we cannot contemplate it.

Furthermore, I cannot imagine how anyone, industry or labor, could countenance a work pool of some 1 million people. It would completely shatter the wage structure we have built over a period of years. To think that this Work Administration then would be farming out in a subservient position to employers who are looking for labor would be almost equivalent to slave labor. It is impossible for me to contemplate how conservative, liberal, or moderate Members of this body could countenance such a system as that. It would completely shatter the wage structure in America.

What are we going to do if a person of moderate means wants to hire a maid? She is going to apply to the Work Administration to send in a maid for $1.20 an hour—I am going to pay and the Government is going to subsidize the wealthier members of our society.

I can imagine the horror that would prevail in this country to think that the more affluent members of our society could get domestic maids from this Work Administration pool to work in the homes of the more affluent, to be subsidized at a rate of 30 cents an hour by the Federal Government, to ease the work on the daily basis of housewives of America. It is a shocking thing to contemplate that this country would go back to the indentured employee.

It is shocking to contemplate that under the committee bill sweatshops would arise, people paying substandard wages would arise, industries would flee from the sections of the country that paid decent living wages; employers who want to avoid the minimum wage law of the State or the Nation would go into areas where there would be large pools of labor and get labor for $1.20 an hour.

Frankly, anybody that cannot pay the minimum wage has no right to even be in business in America today.

These direct Work Administration employees would be required to perform "useful work which can contribute to the betterment of the community." For mothers with younger children, training to improve the quality of life—improve homemaking, beautifying apartments, acquiring consumer skills—would be provided. The Work Administration would also provide temporary employment with reimbursement to the Work Administration. In effect, the Federal Government would be maintaining a subpoverty wage manpower pool at the disposal of the business community.

The concepts embodied in the Work Administration are confused and often erroneous. While the basic idea of making the Federal Government the employer of last resort is a sound one, the down-grading of public service jobs relative to private sector employment is unfortunate. The emphasis on providing "incentives" for workers to move into "regular" private employment by paying Work Administration employees only $1.20 an hour is misplaced at best.

A major problem with the committee's proposal is that the private sector does not have sufficient jobs. In fact, over 5 million Americans are unemployed. Thus, even with extraordinary motivation, a Work Administration employee cannot escape his $1.20-an-hour job if there are no other jobs. He is doomed to remain at a menial $1.20-an-hour salary—$1,500 below a poverty-level wage on an annual basis. And the Work Administration by paying only $1 an hour for those in manpower training, is discouraging rather than encouraging participants to upgrade their skills and increase their income.

Rather than discouraging public service employment, we should be fostering it. It has been estimated that State and local government could utilize as many as 4 million people in public service activities of all kinds—conservation, education, health, consumer protection, recreation, sanitation, criminal justice, child care. It should be obvious to all that our inner cities are decaying, our air and water getting dirtier and our public services becoming increasingly unable to meet the challenge of providing us with the manner of existence we as Americans desire.

Public service jobs should provide workers with at least a poverty-level wage, In this way we can both fight poverty and improve our communities.

The proposal that I submitted, that I thought had been worked out with the administration, consists of two facets: aid to those unable to work; and aid to the working poor including a preliminary pilot program of this concept.

ASSISTANCE FOR THOSE WHO CANNOT WORK

This category includes children under 16, mothers with children under age 6, the elderly, ill or incapacitated, or their caretakers, caretakers of a child where the father or other adult relative in the home is working or registered for training, the caretakers of a child where suitable day care is unavailable, and unemployed, male-headed families for whom jobs are unavailable.

PAYMENT LEVEL

Those unable to work will be assured a basic Federal payment to a family of four of $2,600. The payment will increase as the cost of living rises.

MAINTENANCE OF BENEFITS

In those States where payment levels exceed $2,600, States would be required to make supplemental payments to assure that no recipient receives a smaller payment than he or she receives under the present law. To alleviate the harmful effects of State welfare cutbacks of the last few years, the States would be required to supplement up to the higher of their January 1971 level or any higher previous or subsequent level.

STATE FISCAL RELIEF

Under the provisions of my amendment, every State would receive substantial fiscal relief. Under present law States receive matching funds from the Federal Government ranging from 50 percent to 83 percent of a State's costs. Under my proposal the Federal Government will pay 100 percent of the first $2,600 of cost.

If we are talking about relief to States or revenue sharing, there could not be a more important, significant revenue-sharing proposal than for the Federal Government to pick up the first $2,600 of welfare costs of the States. Almost one-half of the total number of States would find themselves out of the welfare business when it came to actual costs.

In addition, while my amendment requires a State with a higher payment level to make supplements, the States would be "held harmless" from additional costs once their payments reached the levels for calendar year 1971.

Total savings to State and local governments in the first fiscal year will amount to $2.8 billion compared to $2.4 billion under H.R. 1 and $2.3 billion under the committee proposal. Fiscal relief would also be provided on an emergency interim basis. The States would receive $1 billion in fiscal relief in the interval before the new welfare program takes effect.

In other words, every State in the Nation has been begging for relief from its welfare costs, and since this program would not go into effect until January 1, 1974, provision is made for relief to the States in the interim period. The total emergency relief proposal is $1.2 billion.

I ask unanimous consent at this point in the RECORD to insert a table of interim relief to all States.

There being no objection, the tabulation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMERGENCY FISCAL RELIEF UNDER THE RIBICOFF-ADMINISTRATION AGREEMENT

This provision provides that once a state reaches its calendar 1971 AFDC cost levels, the federal government will assume all cost rises up to 20% above fiscal 1971 levels. States would receive regular matching funds for cost rises above that level. As a condition of fiscal relief states would have to maintain payment levels at the January 1971 level.

This program is an interim measure pending the effective date of FAP. Retrospective fiscal relief in fiscal 1972 and 1973 would amount to $1.2 billion as follows:

4. UNIFORM STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, national, uniform benefit levels, eligibility rules, and Federal administration would be established by the Ribicoff-administration agreement.

Procedures of the original Ribicoff amendment to assure fairness, including right to counsel, written opinions in welfare adjudication, elimination of punitive and cumbersome reporting and checking procedures are also included as are protection of employee rights, elimination of State residency requirements and determination of eligibility based on current need.

5. CHILD CARE

The proposal I introduce today provides $1.5 billion for the creation of child-care services and $100 million for the construction of child-care facilities to assist working mothers.

Mothers with children under age 6 are exempt from the work requirements. Mothers with children over age 6 would register for work only if adequate day care were available and close to their place of residence or employment. Adequate day care is defined to mean child care services no less comprehensive than those provided for by the 1968 Federal interagency day care requirements.

B. ASSISTANCE TO THOSE ABLE TO WORK: A PILOT PROGRAM

The most innovative portion of our welfare reform proposal is the opportunities for families—OFF—program. It would provide income suppelements to those people who work but still have low incomes to insure that it is always financially more profitable to work than simply receive welfare. Such a proposal would also remove the incentive for fathers to leave their families.

In addition, one of the basic tenets of this proposal is that all those who are able to work should be required to do so. Every able-bodied applicant who applies for welfare, including those already on welfare, would have to register for employment or training with the Department of Labor.

I know this is one of the provisions that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), who is now occupying the Chair, is concerned with.

The only exemption from this requirement would be for those responsible for the care of aged, ill, or incapacitated family members or children under age 6. Failure to report for work or training would result in a loss of benefits unless the recipient could show that jobs or day care were unavailable.

Those deemed employable would immediately be referred to suitable employment paying at least the federal minimum wage. If no jobs were available the Department of Labor would develop employability plans and provide the necessary job training. In addition, in recognition of the fact that the private job market does not have sufficient jobs available for all those able to work, my proposal creates 300,000 meaningful public service jobs in the first year of the program.

Because of the innovative nature of the OFF program, my amendment would require that aid to the working poor be tried out on a limited basis to test out its structure and theories. It is time to try out on a pilot basis any new major social program before committing the resources of the Federal Government to total implementation.

We need to know more about the effect of various earnings disregards on those who work as well as the effect of OFF on work habits, and families. We also need to study the possibility of covering single people and childless couples under the OFF program and to develop appropriate administrative procedures.

Upon completion of the pilot programs and an evaluation of its results, the full OFF program would be implemented unless either House of Congress objected within 90 days.

Full implementation of the OFF program would ensure that those able to work would always find it more profitable to do so rather than to rely solely on public assistance.

All of us can find parts of this program we would change or vary to some extent. However, I firmly believe that this entire proposal makes a significant step forward in our fight to eliminate poverty in this country and I urge the Senate to adopt it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point various tables, explanations, and questions and answers to clarify and explain many of the different facets of the three proposals now before the Senate.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRAMS FOR THOSE UNABLE TO WORK

ELIGIBILITY

Ribicoff-administration agreement

1. Elderly, ill or incapacitated.
2. Mother or other relative caring for a child under age 6.
3. Caretaker of an ill or disabled family member.
4. Child under 16, or a student.
5. Mother or other female caretaker of a child where father or other adult male in the home is registered or has accepted work/training.
6. Family headed by mother too remote from employment program.
7. Caretaker of a child where adequate day care services (i.e., meeting 1968 Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements) are unavailable or remote.

Finance

1. Same as Ribicoff.
2. Same as Ribicoff.
3. Same as Ribicoff.
4. Child living with neither parent, together with his caretaker relatives.
5. Family headed by incapacitated father where mother is not home or is caring for father.
6. Same.

Generally, the AFDC law is followed, limiting eligibility to needy families containing at least one child under 18 who is living at home and has been deprived of support because of the death, absence from home or incapacity of a parent.

President

1. Same as Ribicoff.
2. Mother or other relative caring for a child over age 3.
3. Same as Ribicoff.
4. Same as Ribicoff.
5. Same as Ribicoff.

PAYMENT LEVEL

Ribicoff

$2600 plus mandatory state supplementation plus escalator based on rises in cost of living.

Finance committee

States cannot reduce AFDC payment levels below $1600 for two-member family, $2000 for three member family and $2400 for four-member family. If payment levels are already below these levels, no reduction in payments is allowed.

President

$2400 plus incentives for states to make supplemented payments.

ADMINISTRATION

Ribicoff

National uniform administration, payments eligibility standards and other rules. Efficiency through centralized computer process at a national level.

Finance committee

Retention of AFDC state system with 54 different jurisdictions and 1152 local administrative units independent of each other. Continued split of authority between federal and state guidelines.

Guaranteed job to be provided at ¾ of the minimum wage for 32 hours a week. Thus the wage is $38.40 a week under present minimum wage law. This comes to $1920 per year—less than half the poverty level. If the minimum wage law changed to $2.00, the worker in a guaranteed job would get $1.50 an hour—only $2400 a year or $1600 less than the poverty level.

If an employer pays $1.20 per hour (¾ of the minimum wage) the government will provide a subsidy to raise the wage ¾ of the rest of the way to the minimum wage. In this case ¾ of the difference is 30¢. So the employee would get an additional 30¢ from the government, making his $1.50. Note that the Committee is assuming that a $2.00 minimum wage is in effect for its purposes.

Such workers would not even be eligible for the 10% work bonus or the wage subsidy.

President

Same as Ribicoff.

CHRONOLOGY OF RIBICOFF BILL

FAP goes into effect January 1, 1974.

OFF—Immediately upon enactment, the Secretaries of HEW and Labor shall establish pretest programs. A report shall be issued to Congress and the President by December 31, 1973 on the success or failure of the program and the relevaint findings.

The OFF program automatically triggers into effect on July 1, 1974 unless either House of Congress between January 1974 and March 31, 1974 passes a resolution stating in substance that the Congress does not favor the making of such payments.

QUESTION

Wouldn't the Ribicoff-Administration welfare proposal create a giant welfare bureaucracy?

RESPONSE

No.

1. Current—86,000

To pay benefits to the present cascload, state and local governments employ an estimated 86,000 people. This is compared to a total of 203,000 welfare agency personnel assigned to both payments and services.

2. Projected Under Existing Law—100,000

By the end of calendar 1973, it is projected that the number of employees needed to administer assistance payments alone under the payment system will rise to approximately 100,000.

3. H.R. 1 and Ribicoff Estimate—80,000

Our preliminary manpower estimate for H.R. 1 is 80,000 even though there will be one-third more cases under H.R. 1.

This is 6,000 less than current staffing, attributable to economies of scale achievable with more productive methods under new uniform federal claims and payments procedures.

4. Finance Committee Bill—150,000

According to page 550 of the Finance Committee report: "The Work Administration will also use 150,000 participants in the guaranteed employment program to perform administrative tasks." The Work Administration would be headed by a three-man board appointed by the President. New local offices would have to be established across the country to administer the program. This is in addition to the 86,000 employees under present law and the IRS personnel.

Under my proposal the present facilities of local HEW and Labor branches would be used.

5. Conclusion

We believe federal administration is a means, not only of modernizing and consolidating, but it also offers us an opportunity to achieve management efficiencies in an area in which staffing (50% federlaly funded) has risen very rapidly.

QUESTION

Does the Ribicoff bill have provisions to assure against fraud and other forms of abuse.

RESPONSE

Yes. While the proposal assures recipients of due process, right to counsel, hearings, written opinions and all the protections of the Administrative Procedure Act it is careful to assure that the system is run efficiently.

New Applicant

When the new applicant applies in the local office for assistance, he is pre-screened for the services needed. He is given a complete interview, fills out an application and presents any evidence he may have as to his need. He is eligible for any emergency payment if necessary. And the initial payment is determined.

Since the system will be run on a national computer set-up, the national master file will be screened. This will prevent the present mess in which people can apply for benefits in many different jurisdictions.

The national office will make a 100% review of key items on the application and a computer check run through the Social Security Administration and the Internal Revenue Service will determine if the applicant's stated earnings are correct. This information is quickly relayed via computer to the local office where payment is made.

Continuing Beneficiary

Beneficiary:

(1) Beneficiary required to report major changes in income immediately.

(2) Beneficiary required to file a full report quarterly.

Local Office:

(1) Receives and checks change reports and quarterly reports.

(2) Conducts sample investigations on a spot-audit basis.

(3) Analyzes status of applicants who have been on the welfare rolls for two years or more to determine the causes of the plight of the long-term poor.

National Office:

(1) Checks on earnings and other benefits received.

(2) Screens national file for duplicates.

(3) Requests quarterly reports and sample investigations.

(4) Compiles statistics.

(5) Adjusts payment if necessary.

QUESTION

Senator Long suggests that welfare reform has to start by separating employables from unemployables and affording different treatment to each group, especially providing "work, training, child care, and any other service needed."

RESPONSE

This idea is basic in any welfare reform plan. The current welfare reform bill would separate families with as few as one employable member into a program separate from that for families with no employable members. The program for families with unemployable members would principally be administered by the Labor Department so that the main emphasis will be on job training, employable services, and job placement. Job training will be expanded, including public service jobs program—to provide on-the-job training in useful work when not enough regular jobs are available; child care will be expanded to enable parents to work; and the Labor Department will upgrade employment services provided to assistance beneficiaries.

QUESTION

Does the Ribicoff bill have penalties to assure that rules are being complied with?

RESPONSE

Yes.

(1) All employables are required to register for work and training and to accept suitable jobs. Refusal to comply with this requirement results in the loss of benefits to that member of the family who refuses to comply.

(2) A deserting parent would be civilly liable to the federal government for support and maintenance. The Ribicoff proposal also permits amounts due the federal government to be deducted from any benefits due the deserting parent under any federal program.

(3) Makes interstate flight to avoid parental responsibilities a misdemeanor punishable by a fine up to $1000, one year, or both.

(4) Consistent with equity and good conscience any overpayments made could be recovered by the government.

(5) Penalty for fraud-making any knowing and willful false statements or representation of a material fact in application or receipt of benefits or failing to disclose knowledge of his own or other person's fraud is a misdemeanor—fine of $1,000, one year, or both.

QUESTION

Senator Long says that if a person is employable he should not draw a welfare check, but should work or be trained for work.

RESPONSE

I agree with Senator Long in principle, but find major obstacles to putting this principle into practice: first, lack of enough jobs for the employables to take; second, lack of sufficient skills among the employables to take jobs that are available; third, the lack of sufficient training capacity to upgrade all employables at once (and the great expense of building up such training capacity); and fourth, the lack of sufficient child care capacity to take care of the children of employables and the near impossibility of creating such capacity at one fell swoop. Even if all these obstacles could be overcome and all employable recipients could be put in job training or in jobs, this in itself would not assure their families of income adequate to meet their basic needs. Under my plan, placement efforts will be stepped-up, training programs will expand, child care capacity will increase, and incentive payments will be made to encourage continued work effort.

Under my proposal 300,000 public service jobs payable at the minimum wage level would be made available in the first year.

QUESTION

Senator Long states that under his bill the Labor Department decides who is "employable" and who "unemployable."

RESPONSE

My plan provides that HEW and Labor will jointly develop regulations for operating the new welfare system. Under jointly developed regulations, local federal offices would determine who must register for employment training services, and placement, in accordance with the law, which provides very specific and limited exemptions (basically the aged, children, disabled persons, and mothers of small children). The registration will be with the Labor Department which will then decide who is ready for immediate job placement and who needs training or other services. There is very little basic difference between this approach and Senator Long's.

Both the Finance Committee version and my own plan recognize that there are some people who are employable and some who are not.

Under both bills the categories of those exempt from work requirements are similar:

Ribicoff

(1) Elderly, ill or incapacitated.

(2) Mother or other relative caring for a child under age 6.

(3) Caretaker of an ill or disabled family member.

(4) Child under 16, or a student.

(5) Mother or other female caretaker of a child where father or other adult made in the home is registered or has accepted work/training.

(6) Family headed by mother too remote from employment program.

(7) Caretaker of a child where adequate day care services (i.e., meeting 1968 Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements) are unavailable or remote.

Long

(1) Same as Ribicoff.

(2) Same as Ribicoff.

(3) Same as Ribicoff.

(4) Child living with neither parent, together with his caretaker relatives.

(5) Family headed by incapacitated father where mother is not in home or is caring for father.

(6) Same as Ribicoff.

In both bills exempt individuals may voluntarily register. Past studies indicate that some 80% of people such as welfare mothers with small children will want to work.

QUESTION

Senator Long says that the Family Assistance Plan increases costs and caseloads just as the present system does and that a family assistance system will be easy to get into and hard to get out of.

RESPONSE

The best way to get people off welfare and into jobs is obviously to get them jobs and train and encourage them to work. In order to encourage work, my welfare reform plan would permit recipients to work and keep a part of their earnings. It would also allow a male-headed family in which the father works full-time to receive supplemental assistance, if his income is small enough. This removes the strong economic incentive in the present system for fathers to desert their families in order to qualify them for welfare.

It is true that because of the damage done by the present system, the cure for it will be costly to begin with, but as fewer families are broken up to go on welfare, and more people return to work, long-run welfare costs will be reduced.

As for being easy to get on, the new welfare system would be very tightly administered, following the successful methods used in social security programs, and it will be easy, rather than hard, to get off because of the work incentives in the program. My whole reform program is based on the fundamental principle of encouraging a return to work.

QUESTION

Senator Long charges that FAP includes a "guaranteed annual" income which adds to the welfare problem rather than reforming it.

RESPONSE

To be eligible to receive assistance under the new programs, applicants would be required to register for work training and placement, and would be required to accept training and jobs or required to accept vocational rehabilitation if appropriate. In other words, anyone who is able to work but refuses to do so would be guaranteed exactly nothing. The so-called working poor are not guaranteed anything either. Many working poor families would become eligible for the program, but it should be kept in mind that most working poor families will receive only an income supplement, not a full assistance payment, and that many such families' payments will be very small.

Senator Long's bill does provide a guaranteed income in that it requires that states do not reduce their AFDC payments below $1600 for a two-member family, $2000 for a three-member family and $2400 for a four-member family.

States with payment levels below these levels would not reduce at all.

DESCRIPTION OF FAP-OFF INTERRELATIONSHIP AND EXAMPLES OF EARNINGS DISREGARD

Under present law there is an incentive to remain on welfare rather than go to work. This is because the low-income family headed by the father is not eligible for AFDC if he is working full-time. On the other hand, the family headed by a female is eligible for assistance whether she is working full-time, part-time, or not at all. (This results from 1967 amendments which created a feature like OFF under females heading a family could work and retain a part of their earnings under a monthly earnings disregard of $30 plus ⅓ of remaining income).

The OFF program for the working poor is really an extension of the $30 plus ⅓ program. It provides that in both male and female-headed families a participant in the program can go to work and not be entirely cut off from welfare. Thus it simply adds to present law a provision that a male-headed family in which the father works full-time and is poor should receive supplemental assistance. Its purpose then is to assure that a beneficiary is always better by working than by simply receiving public assistance.

If determined eligible for FAP, a recipient would be entitled to the assistance payment provisions which provide $2600 a year for a family of four with no employable member.

If eligible for OFF, an applicant would be provided with a job and income supplements or if already working, an income supplement. Under the OFF plan, the recipient would be able to continue working and receive benefits—benefits phased out gradually as earnings increased, thereby preventing a "notch" problem in which benefits terminate abruptly upon going to work. Benefits would be determined by disregarding a portion of income earned. Under my proposal the first $720 of earned income (representing work-related expenses) would be disregarded and an additional 40% of income would be ignored.

EXAMPLES OF BENEFITS PAYABLE UNDER THE $2,600 PROPOSAL

Example A: Family of 4 earning $1,000:

Earnings	$1,000
Disregard	−72
	280
Disregard 40% of remaining income	−112
Countable income in determining benefits	168

Amount needed to reach $2,600=$2,432=OFF payment

To compute the payment needed to reach the $2,600 level you deduct the countable income ($168) from $2,600.

Total Income=Earnings $1,000, plus OFF $2,432=$3,432.

Example B: Family of 4 earning $2,000:

Earnings	$2,000
Disregard	−720
	1,280
Disregard 40 percent of remaining income	−512
Countable income in determining benefits	768

Amount needed to reach $2,600=$1,832=OFF payment.

Total Income (Earnings $2,000+OFF $1,832)=$3,832.

Example C: Family of 4 earning $2,600:

Earnings	$2,600
Disregard	−720
	1,880
Disregard 40 percent of remaining income	−752
Countable income in determining benefits	1,128

Amount needed to reach $2,600=$1,472=OFF payment.

Total Income (Earnings $2,600+OFF $1,472)=$4,072.

Example D: Family of Four Earning $3,000:

Earnings	$3,000
Disregard	−720
	2,280
Disregard 40% of Remaining Income	−912
Countable Earnings in determining benefits	1,368

Amount needed to reach $2,600=$1,232=OFF Payment.

Total Income (Earnings $3,000+OFF $1,232)=$4,232.

Example E: Family of Four Earning $4,000:

Earnings	$4,000
Disregard	−720
	3,280
Disregard 40% of remaining income	−1,312
Countable earnings in determining benefits	1,968

Amount needed to reach $2,600=$632=OFF Payment.

Total income (Earnings $4,000+OFF $632)=$4,632.

Example F: Family of Four Earning $5,055:

Earnings	$5,055
Disregard	−720
	4,335
Disregard 40% of remaining income	−1,734
Countable earnings in determining benefits	2,600

Amount needed to reach $2,600=0=OFF Payment.

Total Income (earnings $5,055+OFF $0)=$5,055.

Thus $5,055 is the breakeven point at which families would receive no benefits.

DAY CARE UNDER THE FINANCE COMMITTEE BILL

A Bureau of Child Care is established as part of Title IV in Senator Long's workfare proposal. It contains the following provisions:

1. A BROAD ELIGIBILITY

While it places priority on child care needs of low income individuals working under the provisions of this bill, it is also available to non-welfare recipients and seeks to meet, to the extent feasible "the needs of the nation for child care services." The Committee report states that this Bureau of Child Care has "the goal of making child care services available throughout the nation to the extent that they are needed and not supplied under other programs."

2. STANDARDS

Its emphasis on custody is clear from the way in which the adult-child ratios are defined. Under the Mondale Comprehensive bill, limits are set on the maximum number of children per adult. This bill sets limits on the minimum number of children per adult. For example, the Mondale Comprehensive bill would require that for three year olds in a day care center, there be no more than a 5 to 1 child-adult ratio. In the same case, the Long bill would require no less than a 10 to 1 ratio. And that is just the minimum. The Long bill gives the director the authority to define this ratio so there could be 15 to 1, 20 to 1, or worse. Last year you introduced an amendment to the Mondale bill which required that day care standards be no less than the 1968 Federal InterAgency Day Care Requirements. Since this bill provides much lower standards than the requirements, it would seem to be at odds with our position.

3. PARENT PARTICIPATION

Parent participation is limited to a requirement that parents be given the opportunity to meet from "time to time", the staff, and observe, from time to time, the children receiving care in a facility. Nothing about parent participation in decision making, policy formation, choice of curriculum, etc. is provided.

4. DELIVERY SYSTEM

The Bureau of Child Care is part of a newly created Work Administration—separate from any existing Department. It has the authority to purchase or provide child care in any way it wishes. No role is assured for states or localities. This has been a major issue in the child care battle of last year. The Bureau offices would be established in all major cities and simply purchase services from whoever it wished (including profit makers) or provide them itself.

5. FEE SCHEDULE

The bill provides that some kind of graduated fee schedule be established by the director but gives no hint of up to what level the services will be free or how fast the fees will rise. Under the provisions of Senator Long's original Child Care Corporation the understanding was the program would be totally financed by fees imposed on the participants—those least able to afford them.

6. DEVELOPMENTAL PROGRAMS

It would be permissible to place children in developmental programs such as Head Start, "if the parents of such children agree", but many other kinds of custodial care are authorized, including the opportunity to according to the Committee report "use facilities of low quality . . . . with the understanding that the facilities will be promptly improved."

7. LICENSING

Any facility in which the child care services are provided by the Bureau "shall not be subject to any health, fire, safety, sanitary or other requirements imposed by states or localities" on the grounds that this bill contains some vague requirements in these areas and state and local requirements are unnecessary rigid.

8. AUTHORITY

$800 million is authorized for FY 73, with such funds as necessary in succeeding years and the authority to sell up to $50 million a year in revenue bonds beginning in 1975.

9. NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL

Establishes National Advisory Councils including Secretary of HEW, HUD and Labor, welfare workers and consumers provided that not more than one individual represent welfare recipients.

10. MODEL PROGRAMS

Contains a provision providing up to $400,000 a year to each state to develop model child care, whatever that means.

11. LACK OF COORDINATION AMONG DAY CARE PROGRAMS

The Bureau of Child Care, which is virtually identical to Senator Long's Child Care Corporation, would not draw together the many child care services now funded and operated by federal and state governments. It would just add one more program on top of a system which is now confused. In hearings before the Finance Committee last September on child care, Elliot Richardson strongly opposed the provisions of the Child Care Corporation. Senator Mondale, in testimony before the Committee, also opposed the concept of the Child Care Corporation. He pointed out that the Child Care Corporation provisions ran directly counter to the 1970 White House Conference on Children which selected as their number one priority the provision of "comprehensive family oriented child development programs including health services, day care and early childhood education." All of the major child care organizations.

THE SENATE VOTES ON WELFARE REFORM

Over thee years ago, President Nixon made a welfare reform proposal to which he appeared fully committed and which we believed had many good features. The President's plan put a federal floor under the incomes of families with children and extended assistance for the first time to the working poor. Although we thought the federal minimum was to low and objected to some coercive features of the bill, we believed it represented a major step in the right direction—a step toward a fair national system that would protect those who could not work and provide incentives for those who could.

This week in the hectic atmosphere of an election campaign, the Senate must act on that proposal—or what is left of it. The senators are now faced with three choices. The first is the administration-backed bill which passed the House as H.R. 1 but failed to get a serious hearing in the ultra-conservative Senate Finance Committee. In our opinion, this bill is now far less desirable than President Nixon's original proposal. Indeed, it is a travesty on the intentions he expressed three years ago. The bill would still put a federal floor under welfare benefits ($2,400 a year for a family of four), but would, in effect, tax the earnings of the poor at confiscatory rates and provide no guarantee or even encouragement to states to maintain benefits above the meager federal minimums. It seems likely that passage of this bill would both lower the amounts that welfare families were forced to live on in many states, and make it even less attractive for them to increase their earnings than under present laws. We believe the Senate should reject it.

A second version, supported by Senator Ribicoff seems to us to preserve the sound features of the President's original proposal and to avoid some of its more serious pitfalls. The Ribicoff version would given recipients only slightly more money ($2,600 for a family of four which still seems to us too low), but it would require states that now pay more than that to maintain their benefits and would provide more safeguards for recipients against being forced into exploitative jobs without adequate provision for the care of their children. This version was actually worked out by Senator Ribicoff in collaboration with Secretary Richardson of HEW, but the President has refused to support it. The President's intransigence appears to indicate that he finds more political advantage in blaming the opposition for not passing his bill than in working for a constructive solution—along lines originally proposed by him—that would improve the lives of millions of people.

Finally, there is Senator Long's version supported by a majority of the Senate Finance Committee, but officially opposed by the administration. The Long bill is an extraordinarily complex amalgam of a good idea with some dangerously coercive features bordering on slave labor for the poor. The good idea is creating public service jobs for people who are now forced onto welfare because they cannot find employment. We support the general concept of public service job creation with enthusiasm. Indeed, we do not see how even stringent "work requirements" can result in employment for the poor if no jobs are available. Unfortunately, however, the jobs that would be created under the Long bill would be at substandard wages. Moreover, all welfare benefits would be abolished for families headed by an able-bodied adult, except women with children under six. This kind of coercion seems to us demoralizing and very close to publicly approved servitude.

We hope that despite the lateness of the hour and the administration's unconstructive attitude, the Senate will pass the Ribicoff version of welfare reform. If it does not, perhaps some sort of a test program—which several senators have proposed—would be better than nothing. We would urge the senators, however, to view with great skepticism any attempt to work out a last-minute compromise between the administration and Senator Long. Job creation for the poor is a sound idea, but the Long bill is so complex and fraught with dangers for the poor that the probability of hastily turning it into a constructive piece of welfare legislation seems to us virtually zero.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I think it is very important that there be a reform, a change, in the present welfare system. It is outdated, it is being mishandled, it is being badly administered, and I favor a change in the present program.

But, Mr. President, in considering changing the present program, it is important that Congress be sure that it is going to something better, and not to something worse, something more expensive, something less desirable.

I want to recap for just a moment the situation in which the Senate finds itself.

Three different programs have been considered by Congress. First is the one known as H.R. 1, which has passed the House of Representatives twice. That program has been under consideration by the Senate Committee on Finance in 1970, 1971, and 1972. The committee refused to approve that program, even though it is an administration measure.

One of its chief architects was Dr. Moynihan, Special Counsel to the President, who made this statement in regard to the family assistance plan, the H.R. 1 proposal:

This bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

I invite the attention of the Senators to page 1950 of the committee hearings.

The second proposal is the one offered by the able and distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF). It is similar in nature to H.R. 1. It is a more expensive, expanded version of H.R. 1.

The third proposal is the one developed by the committee and supported by a majority of the members of the Committee on Finance, and known as the workfare proposal.

Of the three plans, it seems to me that the concept of the third plan; namely, workfare, is the concept which the American people want. This provides a marked contrast to the other two plans with regard to work incentives and with regard to whether the principle of a guaranteed annual income should be written into law.

The workfare program does not provide for a guaranteed annual income; it does provide for guaranteed job opportunities. That is the direction it seems to me we ought to go in revising our welfare laws.

The aspect of the workfare plan I am not totally in accord with is its cost. I feel that we do not have an adequate estimate as to the cost of that program.

Certainly it would be less expensive than the program offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, and would be no more expensive, than that provided by H.R. 1. Nevertheless, I am not satisfied as to the accuracy of the estimates of what that program could cost.

What would the first two programs do to the welfare rolls? I call attention, in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 30, 1972, at page S16411, to a statement by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance, the senior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), in which he says that the number of people who would be on the welfare rolls if we went to the $3,000 provided in Ribicoff Amendment No. 559 would be 40 million persons on the welfare rolls. If we went to the Harris proposal—that is another plan that has been floating around—which is $4,000 a year, the poverty level, then 81 million people would be on the welfare rolls.

Then there is another plan floating around called the McGovern proposal, for $6,500; and, according to the chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, if that proposal were enacted 104 million persons would go on the welfare rolls.

So, with the exception of the workfare plan, all of the plans that are being considered provide for a substantial increase in the number of individuals drawing public assistance.

Under H.R. 1, the House-passed proposal and the proposal backed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Richardson, it was testified that the number of welfare recipients would double. At that point, there were about 12 million persons on welfare, and under the H.R. 1 proposal the number would go to 24 or 25 million persons.

What the American people need to ponder and need to understand, as I see it, is that all of the proposals with the exception of the committee workfare proposal provide for a very substantial increase in the number of individuals drawing public assistance.

To my way of thinking, that is going in the wrong direction.

To my way of thinking, what we want to do is get people off of the welfare rolls and into jobs.

I have found it impossible to support H.R. 1, even though it has passed the House twice and even though it has the strong support of the administration. Before giving my reasons, let me quote three words from the sponsor of this legislation in his official testimony before the Committee on Finance. In that official testimony, Secretary Richardson termed his welfare proposal "revolutionary and expensive."

Mr. President, I hope that Congress will heed those words. Those are not the words of the senior Senator from Virginia. Those are not the words of one who is opposed to H.R. 1, the administration-backed plan. Those are the words of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the chief sponsor of the proposed legislation.

He terms it revolutionary and expensive. Most certainly, that proposal is revolutionary and expensive. Those are about the only three words of all the testimony given by the distinguished Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with which the senior Senator from Virginia can fully agree.

I cannot support that proposal, and what I say in regard to that proposal applies in the main to the Ribicoff proposal.

I cannot support that proposal because it is lacking in work incentives, because it would write into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income, because it would cost at least $5 billion more than the present program. I cannot support that program because 80,000 new Federal employees would be required to administer it. Above that, I cannot support that revolutionary and expensive program because it would add millions of people to the public assistance rolls.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. When the distinguished Senator talks about 80,000 new employees, are these not basically substitute employees for those who are operating the welfare system in 1,154 jurisdictions? In other words, we have some 86,0000 people now engaged in administering welfare throughout the Nation. Under my proposal, the 80,000 would not be added to the 86,000 but would be a substitute for the 86,000. So that if my proposal were adopted and we nationalized welfare under a Federal system, the total number of employees would be 80,000 as against the 86,000 now administering welfare throughout the Nation. In many cases the new Federal employees will simply be existing State employees transferred to Federal employment. Incidentally, all of the accrued rights such as pensions would be preserved.

Mr. HARRY F. BRYD, JR. I was speaking specifically of H.R. 1. The Senator is correct that under H.R. 1 many of those 80,000 presumably would be those who are now handling a State program. But the point I am suggesting is that there would be 80,000 new Federal employees.

I am concerned about the fact that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare is so gigantic now—it has 102,000 to 110,000 employees—that it cannot effectively administer the welfare program now. For that reason, I am very much opposed to 80,000 new employees being put on the Federal rolls to handle the welfare program. I would prefer that they continue—such portion of them as there are—on the State's payroll, rather than on the Federal payroll.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I just wanted the record to be straight.

As I understand the objection of the distinguished Senator from Virginia, he objects to these employees being shifted from State, county, and local administration to Federal administration. But in the total, overall number of employees, there will not be 80,000 new employees on top of the 86,000.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. There will be new Federal employees. There would be less persons—I do not know about the precise figure—employed by State and local communities. But there would be 80,000 more Federal employees.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Since the distinguished Senator has stressed the number of new Federal employees under H.R. 1 and my proposal, I wonder how the Senator from Virginia feels about the committee proposal for a Works Administration.

I read from page 550 of the Finance Committee report:

> The Work Administration will also use 150,000 participants in the guaranteed employment program to perform administrative tasks.

So, in addition to the 86,000 people now involved in welfare, the Finance Committee says that their proposal will take an additonal 150,000. Additional thousands of personnel would be needed by the IRS to administer the work bonus. Would the Senator comment on that phase of the committee proposal?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That was a part of my reservation in regard to the committee plan. It ties in with my reservation as to what the plan will cost. I have not come to the pilot tests that the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware and myself calls for, but that is an additional reason why I think the workfare program should be piloted out before being put into effect nationwide, just as I think there should be a pilot project and pilot tests of the so-called Ribicoff proposal and the H.R. 1 proposal.

My proposal is that before putting any of these into effect nationwide—because they are new programs, they are gigantic programs, they are expensive programs, all of them—we ought to know what we are doing and ought to have a pilot test. That is the reason why the Senator from Delaware and I have presented the proposal for pilot projects.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I should like to comment to the distinguished Senator that at least he has been consistent throughout the 3 years of consideration and discussion of this entire program. From its inception, the Senator from Virginia has been against the policy and the philosophy and the theories and the details of H.R. 1 and all substitutes to that program. At least, he is one of the few consistent members of the Committee on Finance; and he was not taken in by this new "work administration" program, with its many pitfalls.

I understand what the Senator from Virginia is trying to achieve with the assistance of the distinguished Senator from Delaware. The Senator from Virginia may recall that in September 1970, in the Finance Committee, I proposed that we pilot this whole thing out, similar to the philosophy and thinking of the Senator from Virginia and the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. If the Senator will yield at that point, I might say that, so far as the Senator from Virginia is concerned, he got this idea from the able Senator from Connecticut, who first suggested that to the committee; and the Senator from Connecticut suggested it to the President of the United States at a meeting some of us attended with him in San Clemente, in September 1970.

Mr. RIBICOFF. This is the irony of the situation we are in now. I had felt that the entire committee, by December 1970, was more than willing to have a pilot program go into effect to try out the administration thinking. The administration at that time vigorously and vehemently opposed piloting out these programs. If the program had been piloted out on January 1, 1971, we would now be in a position to have all the information available and to determine whether the proposals worked or did not work. I worked in combination with the administration over the intervening 2 years, and we finally came forth with the amendment that I put in the other day, and is now pending as a substitute for the Roth-Byrd proposal, only to find that the administration has changed its mind. After 2 years of work in trying to find a solution, I find myself alone and completely bereft of administration support.

As I look back on the 3 years it would have been much better for all of us on the Finance Committee not to have accommodated ourselves to the importunities of the administration but instead to have insisted on the floor of the Senate that the programs be piloted. In December, 1970, we could have probably had a unanimous vote in this body to pilot out the program, this brings me to a thought that I wonder whether the distinguished Senator from Virginia might agree with; from now on, when HEW comes before the Finance Committee with any proposal, should not view it with great skepticism because it has proven over the past 3 years, the way HEW has handled the entire problem of welfare has been unreliable and that we must be skeptical and question the bona fides, the knowledge, and the intentions of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I concur in the statement made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut who himself served with such great distinction and ability as Secretary of HEW some 10 years ago. I find it very difficult and time consuming to draw out from the witnesses, or from Secretary Richardson, the needed information.

I think that this might be a good time to quote several sentences in the committee hearings dealing with the cost of the new program.

I refer to page 114 of the committee hearings in which I invited the attention of the committee and the Secretary to page 2 of his statement that day

Now, Mr. Secretary, on page 2 of your statement you say that during the decade of the sixties, the AFDC rolls increased by 4.4 million people, a 147 percent increase. Then you say further in the year following the President's initial call for welfare reform, in August, 1969, the rolls increased an additional 50 percent.

So over a 10-year period the rolls increased by 147 percent, but over a 1-year period they increased by an additional 50 percent.

Incidentally, that was subsequently corrected where, instead of a year from August 1969 it was 18 months from August 1969 that the rolls increased by 50 percent.

So the Secretary says in a 10-year period the rolls increased by 147 percent but he says in an 18-month period beginning August 1969 they increased by 50 percent.

So I say that there is something the matter with the administration of this law by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. It has been lax in handling it. They do not seem to have any interest in holding down the welfare rolls. I cannot see any evidence that they have such an interest. The welfare rolls by the Secretary's own testimony increased 50 percent in 18 months; beginning August 1969.

I submit that it can be held down if those administering the laws both here in Washington and in the States will make an effort to hold down the welfare rolls. I think a great many of those people are placed on welfare rolls for political purposes.

Today's New York Times, in column 8 on page 1, states that a dramatic decrease in welfare case load persons and expenditures for July is to be announced by the Human Resources Administration.

That is good news. Finally the people themselves, the taxpayers, are waking up to the fact that the politicians and the administrators have been squandering and wasting their money and putting people on welfare rolls who have no right to be there and, in many cases, as has been brought out a number of times by the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) where the same person has drawn four, five, or six welfare checks. So I think it is very important that the administrators tighten up on the administration of the laws. It is good to know that New York State at long last is beginning to do this.

I want to bring out two other points in that regard.

Speaking now of H.R. 1, on page 287 of the committee hearings, a question by me to Secretary Richardson:

Senator BYRD. So we have established the costs for fiscal 1972 at $10 billion for welfare plus $3.4 billion for medicaid.

Secretary RICHARDSON. Yes.

Now, I refer the Senate to page 225 of the committee hearings:

Secretary BYRD. What will be the total costs of the welfare programs, the Federal share, for fiscal year 1973. That is, total costs.

Secretary RICHARDSON. The total cost is, as I said, $14.9 billion, the cost of H.R. 1. Table one of the report of the Committee on Ways and Means on H.R. 1. gives these figures, and they are also reproduced in the Senate Finance Committee print "Welfare Programs for Families" in chart 7.

Senator BYRD. Let me ask you this question to be sure I understand your response. The total cost of the welfare program, the Federal share, plus the cost of medicaid, the two items together, will total $19.4 billion for the Federal Government. Is that correct?

Secretary RICHARDSON. Yes it is.

Mr. President, what those pages of this committee hearing bring out is this, that on page 287 the welfare cost for fiscal year 1972 leaving out medicaid, was established at $10 billion and then on page 225, the welfare costs for fiscal year 1973, leaving out medicaid, if we go to H.R. 1 and accept that proposal, would be $14.9 billion. That is a 49-percent increase in 1 year if the proposal of HEW were adopted.

The able Senator from Connecticut mentioned the fact that more than 2 years ago the Senate Committee on Finance was favorable to a pilot project to test the merits or demerits of H.R. 1.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Arizona.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Virginia has taken the position that he has. I support it completely.

I want to bring out that when we refer to a pilot program, I refer back to the former Senator from Delaware, Mr. Williams, who very ably worked in this legislation for a pilot program and then for writing the legislation.

I ask the distinguished Senator from Virginia if it is his idea of a pilot program that we should determine from the pilot program the proper way in which to write the legislation.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Yes, the Senator is correct. It seems to me that before we embark on a nationwide program, which everyone will agree, I think, is revolutionary and expensive, that we ought to have a pilot project, the result of which could advise the Congress what legislation would be needed and what should be included in the legislation to make it the most effective type possible for the recipients, those needy people who deserve and ought to have welfare, and also the best way to protect the taxpayers.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, I wholeheartedly agree with the distinguished Senator from Virginia. I ask the distinguished Senator from Connecticut if it is not true that at the time he offered his recommendation of a pilot program, it was his intention to have the legislation rewritten and approved, and then they would come back to the legislation after the pilot program had been tested, and we would then make changes. We would write the legislation after we had our experience with the pilot program and would not be waiting for the results of the pilot program before going forward with the legislation.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No. My original proposal was for a pilot program before writing the legislation. In discussions with the administration, I was importuned zealously to try to come to the opposite position—to oppose any pilots. Compromise and have a pilot program and have it go into effect unless their plan was rejected by Congress.

What I want to point out is that in the original contemplation and discussion with former Senator Williams—who opposed the legislation deeply, sincerely, and strongly—he had agreed with me and was very sympathetic to the approach to have purely a pilot program first.

I had argued long and hard with various representatives of this administration that they ought to accept this approach because it became very apparent to me in 1970 that this body would not under any circumstances go along with welfare reform. Therefore, since they would not go along with it, we were losing valuable time and that what we should do was to have a pilot program since the chairman of the Finance Committee and the ranking minority member of the committee at that time, former Senator Williams, would go along with it, and former Senator Williams assured me that as far as he was concerned he would be willing to give a blank check to HEW for the authorization they would want for a full fledged pilot program in different sections of the country. If my original position had been adopted, we would be in a position now—knowing the results of the pilots and ready to enact a meaningful reform proposal.

It was and is a deep source of regret to me now that at that time I did not follow my better judgment and refuse to listen to the demands of the administration and stay with the distinguished chairman of the committee and former Senator John Williams, and write our own pilot program for legislation irrespective of the administration.

That is why it is such a disillusioning experience, after having worked for 3 years to try to find a basis of compromise and adjustment with the administration, to suddenly find that the rug is pulled out from under us.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FANNIN. I will in a moment.

I think the record will show, certainly to my knowledge, that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut did not offer a pilot program before the Senate other than the one that would have a test program. Is that not correct?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is absolutely correct. However, the Senator, having been in Government for a long time, is certainly not under any illusion that that is now it worked out. I did not offer it, because I was working with the administration that I trusted, and I must confess that my trust was misplaced.

I had urged this matter upon the administration during this period of time. I had discussed this with our distinguished chairman, and I am sure that he will be willing to tell the Senate that this is the case and will confirm it. And I also discussed it with former Senator Williams of Delaware, for whom I had the highest respect, although we disagreed philosophically on many issues.

I had discussed this time and time again with him. We had come to an agreement between ourselves, the Senator from Louisiana, the Senator from Delaware, and myself. And I had urged upon the administration that if they would accede to such a program, it could be achieved. They practically begged me not to do this, but to stay with their program. They said this would kill their program. They said that next year would be a different year and they would be able to achieve reform.

I agreed, contrary to my better judgment, I must confess. And I am sure that the distinguished chairman of the committee will confirm the statements I make, because I kept him completely informed on what was going on. He knew that we were trying to work this out. And I know that we told the administration in no uncertain terms that the only way we could get H.R. 1 passed would be through a pure pilot program basis. And I regret that that plan was not adopted.

Mr. FANNIN. All I am trying to establish, and I think the RECORD will show this, is that former Senator Williams explained on the floor of the Senate that he was willing to allow any amount of money that would be necessary, $2 billion or whatever the amount was that would be necessary.

Mr. RIBICOFF. We talked about $500 million at that time.

Mr. FANNIN. He said he was perfectly willing to go forward. However, he was deeply disappointed when this did not take place. He had the support, as I remember it, of every committee member on this side of the aisle as far as the Finance Committee was concerned. This was something that he was very desirous of placing into effect.

When the legislation came to the floor, the Senator from Connecticut will remember that it contained a test program, but with a stipulation that it would go ahead and be improved and changes made, which would be very difficult to bring about if those changes were necessary.

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is absolutely correct. But I am giving the Senator the background on how this took place. There is no question in my mind that this was being fought on the other side constantly. The great irony was to have the Senator from Connecticut, a Democrat, carry the banner for a Republican administration, because the administration could not find a Republican to carry the ball for them, until toward the end, in a legislative maneuver, I was able to enlist the minority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT), who joined with me at that time. The administration could not find a Republican member of the Committee on Finance. I was carrying on this battle for the administration as if I were the spokesman for the administration—and I was the spokesman for the administration for 3 years. The only voice that kept H.R. 1 alive in the Senate was the Senator from Connecticut because I felt deeply that the President was on the right track.

I felt this was an innovative program he had given to Congress and the American people. I had many conferences with Mr. Moynihan, Mr. Finch, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. Veneman.

For 3 years two members of my personal staff, not the staff of the Committee on Finance, have worked full time on welfare legislation. They had little time for anything else. I refer to Taggart Adams, who worked for me until the end of 1970 and is now assistant U.S. attorney for New York, and Jeff Peterson, my special assistant who is now on the floor with me. They know more about welfare than anyone else in the Nation. Jeff has spent the better part of the last 2 years working on this legislation. Between them they spent 3 years working on this legislation with people all over the country. No stone was left unturned as Mr. Peterson and Mr. Adams developed ideas and sought suggestions from people in every facet of the welfare field.

If the distinguished Senator from Virginia is interested in cost, as his father before him was, I think he would be very interested in asking the question: How much money has HEW spent in 3 years tooling up for H.R. 1, what has been the advice of their staff working at HEW on H.R. 1, and how much money has been spent working this out? I think he would be shocked at how much money has gone down the drain on a measure they have not wholeheartedly supported.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think that is an excellent question. I will prepare a letter today for Mr. Richardson, have it in the RECORD tomorrow, and get it to his office. I hope we will have a forthright answer.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think the Senator will be shocked.

Mr. FANNIN. I remind the Senator that he was not the only one who attended the meeting at the western White House. He was working with Senator Bennett. He will recall at the time the workfare program started with that meeting in California. It was discussed and that is where the first idea of the workfare program was finally brought to the surface. He will rceall this was something that was considered and that now it is under consideration, and if we had had the test program that the distinguished Senator from Delaware, then Senator John Williams had insisted upon, we would be further along today.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No question about that. I think the 100 men and women on this floor must contemplate the irony of how we have gone around this circle at the expense of energy and time of the Committee on Finance, the hours spent by members of the Committee on Finance, the hours every member spends, the commitment of our staff, as well as the committee staff. Fabulous amounts of money have been used, because HEW has tooled up on the basis of this program going through. They have a welfare structure ready to put into effect. When the history of this is written it will be an interesting story of, "Who killed Cock Robin?"

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arizona has raised an important point. If we are going to have a pilot program and test these programs, the purpose of the test should be to inform Congress and to furnish information to Congress on which Congress can subsequently act.

I would be as strongly opposed now as I was 2 years ago to say to HEW, "You can have these pilot projects and put them into effect if, in your judgment, they turn out satisfactorily." I do not think that is the way to do it.

As the Senator from Arizona developed today, many of those who favor the pilot program want it to go into effect automatically. That would be like another Gulf of Tonkin resolution, giving unspecified power to the executive branch. I think it would be a grave error; it would be foolhardy. I cannot imagine Congress doing something like that, saying in effect: "Here are three programs. After you test them, take the one you prefer and do not bother us with them." We will get into more of a welfare mess if Congress has no more interest in protecting the taxpayers than that.

That is not the proposal offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware, and it is not the proposal the Senator from Arizona proposed.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. ROTH. I would like to point out that in the Roth-Byrd amendment it very explicitly states that this legislation is not to be construed as a commitment on the part of Congress to establish any particular plan. The basic purpose of my amendment is to test the various approaches so that Congress can then intelligently determine what the best approach is.

Of course, we have three different proposals before us: the so-called Ribicoff proposal, H.R. 1, and the workfare plan of the Committee on Finance. To me it would be completely inconsistent to try to give authority to the executive branch to put any one of the plans into effect. Instead, what will happen is that both HEW and GAO will report on a regular basis to the Ways and Means Committee in the House and the Committee on Finance in the Senate on, one, how they intend to test, and, two, every 6 months the results of the tests up to that time.

I strongly agree with those who said that the executive branch should be required to come back here and make recommendations based on these tests, and that is the time when Congress should decide what is the soundest approach.

I might also point out that the junior Senator from Delaware was a Member of the House of Representatives when this legislation was first considered. In April 1970 he proposed in the House that the President's program should be tested. It was my feeling at that time that the existing tests were inadequate and that Congress should authorize a major pilot program before taking any definitive action. I so proposed on the floor of the House.

I agree that we find ourselves not much further along the road at this time despite the need for welfare reform. I believe the need for testing is as great today as it was in 1970.

Perhaps one advantage is that we do have three approaches; the Ribicoff approach which differs from H.R. 1 in detail and we have the workfare program which very substantially differs from H.R. 1. So we have the advantage of testing three different approaches. I think this is sound, but as I stated earlier, it would be a mistake to let the executive branch have the authority to establish any one of the three plans without returning to Congress. After all, sound testing may show it desirable to adopt a combination of ideas from these plans or some of them.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I certainly agree with the able Senator from Delaware. I cannot conceive, frankly, how the House of Representatives twice passed H.R. 1. It is just unbelievable to me that the House could have passed that legislation.

I want at this time to pay tribute to the members of the Senate Finance Committee. Had it not been for the members of that committee, this legislation probably would have been enacted several years ago, and as a result of that, the welfare costs would have skyrocketed and it would have doubled the number of people drawing public assistance.

The able chairman of the committee and the ranking Republican member of the committee, the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) both were convinced, and their colleagues on the committee subsequently became convinced, that a workfare program could be developed and could be brought to the floor of the Senate. The committee did just that.

I favor the concept of the workfare program. I think it is the appropriate concept for the Congress to consider. As I said earlier, there are some aspect of it that I have some doubts about. I am not completely clear as to the cost. For that reason, I think that it, along with the other two programs, should undergo a pilot test, prior to being put into execution.

I think the best argument for the proposal of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) has been given by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare himself. The best argument was in three words which were his official words in his original statement to the Finance Committee, that this proposal is "revolutionary and expensive."

Is it not logical that before the Congress embarks on a program which its chief proponent says is "revolutionary and expensive," we should know more about it, we should know how it is going to work in practice, we should have the benefit of a test, and then let Congress decide which aspects of it will be helpful and which aspects should not be approved.

The American people are very sensible, intelligent people. Besides that, they are very compassionate people.

The American people want to help those in need, and every Member of the Senate wants to help those in need; but I think that the American people have seen such abuses of the welfare programs throughout our Nation that they expect the Congress to take some action to correct those.

So far as the Senator from Virginia is concerned, I favor welfare reform. But I want to emphasize that the proposals before us are not welfare reform. At least two of the three proposals are welfare expansion, doubling the number of people drawing public assistance. I do not call that welfare reform.

Somewhere along the line some consideration has got to be given to the wage earners of this Nation, those who, by the sweat of their brow, earn the taxes to pay for what we in Congress spend.

H.R. 1 is a proposal lacking in work incentive, very costly, $5 billion more than the present program. It would substantially increase the number of people drawing public assistance, and it would write into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income. Once you write that principle into law, then it is Katie-bar-the-door. There is no stopping then.

The able senior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), chairman of the committee, put into the RECORD Saturday figures that I think the American people should acquaint themselves with.

I refer to page S16411 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 30, 1972, in which the Senator from Louisiana points out that if we approve the $3,000 proposed in the Ribicoff Amendment No. 559, there would be 40 million people on welfare.

If we went to the proposal of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), which is $4,000, the poverty level, there would be 81 million people on welfare. If we went to the proposal of the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) for $6,500, there would be 104 million people on welfare.

Of course, when we deal with any of those figures, whether it be 40 million or 81 million or 104 million, it is utterly fantastic and could not be supported by the Federal Treasury or by the taxpayers of this Nation.

So I think the more the people understand these proposals—that is why I want to see some discussion of this matter in the Congress—the more the American people understand H.R. 1, the more the American people understand what a guaranteed annual income means over a period of time, the more determined they will be that there shall be no such program.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. LONG. The Senator well knows that it takes a certain amount of political courage for a Senator to risk being misunderstood by even opposing the family assistance plan as advocated by the President of the United States. People are led to believe that if a Republican President would recommend it, it must mean it is somewhat moderate or conservative in nature. So with a Republican President recommending it, the public would be led to think that it could not have the dire results that some of us fear.

I was perhaps the strongest welfare advocate in the Senate, advocating more welfare benefits than any Member in this body, at the time President Nixon served as a Senator.

My views have not changed with regard to the problem, but I would point out that when we increase the number of people on welfare from 15 million even to 26 million, which would result from the family assistance plan being enacted, we add 11 million more people to the welfare rolls.

If Senators are afraid now to vote against ever-increasing welfare expenditures and against expanding welfare rolls, they will be far more fearful and much more subject to intimidation when there are 26 million people on those rolls than when there are 15 million.

Furthermore, no one can logically argue that we should guarantee an annual income to people and then advocate a level of income which would be below the poverty level. That is almost axiomatic—so much so that the Senator from Connecticut has advocated proposals that would move the guarantee on up to the poverty level. Even the administration, in its press coverage in initiating H.R. 1, apologized, in effect for the low level of benefits and said that in due course it ought to go up to the poverty level, which would be $4,000, and that the only reason they were not advocating that was that to do so would greatly increase the cost, as indeed it would.

Now, S. 2747, introduced by the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) embodies that position, which has compelling logic; that is, that if we are going to have a guaranteed income, we ought to guarantee people an amount equal to the poverty level. That is the Harris bill, and this is the official HEW estimate for the number of people we would then have on the welfare rolls: 81 million.

If Senators have difficulty mustering the political courage to vote against something they think is unsound when we have 15 million people on the welfare rolls, how much more difficult are they going to find it to vote against an unsound proposal to increase welfare benefits when we have 81 million on the welfare rolls? I would venture to say it would be virtual political suicide, unless an overwhelming taxpayer revolt should sweep the country, to vote out all those who had taken us that far down the road.

I would assume, if Congress had gone that far, Senators would feel constrained to go along with it as the pressure rolls along. The Senator knows how constituents react: they tend to look at the one vote most important to them and ignore all the others. And a Senator would hardly wish to have 81 million people against him.

Then we have the proposal of the National Welfare Rights Organization, the bill introduced by the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), S. 2372. The estimate on that is that it would put 104 million people on the welfare rolls.

That is the position that mustered the votes of one-third of the Democratic National Convention at Miami. So a Senator can see how, when we have all these pressure groups being built up, that we would have enormous numbers of working poor who would want to be on the welfare rolls.

I say we can help them most, as we do in this bill, by providing what amounts to tax relief for them, by helping them increase their income in the most dignified possible way by in effect refunding some of the taxes collected on their behalf, or by providing some type of tax incentives for these poor people, or incentives to bring their income up if they are in a low paying job. Those are ways that preserve the dignity of the people. But as the Senator from Virginia well knows, those who organized the National Welfare Rights Group and those associated with them feel that the way to solve the problem is to make the low-income working persons a part of the welfare group and put them all under the same program.

I can tell the Senator—and I am positive I am right about this—that low-income working persons would prefer that we help them in a way that would preserve their dignity, by giving them what amounts to a tax cut, raising the minimum wage, or providing some supplement or some subsidy to add to what they can earn, and not by putting them on the welfare and then reducing their payments as they increase their work effort.

There is no doubt in my mind that that would tend to set up the wrong incentives. I am not saying this just about the Ribicoff amendment; the same is true of the family assistance plan, and that is one of the things wrong about the welfare system now which we ought to be changing rather than doing more of it. It would give them the incentive, in taking a job, for example, as is happening today in too many cases, for saying, "I will take the job if you pay me in cash, with no records kept." This can happen in rural areas, and in urban areas also, that when one seeks to find an employee to work on a short-term basis, he is frequently confronted with the proposition to pay in cash, with no records kept, for the simple reason that the person is drawing welfare money and does not want a reduction in his welfare check.

Whether you have a welfare system on the basis that they lose 67 cents out of every dollar they earn, or whether you use the Ribicoff feature of a reduction of 60 cents on each dollar they earn, there will still be an enormous pressure upon people not to report their earnings, and the pressure will be on the employers to go along with the sort of arrangement where they hire these people and pay them in cash without reporting the earnings.

To make the enforcement of such a program effective, we might need a million investigators. And then the people will complain that the welfare workers are coming around harassing them; and they will be insulting the welfare workers and the social workers because they do not want them to find out about their earnings, knowing that if they do, 60 percent of what they earn will be taken away from them.

I say it is far better to follow the approach of just giving them back their social security tax money. Then low-income working persons will be getting as much through this social security tax refund mechanism as they would have been getting if they had the welfare benefits. Is it not a far better approach to give a working man the equivalent of a tax cut to increase his income, rather than to put him on welfare, when he wants to be proud and self-reliant?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think it is, and I think it is also better to guarantee job opportunities than it is to guarantee an annual income to individuals whether they work or whether they refuse to work.

Mr. LONG. Well, at least if you guarantee the job opportunity you solve one problem, and that is a problem that is becoming altogether too prevalent, at least in Louisiana: that people get on the rolls more times than once. At least you know, if you guarantee him an employment opportunity, he cannot be working on two jobs at two places at the same time. That is something you cannot say with any certainty or any assurance when you are talking about just a check.

We would like to think of everyone as being completely honest, but when we make it so easy for people to get on those rolls, and it becomes so prevalent, and the accepted thing, where it is no longer a matter that a person feels reticent to apply for, but is led to believe it is his right, a right that everyone is entitled to, to draw this income without working, and a right not to work and to live on the taxpayer without working, once you establish that right in the minds of people and it becomes prevalent, I fear for the future of this country, because at some point we are going to have to find the power to turn it around and make it head the other way, with tens of millions of people, perhaps 70 or 80 million people, conducting marches and protests here in the Nation's Capital to try to keep us from bringing this thing back under control. If we cannot do that, it just means an end to this form of Government, because that is the only way we will ever get back out of that trap. When we have more people on the taking down end and being supported by the Government than we have supporting the Government, when we get to that point, the only way I see ever to get out of the trap is for the whole Government to come down like a house of cards and start over again.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. And if we write into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income, as the Senator from Louisiana has pointed out, how can we, as a matter of principle and as a matter of conscience, make the figure less than the poverty level?

If we are going to write into law that the American Government has the obligation to provide a guaranteed annual income, then it seems to me we cannot appropriately make it less than the poverty level. If we put it at the poverty level as it is today, as the Senator from Louisiana has pointed out, it would put 81 million persons on the public assistance rolls.

Mr. LONG. Those assumptions, of course, do not take into account what people do when they react to a program such as this. For example, those assumptions are based on what people are earning now. But they do not take into account what happens when these enormous subsidies are placed on not marrying.

For example, the problem that exists in many areas is not so much that a father being encouraged to leave his family so they can go on the welfare rolls. The problem is that the family units are not forming in the first place. The children are being born out of wedlock. We are paying welfare money to bring that about, and it would be much worse if we were to adopt the family assistance plan or the Ribicoff amendment.

For example, here is an illustration that I am going to give later, and I have given illustrations such as this before. If a mother in New York City has 3 children today and she is not married to the father of those children—she sees him from time to time; he could spend every night in the apartment and get by with it, without being married—if the father is earning $7,000, the mother can be receiving $4,000 in welfare payments, plus $1,100 in public housing benefits, plus $900 value for medicaid, which means a gross family income of $13,000.

Suppose the father marries the mother. Then all they get is the $7,000 that the father can earn. That is how it would work under the Ribicoff amendment as well. That means that they get a $6,000 cash advantage for not marrying.

So the Government is subsidizing ille-gitimacy and is giving a tremendous bonus to people for not marrying, and for children being born out of wedlock.

That would be continued under this plan, except that more money would be paid for not marrying. For example, in the State of Louisiana, where payments would be lower because they are lower today, a father earning $5,000 could be seeing the mother of his three children, who is drawing $2,600 in welfare, as often as he wished. The value of the medicaid benefits would be $250, or a total cash income, cash plus benefits, worth $7,850. If he married the mother, they would not get the $2,600 and would not get the $250. So in Louisiana, under this plan, the bonus for not marrying would be $2,850, more than a 50-percent increase in income for not marrying.

As this thing moves on up and you bring the level up, you would wind up having more people on the taking down end than you would have on the putting up end, and that does not even begin to take into account all the people who would decline to marry because it would be so lucrative to have the children born out of wedlock.

So when we take those human factors into account, we are not talking about having less people but perhaps twice as many people on the taking down end as would be on the putting up end. How long could Government support that kind of abuse?

Frankly, I say to the Senator that when we get to where we have 70 million people on the welfare rolls, someone will have to have the courage to try to turn the whole thing around; and I suspect that there would be virtually a revolution in this country if one tried to do it. The only way that could be restored, where the Government could be solvent and could stay in operation, would be for the whole government to come down. Of course, that is something the Senator and I would like to avoid.

I came here as an old share-the-wealth man, and I am still for the share-the-wealth idea. If I could cast the deciding vote for it, I would be happy to do so, to establish everybody with his own home, his own automobile, furniture, some conveniences, and a lot of other things, and tax those best able to pay in order to do it.

But that would just be a one-shot proposition; and after the Nation was over the shock of it, things would tend to settle back to normal. However, under the pending proposal, things would keep getting worse and worse, until the Government simply came to an end.

I do not relish the position of looking like a reactionary, a conservative. I want to do everything that can be done to help the poor; but I want to do it in ways in which they will be helped to help themselves, and ways in which they will be encouraged to do the right things, the things that are good for them and for society. I do not want to do it in ways that encourage them to do all the wrong things.

I regret to say that when I first read of the family assistance plan, I thought I could support it enthusiastically. I went down and told the President what I have told the Senator on other occasions, that I thought just one little thing ought to be straightened out about it: These people ought to be paid for working rather than for not working. That is the one thing we never could get straightened out, and that is what threatens to destroy this country if we enact H.R. 1 as suggested or if we adopt the Ribicoff amendment, which takes us a few steps on down the road farther than H.R. 1 would take us. That is what I find so upsetting, to such an extent that I would be willing to vote for something that cost as much as the Senator is talking about, provided it could be said that that was going to be the end of it and that was going to turn us around and head us in the other direction.

Can the Senator tell us how anybody can expect to put this guaranteed income into effect and expect to keep it under the poverty level?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. It cannot be done. It will be a political football in every campaign. Every candidate will say, "It's now $3,000. You elect me, and I'll make it $3,600." His opponent will say, "$4,000." In the next campaign, they will start from that point and go on.

Mr. LONG. The last time I heard the National Welfare Rights Organization testify on the bill, directly and explicitly directing their testimony to H.R. 1, they were asking us to vote the bill down. Why? Because they said it did not pay enough. It is going to put another 11 million people on the welfare rolls. That would be all right with them. But they were against the bill even though it would cost approximately $5 billion more than the present law.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Last year, their slogan was "$5,400 or Fight." This year, they have gone up to $6,500—in just 1 year.

Mr. LONG. When they came here and testified at a hearing, they were asking me to vote the bill down, to defeat it, because it did not pay enough.

How anyone can expect to put this guaranteed income approach into effect for these families and have control of it thereafter, I cannot understand it, when even the people who would benefit from it start out by saying it is not enough, and the people who sponsor it say it is not enough and apologize for the low figure.

How can you hope to hold the cost down when you start on that basis and when you build this great power structure? Those who want to build the National Welfare Rights Organization would like to have more members, and they would like to include all the low-income working persons in their movement. These working people are a different sort from those persons who have never worked at all.

The working persons are reluctant to participate in some arrangement whereby they would become a part of the welfare crowd, yet that is what is being sought by this legislation, to make them, against their will and their better judgment, a part of the welfare crowd.

Has the Senator been requested by any working poor man to vote for this, so that he can be added to the welfare rolls?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No, but I have tested out the sentiment in the State of Virginia quite a bit. I cannot say that Virginia is necessarily typical of the entire United States, but I find that sentiment in Virginia is strongly opposed to the principle of a guaranteed annual income.

The people of Virginia are sensible and sound-thinking people and they know what that would lead to.

I think that the best comment on this legislation other than Secretary Richardson's assertion that it is revolutionary and expensive—which is certainly an accurate statement—is another accurate statement by Dr. Moynihan, one of the chief architects:

> The bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

Here is a man who favors it. He is the foremost advocate, he and Secretary Richardson.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, did I understand the Senator from Virginia correctly to say that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare said this would provide a guaranteed income, deserving or not?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No, not the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare but Dr. Moynihan.

Mr. LONG. Dr. Moynihan.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Dr. Moynihan, who lobbied this thing from the White House. He was one of the chief proponents of it.

Here is what he said, and I read it again: It appears on page 1950 of the committee hearings:

> The bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

That is Dr. Moynihan's appraisal of his own bill and I concur in that appraisal.

Mr. LONG. I have here a table on the House bill prepared by the Department of HEW. According to this table, in Louisiana, where they have estimated the number of recipients for 1973 at 473,000, that that number is to be increased to 823,000. Imagine that. Our State has about 3,800,000 people in it which has on occasion been referred to as the welfare State because we have a liberal welfare program there, and sometimes the people in the State refer to Louisiana as a welfare State because we have so many liberal welfare benefits, which members of my family have sponsored and I have worked on. We have advocated and been more liberal on welfare proposals than almost any other State in the Union—at one time we had more people on old-age assistance rolls than in New York, even though New York has several times the population Louisiana has.

Yet I am not aware that any of these 400,000 proposed additional beneficiaries are asking to be put on the welfare rolls. I assume the majority of them are the working poor.

I subscribe to the idea that low-income working persons are being taxed too heavily and I would like to help them, but I would much prefer to give them Louisiana's share of that money through what is in effect a tax reduction.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. We are not going to get tax reduction or help the working poor by increasing the cost of government by the tremendous figure it would have to be increased by.

Mr. LONG. So far as low-income working persons are concerned, they might as well get ready, because they are going to be in for a big tax increase if a program like this amendment goes into effect. The Senator knows that as well as I do.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. It is bound to be.

Mr. LONG. We cannot continue to burden the Government with deficits, especially the one it has now, and then add $70 billion to it. But that is where we are headed if we undertake to have a guaranteed income for not working.

I completely subscribe to the Senator's position that we cannot afford to start this Nation down that path. I am not so upset about the cost as I am about the fact that we are heading in the wrong direction.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. It would be absolutely in the wrong direction.

Mr. LONG. And that when we head down that path, we may not be able to get it turned around and head in the right direction. It might be irreversible until such time as the whole Government goes under.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is why we should be aware of what is going on, whether it be the H.R. 1 program, the Ribicoff program, the Harris program, or the McGovern program. Any of those programs are tremendously costly. I sort of think of along this line, that H.R. 1 says we will give a Chevrolet to everybody; then the Ribicoff proposal would say, "No, we have got to do better than that, we will give them a Buick"; and then the Harris program comes along and says, "No, we have got to do better than that, we will give them a Cadillac"; and then the McGovern program comes along and says, "No, that is not good enough, we must give them a Rolls Royce."

Mr. RIBICOFF. What does Senator LONG want to give them?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. He can speak for himself.

Mr. LONG. I want to give them a job. [Laughter.]

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am curious, because Senator LONG's proposal is not only more expensive than my proposal as modified, and not only more expensive than the Nixon proposal, but it also includes many more people than either the Nixon or the Ribicoff proposals. So, as I listen to these great giveaways that everyone is being charged with, I am curious: What is the distinguished chairman giving away?

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator from Virginia yield at that point?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. LONG. When the Senator says my proposition would cost more than what he has proposed, he is using the HEW figures. The Senator knows, as I do, that when HEW came up with its estimate of what the original family assistance plan would cost for the guaranteed income scheme, they asked Robert Myers, the best regarded actuary that has served in HEW, in my judgment, and in the judgment of the business community who should know about it, as to what he thought it would cost. He estimated $3 billion more than they estimated. They were estimating about $5 billion, and it looked to him, he said, as thought it would cost $8 billion. In other words, they estimated it on the low side, even though their best actuary thought the cost estimate was too low. Frankly, every welfare administratator I discussed it with told me that was a low estimate, which is what we certainly could expect from HEW.

Then they took what we suggested in terms of a work program and estimated that $3 billion on the high side. The committee proceeded to hire the very same man, Robert Myers, and he gave us his estimate. His estimate at the time was $4.3 billion for workfare, billions less than the HEW estimate. We know how HEW always puts their costs low when they want to sell us a program.

When they first brought in the social services fiasco, they said it would cost $40 million a year, and it wound up threatening to cost over $4 billion a year, or 100 times what they estimated it would cost. When they brought in the medicaid program, they said it would cost $200 million a year, and it is costing over $3 billion, about 15 times what the estimated cost was.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. $4.5 billion, according to Secretary Richardson's own testimony.

Mr. LONG. Which puts it about 22 times what the estimate was that it would cost. So we know how, in that Department, they have a way of putting a low cost estimate on something that they are for, and they put a ridiculously high cost estimate on something they are against. And with medicaid, they estimate the cost to be 1 to 15. And with the social services program, they understimated that 1 to 100. We can take that into account and study it. The man we thought would be the best man to study it and give us an estimate estimated the cost at $2 billion less than the Ribicoff proposal.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the HEW estimates have proven at times to be highly inaccurate in the past. I know of no reason why we should accept their figures on this proposal. The Senate Finance Committee thought it would be wise and appropriate to go outside of the Government and get an expert to analyze it and give us an estimate.

I am frankly not clear in my mind what this program would cost. That was one reason that I wanted to pilot it out before I supported it, even though I support the committee concept.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I am sure that contained in the figures cited by the distinguished chairman of the committee are other factors.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am looking at an estimate that has to do with amendment No. 1614, the $2,600 level. And our estimate is $6.8 billion more than present law.

We estimate that the committee proposal would be $4.3 billion more than present law. In both cases we are not estimating the cost for the aged, the blind, and the disabled. We are only looking at the cost for families.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I think for the purpose of the record, whether right or wrong, I should read at this time the full year cost of payment of services. These figures have been supplied by HEW. Under the current law, it is $12.1 billion. H.R. 1 is $15.4 billion.

Under my proposal of $2,600, it is $16.4 billion. And may I point out that it includes public service jobs.

Under the Finance Committee proposal, it would be $19.5 billion.

We should also have some figures on the President's proposal, which contemplates 19 million people involved. My proposal contemplates 24 billion people involved.

Then the conservative Finance Committee proposal includes 30 million people.

Mr. President, I think for the purpose of the record that we ought to have those figures in the RECORD at this time. And I ask unanimous consent that the full year cost for payments of services compiled by HEW be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, before the Senator from Connecticut sends those figures to the desk, would he withhold that so that I could query him about one or two matters?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes. However, I think it should be pointed out, too, that on our program 14 million are people who are actually working today. They are people who are not on welfare. These people are trying to keep body and soul together, whether they are receiving $2,000 or $2,200. They are not on welfare. These are people who are working, and I am trying to bring them in to make sure they are not worse off working than they would be on welfare.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, after I have yielded to the Senator from Louisiana, I would like to query the Senator from Connecticut about this matter, because these figures seem different than the figures that Secretary Richardson put in the RECORD.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am sure the figures the Senator refers to make the same mistake with regard to the Ribicoff proposal that they do with regard to ours. HEW estimates that though they are giving the money away for nothing, yet a great number of people will not come in and ask for it. But as far as our workfare program is concerned, they proceed to give estimates that would claim that when people are offered opportunities to take Government jobs, everybody who is eligible will come in and ask for a low-paying Government job. They assume that people will break the doors down to ask for those jobs.

How ridiculous can we get? Can we get so ridiculous as to assume that if we are going to give someone $2,400 for doing nothing and mail him a check every month, that great numbers of people will not apply—however, if we ask them to work for the $2,400, although all over the country there are jobs that pay more and they do not take them, nevertheless everyone eligible will come charging in here to take a job and that even those who have jobs will quit those jobs to go to work for the Government?

What kind of sense does that make?

They say that everyone will come in to work for the Government, but they will not take the money if we just mail them a check for doing nothing.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, in view of what the chairman has stated, I think he has great responsibility, as do all Senators who serve on the Finance Committe. We constantly come before the Senate with proposals based on estimates and figures that are supplied by HEW. If the figures supplied by HEW are inaccurate, then we on the Finance Committee are begging our colleagues and the country to proceed to pass legislation based on inaccurate figures. That is a travesty on our responsibility as Senators.

How do we overcome this situation if we cannot rely upon a department of the executive branch? How do we make up our minds whether to pass the legislation if we do not know the basis upon which we ourselves are acting and asking our colleagues to follow our recommendations.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Connecticut raises a good point. Let us get at the figures he mentioned a moment ago. Would the Senator give us the date of the letter or memorandum that he has?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The figures here were obtained within the last 4 weeks. They were obtained by my assistant, Mr. Jeff Peterson in consultaiton with the staff of HEW.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. They deal with fiscal 1973?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Fiscal 1974, because the plan does not go into effect until then. We are dealing with figures that go into effect, as the Senator will recall, on January 1, 1974.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, would the Senator give the figure for the cost of H.R. 1?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The cost of H.R. 1 is $15.4 billion.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is for fiscal 1974?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is for fiscal 1974.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, does that include medicaid?

Mr. RIBICOFF. It does not. May I read what it includes. It includes payments to families, $6.2 billion; payments to adults, $4.6 billion; payments for food stamps, $2.2 billion; hold harmless fiscal relief, $1.1 billion; child care, $0.9 billion; training, $0.5 billion; training proposed, $0.8 billion; new service jobs, $0.1 billion; administration, $1.1 billion; impact of other programs, minus $1.1 billion; for a grand total of $16.4 billion.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is the total cost of welfare under H.R. 1?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Under current law, the total cost would be $12.1 billion, under the current law as it now stands.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Under the current law, on page 287 of the committee report, the Secretary gives the cost for fiscal year 1972 at $10 billion for welfare, plus $3.4 billion for medicaid.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I would say that this is 1972. That would be almost another 2 years. And we know that the welfare rolls have gone up astronomically. This is to be done in 1974. My hunch is that for 1974, we will probably find that welfare costs will exceed $12.1 billion if it keeps going up the way it has in the last 2 years.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, if the Department of HEW does not tighten up and do the job it is supposed to do, and if it is not willing to check out these matters and do a little about some of these welfare situations, costs will certainly go up.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the Senator in his estimate has included the cost for the aged, the blind, and the disabled.

In order to compare the Ribicoff amendment with the committee proposal, the amount for the aged, blind, and disabled should be subtracted from that figure and then it would put the two on a comparable basis.

I would point out that the Senator from Connecticut himself felt we should not take these HEW estimates because of our disappointment on medicaid, social services, and things of that sort. He suggested we employ a competent actuary, and I am sure he would agree that Robert Myers is as good an actuary as anyone in the Senate might suggest.

The Senator will see at pages 561 through 579 of the committee report the estimate of Robert Myers, hired by the Committee on Finance, on the basis of which he estimated HEW's of their own proposal was altogether too low by about $2 billion and that their estimate of the committee proposal was on the high side by even more.

I do not see any point in burdening the RECORD, but I would urge the Senate to look at those figures. They appear in the committee report at page 561 and the pages thereafter.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wish to respond to one point my distinguished chairman raised. He raises the question about the adult categories. He is correct, but if we eliminate payments to adults they would have to be eliminated across the board. H.R. 1 would have $4.6 billion deducted, my proposal would have $4.6 billion deducted, and the Finance Committee bill would have deducted $4.2 billion. That would be about equal all the way across the board and that would be a subtract from the set of overall figures.

But the chairman is correct that during discussions in the Committee on Finance the chairman and I see eye to eye on many things and in many things on the floor of the Senate.

I raise this question with our chairman because we have this delay and we are going to be forced to come to grips with it when we come back in the next Congress. If we have figures none of us can rely on, if we ask for information that none of us receive, and if we are asked to make judgments and those judgments are to be relied on, we have a duty to make sure our sources are independent.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Is that not why the Committee on Finance, under the leadership of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), went outside of Government to get an expert who would be objective to give us an estimate of what the program would cost? That is why we went outside of Government.

Mr. RIBICOFF. What is going to be necessary in the future for all of us—and I think the chairman will recognize—the recommendation came from me originally—in another amendment of mine to H.R. 1—to get an independent expert such as GAO to analyze the cost of legislative proposals. If we are going to be faced with this in health reform proposals and trade proposals, when we sit down in committee we should have a confrontation, whether in public or in private session, between the department actuaries and our independent actuaries so that we can come to an independent conclusion.

As the chairman realizes, as well as the Senator from Virginia, I have the highest regard and respect for every member of the Committee on Finance, even though I may disagree with them philosophically. We are all trying to do the best job we can within the scope of our differing philosophies. But we should be able to approach the problem with an accurate set of figures and statistics. Otherwise, we are operating in the dark in trying to discuss matters or come to a definitive conclusion.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think the Senator is correct and I feel that the evidence over a period of years is that one cannot rely too heavily on the estimate submitted by the Department of HEW on programs they want Congress to enact, in the same way we cannot rely too heavily in the Committee on Armed Services on estimates submitted by the Department of Defense.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Which leads me to believe that we have a very definite responsibility to have an agency under control of the legislative branch that can compete with the Office of Management and Budget and the different departments—to ride herd for us on the figures we get. And the GAO, which is the agency of this body, should be given the authority, staff, and the auditors and accountants made available to the chairman and members of our respective committees to give us the facts and figures, as analyzed by them, the executive branch. Otherwise we are flying blind with very expensive and important programs and unable to make the judgments which we have a responsibility to make.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Regardless of what the precise figures may be, I think all of us will agree that H.R. 1 is what its chief opponent, Secretary Richardson, declared it to be: Revolutionary and expensive.

I think all of us will agree, including the able author, that the Ribicoff amendment also is an expensive program.

Mr. RIBICOFF. It is, and also the Long proposal is an expensive program. At least the Senator from Virginia has something that neither the chairman nor I have, in that he is consistently against all of them. The only person who is consistent is the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am consistent against——

Mr. RIBICOFF. All of them.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am consistent against the high cost of programs and against a Government-guaranteed annual income. I am consistent against programs which, in my judgment, are too costly for the American people.

I am not against welfare reform. I am not against welfare for those people who need it.

I am against programs which this body consistently passes and which the House passes, and that the administration recommends, huge and new spending programs, because in many cases—I am not speaking of the Senator from Connecticut in this case—but in many cases it seems good politics to do so.

I favor the concept of the Long proposal, and if I can get my mind clear as to the cost of it I would support it, but because I cannot get my mind clear on the cost, I think it should be pilot tested, the same as I feel about the Richardson program and the expanded HEW program advocated by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wonder if I may ask the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Virginia a question. Do the Senator from Louisiana and the Senator from Virginia have any idea what the administration's game plan is? They always use game plans down at the White House. What is it for this legislation, H.R. 1, and for welfare reform?

I know what my game plan is. As far as I am concerned, if the administration believes that if my proposal, which I had come to an understanding on with the administration, fails that I will then vote for H.R. 1, I want to tell my colleagues that they could not be more mistaken. I think their program is so bad and so defective that if the program I have advocated, after months of work with the administration, does not pass in this body and a substitute is then put onto the Senator from Virginia's amendment encompassing H.R. 1, I will vote against H.R. 1, as the administration contemplates in title IV, and try to use whatever influence I may have on this floor to have other Senators vote against H.R. 1.

So if the administration's game plan is to let the Ribicoff proposal be defeated and then feel that the supporters of the Ribicoff proposal will then support title IV as in House-passed H.R. 1, I think they are sadly mistaken. If that is their game plan, I want to announce now that that does not happen to be mine.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I hope the Senate will have an opportunity to vote on the Ribicoff proposal, which is now the pending business. I personally will vote against it, but I hope the Senate will have the opportunity to express itself—and then, from what I read in the newspapers, the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT) will offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and myself, namely, H.R. 1.

I hope that is done so that the Senate can express itself on both of these proposals.

I want to see how many Senators here really believe this country should embark on the principle of a guaranteed annual income. I want to see how many Senators will vote for H.R. 1 which Dr. Moynihan, one of the chief architects and one of the strongest proponents of this proposal—sums up in these words:

> This bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

I would like to see the Senate have an opportunity to vote on H.R. 1. Let each Member of the Senate record himself "yea" or "nay" as to whether he wants a program that provides a "minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not."

We will have an opportunity to vote on the proposal offered by the Senator from Connecticut, which is an expanded form, in my judgment, of H.R. 1, and I hope we shall have an opportunity to vote on H.R. 1.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I just want to clear up some of the talk on this matter. I think it is important to point out that when the committee employed Mr. Myers to make this study, he gave us a memorandum, to which I have referred—and I would urge Senators to look at it—which indicated that, basically, where he found fault with the administration is that they failed to do what they have repeatedly failed to do when they want something enacted by Congress—to take into account how people react when the law is changed. For example, when they gave us an estimate that was wrong by 15 to 1—an estimate of $200 million for medicaid which next year will cost $4.5 billion—they assumed that the States, even though the law provided for Federal matching, anywhere from 50 to 83 percent, would not put up any more money, that they would continue to put up the same amount of money that they had been putting up.

Anyone in his right mind would assume that if the Federal Government was going to pay half the cost, a State would shift money from some programs where it was not getting Federal matching money to a program that was. The administration did the same thing with reference to social services. They assumed that where there was a 3-to-1 Federal matching, the States would not put up that money and that they would not shut down programs so that they could get those 3-to-1 matching funds, as they did with social services. The result was that the program ended up much more expensive than it was estimated it would.

In this case they assumed that under the family assistance plan, when so many people would be made eligible, many of those people would fail to ask for the money, even though they would be eligible, and that they would not change their way of doing business. Let us assume that a family would get $2,600 for doing nothing and that the man would have his income drastically reduced if he went to work so that, let us say, after the first $60 monthly he would lose 67 cents of every dollar he made off his welfare check. For example, under H.R. 1 the way it passed the House, if a man worked half time in many States he would have more income than if he worked full time. The administration assumed he would not change his ways when he could make more money working half time than if he worked full time. They did not take into account human tendencies. The administration made the same mistake in the case of medicaid and social services.

When they looked at the program in which a person would be offered a low-paying job, the administration assumed that everybody eligible would come in and get work, even though there are want ads for jobs in the community paying more than that. They assumed that people would ask for Government jobs even though the people had to quit the jobs they had. They assumed that people would quit a job if they would make 5 cents more on a Government job than on the job they had.

It just shows that for anything the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare wants adopted, they put a low estimate on it. If they do not want it adopted, they will put a high estimate on it. That is the most irresponsible Department in Government in that respect.

I read from Robert Myers' memorandum to the Finance Committee, reprinted on page 563 of the committee report on the bill:

> In summary, I believe that the HEW estimates for FAP are significant understatements of cost, despite the assertions that they are "conservative." On the very surface, it is just not reasonable that such an expansion of the number of welfare recipients will result in so little an increase in cost.

This estimate is that it would cost $2 billion more than the HEW estimate. He also estimated that the HEW workfare cost estimate is on the high side.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, following the suggestion of the able Senator from Connecticut, I have drafted a letter to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and I would appreciate it if the Senator from Connecticut would listen as I read this, to see if it is in line with the suggestion he threw out earlier:

> MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I would be most appreciative if you would provide me, at the earliest possible time, with the following information: 1, the amount of expenditures in FY 1970, 1971, and 1972 in support of and in anticipation of the passage of the Family Assistance Program.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And would the Senator add the OFF program as well?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I beg the Senator's pardon?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Opportunity for families. That should be in there, too.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. And opportunity for families.

> 2. The number of employees in each year whose duties are in support of and in anticipation of the passage of the Family Assistance Program.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And OFF.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. And:

> 3. The number of employees at this date whose duties are in support of and in anticipation of the passage of the Family Assistance Program, and the payroll cost of those employees on a monthly basis.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And OFF.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Including OFF.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Including OFF in each one of the three categories.

I would say a similar letter should also go to the Secretary of Labor, because, as the Senator realizes, the Labor Department is deeply involved in welfare reform, and they, too, have had a considerable staff working on these programs. So a letter should go to the Secretary of HEW, and a similar letter to the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator from Virginia will endeavor to have a letter hand-delivered to the Secretary of HEW and the Secretary of Labor today, with the hope that a prompt reply could be received for the consideration of the Senate. I do hope we would not have the length of time involved in getting this information that the able Senator from Connecticut encountered in trying to get some information on the number of programs a few months ago; as I recall, it took some 4 to 6 months, was it not?

Mr. RIBICOFF. As the Senator knows, they have never really given the Committee on Finance a priority listing. I think we were interested in getting a priority listing as to how they figured, themselves, what the order of priority of that list was, which they have never given to us, and I want to say to the Senator from Virginia that I wish him a lot of luck in getting replies to those letters.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I appreciate the comment of the Senator from Connecticut. We will have this hand-delivered today, and I shall attempt to keep the Senate advised as to progress.

Mr. President, I want to conclude my remarks today in opposing the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) that is the pending business.

I support the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH). It seems to me that it is a sound proposal. What it does is say that before any of these three new programs that have been suggested will be put into effect, pilot tests should be run by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and then HEW shall report back to Congress the results of those tests, and Congress at that point would be in a position to make a decision as to which direction it wanted to go.

In connection with the pending amendment—the one offered by the Senator from Connecticut—I want to read into the record again the statement by Dr. Moynihan in his support of H.R. 1. The Ribicoff proposal, while not identical, is similar in nature. The Ribicoff proposal is, I think it would be fair to say, an expanded and more costly version of H.R. 1.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I hope he is not attributing to me or assuming the adoption by me of the words of Dr. Moynihan.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No, I most certainly do not.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I just want to make that clear. I can make my own arguments why I think my proposal is good, but that does not necessarily mean that my proposal is the Moynihan proposal, or the Moynihan philosophy.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No, I do not wish to imply that and do not imply that. The Moynihan statement is in reference to H.R. 1, and this is what Dr. Moynihan, one of the chief architects of the proposal and one of the foremost advocates of H.R. 1, said about it:

> The bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

That is Dr. Moynihan's statement in arguing in behalf of the family assistance plan, H.R. 1.

The other very pertinent comment or official statement that I want to conclude with is the three words which Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Elliot Richardson used to describe H.R. 1, the family assistance plan. He said that this plan is "revolutionary and expensive."

Mr. President, it is revolutionary. It is expensive. I agree thoroughly with that comment by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, that H.R. 1 is "revolutionary and expensive." That is why I think that before Congress goes into a new program which its author terms "revolutionary and expensive," we should follow the suggestion and adopt the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Delaware and cosponsored by the senior Senator from Virginia, to have pilot projects on the three major pieces of legislation in the welfare field; namely, H.R. 1, the Ribicoff proposal, and the Finance Committee proposal dealing with workfare—a proposal that seeks, instead of a guaranteed annual income, guaranteed job opportunities.

I commend the able and distinguished Senator from Delaware, and am happy to join with him as cosponsor of this proposal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I might be able to somewhat abbreviate the speech I was planning to make on this subject if it would accommodate the Senator from Delaware. May I ask the Senator how much time he thinks he will require?

Mr. ROTH. Five minutes, or I could even take less if the Senator wishes.

Mr. LONG. Then I will yield the floor, so that the Senator can make his speech at this time.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mr. President, I would further like to modify the so-called Roth-Byrd amendment by adding the following:

> At the end of section 401(h) as added by the amendment, add the following new subsection:
> "(i) Section 204(c)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 is repealed."

Mr. President, I think it would be worthwhile at this time——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). Is the Senator so modifying his own amendment?

Mr. ROTH. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, as I said, I think it would be worthwhile at this time to review for the benefit of the Senate the Roth-Byrd amendment to H.R. 1. I think the discussion today has shown more clearly than almost anything else a lack of information as to how any of the three proposals would actually work. The proposals of H.R. 1 and the so-called Ribicoff proposal, as well as the Finance Committee proposal, all believe that they are the answer to the welfare mess. Speaking for myself, I can say that I think reform is necessary. But what does concern me is that we do not go off on a new direction without some better information as to how we are proceeding.

For that reason, the Roth-Byrd amendment would call for a pilot test of the three welfare reform proposals—H.R. 1, title IV, as passed by the House; AFDC and workfare as reported by the Finance Committee; and amendment 1614 to H.R. 1, as offered by Senator RIBICOFF—as a compromise with the administration—last Thursday, September 28.

Each of these proposals would be tested for 2 or more years in demographically representative and meaningful areas of the country in order to gain practical knowledge of the ways in which these efforts will effect the current tragic situation of welfare.

Before the tests commenced, the administration would be required to submit its plans to the Finance and Ways and Means Committees, and after their initiation, reports by the administration and the GAO would be submitted to Congress every 6 months. These are temporary measures though, and at the end of the test period, final reports would be sent to Congress for consideration of some new permanent legislation.

I have also included the authorizations for the 10 percent work bonus, tightened legislation on child support, and liberalized child care language as adopted by the Finance Committee. Unlike the welfare and workfare test portions of this measure, these last three will become permanent statutes, if passed by Congress and signed by the President.

It seems to me that the current welfare problems need major improvements, but without better knowledge of actual reform effects, the Congress is faced with the dilemma of choosing between several very different proposals. Statistically significant tests of the three major bills would help the Congress gain valuable insight into the most effective ways to improve our deteriorating welfare system.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my entire amendment as modified be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 1668

Beginning on page 689, line 11, strike out through page 769, line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE IV—PROGRAMS FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

"PART A—TESTING OF ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

"AUTHORIZATION FOR CONDUCT OF TEST PROGRAMS

"SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this part—

"(1) The term 'family assistance tests' means (A) the programs contained in title IV of H.R. 1, 92d Congress, 1st Session, as passed by the House of Representatives, or (B) the program referred to in clause (A) as amended by amendment No. 1669, 92d Congress, 2d Session, introduced in the Senate on October 2, 1972.

"(2) the term 'workfare test program' means the program contained in parts A and B, title IV of H.R. 1, 92d Congress, 2d Session, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance on September 26, 1972, and

"(3) the term 'family' means a family with children.

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized, effective January 1, 1973, to plan for and conduct, in accordance with the provisions of this section, not more than three test programs. One of such programs shall be the family assistance test program defined in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, one of such programs shall be the family assistance program defined in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and one of such programs shall be the workfare test program.

"(2) Whenever the workfare test program is commenced, there shall commence, on the same date as such program, both family assistance test programs. Except as may otherwise be authorized by the Congress, no test program under this section shall be conducted for a period of less than 24 months or more than 48 months, and to the maximum extent practical each such test program shall be conducted for the same length of time.

"(3) Any such test program shall be conducted only in and with respect to an area which consists of one or more States, one or more political subdivisions of a State, or part of a political subdivision of a State, and shall be applicable to all the individuals who are residents of the State or the area of the State in and with respect to which such program is conducted.

"(4) During any period for which any such test program is in effect in any State or in any area of a State, individuals residing in such State or the area of the State in which such program is in effect shall not be eligible for aid or assistance under any State plan or program for which the State receives Federal financial assistance under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(5) The Secretary, in determining the areas in which test programs under this section shall be conducted, shall select areas with a view to assuring—

"(A) that the number of participants in any such program will (to the maximum extent practicable) be equal to the number of participants in any other such program; and

"(B) that the area in which any family assistance test program is conducted shall be comparable (in terms of size and composition of population, of average per capita income, rate of unemployment, and other relevant criteria) to an area in which a workfare test program is conducted.

"(c)(1) No test program under this section shall be conducted in any State (or any area thereof) unless such State shall have entered into an agreement with the Secretary under which the State agrees—

"(A) to participate in the costs of such test program; and

"(B) to cooperate with the Secretary in the conduct of such program.

"(2) Under any such agreement, no State shall be required to expend, with respect to any test program conducted within such State (or any area thereof), amounts greater than the amounts which would have been expended with respect to such State or area thereof (as the case may be), during the period that such test program is in effect, under the State plan of such State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act. For purposes of determining the amount any State would have expended under such a plan during the period that any such test program is in effect within such State (or any area thereof), it shall be assumed that the rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan would be equal to the average rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan for the 12-month period immediately preceding the commencement of such test program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall, upon completion of any plans for and prior to the commencement of any test program under this section, submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a complete and detailed description of such program and shall invite and give consideration to the comments and suggestions of such committees with respect to such program.

"(2) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Secretary shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any 6-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs. Each such report shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(3) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with (A) the Secretary's evaluation of such programs and such comments or recommendations of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable and (B) his recommendations (if any) for legislation to revise or replace the provisions of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall—

"(A) in the planning of any test program under this section; or

"(B) in assembling information, statistics, or other materials, to be contained in any report to Congress under this section;

consult with, and seek the advice and assistance of, the General Accounting Office and the General Accounting Office shall consult with the Secretary and furnish such advice and assistance to him upon request of the Secretary or at such times as the Comptroller General deems desirable.

"(2) The operations of any test program conducted under this section shall be reviewed by the General Accounting Office, and the books, records, and other documents pertaining to any such program or its operation shall be available to the General Accounting Office at all reasonable times for purposes of audit, review, or inspection. The books, records, and documents of each such program shall be audited by the General Accounting Office from time to time (but not less frequently than once each year).

"(3) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Comptroller General shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any 6-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs which shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Comptroller General with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(4) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with his evaluation of, and comments and recommendations (if any), with respect to such programs.

"(f) In the administration of test programs under this section, the Secretary shall provide safeguards which restrict the use of disclosure of information identifying participants in such programs to purposes directly connected with the administration of such programs (except that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the furnishing of records or information concerning participants in such programs to the Committee on Finance of the Senate or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives).

"(g) For the purpose of enabling the Secretary to formulate operational plans and to conduct test programs under this section, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year $200,000,000.

"(h) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a commitment, on the part of the Congress, to enact (at any future time) legislation to establish, on a permanent basis, any program tested pursuant to this section or any similar program.

"(i) Section 204(c)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 is repealed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think that down through the years there have been many times when the Senator from Louisiana probably could be regarded as in favor of higher welfare benefits than any other Member of this body. I have been something of a welfare advocate as long as I have been in public life, and I will continue to be, so long as we have a program which helps people in ways that encourage them to help themselves, particularly so long as the program would encourage people to do the right things and discourage them from doing the wrong things.

I am concerned about the cost of this bill; but with regard to this phase of it—the family assistance plan, the workfare plan, the Ribicoff substitute—it is far more important to me that we be headed in the right direction. I have no doubt that if we depart in the wrong direction, particularly if we depart in the area of a guaranteed income for doing absolutely nothing, for able-bodied people who should be encouraged to take a job and go to work, it will be a long time before we will ever get the welfare program back under control.

For that reason, Mr. President, I have become extremely concerned about the problems that have grown up in the welfare program, and even more so about the fact that the administration proposal as well as the Ribicoff suggestion, which is an expanded view of the guaranteed income concept, move us in the wrong direction. It would tend to bring the program into even worse disrepute than it is at the present time, and in the long run it is something that we will have to reverse, if we can. Otherwise, I believe it would continue to grow until it would bring the entire Government to an end, and that might happen sooner than anyone can estimate.

I note, for example, that in Louisiana, even under the family assistance plan, which is the most modest of the guaranteed income plans, according to HEW estimates the number of welfare recipients would be increased from 473,000 to 823,000, an increase of 350,000.

Insofar as one would seek to provide assistance for low-income working persons, it is far more dignified and it is work-oriented to give them the sort of advantage that was provided by the work bonus for which we voted the other day, or to provide the wage supplement that the committee recommended for those working in low-paying jobs. This way we increase the income of people in a way that is work-related, but encourage people to take a job and keep a job, and for which a father, in order to claim the benefit, must claim his own children, admit that those are his children, and to accept the responsibility for helping to support those children.

Unfortunately, under the family assistance plan, as would be the case under the Ribicoff amendment, it would be to the enormous cash advantage of the father—and would be even more so in the future—for him to decline to marry the mother of his children and to decline to admit paternity of his children. That is the one big element of the welfare riddle that those who advocate the guaranteed annual income simply have not been able to come to grips with; because when you face up to it, you recognize that the guaranteed annual income scheme simply will not work. It will not work because it provides a tremendous cash advantage for a father to deny paternity of his own children, to make himself unavailable for the support of his offspring, and to remain outside the bounds of a legal marriage.

We have struggled with this problem, and we have concluded that the answer to it is to increase the income of a man who comes forth and says that he has a family to support and faces his duty and responsibility. The difference is that they would be benefited by giving them what amounts to a tax refund, which, with regard to a great number of them, would cause them to have more income than they would have under the family assistance plan or the Ribicoff amendment. But they would be helped in ways that would encourage them to do the right things instead of the wrong things.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I agree with everything the Senator from Louisiana has said. I am curious to ask him this question, however: Let us assume that the man about whom the Senator is talking, the man who disclaims his family and disclaims his children, is not attracted by this. What happens?

Mr. LONG. I am not sure I understand.

Mr. PASTORE. I will be more explicit.

The complaint is being made that some women are having illegitimate children—not one, sometimes many. In some instances, they do not even know who the father is. I am not saying that that is the rule; that may be the exception. But it is the predicate for the question I am asking. I understand that the Senator said that the bill that was reported by the committee means you are making it attractive enough for a man to take a job which will be more remunerative than if he took social welfare. Let us assume he happens to be a person——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). Under the previous order——

Mr. PASTORE. May I have 1 more minute——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended for 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Let us assume he happens to be the kind of individual that does not want to work at all and does not claim paternity for his children, what happens to the children? I am curious to know that.

Mr. LONG. The answer would be that the family would be eligible for welfare benefits as long as there is a child 6 years or younger in the household, on the theory that a mother is entitled to be in the home with the young child who needs care. The bill would then say that when the child goes to school and the mother's presence is not necessary in the home to look after the child, the mother would be expected to take a job, and the committee bill would provide the job that would assure her as much money——

Mr. PASTORE. Are we talking about a widow, or a married woman who has a husband that is able to work?

Mr. LONG. I assume we are talking about a situation where the mother has been deserted or she is a single woman who had children, but whom the father never married in the first place. It is rarely a widow we are talking about, because she has social security available to her. In many cases it is a mother who has never married.

Mr. PASTORE. This whole thing started out as an AFDC proposition. When I was Governor of my State, when this program was first initiated, its purpose was to allow a widowed mother who had a number of children to stay home and take care of the household so that the children could be brought up in respectable fashion.

Now the argument is being made here that we are expecting that a widow—I am talking about a legitimate widow, not some girl running around with every Tom, Dick, and Harry and having illegitimate children—not talking about a woman living with a man not her husband—I am talking about a legitimate widow. The Senator says he will make it attractive so that a woman who has four children and whose husband is dead, for that woman to go out to work rather than to stay at home and take care of her children. If the children go to school from 9 until 2 and the mother works until 5 or so, who would take care of the children? That is where the dilemma is, as against some other girl who never married at all and has four children, but whose father will not admit their paternity. We have quite a problem here on that. I realize that is where the abuses sometimes lie. When we try to do something about it the question arises, what about the children, how do we take care of them? We must not allow the kids to go hungry, and I agree with that, of course.

Now we are talking about a common-law marriage, where the man has never married the woman, and for some reason he leaves the house every time the social worker comes along so that the social worker does not know there is a man in the house.

Is that the man we are trying to get a job for?

Personally, the way the Senior Senator from Rhode Island feels, every man that will not support his own children, would be put in jail.

Mr. LONG. First, referring to the widow where the father has died, the widow is eligible for social security. That is not our problem.

Mr. PASTORE. That is a legitimate case.

Mr. LONG. That is a case for social security. With regard to the AFDC case load, we find these proportions: Where the father is dead, roughly 4.3 percent; where the father is incapacitated, 9.8 percent; that is not our problem.

Mr. PASTORE. I would say so. That is right.

Mr. LONG. There is the program for the disabled when the father is incapacitated, and we take care of that. That is supported at a generous level. Then we have some cases where the father is unemployed, and that is 6 percent; of the caseload; 76.2 percent of the cases are cases where the father is absent from the home: 14 percent divorced; legally separated, roughly 3 percent; separation without a court order, 13 percent; deserted, 15 percent; not married 28 percent; in prison, 2 percent; for other reasons 1.2 percent.

Mr. PASTORE. Are we trying to find a job for all those fellows that ran away from their wives and children? We are not talking about them, I hope. Those are the ones that should be in jail.

Mr. LONG. We certainly have some provisions in present law for the States to pursue those fellows and make them support their children, but those provisions are not working very well. We have cases where the mother will not tell who the father is or cooperate in any way with us.

Mr. PASTORE. That is my question. Let us assume that she does not tell us what happens——

Mr. LONG. If she says, "I don't know who," then during the time her children are in school, she is expected to do some work. She is expected to earn $2,400 instead of having $2,400 given to her for doing nothing. But we propose to subsidize the jobs in private employment.

The Senator referred to school hours being between 9 and 2. My impression was that it is 9 to 3, more or less, at least that is what it is in Louisiana and in most other States. We would expect, during the time the children were in school, to provide for the welfare of the child, or the children, if it is in the plural, and that the mother would, in turn, do something for the benefit of society in return for what she is to be paid. We would like to see her take the best job possible, say as a nurse's aide, or keeping the place safe, or helping to report any violations of the law in her area, or helping in child care, or helping in a child care center, or looking after the children of a working mother, so that that mother does not need to take a job.

Mr. PASTORE. All right. Now we get to the $64 question. What if she refuses to take a job? What happens to the four children?

Mr. LONG. Then we would pay somebody else to provide for the children.

Mr. PASTORE. Does the bill provide that?

Mr. LONG. It does.

Mr. PASTORE. What would you do, take the children away from her? Then have every church after you.

Mr. LONG. We would try to do it through a protective payment. In an extreme case, we would have to provide for foster care, as we do now.

Mr. PASTORE. What do you call an extreme case?

Mr. LONG. Cases where a mother is abusing the child or simply not taking care of it.

Mr. PASTORE. That has nothing to do with children taken care of under a court order. I am talking about a woman who refuses to take a job. I am talking about what happens then. Do we cut off the money? Do we not cut off the money, or do we still give her the money?

Mr. LONG. We would not pay the money to her if she was offered a job and she said no.

Mr. PASTORE. To whom would you pay it then?

Mr. LONG. To some relative or someone in the immediate vicinity; perhaps the fellow who owns the corner grocery store, or a nextdoor neighbor, or who lives in the same apartment building, to provide that money for the children, if they need it.

We are entitled to assume, Senator, with regard to some of these people who do not want any job——

Mr. PASTORE. I realize that.

Mr. LONG. That they have an income from somewhere else. Some of these people have a man coming around every night, sleeping in the same bed——

Mr. PASTORE. I know that.

Mr. LONG. We are entitled to assume that if these people do not want to work or take a job, it is likely they are getting income from somewhere else. For example, in Louisiana, we had a 50-percent increase in the welfare load when the court struck down the man in the house rule. I know that the man in the house rule can be abused, but I am also aware of the fact that if there is a man in the house, and if he has a job and he is able to support his family, that man should be made to support that family. Look at how it works out the other way around. Here is an example I have given before, since it illustrates the point. In New York City right now if a father is earning $7,000 a year, and if he is not married to the mother, he can be spending every night in the same house with the mother, and the mother can be receiving $4,000 roughly in cash, $1,100 in public housing benefits, $900 in medicaid benefits—and that is the average value of medicaid to a person.

Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes.

There is a combined value of $13,000. If we assume that father marries that mother, he will get only the $7,000 he earns. So, there is a $6,000 cash advantage to that family to continue this relationship.

And there is no way that we can get ourselves out of that trap. There is no way that we can prevent them from beating the system in that fashion unless we ask someone to go to work.

If we do not do so, the mother has a more certain source of income than she would otherwise. Their combined income would be $13,000 under the law as it is today, if they are to live out of wedlock, compared to an income of only $7,000 if they are married. So we set the stage for the father refusing to marry the mother.

Incidentally, Mr. Moynihan, the architect of this program, told us individually that the problem is not that the father is leaving the mother so that the family can go on welfare, but the problem is that he is not marrying her because they can have almost twice the income by not marrying and by not assuming the obligations of a legal marriage.

As long as we have a system that is as advantageous as it is and allows people to have twice as much income by not marrying because they are then eligible for welfare, then we will have the fathers not marrying these mothers.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I wish the Senator a lot of luck. Anyone who does not have the nobility to marry the woman with whom he has had children certainly does not have the nobility to do anything else. And I do not think it will work out.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we would provide that mother with local assistance from both U.S. attorneys and district attorneys to help obtain support money from that father. We would make it unlawful for a father to abandon his family to the welfare rolls. However, as long as we make it profitable for them so that they will have twice the income, that leaves us in the situation that we are in today.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator from Louisiana is now cooking with gas. That has been a laxity on the part of law enforcement. There has been a laxity on the part of authorities in getting after the mothers and fathers. We could cut down the expense of this program tremendously if we could enforce the law and make it work.

Mr. MONTOYA. Mr. President, it is with a great deal of pride and accomplishment that I rise today to commend the distinguished chairman and the members of the Finance Committee for their diligence and determination in reporting out this comprehensive reform bill. I know personally that many long hours were spent in developing language which would result in meaningful reforms and not empty promises. The committee deserves the thanks of the Senate and of the country for their efforts.

Mr. President, title II of H.R. 1, as amended by the Senate Finance Committee, contains provisions which provide certain kinds of outpatient drugs for 20 million elderly citizens now eligible for medicare benefits. The Members of this body know that since 1965 I have strived to have this concept enacted into law. The inclusion of this proposal in H.R. 1 is gratifying to me and my sincere thanks are extended to the Finance Committee. I was also pleased to see the Senate overwhelmingly approve the maintenance drugs amendment by a vote of 54 to 0 on September 30, 1972.

We in the Congress are well aware of the economic plight of our senior citizens. The often-cited figures show that more than 4.7 million older Americans fall below the poverty line; one out of every four of these elder citizens lives in poverty. Of these unfortunate older Americans living alone, six out of every 10 were classified as poor or near poor; and nearly five of eight women 65 or older and living alone are classified as poor or near poor.

We know that while the average income of all family heads is about $7,500, families headed by individuals 65 or older must survive on incomes of $3,600. One must remember that with these resources, food, shelter, clothing, and other necessities must be met.

The figures are startling, Mr. President, yet even more alarming is the fact that prescription drugs now represent the largest single health expenditure that the aged must meet from their own resources, some 20 percent of their personal health expenditures. The conclusion is obvious, Mr. President. The cost of medication has a severe impact on the meager resources of our older Americans.

The relationship of the economic position of our elderly citizens to their ability to provide themselves with adequate health care was best described by the Task Force on Prescription Drugs when it said:

> Requirements for appropriate drug therapy by the elderly are very great, far greater in fact than any other group, and that many elderly men and women are now unable to meet these needs with their limited incomes, savings or present insurance coverage. Their inability to afford the drugs they require may well be reflected in needless sickness and disability, unemployability, and costly hospitalization which could have been prevented by adequate out-of-hospital treatment.

The concept for an outpatient drug program is by no means a novel suggestion, Mr. President. Since 1965, similar proposals have come before the Senate and each time, this body has felt that the concept was in need of further study.

A program for out-patient drugs has been studied and restudied with the last task force report being issued in 1969 by the so-called Dunlap committee. This task force sought and received the advice, guidance, support, and criticism of more than 160 nongovernmental experts representing clinical medicine, pharmacology, pharmacy, medical and pharmacy teachers, professional health organizations, drug manufacturers, drug distributors, health inusrance executives, and representatives from other fields. After these extensive consultations, it concluded:

> In order to improve the access of the elderly to high quality care, and to protect them wherever possible against high drug expenses which they may be unable to meet, there is a need for an out-of-hospital drug insurance program under Medicare.

The task force further concluded that such a program would be both "economically and medically feasible and should be instituted." These, Mr. President, were the conclusions reached by the task force created by Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Robert Finch.

Several recommendations were made by the Dunlop committee with respect to certain features that should be contained in any out-patient drug program. These included: financing the program under part A of title XVIII of the Social Security Act—medicare program—so that an individual would pay for his drug insurance during his working years, rather than later when his income is sharply reduced due to retirement; inclusion of a copayment feature of at least $1 for each prescription to remind the beneficiary that he is sharing in the cost of the program and to prevent abuses; creation of a formulary committee composed of persons of recognized standing in the fields of medicine, pharmacy, and pharmacology to select the drugs to be covered. The formulary would be available to physicians and pharmacies and would provide a list of these qualified drugs, arranged alphabetically by their established, or generic, names, as well as—

An indexed listing of the trade or other names by which these drugs are known, together with the maximum allowable cost for various quantities, strengths, or dosage forms;

Supplemental lists arranged by diagnostic, therapeutic, or other classifications; and Information which promotes—under professional supervision—the safe and effective use of these drugs.

The beneficiary simply goes to the participating pharmacy of his choice. If the drug prescribed for him is listed in the formulary, he pays the pharmacist $1 to fill the prescription. If the prescribed drug is not listed in the formulary, he pays for it the same way he does now—out of his own pocket. Finally, pharmacist and other vendors, rather than beneficiaries, would be reimbursed based upon practice in the locality by type of outlet added to the acquisition cost of the drug product.

Mr. President, the prescription drug program which I introduced as S. 936 contained most of these productive changes recommended by the many years of study and deliberation. The committee version of this proposal also retains a majority of the task force's suggestions and also makes further modifications so as to make the legislation more economically feasible.

Specifically, the committee has provisions which limit the coverage under the act to so-called "maintenance drugs," or drugs generally associated with chronic illnesses. This modification will reduce the anticipated cost of the program to $700 million thus making it more acceptable to many who, while favoring the concept, were forced to vote against the program on fiscal grounds. Mr. President, I am not opposed to this change. In fact, I welcome it, for I consider it to be essential if the program is to be approved. Once in operation, it will be easy to determine if expansion is needed and if expansion is economically feasible.

Now, Mr. President, I do not take credit for the provisions of the drug program as contained in H.R. 1. In point of fact, credit must duly be given to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Senator LONG, whose similar proposal was before the committee and Senator HARTKE, whose version of this legislation contained the "maintenance drugs" limitation which made the concept more acceptable. The drug program now in H.R. 1 is, in fact, a combination of all these proposals and credit must thus be given to all of the members of the Finance Committee on both sides of the aisle for their efforts in combining all of these suggestions into a workable and economically feasible drug program.

As a result of their courageous and diligent efforts, 20 million of our elderly citizens who buy nearly 25 percent of the 1.7 billion prescriptions filled annually in the United States will have access to the kind of health care which they need and which they deserve. Mr. President, the battle has been long and hard fought. I am pleased to have played a small part in its success. I urge members of the committee to hold steadfast to any efforts to delete this much-needed program when H.R. 1 is sent to a House-Senate conference.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 1 FOLLOWING VOTE ON FOURTH TREATY TODAY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that regardless of the outcome of the vote on the motion to invoke cloture today, immediately following the yea-and-nay vote on the fourth treaty the Senate return to the consideration of H.R. 1 for not to exceed 1 hour.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, may I ask the distinguished assistant majority leader what the future plan is in regard to H.R. 1.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I cannot speak beyond what I have just indicated by my request.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No objection.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I want the leader to understand that as far as this Senator is concerned I am not going to devote any time on either my substitute or any other amendment to H.R. 1. I want that understood, that any delay is not at my request.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, at what time and date was H.R. 1 made the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will check that. The Chair is unable to answer at the moment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, permit me to say that this Senator would like to get on with the business of the Senate. However, even with all the many good things in this bill, the Senator from Louisiana could not vote for this bill if it included a guaranteed annual income for doing nothing in any respect whatever, other than on a test basis.

As far as I am concerned, I am willing to give the opposition the right to prove I am wrong, but I would like to have an alternative proposal considered if there be such a test because it would tend to prove this Senator to be right in the position he has taken.

But as a Member of this body I well recognize what the parliamentary situation would be if the Ribicoff amendment were agreed to. It would mean we would be locked into a parliamentary situation where we could not amend it and it would be a more or less foregone conclusion that the Senate would be expected to agree to it.

The Senate does not know enough about this proposal and the danger embraced in it. In my judgment, proceeding down that path could destroy this form of government.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be recognized for 5 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it could destroy this democratic and republican form of government. It seems to this Senator that this matter should not be permitted to be voted into this bill without the Senate fully understanding what is involved here.

The Senator from Connecticut pointed out that there are very few Senators available to hear the debate. Right now there is a sparse attendance. That is typical when someone anticipates that a long speech will be made in this body. But the Senate cannot escape its duty. If the Senate wants to go down the road to guaranteed annual income it will have to do so knowing the consequences of its vote.

So I would propose sometime this afternoon to move to table the Ribicoff amendment, to see if the Senate wants to consider this matter further. If the Senate should decline to table the amendment then I think that those of us who have been studying this matter for years now and see the dangers in it owe it to the Senate and the country to discuss this matter for some time, at least a week or two, or longer, until the Senate does understand that matter thoroughly. Sometimes in order to do that it has to be done with no more than five or six Senators in the Chamber to hear the colloquy. I have done that before. That is an inefficient way to educate people desperately in need of learning, but it is better than none at all; and we would be forced to debate this matter and explain it and provide chapter and verse for a minimum of a week, and more likely two weeks, in justice to ourselves and our convictions. We would like to discuss this matter long enough that we are satisfied individual Senators understand what they are voting on.

I regret to say that in discussing this matter with Senators individually I find that even some Senators who are members of the Committee on Finance, who theoretically should know everything in this bill and know it thoroughly, because of their responsibilities in other committees and elsewhere, they do not understand either the committee bill or the Ribicoff amendment.

The country is entitled to expect better of us, and the country is entitled to expect that we fully understand what we are voting on and that we understand the consequences of it. I want the Senate to arrive at the wisest decision. I am convinced beyond any peradventure of a doubt that we should not proceed down the road of guaranteed annual income, although I am perfectly content to offer those who think otherwise the opportunity to provide themselves right; and I am willing to provide them all the money it takes to prove themselves right in a metropolitan area as large as the District of Columbia. I proposed that sort of thing before, and the evidence that I am right about the matter is the fact that the administration does not want to try that matter here in the District of Columbia where it would be right beneath the nose of Congress so we could see whether or not it is a good proposition; but they do not want to try it here. I am not aware they want to try it anywhere. But they have the opportunity to have the test, pick their own States and metropolitan communities to prove it. They turned it down. That adds support for our position that this is a matter the Senate would never vote and the House would never vote, if you had a vote on it strictly on its merits and had the opportunity to debate it adequately so it is fully understood.

My point is that I would like to find out some time today if the majority of the Senate feels the way I do, that this should not be added to this bill, although we would be willing to provide them any sort of a test they want on a sufficiently broad basis and in a place where those who would favor the proposal would think it proved their point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. But I think it should be made clear that those of us who oppose the guaranteed annual income are not willing to let that plan be voted in this bill with 3 or 4 hours of debate. That is the sort of thing that if it is to be added to a measure it would have to have a week, 2 weeks', or a month's debate.

I think it would be highly irresponsible for the Senate to adjourn sine die without giving the Nation an answer to this question. If we have to come back in November, so be it. We are paid by the year anyway. If need be, we can come back and take the time required to do this job. I have been thinking for some time that that is what we ought to do with this bill anyway. We should go home and let Senators take care of their political commitments, make the speeches they promised their constituents they would make, and then come back in November and stay here from then until New Year's if need be in order to adjust the bill.

Although the Senators I see in the Chamber have managed to familiarize themselves with what is in the bill and I see four Senators in the Chamber who thoroughly understand the bill from cover to cover—I regret to say that that is not typical of the entire membership of the Senate.

So we will just have to see how the Senate wants to proceed with the matter. If it wants to debate it for a couple of weeks again, I am perfectly willing and prepared to make my contribution. Then we can judge how the Senate wants to proceed. I say this not as one who is planning to conduct a filibuster, although I reserve the right to do whatever my conscience dictates. I am fully satisfied that the Senate could not accept embarking upon a proposal to provide a guaranteed annual income.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator may have 2 more minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am satisfied that the Senate would not proceed down a path that could lead to a dissolution of the Nation, or at least that might end this form of government, if the Senate understood that. Therefore, I believe it to be my duty to make the Senate understand that, if it is within my power to do so, before the Senate enters upon such a directive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to respond to the request that was made earlier. H.R. 1 came before the Senate at 10:55 a.m. on Wednesday last.

Mr. LONG. That was September 27.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I now yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, this is the first ray of hope I have seen for welfare reform in 3 years. I never thought that during this 3-year period I would see our distinguished chairman (Mr. LONG) so frightened of my proposal that he is unwilling to have the Senate vote on it. Frankly, I have been wracked with pessimism concerning my ability to get a majority of the Senate to vote for this proposal. But as I listened to the distinguished chairman, apparently he and his staff have taken some nose counts that seem to indicate to him that this proposal has more strength than I myself thought it had.

I say to the Senate that I do not think the bill should be voted up or down merely because one Member of the Senate, no matter how distinguished he may be, stands before the Senate and threatens a filibuster. If it is a filibuster, so be it. But I have never been so lacking in self-doubt as to say that I have the only answer. I am intrigued that our distinguished chairman feels that only he is the savior of the Republic. There are 100 Members of this body, and I think their judgment should be considered along with the Senator from Louisiana.

I have no reluctance to have this debate go on as long as it has to go on. I have no fear of debate. It is apparent to me that the Senate has made up its mind. It is apparent to me that the Senate has read enough, has heard enough, and has studied enough. I have the feeling that they have nothing to learn from further debate. I cannot quarrel if a Senator does not want talk. I have been in situations during my years in the Senate that I have not come to the floor to hear other Senators talk. I do not intend to bring them here to listen to my words of wisdom. If I say something that is worthwhile, they will listen to me; or if I have said something worthwhile, they can read it in the RECORD in the morning, or their staffs can pick out the pertinent sections.

We have had this matter before us for 3 years. The House has debated it, and the Senate has debated it at various times. Volumes of reports have been published. It has been the subject of articles in the press, and there have been editorial comments. So I do not downgrade the intelligence of the Senate. I think the Senate is very well aware of what the issues are. I would say today that each one of the 100 of us knows how he is going to vote on the Ribicoff proposal, the administration proposal, the Long proposal, or the Byrd of Virginia proposal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. RIBICOFF. May I have 2 more minutes?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I wonder if the Senator from Connecticut will allow my request to be acted upon. We are still operating on the time for morning business, not on H.R. 1.

I ask unanimous consent that to proceed for 2 more minutes under morning business. I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut; then I would hope that my request would be acted upon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I think it should be made very clear that the Senator from Connecticut, who is not supposed to have the votes, is more than willing to have his proposal voted up or down at any time the leadership requests. It should be made perfectly clear that the chairman of the committee, who is supposed to have the votes to defeat the Ribicoff proposal, does not want this proposal to come to a vote.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I will find the place in the RECORD where the Senator from Connecticut yesterday noted that he was explaining his proposal with very few Senators present. It is unfortunate that Senators do not understand this measure better than they do. I would not want to proceed on that basis, but maybe we will. Frankly, I think that the Senator does not have the votes for his amendment. I am frank to say it. I have not said I am going to filibuster the Senator's amendment. I have never said that. But I will do what my conscience dictates, and I will speak as my conscience dictates.

There are several Senators who do not understand the amendment and do not, I am frank to say, understand the committee's position. I have discussed it with a number of them, not only on the floor of the Senate, but just by talking with a Senator in his office, or talking with him in a corridor, and discussing the issue. He would start out by asking, "What does the Ribicoff amendment do? What does the committee amendment do?"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has again expired.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I shall ask for 1 or 2 more minutes; then I will ask that morning business be closed and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the acting majority leader ask for action on the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—at a later date I shall address a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, and that is: How many hours have been spent on H.R. 1 since it was laid before the Senate? I do not make that request now, but I shall do so at a later time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will obtain the information requested.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, what was the request?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I stated to the Chair that I planned at a future time to propound a parliamentary inquiry as to the number of hours that the Senate has debated H.R. 1.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Senator from Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request is agreed to.

Morning business is concluded.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972—AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 1677

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I wish to submit an amendment to H.R. 1 (for myself, and Senators HUMPHREY, MONDALE, HOLLINGS, and PERCY) and I ask that it be printed. My amendment would strike sections 508 and 509 of title V, part A, in H.R. 1, which make recipients of cash benefits ineligible for food assistance.

The need for this amendment was documented earlier this year. In February the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs issued a staff study which reviewed the commitment to insure nutritional adequacy for all Americans. In particular the study examined the relationship between proposed welfare reform measures, specifically H.R. 1, and that commitment. Eliminating the food assistance programs while benefits to poor individuals and families remain below the poverty line would put those persons at "nutritional risk." H.R. 1, as reported to the Senate floor, eliminates the food stamp and surplus foods programs for welfare recipients.

Today there are some 12 million persons using the food stamp program, and another 3.5 million using surplus foods. Better than 7 million food stamp users and as many as 2 million surplus foods users are recipients of welfare. Yet under H.R. 1, individuals and families who receive cash benefits would no longer be eligible to choose participation in a food program in order to obtain an adequate diet. For their part, the States would be free to choose whether or not their needy citizens would receive additional cash benefits to compensate them for the loss of food assistance; the States would not be required to make up that loss.

The Senate will be voting on titles IV and V separately. Thus it is possible that even if title IV is not accepted in the Senate, needy persons will still lose the food stamp and surplus food benefits on which they now rely. It is necessary to strike sections 508 and 509—whatever action is taken on title IV—to preserve food assistance benefits for 7 to 9 million needy persons.

The elimination of the food stamp and surplus foods programs for welfare recipients raises many questions regarding the national commitment, expressed by the President, the Congress, three distinguished White House conferences, and numerous private organizations, to end hunger and malnutrition among America's poor. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent that the text of my amendment together with a brief explanation be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment and explanation were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Beginning on page 926, line 18, strike everything through page 932, line 24.

EXPLANATION OF AMENDMENT TO SECTIONS 508 AND 509

Title V of H.R. 1 contains two sections which concern the food stamp program, Sections 508 and 509. Section 508 would eliminate the food stamp program (as well as the surplus foods program) for anyone receiving welfare. Some provisions in Title V have already come to a vote, and the food stamp provisions could easily come up independent of any action on Title IV—the title commonly associated with "welfare reform."

That means that the result of Senate action could be to make no changes in the welfare program, except to eliminate the food stamp program for people now using it. Clearly, it is also possible to have Senate action that would result in major or minor welfare reforms, or the passage of "pilot" programs, AND the end of the food stamp program for welfare recipients now using them.

Earlier this year the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs issued a report detailing the history of the Administration's pledge, and the Congress' actions, to insure that the food stamp program would be retained until welfare benefits were equal to the poverty line.

The passage of Sections 508 and 509—with or without Senate action on Title IV—would mean the loss of eligibility for food stamps and surplus foods for 15 million welfare recipients, without mandating any compensating increase in welfare benefits. The amendment introduced by Senators Case, Humphrey, Mondale, Hollings, Percy, and others, would strike Sections 508 and 509, retaining the food stamp and surplus foods programs for welfare recipients. It would not result in additional benefits or increased expenditures.

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. TUNNEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act to increase benefits and improve eligibility and computation methods under the OASDI program, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis on improvements in their operating effectiveness, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs with a Federal program of adult assistance and a Federal program of benefits to low-income families with children with incentives and requirements for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, and for other purposes.

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. Moss, Mr. PERCY, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. JAVITS, and Mr. HUMPHREY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (H.R. 1), supra.

AMENDMENT NO. 1685

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. MOSS (for himself, Mr. PERCY, and Mr. TUNNEY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them jointly to the bill (H.R. 1), supra.

H.R. 1—SOCIAL SECURITY AND WELFARE REFORM

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, before us during these closing weeks of the 92d Congress is H.R. 1, a bill to reform two significant institutions of our society: Social security and welfare. This bill, well over 950 pages in length, has been under consideration for almost 4 years and has been the focus of much public debate. I have reached several conclusions about our social security and welfare systems which I would like to share with you today.

There is no question that social security and welfare have needed signficant alteration. The question has been how to go about it. Today, social security is neither equitable nor just. It is not equitable in that not everyone can equally participate. Nor is it just for some are excluded and many are paid too little on which to retire. Furthermore, the trust fund concept is a sham that has little relationship to insurance principles.

Today, the payroll tax is the second largest source of Federal revenues next to the income tax. By next year, its costs will exceed that of the income tax for many. For instance, under the Senate Finance Committee's provisions of H.R. 1, social security taxes will be raised for the family of four with one wage earner whose income is $13,900 or less. This reflects increasing benefits under social security as well as across-the-board benefit increases recently voted. With the increase voted last June and the one approved by the Senate Finance Committee, the maximum social security payroll tax will raise 38 percent in 1973—from $468 at present to $648—raising the effective payroll tax rate from 5.5 to 6 percent by January 1973.

On the face of it, this would present no problems, but at closer examination the present social security system is revealed to be a regressive tax system, representing a transfer of income from lower- and middle-income workers to the elderly unemployed. In fact, for such a level of contributions workers could get three times the benefits from a private plan. Under the Senate version of H.R. 1 the payroll tax rate decreases as income increases. For instance, the worker earning $3,000 per year faces an increase of 9.1 percent; the $10,000 worker a rise of 3.4 percent; and the $50,000 wage earner an increase of 0.4 percent. This is a far cry from the original measure 36 years ago which taxed each employee and employer 1 percent on the first $3,000 of wage earnings.

Having established that the social cost of providing for the elderly is borne inequitably by the lower- and middle-income working people, what should be done?

The Senate Finance Committee has reported out a bill that includes proposals to:

Raise the minimum benefits to $200 per month for low-income workers who have worked for at least 30 years;

Increase widows' cash benefits from the present 82.5 percent to 100 percent;

Make disabled workers under 65 eligible for medicare;

Increase from $1,680 to $2,400 the amount for an elderly person.

I have introduced a number of amendments to H.R. 1 to improve the benefits of our social security system including:

Removing the $255 limit per month on the lump-sum death payment so that these payments would vary with the past earnings of the worker;

Allowing children's insurance benefits on the basis of wages and self-employment income of certain relatives with whom a child is living and from whom he receives support;

Eliminating recent work tests as a condition of insured status for disability insurance benefits, a test that does not have to be met to qualify for other social security benefits;

Qualifying a worker aged 55 or over as disabled for purposes of social security, if he meets the test of disability now applicable to older blind workers;

Allowing disabled widows and widowers to receive unreduced widows' and widowers' insurance benefits without regard to age;

Allowing disabled wives and husbands to receive unreduced wives' and husbands' insurance benefits without regard to age;

Providing coverage for out-of-hospital prescription drugs with a copayment of $2.

But much more than this needs to be done. On November 17, 1971, I introduced a bill which I believe must be implemented before significant reform and broader benefits can be effected. Briefly, the legislation would put social security on a voluntary basis: Employees would have the choice of contributing to social security or to a comparable private pension or insurance plan. Second, it would provide for the funding of the first $100 of monthly benefits to be paid out of general revenues. Third, it provides for the funding of medicare out of the general revenues. And finally, it would put social security on a pay-as-you-go basis. This would drastically alter the financing structure of social security and medicare, while making it equitable and just for those presently contributing.

Mr. President, the second major portion of H.R. 1 deals with welfare reform. And while I believe that it would be much better to consider this matter separately from social security—a very complex issue in itself—I would like to describe the direction in which I believe we should move in the area of welfare.

To date there are really no criteria to judge the success or failure of the present system. There is a great deal of evidence indicating much needs to be done, and the present debate is focused on what kind of action should be taken. Governor Reagan, of California, presented testimony before the Senate Finance Committee earlier this year detailing specific legislative and regulatory action to be taken at the State and Federal levels to clean up the present system. While I am not in total agreement with all the Governor's proposals, I believe they can be of significant value in straightening out the present welfare mess. Governor Reagan advocated the following legislative measures, many of which I believe should be adopted:

I ask unanimous consent that a statement of the proposals be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REAGAN PROPOSALS

1. State Option for Administration: To allow each state to choose whether it wishes to provide for administration of public assistance programs by the state, designated local governmental units, or by the Federal-government. Strong fiscal incentives—or disincentives—in connection with various options to be included.

2. Relief to Low-Income Families: Exempt low-income families from the Federal and state income tax (including withholding) and provide them a rebate of their social security taxes, including the employer's contribution thereto.

3. Overall Limit on AFDC Family Income: In determining eligibility, apply a gross income limitation of 150% of the state's standard of need. This will require an amendment to Social Security Act Section 402(a)(8) in order to place a realistic ceiling on the amount of income a recipient may receive and still remain eligible for welfare.

4. One-Third Income in AFDC: Section 402 (a)(8) should be amended to expressly require this earned income deduction to be made from "net income rather than "gross" income.

5. Community Work Programs: To require employable AFDC recipients not working full time or participating in a work or training program, to work in essential community improvement projects as a condition of receiving welfare. Title IV of the Social Security Act should be amended to expressly require federal financial participation in aid payments to recipients participating in such programs.

6. Employables Program: To place employable AFDC recipients into self-sustaining employment. Emphasis to be placed on furtherance of Section 402(a)(14) and (15) of the Social Security Act. It is difficult to promulgate such programs without securing waivers to the single-state agency requirements.

7. Fiscal Incentives for Efficient Management: Federal matching formulae providing incentives toward attainment of certain goals, previously limited to assistance or service aspects, should be extended to provide for attaining a goal of simplified and more efficient management.

8. Increased Federal Reimbursement for Child Support Activities: No federal participation is presently available for "preventative welfare". (A) The Federal government should give the states and counties a bonus to spur collection efforts. A federal support enforcement incentive should be created to allow the state or local jurisdiction to retain money saved by its collection. (B) The Federal government should ease up participation restrictions on child support activities and accord the same priority as the items listed in Section 402(a)(3)(A).

9. District Attorney Costs in Enforcing Family Support: To allow full costs of law enforcement agencies in enforcing family support. There is a need for a clear expression of congressional intent that there will be federal reimbursement for all expenditures by the district attorney and other law enforcement agencies in obtaining absent parent child support. Such amendments should be made to the Social Security Act.

10. Recipient's Failure to Cooperate with Law Enforcement Agencies: The Federal government should adopt the "debt to the government" concept in all cases where welfare is paid because of a person's failure to support where he is liable for support. To avoid constitutional problems, the amount of the debt should be limited by the ability to pay of the debtor at he ime the deb arises.

11. Federal Participation in Costs of District Attorney Welfare Fraud Investigation and Collection. (A) The Federal government should allow reimbursement of state costs of fraud prosecutions in the same priority as the items listed in Section 402(a)(3)(A) of the Social Security Act. (B) A Fraud Prevention Incentive Fund should be established that would return to the counties any federal money collected in fraud prosecutions. The fund should not be based on convictions, but should reflect actual funds collected. (C) The Federal Statutory approach should not be based on convictions but on actual funds lost due to fraud.

12. Aliens on Welfare: The support of citizens of other countries shall be a fiscal obligation of the Federal government. States should not be required to support citizens of another country, when the state and county governments have no effective voice in determining admission standards.

13. Fair Hearings: Amend the appropriations sections of the Social Security Act, to provide for an evidentiary hearing by a local welfare agency as a required preliminary to a hearing conducted by the state agency. Include the specific criteria which determines under which circumstances it is proper to continue aid payments pending a decision in an appealed case. It would be necessary to amend the fair hearing requirements in each of the Public Assistance Titles to permit states to meet these requirments through a two-step hearing process the first of which could be less than a full blown fair hearing but would meet the test of an evidentiary hearing in accordance with the Goldberg decision.

14. The 18- to 21-Year Old Adult: Limit the AFDC program to legally defined children. The limited resources available for this program should be limited to those persons who have been defined legally as children in order to maximize protection.

15. Modify Statewideness Requirements of Social Services: Amend the Social Security Act to clearly permit a state to provide social services in such counties, areas, or districts, as the states or counties deem necessary.

16. Vendor Payments for Non-Recurring Items of Special Need in AFDC: Amend the Social Security Act to provide appropriate exceptions to the "money payment" principle. It would be more efficient and better for the recipient if the money payment principle were waived in these situations and the agency permitted to pay a vendor directly for the full cost, with such cost reported on claims as an assistance payment eligible for federal matching.

17. Simplified Eligibility: The requirements in the various titles governing "proper and efficient administration" should be revised so as to make the use of "simplified methods" in determining eligibility optional rather than mandatory with the states.

18. Denial of AFDC Where There is a Continuing Child-Parent Relationship with Nonrelated Adult: Permit a state to deny aid to a child where the child is living in a parent-child relationship with a nonrelative adult, e.g., child whose father/mother has deserted and where child is living with his father/mother and his/her unmarried partner (MARS). Proposed changes in Section 406 of the Social Security Act would provide that when a nonrelated adult assumes the role of parent the child shall not be considered deprived nor a "dependent child" within the federal definition.

19. Wage Attachment for Federal Employees: To allow attachment of wages of federal employees including the military. To increase the collection of absent parent child support funds and thereby reduce the public assistance support.

20. Dependents of Military Personnel on Welfare: Eliminate the inefficient and inappropriate inclusion of families of military personnel among those eligible for public assistance payments. (Not to be paid by the states, but by the federal government.)

21. Marital and Community Property Resources: Allow a state to consider the income of a non-adoptive step-parent in determining eligibility for and the amount of grants of AFDC to the non-adopted stepchildren. Proposed changes would provide: (A) that in family groups living together, income of the spouse is considered available for his spouse. Since Federal regulations require that income of a natural parent be considered available to children, it would follow that the income of a spouse would be considered available to all the family's children for eligibility and grant determination. (B) that where natural parents have vested interest in the (right to manage and control of) income of their spouses, that portion vested in (under the management and control of) the natural parent could be considered available to that parent's children for eligibility and grant determination.

22. Confidentiality: Legislation is needed to provide that such records are available to all public authorities for any legitimate public purpose, and to eliminate impediments to cross-checking with state and Federal tax authorities. To accomplish this, several sections of the Social Security Act would have to be amended.

23. Work-Related Expenses: Provide a flat standard allowance of $50 to cover reasonable costs of employment, plus reasonable and necessary standard amounts for child care where applicable. In the Welfare Reform Act of 1971 California included a provision to cover reasonable and necessary amounts for child care.

24. Sanctions Imposed for Refusal to Work or Train: Social Security Act should be amended to expand the sanctions so that acceptance and participation in job search, work and training is thereby encouraged. Legislation should provide that a range of sanctions could be imposed by the states including removal from public assistance for a period of up to one year.

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, I believe that many of Governor Reagan's proposals should be seriously considered, and many implemented, as the first stage of welfare reform. I would further propose, however, that the Federal Government give the States the choice of Federal financing of the entire welfare system, or shared costs as under the present system. This option should be available after the State has indicated compliance with the new laws and regulations listed above. At the same time, Federal and State governments should undertake model development of neighborhood welfare corporations. Local community corporations could experiment in the takeover of financing as well as administration of the various welfare functions.

As you know, Mr. President, there are presently two distinct classifications of welfare recipients: Those perpetually in need—for example, the children of those with no, or very low, incomes, the blind, disabled, and elderly—and those temporarily in need who would be employable if given the training or job opportunity. It is obvious that some form of support will always be needed for the first category, whether it is called welfare or something else. The second group, those who are employable—only a small portion of those presently eligible for welfare—will also send assistance through training, job placement counseling, and the like. The neighborhood welfare corporation can be a vehicle for handling either or both, and the models developed should explore such possibilities.

For several reasons, I feel the eventual focus of our national welfare efforts should be at the neighborhood and local community level. Those who most need community support—those who cannot help themselves—are most in need of a sense of caring and belonging. Certainly every community cannot have the facilities to handle all of the disabled, for example. But to the extent that day care, health facilities or home where the elderly can be properly attended to are placed at the local level, the more "at home" and healthy these individuals will become.

In many such cases, being close to home and near loved ones in familiar surroundings can make a critical difference. Furthermore, and H.R. 1 moves in this direction, the administration of such a program can be much more effective at the local level than through the State or Federal Government. Also, the opportunity should be provided for individuals and communities to take care of themselves and their own to the greatest extent possible—even to the point of being able to finance the programs themselves. This might seem farfetched to some, but there is growing evidence that neighborhoods and communities have the potential financial base to fund their own programs if they are properly constructed.

This can be done a step at a time. If the model devleopment of neighborhood welfare corporations proceeds well, the Federal and State Governments can give increasing responsibility to the neighborhoods. Hopefully, they could eventually be independent of Federal and State administration and funding. Financing could come from various sources, perhaps on the basis of tax credits, as suggested in legislation I introduced last year. Whether this concept can become a reality depends on the success of the models developed; the interest evidenced by those involved, particularly at the local level; and the experience and assistance made available by State and Federal Government.

In summary, I would like to see three basic welfare reforms instituted: First, dealing with problems in the present system through the implementation of many of Governor Reagan's recommendations; second, providing the States with a choice of funding of welfare costs, after they have adopted those recommendations; and third, the development of model neighborhood welfare corporations which may eventually assume the administrative, programmatic and financial functions of both State and Federal Government.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Chair lays before the Senate H.R. 1, which the Senate will proceed to consider for not to exceed 1 hour.

The bill will be stated by title.

The bill was read by title as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the Medicare and Medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State Public Assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Alaska has an amendment he wants to offer. In due course I am going to make a motion to table the Ribicoff amendment, which is pending, so that we can have the Roth-Byrd amendment before us. I am not seeking to deny Senators the opportunity to debate the merits of the amendment. I simply think, if I am correct in my judgment, that the Senate is not going to be disposed to add to this bill one of the guaranteed income proposals.

Then, we would have the opportunity to consider other alternatives that could be suggested, such as the committee proposal or the Roth proposal, which would provide for a test, and keep some of the best provisions of the committee bill, or whatever else the Senate wanted to retain. But I am frank to say that some of us are convinced that any one of these guaranteed income for not working programs would destroy this country, and we propose to demonstrate why; and if the Senate is disposed to vote what I believe is the will of the majority and reject these guaranteed income for not working schemes I believe we can go ahead and act on the bill.

If we cannot do that, I suppose again we will have to have a situation where all of these things that can be agreed on by unanimous vote, such as aid for the disabled, the sick, the aged, and the blind, as well as provisions we could agree on unanimously for the benefit of little children, would be held hostage, as happened 2 years ago, when the House refused to go to conference on benefits for the poor, the aged, the sick, and the needy, the whole bill being held hostage to a scheme to put millions of people on welfare for doing nothing.

We think there is grave danger to this Republic in doing that because we believe the only way in the world the country could get out of that trap would be for the Nation to find itself bankrupt, and our whole form of government would come down like a house of cards, because when you get started down that path and get 40 or 50 million Americans on the dole for doing nothing, you cannot vote against paying them more. We would have demonstrations here that would make the march on Washington look like a Sunday school picnic in comparison. You would have 25 to 50 percent of all the population descending on Washington for increased benefits.

To show Senators the kinds of things we could avoid, which the Ribicoff amendment would multiply, I refer to the chart in the back of the Chamber entitled "Bonus for Not Marrying under Amendment 1669 in New York," which is the Ribicoff amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I do not have the slightest idea where the distinguished Senator got those figures because they have no basis. Under the Ribicoff amendment a person phases out at earnings of $5,055. So if there is a father involved who is earning $7,000 he would not be eligible for any payments under my bill.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator will just read the red print on the chart, maybe that is not as clear to him as it is to some of us. There are two lines. One is where the father is married, and the Senator is correct that he would not get any welfare money where he is married to the mother. But if he is not married to the mother, that is where he gets the big benefit. If he is making $7,000 a year, all he has to do is make himself unavailable. Then the mother with three children would get $4,000. That is the welfare payment in New York. The Senator's amendment would guarantee to continue that they would get it without working, and in addition they could get a public housing benefit of $1,100 and medicaid coverage worth $900.

So as long as they remain outside of marriage and bring the children up outside of marriage, their income, and benefits total $13,000 a year.

Mr. RIBICOFF. If the Senator will yield, he is assuming you are able to find the father of these children. In the case of the unmarried mother with children based on illegitimacy, it is almost impossible to determine who the father is. It will be just as difficult to find the father under the Senator's proposal as under mine. My bill also has penalties for the deserting father when he is found.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I had yielded to the Senator for a question but I decline to yield for a speech on my time. I would be happy to yield so the Senator can explain his views later on.

Mr. RIBICOFF. What bothers me about the charts——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I decline to yield further. I do not mind yielding for a question, and I shall be happy to yield time to the Senator later, but I would like to explain my position.

Mr. RIBICOFF. May I ask a question, then?

Mr. LONG. I will yield for a question, but not for a statement or a speech.

Mr. RIBICOFF. On the Senator's chart, why has he failed to include the figures in the pending Ribicoff proposal of $2,600?

Mr. LONG. We did not have the numbers on that, but we have the numbers for proposals guaranteeing $2,400, $3,000, $4,000, and $6,500, this last one being the McGovern proposal.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The McGovern proposal is not before us, but the $2,600 figure is, and with the resources of the staff of the Finance Committee, I do not see why they do not have the figures before us.

Why has not the chairman included the figures of how many people are involved in the committee bill? If we are going to be fair with this body, let us have all the figures.

Mr. LONG. Because at this particular time we are not talking about the committee bill; we are talking about the Ribicoff amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is in the process of comparing the costs. He is running down a comparison of all the proposals. In all fairness, the committee proposal should be before the Senate at the same time, so we know what we are talking about. The truth is that the committee proposal involves more people than the Ribicoff proposal.

Mr. LONG. Under the committee bill, the number of people in families eligible to get their basic income from welfare would be about 8 million, because we reduce the number rather than increase the number.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not yield further. I am going to insist on my right to the floor.

The committee amendment would include finding the father and making the father do what he should do for his children. It is frustrating to try to go to the father if a mother is unwilling to cooperate, and when she finds it to her cash advantage not to have him identified. So we change those incentives in the committee bill.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a chart on this matter be inserted at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAMILY INCOME AND MARITAL STATUS UNDER THE RIBICOFF AMENDMENT IN NEW YORK

Father not married to mother:
Father's earnings	$7,000
Welfare payment to mother and three children	4,000
Public housing bonus	1,100
Value of medicaid benefits	900
Total	13,000
Father married to mother:
Father's earnings	7,000
Welfare payment to mother and three children	0
Value of medicaid benefits	0
Total	7,000
Bonus for not marrying	6,000

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, one of the problems in what we regard as the "welfare mess" is that in some areas in this Nation, including Washington, D.C., more than 50 percent of the children are being born out of wedlock. This is not too surprising, since families can get almost twice as much income by having the children outside of wedlock. Why do we want to have a program that places an enormous advantage, that pays people almost as much money to have children without a father, and to teach children, "This is your papa, but don't tell anybody"? Why should we have a program that pays as much as a man earns in a middle-income bracket, and which encourages women not to marry, and which pays people not to have a father accept his paternal responsibility for children? It is absolutely idiotic. In doing so, it is encouraging corruption. It is teaching children to deceive and misrepresent.

It is teaching people who are making a few honest dollars to decline reporting that income by telling an employer, "I am willing to work for you provided you pay me in cash without records kept," so that people can get income without having their income reduced by taxes.

Take another example. Here is one family in which the father makes $7,000 in income and there are $6,000 in additional benefits. The father spends the night at that house month after month, sometimes every day of the month, in the same house as the mother of the children. The children look exactly like him. But, taking full advantage of the welfare situation, they have $6,000 of income plus the $7,000 he earns.

The family next door is doing what we would like them to do. The man is married. He accepts his responsibilities. He brings his paycheck home, and he claims those children as his dependents. What reward do we give him? We give him a small tax deduction, whereby he can claim those children as his dependents. As far as welfare benefits are concerned, no reward is his if he does the honorable, decent thing.

We should not spend any more money on programs which encourage people to do all the wrong things, which encourage fathers not to admit the paternity of their children, which encourage children to deny their father, if they know who he is, and which encourage people, when they go to work, not to admit they earn anything because if they did, something would be deducted from their welfare income.

For example, under that situation, if a mother went to work and earned something, 60 cents out of every dollar she earned would be deducted from her welfare check. Therefore, it is to her advantage not to report her earnings, since she can keep more that way than she can make by telling the truth. So it is to her advantage to get employment under an assumed name or to earn money with the understanding that no record will be kept and no social security tax will be paid.

When we do that, we are encouraging employers to become a party to this mischief, where they avoid paying the social security tax, and to engage employees who ordinarily would like to be honest, in order to obtain help, let us say, in their homes or for housewives. We encourage such persons to enter into an arrangement whereby they do not pay a social security tax and do not report, for withholding purposes, income paid to an employee.

We can do something to put this situation back in order, to stop encouraging the spending of billions of dollars in ways that encourage people to do all the wrong things. At a minimum we should not put more money in such programs. If we are going to spend money to help the poor, we ought to spend it to encourage people to be honest. We ought to do what we agreed to do, by a vote of 49 to 5, where, instead of encouraging someone to deny his children, he ought to be encouraged to admit they are his children, and claim them as dependents. So if he is working and getting $4,000 a year, which is about $2 an hour, we would pay him 10 percent of the 12 percent which is collected in social security taxes, so as to pay him up to $400 to help increase the income of that family, where a man would report that he has children to support, that he does have a family, that he does have a family responsibility. So we pay what amounts to a tax refund to this family of the social security money collected so as to increase the income of those people and encourage people to work.

When the average American citizen has heard talk about welfare reform, he has been led to believe that people who were deserving were going to get some help, and the people who were not deserving would be removed from the rolls, or else they would get less. Instead, we find that the so-called welfare reform proposal puts more people on the rolls who are not deserving and adds more for those who are not deserving and creates discrimination against people of this Nation who are doing the honorable, decent thing. That is not what we want.

This proposal doubles the number of people who are on the welfare rolls. Just look at how the number works in some cases.

Louisiana, on some occasions, has been described as the welfare State, because we had some of the most liberal welfare programs. I guess, as an employee of the State government, I helped to get the welfare program into effect in Louisiana. I was proud that in our State the old age program resulted in more people drawing welfare checks than New York State, which had five times the population we had.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Would the Senator tell us what a family of four receives from public assistance in Louisiana?

Mr. LONG. It is a lot less than it ought to be, for a lot of good reasons. For example, court decisions and HEW decisions have loaded the rolls with so many people that should not be on the rolls that the only way we could find money to pay them was by reducing the overall level by 50 percent.

In 1960, there were 3 million people in this country under this AFDC program. Between 1960 and 1970, it went to 10 million. And how did it do it? Well, the No. 1 achievement was the victory of these so-called poverty lawyers in striking down the man in the house rule.

Suppose there would be a man living in the house, the children looked exactly like him, and he had a job, well able to support the family. The case workers would say, "In view of the fact that you are living in the home, and the children look just like you, we would assume, even if you are not married to mama, that the income you are making must be available to help that family." So it would be felt that that family should not be on the rolls, because this was something similar to a common law marriage, and the availability of that father's income ought to be attributed to that family's support. They would say, "We do not think that family belongs on the rolls."

But a Supreme Court decision—which was a great victory for the poverty lawyers—said, "You cannot hold that man responsible for the support of that family unless you can prove they are getting that money."

Who would know that, except papa and mama? And both of them would have a cash advantage not to reveal it.

That decision was one of the principal causes, that plus the decision to eliminate duration of residency requirements, that moved that figure from 3 million up to 10 million on the welfare rolls.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, first, the Senator has not answered the question as to what a family of four gets in Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I will tell the Senator. About $1,200.

Mr. RIBICOFF. It is $1,248.

Mr. LONG. And that is about two-thirds of what they were getting prior to the time we got our rolls loaded down with all those people who did not belong on there.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Will the Senator give us his opinion as to whether he thinks four people in the State of Louisiana can live on $1,248 a year?

Mr. LONG. I can tell the Senator they are not starving, and perhaps a number of them have other income that they are not reporting. That is a part of the mess that we have, and that is why, as far as this Senator is concerned, I would be tickled pink to provide them the $2,400, or more than that, provided that we were paying that money in ways that encouraged them to do the right thing instead of encouraging them to do the wrong thing.

I will tell the Senator one thing: I am not willing to put any more money into the kind of things of which I could give examples, where people are on the rolls more times than one. If you are on there five times, like one of these ladies in Baton Rouge, for example, it is not too difficult to get by.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Let me ask the Senator from Louisiana another question. In Louisiana, in January 1972, 241,250 people were on AFDC. Does the Senator contend that 241,250 people in Louisiana were crooks who were cheating the Federal and State Governments?

Mr. LONG. In the family category, according to our figures—this is an HEW estimate—we will have an average of 323,000 on the welfare rolls in the family category in 1973.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Well, it may be more than that.

Mr. LONG. I would be first to agree that there are a great number of them. If you look at that chart there, when we had 3 million on those rolls before they started doubling and redoubling these numbers and loading the rolls down with people the State did not think ought to be on there, I would be willing to concede, for the sake of argument, that every last one of them belonged on those rolls; but when they start providing that you cannot attribute that income of that father to that family, even though the children look exactly like him, because he is not married to the mother, and start striking down every effort of the State to make the father do something for the support of the children, and to require the mothers to pursue the fathers to try to make them contribute to the support of their children, and they start calling it harassment when you try to find out about people who are on the rolls five times when they are only supposed to be on there one time, I would have to say definitely there are people on those rolls who do not belong there.

Most of them, I am sure, are on there legally. As far as I am concerned, it is as bad——

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wonder whether the distinguished Senator——

Mr. LONG. Why do you not let me make my speech? I let you make yours.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I thought I would ask the Senator some questions on the figures he quoted. He talked about a number of people cheating.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I decline to yield to the Senator from Connecticut any further. I just want to make my speech. I let the Senator make his speech, and now I am ready to make mine.

Mr. President, there in the rear of this Chamber is a chart showing what we can expect if we pursue that plan of a guaranteed income for not working. Pat Moynihan said about the plan, as quoted several times by the Senator from Virginia, that this is a plan to put people on the rolls whether they are deserving or not. And under this plan, Mr. President, these people have every excuse the mind of man can conceive to enjoy the full benefits of the welfare payroll and decline employment or avoid taking employment all at the same time.

So what do we have? We found that while we had about 3 million recipients in 1960, when John Kennedy became President, by the time the welfare lawyers and poverty lawyers got through running their cases and HEW got through promulgating regulations to say we would put people on the rolls just on their own applications through the mail or by telephone, they built those rolls up to 10 million people.

Should all those people be on those rolls? All you have to do is go into the areas where we have large rolls and talk with their neighbors, and the neighbors are utterly outraged about it, because they say they are aware of the fact that many of these people should not be receiving welfare payments.

Here will be a father who knows just exactly when the next welfare check will show up, so he shows up the same day as the check, helps mama spend the money, and then he is gone until the next welfare check shows up.

The next door neighbors know about it, and they are resentful about it.

The expansion of the welfare program in New York State elected a mayor of New York City and helped elect a Governor of New York State, until they got a taxpayer revolt on their hands that just will not quit. The result is that they are trying to put some of those people to work up there to earn some of the money they are getting.

What happens? Again, the same people who are trying to get the Ribicoff amendment through are trying to keep them from putting people to work, when Governor Rockefeller tries to see to it that they have to do a little something to help justify the welfare payments they are receiving.

What happens if we put into effect the family assistance plan? I do not have the figures of the specific amounts set forth by the Senator from Connecticut, but I do have figures available on what the family assistance plan would do. It would not cost as much as the Ribicoff amendment, but where we in Louisiana have a total of about 400,000 people on the welfare rolls today, with a very generous set of eligibility rules, this family assistance plan alone would increase that number to 823,000 people on the welfare rolls.

If one were to ask the people of Louisiana, "What do you need least in Louisiana," they would say, "The last thing on earth we need is 400,000 more people on the welfare rolls. It is hard enough to get people to work the way it is now."

I have had the experience, and so has everyone else, of trying to find someone to do some work, willing to pay the minimum wage or whatever it takes to get somebody to come and do some work. So have my neighbors.

What happens? You drive down the road, and there is a man sitting there on a porch, with little children running around.

You ask him, "Do you want to go to work?"

"Nothing doing."

That man was once a good worker, but since the day that family was added to the welfare rolls, he just has not been able to turn to, and those big muscles are going to waste.

You drive on down the road, and you see another fellow sitting on the porch, and ask him to do some work.

"Sorry, can't be bothered." You try to get somebody to work—"Thanks just the same. I think I can find something better to do with my time." They have plenty of time to go fishing and do everything except work. Why? Because work has so little reward left to these people when you are going to reduce their welfare check by the amount they earn—at least, until their earnings exceed a certain amount.

We in Louisiana, a little State of 3,700,000 people, would have 825,000 people on the welfare rolls, about twice the number we think we should have on the welfare rolls—at least, twice the number that could be justified by any standard at all, and that figure includes the aged, blind, and disabled.

In the family category, it would be more than twice the number we think should be on the welfare rolls.

But do not think you can stop there. Read the press releases when the administration proposed a family assistance plan. It sounded great to me at that time. As Governor Hearnes of Missouri said:

> If you read the press releases, you would vote for it. If you read the bill, you would vote against it.

That was my experience. I read the press release, and it seemed to me that it was wonderful. The President was going to guarantee very poor family of four $2,400, and they were apologetic that they could not guarantee them $4,000 to put them up to the poverty level, but the Government did not have that much money. It would progress to the $4,000 level. So even the initial proposal contemplated going up to the poverty level, so much so that others suggested the same thing.

The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) suggested that we ought to guarantee going up to $5,150 by the fifth year under the program. Under the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) the proposal was for the poverty level of $4,000. If you advance this to the poverty level, how many do you have on the welfare rolls? You then have 67 million Americans on the welfare rolls.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Would the Senator tell his colleagues what the estimated difference in cost is to the American people as between his proposal and the proposal in the Ribicoff amendment?

Mr. LONG. According to our estimate, what we would suggest would cost $2.5 billion less. That is not counting the value you get for the work somebody does. When you put a million people to work, society should be getting some benefits from it. But even without putting any value at all on what society gets from the work people do, such as hospital aides, working in day-care centers, helping to keep a place clean, it is our estimate—this is the estimate of Mr. Robert Myers, who was formerly chief actuary in the social security setup—that this would cost approximately $2.5 billion less than the Ribicoff proposal.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator——

Mr. LONG. Please understand this: I would not be exercised about the $2.5 billion difference if I thought the Ribicoff amendment was proceeding on the right basis. What concerns me and makes me tremble in fear for the fate of this Republic is to see a proposal receive the kind of support this matter has received from the press, when nobody on earth can stop at the $2,400 or the $2,600 proposed by the Ribicoff amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. How could anybody here buy the argument that we ought to guarantee every family a certain minimum level of income whether they work or not, reserving to them the right not to work, which is implicit in every one of these proposals? How could anyone buy that argument and then proceed to argue that you ought to hold it below the poverty level? You would have to go to the poverty level, in logic and conscience; and everybody who has proposed it, so far as I know, has conceded that sooner or later you ought to at least advance it to the poverty level. When you do, you then have 67 million people on the welfare rolls. I do not think you can stop there; because when you have 67 million Americans drawing those payments, it is my contention that anybody who knows the first thing about politics would know that so far as those people are concerned, they are going to ask one question when they go to vote next time: "How did you vote on our increase?"

Every Congress will see those who speak for these people—probably the National Welfare Rights Organization, a very effective group—leading demonstrations. We have had some of it. The demonstrations we have had are nothing compared with what we can expect when they have 67 million people to organize, coming before us, conducting sitdown strikes, conducting demonstrations, holding marches on Washington, and saying, "We want our check increased to the poverty level."

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. At the Democratic National Convention, the Senator from Missouri had a chance to see how easily some of these programs can be sold. At that convention, one-third of the delegates, knowing no more about it than they did, voted to say that it ought to be $6,500. When you come to the $6,500 figure, which is advocated by the National Welfare Rights Organization, that gives you 97 million Americans on the welfare rolls; and if you include in the generality of that program the aged and disabled, that will give you more than half of all Americans on the welfare rolls, which means at that point you then have more people on the taking down end in America than you have on the putting up end.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the Senator from Missouri asked a question. I think he ought to be able to get an answer on the other side.

Mr. LONG. I thought that in due course——

Mr. RIBICOFF. No——

Mr. LONG. I am willing to yield later for a question.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The distinguished Senator from Missouri, for whom I have the highest——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, from time to time I have sat in my seat and heard a speech with which I did not agree, and I wish the Senator from Connecticut would accord me that courtesy, or if he prefers, simply not bother to listen to the speech. I want to tell my side of the argument for a change.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator from Louisiana answered the distinguished Senator from Missouri in comparing figures of his proposal and mine.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has declined to yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator can answer on his time, and in due course I will be happy to yield for further questions.

Just take a look at how far you are down the road when you buy the $2,400 figure. I do not have the figures on the $2,600 proposed by the Ribicoff amendment, but Senators will have a chance to vote on the $2,400, too.

In the State of Mississippi, 13 percent of the population is on the welfare rolls. At the $2,400 figure, 29 percent would be on the welfare rolls. Move that up to $3,000, and it becomes 44 percent on the welfare rolls. Move it up to the poverty level, and more than half the population of Mississippi would be on the welfare rolls.

One would think that Mississippi would be in here beseeching us to pass this. You are not going to get any votes out of Mississippi for this proposal, for the simple reason that they would not be able to get anybody to go to work. All their industry would have to shut down. Welfare would provide so much payment and work would have so little reward left that people would rather go fishing than work at a shipyard, a cotton gin, a shoe factory, a hosiery mill, or any place else there that would provide an opportunity for earning a living.

In the State of Alabama, approximately 12 percent of the population is on welfare. The family assistance plan would put 22 percent on welfare, and the Ribicoff amendment would move it up to 24 or 25 percent. Move it up to the $3,000 figure, and 35 percent would be on the welfare rolls. Move it up to the poverty level, and 45 percent of the population of that State would be on the welfare rolls.

Look at how it would work in State after State. In Louisiana, it is about 13 percent. The family assistance plan would move it up to 22 percent. The Ribicoff amendment would probably double it, to about 24 percent. Move it up to the $3,000 level, and it would be 32 percent.

Mr. President, when we put these people on the rolls we have so many on the rolls as when we find someone like this lady who showed up the other day on the welfare rolls four times and was trying to go on a fifth time, or like the delegate that went to the Democratic National Convention under an indictment for being on the rolls twice—we would have so many people on the rolls that did not belong there that when we tried to investigate, they would all rise up with a hue and cry that they were being harassed; and to prosecute them for being on the rolls twice or getting more money than they were entitled to, we would have to have a trial by jury of their peers, but with half the population on the rolls, heaven knows how difficult that would be to get a jury to be convinced of their wrongdoing, so that the whole thing would get into a total impossibility. This means the only way on earth we can hope to help vast numbers of people and hope to benefit our country at the same time would be to pay people in a way where we would look at what they can earn and increase the reward for going to work.

Another point which has been subject to some criticism—and it is a good idea and all the ladies' organizations support it—we would then propose that we do everything the Federal Government and the State government can do to provide a mother with all the assistance that can be provided for her to pursue the father who departs from that community or that State, leaving his family destitute so that they must apply for welfare, and provide her with a lawyer at State expense to pursue the father and make him contribute to the support of his children.

Following that approach, we would have some hope of getting the genie back in the bottle, but if we double the money we pay people to do the wrong things, or we are going to double it again and move up from 10 million of those now on the welfare rolls, to 12 million in 1973, and then we move it on up to 21 million, which the family assistance program would do, and then move it up to 25 million, which the RIBICOFF amendment would do, we will not be able to stop going to the $3,000 level and eventually we will go up to 67 million, and then to 97 million, and taking into account the other categories like the welfare caseload, we would have more than half the population of the United States on the welfare rolls.

That, Mr. President, is something that must not be permitted to happen in this country.

I am persuaded that if that does happen, there will be a taxpayers' revolt, or there will not be enough votes coming from the taxpayers who will have to pay to support the beneficiaries who would be getting it, with a probability that the Government would come to an end in one fashion or another.

Goodness knows what would happen to our country then. I do not want to be around to find out.

I propose that we start instead to move this thing in the right direction.

Senators should be concerned about the increase in births out of wedlock, particularly teenage mothers. The number of families headed by women increased by 15 percent between 1970 and 1971—1 year, where the number of families of both father and mother, has declined. Mr. President, can you imagine that? The number of families with a mother and father declined while the number of families headed by the mother increased 15 percent—in a single year, between 1970 and 1971.

And why not? We pay these billions of dollars to bring that result about and we are now being asked to spend additional billions of dollars.

That is not what I call reform.

That perhaps explains why the family assistance plan did not muster one single Republican vote in the Committee on Finance, where the President has some of his best friends, after they had studied the implications and the problems involved here.

That would also explain why there was no support from the supporters of the New Deal like Senator ANDERSON, the man who helped Harry Hopkins put over a program to help people back in the days of the Depression, a program that now looks mightly good nowadays compared to the program for a guaranteed wage for doing nothing. Also along with the oldtimers who were in favor of share the wealth programs, have found that they simply could not support the kind of thing that encouraged people to do all the wrong things, and pay them more and more for doing less and less, and encouraging people to engage in the sort of corruption and immorality that this Nation seeks very much to avoid.

There are people who talk about how much they are against corruption and then they come forward with proposals which will create corruption in numbers running beyond the millions, and would proceed to put more money into something that will achieve that result while declining to support what should be put into it.

It is for that reason that we should not proceed with the family assistance plan, or with the Ribicoff amendment, or with any of these other things that will take us in the wrong direction.

I am frank to say that, in the spirit of compromise, I would be willing to support, if it is the will of the Senate, the suggestion of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR.) that we give the Ribicoff plan a try and give them whatever resources they need to give it a fair try, and that we give even the workfare proposal that the committee made, the guaranteed work program, a test and see how it works out, and give the family assistance plan an adequate try to see how it works out.

Two years ago, I was willing to try the family assistance plan proposal, but the Secretary of HEW did not want it. They wanted to hold all the benefits for the aged, the blind, and the sick. It is a program which could very well destroy this form of government. HEW has not been willing to have a fair test of it. Why not, it is hard to say, but I would be willing to propose it and to vote for it and to try it, all for the opportunity to prove me wrong, if I am wrong. But I would also like the opportunity to prove them wrong if they are wrong.

But again, as long as I have any influence in this body, I intend to speak out against going along with any kind of arrangement that would make for the dissolution of our form of government by paying to encourage people to do all the wrong things that in the end the Government could no longer sustain the burden of paying.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. NELSON. I wonder whether we could clarify a point or two here. It is correct that the Senator from Connecticut strongly advocated the concept of a pilot program to test out the administration's proposal 2 years ago, is it not?

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Connecticut has suggested that several times, and he has made that statement on the floor, so that I do not believe I am violating any confidence when I state that the Senator is correct and has many times said he thought the administation was foolish that it did not accept the proposition made by them to put their family assistance plan to a fair test to show what would happen. He has indicated to some of us that if he had that same opportunity, he would have jumped at it, had he been the Secretary of HEW, as, indeed, once he was.

Mr. NELSON. The administration would not agree to the pilot project?

Mr. LONG. That is right, the administration would not agree to it. They cooperated and encouraged the House not to go to conference with us on a proposal that would have provided benefits for the aged and the sick.

Mr. NELSON. Is it not correct that if we had followed the suggestion made by the Senator from Connecticut we would now have a good 2 years of experience to look at and use as a basis for legislation at this time?

Mr. LONG. I suggested to him that we try it in the District of Columbia, where every Senator and Representative could take a look and see how it works and judge whether we wanted to make that momentous a decision, to embark down that road.

I say to the Senator now that if he can persuade me that I am wrong about it, more power to him and I will support his position, but it will take a lot to persuading to do it. If they would try that in the District of Columbia where we could go and see and be convinced it was working, I would support it. I have been told by the Department that this is the last place we would test it. I admit that this would be a tough testing ground, in the District of Columbia. I would be willing to afford them that right.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I was not through.

Mr. BENNETT. I am sorry.

Mr. NELSON. Is it on the same point?

Mr. BENNETT. It is on the point of a pilot test 2 years ago.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator may go right ahead.

Mr. BENNETT. Does the Senator remember that 2 years ago the administration wanted to run a test and then automatically put it into effect and not come back to the Congress and tell us what the results of that test were? They were not willing to give us a chance to look at the results after the test. That was the reason I was against their testing proposal of 2 years ago.

Mr. LONG. That was the problem. Those in the majority on the committee were willing to go along and have a real test. But the Department insisted, and they were dogged in their determination that if there was to be a test, the program would go into effect automatically. And this ties in with the remark of the Senator from Virginia when he said, "Suppose the test is not a failure. We still would like to see the results before the program goes into effect. Why shouldn't you bring it back and show it to us and let us decide whether it is a success?"

If we value the independence of the of the legislative branch, we would have to say, "Why should we buy a pig in a poke? If they are to run a test, why can they not bring the results back and then let us make up our own minds?"

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I agree with that. I intend to vote for a pilot project if such an amendment is offered, and I understand that it will be.

Mr. President, I do not happen to think that anyone has discovered the solution to this problem. I think that the chairman of the Finance Committee and the members of that committee who have worked on the bill have put in a tremendous amount of thought and energy in an attempt to come up with something that is better than the administration offered. I happen to prefer the proposal of the Senator from Connecticut a bit more than the committee proposal, but I am not really happy with either one. I do not think we have the answer, and I do not think we will have it until we have job opportunities and can get the unemployment rate down to about 2 percent. We have to have real jobs for people.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator's proposal was a step in the right direction. He wanted to provide about 400,000 good jobs for people. It is not a bad idea, of course.

The House had something that was somewhat similar in their bill. We will be in conference, if we ever get that far.

I voted for the tax reduction concept. So did a majority of the Senate, as the Senator knows. While we may differ with respect to what jobs ought to pay and what kind of jobs they should be, there is no doubt in my mind that the Senator from Wisconsin agrees with a majority of the committee that a job comes nearer to being the answer than to offer someone a guaranteed income for loafing for his lifetime. That just does not make too much sense, certainly not to the majority of the committee, and I do not think it does to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. It does not. I will vote for the pilot project. I am not happy with anything else that is pending. However, just to conclude this and for the clarification of the RECORD, that proposal of the administration for a $2,400 guaranteed annual income means—if the statistics are correct—under the President's proposal, almost one-third of the people in the State of Mississippi, for example, would go on the dole—29 or 30 percent.

Mr. NELSON. I think that is correct. And that is a large percentage of the population.

What I would like to have clarified in my mind is whether the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee knows where the President now stands on this whole welfare business, because as the Senator knows, it is a guaranteed annual income. Mr. Moynihan—a fine Democrat and a good friend—came in to see me a year ago. He made it clear then that it was a guaranteed annual income.

He was an influential force in getting administration approval of this plan for a guaranteed annual income. The President has never wanted to use that phrase, but that is what it is. However, what puzzles me is that the President sent the House of Representatives his proposal for an annual income of $2,400 for everyone and now talks as though he has repudiated his own plan. In fact, Pat Moynihan, in explaining it, said:

Now, Gaylord, you and your wife and your three children can go up here—

get a cabin there and move in. And if I came out there and offered you the job of President of Harvard at $50,000 a year, and you say, "No, I don't want that job," you can still draw your guaranteed annual income minus a certain amount for your refusal to work.

There simply is no doubt that the President's proposal is for a guaranteed income.

I now refer to the Republican platform. The President sent to Miami a group of his representatives so that he would be sure they did not put something in the platform that he did not approve.

As the political reporters pointed out in their articles, the President's people were there dictating the platform. I do not question that. The President wants the best platform he can get.

So the history is that he sent a bill to the House of Representatives that provided for a guaranteed income and several times criticized Congress for not passing it. Yet in San Clemente he said in effect: "They are sitting on my legislation and will not give me my guaranteed annual income legislation," although he did not use that phrase. The platform, dictated by the President's representatives said:

We flatly oppose programs or policies which embrace the principle of a government guaranteed income.

On which proposition does the President stand? Can the distinguished Senator explain that to me?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the best I can tell the Senator is that the President favors H.R. 1 and does not favor the committee amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Would that not be a repudiation of the platform plank?

Mr. LONG. I do not doubt the Senator's word. The Senator read it out of the platform. I do not doubt that is correct. I do not doubt that Mr. Moynihan told the Senator what the Senator said he told him. He told me things that persuaded me not to vote for the program but to vote against it.

I must say that every time I talk to the President, he sounds as though he agrees with me 100 percent on this proposal. But I regret to say that when one reads the bill and gets down to the specifics, it does not work out the way that the press releases say.

The President said in a speech at Williamsburg that everyone should take a job, that no job should be too menial. And he was quoted in the press as saying that. He said that everyone should take a job and no one should be on welfare that would not work. However, I would be the first to say that either he does not understand this bill or he is recommending something on the one hand and favoring something else on the other.

It is obvious that anyone on the committee who has studied this bill—as I think it is obvious that anyone who has studied the matter as much as the Senator has—will find implicit in this bill his guarantee of $2,400 to a person for doing absolutely nothing. And we see all the dangers that go along with it. That is what the program was as it came from the House. We recognize these dangers and we agree with what the President says in all of these declarations, that people should work, that he believes in the work ethic, that people should take jobs and people should not be on welfare if they do not take a job. Those problems are there, but the President is not supporting the Ribicoff amendment. He is standing on the $2,400, under the terms and conditions in H.R. 1, as it passed the House.

The best I can make of it is I do not think the President would be unhappy, from talking to him, if we passed a bill to make work more attractive than welfare or to make welfare less attractive than working.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator will bear with me for 1 additional minute, I do not suggest that I out of hand reject the proposition there should be some kind of guaranteed support. In fact, I think there should be for those who are unable to support themselves; and I am going to vote for the Ribicoff amendment.

I want to clarify the record on the kind of propaganda that has been spread around the country by the President, his supporters, and the administration that the President does not support guaranteed annual income. I have the highest regard for Professor Moynihan, who is one of the ablest, most delightful, and thoughtful men I know. When he was in my office he was honestly explaining the bill. I had just gone on the Committee on Finance and I did not know anything about it. He gave me an explanation of the bill and said that it is guaranteed annual income. When I got around to studying the bill, I discovered I had been given an accurate, concise explanation of what the bill did in fact provide.

I think the record should be clear that the President has been supporting a guaranteed annual income, and yet that is what he has been attacking through the Republican platform and in speeches around the country. I do not think the country should be misled on the position the President has taken in support of his own bill. Yet his own recent rhetoric he is repudiating what he has criticized us for not passing.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I regret to say that the hour that was allotted I have consumed. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the time be extended by an additional half hour, that the Senator from Connecticut be recognized, and that at the conclusion of that 1½ hour I be recognized so that I might make a motion to table the pending amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, first, I would like to answer a few questions that have been raised by some of my colleagues. The distinguished Senator from Wisconsin asked why the President's position is as it is today. Secretary Richardson happened to be in Bridgeport, Conn., on September 23, 1972, when the Bridgeport Post stated:

Asked why Mr. Nixon had not bought Senator Ribicoff's compromise on the matter, Richardson candidly admitted the President owed more politically to some of the Finance Committee conservatives who might have felt he was going over their heads in supporting Mr. Ribicoff.

So much for Presidential principle.

The distinguished Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) asked a question regarding cost. I regret he is not here.

Mr. President, so many misstatements have been made—I am sure not deliberately—that the true figures and costs are hard to find. If one subtracts payments to adults who have been otherwise provided for in the committee bill, the following data applies to the various welfare proposals:

The family assistance program under H.R. 1 would cover 10 million people. The family assistance program under the Ribicoff amendment would cover 10 million people. The Finance Committee bill on AFDC would cover 10 million people. Basically there are the same 10 million people and they are all unemployable.

May I point out that the committee bill does not alter the present AFDC system, which is inefficient and ineffective.

Under H.R. 1's OFF proposal, which means Opportunities for Families and applies to the working poor and those employable, the number of people covered would be 9 million people. Added to the unemployables, this gives you a total of 19 million people. Under the $2,600 proposed by the Ribicoff-administration program, OFF would involve 14 million people for a total of 24 million people.

But I think all of us would be most interested, since the distinguished Senator from Louisiana talks about the fantastic rise in the welfare rolls, in the fact that under the committee's "workforce" proposal, 20 million people would be added to the 10 million for a total of 30 million people covered by their program.

Mr. LONG. Is the Senator from Connecticut including in that figure the 20 million persons who would benefit from the refund of the social security tax?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is so. The working poor would be covered by the proposal.

Mr. LONG. I do not regard a person as being on the welfare rolls if he is getting a refund of social security taxes. Maybe the Senator does.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No; but those on the OFF program are not "on welfare" either. They are working men and women who receive income supplements. Let us dispel a basic myth. We have two types of people in America today who are poor—those people who are unemployable and those who work. The unemployable include the sick, the disabled, the incapacitated, and mothers with young children. Ten million people are included in this category and are unemployable under anybody's definition—mine, Senator LONG'S and President Nixon's.

It is one of the great tragedies of the President's term that, having developed a sound proposal, he did not have the courage of his own convictions to support it. He ran away from it. The President said to America, "We have serious problems here. We are putting people on welfare who do not work and we do nothing to encourage people to work who should be working. We want to be sure someone who works gets more than someone who does not work."

So, he proposed a floor under income of $2,400 and he developed an income supplement for those who can work.

Let me give an example of what the President and I are talking about. Assume a family of four earns $1,000. Under my proposal he could receive supplemental benefits. To compute his payment the Ribicoff bill would disregard a part of his earnings—namely $720 plus 40 percent of additional income. Thus, from $1,000 would be deducted $720, leaving $280. Then deduct 40 percent of the remaining income, the countable income of the recipient would be $168. The difference between $168 and the $2,600 benefit is the off payment—$2,432. This family's income would be $1,000 of earnings plus $2,432 in off payments—a total of $3,432.

If the family had been under the program for unemployables its payments would have been $2,600. Clearly, then, it is better to work than to remain solely on public assistance.

In the few minutes remaining, I have a very concise explanation explaining what the Ribicoff-administration program is all about. I shall be pleased to answer any questions or be interrupted at any time.

The Ribicoff-administration agreement consists of two facets: Aid to those unable to work; and aid to the working poor including a preliminary pilot program of this concept.

Under my proposal. the family assistance plan—FAP—for those unable to work would go into effect on January 1, 1974.

For the opportunities for families program—OFF—pilot programs would be established by the Secretaries of Health, Education, and Welfare and Labor. The report of findings would be submitted to Congress and the President by December 31, 1973. If either House of Congress passed a resolution within 90 days thereafter expressing disapproval of the OFF program, it would not go into effect. But if Congress did not take any action, the OFF program would trigger into effect on July 1, 1974.

A. ASSISTANCE FOR THOSE WHO CANNOT WORK

This category includes children under 16, mothers with children under age 6, the elderly, ill or incapacitated, or their caretakers, caretakers of a child where the father or other adult relative in the home is working or registeerd for training, the caretaker of a child where suitable day care is unavailable, and unemployed, male-headed families for whom jobs are unavailable. The Finance Committee's definition of who is unemployable is virtually identifical to that in my bill.

1. PAYMENT LEVEL

Those unable to work will be assured a basic Federal payment to a family of four of $2,600. The payment will increase as the cost of living rises.

2. MAINTENANCE OF BENEFITS

In those States where payment levels exceed $2,600, States would be required to make supplemental payments to assure that no recipient receives a smaller payment than he or she receives under the present law. To alleviate the harmful effects of State welfare cutbacks of the last few years, the States would be required to supplement up to the higher of their January 1971 level or any higher previous or subsequent level.

3. STATE FISCAL RELIEF

Under the provisions of my amendment, every State would receive substantial fiscal relief. Under present law States receive matching funds from the Federal Government ranging from 50 to 83 percent of a State's costs. Under my proposal the Federal Government will pay 100 percent of the first $2,600 of cost.

In addition, while my amendment requires a State with a higher payment level to make supplements, the States would be "held harmless" from additional costs once their payments reached the levels for calendar year 1971.

Total savings to State and local governments in the first fiscal year will amount to $2.8 billion compared to $2.4 billion under H.R. 1 and $2.3 billion under the committee proposal. Fiscal relief would also be provided on an emergency interim basis. The States would receive $1 billion in fiscal relief in the interval before the new welfare program takes effect.

4. UNIFORM STANDARDS AND PROCEDURES

National uniform benefit levels, eligibility rules, and Federal administration would be established by the Ribicoff-administration agreement.

Procedures of the original Ribicoff amendment to assure fairness, including right to counsel, written opinions in welfare adjudication, elimination of punitive and cumbersome reporting and checking procedures are also included as are protection of employee rights, elimination of State residency requirements and determination of eligibility based on current need.

5. CHILD CARE

My proposal provides $1.5 billion for the creation of child-care services and $100 million for the construction of child-care facilities to assist working mothers.

Mothers with children under age 6 are exempt from the work requirements. Mothers with children over age 6 would register for work only if adequate day care were available and close to their place of residence or employment. Adequate day care is defined to mean child-care services no less comprehensive than those provided for by the 1968 Federal Interagency Day Care Requirements.

B. ASSISTANCE TO THOSE ABLE TO WORK: A PILOT PROGRAM

The most innovative portion of our welfare reform proposal is the opportunities for families—OFF—program. It would provide income supplements to those people who work, but still have low incomes to insure that it is always financially more profitable to work than simply receive welfare. Such a proposal would also remove the incentive for fathers to leave their families.

In addition, one of the basic tenets of this proposal is that all those who are able to work should be required to do so. Every able-bodied applicant who applies for welfare, including those already on welfare, would have to register for employment or training with the Department of Labor. The only exemption from this requirement would be for those responsible for the care of aged, ill, or incapacitated family members or children under age 6. Failure to report for work or training would result in a loss of benefits unless the recipient could show that jobs or day care were unavailable.

Those deemed employable would immediately be referred to suitable employment paying at least the Federal minimum wage. If no jobs were available the Department of Labor would develop employability plans and provide the necessary job training. In addition, in recognition of the fact that the private job market does not have sufficient jobs available for all those able to work, my proposal creates 300,000 meaningful public service jobs in the first year of the program.

Because of the innovative nature of the OFF program, my amendment would require that aid to the working poor be tried out on a limited basis to test out its structure and theories. It is time to try out on a pilot basis any new major social program before committing the resources of the Federal Government to total implementation.

The pilots of OFF will test the following:

First, the work experience of participants—the types of jobs they have, their hours and earnings;

Second, the effect of the program on the composition and structure of families;

Third, the types of services that are needed for the working poor;

Fourth, the extent to which families who are eligible for the program actually participate; and Fifth, the administrative provisions of the program.

FISCAL RELIEF UNDER RIBICOFF-ADMINISTRATION AGREEMENT

There are two types of fiscal relief under the Ribicoff-administration agreement:

First. The first is emergency fiscal relief for the States. This is so-called Percy amendment. Under this provision States would receive retrospective relief for fiscal 1972 and fiscal 1973. Once a State's costs rise above its calendar 1971 AFDC cost levels, the Federal Government will assume all cost rises up to 20 percent above that level. Above a 20-percent rise in costs the regular matching formula for the State would again be in effect. Such a provision will save the States $515 million for fiscal 1972 costs and $704 million for fiscal 1973—a total savings of $1.2 billion.

Second. The second and most important element of fiscal relief takes place once the FAP–OFF program goes into effect. Under this program the Federal Government assumes 100 percent of the costs for the first $2,600. Under present law, costs are shared between State and Federal Government on a matching basis—usually a 50–50 matching.

The 27 States whose payments exceed $2,600 would have to make supplemental payments to bring payments up to January 1971, levels. These States would be assured, however, that their costs would not have to rise above calendar 1971. In other words, a State would be "held harmless" from additional costs once it reached 1971 levels. This program for families alone would save the States almost $1.9 billion.

While the Ribicoff bill does not legislate for the adult categories, it does have a "hold harmless" clause in its miscellaneous provisions to provide fiscal relief to the States for their costs above 1971 levels for the aged, blind, and disabled.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain charts, an editorial and a news release.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMERGENCY FISCAL RELIEF UNDER THE RIBICOFF-PILOT FISCAL RELIEF PLAN

This provision provides that once a state reaches its calendar 1971 AFDC cost levels, the federal government will assume all cost rises up to 20% above fiscal 1971 levels. States would receive regular matching funds for cost rises above that level. As a condition of fiscal relief states would have to maintain payment levels at the January 1971 level.

This program is an interim measure pending the effective date of FAP. Retrospective fiscal relief in fiscal 1972 and 1973 would amount to $1.2 billion as follows:

MR. NIXON, WELFARE, AND THE SENATE

So long as there was no danger of enacting it, President Nixon was 1,000 per cent behind welfare reform. His speeches a short while back would make exquisite reading on the Senate floor today, hailing (as they invariably did) Mr. Nixon's own contribution to the cause of welfare reform, immodestly suggesting (as they invariably did, too) that the President's own proposal was the most important legislation to come before the Congress in nearly four decades. Important to whom, one now must ask? To those welfare recipients whose plight under our present inhumane system he seemed to describe with such conviction? To the left-out working poor who were—and are—victimized by laws Mr. Nixon professed to find so inequitable and so urgently in need of change? To the put-upon taxpayer who was footing the bill for this basically unfair and ineffective system of public aid? The answer seems to be that is wasn't important at all in Mr. Nixon's opinion. For the President, faced with a choice between passage of a good version of the bill (worked out by his top aides) and no bill at all, has opted for no bill. And the best explanation you can get for this from those in the know around him is that politically a decent version of his welfare reform bill wouldn't be helpful in this campaign year. Better to have the "issue," whatever that may mean—better to pretend you tried and failed.

That is the background to the vote that will probably be taken today on the Ribicoff-Administration welfare bill. We hyphenate the name of the bill and decline to drop the word "administration," because, despite the political decision in the White House to reject this proposal after a good deal of work on it by administration agents, it remains the fruit of that joint effort and the measure most deserving bipartisan support. In testimoney to this fact, some 19 Republican senators not long ago urged just such an effort. In the absence of the President's approval, however, they are not expected to vote for the measure today, or at least most of them are not expected to. So Mr. Nixon held the key to reform of this nation's scandalous, costly and self-defeating welfare system—and he has tossed it away.

Only a miracle—or a sudden access of independence on the part of those Republicans who know the bill's merits—could possibly save it today. At the same time, the Senate is likely to vote as well on a so-called "pilot" measure, which is the work of Senator Byrd of Virginia and Senator Roth of Delaware. This is a mischievous bill and it should be defeated. For under the guise of merely "trying out" different versions of welfare reform for the next several years, it would leave intact some of the most objectionable features of the Senate Finance Committee "welfare" bill including its dangerous child care provisions and its blood-testing, fingerprinting, sleuthing features. It is not a mere exercise in experimentation and program testing: it is an attempt to enact far-reaching law.

Today, of course, would have been a good time to enact far-reaching law of another kind—to enact the genuine reforms of the genuinely terrible system of which Mr. Nixon has spoken so often and so eloquently in the past three years. We were among those who took him at his word. And, having gone so long and so far on faith, it does not seem to us that this is a particularly apt moment to abandon all faith. In that spirit we express the frail and probably doomed hope that the Senate will pass the Ribicoff-Administration welfare bill today—with or without the administration's help.

THE LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS OF THE UNITED STATES NEWS RELEASE

WASHINGTON, D.C.—The League of Women Voters of the United States today charged that the Administration had pulled the skids out from under efforts to pass welfare reform legislation this year.

League President Lucy Wilson Benson stated, "The Administration's lack of support for the compromise Ribicoff package—which they helped shape—is a shocking example of duplicity. It looks as though the only recourse for those who support progressive reform will be to actively campaign in this Congress to defeat welfare reform provisions affecting families."

The League stated that both the House passed version of Title IV and the Senate Finance Committee version now before the Senate are blatantly inadequate and would only compound the nation's existing welfare mess.

Mrs. Benson said, "The legislation under consideration by the Senate would neither provide for the legitimate needs of welfare recipients or provide employment for those who could work. The best thing that the Senate can do is to delete Title IV from the bill entirely."

Mrs. Benson said, "Election year politics have completed distorted the welfare issue. Now that the Administration has repudiated Senator Ribicoff's compromise package, which the League supports, the chances for meaningful reform are pretty slim. The enactment of either the Long or House provisions would be a disaster and the League will work for their defeat."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. The Senator referred to the Ribicoff-administration position. Is this the proposal the Senator worked out with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare?

Mr. RIBICOFF. For 3 years we were in constant communication with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Two of my staff were assigned full time for 3 years to work on this issue. We finally came to agreement on the $2,600 proposal now before the Senate. We thought we had reached an agreement at that time. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor sent down a recommendation to the President to accept it.

If Senators want to know about the sad and sorry state of Government in America today, the Secretaries at all departments are figureheads. The staff in the White House runs the show. It has been practically the same in every administration. I experienced it myself, under President Kennedy. I found myself advocating programs I did not believe in, and being against programs that I did believe in. I found that everything has to be cleared through the staff of the White House.

Under the present administration, all domestic decisions in the White House are made by Mr. Ehrlichman, and every Secretary of every department is an errand boy often for some kid on the staff of the White House who has had no experience, and who tells experienced people what to do.

So the President of the United States ran away from the agreement we worked out with the staffs of HEW and the Labor Department.

Now, I would like to remind my colleagues that we have two parts under my proposal. One is the family assistance plan for people who are not able to work, and which goes into effect on January 1, 1974. For the opportunities for families program—these are people who can work—I have a pilot program until January 1, 1973.

I am not going to stand on this floor and say I have all the answers and my program is the only program. I do not know whether my program will work. So I have said, "Look, if we are going to fold some 14 million people into the welfare program, let us try it out and see if it works. And let us have a program that improves the lot of people on welfare now."

As to the costs, the proposal of $2,400, which was originally proposed by the President, would cost $8.4 billion. My proposal would cost $11.8 billion. The proposal of the Finance Committee, under the chairmanship of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), would cost $15.8 billion. These are HEW figures.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. TUNNEY. I dislike to interrupt the eloquent exposition being made by the Senator from Connecticut. I had a question to ask the Senator, and I know time is running out. I understand that under the parliamentary situation it is impossible to offer an amendment to the amendment that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut has offered. However, I am very deeply concerned about the question of people who are able-bodied, women who do not have children 6 and under, working for the money they are receiving from the Government. I for one believe that every able-bodied person should have a minimum income, but that minimum income should be a result of work.

I recognize it is difficult, in one fell swoop, to create sufficient jobs to employ all able-bodied people who are presently on welfare.

Would the Senator from Connecticut be amenable to a proposal that would require all able-bodied people presently on welfare and with children not under 6 to be phased into a public service work program, say over a period of 3 years, one-third, one-third, and one-third?

I realize I cannot offer this proposal as an amendment to the Senator's amendment, but it could be offered as an amendment to the Roth-Byrd amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. May I comment? First, the proposal that I have makes provision for 300,000 public service jobs. My proposal is more expensive than the House bill, because the House bill provides for 200,000 public service jobs, and I have proposed 300,000 public service jobs. That is about all the Department can handle in the first year.

But I know the Senator's concern, and eventually, if we are going to pay people to work, we are going to have to create sufficient public service jobs. The weakness of the Senator from Louisiana's proposal is that under his "work fare" proposal people would be forced to go to work for $1.20 an hour.

Mr. TUNNEY. I could not think any proposal would be better for the first year. I was wondering if the Senator would be agreeable, after that first year, to having a phased-in program, for instance, one-third 1 year, then the second third the following year, and eventually all able-bodied people on welfare would be required to work at a public service job.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Without question, but in order to do that we would have to create the public service jobs. The Senator is absolutely correct. As a matter of fact, in America today we could provide 3 to 4 million public service jobs in needed employment for the public benefit.

The Senator is on the right track. I know his concern, and commend him. But once we get into the second year or the third year, the type of program that he suggests would certainly have my support.

Mr. TUNNEY. I appreciate the Senator's comment. I was just wondering, if the Senator from California could find the parliamentary machinery to offer such an amendment after the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut is passed, would the Senator from Connecticut be willing to support it?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Well, I would say thanks for the optimism, but if my program passed I would be more than willing to support almost any amendment the Senator might propose.

I would like to point out that the amendment specifically provides that every able-bodied person who applies for welfare would have to register for work or training with the Department of Labor. The only exceptions would be those responsible for the care of an ill or aged family member, or mothers with children under the age of 6. Failure to report for work or training would result in loss of benefits unless the person could show that a job or day-care services were unavailable.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, the crux of the enormous welfare problem which this country now faces is embarrassingly simple. The basic cause and the only genuine solution to the welfare mess lie in jobs—meaningful jobs, jobs with enough pay to keep a family going, jobs to make a contribution to society and at the same time provide the means for the individual self-support and self-reliance on which our country depends.

Lack of jobs is the prime cause of the welfare mess.

And providing jobs is the only solution to that mess.

In 1971, 14.8 million people received some form of welfare payments. Of that number, 4.2 million received aid under programs for the elderly, blind, and disabled. The balance, 10.6 million, received AFDC payments: 7.7 million children and 2.9 million parents. By 1974, it is estimated that there will be at least 3.3 million families receiving AFDC payments. Of these, approximately 40 percent will be headed by employable adults who could hold down a job. Under the Finance Committee bill, all of these people about 1.3 million, will be required to register for work.

I have no quarrel with that requirement. I believe that those who can work should work, and what is more, I believe that most of them want to work.

But the fundamental question we face is how we get from here to there—requiring a man to take a job is one thing when there is a job to be had, and another thing when there are no jobs because 5.6 percent of our work force is unemployed.

The Ribicoff amendment in its revised form is a beginning of a solution to this problem. It does so both by requiring all able-bodied welfare recipients to work and by establishing a system to provide that work.

It calls for the establishment of the system in 1974, with a 2-year period in the meantime for pilot projects to test its effectiveness. After those 2 years, the full program would go into effect unless the House or Senate elects to exercise the veto power provided by the amendment.

Unfortunately, however, the amendment is deficient because it provides for only 300,000 public service jobs for persons who have registered for work but cannot find a job.

Mr. President, this provision is a crucial one in my mind. If we really want people to get off the dole and back to work, then we have got to provide the jobs. And to provide those jobs it is going to take a substantial commitment of public funds for public jobs, because they are not going to be found in the private sector by itself.

Let is not kid ourselves on this—if we invest only a token amount in public service jobs, then only a token number of jobs are going to be available—and we will still pay the rest of the cost through the same old welfare mess.

And let is get another thing straight—a public service job is just that—a job. It is a man or woman working with dignity; it is not a dole, and it is not welfare. And, at least, society will get some return for the money it invests.

Mr. President, I believe that what the taxpayers of this country—what all our people—are demanding from us is not that we somehow punish welfare recipients but that we provide a means so that men and women work to support their families. If they are able-bodied, they should work, and I believe they want to work. Most of the intolerable pressure on the present welfare system comes from people who need jobs, who want jobs, who are willing to work hard to support themselves and their families, who want to be rid of welfare every bit as much as the rest of us.

Some of them are given training to meet the demands of the modern labor market. Yet when they finish training, they face the demoralizing reality that there is still no job for them to go to.

Unless we make the effort to provide these jobs, we are perpetrating a hoax on the taxpayers who foot the bill for a bloated welfare system.

If welfare reform is going to have any meaning at all, if it is going to offer any hope of solving the welfare mess, we cannot avoid the ultimate issue—a job for every able-bodied American. We must provide those jobs, and where needed, we must pay for them.

We are not going to solve the welfare problem unless we are prepared to accept the fact that once more, as in past times of economic hardship, the Federal Government must be the employer of last resort.

The Ribicoff amendment attempts to deal with this problem in a limited fashion by providing some jobs—jobs which would benefit the community in fields like health, education, urban and rural development, recreation, environment, public safety, and other forms of needed public services.

Unfortunately, the number of jobs it provides is small in proportion to the need, only 300,000 by 1974, of the estimated 1.3 million jobs which must be found. And therefore, I do not see how I could support it unless it is altered to provide a more realistic and longer term commitment to public service jobs.

I recognize that this number was selected on that assumption that a greater number of useful and meaningful public jobs would be difficult to create in the first year. But the amendment in its present form makes no commitment beyond the initial year, and it is therefore inadequate.

I believe we should strengthen substantially the public service job section to provide public jobs for at least one-third of all those required to register for work by 1975, for two-thirds by 1976, and for all such persons by 1977.

And frankly, unless a provision of this kind is included, I cannot see how the present version of this amendment would do the job adequately.

The fact that the Ribicoff amendment contains a 2-year period for pilot projects confirms this belief.

Given that period for testing the system which is contained in the amendment, it is my belief that the next 2 years should be used to test a system in which every person in the test area is guaranteed a public job as a last resort. In that way, we can learn in very practical terms the relative costs and benefits of those jobs.

If it turns out that such an extensive public job program is not workable, we can vote to change it or abolish it at the end of the test period, using the veto provision contained in the Ribicoff amendment.

One thing we do know—the need for improved public services has never been greater. No one who has seen the deterioration of services in our major cities can dispute the work that needs to be done—roads go without patching, buildings go without painting, parks go without cleaning. Our police and firemen lack adequate support. And needed new facilities languish on the drawing boards.

And the irony is that we know from direct and recent experience that public service jobs can be created and implemented swiftly and effectively. After only a few months' experience with the meagerly funded Emergency Employment Act which created only 150,000 jobs—the Nation's mayors asked for a million more. And a recent survey of the program by a Senate committee shows that there were five applicants for every one job, and that the cities and States could have created twice as many jobs immediately if more money were available.

My own belief is that we will find that the cost to the American taxpayer of such a system is far, far less than continuation of the present hoax which tells a man he must work but denies him a job. Furthermore, the dividend to a better life for all of us through the public services provided by those workers is vastly more valuable than the continued drain in money and personal dignity from the present mess.

The cost of such a program is not going to be cheap. The best estimates are that it costs approximately $400 million for every 100,000 public service jobs to be created. Thus if we were to guarantee a job for each of the 1.3 million able-bodied welfare recipients required to work, the cost could run as high as $5.2 billion.

But by using the time for testing provided in the Ribicoff amendment, we could learn on a limited basis whether the cost is one which we should be prepared to pay.

And frankly, Mr. President, that is my quarrel with the Nixon administration. We are here today trying to make decisions about reforming a welfare system which has cost us billions upon billions of dollars, with only the barest of guess-work about the effect of what we are doing. Three years ago we had the chance to try out some of these proposals on a pilot basis. Such was the proposal put to President Nixon, and back came his answer: All or nothing—enact my proposal in its entirety, with only guesses as to what its effect will be, but do not try it out in advance. And so here we are, 3 years later still trying to guess what is best for the country. We could have completed the 2-year test which was proposed by Senator RIBICOFF and others and been ready now to pass a law based upon hard data and experience. But instead, we are confronted with three camps, equally divided, and each as uncertain of the long-term effects as the others.

I cannot and will not support the President's proposal, because it is fundamentally a fraud upon both taxpayer and welfare recipient. It purports to put people to work yet does nothing to provide the jobs for them to work at. Nor can I support the present Finance Committee version, because it is fundamentally a cruel and punitive measure which would create a vast new category of subpoverty employment.

And so I am left with the Ribicoff proposal. My own position is that it must give greater emphasis to public jobs if it is to have any hope of succeeding in practice and if it is to get my vote.

But I will vote against tabling it today if I believe, after asking the Senator from Connecticut a few questions, that he would support an adequate number of public service jobs phased over a period of 4 years to provide a job for able-bodied welfare recipients.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. NELSON. This is predicated on the proposition, however, that there is a job available to be supplied either in public service employment or in the private sector, is that correct?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is absolutely correct. I cannot imagine anything worse than to say someone has to work and then not have a job for him, or to train him for a job that does not exist.

Mr. NELSON. So that, in the circumstances where someone registers for work who needs welfare in order to feed the children and pay the rent, and no job is available, then he will still receive welfare support for the family, is that correct?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Yes, without question. I cannot follow the reasoning of the distinguished chairman. I hope the day never comes when I am willing to say that $1,248 is enough to support a family of 4 anywhere in America. I do not think that anyone in this body could make it any place in America on the sum of $1,248.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am pleased to yield.

Mr. NELSON. In the Senator's amendment, was he dealing solely with the question of public service jobs, or are prospective recipients to be registered with the employment service as available for other jobs in the private sector?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Everyone who is on welfare, unless incapacitated by blindness, ill health, or caring for children under the age of 6, must register. Anyone who applies for welfare with the Welfare Department and says he is available for a job, the Labor Department lists and classifies him. The job should provide the minimum wage——

Mr. NELSON. That is not required, though?

Mr. RIBICOFF. My amendment requires that the minimum wage be paid. I would certainly hope that we do not take people on welfare and put them to work at less than the minimum wage. This would destroy the wage structure in America.

In other words, what we would be doing under the committee bill is subsidizing the sweat shop, subsidizing the individuals who want to get cheap labor, and destroying the structure of the American labor market.

Mr. NELSON. Does the Senator mind yielding further?

Mr. RIBICOFF. No, I am pleased to yield to any Senator on the floor who has any question.

Mr. NELSON. In distinguishing between the private employment field and the public service, is it clear in the Senator's amendment that of the 300,000 public service jobs—is it 300,000?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is correct.

Mr. NELSON. That anyone who accepts a public employment job or service in public employment must be paid the same wage as anyone else in that municipal or State jurisdiction is paid for the same job?

Mr. RIBICOFF. Let me respond to the Senator by saying that he or she must be paid the prevailing wage or the minimum wage, whichever is higher. In other words, if the prevailing wage in an area is $2 an hour——

Mr. NELSON. No, I am talking about public service, first.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Public service jobs would also provide prevailing wage or the minimum wage, whichever is higher.

Mr. NELSON. That puzzles me a little bit. Does the Senator mean the prevailing wage within municipal employment in that area for that kind of a job?

Mr. RIBICOFF. For that kind of a job.

Mr. NELSON. He would not say that if the prevailing rate for a stenographer or a truck driver was higher outside the governmental sector——

Mr. RIBICOFF. No, within that category.

Mr. NELSON. Within the governmental sector?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Senator is absolutely correct. That is what the amendment provides.

Mr. NELSON. Within the private sector, are there any limitations on the kind of job?

Let me give an example. Suppose the head of a family, let us in this case a mother with no spouse and with children 6 or over, is offered a job at the minimum wage; does she have to take it, regardless of what the job is?

Mr. RIBICOFF. No; she does not. If there is a job offered to go across town, without any public transportation, and she does not have means of transportation and adequate day care then she does not have to take that particular job.

Mr. NELSON. This is one of the points frequently raised, as the Senator from Connecticut knows. It has been mentioned on a number of occasions, I believe, by witnesses at the hearings as well as in discussions in executive sessions: Here is a mother with three children 6 or older; she now cleans house now does all the cooking, now supervises her children, she is there to get them off to school, she is there to receive them when they come back from school, but she is offered a job at the minimum wage to do housekeeping for someone else across town. Is she required to take it? Will they provide the transportation to get her there?

Mr. RIBICOFF. If there is no transportation to her job or no day care facilities for her children, then she does not have to take that job.

Mr. NELSON. I know it is very difficult, as the Senator from Connecticut and everyone here does, to draft a general section in a statute without it appearing to authorize certain requirements that no one would intend.

Would it make any sense at all to the Senator, in any event, if, say, it was summertime and the children were not in school, so the mother has to leave her three children at a day care center, which is available, and then go someplace across town to work at the minimum wage, doing housekeeping, when, in fact, it would cost more to have the children in the day-care center than the mother could earn working at housekeeping across town? Certainly, it is not the intent of the Senator's proposal to write that kind of requirement into the bill; is it?

Mr. RIBICOFF. You are correct that it would be self-defeating to require someone to work when it would be more expensive to provide day care than to pay public assistance.

The expenses of day care are excluded from the benefits that the person receives.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask a question on that point?

Mr. RIBICOFF. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Is it not going to be cheaper and better to keep that home intact by keeping the mother home with the children, rather than putting the children in a day-care center, which is going to be much more expensive, and have the mother go to work? That was the whole principle of aid to dependent children. The only trouble is that this program became expanded and expanded. I think what we are trying to do here is to get after the rascals. I hope we are not getting after the legitimate mothers.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Not at all. In our proposal, we have been very careful to make sure that there are penalties for desertion. If the father can be found, he will be brought to either civil or criminal justice and made to pay his share.

The weakness of the proposal and the arguments of the distinguished chairman is the assumption that you can find the father.

If a father can be found and it can be proved that he is the father, we make provision that under those circumstances the person who so avoids his responsibility is subject to criminal prosecution and is required to make payments for the support of his children.

Mr. PASTORE. Is that a Federal offense?

Mr. RIBICOFF. That is a Federal offense.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 4:53 p.m. having arrived, under the previous order the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) is recognized for the purpose of moving to table the pending amendment of the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the pending amendment of the Senator from Connecticut be laid on the table.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MAGNUSON (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. INOUYE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GRAVEL (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) is absent on official business.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "yea."

The respective pairs of the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT) and that of the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) have been previously announced.

The result was announced—yeas 52, nays 34, as follows:

So Mr. LONG's motion to lay Mr. RIBICOFF's amendment on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENNEDY). Debate on this measure is limited——

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President——

Mr. MONTOYA. Mr. President, let me take this opportunity to congratulate all the members of the Finance Committee on the completion of this monumental legislative task. While the Senate has already spent many hours on this legislation, our job is not yet complete.

As the Members of the Senate are well aware, there are differences between the House and Senate versions. I particularly want to address myself to the treatment accorded members of the chiropractic profession under the House version.

Under the House-passed bill, the Secretary of HEW is directed to conduct further study concerning the inclusion of chiropractic services under medicare.

The Senate, realizing that further study was not necessary, wisely included chiropractic services that comply with HEW standards under medicare.

This inclusion of chiropractic services is essential if we are to maintain freedom of choice in the area of health care for all Americans. The right of a patient to choose his or her health care method is a cherished one, and must be retained. To exclude chiropractic services from a growing Government health program such as medicare is to deprive millions of Americans of their right to select the health care they prefer.

The crisis of health care in America requires that all branches of the health profession join in the common effort. To exclude chiropractic practitioners from this battle is to cripple our efforts on this front. We have a duty to assure adequate health care for all our citizens, and we cannot meet this responsibility if we continue to exclude recognized health care professionals from participation in federally assisted health programs.

If we continue to refuse to include certain classes of health care professionals, we will continue to fail our citizens, especially the elderly whose fixed incomes often preclude their receiving adequate health care without assistance. The availability of other avenues of care is not enough when we fully consider the important role that confidence and familiarity play in successful health treatment.

It is because I believe in the right of free choice, and I know that Senators share this belief, that I strongly urge the Senate conferees to continue firm in their support of this section of H.R. 1. The will of the Senate on this matter is clear, and meets a critical need for America's elderly. As this matter goes to conference, I again urge that the inclusion provision of the Senate bill be retained.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I have long been of the opinion—as I have stated publicly several times—that it is totally impossible to get real welfare reform during this session of the Congress. The Senate Finance Committee has adopted a "Workfare" program which discriminates against poor people who are out of jobs and those who cannot work. It would, in virtually every aspect, make worse the present failures in the welfare system.

H.R. 1—the welfare bill adopted by the House of Representatives and generally supported by the Nixon administration—is a punitive and regressive measure. It is not welfare reform.

No welfare bill can measure up to the need for reform unless, among other things, it guarantees the rights of present recipients, provides for decent pay and jobs and sets an adequate standard of income. Everybody agrees that the present system traps people in poverty, that people need an adequate income if they are to have some chance to escape poverty—to be able to afford decent education, health, housing, and job opportunity.

Yet, most of the proposals—even the so-called liberal compromises—do not meet these standards.

Further, it is clear that, even if the Senate were to pass at this late date an acceptable welfare reform bill, there is almost no hope that the measure would come back from conference in an acceptable form.

I disagree with some well-intentioned organizations and Senators who believe that any bill that recognizes the rights of the "working poor" is better than nothing. I believe that any measure that compromises on basic principles will actually put off the day when we might have real welfare reform—a guaranteed income at a decent level for those who cannot find work or who are unable to work. Furthermore, I vigorously oppose any legislation that would make worse the already wretched lives of present recipients.

Consequently, I strongly feel that any present compromise on principle will not hasten the day of welfare reform—but will delay that just achievement. I believe the best we can do in this session of Congress is to act to protect the rights of those already receiving assistance and to give fiscal relief to the States. We must, then, continue to work for such education of the public and the Congress as will allow real welfare reform—not make the present welfare system worse.

Therefore, in line with my long-announced position on this matter, I intend to vote for the motion to table the Ribicoff amendment.

NEED FOR PASS-ALONG

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, for the vast majority of older Americans the 20-percent social security increase will bring long overdue and welcome relief.

It will remove almost 2 million persons from poverty, including 1.4 million aged 65 or older.

In terms of dollars and cents, the new law will boost monthly social security benefits:

From $133 to $161 for the average retired worker;

From $223 to $270 for the typical retired couple; and

From $114 to $137 for the average widow.

However, for some older Americans—particularly those who also receive old-age assistance—this raise may be neutralized because their walfare payments will be cut back by the amount of the 20-percent increase.

Others may actually be worse off because the new raise will make them ineligible for medicaid.

The Senate has taken action to assure that no one will be penalized because of the 20-percent increase.

The Senate has approved an amendment to pass along the 20-percent raise for persons who receive social security and old-age assistance. The effect of this measure is to assure a net increase in the limited incomes for the elderly poor.

Moreover, the Finance Committee has included a provision in H.R. 1 to protect the aged, blind, and disabled against loss of medicaid coverage because of the 20-percent increase. A similar provision has been incorporated in legislation recently reported out by the House Ways and Means Committee.

Both these provisions, in my judgment, are urgently needed now.

A recent article in the New York Times makes a compelling case for prompt action on these matters.

Mr. President, I comment this article—entitled "Social Security Rise Becomes a Nightmare for Many Elderly"—to my colleagues and ask unanimous consent that it be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY RISE BECOMES A NIGHTMARE FOR MANY ELDERLY

(By David K. Shipler)

Like millions of other aged Americans, Marie Nashif of Denver will receive a 20 per cent increase in her Social Security check this month. But unlike most, she will not welcome the extra cash.

Mrs. Nashif is among the 187,000 or so elderly for whom Congressional election-year generosity has become a nightmare. The Social Security rise, voted by Congress June 30, has pushed her income just high enough to make her ineligible for the welfare and Medicaid benefits that she needs so desperately.

Mrs. Nashif, a small, alert, 74-year-old woman, suffers badly from arthritis. Until now, her heavy medical bills have been paid fully by Medicaid. But when her monthly Social Security check rises from $138.40 to $166.10, it will surpass the $147 figure that Colorado uses to divide those who are eligible from those who are not.

In exchange for her $27.70 additional from Social Security, Mrs. Nashif will have to pay $5.80 a month in medical insurance premiums, 20 per cent of all doctors, bills, the first $68 a year in hospital expenses, $17 a day after 60 days in the hospital, and the total amount of prescription drugs.

Further, she will lose $7 a month in welfare payments, she will probably become ineligible for food stamps, and her rent will rise, since she lives in Federally subsidized housing where rents are tied to income.

"When I take all this into consideration," she said, "I'll be a darn sight worse off than I am now."

Congressional action could eliminate such hardships, and several bills addressed to the problem are now pending. Last Friday, the Senate voted a solution for welfare recipients by passing a measure that would force states to raise the eligible income limits for welfare by the same dollar amount as the Social Security increases. Prospects for the bill in the House are uncertain.

Even if the bill becomes law, it will not help people who now collect Medicaid and are not welfare recipients, and there are thousands of those in New York City alone who risk losing their medical benefits. The bill addresses itself only to welfare recipients.

ACTION BY STATES

Some states have already taken action on their own. Gov. William T. Cahill of New Jersey has ordered Medicaid benefits continued for 4,000 elderly who would otherwise become ineligible.

Delaware has allocated $1-million to raise the eligibility income maximums. Gov. Winfield Dunn of Tennessee has changed administrative regulations to keep 7,500 people on the welfare rolls, Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, Florida and Wyoming are among the states that have increased the income levels that determine eligibility.

No action has been taken in New York. The state's Department of Social Services contends that it has no power to make the necessary changes without approval from the Legislature, whose regular session begins in January.

New York City has already sent letters informing 6,000 elderly people that their welfare benefits will be halted. This means that they will have to begin paying 20 per cent of their medical expenses.

In addition, many aged New Yorkers who are not on welfare and are not addressed by the Senate bill will be hurt by the Social Security increases.

The city's Office For the Aging estimated that 14,696 persons who now receive 80 per cent of their medical expenses from Medicaid will be cut off altogether. In addition, 22,434 who are not on welfare but are fully covered by Medicaid will have until they have spent all their income above the welfare maximum on medical bills. At that point Medicaid will pick up the full burden again. This totals about 43,000 elderly affected adversely in New York City alone.

The figures elsewhere are smaller, ranging from about 10,000 in California to 400 in Vermont. The United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare calculates that nationwide, 187,000 people will become ineligible for welfare and 93,000 will lose Medicaid.

Even many who do not lose will not gain from the Social Security increase, since some states apply Social Security income against welfare payments. As Social Security rises, welfare decreases; the beneficiary is not the individual, but the state.

"I'm all for the increase," said John Maros, administrator of the Wyoming Division of Public Assistance. "The more Social Security they get the less public assistance is needed." The State of Washington estimates that it will save $2.3-million in welfare payments by next June 30.

"The average pensioner in Alabama won't gain a dime as a result of the increase," said Ruben K. King, Alabama director of pensions and security.

BAN UNDER SENATE BILL

"This is a form of psychological deceit practiced upon senior citizens," said C. Christophor Brown, head of the law reform unit of the Baltimore Legal Aid Bureau. "The government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other."

This cannot happen if the bill passed by the Senate is approved by the House and signed by President Nixon; Under the measure states would be prohibited from reducing welfare payments in response to the Social Security increase.

The bill would also cost the states additional money by requiring them to raise the income limits for eligibility, not merely for those welfare recipients who are on Social Security, but for all disabled, aged and blind. In New York, many in the disabled category are narcotics addicts.

In most states, elderly people on Social Security receive only small amounts of money from welfare, and their removal from the rolls is less of a hardship in terms of direct welfare payments than it is in terms of the services that are corollaries to a welfare status.

In many states, for example, Medicaid—whose cost is shared by the Federal and state governments—is available only to those whose incomes are low enough to qualify them for welfare, even though the Federal guidelines allow Medicaid benefits for those with incomes up to 133 per cent of the welfare maximum.

Other benefits, such as food stamps, legal help and homemaking services, are also often tied directly to welfare.

BRONX WOMAN HIT

Mrs. Elesabeth Miles of 1365 Finley Avenue, the Bronx, for example, faces the loss of a valuable homemaker because the Social Security rise will make he ineligible for welfare. She is 62.

"The letter came last Wednesday," she said, "and now I have nothing. I have been a widow for 29 years and am completely blind in the right eye and partially blind in the left eye. My son is unable to take care of me because he has eight children of his own."

Her monthly Social Security check, to rise from $133.10 to $159.70, will have to cover her $70.40 a month rent, as well as her food and other expenses.

"They say that they are giving me a 20 per cent increase, but they been taking everything back and all I get is nothing," Mrs. Miles said. "We worked hard to take care of ourselves and they just don't care if we live or die."

In a small, sad room on West 86th Street, Joseph Wolfson, 80, a frail, asthmatic man spoke with fear. "Most of the time I am in the hospital because of asthma," he said. "I feel all right now, but who knows what can happen next week? I just can't live with that little amount of money and no medicaid."

Eva Estelle Jackson, 70, lives alone in Montgomery, Ala., and has suffered from tuberculosis and ulcers. She now receives $132 a month in Social Security and $24 in welfare, but she has been told that the Social Security increase will raise her a few dollars above the welfare maximum she will therefor lose Medicaid, which paid several thousand dollars for three weeks she spent in hospitals last year.

"It's gonna hit me hard," Miss Jackson said. "If they'd just left me with a pension of $1 or $2, and Medicaid, I'd have been a lot better off. If I had some illness, I just don't know what I'd do. I'd just be in bad shape, because I've got nobody to fall back on."

Miss Jackson discovered that she will also have to pay a $2-a-month garbage collection fee to the City of Montgomery. Only those on welfare are exempted from the fee.

Another Montgomery resident, Emily Shepherd, 75, is now in the hospital, being treated for emphysema. When her $137-a-month Social Security check rises to $164, she will lose $66 in welfare from the state, ending up with $39 less a month than now, and no Medicaid.

At that point, her choices will be "either to go into a convalescent home or just go back to my apartment and die," she says. "It's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of. They should have had a little forethought. They're just a bunch of meatheads in Congress."

In Las Vegas, the Social Security check of Henrietta G. Oberg, 78, will rise from $153 to $183 a month, but her $23 welfare payment will be eliminated as a result, leaving her $7 ahead, but without Medicaid. She is being treated for cancer. "What am I going to do?" she asked.

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mary Wright also lost Medicaid. "It will take it all away from me," she said of the Social Security increase. "I can't afford it. I'm having it all canceled. I got to pay my rent, clothes, and feed myself. There's nobody else to do it for me. You can't get any glasses, can't get any teeth—anything you need you can't get."

The difficulties have also affected some younger people. Lennell Frison, 40, a father of 10 in Portland, Ore., is a former foundry worker whose arthritis put him out of a job two years ago. He and his wife, who has diabetes, were told recently that the Social Security rise would mean the end of welfare and the end of medical payments.

"Without that aid to the doctor, man, I don't know how we're going to make it." His wife, he says, works sometimes as a janitor at night, making about $100 a week. They had planned to try to buy the sixroom house they now rent, he said, "But we're probably gonna lose it."

Mr. Frison has considered sending his 17-year-old son to work, but he is torn by powerful doubts. "I hate to take my oldest boy out of school, because then he'd be where I am. I think I'd go back to work and punish myself instead. I can't stand up too long. My legs won't hold me. But it gets you. A man ain't nothing if he can't feed his children."

In Hazelwood, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis, Mr. and Mrs. Russell French face similar difficulties. Mr. French suffers from heart disease and diabetes, she from arthritis and rickets. Two of their children, Charles, 15, and Lorraine, 12, have rickets, and a third, Russell, is diabetic.

"It's the Medicaid that counts," said Mrs. French. "I figure it would cost us $100 a month just to keep my husband supplied with medicine." Neither she nor her husband can work; their Social Security comes to about $400 a month.

The family's physician, who asked not to be identified, confirmed that the French family needed constant medical attention. "Of all my families this is the one that is probably the most in need," he said.

When Mrs. French was 10 years old and living in Corning, Ark., she recalled, her mother died because she could not get medical help. "If anyone thinks things have changed, they haven't," she said, "because the same thing probably will happen to us."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Senate is still not in order. Senators are requested to take their seats.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time on H.R. 1 be extended for 10 minutes so that the distinguished Senator from Delaware can withdraw his substitute and the distinguished Senator from Alaska may be recognized for not to exceed 10 minutes, with the time equally divided between the manager of the bill and the author of the amendment, and that at the conclusion of the 10 minutes, the Senate proceed to the consideration of the HEW appropriations bill under the previously agreed to order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, are we on controlled time on the HEW appropriations bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The HEW appropriations bill is to be considered under controlled time.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, what is the time situation on the HEW appropriations bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time on the HEW appropriations bill is 3 hours on the bill, 1 hour on any amendment in the first degree, and 30 minutes on other amendments.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I intend to withdraw my amendment at this time. It is obvious that the Senate is not yet ready to vote upon it. In withdrawing it, I intend to withdraw it under a parliamentary situation where I can be sure that we get a vote.

Mr. President, I withdraw my amendment No. 1668.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I call up the Metcalf amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 935, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following new sections:

LIMITATION ON FISCAL LIABILITY OF STATES FOR OPTIONAL STATE SUPPLEMENTATION

SEC. 513. (a)(1) In any case where supplementary payments are made during any fiscal year with respect to Indians (within the meaning of section 1101(a)(9) of the Social Security Act) pursuant to a State's agreement under section 1616 of the Social Security Act (as in effect after December 31, 1973), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (subject to paragraph (2) of this subsection) shall—

(A) reduce the amount otherwise payable to him by the State for such fiscal year as provided in section 616(d) of such Act by an amount equal to the total of the supplementary payments so made with respect to all such persons (if and to the extent that such agreement provides that the Secretary will make the supplementary payments involved on behalf of the State (or political subdivision thereof)), or

(B) pay to the State (or political subdivision) which made the supplementary payments involved an amount equal to the total of such payments (if and to the extent that such agreements do not so provide).

(2) Paragraph (1) of this subsection shall apply with respect to the supplementary payments made during any fiscal year with respect to Indians (within the meaning of section 1101(a)(9)(1) of such Act) pursuant to any State's agreement or agreements only to the extent that—

(A) the total of such payments, when added to the total of the benefits payable for such fiscal year to those persons under title XVI of the Social Security Act, does not exceed

(B) the total expenditures made during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, for aid or assistance with respect to Indians (within the meaning of section 1101(a)(9) of such Act) under the plans of such State approved under titles I. X, XIV, XV, and XVI of such Act in such fiscal year (excluding expenditures authorized under section 1119 of such Act).

(b)(1) In the case of any State which has an approved plan, under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act, which provides for the furnishing of aid in accordance with a standard of need higher than that which would be required to furnish aid to families of various sizes in accordance with the dollar amounts referred to in clauses (1) through (4) of section 404(a) of such Act, there shall be paid to such State for each calendar quarter (commencing with the quarter ending March 31, 1973) an amount equal to 100 per centum of the difference between the cost incurred by such State in providing, to Indians (as defined in section 1101(a) of such Act), such aid for such quarter in accordance with such higher standard over the cost which would have been incurred in providing such aid for such quarter to such Indians in accordance with the standard which would be required to furnish aid to them in accordance with the dollar amounts referred to in clauses (1) through (4) of such section 404(a).

(2) Amounts payable to any State under this subsection shall be payable in like manner as were payments to which States were entitled under section 403 of the Social Security Act, as such section was in effect prior to January 1, 1973.

(3) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to make the payments authorized by this subsection.

ADDITIONAL FEDERAL PAYMENTS UNDER PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS ON ACCOUNT OF EXPENDITURES FOR AID OR ASSISTANCE TO INDIANS

SEC. 514. (a)(1) Section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (64 Stat. 47; 25 U.S.C. 639), is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 9. The Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to each State which has a plan approved under title I, X, XIV, XV, XVI, (or, after December 31, 1973, title VI) or XIX, of the Social Security Act, for each quarter, an amount equal to the excess of—

"(1) the total expenditures made during such quarter under such State plan as aid or assistance with respect to Indians (within the meaning of section 1101(a)(9) of such Act) (including amounts expended by reason of section 1119 of such Act, to the extent applicable, but not counting so much of any such expenditure as exceeds the limitations prescribed for purposes of determining the Federal share of such aid or assistance under the applicable provisions of such title or part), over

"(2) the amounts otherwise payable to such State under section 3, (or, effective for quarters beginning after the quarter ending December 31, 1973, section 603), 1003, 1403, 1505, 1603, or 1903 of such Act (including amounts determined under section 1119 of such Act, to the extent applicable) as the Federal share of aid or assistance under such plan with respect to such Indians."

(2) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective with respect to calendar quarters beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) Section 1101(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) The term 'Indian' means any individual who (a) is a member of a tribe, band, or other organized group of Indians, including those tribes, bands, or groups terminated since 1940 and those recognized now or in the future by the State in which they reside, or who is a descendant, in the first or second degree, of any such member, or (B) is considered by the Secretary of the Interior to be an Indian for any purpose or (C) is an Eskimo or Aleut or other Alaska Native, or (D) is determined to be an Indian under regulations promulgated by the Secretary after consultation with the Secretary of the Interior."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 15 minutes, and the Senator from Louisiana is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I am offering an amendment for the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), which is cosponsored by myself, the distinguished Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the distinguished Senators from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER and Mr. FANNIN), the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the distinguished Senator from Montana (Mr. MANSFIELD), the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), the distinguishetd Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), the distinguished Senator from Utah (Mr. Moss), the distinguished Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), and the distinguished Senator from New Mexico (Mr. MONTOYA).

Mr. President, the historical position of the Government of the United States is that it has a unique and undeniable responsibility to one segment of our society—the American Indians. We have taken much from these people, so much, in fact, that as a group the American Indians rank lowest on our economic scale—lower than the black and lower than the Spanish-speaking Americans.

Of the two Houses of Congress, the Senate, in particular, has most often accepted the Federal Government's duty to the Indians. In 1935 when the first Social Security Act was passed, there was a provision in the Senate bill that the Federal Government assume the full cost of providing pensions for Indians. On numerous occasions since 1935 the Senate has reaffirmed this position.

The Federal Government has seen fit in the past to resettle and relocate Indian tribes from reservation to reservation and from State to State. Having made that decision, the Government has then placed on the individual States most of the burden of providing these people the economic assistance they require to achieve a minimal standard of living.

The amendment I am proposing today to H.R. 1 would relieve the States and place the financial responsibility for assistance to the American Indians where it belongs—on the Federal Government.

At present two States, New Mexico and Arizona, receive substantial Federal support for welfare assistance programs for the Navajo and Hopi Tribes residing in those States. Public Law 474 was enacted during the 81st Congress primarily because the welfare agencies of these two States refused to accept responsibility for the Indian population residing within their borders. This amendment being offered today would extend to all States the relief now enjoyed by two.

This bill does not merely extend the provisions of Public Law 474, however. In fact, enactment of this measure would effect the repeal of that law. This bill, authored by Mr. METCALF, would provide 100-percent Federal reimbursement for the costs of all welfare assistance programs, including medicaid, to American Indians, Aleuts, and Eskimos. It may be asked if the States should not assume some of the financial responsibility for these people—I contend that they will even with the enactment of this bill, as much of the land on which the Indians live is held in trust and thus not subject to State or local taxation. Additionally, because of the low economic status of the majority of our Indians, income tax revenues from this group are at a minimum. Thus, the States will still be sharing the financial burden with the Federal Government, but the costs will be more equitably shared than it is at present.

In 1970 when Senator METCALF introduced a similar piece of legislation, he was questioned closely by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) as to the cost of this program to the Federal Government. No exact figures were available then and today I cannot give you an exact figure either. The reason for this is that the States do not keep a separate accounting of assistance programs to Indians. Very little information is available on this from either the Department of the Interior or the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. However, the following figures will give some idea of the scope of the commitment which the Federal Government would assume.

In 1970 it was estimated that State and county welfare agencies assisted twice as many Indians as were assisted by the Bureau of Indian Affairs. The BIA caseload for 1968 was 53,770. In 1969, BIA expenditures for welfare payments to Indians totaled $9,179,000. Assuming that the States spend twice as much as the Bureau of Indian Affairs, we are talking of a commitment in the range of $30 million annually.

Because of the increased responsiveness of the Congress in recent years to the plight of Indians, I would foresee this figure declining in coming years in contrast with the rapidly spiraling costs of welfare payments taken as a whole. In my own State of Alaska, for example, the lot of the Natives will be greatly enhanced in coming years thanks to the passage of the Alaska Native Land Claims Settlement Act. Many other Indian groups are also beginning to develop business and industries which will allow them to become economically independent and to regain their pride and stature. In Alaska we do foresee a better day, but it is not here yet. And until that day comes for my State and for all other States, I urge the Federal Government to quit paying lip service to responsibility toward our aboriginal people and to put words into deeds by passage of Senator METCALF's amendment to H.R. 1.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, does the Senator have the name of the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN) and my name listed as cosponsors?

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, with the endorsement of those prominent cosponsors, I have no doubt that the amendment will be agreed to. I think that has been somewhat evident.

Along with the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), I think we can agree with the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I would like to indicate that I am a cosponsor of the amendment to H.R. 1 submitted by my colleague from Montana, Senator METCALF, who could not be here today. The amendment provides for Federal reimbursement for State expenditures on public assistance programs for Indians.

There is a precedent for this type of reimbursement. Under legislation passed in 1949, State welfare departments receive reimbursement for 80 percent of their share of the cost of old-age assistance, aid to dependent children, and aid to the blind in the Hopi and Navajo Indian tribes. In addition, the Senate agreed in 1970 to the 100-percent reimbursement, but the amendment was lost in conference.

Senator METCALF has proposed similar amendments to the Senate in the past and I have cosponsored them because I firmly believe that the problems of the Indians in this country are a national, rather than a State, responsibility.

To a large extent as a result of Federal policies, Indians have been forced to live in economically deprived jurisdictions which cannot meet welfare and other costs out of their local taxes. This is true in my own State of Minnesota, where 7,000 persons, or 40 percent of the Indian population is on public assistance. They are on public assistance because in many cases they are trapped in an environment completely lacking in economic opportunity.

Since our national policies have contributed so heavily to this economic segregation, I believe that the Federal Government has an obligation to eradicate the effects of the segregation. An estimated $6.5 million was spent on public assistance for Indians for Minnesota in 1970. About $3.5 million of that came from the State. Under my amendment the State would be reimbursed for that sum. In Beltrami County, in northern Minnesota—where Indians make up about one-quarter or one-fifth of the welfare case load—the savings from this measure would come to approximately $110,000. This figure includes $60,000 contributed from local funds to this year's welfare budget, as well as a $50,000 special contribution from the State approved by the legislature in recognition of this special financial burden placed on the county by the presence of the Red Lake Indian reservation.

I would like to note that this idea was endorsed by the National Governor's Conference this year. In that group's list of policy positions, it is stated:

> The federal government should administer the Social Security Act programs on the federal Indian reservations, or if the States are to discharge this function, the federal government should first grant adequate jurisdictional authority to the States thereby enabling them to properly discharge this function.

One final point that I would like to make is that this amendment is consistent with what has become one of the basic principles of welfare reform—that welfare is a national problem which, with a highly mobile population, transcends legal boundaries; and should be treated as such.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

H.R. 1

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the Senate tomorrow or the day after—I would like to see it tomorrow, but tomorrow or the day after—will have an opportunity hopefully to vote on what is known as H.R. 1, the administration's welfare proposals.

Today the Senate was very wise, in my judgment, in defeating by a vote of 52 to 34 the proposal of the senior Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) to expand the welfare program initiated by the administration. It seems clear that the Senate is overwhelmingly opposed to the Ribicoff approach and the Ribicoff proposal. Now, what I hope we will get a vote on is the proposal offered by the administration under the leadership of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Eliot Richardson.

The chief architect of this proposal was Dr. Daniel Moynihan, special counsel to the President in the White House; and his proposal was submitted to Congress. It was passed twice by the House of Representatives. It has been considered by the Senate Finance Committee. It was considered in 1970, 1971, and 1972, and it was rejected.

I feel that there should be welfare reform, but the proposal submitted by the administration is not welfare reform; it is welfare expansion. I cannot support this proposal. I opposed this proposal in the Finance Committee for 3 years, and I am going to oppose it on the floor of the Senate as long as it is before the Senate.

I cannot support this proposal because it is lacking in work incentives, it writes into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income, it will cost at least $5 billion more than the present program, it will require 80,000 new Federal employees to administer, and it will double the number of people on welfare. I submit that you do not get welfare by doubling the number of people on welfare.

It seems that what we want to do in this country is to encourage people to work. We want to get people off welfare. We want to get them into jobs. That is the approach the Finance Committee took.

The bill reported by the Finance Committee is known as workfare. It encourages people to work. Instead of guaranteeing an annual income, it guarantees job opportunities; and I think that is what the people in this country want Congress to do—to guarantee our fellow citizens jobs, not to guarantee them an income whether they work or whether they refuse to work.

There are too many in this country who refuse to work and want to live off the taxpayers; and I think the time has come when Congress, when it considers legislation in regard to welfare, must enact legislation which will encourage people to work.

I think we need welfare reform. We need to change the outmoded system we have. But in changing it, let us be sure that we go to something better.

We are better off staying where we are than to go to something that is twice as bad. In my judgment, H.R. 1, the administration's welfare proposal, is twice as bad as the present system; and one reason is that it doubles the number of people who will be drawing public assistance.

I am very anxious that we get a vote on the proposal submitted by Secretary Richardson, because I want to see how many people in the U.S. Senate are willing to vote for a proposal which its chief architect, Dr. Daniel Moynihan, Special Counsel to the White House, when he was lobbying for this proposal, said:

> This bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

When it comes time for the Senate to vote, I will be most interested to see how many Senators want to vote for a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

Mr. President, I think this is one of the most far-reaching proposals that has ever been submitted to Congress. Once we embark on the course of a guaranteed annual income, once we say that Congress, that the Government of the American people, owes everyone a guaranteed annual income, then, as I see it, there is no stopping.

We know now that we have one proposal by the Nixon administration for a $2,400 guaranteed annual income. Senator RIBICOFF, whose proposal was defeated today, wants to start at $2,600 but go immediately to $3,000, and then go up to $6,100. The Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS) has advocated a $4,000 minimum income, and the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN) has advocated a $6,500 minimum income.

I say that once we embark upon that path, there is no turning back. I submit that there is not enough money in the Federal Treasury, and there is not enough money in the pockets of the hardworking wage earners of this country, to pay the bill once we embark on a policy of guaranteeing everybody in this country an income, even though they refuse to work.

I want to close by citing again Dr.

Daniel Moynihan, who is a very brilliant man. I wish I had his brilliance. He is able to put into one sentence the gist of a very complicated bill. He sized it up well in one sentence:

This bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

Also a very smart administrator in Washington is Mr. Elliot Richardson, the head of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare; and he summed up the bill in three words. He said in his official testimony before the Finance Committee:

It is revolutionary and expensive.

So the Senate will have an opportunity, I hope tomorrow or the next day, to vote as to whether it wants a program which its chief sponsor, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, says is "revolutionary and expensive" and which one of the chief architects of the program says will guarantee a minimum income "to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not."

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972—AMENDMENT

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. STEVENSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act to increase benefits and improve eligibility and computation methods under the OASDI program, to make improvements in the medicare, medicaid, and maternal and child health programs with emphasis on improvements in their operating effectiveness, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs with a Federal program of adult assistance and a Federal program of benefits to low-income families with children with incentives and requirements for employment and training to improve the capacity for employment of members of such families, and for other purposes.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAMBRELL). Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate H.R. 1, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I offer an amendment to the amendment by the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Strike all of title IV of the amendment and title V, down to and including all of section 532 of the amendment, and insert the following:

"TITLE IV—PROGRAMS FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

"PART A—TESTING OF ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

"AUTHORIZATION FOR CONDUCT OF TEST PROGRAM

"SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this part—

"(1) the term "family assistance tests' means (A) the programs contained in title IV of H.R. 1, Ninety-second Congress, first session, as passed by the House of Representatives, or (B) the program referred to in clause (A) as amended by amendment numbered 1669, Ninety-second Congress, second session, introduced in the Senate on October 2, 1972.

"(2) the term 'workfare test program' means the program contained in parts A and B, title IV of H.R. 1, Ninety-second Congress, second session, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance on September 26, 1972, and

"(3) the term 'family' means a family with children.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized, effective January 1, 1973, to plan for and conduct, in accordance with the provisions of this section, not more than three test programs. One of such programs shall be the family assistance test program defined in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, one of such programs shall be the family assistance program defined in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and one of such programs shall be the workface test program.

"(2) Whenever the workfare test program is commenced, there shall commence, on the same date as such program, both family assistance test programs. Except as may otherwise be authorized by the Congress, no test program under this section shall be conducted for a period of less than twenty-four months or more than forty-eight months, and to the maximum extent practical each such test program shall be conducted for the same length of time.

"(3) Any such test program shall be conducted only in and with respect to an area which consists of one or more States, one or more political subdivisions of a State, or part of a political subdivision of a State, and shall be applicable to all the individuals who are residents of the State or the area of the State in and with respect to which such program is conducted.

"(4) During any period for which any such test program is in effect in any State or in any area of a State, individuals residing in such State or the area of the State in which such program is in effect shall not be eligible for aid or assistance under any State plan or program for which the State receives Federal financial assistance under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(5) The Secretary, in determining the areas in which test programs under this section shall be conducted, shall select areas with a view to assuring—

"(A) that the number of participants in any such program will (to the maximum extent practicable) be equal to the number of participants in any other such program; and

"(B) that the area in which any family assistance test program is conducted shall be comparable (in terms of size and composition of population, of average per capita income, rate of unemployment, and other relevant criteria) to an area in which a workfare test program is conducted.

"(c)(1) No test program under this section shall be conducted in any State (or any area thereof) unless such State shall have entered into an agreement with the Secretary under which the State agrees—

"(A) to participate in the costs of such test program; and

"(B) to cooperate with the Secretary in the conduct of such program.

"(2) Under any such agreement, no State shall be required to expend, with respect to any test program conducted within such State (or any area thereof), amounts greater than the amount which would have been expended with respect to such State or area thereof (as the case may be), during the period that such test program is in effect, under the State plan of such State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act. For purposes of determining the amount any State would have under such a plan during the period that any such test program is in effect within such State (or any area thereof), it shall be assumed that the rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan would be equal to the average of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan for the twelve-month period immediately preceding the commencement of such test program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall, upon completion of any plans for and prior to the commencement of any test program under this section, submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a complete and detailed description such program and shall invite and give consideration to the comments and suggestions of such committees with respect to such program.

"(2) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Secretary shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any six-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs. Each such report shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(3) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with (A) the Secretary's evaluation of such programs and such comments or recommendations of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable and (B) his recommendations (if any) for legislation to revise or replace the provisions of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall—

"(A) in the planning of any test program under this section; or

"(B) in assembling information, statistics, or other materials, to be contained in any report to Congress under this section;

consult with, and seek the advice and assistance of, the General Accounting Office and the General Accounting Office shall consult with the Secretary and furnish such advice and assistance to him upon request of the Secretary or at such times as the Comptroller General deems desirable.

"(2) The operations of any test program conducted under this section shall be reviewed by the General Accounting Office, and the books, records, and other documents pertaining to any such program or its operation shall be available to the General Accounting Office at all reasonable times for purposes of audit, review, or inspection. The books, records, and documents of each such program shall be audited by the General Accounting Office from time to time (but not less frequently than once each year).

"(3) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Comptroller General shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any six-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs which shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Comptroller General with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(4) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with his evaluation of, and comments and recommendations (if any), with respect to such programs.

"(f) In the administration of test programs under this section, the Secretary shall provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information identifying participants in such programs to purposes directly connected with the administration of such programs (except that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the furnishing of records or information concerning participants in such programs to the Committee on Finance of the Senate or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives).

"(g) For the purpose of enabling the Secretary to formulate operational plans and to conduct test programs under this section, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year $400,000,000.

"(h) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a commitment, on the part of the Congress, to enact (at any future time) legislation to establish, on a permanent basis, any program tested pursuant to this section or any similar program.

"(i) Section 204(c)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1967 is repealed.

"PART B—EMPLOYMENT WITH WAGE SUPPLEMENT

"SEC. 420. The Social Security Act is amended by adding after title XIX thereof the following new title:

"TITLE XX—EMPLOYMENT WITH WAGE SUPPLEMENT

"ELIGIBILITY

"SEC. 2001. Every individual who is a head of family (as defined in seciton 2003(f)) and is a citizen of the United States (or an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence in the United States or otherwise permanently residing in the United States under color of law) and who—

"(a) is employed in regular employment (as defined in section 2003(b)) in the United States (but not in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico)—

"(1) which is compensated at a rate which—

"(A) is not less than the applicable rate (if any) required under Federal, State, or local law, and

"(B) is less than (but not less than three-fourths of) the minimum wage (as defined in section 2003(d)), and

"(2) in a position the compensation for which—

"(A) has not, during the three-month period preceding the date on which such individual is placed in such position, been reduced, or (if such compensation has been reduced during such period) the Secretary is satisfied (on the basis of evidence presented to him) that such compensation was not reduced in contemplation of the availability of the payment of wage supplement benefits under this subpart with respect to such position, and

"(B) is not reduced during the period that such individual is employed in such position, unless (i) such compensation is reduced after such individual has been employed in such position for a three-month period, or (ii) the Work Secretary is satisfied (on the basis of evidence presented to him) that the reduction in such compensation is or was not made because of the availability of the payment of wage supplement benefits under this part with respect to such positions;

"(b) makes application (filed in such form and manner and with such official as may be prescribed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary) for wage supplement benefits; shall be entitled to receive the wage supplement payments authorized by this part for each week that the conditions of clauses (a) and (b) are met, commencing with the week following the week in which his application for such benefits is filed with the Secretary.

"AMOUNT OF WAGE SUPPLEMENT

"SEC. 2002. (a) For each week any individual who is entitled to wage supplement benefits under this title shall be paid a wage supplement equal to the amount produced by multiplying (1) the number of hours (not in excess of 40) for which such individual performed services (whether or not for the same employer) in regular employment (which meets the requirements of section 2001(a)) by (2) three-fourths of the excess of (A) the minimum wage (as defined in section 2003(d)) over (B) the hourly wage (as defined in subsection (a)) paid or payable to such individual for the services performed by him in such employment.

"(b) The term 'wage', as used in subsection (a)(2)(B), shall have the meaning assigned to such term by section 3(m) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2003. For purposes of this title—

"(a) The term 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Labor.

"(b) The term 'regular employment' means any employment provided by a private or public employer.

"(c) The term 'United States', when used in a geographic sense, means the fifty States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands and Guam."

"(d) The term 'minimum wage' means the hourly wage rate specified in section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 (29 U.S.C. 206(a)(1)), or $2.00 per hour, whichever is less.

"(e) The term 'family' means two or more individuals—

"(1) each of whom (in the case of adult individuals) is the parent (or stepparent), grandparent (or step-grandparent), brother (or stepbrother), sister (or stepsister), uncle, aunt, first cousin, nephew, or niece, of a child referred to in clause (2);

"(2) at least one of whom is a child who is in the care of or dependent upon another of such individuals who bears to such child one of the relationships specified in clause (1); and

"(3) who are living in a place of residence in the United States maintained by one or more of them as his or their own home, except that no child who is living away from home while attending school shall, by reason of clause (4), be excluded as a member of a family on account of his absence from the family residence.

"(f) The term 'head of family', when used in reference to any family, means—

"(1) in case there is included among the members of the family an individual, who is the father of a child who is a member of the family, such individual (unless he is disabled);

"(2) in case there is no individual in the family who meets the criteria specified in clause (1) and there is included among the members of the family an individual, who is the mother of a child who is a member of the family, such individual (unless she is disabled);

"(3) in case there is no individual in a family who meets the criteria specified in clause (1) or (2), any other individual who is member of such family (other than a child or an individual who is disabled) and who undertakes to provide for the support of the children who are members of such family; except that (A) not more than one such individual shall, at any time, be regarded as the head of family of the family of which he is a member, and (B) no such individual shall be regarded as the head of family of any family if the Secretary determines that there is no child in such family other than a child which has been placed in such family in order to enable a member thereof to participate in the employment with wage supplement program established under this title.

"(g) The term 'child' means an individual who is unmarried and who—

"(1) has not attained the age of 18; or

"(2) has attained such age but has not attained the age of 21 and is a 'full-time student' (as such term is applied for purposes of section 202(d)).

"(h) The term 'disabled', when used in reference to any individual, means the inability of such individual to engage in any subtantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment.

PART C—CHILD SUPPORT

CHILD SUPPOAT AND ESTABLISHMENT OF PATERNITY

SEC. 430. (a) The Social Security Act is amended by adding after part C of title IV thereof the following new part:

"PART D—CHILD SUPPORT AND ESTABLISHMENT OF PATERNITY

"APPROPRIATION

"SEC. 451. For the purposes of enforcing (1) the support obligations owed by absent parents to children receiving assistance under part A of this title, (2) the residual monetary obligation owed to the United States by absent parents, and (3) the criminal penalties for nonsupport against absent parents, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Attorney General for each fiscal year a sum sufficient to carry out the purposes of this part.

"DUTIES OF ATTORNEY GENERAL

"SEC. 452. (a) The Attorney General shall enforce the support rights assigned to him under section 402(a)(26) by applicants for and recipients of assistance under part A of this title, utilizing all funds and authority which are available to him for this purpose. To the extent required, he shall locate absent parents, determine paternity in order to establish duty to support, obtain support orders, collect support payments by use of voluntary agreements or other means, and enforce the residual monetary obligation owed the United States and the criminal provisions for nonsupport by such parents.

"(b)(1) The Attorney General shall, in accordance with procedures applicable to the recovery of obligations due the United States including, where appropriate, the use of voluntary agreements, and in accordance with the priorities for distribution specified in section 455, collect and distribute amounts from enforcement of obligations under paragraph (2). Whenever any individual is determined to be liable to the United States for any amount under this section, the Attorney General may make certification of such amount to the Secretary of the Treasury for collection pursuant to the provisions of section 6305 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The Attorney General shall reimburse the Secretary of the Treasury for any costs involved.

"(2) The Attorney General is authorized to bring civil action in any court of competent jurisdiction (including the courts in any State or political subdivision thereof) against an absent parent to secure (A) support obligations assigned to him under section 402(a)(26), and (B) the residual monetary obligation owed to the United States as defined in section 457, except that all of part of such obligation may be suspended or forgiven by the Attorney General upon a finding of good cause. In taking actions against and absent parent, the Attorney General shall give priority to obtaining orders and proceeding with collections required under subsection (b)(2)(A).

"(3) The Attorney General may enter into voluntary agreements to recover support obligations assigned under section 402(a)(26), if there is no court order in effect directing payment of such obligation or if there is such an order in effect but there is no reasonable expectation that it can be enforced or that the obligation can be collected. Any voluntary agreement so made shall provide that support payments will not cease if the family ceases to receive assistance under part A of this title, and the amounts payable under such agreement, if there is no court order in effect, may be collected as authorized under the provisions of this part.

"(c) The Attorney General and the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity are directed to enter into an appropriate arrangement under which the services of attorneys participating in legal services programs established pursuant to section 222(a)(3) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964 will be made available to the Attorney General to assist him in carrying out his functions under this part. The Attorney General shall, to the maximum extent feasible, utilize the services of such attorneys in the performance of such functions and may make the services of such attorneys available to States or political subdivisions to assist them in carrying out the purposes of this part. The Office of Economic Opportunity shall be reimbursed by the Attorney General for the costs incurred in providing such services.

"(d) The Attorney General shall require that each United States attorney designate an assistant United States attorney to be responsible for enforcement of the provisions of this part in his judicial district and maintain liaison with and assist the States and political subdivisions thereof in their child support efforts. Each assistant United States attorney so designated shall prepare and submit to the Attorney General for submission to the Congress quarterly reports on all activities undertaken pursuant to this section.

"(e)(1) There is hereby established in the Treasury a revolving fund to be known as the Federal Child Support Fund (hereinafter referred to as the 'fund') which shall be available to the Attorney General without fiscal year limitation, to enable him to carry out his responsibilities under this part.

"(2) Except as provided in sections 454(d) and 458, all moneys appropriated pursuant to section 451 for the purpose of funding Federal activities under this part and all moneys collected by the Federal Government pursuant to this part (including support payments and payments by way of reimbursement received from Federal agencies, States and political subdivisions thereof, and individuals) shall be paid into the fund and shall be disbursed by the Attorney General from time to time in accordance with the provisions of this part.

"(3) There is hereby appropriated to the fund, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts equal to the amounts collected under section 6305 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, reduced by the amounts credited or refunded as overpayments of the amounts so collected. The amounts appropriated by the preceding sentence shall be transferred at least quarterly from the general fund of the Treasury to the fund on the basis of estimates made by the Secretary of the Treasury. Proper adjustments shall be made in the amounts subsequently transferred to the extent prior estimates were in excess of or less than the amounts required to be transferred.

"(f) The Attorney General shall notify the Secretary of the failure of the State agency administering the plan approved under part A of this title to comply with the requirements of section 402(a)(26).

"(g) The Attorney General shall maintain complete records of all amounts collected under this part and of the costs incurred in collecting such amounts and shall, not later than June 30 of each year (commencing with June 30, 1974), submit to the Congress a written report on all activities undertaken pursuant to the provisions of this part.

"PARENT LOCATOR SERVICE

"SEC. 453. (a) The Attorney General shall establish and conduct, within the Department of Justice, a Parent Locator Service which shall be used to obtain and transmit to any authorized person (as defined in subsection (c)) information as to the whereabouts of any absent parent when such information is to be used to locate such parent for the purpose of enforcing support obligations against such parent.

"(b) Upon request, filed in accordance with subsection (d) of any authorized person (as defined in subsection (c)) for the most recent address and place of employment of any individual, the Attorney General shall, notwithstanding any other provision of law, provide through the Parent Locator Service such information to such person, if such information—

"(1) is contained in any files or records maintained by the Attorney General or by the Department of Justice; or

"(2) is not contained in such files or records, but can be obtained by the Attorney General, under the authority conferred by subsection (e), from any other department, agency, or instrumentality, of the United States or of any State.

The Attorney General shall give priority to requests made by any authorized person described in subsection (o)(1).

"(c) As used in subsection (a), the term 'authorized person' means—

"(1) any agent or attorney of the United States or of any State or any political subdivision to which support collection functions have been delegated under section 454, who has the duty or authority to seek to recover any amounts under section 452;

"(2) the court which has authority to issue an order against an absent parent for the support and maintenance of a child, or any agent of such court; and

"(3) the parent, guardian, attorney, or agent of a child (other than a child receiving aid under part A of this title) without regard to the existence of a court order against an absent parent who has a duty to support and maintain any such child.

"(d) A request for information under this section sahll be filed in such manner and form as the Attorney General shall by regulation prescribe and shall be accompanied or supported by such documents as the Attorney General may determine to be necessary.

"(e)(1) Whenever the Attorney General receives a request submitted under subsection (b) which he is reasonably satisfied meets the criteria established by subsections (a), (b), and (c), he shall promptly undertake to provide the information requested from the files and records maintained by any of the departments, agencies, or instrumentalities of the United States or of any State.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever the individual who is the head of any department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States receives a request from the Attorney General for information authorized to be provided by the Attorney General under this section, such individual shall promptly cause a search to be made of the files and records maintained by such department, agency, or instrumentality with a view to determining whether the information requested is contained in any such files or records. If such search discloses the information requested, such individual shall immediately transmit such information to the Attorney General; and, if such search fails to disclose the information requested, such individual shall immediately so notify the Attorney General. The costs incurred by any such department, agency, or instrumentality of the United States or of any State in providing such information to the Attorney General shall be reimbursed by him. Whenever such services are furnished to an individual specified in subsection (c)(3), a fee shall be charged such individual. The fee so charged shall be deposited in the Fund and shall be used to reimburse the Attorney General or his delegate for the expense of providing such services.

"(f) The Attorney General, in carrying out his duties and functions under this section, shall enter into arrangements with State agencies administering or supervising the administration of State plans approved under part A of this title, under which the offices operated under such plans will accept from parents, guardians, or agents of a child described in subsection (c)(3) and transmit to the Attorney General requests for information with regard to the whereabouts of absent parents and will otherwise cooperate with the Attorney General in carrying out the purposes of this section.

"DELEGATION OF SUPPORT COLLECTION FUNCTIONS TO STATES OR POLITICAL SUBDIVISIONS

"SEC. 454. (a) The Attorney General shall delegate to any State having a plan approved under part A of this title the authority to recover the child support obligation assigned to the United States under section 402(a)(26) if he determines that such State has an effective program (in accordance with the standards established in subsection (b)) for locating absent parents, determining paternity, obtaining support orders, and collecting amounts of money owed by parents for the support and maintenance of their child or children. Such a delegation may be made to a political subdivision of any such State upon a finding that the State as a whole does not have an effective program for locating absent parents, determining paternity, obtaining support orders, and collecting child support but that such political subdivision does have an effective program which meets the standards established in subsection (b).

"(b) The Attorney General shall not approve any program pursuant to subsection (a) unless such program provides—

"(1) for the development and implementation of a program under which such State or political subdivision will undertake—

"(A) in the case of a child born out of wedlock with respect to whom an assignment under section 402(a)(26) of this title is effective, to establish the paternity of such child, and

"(B) in the case of any child wtih respect to whom such assignment is effective, to secure support for such child from his parent (or from any other person legally liable for such support), utilizing any reciprocal arrangements adopted with other States to obtain or enforce court orders for support, and

"(2) for the establishment of an organizational unit in the State or political subdivision administering the program under this section;

"(3) for entering into cooperative arrangements with appropriate courts and law enforcement officials (A) to assist the State or political subdivision administering the program under this section, including the entering into of financial arrangements with such courts and officials in order to assure optimum results under such program, and (B) with respect to any other matters of common concern to such courts or officials and the State or political subdivision administering the program under this section;

"(4) that the State or political subdivision will establish a service to locate absent parents utilizing—

"(A) all sources of information and available records; and

"(B) the Parent Locator Service in the Department of Justice;

"(5) that the State or political subdivision will, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Attorney General, cooperate with the State or political subdivision of another State or with the Attorney General in administering a program under this part—

"(A) in establishing paternity, if necessary,

"(B) in locating an absent parent residing in the State (whether or not permanently) against whom any action is being taken under this part in another State,

"(C) in securing compliance by an absent parent residing in such State (whether or not permanently) with a voluntary agreement or an order issued by a court of competent jurisdiction against such parent for the support and maintenance of a child or children of such parent with respect to whom aid is being provided under the plan of such other States, and

"(D) in carrying out other functions required by this part;

"(6) that the State or political subdivisions may enter into voluntary agreements to recover child support obligations delegated under subsection (a), if there is no court order in effect directing payment of such obligation or if there is such an order in effect but there is no reasonable expectation that it can be enforced or that the obligation can be collected. Any voluntary agreement so made shall provide that support payments will not cease if the family ceases to receive assistance under part A of this title, and the amounts payable under such agreement, if there is no court order in effect, may be collected as authorized under the provisions of this part;

"(7) that the State or political subdivision require, as a condition of the absent parent being permitted to make support payments on a voluntary basis, the execution by such parent of an appropriate affidavit (which shall be recorded in the records of the court or other appropriate agency) in which such parent acknowledges the paternity of such child or children;

"(8) that, if the State uses voluntary agreements under paragraph (6), it will establish an administrative mechanism for enforcing such agreements;

"(9) that such State or political subdivision will comply with such other requirements as the Attorney General determines to be necessary to the establishment of an effective program for locating absent parents, determining paternity, obtaining support orders, and collecting support payments including, but not limited to, requiring a full record of collections and disbursements; and

"(10) that the State or political subdivision shall reimburse the Attorney General for the costs incurred by the Federal Government in enforcing and collecting support obligations assigned under this section.

"(c) The Attorney General shall, upon the request of any State or political subdivision to which he has delegated the authority to recover the child support obligation assigned to the United States under section 402(a)(26), make available to such State or political subdivision (1) the services of attorneys participating in legal services programs who are, by reason of the agreement required by section 452(c), assisting the Attorney General in carrying out his functions under this part, and (2) upon a showing by the State or political subdivision that such State or political subdivision made diligent and reasonable efforts in utilizing their own collection mechanisms, the collection facilities of the Department of the Treasury (subject to the same requirements of certification by the Attorney General imposed by section 452(b) and subject to such limitations on the frequency of making such certification as may be imposed by the Attorney General).

"(d) From the sums appropriated therefor, the Attorney General shall pay to each State or political subdivision which has a program approved under this section, for each quarter, beginning with the quarter commending January 1, 1973, an amount equal to 75 percent of the total amounts expended by such State or political subdivision during such quarter for the operation of the program approved under this section except as provided in sections 455(b)(2), 456, and 459.

"DISTRIBUTION OF PROCEEDS FROM SUPPORT COLLECTIONS

"SEC. 455. (a) Amounts collected as support obligations assigned under section 402(a)(26) shall be distributed in the following order of priority—

"(1) If a State or its agent makes the collection, the proceeds of such collection shall be distributed, beginning with the first dollar, as follows—

"(A) the family shall be paid the larger of—

"(i) 100 percent of such proceeds if they are equal to or less than the amount of the assistance payment which would otherwise be made, or

"(ii) an amount of such proceeds that is equal to the lesser of (I) the amount required by a court order to be paid for child support or (II) the amount agreed upon by the parties to a voluntary child support agreement, any any proceeds so paid that are in excess of the amount of the assistance payment otherwise payable shall be deemed to reduce the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by a like amount;

"(B) such amounts as may be necessary to reimburse the State for such State's share of assistance payments (with appropriate reimbursement of the political subdivision if it participated in the financing) made to the family prior to the date on which the support obligation was collected shall be paid to such State, and any amounts so paid shall be deemed to reduce the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by a like amount; and

"(C) such amounts as may be necessary to reduce or eliminate the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by the absent parent shall be paid to the Federal Government and deposited in the fund.

"(2) If a political subdivision or its agent makes the collection, the proceeds of such collection shall be distributed, beginning with the first dollar, as follows—

"(A) the family shall be paid the larger of—

"(i) 100 percent of such proceeds if they are equal to or less than the amount of the assistance payment which would otherwise be made, or

"(ii) an amount of such proceeds that is equal to the lesser of (I) the amount required by a court order to be paid for child support or (II) the amount agreed upon by the parties to a voluntary child support agreement, and any proceeds so paid that are in excess of the amount of the assistance payment otherwise payable shall be deemed to reduce the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by a like amount;

"(B) such amounts as may be necessary to reimburse the political subdivision for its share of assistance payments made to the family prior to the date on which the support obligation was collected shall be paid to such political subdivision, and any amounts so paid shall be deemed to reduce the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by a like amount; and

"(C) such amounts as may be necessary to reduce or eliminate the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by the absent parent shall be paid to the Federal Government and deposited in the fund.

"(3) If the Attorney General makes the collection, the proceeds of such collection shall be distributed, beginning with the first dollar, as follows—

"(A) the family shall be paid the larger of—

"(i) 100 percent of such proceeds if they are equal to or less than the amount of the assistance payment which would otherwise be made, or

"(ii) an amount of such proceeds that is equal to the lesser of (I) the amount required by a court order to be paid for child support or (II) the amount agreed upon by the parties to a voluntary child support agreement, and any proceeds so paid that are in excess of the amount of the assistance payment otherwise payable shall be deemed to reduce the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by a like amount; and

"(B) such amounts as may be necessary to reduce or eliminate the residual monetary obligation to the Federal Government by the absent parent shall be paid to the Federal Government and deposited in the fund.

Whenever payments are made pursuant to paragraph (2)(A) or (3)(A) to a family residing in a State which does not have an approved support program under this part, the Attorney General shall so certify to the Secretary, who shall reduce the amount of any grant made to such State under part A of this title by an amount equal to the amount so certified and deposit such amount into the Fund, except that such reduction shall not be greater than the amount of the assistance payment such family would have received from such State had the payment under paragraph (2)(A) or (3)(A) not been made.

"(b) Whenever a family for whom support payments have been collected and distributed under this part ceases to receive assistance under part A of this title, the Attorney General, or the State or political subdivision to which the Attorney General has delegated the authority to collect support obligations pursuant to this part, shall—

"(1) continue to collect such support payments from the absent parent for a period of three months from the month following the month in which such family ceased to receive assistance under part A of this title, and pay all amounts so collected to the family; and

"(2) at the end of such three-month period, if the Attorney General (A) is authorized to do so by the individual on whose behalf the collection will be made and (B) finds that the absent parent has not met his support obligation for the period of twenty-four consecutive months immediately preceding the end of such three-month period or throughout the term of such obligation, whichever is shorter, continue to collect such support payments from the absent parent until he has met his support obligation for a period of twenty-four consecutive months, and pay the net amount of any amount so collected to the family after deducting any costs incurred in making the collection from the amount of any recovery made.

"INCENTIVE PAYMENT TO LOCALITIES

"SEC. 456. When a political subdivision of a State makes the enforcement and collection of the support obligation assigned under section 402(a)(26) (either within or outside of such State, and whether as the agent of such State or as the agent of the Attorney General), an amount equal to 25 percent of any amount collected and required to be distributed as provided in sections 455(a)(1)(A) and (B), or in sections 455(a)(2)(A) and (B), as appropriate, to reduce or eliminate assistance payments, shall be paid to such State or political subdivision from amounts which would otherwise represent the Federal share of assistance to the family of the absent parent.

"RESIDUAL MONETARY OBLIGATIONS TO THE UNITED STATES

"SEC. 457. There is hereby imposed on any absent parent whose child or children have received assistance payments under part A of this title a residual monetary obligation to the United States. Such obligation shall be in an amount that is equal to the total amounts of payments made to the family of an absent parent each month under the State plan approved under part A of this title, or, if less, 50 percent of the monthly income of the absent parent for each such month (but not less than $50 per month), except that during any month in which an absent parent is meeting his support obligations by paying the full amount of a court ordered support payment or the full amount of the support payment which he has agreed to pay according to the terms of a voluntary support agreement entered into between him and the Attorney General (or his delegate), whichever is larger, no obligation shall be imposed. Interest on any such amount shall accrue at the rate of 6 percent per annum, but the total amount of such obligation (including interest thereon) shall be reduced by the amount of any sums collected by a State or political subdivision which represent such State or political subdivision's share of assistance payments made under the State plan approved under part A of this title.

"REGIONAL LABORATORIES TO ESTABLISH PATERNITY THROUGH ANALYSIS AND CLASSIFICATION OF BLOOD

"SEC. 458. (a) The Secretary shall establish, or arrange for the establishment or designation, in each region of the United States, a laboratory which he determines to be qualified to provide services in analyzing and classifying blood for the purpose of determining paternity, and which is prepared to provide such services to courts and public agencies in the region to be served by it.

"(b) Whenever a laboratory is established or designated for any region by the Secretary under this section, he shall take such measures as may be appropriate to notify appropriate courts and public agencies (including agencies administering any public welfare program within such region) that such laboratory has been so established or designated to provide services, in analyzing and classifying blood for the purpose of determining paternity, for court and public agencies in such region.

"(c) The facilities of any such laboratory shall be made available without cost to courts and public agencies in the region to be served by it.

"(d) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

"CONSENT BY THE UNITED STATES TO GARNISHMENT AND SIMILAR PROCEEDINGS FOR ENFORCEMENT OF CHILD SUPPORT AND ALIMONY OBLIGATIONS

"SEC. 460. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, moneys (the entitlement to which is based upon remuneration for employment) due from, or payable by, the United States (including any agency or instrumentality thereof and any wholly owned Federal corporation) to any individual, including members of the armed services, shall be subject, in like manner and to the same extent as if the United States were a private person, to legal process brought for the enforcement, against such individual, of his legal obligations to provide child support or make alimony payments.

"PENALTY FOR NONSUPPORT

"SEC. 461. (a) Any individual who is the parent of any child or children and who is under a legal duty to provide for the support and maintenance of such child or children (as required under the law of the State where such child or children reside) but fails to perform such duty and has left, deserted, or abandoned such child or children and such child or children receive assistance payments to provide for their support and maintenance which are funded in whole or in part from funds appropriated therefor by the Federal Government shall, upon conviction, be penalized in an amount equal to 50 percent of the residual monetary obligation owed to the United States, or fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or any combination of these three penalties.

"(b) This section does not preempt any State law imposing a civil or criminal penalty on an absent parent for failing to provide support and maintenance to his child or children to whom such parent owes a duty to support."

Conforming Amendments to Title XI

(b) Section 1106 of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and except as provided in part D of title IV of this Act.";

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (b) the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, requests for information made pursuant to the provisions of part D of title IV of this Act for the purpose of using Federal records for locating parents shall be complied with and the cost incurred in providing such information shall be paid for as provided in such part D of title IV."; and

(3) by striking out subsection (c).

COLLECTION OF CHILD SUPPORT OBLIGATIONS

(c)(1) Subchapter A of chapter 64 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to collection of taxes) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SEC. 6305. COLLECTION OF CERTAIN LIABILITY TO THE UNITED STATES.

"Upon receiving a certification from the Attorney General under section 452(b)(1) of the Social Security Act with respect to any individual, the Secretary or his delegate shall assess and collect the amount certified by the Attorney General in the same manner, with the same powers, and (except as provided in this section) subject to the same limitations as if such amount were a tax imposed by subtitle C the collection of which would be jeopardized by delay, except that—

"(1) no interest or penalties shall be assessed or collected, and

"(2) for such purposes, paragraphs (4), (6), and (8) of section 6334(a) (relating to property exempt from levy) shall not apply."

(2) The table of sections for such subchapter is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new item:

"SEC. 6305. COLLECTION OF CERTAIN LIABILITY TO THE UNITED STATES"

(d) The amendments made by subsections (a), (b), and (c) shall become effective on January 1, 1973.

AMENDMENTS TO PART A OF TITLE IV

"SEC. 430A. (a) Section 402(a)(8)(A) of the Social Security Act is amended—

"(1) by striking out 'and' at the end of the clause (i);

"(2) by striking out the semicolon at the end of clause (ii) and inserting in lieu thereon a comma; and

"(3) by adding at the end of clause (ii) the following new clause:

"'(iii) $20 per month, with respect to the dependent child (or children), relative with whom the child (or children) is living, and other individual (living in the same home as such child (or children)) whose needs are taken into account in making such determination, of all income derived from support payments collected pursuant to part D; and'.

"(b) Section 401(a)(9) is amended to read as follows: '(9) provide safeguards which permit the use or disclosure of information concerning applicants of recipients only to (A) public officials who required such information in connection with their official duties, or (B) other persons for purposes directly connected with the administration of aid to families with dependent children;'.

"(c) Section 402(a)(10) is amended by inserting immediately before 'be furnished' the following: ', subject to paragraphs (24) and (26),'.

"(d) Section 402(a)(11) is amended to read as follows: '(11) provide for prompt notice (including the transmittal of all relevant information) to the Attorney General of the United States (or the appropriate State official or agency (if any) designated by him pursuant to part (D)) of the furnishing of aid to families with dependent children with respect to a child who has been deserted or abandoned by a parent (including a child born out of wedlock without regard to whether the paternity of such child has been established);'.

"(e) Section 402(a) is further amended—

"(1) by striking out 'and' at the end of paragraph (22); and

"(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (23) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following: '(24) provide (A) that, as a condition of eligibility under the plan, each applicant for or recipient of aid shall furnish to the State agency his social security account number (or numbers, if he has more than one such number), and (B) that such State agency shall utilize such account numbers, in addition to any other means of identification it may determine to employ, in the administration of such plan; (25) contain such provisions pertaining to determining paternity and securing support and locating absent parents as are prescribed by the Attorney General of the United States in order to enable him to comply with the requirements of part D; and (26) provide that, as a condition of eligibility for aid, each applicant or recipient will be required—

"'(A) to assign to the United States any rights to support from any other person he may have (i) in his own behalf or in behalf of any other family member for whom he is applying for or receiving aid, and (ii) which have accrued at the time such assignment is executed, and which will accrue during the period ending with the third month following the month in which he (or such other family members) last receive aid under the plan or within such later month as may be determined under section 455(b), and

"'(B) to cooperate with the Attorney General or the State or local agency he has delegated under section 454, (i) in establishing the paternity of a child born out of wedlock with respect to whom aid is claimed, and (ii) in obtaining support payments for herself and for a child with respect to whom such aid is claimed, or in obtaining any other payments or property due herself or such child.'

"(f) Sections 402(a)(17), (18), (21), and (22), and section 410 of such Act are repealed.

"(g) The amendments made by this section shall become effective on January 1, 1973."

PART D—CHILD CARE AND CHILD WELFARE SERVICES

SEC. 431. (a) The Social Security Act is amended by adding after title XX thereof (as added by section 420 of this Act) the following new title:

"TITLE XXI—CHILD CARE

"FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 2101. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

"(1) the present lack of adequate child care services is detrimental to the welfare of families and children in that it limits opportunities of parents for employment or self-improvement, and often results in inadequate care arrangements for children whose parents are unable to find appropriate care for them;

"(2) low-income families and dependent families are severely handicapped in their efforts to attain or maintain economic independence by the unavailability of adequate child care services;

"(3) many other families, especially those in which the mother is employed, have need for child care services, either on a regular basis or from time to time; and

"(4) there is presently no single agency or organization, public or private, which is carrying out the responsibility of meeting the Nation's needs for adequate child care services.

"(b) It is therefore the purpose of this title to promote the availability of adequate child care services throughout the Nation by providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Child Care which shall have the responsibility and authority to meet the Nation's unmet needs for adequate child care services, and which, in meeting such needs, will give special consideration to the needs for such services by families in which the mother is employed or preparing for employment, and will promote the well-being of all children by assuring that the child care services provided will be appropriate to the particular needs of the children receiving such services.

"ESTABLISHMENT AND ORGANIZATION OF BUREAU OF CHILD CARE

"SEC. 2102. (a) In order to carry out the purposes of this title, there is hereby established a Bureau of Child Care (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Bureau').

"(b)(1) The powers and duties of the Bureau shall be vested in a Director who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(2) The Director shall have the power to appoint (without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service) such personnel as he deems necessary to enable the Bureau to carry out its functions under this title. All personnel shall be appointed solely on the ground of their fitness to perform their duties and without regard to political affiliation, sex, race, creed, or color. The Director may (without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of title 5, United States Code, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates) fix the compensation of personnel. The amount of the compensation payable to any employee shall be reasonably related to the compensation payable to State employees performing similar duties in the State in which such employee is employed by the Bureau; except that, in no case shall the amount of the compensation payable to any employee be greater than that payable to Federal employees performing similar services. For purposes of the preceding sentence, personnel employed in the principal office of the Bureau shall be deemed to be performing services in the District of Columbia (which shall be deemed to be a State for such purposes), and personnel performing services in more than one State shall be deemed to be employed in the State in which their principal office or place of work is located.

"(3) The Director is authorized to obtain the services of experts and consultants on a temporary or intermittent basis in accordance with the provisions of section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but at rates for individuals not to exceed the per diem equivalent of the rate authorized for GS-18 by section 5332 of such title.

"(4) The Director shall establish, within the Bureau, an Office of Program Evaluation and Auditing the functions of which shall be to assure that standards established under this title with respect to child care services and facilities providing such services will be met, and that funds of or under the control of the Bureau will be properly used. The Director shall utilize such Office to carry out the duties (relating to evaluation of facilities) imposed upon him under section 2104(c)(2).

"DUTIES AND POWERS

"SEC. 2103. (a) It shall be the duty and function of the Bureau to meet the needs of recipients of assistance under title IV of this Act, and persons who have been or are likely to become applicants for or recipients of such aid, for child care services and, to the maximum extent economically feasible, the needs of the Nation for child care services.

"(b)(1) In carrying out such duty and function, the Bureau shall, through utilization of existing facilities for child care and otherwise, provide (or arrange for the provision of) child care services in the various communities of each State. Such child care services shall include the various types of care included in the term 'child care services' (as defined in section 2118(b)) to the extent that the needs of the various communities may require.

"(2) The Bureau shall charge and collect a reasonable fee for the child care services provided by it (whether directly or through arrangements with others). The fee so charged for any particular type of child care services provided in any facility shall be uniform for all children receiving such types of services in such facility. Any such fee so charged may be paid in whole or in part by any person (including the Bureau, as provided in subsection (e), or any other public agency) which agrees to pay such fee or a part thereof.

"(3) The Bureau shall not enter into any arrangement with any person under which the facilities or services of such person will be utilized by the Bureau to provide child care services unless such person agrees (A) to accept any child referred to such person by the Bureau for child care services on the same basis and under the same conditions as other children applying for such services, and (B) to accept payment of all or any part of the fee imposed for such services from any public agency which shall agree to pay such fee or a part thereof from Federal funds.

"(c) In providing child care services in the various communities of the Nation, the Bureau shall accord first priority (1) to the needs for child care services of families on behalf of whom child care services will be paid in whole or in part from funds appropriated to carry out part A of title IV and section 2109 of this title and who are in need of such services to enable a member thereof to accept or continue in employment or participate in training to prepare such member for employment, and (2) to arranging for care in facilities providing hours of child care sufficient to meet the child care needs of children whose mothers are employed full time.

"(d) In providing for child care services the Bureau shall first place children in facilities which receive funds from sources other than funds made available under this title including, if the parents of such children agree, child development programs.

"(e)(1) From the sums available to carry out the provisions of this title for each fiscal year, the Bureau is authorized to assist low-income families in meeting the costs of child care services where such services are necessary to enable an adult member of such family to engage in employment.

"(2) The amount of the subsidy provided to any family under this subsection shall be determined in accordance with a schedule established by the Director, after taking into account the number of families needing such assistance, the amount of assistance needed by such families, and the amount of the funds available for the provision of such assistance. Such schedule shall (A) provide that the amount of subsidy payable to any family shall be equal to a per centum of the costs incurred by such family for the child care services with respect to which such subsidy is paid, (B) be related to ability of such family to pay the costs of such services (as determined by family size and income), and (C) be designed to assure that the amount of the subsidy payable to any family is not greater than the minimum amount necessary to enable such family to secure such services.

"(f) In carrying out its duties and functions under this title, the Bureau shall have power—

"(1) to acquire (by purchase, gift, devise, lease, or sublease), and to accept jurisdiction over and to hold and own, and dispose of by sale, lease, or sublease, real or personal property, including but not limited to a facility for child care, or any interest therein for its purposes;

"(2) to operate, manage, superintend, and control any facility for child care under its jurisdiction and to repair, maintain, and otherwise keep up any such facility; and to establish and collect fees, rentals, or other charges for the use of such facility or the receipt of child care services provided therein;

"(3) to provide child care services for the public directly or by agreement or lease with any person, agency, or organization, and to make rules and regulations concerning the handling of referrals and applications for the admission of children to receive such services; and to establish and collect fees and other charges, including reimbursement allowances, for the provision of child care services: Provided, That, in determining how its funds shall be used for the provision of child care services within a community, the Bureau shall take into account any comprehensive planning for child care which has been done, and shall generally restrict its direct operation of programs to situatitons in which public or private agencies are unable to develop adequate child care;

"(4) to provide advice and technical assistance to persons desiring to enter into an agreement with the Bureau for the provision of child care services to assist them in developing their capabilities to provide such services under such an agreement;

"(5) to prepare, or cause to be prepared, plans, specifications, designs, and estimates of costs for the construction and equipment of facilities for child care services in which the Bureau provides child care directly;

"(6) to construct and equip, or by contract cause to be constructed and equipped, facilities (other than home child care facilities) for child care services: Provided, That the Bureau shall take into account any comprehensive planning for child care that has been done;

"(7) to train persons for employment in providing child care services, with particular emphasis on training persons receiving assistance under part A of title IV;

"(8) to procure insurance, or obtain indemnification, against any loss in connection with the assets of the Bureau or any liability in connection with the activities of the Bureau, such insurance or indemnification to be procured or obtained in such amounts, and from such sources, as the Board deems to be appropriate;

"(9) to cooperate with any organization, public or private, the objectives of which are similar to the purposes of this title; and

"(10) to do any and all things necessary, convenient, or desirable to carry out the purposes of this title, and for the exercise of the powers conferred upon the Bureau in this title.

"STANDARDS FOR CHILD CARE

"SEC. 2104. (a) In order to assure that adequate standards of staffing, health, sanitation, safety, and fire protection are met, the Bureau shall not provide or arrange for the provision of child care of any type or in any facility unless the applicable requirements set forth in the succeeding provisions of this section are met with respect to such care and the facility in which such care is offered.

"(b)(1) The ratio of the number of children receiving child care to the number of qualified staff members directly engaged in providing such care (whether as teachers' aids or in another capacity) shall be such as the Director may determine to be appropriate for the type of child care provided and the age of the children involved, but in no case shall the Director require a ratio of less than—

"(A) eight to one, in case such care is provided in a home child care facility; or

"(B) ten to one, in case such care is provided in a day nursery facility, nursery school, child deevlopment center, play group facility, or preschool child care center.

For purposes of applying the ratios set forth in clauses (A) and (B) of the preceding sentence, any child under age three shall be considered as two children.

"(2) In the case of any facility (other than a facility to which paragraph (1) is applicable) the ratio of the number of children receiving child care therein to the number of qualified staff members providing such care shall not be greater than such ratio as the Director may determine to be appropriate to the type of child care provided and the age of the children involved, except that such ratio shall not be greater than twenty-five to one.

"(3) As used in this subsection, the term 'qualified staff member' means an individual who has received training in, or demonstrated ability in, the care of children.

"(c)(1) Any facility in which the Bureau provides child care (whether directly or through arrangements with others) must—

"(A)(i) in the case of facilities that are not homes, meet such provisions of the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association (twenty-first edition, 1967) as are applicable to the type of facility; except that the Bureau may waive for such periods as it deems appropriate, specific provisions of such code which, if rigidly applied, would result in unreasonable hardship upon the facility, but only if the Bureau makes a determination (and keeps a written record setting forth the basis of such determination) that such waiver will not adversely affect the health and safety of the children receiving care in such facility and (ii) in the case of facilities that are homes, meet requirements adopted by the local area (or a comparable area, if none have been adopted for the local area) for application to general residential occupancy;

"(B) contain (or have available to it for use) adequate indoor and outdoor space for children for the number and ages of the children served by such facility; have separate rooms or areas for cooking, and have separate rooms for toilets;

"(C) have floors and walls of a type which can be cleaned and maintained and which contain or are covered with no substance which is hazardous to the health or clothing of children;

"(D) have such ventilation and temperature control facilities as may be necessary to assure the safety and reasonable comfort of each child receiving care therein;

"(E) provide safe and comfortable facilities for the variety of activities children engage in while receiving care therein;

"(F) provide special arrangements or accommodations, for children who become ill, which are designed to provide rest and quiet for ill children while protecting other children from the risk of infection or contagion; and

"(G) make available to children receiving care therein such toys, games, books, equipment, and other material as are appropriate to the type of facility involved and the ages of the children receiving care therein.

"(2) The Director, in determining whether any particular facility meets minimum requirements imposed by paragraph (1) of this subsection, shall evaluate, not less often than once each year, on the basis of inspections made by personnel employed by the Bureau or by others through arrangements with the Bureau, such facility separately and shall make a determination with respect to such facility after taking into account the location and type of care provided by such facility as well as the age group served by it.

"(d) The Bureau shall not provide (directly or through arrangements with other persons) child care in a child care facility or home child care facility unless—

"(1) such facility requires that, in order to receive child care provided by such facility, a child must have been determined by a physician (after a physical examination) to be in good health and must have been immunized against such diseases and within such prior period as the Director may prescribe in order adequately to protect the children receiving care in such facility from communicable disease (except that no child seeking to enter or receiving care in such a facility shall be required to undergo any medical examination, immunization, or physical evaluation or treatment (except to the extent necessary to protect the public from epidemics of contagious diseases, if his parent or guardian objects thereto in writing on religious grounds);

"(2) such facility provides for the daily evaluation of each child receiving care therein for indications of illness;

"(3) such facility provides adequate and nutritious (though not necessarily hot) meals and snacks, which are prepared in a safe and sanitary manner;

"(4) such facility has in effect procedures designed to assure that each staff member thereof is fully advised of the hazards to children of infection and accidents and is instructed with respect to measures designed to avoid or reduce the incidence or severity of such hazards;

"(5) such facility has in effect procedures under which the staff members of such facility (including voluntary and part-time staff members) are required to undergo, prior to their initial employment and periodically thereafter, medical assessments of their physical and mental competence to provide child care;

"(6) such facility keeps and maintains adequate health records on each child receiving care in such facility and on each staff member (including any voluntary or part-time staff member) of such facility who has contact with children receiving care in such facility; and

"(7) such facility has in effect, for the children receiving child care services provided by such facility, a program under which emergency medical care or first aid will be provided to any such child who sustains injury or becomes ill while receiving such services from such facility, the parent of such child (or other proper person) will be promptly notified of such injury or illness, and other children receiving such services in such facility will be adequately protected from contagious disease.

"(e) The Bureau shall not provide (directly or through arrangements with other persons) child care, in any child care facility or home child care facility, to any child unless there is offered to the parent or parents with whom such child is living (or, if such child is not living with a parent, the guardian or other adult person with whom such child is living) the opportunity of (A) meeting and consulting, from time to time, with the staff of such facility on the development of such child, and (B) observing, from time to time, such child while he is receiving care in such facility.

"(f) Any nursery school, kindergarten, or child development center in which care is provided must meet applicable State or local educational standards.

"PHYSICAL STRUCTURE AND LOCATION OF CHILD CARE FACILITIES

"SEC. 2105. (a) There may be utilized, to provide child care authorized by this title, new buildings especially constructed as child care facilities, as wel as existing buildings which are appropriate for such purpose (including, but not limited to, schools, churches, social centers, apartment houses, public housing units, office buildings, and factories).

"(b) The Director, in selecting the location of any facility to provide child care under this title, shall, to the maximum extent feasible, give consideration to such factors as whether the site selected therefor—

"(1) is conveniently accessible to the children to be served by such facility, in terms of distance from the homes of such children as well as the length of travel-time (on the part of such children and their parents) involved;

"(2) is sufficiently accessible from the place of employment of the parents of such children so as to enable such parents to participate in such programs, if any, as are offered to parents by such facility; and

"(3) is conveniently accessible to other facilities, programs, or resources which are related to, or beneficial in, the development of the children of the age group served by such facility.

"EXCLUSIVENESS OF FEDERAL STANDARD; PENALTY FOR FALSE STATEMENT OR MISREPRESENTATION

"SEC. 2106. (a) Any facility in which child care services are provided by the Bureau (whether directly or through arrangements with other persons) shall not be subject to any licensing or similar requirements imposed by any State (or political subdivision thereof), and shall not be subject to any health, fire, safety, sanitary, or other requirements imposed by any State (or political subdivision thereof) with respect to facilities providing child care.

"(b) If any State (or political subdivision thereof), group, organization, or individual feels that the standards imposed, or proposed to be imposed, by the Bureau under section 2104(c)(1) for child care facilities (or any type of class of child care facilities) are less protective of the welfare of children than those imposed on such facilities by such State (or political subdivision thereof, as the case may be), such State (or political subdivision thereof), group, organization, or individual may, by filing a request with the Bureau, obtain a hearing on the matter of the standards imposed or proposed to be imposed by the Bureau with respect to such facilities.

"(c) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made, or induced or seeks to induce the making of, any false statement or representation of a material fact with respect to the conditions or operation of any facility in order that such facility may qualify as a facility in which child care services are provided by the Bureau (whether directly or through arrangements with other persons) shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned for not more than six months, or both, and any such facility shall be ineligible, for two years following such conviction, to participate in any child care program that is in whole or in part funded by the United States.

"RECONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN DECISIONS

"SEC. 2107. Whenever any group or organization has presented to the Bureau a proposal, under which such group or organization would provide child care services on behalf of the Bureau, which has been rejected by the Bureau, such group or organization, upon request filed with the Director may have a reconsideration of such proposal by the Bureau.

"CONFIDENTIALITY OF CERTAIN INFORMATION

"SEC. 2108. The Bureau shall impose such safeguards with respect to information held by it concerning applicants for and recipients of child care as are necessary or appropriate to assure that such information will be used only for purposes directly connected with the administration of this title, that the privacy of such applicants or recipients will be protected, and that, when such information is used for statistical purposes, it will be used in such manner as not to identify the particular individuals involved.

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 2109. In addition to such sums as may be available to the Bureau from the Child Care Fund established under section 2110, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the provisions of this title, for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1972, the sum of $800,000,000, and for each fiscal year thereafter, such sums as may be necessary.

"REVOLVING FUND

"SEC. 2110. (a) There is hereby established in the Treasury a revolving fund to be known as the Federal Child Care Fund (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Fund') which shall be available to the Bureau without fiscal year limitation to carry out its purposes, functions, and duties under this title.

"(b) There shall be deposited in the Fund—

"(1) funds appropriated under section 2109; and

"(2) the proceeds of all fees, rentals, charges, interest, or other receipts (including gifts) received by the Bureau.

"(c) Except for expenditures from the Federal Child Care Capital Fund (established by section 2111(d)) and expenditures from appropriated funds, all expenses of the Bureau (including salaries and other personnel expenses) shall be paid from the Fund.

"(d) If the Bureau determines that the moneys in the fund are in excess of the current needs of the Bureau, it may invest such amounts therefrom as it deems advisable in obligations of the United States or obligations the payment of principal and interest of which is guaranteed by the United States.

"REVENUE BONDS OF BUREAU

"SEC. 2111. (a) The Bureau is authorized (after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury) to issue and sell bonds, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness (hereafter in this section collectively referred to as 'bonds') whenever the Director determines that the proceeds of such bonds are necessary, together with other moneys available for operation of the Bureau from the Fund, to provide funds sufficient to enable the Bureau to carry out its purposes and functions under this title with respect to the acquisition, planning, construction, remodeling, or renovation of facilities for child care or sites for such facilities; except that (1) no such bonds shall be sold prior to July 1, 1975, (2) no more than $50,000,000 of such bonds shall be issued and sold during any fiscal year, and (3) the outstanding balance of all bonds so issued and sold shall not at any one time exceed $250,000,000.

"(b) Any such bonds may be secured by assets of the Bureau, including, but not limited to, fees, rentals, or other charges which the Bureau receives for the use of any facility for child care which the Bureau owns or in which the Bureau has an interest. Any such bonds are not, and shall not for any purpose be regarded as, obligations of the United States.

"(c) Any such bonds shall bear such rate of interest, have such dates of maturity, be in such denominations, be in such form, carry such registration privileges, be executed in such manner, be payable on such terms, conditions, and at such place or places, and be subject to such other terms and conditions, as the Director may prescribe.

"(d)(1) There is hereby established in the Treasury a fund to be known as the 'Federal Child Care Capital Fund' (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Capital Fund'), which shall be available to the Bureau without fiscal year limitations to carry out the purposes and functions of the Bureau with respect to the acquisition, planning, construction, remodeling, renovation, or initial equipping of facilities for child care services, or sites for such facilities.

"(2) The proceeds of any bonds issued and sold pursuant to this section shall be deposited in the Capital Fund and shall be available only for the purposes and functions referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"COLLECTION AND PUBLICATION OF STATISTICAL DATA

"SEC. 2112. The Bureau shall collect, classify, and publish, on a monthly and annual basis, statistical data relating to its operation and child care provided (directly or indirectly) by the Bureau together with such other data as may be relevant to the purposes and functions of the Bureau.

"REPORTS TO CONGRESS

"SEC. 2113. (a) The Director shall, not later than January 30 following the close of the first session of each Congress (commencing with January 30, 1974), submit to the Congress a written report on the activities of the Bureau during the period ending with the close of the session of Congress last preceding the submission of the report and beginning, in the case of the first such report so submitted, with the date of enactment of this title, and in the case of any such report thereafter, with the day after the last day covered by the last preceding report so submitted. As a separate part of any such report, there shall be included such data and information as may be required fully to apprise the Congress of the actions which the Bureau has taken to improve the quality and availability of child care services, together with a statement regarding the future plans (if any) of the Bureau to further improve the quality of such services.

"(b) The Director shall conduct, on a continuing basis, a study of the standards for child care under section 2104, and shall report to the Congress, not later than January 1, 1977, the results of such study, together with his recommendations (if any) with respect to changes which should be made in establishing such standards.

"APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

"SEC. 2114. (a) The provisions of section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (41 U.S.C. 5), or other provisions of law relating to competitive bidding, shall not be applicable to the Bureau; nor shall any other provision of law limiting the authority of instrumentalities of the United States to enter into contract be applicable to the Bureau in respect to contracts entered into by the Bureau for the provision of child care services in a home child care facility, temporary child care home, or a night care home.

"(b) The provisions of the Public Buildings Act of 1959 (40 U.S.C. 601–615) shall not apply to the acquisition, construction, remodeling, renovation, alteration, or repair of any building of the Bureau or to the acquisition of any site for any such building for use as a child care facility.

"RESEARCH AND DEMONSTRATIONS

"SEC. 2115. The Secretary, in the administration of section 426, shall consult with and cooperate with the Bureau with a view to providing for the conduct of research and demonstrations which will be applicable to child care services.

"NATIONAL ADVISORY COUNCIL ON CHILD CARE

"SEC. 2116. (a)(1) For the purpose of providing advice and recommendations for the consideration of the Director of the Bureau in matters of general policy in carrying out the purposes and functions of the Bureau, and with respect to improvements in the administration by the Bureau of its purposes and functions, there is hereby created a National Advisory Council on Child Care (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Council').

"(2) The Council shall be composed of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, and eight individuals, who shall be appointed by the Director (without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service), and who are not otherwise in the employ of the United States.

"(3) Of the appointed members of the Council, not more than three shall be selected from individuals who are representatives of social workers or child welfare workers or nonprofit organizations or are from the field of education, and the remaining appointed members shall be selected from individuals who are representatives of consumers of child care (but not including more than one individual who is a representative of any organization which is composed of or represents recipients of such assistance).

"(b) Each appointed member of the Council shall hold office for a term of three years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his successor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and except that the terms of office of the appointed members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the Director at the time of appointment, four on June 30, 1974, four on June 30, 1975, and four on June 30, 1976.

"(c) The Council is authorized to engage such technical assistance as may be required to carry out its functions, and the Director shall, in addition, make available to the Council such secretarial, clerical, and other assistance and such pertinent data prepared by the Bureau as the Council may require to carry out its functions.

"(d) Appointed members of the Council shall, while serving on the business of the Council, be entitled to receive compensation at the rate of $100 per day, including traveltime; and while so serving away from their homes or regular places of business, they shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, as authorized by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code, for persons in the Government service employed intermittently.

"COOPERATION WITH OTHER AGENCIES

"SEC. 2117. (a)(1) The Bureau is authorized to enter into agreements with public and other nonprofit agencies or organizations whereby children receiving child care provided by the Bureau (whether directly or through arrangements with other persons) will be provided other services conductive to their health, education, recreation, or development.

"(2) Any such agreement with any such agency or organization shall provide that such agency or organization shall pay the Bureau in advance or by way of reimbursement, for any expenses incurred by it in providing any services pursuant to such agreement.

"(b) The Bureau may also enter into cooperative arrangements with the State health authority and the State agency primarily responsible for State supervision of public schools to utilize such agencies in the provision of health services and education for children receiving child care.

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 2118. For purposes of this title—

"(a) The term 'Bureau' means the Bureau of Child Care established pursuant to section 2102.

"(b) The term 'child care services' means the provision, by the person undertaking to care for any child, of such personal care, protection, and supervision of each child receiving such care as may be required to meet the child care needs of such child, including services provided by—

"SEC. 427. (a) The Secretary is authorized to provide information, utilizing computers and modern data processing methods, through a national adoption information exchange system, to assist in the placement of children awaiting adoption and in the location of children for persons who wish to adopt children, including cooperative efforts with any similar programs operated by or within foreign countries, and such other related activities as would further or facilitate adoptions.

"(b) There are authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, and such sums as may be necessary for succeeding fiscal years, to carry out this section."

TITLE V—MISCELLANEOUS

PART A—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PUBLIC ASSISTANCE

REPORT ON QUALITY OF WORK PERFORMED BY WELFARE PORSONNEL

SEC. 501. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall conduct a full and complete study of ways of enhancing the quality of work performed by individuals employed in the administration and operation of State plans approved under titles I, IV, X, XIV, XV, and XVI of the Social Security Act for the purpose of arriving at standards of performance or other appropriate means of eliminating variations in the quality of work performed and encouraging the development of improved performance by such individuals.

(b) In conducting the study required by subsection (a), the Secretary is authorized to engage the assistance of individuals who have demonstrated knowledge and expertise in the area of welfare administration (including individuals who have direct contact with recipients) and from individuals who are themselves recipients under such State plans.

(c) The Secretary shall conduct the study required by subsection (a) and report his findings thereon together with appropriate recommendations to the Congress not later than January 1, 1974.

CRIMINAL OFFENSES BY WELFARE EMPLOYEES

SEC. 502. (a) (1) Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (as designated by section 249F of this Act and amended by sections 216(a), 221, 241, 271, 272, 410, 411, and 431) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"CRIMINAL OFFENSES BY WELFARE EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 1126. Any officer or employee of the United States or of any State or of any political subdivision of such State acting in connection with the administration or operation of any State plan approved under title I, IV, X, XIV, XV or XVI, of this Act—

"(1) who is guilty of any extortion or willful oppression under color of State or Federal law; or

"(2) who knowingly allows the disbursement of greater sums than are authorized by law, or receives any fee, compensation, or reward, except as by law prescribed, for the performance of any duty; or

(3) who, with intent to defeat the application of any provision of title I, IV, X, XIV, XV, or XVI, of the Social Security Act or any State plan approved thereunder, fails to perform any of the duties of his office or employment; or

"(4) who conspires or colludes with any other person to defraud the United States, any State government, or any political subdivision of such State; or

"(5) who knowingly makes opportunity for any person to defraud the United States, any State government, or any political subdivision of such State; or

"(6) who does or omits to do any act with intent to enable any other person to defraud the United States, any State government, or any political subdivision of such State;

"(7) who makes or signs any fraudulent entry in any book, or makes or signs any fraudulent application, form, or statement, knowing it to be fraudulent; or

"(8) who, having knowledge or information of fraud committed by any person against the United States, any State government, or any political subdivsion of such State under title I, IV, X, XIV, XV, or XVI of the Social Security Act or any State plan approved thereunder, fails to report, in writing, such knowledge or information to the Secretary or his delegate, or, if the fraud is against a State government or any political subdivision of such State, to the individual designated to administer the State plan approved under such title or his delegate; or

"(9) who demands, or accepts, or attempts to collect directly or indirectly as payment or gift, or otherwise, any sum of money or other thing of value for the compromise, adjustment, or settlement of any charge or complaint for any violation or alleged violation of law, except as expressly authorized by law so to do; shall be dismissed from office or discharged from employment and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both."

(2) (A) Effective January 1, 1974, section 1126 of the Social Security Act (as added by paragraph (1) of this subsection) is amended by striking out "title I, IV, X, XVI, XV, or XVI," each place it appears therein and inserting in lieu thereof "title IV, VI, or XV,".

(B) The amendments made by subparagraph (A) shall not apply to the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Virgin Islands, or Guam.

(b) In addition to the requirements imposed by law as a condition of approval of a State plan under title I, VI, IV, X, XIV, XV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, there is hereby imposed the requirement (and the plan shall be deemed to require) that the State plan provide that any officer or employee of the State acting in connection with the State plan as approved under such title who shall be found guilty of a violation of section 1126 of such Act shall be dismissed from office or discharged from employment in addition to any other penalty imposed under such section 1126.

DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS TO REDUCE WELFARE DEPENDENCY

SEC. 503. (a) Section 1110(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting after the period at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Of the funds appropriated under the preceding sentence for any fiscal year commencing after June 30, 1972, not less than 50 per centum thereof shall be used in projects relating to the prevention and reduction of dependency."

(b) Section 1115 is amended by inserting immediately after the matter at the end thereof the following new sentence: "Not less than 50 per centum of the amounts made available to the States under this section, for any fiscal year beginning after June 30, 1972, shall be used in projects relating to the prevention and reduction of welfare dependency."

LIMITATION ON REGULATORY AUTHORITY OF THE SECRETARY

SEC. 504. Section 1102 of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "; except that no rule or regulation which affects title I, IV, X, XIV, XV, or XVI of this Act shall be adopted unless such rule or regulation is related to a specific provision in such title and no rule or regulation so adopted shall be inconsistent with any provision of such title".

LIMITATION ON AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY WITH RESPECT TO ADVISORY COUNCILS

SEC. 505. Title XI of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after section 1127 the following new section:

"LIMITATION ON AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY WITH RESPECT TO ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 1128. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize or permit the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to prescribe any rule or regulation requiring any State, in the operation of a State plan approved under title I, IV, X, XIV, XV, or XVI of this Act, to establish or pay the expenses of any advisory council to advise the State with respect to such plan, its operation, or any program or programs conducted thereunder."

PROHIBITION AGAINST PARTICIPATION IN FOOD STAMP OR SURPLUS COMMODITIES PROGRAM BY PERSONS ELIGIBLE TO PARTICIPATE IN EMPLOYMENT OR ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 508. (a) Effective January 1, 1974, section 3(e) of the Food Stamp Act of 1964 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No person who is determined to be eligible (or upon application would be eligible) for aid under a State plan approved under title XV of the Social Security Act, and no person who is eligible (or upon application would be eligible) to receive supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of such Act shall be considered to be a member of a household or an elderly person for purposes of this Act."

(b) Section 3(h) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(h) The term 'State agency', with respect to any State, means the agency of State government which is designated by the Secretary for purposes of carrying out this Act in such State."

(c) Section 10(c) of such Act is amended by striking out the first sentence.

(d) Clause (2) of the second sentence of section 10(e) of such Act is amended by striking out "used by them in the certification of applicants for benefits under the federally aided public assistance programs" and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "prescribed by the Secretary in the regulations issued pursuant to this Act".

(e) Section 10(e) of such Act is further amended by striking out the third sentence.

(f) Section 14 of such Act is amended by striking out subsection (e).

(g) Effective January 1, 1974, section 416 of the Act of October 31, 1949, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "No person who is determined to be eligible (or upon application would be eligible) for aid under a State plan approved under title XV of the Social Security Act, and no person who is eligible (or upon application would be eligible) to receive supplemental security income under title XVI of such Act, shall be eligible to participate in any program conducted under this section (other than nonprofit child feeding programs or programs under which commodities are distributed on an emergency or temporary basis and eligibility for participation therein is not based upon the income or resources of the individual or family)."

(h) Except as otherwise provided in this section, the amendments made by this section shall take effect on January 1, 1973.

PAYMENTS TO STATES FOR FOOD STAMP CASH-OUT

SEC. 509. (a) From the amounts appropriated therefor, the Secretary shall pay to each State (or political subdivision thereof) for each quarter (commencing with the quarter beginning January 1, 1974) an amount equal to the total amount by which the payments by such State (or political subdivision) described in section 1616(a) of the Social Security Act (whether or not paid under an agreement entered into under such section) to any individual for any month, when increased by (1) the amount of such individual's other income (exclusive of income described in section 1612(b) of such Act but including income described in paragraph (2) of such section), and (2) the benefits, if any, paid under title XVI of such Act exceed the adjusted payment level (as defined in subsection (b)) of such State or the amount of such individual's income described in clauses (1) and (2), whichever is greater, but not counting so much of any such payment, when so increased, as exceeds the sum of such adjusted payment level plus the bonus value of food stamps (as defined in subsection (c)).

(b)(1) As used in this paragraph, the term "adjusted payment level", in the case of any State, means the amount of the money payment which an individual (or two or more individuals living in the same household) with no other income would have received under the State plan approved under title I, X, XIV or XVI of the Social Security Act, as such titles were in effect for October 1972, increased by a payment level modification.

(2) As used in this subparagraph, the term "payment level modification", in the case of any State, means that amount by which such State, which for October 1972 made money payments under its plan approved under title I, X, XIV or XVI of the Social Security Act, as such titles were in effect for such month to individuals with no other income which were less than 100 per centum of its standard of need, could have increased such money payments without increasing (if it reduced its standard of need under such plan so that such increased money payments equaled 100 per centum of such standard of need) the non-Federal share of expenditures for such money payments for October 1972 (as defined in subsection (d)).

(c) As used in this paragraph, the term "bonus value of food stamps" means—

(1) the face value of the coupon allotment which would have been provided for October 1972 to an individual (or two or more individuals living in the same household) under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, reduced by

(2) the charge which such individual (or individuals) would have paid for such coupon allotment, if the income of such individual (or individuals) for such month had been equal to the adjusted payment level. The face value of food stamps and the charge therefor in October 1972 shall be determined in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture in effect for such month.

(d) As used in this paragraph the term "non-Federal share of expenditures for money payments for October 1972", in the case of any State, means—

(1) total expenditures by such State for money payments for such month under its State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act, as such title was in effect for such month reduced by

(2) the amount determined for such State for such month under subsection (a)(1) or (2) of section 1003, and subsection (a)(1) or (2) of section 1403), and section 1118 of such Act, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950 (as such sections were in effect during such month).

ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES FOR TITLE XVI

SEC. 510. Appropriations for administrative expenses incurred during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, in developing the staff and facilities necessary to place in operation the supplemental security income program established by title XVI of the Social Security Act, as amended by this Act, may be included in an appropriation Act for such fiscal year.

TREATMENT OF RENT UNDER PUBLIC HOUSING

SEC. 511. (a) Section 9 of Public Law 92-213 is repealed.

(b) The amendment made by this section shall become effective on the first day of the month following the month in which this Act is enacted.

PROHIBITION AGAINST USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO UNDERMINE PUBLIC ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 512. Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (as designated by section 249F of this Act) is amended by adding after section 1126 (as added by section 502(a) of this Act) the following new section:

"PROHIBITION AGAINST USE OF FEDERAL FUNDS TO UNDERMINE PROGRAMS UNDER THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

"SEC. 1127. (a)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), no Federal funds shall be used (whether directly or indirectly) to pay all or any part of the compensation or expenses of any attorney or other person who, as a part of his federally financed activity whether as an employee in the executive branch or under a grant or contractual arrangement with the executive branch (or other employment), engages in any activity, for or on behalf of any client or other person or class of persons, the purpose of which is (by litigation or by actions related thereto) to nullify, challenge, or circumvent any provision of the Social Security Act, or any of the purposes or intentions of the Congress in enacting any such title or provision thereof or relating thereto; and it shall be unlawful for any such attorney or other person who engages in any such federally financed activity to accept or receive any Federal funds to defray all or any part of his compensation.

"(2) The prohibition contained in paragraph (1) shall not apply to any particular case or lawsuit (or to any attorney or other person involved therein) if the Attorney General issues an order specifically waiving such prohibition with respect to such case or lawsuit; except that no such order shall become effective with respect to any case or lawsuit until 60 days after the Attorney General shall have submitted to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a notice of his intention to waive such prohibition with respect to such case or lawsuit.

"(b) Any person who authorizes the disbursement of any Federal funds, and any attorney or other person who receives or accepts any such funds, in violation of subsection (a), shall be held accountable for and required to make good to the United States the amount of funds so disbursed or received or accepted."

PART B—GENERAL PROVISIONS

CHANGE IN EXECUTIVE SCHEDULE—COMMISSIONER OF SOCIAL SECURITY

SEC. 520. (a) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code (relating to positions at level V of the Executive Schedule), is amended by striking out:

"(51) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(b) Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code (relating to positions at level IV of the Executive Schedule), is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(97) Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.".

(c) The amendments made by the preceding provisions of this section shall take effect on the first day of the first pay period of the Commissioner of Social Security, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which commences on or after the first day of the month which follows the month in which this Act is enacted.

EVALUATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

SEC. 521. Part A of title XI of the Social Security Act (as designated by section 249F of this Act) is amended by adding after section 1128 (as added by section 505 of this Act) the following new section:

"EVALUATION OF SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

"SEC. 1129. (a)(1) The Comptroller General is hereby authorized to make analyses and evaluations of programs under this Act.

"(2) The departments and agencies shall make available to the Comptroller General such information and documents as he considers necessary for him to complete his work under this subsection.

"(b)(1) No department or agency of the Federal Government shall enter into any contract for the conduct of, or employ any expert or consultant to conduct, any study or evaluation of any program which—

"(A) is established by or pursuant to this Act, or

"(B) receives Federal financial assistance pursuant to authority contained in this Act, if the conduct of such study or evaluation involves the expenditure, from Federal funds, of an amount in excess of $25,000, unless, prior to the commencement of such study or evaluation, such department or agency shall have requested of, and obtained from, the Comptroller General approval for the conduct of such study or evaluation.

"(2) The Comptroller General shall not approve any request for the conduct of any study or evaluation of any program under paragraph (1), unless he determines that—

"(A) the conduct of such study or evaluation of such program is justified;

"(B) such department or agency cannot effectively conduct such study or evaluation through utilization of regular full-time employees of such department or agency; and

"(C) such study or evaluation will not be duplicative of any study or evaluation which is being conducted, or will be conducted within the next twelve months, by the General Accounting Office.

"(c)(1) To assist in carrying out his functions under this section, the Comptroller General may sign and issue subpenas requiring the production of negotiated contract and subcontract records and records of other non-Federal persons or organizations to which he has a right of access by law or agreement.

"(2) In case of disobedience to a subpena issued under the authority contained in paragraph (1), the Comptroller General may invoke the aid of any district court of the United States in requiring the production of the records referred to in paragraph (1). Any district court of the United States within the jurisdiction in which the contractor, subcontractor, or other non-Federal person or organization is found or resides or in which the contractor, subcontractor, or other non-Federal person or organization transacts business may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued by the Comptroller General, issue an order requiring the contractor, subcontractor, or other non-Federal person or organization to produce the records; and any failure to obey such order of the court shall be punished by the court as a contempt thereof."

PART C—LIBERALIZATION OF RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT; OTHER INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

RETIREMENT INCOME CREDIT

In General

SEC. 531. (a) Section 37 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to retirement income) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 37. RETIREMENT INCOME.

"(a) GENERAL RULES.—

"(1) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return—

"(A) if either spouse has attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year, or

"(B) if neither spouse has attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year but one or both spouses have public retirement system pension income for the taxable year, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 15 percent of the retirement income (as limited by subsection (b)) received by the husband and wife during the taxable year.

"(2) OTHER RETURNS.—In the case of a return by an unmarried individual and of a separate return by a married individual—

"(A) if the individual has attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year, or

"(B) if the individual has not attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year but has public retirement system pension income for the taxable year, there shall be allowed as a credit against the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year an amount equal to 15 percent of the retirement income (as limited by subsection (b)) received by the individual during the taxable year.

"(b) LIMITATION OF RETIREMENT INCOME.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The amount of retirement income which may be taken into account for purposes of subsection (a) shall not exceed the following amounts (reduced as provided in paragraph (2)):

"(A) $2,500, in the case of an unmarried individual,

"(B) $2,500, in the case of a joint return where only one spouse is an eligible individual,

"(C) $3,750, in the case of a joint return where both spouses are eligible individuals, or

"(D) $1,875, in the case of separate return by a married individual.

"(2) REDUCTION.—Except as provided in paragraphs (3) and (4), the reduction under this paragraph in the case of any individual is—

"(A) any amount received by such individual as a pension or annuity—

"(i) under title II of the Social Security Act,

"(ii) under the Railroad Retirement Act of 1935 or 1937, or

"(iii) otherwise excluded from gross income, plus

"(B) in the case of any individual who has not attained age 72 before the close of the taxable year—

"(1) except as provided in clause (ii), one-half the amount of earned income received by such individual in the taxable year in excess of $2,000, or

"(ii) if such individual has not attained age 62 before the close of the taxable year, and if such individual (or his spouse under age 62) is an eligible individual as defined in subsection (d)(4)(B), any amount of earned income in excess of $1,000 received by such individual in the taxable year.

"(3) SPECIAL RULES FOR DETERMINING THE DEDUCTION PROVIDED IN PARAGRAPH (2).—

"(A) JOINT RETURNS.—In the case of a joint return, the reduction under paragraph (2) shall be the aggregate of the amounts resulting from applying paragraph (2) separately to each spouse.

"(B) SEPARATE RETURNS OF MARRIED INDIVIDUALS.—In the case of a separate return of a married individual, paragraph (2)(B)(i) shall be applied by substituting '$1,000' for '$2,000', and paragraph (2)(B)(ii) shall be applied by substituting '$500' for '$1,000'.

"(C) NO REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN AMOUNTS EXCLUDED FROM GROSS INCOME.—No reduction shall be made under paragraph (2)(A) for any amount excluded from gross income under section 72 (relating to annuities), 101 (relating to life insurance proceeds), 104 (relating to compensation for injuries or sickness), 105 (relating to amounts received under accident and health plans), 402 (relating to taxability of beneficiary of employees' trust), or 403 (relating to taxation of employee annuities).

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS RECEIVING PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEM PENSION INCOME.—In the case of a joint return where one spouse is an eligible individual as defined in subsection (d)(4)(A) and the other spouse is an eligible individual as defined in subsection (d)(4)(B), there shall be an additional reduction under paragraph (2) in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of $1,250 over the amount of the public retirement system pension income of the spouse who is an eligible individual as defined in subsection (d)(4)(B).

"(c) RETIREMENT INCOME.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'retirement income' means income from—

"(A) pensions and annuities (including public retirement system pension income and including, in the case of an individual who is, or has been, an employee within the meaning of section 401(c)(1), distributions by a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a)),

"(B) interest,

"(C) rents,

"(D) dividends, and

"(E) bonds described in section 405(b)(1) which are received under a qualified bond purchase plan described in section 405(a) or in a distribution from a trust described in section 401(a) which is exempt from tax under section 501(a), to the extent included in gross income without reference to this section, but only to the extent such income does not represent compensation for personal services rendered during the taxable year.

"(2) CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS UNDER AGE 65.—In the case of—

"(A) a return by an unmarried individual who has not attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year,

"(B) a separate return by a married individual who has not attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year, and

"(C) a joint return if neither spouse has attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year, the term 'retirement income' means only public retirement system pension income, and only so much of such income received by an individual during the taxable year as does not exceed $2,500.

"(d) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) PUBLIC RETIREMENT SYSTEM PENSION INCOME.—The term 'public retirement system pension income' means income from pensions and annuities under a public retirement system for personal services performed by the taxpayer or his spouse, to the extent included in gross income without reference to this section, but only to the extent such income does not represent compensation for personal services rendered during the taxable year. For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'public retirement system' means a pension, annuity, retirement, or similar fund or system established by the United States, a State, a possession of the United States, any political subdivision of any of the foregoing, or the District of Columbia.

"(2) EARNED INCOME.—The term 'earned income' has the meaning assigned to such term in section 911(b) except that such term does not include any amount received as a pension or annuity.

"(3) COMMUNITY PROPERTY LAWS DISREGARDED.—The determination of whether—

"(A) earned income, or

"(B) income from pensions and annuities for personal services (including public retirement system pension income and distributions to which subsection (c)(1)(A) applies), is the income of a husband or wife shall be made without regard to community property laws.

"(4) ELIGIBLE INDIVIDUAL.—The term 'eligible individual' means an individual who—

"(A) has attained the age of 65 before the close of the taxable year, or

"(B) has not attained such age but has public retirement system pension income for the taxable year.

"(5) MARITAL STATUS.—Marital status shall be determined under section 153.

"(6) JOINT RETURN.—The term 'joint return' means the joint return of a husband and wife made under section 6013.

"(e) NONRESIDENT ALIEN INELIGIBLE FOR CREDIT.—No credit shall be allowed under this section to any non-resident alien."

Technical Amendments

(b)(1) Section 904 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to limitation on foreign tax credit) is amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h), and by inserting after subsection (f) the following new subsection:

"(g) COORDINATION WITH CREDIT FOR RETIREMENT INCOME.—In the case of an individual, for purposes of subsection (a) the tax against which the credit is taken is such tax reduced by the amount of the credit (if any) for the taxable year allowable under section 37 (relating to retirement income)."

(2) Section 6014(a) of such Code (relating to tax not computed by taxpayer) is amended by striking out the last sentence thereof.

(3) Section 6014(b) of such Code is amended—

(A) by striking out paragraph (4),

(B) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (4), and

(C) by inserting "or" at the end of paragraph (3).

Effective Date

(c) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1972.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand it, the Senator's amendment is basically the same as the amendment that he has previously offered, which was the pending amendment yesterday. The purpose of offering the amendment which I offered was to present to the Senator a parliamentary situation in which he could obtain a vote on his amendment rather than it being subject to a substitute, and after each substitute was voted down, additional substitutes being offered for it. In this situation, I believe the Senator from Delaware has a parliamentary situation in which he can have a vote on his amendment.

Personally, I expect to vote for the Roth amendment. I think that it offers us the best opportunity to lead the Senate out of the wilderness on title IV that is available to us.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment and the Roth amendment be temporarily laid aside to permit the Senator from West Virginia to offer an amendment dealing with a different subject, with the understanding that when action on the Byrd amendment is completed, the Senate will return to the consideration of the Long amendment and the Roth amendment thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished manager of the bill. I call up an amendment which I have at the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD's amendment is as follows:

COVERAGE UNDER MEDICARE FOR COAL MINERS ENTITLED TO BLACK LUNG BENEFITS UNDER THE FEDERAL COAL MINE HEALTH AND SAFETY ACT OF 1969

SEC. 2991. (a) Section 1811 of the Social Security Act (as amended by section 201(a)(1)(A)(2) of this Act) is further amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (1), and

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: ", and (3) coal miners (as defined in title IV, Part A, sec. 402 (d) of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969) who have been entitled to black lung benefits under such title for not less than 24 months, and who are not otherwise entitled to hospital insurance benefits under this title."

(b) Section 1817 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) There are authorized to be appropriated to the Trust Fund established by this section from time to time such sums as the Secretary deems necessary for any fiscal year on account of—

(1) payments made or to be made during such fiscal year from such trust Fund with respect to individuals entitled to hospital insurance benefits solely by reason of entitlement to black lung benefits under title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969,

(2) the additional administrative expenses resulting or expected to result therefor, and

(3) any loss in interest to such Trust Fund resulting from the payment of such amounts, in order to place such Trust Fund in the same position at the end of such fiscal year in which it would have been if such black lung beneficiaries are not entitled to hospital insurance benefits.".

(c) Section 1831 of such Act (as amended by section 201(a)(1)(A)(3) of this Act) is further amended by inserting after the words "disabled individuals" the words ", including coal miners entitled to black lung benefits under title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969."

(d) Section 1837 of such Act (after the new subsections added by sections 206(a) and 259(a) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Enrollment requirements under this section shall apply to coal miners entitled to black lung benefits in the same way and under the same applicable provisions as are applicable to disability insurance beneficiaries under title II of this Act.".

(e) Section 1838 of such Act (as amended by section 201(c)(3)(C) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) Coverage period requirements under this section shall apply to coal miners entitled to black lung benefits in the same way and under the same applicable provisions as are applicable to disability insurance beneficiaries under title II of this Act.".

(f) Section 1839 of such Act (as amended by section 201(c)(5) of this Act) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) Amounts of premiums as established under this section shall apply to coal miners entitled to black lung benefits in the same way and under the same applicable provisions as are applicable to disability insurance beneficiaries under title II of this Act."

(g) Section 1840(a)(1) of such Act (as amended by section 201(c)(6)(A) of this Act) is further amended—

(1) by striking out "or" after "section 202" and inserting a comma in lieu thereof, and

(2) by inserting after "223," the following: "or to black lung benefits paid under title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969,".

(h) Section 1840 of such Act (as amended by this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsecton:

"(j) The Secretary of the Treasury shall, from time to time, transfer from the general funds of the United States to the Federal Supplementary Medical Insurance Trust Fund the aggregate amount deducted under subsection (a)(1) of this section from the black lung benefits paid under title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969 for the period to which such transfer relates.".

(i) Section 1870 of such Act (as amended by sections 261(a) and 281 (a)(2) and (b) of this Act) is amended by inserting "or title IV of the Federal Coal Mine Health and Safety Act of 1969" after "title II of this Act" wherever it appears in such section.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the purpose of my amendment is to provide medicare benefits for a small group of miners who are receiving black lung benefits, but who are under the age of 65, or are not otherwise eligible for medicare coverage.

I am advised by the medicare expert of the Senate Finance Committee that there are approximately 6,000 miners who are not entitled to social security disability benefits, and that the projected costs for covering them is $6 million. This is the group of miners which I am attempting to assist with my amendment. I am informed that under the provisions of H.R. 1, as reported by the Senate Finance Committee, those persons under the age of 65 who are receiving social security disability benefits, will henceforth be entitled to medicare coverage. However, the small group of miners that I am trying to reach with my amendment are not covered by that provision in H.R. 1, or any other provision of law. They will somehow "fall between the cracks" and be left out in the cold with no medical coverage. What I am attempting to accomplish with my amendment is to "patch up these cracks" to insure that this group of deserving and needy miners is not overlooked and left without medical coverage.

Although I stated earlier that there are potentially 6,000 black lung recipients who could be covered by my amendment, it is estimated that only 2,500 to 3,000 will actually be affected because it is estimated that as many as 3,000 are presently employed in some type of part-time work and this would exclude them from the benefits of my amendment.

Although my amendment will not affect a large number of individuals, I cannot overly emphasize how important this coverage would be to this small group. The majority of them are in such poor health and in such dire financial circumstances that, quite likely, whatever black lung benefits they do receive usually go, in large part, toward payment of the ever-continuing medical bills which they will be incurring for the balance of their lives, in an effort to alleviate their pain, suffering, and disablement resulting from their black lung condition. I think that every citizen of this country should take note of the fact that these individuals contracted this disease while working for the benefit of the Nation. They toiled beneath the surface of the earth, mining the fuel to run our factories and light and heat our homes. Surely, it is not too much to provide them, at this point in their lives, with the ability to procure medical treatment to ease their physical suffering to the extent possible.

I believe my amendment will correct an injustice and I urge its adoption.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I applaud the Senator from West Virginia for his interest in the coal miners of West Virginia and the other States of this Union. The Senator worked hard in his early years, and is still working hard. The work ethic has not departed from the philosophy of the Senator from West Virginia, and he has not forgotten those who work in less desirable jobs than the job he holds today. He remembers those who worked alongside him in the coal mines of West Virginia during his earlier years, and has never lost his interest in them.

I have discussed this amendment with the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT), and we would be pleased to accept the amendment, and hope that the Senate will go along with us.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the manager of the bill, and also the distinguished ranking minority member (Mr. BENNETT).

I know that my distinguished senior colleague (Mr. RANDOLPH) would want to be added as a cosponsor, and I ask unanimous consent that his name be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG).

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, first I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Nathan Hayward of my staff be permitted to be present on the floor during the consideration of my amendment, including the vote thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance both for his words of support for my amendment and especially for his help in obtaining the parliamentary situation under which we can reach a vote on this most important proposal.

This is, as the chairman has said, basically the same amendment which I withdrew yesterday.

I am very pleased to have as the principal cosponsor of the measure the distinguished Senator from Virginia (Mr. BYRD) and, joining us, Senators BROCK, BUCKLEY, FANNIN, GAMBRELL, GOLDWATER, GURNEY, HANSEN, and SPONG.

Its major objective is to authorize a pilot test of each of the three major welfare reform proposals—the workfare plan reported out by the Finance Committee, Senator RIBICOFF'S amendment No. 1614, introduced last week, and H.R. 1—title IV—as passed by the House last year. The language would authorize $200 million per year for the administration to conduct the three tests, over a 2–4 year horizon. Before the tests went into effect, the administration would have to submit its plans to the Finance and Ways and Means Committees for comment.

After the tests begin, both the administration and the GAO would report to Congress on test results every 6 months, and again at the completion of the program. It would then be up to Congress to digest the data and take positive action to authorize more permanent welfare reforms.

THE NEED FOR TESTING

Mr. President, H.R. 1 has been as hotly debated in House and Senate committees and on the floor as any piece of social legislation in recent years. The transcripts of testimony and legislative proceedings run well into the thousands of pages. Supporters of each of the three measures cite the alarming statistics which show that the number of beneficiaries under AFDC has risen nearly 150 percent during the decade 1960–70. Even more recently, 2.25 million people were added to the AFDC roles in 1971 alone. Costs, too, have climbed to such levels that many State treasuries are close to the breaking point, not to mention the increased costs of Federal participation. These skyrocketing caseloads and checks have added so substantially to our social and financial burdens that people in all walks of life, liberals and conservatives alike, cry out in frustration. Clearly, the current welfare crisis is one of our most urgent domestic problems, and we in Congress have the authority and the responsibility to help reverse this deteriorating trend.

Yet, proponents of these separate measures argue vehemently that competing reform proposals will not salve our welfare wounds. Opponents of family assistance, for example, feel either that its benefits are too low, or that it sets a dangerous precedent as a guaranteed minimum income for all. Likewise, many question the feasibility of finding jobs for the hundreds of thousands of currently unemployed, and therefore oppose the notion of guaranteed jobs as a replacement for welfare. It seems to me that if there is a common denominator in this debate, it must be uncertainty, coupled with frustration.

Each Member of Congress is well acquainted with the welfare problems of his or her constituents. We can only feel compassion for the disadvantaged trapped in urban ghettos or left to struggle in an economically dissipated community. But what answers are there to these conditions of poverty and human suffering?

CURRENT INCOME MAINTENANCE TESTS

Mr. President, it is gratifying to realize that Congress and the administration have worked together in the past to fashion four experiments in welfare reform. OEO and HEW are presently conducting four small pilot projects in New Jersey, North Carolina, Washington, Colorado, and Indiana in an effort to better understand the impact of a guaranteed income on welfare families.

But these have been very modest efforts involving less than a total of 10,000 people in the original sample sizes. Each plan differs from the next, and none of them bears an exact resemblance to the three major proposals now before the Senate. Limited test results have been collected and analyzed. But the fact of the matter is, Mr. President, that not even the administrators of these tests could feel secure enough in their interpretation of the pilots to be able to say, "This is the route we should definitely go."

These are pioneer social laboratories, and very valuable for their contribution to our understanding of complex economic and behavioral issues. None of them, though, deals directly with the "workfare" elements of the legislation, and their welfare benefit levels are, in most cases, considerably higher than either the $2,400 or $2,600 figures embodied in H.R. 1 and Senator RIBICOFF'S latest amendment. In a sense, we have only reached the wind tunnel. What I am proposing is not only a mockup, but a full 2 to 4 year flight test for these landmark pieces of legislation.

IMPACTS OF THE THREE PROPOSALS

Anyone who has reviewed the very comprehensive committee reports on the pending bill cannot help but be struck by the enormous impact of these proposed reform measures. According to committee estimates, the House version of H.R. 1 would cost at least an additional $5.5 billion in fiscal year 1973, and a minimum of $23.5 billion by the end of its currently authorized 5-year life. The Finance Committee estimates its plan at $4.3 billion in 1974. Senator RIBICOFF has estimated that his latest compromise amendment would have a marginal cost of $3.9 billion in its first full year of operation. And if the medicare experience is any precedent—as I am sure it will be—these estimates will all prove to be on the low side.

More important than costs is the impact of these bills on the millions of people they are designed to reach. If the House estimates are achieved, 10½ million additional people will become eligible for welfare or "workfare" benefits, bringing the number of assisted people to more than 12 percent of our Nation's population. Under the Finance Committee version, guaranteed employment would be authorized for 1.2 million of the families currently receiving welfare but no longer eligible as recipients. Senator RIBICOFF calls for increased minimum payments and the creation of 300,000 public service jobs in the first year alone.

Mr. President, these are staggering statistics, and should not be taken lightly. Under H.R. 1, for example, the number of recipients in Puerto Rico would practically triple to nearly 1 million, meaning that 1 person in every 3 there would be under public assistance. Many States would more than double their welfare roles; every State would, of course, have its welfare lists increased. I emphasize these numbers not because I feel the Senate should disregard these people. On the contrary, Mr. President, it is because the potential impact of all three programs is so great that I argue now for prudence. No matter how grievous this national disease may be, we should not attempt to treat it with a remedy that has not been fully tested.

AN ANSWER TO CRITICS

Mr. President, I am thoroughly familiar with the rejoinder that pilot programs only delay therapeutic action, making the gap between those that have and those that do not grow even wider. But let me stress that a vote for testing is not a step backward, is not a retreat, is not even what some people decry as preserving the status quo. It seems to me that if my amendment is adopted, we will be saying to the administration, "Choose three pressing parts of the country—three States, or parts of them, three cities, or parts of them—and use this initiative to take three giant steps forward."

These pilot programs will be given time and money enough to prove their intrinsic value. During their trial, administration officials and the GAO will be reporting to Congress on their successes and failures.

These tests will. I hope, give us more complete answers to the many questions Congress must face. How will higher guaranteed benefits affect recipients' work incentives? Can meaningful public service jobs really be created overnight? How will private sector employers react to the opportunity to hire the previously unemployed in partnership with the Federal Government? Will the new administrative procedures for identifying welface cheaters prove as effective as promised? Can States and the Federal bureauacries really prune current operating expenses which are rising at a faster rate than the caseloads?

Mr. President, can we honestly expect to answer these and many other important questions without the benefit of practical experience? I earnestly want to see the current patchwork of programs reformed. There are too many injustices, too many inequalities, too many abuses for us to turn our backs.

Yet, reform has been postponed more than once, simply because Members of Congress could not agree on which direction to follow. As a second term Congressman, I strongly advocated the testing approach when family assistance was voted by the House in April 1970. My distinguished predecessor, John Williams, firmly believed in this approach, and attempted to persuade the Senate in the closing days of the 91st Congress that this was a sensible course. Perhaps if we now had the benefit of 2 years of testing experience, our legislative dilemmas would be less painful.

AN EXAMPLE WORTH NOTING

Mr. President, I have recently worked very hard with doctors and foundations to bring to this country an awareness of the misery caused by the many varieties of arthritis. It is a painful and merciless crippler, which affects the entire fabric of our society. Like the welfare problem, it reaches every State and congressional district, every city and rural county. I have been most impressed by the energy and dedication of the men and women working in laboratories and rehabilitation centers to try to combat the effects of arthritis and find a cure or preventative for the disease.

And yet, despite the suffering that arthritis creates, these scientists are constantly challenging their findings with laboratory and clinical testing. They are not, nor can they afford to be, satisfied with a simple panacea. Theirs is a perpetual job of experimentation, study, revision, and then more testing.

Their example has had a striking impact on me, and makes me ask my colleagues, why do we in Congress not follow such a lead? Why do we not authorize more program experimentation rather than program extension? Our desks are covered every day with new proposals—promised remedies for some social ill. But how often do we really ask "What confidence do I have that this is not only one answer to the problem, but the best answer at this time?"

Mr. President, let me conclude by stressing that I am not a skeptic, nor a pessimist. There are elements of all three plans which appeal to me and would, I am sure, help to improve our deteriorating welfare problem. But we are seeking a consensus that does not yet exist, partly, I am sure, because of Senators' individual reservations about one or more aspects of the programs. So I contend, let us take a major step ahead by having the courage to test our hunches in the field. Periodic reports from the administration and the Congress' investigator—the GAO—should help us in our observations. Then in 2 years, or more, if it is necessary, we can stand here with facts, rather than forecasts, to fashion the much-needed improvements we all seek.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I shall vote for the Senator's amendment. There are a few things about it that I personally somewhat disagree with. If the amendment carries, I would think it might be desirable to offer the Senate a chance to work its will on one or two aspects of the amendment which could perhaps be added at the end of the bill.

The Senator is aware of the fact that there are one or two things he does with his amendment that some of his cosponsors or supporters do not like but even with that, I believe, would be willing cheerfully to present the problem to the Senate and let the Senate work its will.

If the amendment is agreed to, it will not change a provision at the end of my amendment to provide some temporary relief to State governments between now and January 1974. It is my understanding that if the Senator's amendment is agreed to, that portion of my amendment would remain and that problem would be solved. But some Senators would like to vote on the controversial issue about welfare payments to strikers. Would not the Senator's amendment—I ask him if I am not correct—strike out that provision that says we will not pay welfare payments to those actively engaged in conducting a strike?

Mr. ROTH. That is correct.

Mr. LONG. So that those who feel we should not pay welfare payments to persons actively engaged in a strike—on the theory that they are not receiving wages because they voluntarily refuse to work and they do not want anyone else to work in that particular plant, say, and the Government should be neutral in a fight between management and labor—would have the opportunity, if they saw fit, to renew the issue in some other fashion, such as an amendment at the end of the bill.

Mr. ROTH. That would be correct.

Mr. LONG. While the Senator's amendment strikes this, he does not seek to prejudice the right of someone to raise that issue separately and permit the Senate to express itself on that; is that not correct?

Mr. ROTH. I agree with what the chairman has said. That is not the intention of this Senator.

Mr. LONG. I believe that the amendment the Senator has offered presents us with a prospect of passing this bill and doing all the many good things that are in title I, II, and III, with most of the benefits and the advantages that are in titles IV and V which, I fear, are not likely to happen unless we do agree to something along the line of testing these two controversial suggestions, or even testing a third controversial suggestion, reserving to Congress the right to judge by the results.

The Senator is well aware of the fact that Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Richardson is determined that any test must be accompanied by a provision that would say it goes into effect whether the test is a success or even if the test is a complete failure. That is something the Senator has not been willing to incorporate in his amendment and something he would resist, I take it?

Mr. ROTH. I agree very strongly with the chairman that I would not agree to having any one of the three proposals go into effect without Congress first taking action. The whole benefit and purpose of the testing is for Congress to have adequate information available to it so that it can fashion the best kind of program to solve the many welfare problems we have. For us to delegate today the authority to the executive branch, in my judgment, would be unconscionable and undesirable. That is the purpose of the testing. Then let us pass on what needs to be done.

Mr. LONG. There was a time when I was willing to go along with Secretary Richardson and Mr. Veneman and their group in an arrangement where they could put their testing into effect based on their own judgments, reserving to Congress the right to decide. But my experience on this very thing, the family assistance plan, has proved that those people are so adamant, so dogged in their determination to put into effect the guaranteed annual income for not working, and to keep the pages in the bill that would appear to be totally impracticable even when it is shown them that they are impracticable so that we could no longer defend that proposal.

I told them that I could no longer advocate some arrangement where we would let them try something and let them put it into effect, even though it proved to be a failure, and I could not defend it logically with my colleagues. I became convinced that we should not let them do something that was not good for the country, that was wrong. And, thereafter, I was not going to support anything like that.

I am pleased to see here that the Senator from Delaware does not make that mistake. He would test these three controversial programs—the Ribicoff approach, the administration approach, as well as the workfare approach, reserving to Congress the right to work its will after it sees the results of the tests. That will lead the Senate out of the wilderness, I believe, more than anything else.

I shall vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. ROTH. I thank the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee for his support.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. ROTH. I am happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from New York.

Mr. BUCKLEY. First of all, I am very much pleased to be a cosponsor of this amendment. It is a most constructive approach which will provide for a pragmatic test of the basic alternatives which have been proposed for welfare reform.

However, I am concerned about 1 or 2 features in the testing programs which are described, necessarily vaguely, in the amendment.

One has to do with money and the other has to do with the extent of the testing.

It seems to me that we must make sure the tests are, in fact, definitive and not open to second guessing or to criticism.

I think that this, in turn, suggests that the area of sampling must be large enough so that we do not have people popping in and across various political or testing lines in order to tailor their particular needs or desires to the particular program being offered within the area.

Let us face it, the workfare proposal would be distasteful to a lot of people. That does not mean that work should not be required as a quid pro quo for those receiving public assistance. However, I could see that if we had a test area composing only a portion of a city, as suggested in the language of the amendment, people could move from one apartment house to another and find themselves outside its reach. So I would urge that Congress make it clear in its report, assuming that this measure is adopted by Congress, that the administration is to select a test area which will be large enough in geographical scope so as to make sure that at least a portion of the population within it remains truly representative during the course of the test period.

This in turn leads to my concern as to the funds to be authorized; namely, the $200 million. The $200 million is to support three programs. That means it would be $66⅔ million per program per year for a 2-year period or more.

I seriously question whether that is adequate for the kind of test that I think the Senator from Delaware has in mind. I wonder if the Senator would consider doubling that figure to $400 million on the basis that we are dealing with legislation which will ultimately cost in the billions. It is better at this stage to authorize too much money rather than too little, because otherwise we might frustrate the whole purpose of the legislation.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, in answer to the two points the junior Senator from New York raises, I would say that I am sympathetic to his proposal that we double the amount of money.

As I said in my opening statement, I think it is most important that this be a full scale test. And I do not want it later called inadequate because of the amount of money made available or because of the geographic size of the study.

For that reason, Mr. President, I am willing to agree to the $400 million.

Mr. President, I modify my amendment in section 401(g), to strike the $200 million and in lieu thereof insert $400 million. That would mean that $400 million would be authorized each year of the test.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, on the Senator's second point, I agree that the locations chosen for the studies should be large enough to guarantee bona fide results. Our language is purposely vague there, because we think it is difficult to write into legislation exactly how such tests should be conducted.

We have to provided a safeguard to require that the administration consult with the Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee before putting the plans into operation. As a guideline, though, we have provided that the three tests involve areas of similar size and demography so that we can have an honest comparison.

It will take a great deal of work to establish these studies, but I am sure that HEW has the resources to do such a job.

I hope that the amendment, as written, will provide adequate safeguards.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I believe that is a very prudent proposal. I also state that I have the position approved by the distinguished chairman of the committee; namely, that no program should be enacted automatically after a test period without prior consent and authorization by the Congress.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me without losing his right to the floor?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have been buried in this problem now for 9 or 10 months. I know that I would have preferred to see the committee's so-called workfare program remain in the bill and become law. However, I realize that under the circumstances this is not possible. And under those circumstances I am delighted that the Senator from Delaware has offered his proposal which should be fair to all of us who advocate different programs to solve the problem.

I feel perfectly sure in my own mind that under the test, which in a sense becomes competitive, our workfare proposal will stand up as the most desirable of the three.

Mr. President, I am happy to join with the distinguished chairman of the committee in supporting the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. I hope that all of our colleagues will also support it so that we can lay at rest once and for all the differences that exist with respect to the proper way to approach this problem. I certainly hope that the Senator's amendment is agreed to by the Senate.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I appreciate the support of the distinguished Senator from Utah. I know that no one on the Finance Committee has been more dedicated or has worked harder to come up with a reasonable solution to the problem. I think that the Finance Committee has presented us with a revolutionary approach, and that it deserves the same kind of adequate testing as the other proposals.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I commend the Senator for offering his amendment. I think it has great merit in that it would help to find out which of these welfare programs, if any, would improve on our present situation.

I was wondering if the Senator's amendment could include as a pilot area an Indian reservation. They are probably the poorest people. We have our greatest welfare problem on the Indian reservations.

I hope that one of the areas selected for a pilot test might include an Indian reservation.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, we have not written such a requirement into the language of the bill. However, as I pointed out earlier in proposing the test, the executive branch will be required to consult with the Finance Committee as well as to the House Ways and Means Committee. I am sure that the distinguished ranking minority Member's colleagues would be happy to discuss this possibility with him, when the administration begins its work on the test design.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROTH. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I rise in support of the Roth-Byrd amendment.

Our present welfare system is inadequate, extremely inefficient, and thereby grossly ineffective. Welfare reform is essential and has been the so-called first order of Congress for several years now.

The House has passed a welfare reform bill—twice. It is now the Senate's turn to at least respond this time. We are, however, bottlenecked by three different proposals. I am not saying that this is bad. In fact, I think it is good, and it helps prove the point which I am about to make.

We in the Senate Finance Committee have heard testimony about the failings of the present welfare system. What has happened, though, is that each Senator has combined his personal public experiences with his State's welfare system, his personal insights into the present welfare system, and the testimony of critics and analysts of the present program, and has tried to conceptualize a new system which will "cure" all of the ills of the present system.

What has been the result? Based upon the impact of our own ideas, we are beginning to gravitate toward one of the three proposals for welfare reform now before us. Or, as another alternative, we will bury our heads in the sand, ignore what is happening in the welfare offices across the country, and block the passage of any welfare proposal this session. Then, when the 93d Congress begins, we will have the dubious pleasure of starting all over again. But next time we might not have this divergence of opinion. Maybe, in desperation, next time we will agree to one proposal or another in hopes of at least getting something passed to alleviate the present welfare mess.

As I have said before, this difference of opinion about a welfare solution is good. It points out to us that three factions of the Senate believe very strongly that each of their proposals is the key to a functional system weighted on the one hand by responsibility for those less fortunate and balanced on the other hand by a reasonable and equitable means of supporting the system.

The problem is—which proposal, given the ills of the present system, will best meet the needs of the individuals involved without having them sacrifice their human dignity and without causing a divisive resentment among the other tax-paying citizens who are footing the bill.

I therefore wish to commend those Senators who espouse these diversified views. It shows the American people that we are searching for a reasonable and workable system for aiding the less fortunate and that, even in the waning days of this session of Congress, we are not willing to forego our very real dedication to our ideals in order to insure the passage of some type of welfare reform. If this were the case, chances are in a few years, we would be right back in the same boat, trying to devise a system which would be more functional.

For these reasons I cannot help but concur with the Roth-Byrd pilot test proposal—yet a fourth channel to welfare reform.

Why should the Congress, as a legislative body, be an absolutist in decreeing the best method for reforming our present welfare program without first testing the various methods espoused by my colleagues in the Senate? We have at least concentrated our efforts and thoughts on three different proposals. After the pilot testing of these three proposals as well as a constant and thorough analysis of them, we might be quite surprised to find that one proposal is superior or that a hybrid of one or more proposals is the real answer we are seeking.

If this is not the case, the pilot testing of these welfare proposals will advance us much more rapidly toward an efficient and effective welfare system. Why lose the ground we have already gained with the hearings and committee work behind us, only to start over again in a few month's time? Why not use this work as a stepping stone toward the establishment of a comprehensive welfare program?

I personally believe in the theory of workfare as opposed to welfare. The Finance Committee approach is closest to my own theory of "helping those who help themselves." However, I can see some discrepancies in the administration of this revolutionary new program, and I would rather see the "bugs" worked out in a small cross-section of the country under a pilot test approach than to spend millions of dollars correcting the wrongs in welfare offices in every city across the country once we have adopted one of the proposals as law. Would it not be much better to have perfected the systems on a small scale before putting it into operation on a large scale?

As I have indicated, the Senate at this time is split four ways. There are those who favor the original welfare proposal embodied in H.R. 1; there are those who feel Senator RIBICOFF has the right answer to welfare reform; there are those who think the Finance Committee is headed in the right direction; and there are those who feel we must test each of these proposals before dedicating our resources to another welfare system. After much deliberation, I have decided that I fall into the latter category.

We must not toss aside the insight we have gained into the present welfare program. At the same time we must not blindly adopt a welfare program which, while patently promising to cure the ills of the present welfare system, could create even greater needs and thereby force us into a socialistic society, by falsely encouraging more and more people to believe that it is not necessary for able bodied citizens to work.

I, therefore, urge my colleagues to think about their position on welfare reform. I hope in so doing that they will concur that the best direction is that of the Roth-Byrd-amendment for the pilot testing of each of the three welfare proposals during the next 2 years. At the end of that time we will be able rationally to decide upon the best proposal.

Although my policy is not to circumvent the Finance Committee on which I serve, after weighing the adamant feelings of all proponents, I believe the only fair way to proceed is to put the various proposals to a test in order to determine the best direction to take in the future. I would, therefore, urge my colleagues to vote in favor of this amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I send to the desk a motion to recommit and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

I move to recommit H.R. 1 to the Finance Committee with instructions to report forthwith with the following amendment:

Beginning on page 689, line 11, strike out everything down through page 863, line 26.

Beginning on page 921, line 2, strike out everything down through page 932, line 24.

Beginning on page 933, line 9, strike out everything down through line 2 on page 936.

Beginning on page 947, line 4, strike out everything down through line 5 on page 954.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, the Senate has now rejected my welfare reform proposal—a proposal which would have ended the present welfare mess. The moment of truth for meaningful reforms appears to have ended in what the New York Times called "another long night of despair for the millions on welfare."

We are all victims of this failure.

Those people in America who are unable to work—mothers with preschool children, the incapacitated, the infirm and those caring for them—must endure the intolerable inadequacies of the present system.

The working poor, that 40 percent of America's poverty population who live in families headed by a full-time worker, will continue to be ignored and the taxpayer who must pay the bills for an inadequate, inefficient, and inhuman jungle of 1,152 different welfare systems will continue to watch welfare costs skyrocket. These costs for AFDC alone amounted to $6.2 billion in calendar year 1971, an increase of almost 15 percent over the preceding year.

The Finance Committee's proposals only compound the welfare mess, leaving intact the present system and building upon it a gigantic workfare bureaucracy which would administer a jungle of wage supplements and make-work subpoverty jobs. The Finance Committee proposal is expensive and unwieldy.

Therefore, I now offer my motion to recommit with instructions to delete the Finance Committee welfare reform proposals.

As the legislation now stands it is completely unacceptable. Thus the only proper course to take at this time is to recommit the entire bill.

I know what the distinguished Senator from Delaware is trying to do. In general, I agree with that objective. It would have been appropriate in the fall of 1970 to have tried to have a true pilot, or a set of pilot programs for our Nation. This was submitted to the Secretary of HEW by the entire Committee on Finance, only to have it rejected.

I felt then and continue to feel that this was a grave mistake in judgment. If pilot programs had been accepted, we would have completed all the varied tests across the country. The results would have been reported back to Congress, and we would have had an opportunity, both in the Committee on Finance and in the Ways and Means Committee, to study those tests and come to our own conclusions on the merits of the various proposals for welfare reform.

As I said before in this debate, I have enough self-doubt in my own mind to feel I do not know all the answers; no one does because sufficient information is not available. Pilot programs 2 years ago would have given us a great opportunity to study this problem and we were all convinced this should have been done.

The distinguished predecessor of the Senator from Delaware, Senator Williams, was bitterly opposed to the entire concept of the administration's original welfare proposal—and I do not question the deep sincerity of the Senator from Delaware at that time. He felt the President's bill was a great mistake, and he would not have any part of it. Yet, in trying to accommodate various positions and be fair about it Senator Williams, who did conduct a filibuster in the closing days of that Congress in order to prevent the adoption of any welfare reform proposal, said to me in private conversations time and time again:

Abe, I do not like this bill. I want no part of it. But if we tested it out I would go for it, and I cannot understand why my administration is unwilling to have tests made.

He also said:

Abe, I do not like this bill. I want no part appropriate sufficient funds for this test; let HEW come to me and tell me how much they want, and I will vote to authorize the money, even if it is up to $500 million.

But the administration was adamant in their opposition and a great opportunity was lost.

I decried the situation and the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) decried the situation. As far as I know, every member of the Committee on Finance who wanted this tested out decried the lost opportunity to have these pilot programs.

The argument that was given was, "You are delaying the time when it will go into effect." So here we are in the closing days of this sesison in 1972 and we are still talking about tests.

What bothers me about the Roth proposal is that it leaves much of the Finance Committee bill intact. It would delete the work administration and make work jobs programs; but unfortunately, it would leave intact the Bureau of Child Care with its low or nonexistent standards. It would leave intact the wage subsidy and work bonus, as well as the overly stringent and strident child support and deserting fathers provisions.

If my motion is accepted, the bill will be reported without the underlying Finance Committee proposals and we can seriously debate the merits of the Roth proposal and other amendments at that time.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. PERCY and Mr. LONG addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the pending motion and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) proposes an amendment to the motion offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

The Percy amendment to the motion is as follows:

Strike out all of the instructions of the motion of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and insert in lieu the following:

"FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 1131. (a) The Secretary shall, subject to subsection (c), pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, in addition to the amounts (if any) otherwise payable to such State under such titles, such part, section 1118, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950, on account of expenditures as cash assistance, an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(1) an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under the State plans approved under such title or such part A (as the case may be), as cash assistance for such quarter (not counting any part of such expenditures which is in excess of the amount of the expenditures which would have been made as cash assistance under such plans if such plans had remained as they were in effect for January 1971, or of the amount referred to in clause (2),

"(2) an amount equal to 100 per centum of the non-Federal share of the total average quarterly expenditures, under such plans, as cash assistance during the 4-quarter period ending December 31, 1970.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a) the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter under State plans approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act as cash assistance, referred to in subsection (a)(1), means the excess of—

"(1) the total expenditure for such quarter under such plans as (A) old-age assistance, (B) aid to the blind, (C) aid to the disabled, (D) aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, and (E) aid to families with dependent children, over

"(2) the amounts determined for such quarter for such State with respect to such expenditures under sections 3, 1003, 1403, 1603, 403, and 1118 of this Act and (in the case of a plan approved under title I or X or part A of title IV) under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950.

"(c) No payment under this section shall be made for any quarter to any State on account of expenditures, as cash assistance, under a State plan of such State if the standards, under any plan of such State approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, for determining eligibility for, or the amount of, cash assistance to individuals under such plan have been so changed as to be less favorable, to all (or any substantial class or category) of the applicants for or recipients of such assistance under the plan, than the standards provided for such purpose under such plan as in effect for January 1, 1971, or, if more favorable to any such applicants or recipients, for any month after January 1971."

MAINTENANCE OF STATE PAYMENT LEVELS

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (22); and

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (23) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and" the following: "(24) provide that aid furnished under the plan to a family for any month shall not be less than (A) the amount of aid which would have been furnished for October 1972 under such plan to a family of the same size with no other income, reduced by (B) any income such family may have which is not required to be disregarded by clause (8)."

On page 989, after line 17, add the following new title:

TITLE VI—EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, title IV (other than sections 401, 402, and 403) and title V (other than sections 510, 521, 531, and 534 shall be effective at such time as the Congress may determine in subsequent legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not amendable. The Senator can move to amend the instructions.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I really think the Senate wants to vote for the Roth amendment. If I did not think so I would not have agreed to vote for the Roth amendment myself.

The Senator offered his amendment and he could not bring it to a vote because we had a substitute for it offered by the Senator from Connecticut.

We were informed there were to be other substitutes offered, which I did not think the Senate wanted to agree to. So to accommodate the Senator and to try to bring his proposal to a vote, I myself offered an amendment so he could offer his amendment in the second degree with the prospect of bringing it to a vote. But it looks as if some do not want the Senator's amendment voted on.

If the proposal of the Senator from Delaware is agreed to, Senators can still propose to recommit and report back. They can agree to offer amendments at the end of the bill and offer substitutes for the entire bill. Senators are not precluded from offering a substitute.

But some of us think the Senator from Delaware is entitled to have a vote on his amendment.

That being the case, I move that the motion to recommit and report back be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to table the motion of the Senator from Connecticut.

The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. INOUYE (after having voted in the negative). Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) would vote "nay."

Mr. SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 41, as follows:

So Mr. ROTH's amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as amended.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the principal difference between the amendment as amended and the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) is that the amendment contains a 20-percent increase in the amount of funds available to State welfare departments for fiscal years 1973 and 1974. The reason that is necessary is because there have been cost-of-living increases and there have also been some increases in the caseload to the point that the welfare administrators of this country say that if the Roth amendment were to prevail, and if there were not other help available to them, they would be in a fiscal squeeze and would not be able amply to take care of their increased costs.

This provides a temporary addition of 20 percent of the Federal share up to January 1974 for the aged, blind, and disabled, and to July 1974 for AFDC. This has been asked for by the welfare administrators of the Nation generally. They say that it is necessary to see that they have adequate funds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a motion to recommit H.R. 1 with instructions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is it a motion to recommit and report forthwith with instructions?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Chair is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the motion.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Mr. STEVENSON moves to recommit H.R. 1 to the Finance Committee with instructions to report back forthwith, striking the language from page 689, line 11 through page 769, line 11 and inserting in lieu thereof the Ribicoff amendment as modified.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the effect of the amendment would be to recommit the bill to the Finance Committee with instructions to accept, with two modifications, the Ribicoff-administration compromise which was introduced as amendment No. 1669 and was tabled yesterday.

These instructions would make only two changes in the Ribicoff-administration compromise.

First, under the instructions, the benefit level of $2,600 for a family of four with no other income would be reduced to $2,400, the same level contained in the House-passed bill, H.R. 1.

Second, under these instructions the authorization for child care contained in the earlier Ribicoff amendment, which provided $1.5 billion, would be reduced to $800 million, the same level contained in the House-passed bill, H.R. 1.

As a result of these two changes the budgetary impact of this amendment would be virtually the same as in President Nixon's version, and the cost would be substantially less—nearly $4 billion less—than the cost of the Finance Committee proposal as amended by the Roth proposal.

These two changes are the only two changes that would be made under the instructions. The amendment would preserve the structural provisions present in the Ribicoff-administration compromise and necessary to bring about true welfare reform and the two changes I have mentioned would bring the cost down to that suggested by the administration.

If the amendment is agreed to, welfare recipients in States which now pay less than $2,400 would immediately receive $2,400, and welfare recipients in States which now pay more than $2,400 would continue to receive payments at their present level, or at the level provided on January 1, 1971, if that were higher.

Every State would be guaranteed that its costs for welfare would be no greater than its cost in calendar year 1971.

The amendment contains all the protection and reforms that were agreed to by the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and Secretary Richardson. These include:

(1) Maintenance of benefits: In those states where payment levels exceed $2400, states would be required to make supplemental payments to assume that no recipient receives a smaller payment than he or she receives under present law.

(2) State fiscal relief: The federal government would pay 100% of the first $2400 of a recipient's welfare payment. A state would pay the remainder except that the federal government would pay any amount in excess of a state's total cost during calendar year 1971.

(3) Work requirements: A recipient would not be required to accept employment if she is the mother of a child under the age of 6.

(4) Annual increase in benefits: Benefits would increase annually by a percent equal to the annual increase in the consumer price index.

(5) Pilot program for working poor: The Ribicoff-Administration compromise and our amendment provide for a pilot program for that portion of the legislation which provides benefits to the working poor, and specifies that upon completion of the pilot program and evaluation of its results, the full program of aid to the working poor will be implemented unless either House of Congress objects within 60 days.

As I say, the only difference would be to reduce the welfare level from $2,600 to $2,400 and to reduce the authorization for child care for welfare recipients.

That, in effect, would give us a bill, the cost of which would be virtually the same as the cost of the original H.R. 1 proposal of the administration.

Mr. President, if there is one thing that every Member of the Senate agrees upon it is that the present welfare system is intolerable. This may be our last chance to change this system. All of the other proposals pending before the Senate would either sink us deeper into the present welfare system or cause delay or add on to that system new, unworkable, and even more costly provisions.

This motion, if adopted by the Senate, would give the administration virtually what it asked for. It would give us—the administration and the Senate—our last chance in this session of the Congress to support welfare reform and perhaps the last chance for a long time to come.

Representative MILLS. the chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, has indicated that welfare reform will not be a high priority in the next session of the Congress.

Mr. President, I offer this motion not only on behalf of myself, but also on behalf of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOPER), my distinguished colleague, the senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), and the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY).

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a further explanation?

Mr. STEVENSON. I gladly yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, do I correctly understand the Senator's motion to mean that it would, if voted upon favorably, send the entire bill back to the committee with instructions?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Would that in any way impair titles I, II, and III?

Mr. STEVENSON. Titles I, II, and III would not be impaired. The instructions are to report back forthwith. It would not impair those titles.

Mr. HUMPHREY. When the Senator says "to report back forthwith," would that proposal permit the committee to revise titles I, II, and III and subsequent sections?

Mr. STEVENSON. The instructions are confined to other titles. It is my understanding, and certainly my intention, that the committee would have no opportunity to make any other changes in H.R. 1.

Mr. HUMPHREY. It is title IV essentially that the Senator directs his amendment to?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. And how would this affect the recent action of the Senate on the vote just taken on the Roth amendment?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Roth amendment would be replaced by the provisions which I have described, which are incorporated in the instructions.

Mr. HUMPHREY. This gives us another opportunity to take a look at the so-called family assistance part of the program and to incorporate, if the Stevenson amendment passes, the basic provisions of the administration proposal plus the child care protections.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Plus the provisions that were thwarted in the Ribicoff proposal, by the reduced levels.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is correct. I do not believe the contents of the Roth amendment has been made clear for the RECORD. The administration has opposed the Roth amendment. HEW has sent me and other Senators a copy of a letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH). The letter of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare dated April 27, 1972, states:

I would like to explain why the administration must strongly oppose your amendment No. 1077 to H.R. 1.

A test of the kind your Amendment would require would delay reform for about five years, since it would necessitate:

One year to plan and implement the test;

Two years to run the test, with preliminary data becoming available in the middle of the second year;

An additional year to compile, evaluate, and use the data to formulate a legislative proposal;

At least one or two years to obtain Congressional approval of a new bill.

He goes on to say:

Further delay in enacting reform would have the following tragic results:

Exploding costs and caseloads would continue to drain Federal money into a system with little control over who receives benefits;

The inadequate work provisions in current law would be perpetuated;

Widely varying standards and administrative practices among States and counties would continue to provide inequitable treatment and counterproductive incentives for migration and family break-up; and

The inevitable waning of public confidence would encourage a trend, already evident in the past year, to make the truly needy the scapegoats of a failing system.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct. Senators will cease their conversations. The Senate will be in order. The Senate is not in order.

The Senator from Illinois may proceed.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point the letter from Secretary Richardson to the Senator from Delaware dated April 27, 1972.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH,
EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
Washington, D.C., April 27, 1972.

Hon. WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR.,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ROTH: I would like to explain why the Administration must strongly oppose your Amendment Number 1077 to H.R. 1.

As your November 12, 1971, letter to the President suggested, there is a danger that the rhetoric about welfare reform may tend to overstate both the advantages and the disadvantages of the H.R. 1 reform. Yet there is no doubt in my mind, in view of the tests which have already been conducted of key elements of H.R. 1 and in view of the deterioration of the current welfare system, that the evidence at hand firmly supports enactment of H.R. 1 without further delay.

A test of the kind your Amendment would require would delay reform for about five years, since it would necessitate:

One year to plan and implement the test;

Two years to run the test, with preliminary data becoming available in the middle of the second year;

An additional year to compile, evaluate, and use the data to formulate a legislative proposal;

At least one or two years to obtain Congressional approval of a new bill.

These time estimates are by no means exaggerated. The recently completed test of wage supplementation in New Jersey lasted over three years, and the final data are not yet fully compiled and analyzed. My staff and I would be happy to discuss with you the evidence so far obtained from tests in Iowa, North Carolina, Gary, Seattle, Denver, and Vermont, as well as New Jersey. These tests have yielded substantial proof that families do not reduce their earnings when they receive wage supplementation.

Further delay in enacting reform would have the following tragic results:

Exploding costs and caseloads would continue to drain Federal money into a system with little control over who receives benefits;

The inadequate work provisions in current law would be perpetuated;

Widely varying standards and administrative practices among States and counties would continue to provide inequitable treatment and counterproductive incentives for migration and family break-up; and

The inevitable waning of public confidence would encourage a trend, already evident in the past year, to make the truly needy the scapegoats of a failing system.

I sincerely believe that a vote for your Amendment, in lieu of the H.R. 1 provisions, is a vote to perpetuate the current welfare mess for years. I do not accept the proposition that providing incentives to work, creating penalties for refusal to work, removing obstacles to work by emphasizing child care and supportive services, increasing the training effort, or finding jobs and creating public service jobs, are ideas in need of further testing.

We have announced, in conjunction with Senator Ribicoff, our support for a limited test provision which would not delay the H.R. 1, reforms. Such a test would occur between enactment of H.R. 1 and the effective date of the family program and should provide useful administrative data on the new H.R. 1 caseload. The Congress would be given the opportunity, under a disapproval provision, to reject coverage of new eligibles as a result of evidence from the testing.

As the President said in his March 27 message to the Congress on the subject of welfare reform. "We need reform this year so that, instead of pouring billions more into a system universally recognized as a failure, we can make a new start . . . It (H.R. 1) is the most important single piece of social legislation to come before the Congress in several decades . . . No legislation should have a higher priority."

I urge you to consider a test amendment within the context of H.R. 1 as the Administration has agreed with Senator Ribicoff. I would be happy to meet with you to delve into this subject, which is of great importance to this Administration and to the Nation.

With kindest regards,

Sincerely,

ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON, Secretary.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I might say to the Senator from Minnesota that this is the last chance for welfare reform. The alternative at this point is 5 years more of delay, 5 years more of crises in welfare, 5 years more of dehumanization for people, and 5 years more of ever-expanding case loads and welfare rolls.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I believe the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is so important that I ask him again to go into what the amendment would do. I believe so often in these debates we lose many of the pertinent points and the facts that we need to understand. Will the Senator do that for at least the benefit of the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. STEVENSON. The amendment incorporates all the provisions of Senator RIBICOFF's earlier amendment, thereby incorporating many changes agreed to by the administration, agreed to by Secretary Richardson.

The amendment then makes two changes in Senator RIBICOFF's earlier amendment. First, it goes back to the welfare levels provided in H.R. 1 of $2,400 for a family of four instead of $2,600 in Senator RIBICOFF's amendment; second, it cuts back the authorization for child care for a welfare recipient from $1.5 billion in Senator RIBICOFF's amendment to $800 million as in H.R. 1. That means the total cost to the Federal Government would be virtually the same as the original proposal of the President.

The changes from the President's favored version of H.R. 1, all agreed to by Secretary Richardson, would, first, provide that in States where payment levels exceed $2,400, State would be required to make supplemental payments to assure that no recipient is issued a smaller payment. Welfare levels could not be reduced. That was contemplated by the administration.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request with the understanding that he does not lose his right to the floor?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I would not interrupt the Senator but I wanted to propound a request with as many Senators as possible in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

ORDER FOR DEBATE ON CLOTURE MOTION TO BEGIN AT 9:15 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the 1 hour for the debate on the motion to invoke cloture tomorrow begin running at 9:15 a.m. I am authorized to make this request by the distinguished majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator state the request again?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. That the 1 hour for debate under rule XXII on the motion to invoke cloture begin running at 9:15 a.m. tomorrow.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. I thank the Senator.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object——

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not believe I gave up the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Florida with respect to the unanimous-consent request?

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, without losing my right to the floor; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator yields.

Mr. GURNEY. I thank the Senator from Illinois.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida is recognized.

Mr. GURNEY. This means the debate would end at 10:15 a.m. tomorrow and that the quorum call would begin at 10:15, to be followed by the vote?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. The Senator is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. STEVENSON. If I could continue briefly to answer the question of the Senator from Minnesota——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the second difference pertains to State fiscal relief. The Federal Government would pay 100 percent of the first $2,400 of the recipient's welfare payment. The State would pay the remainder, except the Federal Government would pay any amount in excess of the State's total cost in calendar year 1971. In other words, there are more generous provisions for relief to the States. Third, in connection with work requirements, the recipient will not be required to accept employment if the recipient is the mother of a child under the age of 6. Originally the administration had made the cutoff at age 3 for all working mothers with children. We would make the age 6. That was agreed to by Secretary Richardson.

Four, benefits would increase annually by a percent equal to the annual increase in the consumer price index.

Finally, under this proposal the provision for relief of the working poor, instead of being conducted on a national basis would be conducted on an experimental or pilot basis. It could be stopped in 2 years if it did not work by a vote of either House of Congress.

These are the basic differences; and they were agreed to by Secretary Richardson. This really gives the administration what it asks for. There would be certain differences between this if passed by the Senate and the House passed bill, which would provide another opportunity for further negotiation in conference.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I compliment the Senator from Illinois. This is a very constructive proposal. Obviously there will be differences of view as to whether or not $2,400 is an adequate figure, but with the cost of living escalated clause which the Senator included, plus the experimental workfare program which the Senator included, plus the fact that the Federal Government will take up the total of the $2,400, thereby relieving the States of a tremendous amount of welfare, I think the Senator has a very reasonable and constructive proposal; and also it will provide property tax relief back at the State level and at the same time give better benefits to the welfare recipients who really need it.

I wish we did not call them "welfare recipients," because what we are discussing is a way to have income maintenance so people can make the best of their lives. We have put this name "welfare," this tag "welfare," on everybody until the word has become one of derision and really of defamation. I think it is most unfortunate.

What the Senator from Illinois is trying to do, and I believe what all of us are trying to do here, is get away from tagging people as welfare clients. Those that can work should have work; those that are in need should have assistance. That is what the central point of this debate and of our action must be.

I want to say once again it does little good to tell people to go to work unless we provide them with work.

May I ask the Senator from Illinois whether public service jobs are involved here?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is absolutely right. The whole thrust of this proposal is to provide work for those who can work. It provides work incentives, and in order to create jobs which otherwise do not exist for persons who but for the jobs would go on welfare, it sets up a program of public service employment. It creates 300,000 jobs, for which $800 million is provided in the bill for the creation of those public service jobs so people who otherwise would go on welfare would get employment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I commend the distinguished junior Senator from Illinois, the distinguished Senator from Kentucky, and the distinguished senior Senator from Illinois for offering this proposal. I commend them, and I will support and vote for the proposal.

True, the minimum support level for a family of four is only $2,400. I originally started with $3,000. Then my second proposal, which I thought I had worked out with the administration ,was $2,600. Now the proposal is $2,400.

At this stage I am not interested in pride of authorship. I am not interested in having credit for passing welfare reform. I am only interested in eliminating the present welfare mess.

What has been shocking to me is the failure of the administration and the Republican Party and Republican Senators to back the President of the United States in the series of votes that has taken place. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare has labeled the Roth proposal a monstrosity that would not work. The Roth amendment contains many of the regressive provisions of the committee proposal.

Now we have the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) introducing the basic proposal of the President, improved by my various negotiations and agreement with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Secretary of Labor. I cannot understand why the administration now will not support it.

Is it not true that the overall cost of the Senator's proposal is exactly the same as the cost of H.R. 1, which the administration says it is for?

Mr. STEVENSON. The cost is virtually the same as the original proposal submitted to the Congress and passed in the House as H.R. 1. The Senator is absolutely correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. When the President explained last summer during his press conference why he could not reach agreement with me, he stated as one of his reasons that my proposal would substantially increase the cost of welfare. At that time the level we were talking about was $2,600, but the Senator's proposal of $2,400 cuts down that cost by some one-half billion dollars. Then when he cuts child care support from $1.2 billion to $800 million, he saves another $400 million, which cuts the cost some $900 million. This brings his proposal in line with H.R. 1. Is that not correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is absolutely right.

As the Senator from Minnesota mentioned a moment ago, the effect of this proposal, if adopted into law, would be to afford very substantial fiscal relief to States and to local units of government all across the country. The costs that have been referred to here are gross costs. There would be savings all along the line to many States and local governments, but to States in particular, which would be of great benefit to them and enable them to offer other appropriate services.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the Senator's proposal requires everyone on welfare, unless children under the age of 6 are involved or someone is incapacitated, to register for work?

Mr. STEVENSON. The work registration provision applies to everyone except the persons mentioned by the Senator. They would have to register for work and would have to accept work if it is available and, beyond that, if it is unavailable, we also provide for public service employment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The rate required to be paid to a person taking a job would be at the Federal minimum wage?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the Senator's motion to recommit is a parliamentary device? It does not really go back to committee. If the motion to recommit is adopted, the President of the Senate refers the bill back to the chairman who immediately reports the bill back as ordered by the Senate. The bill automatically becomes the pending order of business with no loss of time. So if the motion to commit and the Senator's proposed amendment were adopted, then it would be open to amendment, so Senators could work their will on various sections of his proposal. Is that not correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is correct. Again, the form of my motion was dictated purely and simply by the parliamentary situation at the time. This really is an up or down proposal, and the proposal is whether or not we shall support H.R. 1, with those modifications which were very carefully and conscientiously added to it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Therefore, when our distinguished colleague from Minnesota asks, "Do you still preserve ttiles I, II, and III?" the answer is definitely "yes"?

Mr. STEVENSON. The answer is "yes."

Mr. RIBICOFF. I think the time has come to ask the President of the United States and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, Mr. Richardson, to come out of hiding.

I suppose representatives of HEW are in the galleries. Do you not think the time has come to call up your Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and find out whether he really supports welfare reform? Here is a proposal introduced by two Republicans and one Democrat which calls for $2,400, which is the figure originally proposed by the President and passed by the House. I ask you, President Nixon, wherever you may be, in Camp David, at the White House, or wherever, will you tell the American people, do you support welfare reform? Did you mean it in the first place? What is your proposal now for $2,400? Come to the Congress of the United States, call the Republican Members of the U.S. Senate and tell them you still support a payment level of $2,400. This is the chance for the President of the United States and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to tell the American people whether they are for welfare reform. This is the moment of truth for the President of the United States.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator from Connecticut. No one has labored more heroically to bring about this major social reform than the Senator from Connecticut. As he points out, this is not a partisan effort. On the contrary, it is a bipartisan effort on the Senate floor today, recognizing that it is the last chance to give the President what he called for from the Congress—in fact, made his No. 1 legislative priority—welfare reform.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT) be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOPER).

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I call to the attention of the Senate that while this motion is made by the Senator from Illinois as the leading sponsor, the proposal is also supported by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. TAFT), and myself, as cosponsors.

I can understand the plea that has just been made by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), but I hope in the few minutes we have that we will appeal as best we can to the sense and judgment of our fellow Senators, rather than upon a political basis—as, I believe, the Senator from Illinois said, it may be the last chance to vote on a welfare reform bill. I would like to say also that the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, Senator RIBICOFF, has contributed so much to the issue, and in an informed and humane spirit.

I am not a member of the Senate Finance Committee which has jurisdiction over the subject, but I know what Senator STEVENSON and his three cosponsors are attempting to do. We are asking that the bill before us, as reported by the Finance Committee, be recommitted, that there be stricken from the bill, as it stands now, the workfare provisions and also the provision which was just adopted by the Senate, offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), and that there be reported from the committee the proposal which the Senator from Illinois has described. It is conceptually and structurally the Ribicoff proposal, but with a reduction in the benefit level from $2,600 to $2,400, and a reduction in the authorization for day care from $1.5 billion to $800 million. The initial total cost of our proposal would be essentially the same as the cost of H.R. 1 as passed by the House of Representatives.

There are some differences between H.R. 1 as passed by the House of Representatives and the Stevenson proposal. One is the provision for a cost-of-living increase in benefit levels which was not included in the House bill. A second major difference between the two bills is the mandated State supplementation provision, which is in the Stevenson-Cooper bill, just as it was in the Ribicoff proposal. Basically it follows the structure of the Ribicoff amendment, but the cost, at least, is about the same as that of the House bill.

I appreciate the position of the Senator from Delaware, but we know that his amendment would do more than provide a pretest of the Ribicoff proposal, workfare, and H.R. 1. Actually there have been incorporated in it several provisions of the workfare program in the Long bill such as the Child Care Bureau and wage supplement. And so I think it should be stricken.

Mr. President, I appreciate, too, the work that the Committee on Finance and its chairman, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) have done, but I believe this is an opportunity, and perhaps the last opportunity for several years, unless action is taken on the Stevenson, Cooper, Percy, Taft amendment to provide a measure of reform in the welfare system.

I think all of us who have observed the present welfare system in our States know that while it has provided more food and clothing and some housing and medical care, the present system is an unsatisfactory program. I do not want to go back too far, but I first became interested in this subject when I was a county judge, 40 years ago, during the depression, and saw first hand, the awful poverty of some of the people of my county.

Since that time my interest in the subject has continued. Kentucky is always in the eye of the public—representatives of the nwes media can always be found in eastern Kentucky looking for poverty; and there is poverty, but in my view it is not as bad as it is in the inner cities of New York City and other major cities.

The thing I dislike most about the present welfare program is that it provides no incentive for people on welfare to work. There is every incentive to keep them out of work. We know what they are: If recipients go to work they lose their benefits, they also stand to lose a part of their food stamps, and medicaid benefits in some instances. If they take a job and are not properly trained for it, they are likely to lose it very soon, and then they will have to go again through the whole business of getting on welfare.

The worst objection to our current welfare system is that there is no incentive for recipients to go to work. The objection I have to the bill presented by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana is that for those who are not able to work and otherwise eligible for assistance, it maintains essentially the same welfare system that now prevails.

I am sorry the Stevenson proposal in which I join may not be studied as carefully as it ought to be, but I hope very much that the explanation that has been sent to every Senator will be read, and that the amendment will be adopted and we will not wait 3 or 4 years more to achieve welfare reform, and continue the unfair system that we have today, which offers so little hope to people. I must say that all I have seen in my own State is a lessening of hope and the beginning of an absolute class system—something we thought we would never have in this country—and an institutionalization of the poor.

If this continues, we are not only going to deprive our people of the realization of their best possibilities today, but we are going to deprive them of realizing their best possibilities in the future. I hope and pray that Senators will read this simple proposal and vote for it and give some hope, for today and for the future, to the poor of our country, and our country itself.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly to me?

Mr. COOPER. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. I just want to say I agree entirely, speaking personally, with what the Senator from Kentucky has said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Illinois yield to me briefly, say 2 minutes?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. I agree entirely with the points that have been made by the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Illinois. Congress appears to be heading for a postponement of efforts to remedy an absolute mess in the welfare system, which is regrettable. We will not postpone it for 2 years or 4 years; we will be back next year confronted with a mounting and increased series of problems, beyond doubt.

I have an amendment which substantially and actually is title IV of H.R. 1 as passed by the House of Representatives. I had thought of offering it. But it seems to me that this amendment is quite close to the House-passed bill. I am able to support it, myself, and would like to see it passed.

I am obliged, in all conscience, to make this declaration. I think we need this kind of legislation. I believe that it is a reasonable and judgmental approach to a terribly difficult problem. I have to say that my personal position will be not to offer my own amendment, which is the House-passed bill, but on the other hand, to support this proposal.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator from Illinois has no objection.

Tre PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Can the Senator tell us the position of the President of the United States with regard to this proposal?

Mr. SCOTT. I am not able to say that the President of the United States supports the proposal. The President has not said to me that he wishes me to make any statement against the proposal. If he wished to support the proposal, I assume he would send information to one or another Senator on that. I am speaking personally, because it is on my conscience. I believe it to be a good thing. I have wrestled with this, and I am satisfied that I must support it.

Mr. LONG. I asked the question because I was called from the floor yesterday evening and told that this amendment would be offered and that the President is not for the amendment; he does not favor it and is not for it. If the President is not for it, I do not think people ought to be representing this as being something that the administration is for; because, in the last analysis, it is not some functionary in HEW but it is the President who is entitled to speak for this administration. I am sure the Senator would agree that the President speaks for the administration, not some Under Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or some person in that agency who might even have been held over from the Roosevelt administration.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Louisiana knows that I have said nothing which would mislead anyone. I have clearly said several times that this is a matter of conscience with me. It is a matter of my personal judgment. I believe it. I would advocate its adoption to anyone who asked me. But I have represented it only as a view of my own. I have expressed my judgment and my belief that it ought to be adopted. I am not trying to mislead anyone.

Mr. LONG. I want to make it clear that I was called from the floor by two of the President's most well-regarded liaison people who work with us on the Hill in matters of this sort, and they both told me, without any peradventure of doubt, that the President is not for this proposal. I think we ought to understand that this is not something that the President is for.

Mr. SCOTT. The President's personal statements, as I recall, have indicated consistently and throughout that he favors H.R. 1 as it passed the House, which is the amendment I offered here.

I make the point personally, as the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, that it seems to me that this amendment is sufficiently close to the amendment I offered so that it justifies me in not pressing my amendment but in supporting this one. This is a position which I feel I must take and I would take if anybody short of the 12 Apostles were to try to persuade me otherwise. I just want to make that clear.

I am not misleading anyone. The Senator is entitled to make any statements he wishes regarding his opinion as to how various people feel about it.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the distinguished Senators from Kentucky and Pennsylvania for their comments and wisdom. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. TUNNEY. I thank the distinguished Senator for yielding.

Mr. President, I think everyone in this Chamber has deplored the present welfare system; but I must confess that I see faults with each of the three major proposals we have had before the Senate.

I think the major fault of the Ribicoff proposal was that it did not have enough public service jobs to guarantee that every able-bodied person who was on welfare, who did not have a child 6 years of age or under, would have a job at which to work if they were going to receive a Government check.

I was very pleased with the colloquy I had with the distinguished Senator from Connecticut—who I think knows the problems of our welfare laws and their inadequacies as well as any other person in this country—when yesterday he said that if his amendment were accepted, he would support an amendment I was prepared to offer to assure that there were enough public service jobs available for every able-bodied person who could not find a job in the private sector.

My objective would be to create a 3-year phased program in which public jobs would be created for at least one-third of those who are required to register for work in the first year. Additional jobs would be created in the second year for an additional one-third of all registrants. And finally in the third year the phasein would be completed so that every able-bodied welfare recipient would be able to find a job. This program would go into effect after the initial program of 300,000 jobs contained in the Ribicoff amendment.

In other words, it would be a total of 4 years at the end of which there would be a public job for all those people who are able-bodied, on welfare, who are not working at any other job. I think this is most important.

I find a problem with the proposal of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, because, quite frankly, I think the payments are much too low. Although I think people should work, they ought to be able to work in California, in Connecticut, and in New York for the kind of money that is going to enable them to support their families. I do not feel that the Finance Committee proposal, would allow people in those big States to be able to work for enough money to be able to provide for their families.

The administration proposal, as I analyzed it, was deficient; it did not provide jobs. As has been said often by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, the administration has talked in terms of having a proposal which would require people to work, and this was the great welfare reform. It was in the Republican platform in Miami. But, in fact, if you take a look at that program, it did not require work for the able-bodied. It made a travesty of the President's statement that people ought to work if they are able-bodied.

So we come to the present proposal by my distinguished colleague and seatmate, the Senator from Illinois. I am supportive of the basic proposal, but I say to my distinguished friend that if his proposal is accepted, I would have to offer an amendment which would provide that over a period of 4 years, with jobs being phased in over a 3-year period after the limited public job program he is proposing with one-third in the first year, a second third in the next year, and the balance in the third year so that all those people who are on welfare and are unemployed would be put on public service jobs.

I believe that this is the only way we can develop a welfare system that is not going to continue to eat up taxpayers' dollars the way the present system does. The present system is essentially faulty because it pays people who are able bodied not to work. I think that every person who is able bodied and of sound mind should have to work for the money he receives from the Government, and then it is no longer welfare. Then he is working for the Government. I do not consider myself to be on welfare because I receive a Government check, and I do not consider anybody else who is working for the Government to be on welfare. These people would not be on welfare either, because they would be working for the money they receive, irrespective of where that money came from. If it comes from HEW, so what? There are many employees in HEW.

This is the kind of proposal I will make if the Senator's amendment is adopted, and I plan to vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator.

Let me say, in response to the Senator from California, that I agree wholeheartedly. As he recognizes, the thrust of this proposal is to provide work incentives to get people in jobs and off the welfare rolls. But he very rightly recognizes that work incentives are not enough if no jobs are available, if no work is available. He proposes to solve that problem through public service employment.

The bill does provide $800 million for 300,000 public service jobs. If we could go further than that in this legislation, I would wholeheartedly support the Senator from California. However, this is a welfare bill. We will have other opportunities with respect to public service employment. The only concern I have is that if we go much further than we already have gone in this bill, we may encounter opposition from the administration and end up with no public service employment or welfare reform.

Mr. TUNNEY. I find the Senator's arguments persuasive so far as the adoption of his amendment is concerned. Perhaps some people who support the administration's position would want to vote for the proposal of the Senator from Illinois without the guaranteed jobs. So it is quite clear that we ought to vote on his amendment first, and the parliamentary situation is that we have to do that.

If the amendment of the Senator from Illinois is adopted and I offer my amendment, those people who go home and make speeches about how they feel that we should not be talking about people on welfare, but about putting people to work, are going to have an opportunity to tell their people back home whether in fact they favor putting people to work or just keeping people on a handout.

I believe that the proposal made by the Senator is very good. There are many very important components in the amendment, which is, of course, an adaptation of the amendment of the Senator from Connecticut. But I think the failure of this proposal is that it does not have a requirement that there be enough public service jobs to provide jobs over a phased-in period of 4 years for every able-bodied person on welfare.

Mr. STEVENSON. I hope that we can go beyond the amendment and provide for public service employment.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. STEVENSON. I am happy to yield to my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. I want to ask my colleague some questions. I also have some commentary and a statement to make on this motion. I am very much pleased to support the motion and I am delighted to have the personal support of the distinguished majority leader for it, as well as that of Senators COOPER and TAFT. I think that this represents a broad spectrum of support that has been gained on both sides.

I would like to review briefly my understanding of this motion for purposes of clarification of the record. The benefit level of $2,400 is identical, then, with the benefit level in administration-supported amendments and the administration-supported H.R. 1; is that not correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. That is correct.

Mr. PERCY. The work requirements are identical, as I read it, with the administration position on H.R. 1; is that not correct?

Mr. STEVENSON. There is a slight difference. The administration's position originally would have required that mothers with children over 3 years of age would work. In this amendment, with the approval of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) and the approval of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, only women with children 6 or older would be required to work. The reasons are obvious. We do not want to take mothers away from their children who are that young.

Mr. PERCY. The administration has agreed to the provision regarding 6-year-olds.

I notice a slight difference in the penalties for refusal to register for work or for training, but the difference seems to be insignificant. In principle, the Stevenson motion once again corresponds with the administration's stated position.

I do notice a great difference with regard to State supplementation of benefit levels. The Stevenson motion contains a requirement for State supplementation, however, there is no such provision in the administration's supported H.R. 1. As I understand it, the administration's cost estimates assumed State supplementation of benefit levels; therefore, there is no real difference in costs between the two provisions.

Mr. STEVENSON. No difference in cost. The Senator is right. It requires maintenance of effort. Secretary Richardson in his discussion with Senator Ribicoff had no objection to this requirement. In fact, the administration in its earlier cost projections had assumed, and rightfully I think, that all States would accept the option to supplement benefit payments to their present level if that level is now above $2,400. So this would involve no change in cost over the administration's estimate.

Mr. PERCY. From the standpoint of fiscal relief to the States, the difference is that the Stevenson motion incorporates the so-called Percy amendment for interim fiscal relief, which the administration unequivocally supports. The Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) has also indicated his support in principle. Given such support, most of the States have incorporated their potential fiscal relief allotments in their State budgets. The Stevenson motion simply reiterates and incorporates a provision that the administration is clearly on record as supporting.

Mr. STEVENSON. The Senator is right again. In this case, he can speak from his own experience because no one did more than he to win administration support for the emergency relief and the fiscal relief position which he has introduced earlier and is now incorporated in this amendment.

Mr. PERCY. I notice one additional area of difference. The administration supported H.R. 1 provides that welfare recipients required to work are paid three-quarters of the minimum wage. The provision that has been offered by my colleague, (Mr. STEVENSON) on the other hand requires a Federal minimum wage to be paid to those recipients. Again, from the standpoint of fiscal responsibility, this involves no additional cost to the Federal Government. In fact, if the minimum wage is paid to low-income earners, this would then mean that the supplement for the working poor would not be as great.

Although there is this difference, I would hope that support of the administration could be gained for what I consider to be a very humane, sensible, practical, and down-to-earth amendment offered by my colleague from Illinois.

Mr. STEVENSON. I am very grateful to my colleague (Mr. PERCY). Every point he makes is correct. Once more I cite the bipartisan nature of this effort, which is long overdue, for social reform in the country. I am very grateful to him for his support and for all the help he has given on this.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I should like briefly to conclude by congratulating my colleague, who deserves to be congratulated. He has made it possible for us to vote on something that can bring us to the moment of truth for meaningful welfare reform. If we do not adopt such a motion, I believe that we will have brought about what the New York Times has called another long night of despair for millions of people on welfare. We are all victims of this failure. Those in America unable to work, mothers with preschool children, the infirm, and those who care for them, will continue to suffer from the intolerable inadequacies of the present system if we do not adopt this motion.

Certainly my distinguished colleague is aware of the fact that I sent out 400,000 questionnaires throughout the length and breadth of the State of Illinois, to inquire what the people's attitude was toward the welfare program—both the taxpayers as well as the recipients of welfare.

I know that my colleague is familiar with the fact that 220,000 put their own postage on that survey to write back and forcefully say, "Junk the present system." Ninety-eight percent of the responses were for doing away with the present system. This is what the Finance Committee has addressed itself to. But we disagree with the Finance Committee version because we do not feel that the bill as it now stands will adequately provide for the welfare needs we see in our State.

Let us salvage something from 3 years of work on welfare reform and save the taxpayer who must pay the bills for an inadequate, inefficient, and inhumane system, a jumble of 1,522 different welfare systems

The motion the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) is offering today will, I think, do that.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. The Senator recognizes that the welfare system is an abomination in our own State. In fiscal 1971 alone, the number of AFDC recipients went up 48.2 percent. The costs increased 52 percent. That is in just 1 year in the State of Illinois. The people of our State and the people of the Nation recognize, as the Senator has already indicated, that the system is an abomination. We cannot tolerate it any longer.

The President recognized this in his March 27 message to Congress when he said:

> We need reform this year so that, instead of pouring billions more into a system universally recognized as a failure, we can make a new start. This—— > is the most important single piece of social legislation to come before the Congress in several decades. No legislation should have a higher priority.

"This" means H.R. 1. I continue to quote:

Mr. President, as the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Kentucky, and the Senator from Pennsylvania, the distinguished minority leader have recognized, this proposal is substantially the same as H.R. 1. The few differences that exist are reforms. And they are reforms that are agreed to by the administration through the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion offered by the Senator from Illinois to recommit the bill with instructions to report forthwith the amendment made a part of the motion.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I rise to discuss the motion offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

What the Senator from Illinois proposes to do is to substitute for the committee proposal the basic concepts of H.R. 1 insofar as it deals with welfare. In other words, the Stevenson proposal is basically the proposal which twice passed the House. It is the same proposal basically that was disapproved and voted down by the Committee on Finance.

Mr. President, I want to state my reasons for opposing H.R. 1.

First, the testimony before the committee in regard to H.R. 1 shows clearly that it is lacking in work incentives.

Second, the cost of the proposal will be at least $5.5 billion more than the cost of the present welfare program.

Third, it will require 80,000 new Federal employees to administer it. It is true, as was pointed out yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, that some of these 80,000 will be persons presumably who are now on State or city rolls. But my opposition is to increasing the number of new Federal employees by 80,000.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare now has approximately 110,000 employees. It is already too big; it is not being efficiently or effectively administered, and when you add 80,000 more I submit that is going to be that much worse.

The fourth reason I oppose H.R. 1 is that it writes into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income. I think that is a mistake. I think that is a wrong direction for this country to go.

What we want to do is to get people off of welfare and into jobs. H.R. 1 does not do that.

The testimony before the committee and the figures submitted before the committee show that H.R. 1 would virtually double the number of persons drawing public assistance. Mr. President, this is not welfare reform; this is welfare expansion. I invite attention to the table on page 421 of the committee hearings.

Now, many persons want welfare expansion and certainly they are entitled to their views. The senior Senator from Virginia wants welfare reform; he opposes welfare expansion.

This matter of Congress passing legislation which will virtually double the number of individuals drawing public assistance certainly does not appear to me to be very logical. The proposal offered by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) provides for a minimum figure of $2,400. That is just one of the proposals floating around, and if that proposal were adopted it would just be the ante in a never-ending poker game.

Mr. President, if you are going to adopt the principle of a guaranteed annual income——

(There was a demonstration in the Gallery.)

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order. The Sergeant at Arms will clear the galleries to preserve order in the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Those in the galleries must realize that they are guests of the Senate and they must conduct themselves as such or the galleries will be cleared.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I suggest that those people standing up in the galleries be cleared from the galleries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will kindly proceed.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. If we write into the law the principle of a guaranteed annual income, how can anyone justify making that figure less than the poverty level? If the Congress of the United States is to say that the American Government is obligated to provide a minimum annual income to all citizens, then how can one justify, as a matter of principle, as a matter of conscience, making this figure less than the poverty level?

I put that question to Governor Rockefeller of New York when he testified before the Senate Committee on Finance and his reply, in essence, was—

It is difficult to justify making the figure less than that of the poverty level, but we must start somewhere, and we can start at $2,400, although I prefer $3,000, and then quickly get it up to the higher figures.

Of course, that is exactly what will happen.

There were charts in the Senate Chamber yesterday showing how many individuals would be placed on welfare and would be drawing public assistance if and when a guaranteed annual income is written into law and the figures are upgraded, as they certainly will be.

The proposal of the Senator from Illinois would mean that, instead of the present 12 to 13 million persons on welfare, that figure would go up to somewhere around 22 to 24 million.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I know there have been differences in the figures which have been provided by HEW and the figures that the Finance Committee has developed on costs and the numbers of eligible persons. Is that not correct?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. I would like to say that according to the figures furnished my office by HEW today, the cost of the current welfare program, with no changes is about $12 billion. The cost of H.R. 1, as passed by the House, would be $15.4 billion. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Illinois costs virtually the same as the House bill—$15.4 billion.

I think when the Senator said that 24 million persons would come under this program he was thinking about the Ribicoff proposal of yesterday, which provided benefit levels of $2,600. The estimate given me on H.R.1, as it would be modified by the Stevenson motion, is that there would be 19 million persons as against 12 million now receiving welfare.

I want to put these estimated figures into the RECORD, because these are the figures given to us by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

I wanted to ask the Senator——

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Before the Senator leaves that point, the figures to which I have referred are in the voluminous committee hearings, and I do not want to take the time of the Senate at this time to find them, but I will put them in the RECORD. They were given to the committee by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and they differ substantially from the figures given by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. I understand that there are differences in the estimates arrived at between the Finance Committee and HEW itself.

If the Senator will permit me, I would like to question him on an argument he has just made. I have followed the Senator's position for several years. I know his position on H.R. 1. Also, I read today in the RECORD the speech he made yesterday. I did not hear him make it, but I read it this morning. I understand perfectly his position—it is a consistent position—he fears that a guaranteed income will work to continue people on welfare and, as the Senator says, the guaranteed income will in all probability be raised to whatever the poverty level is.

But, we are talking about two groups of people. The first group consists of people who are physically able to work, and the second group consists of those people who, for what ever reason, are incapable of working.

Is is not true that the committee bill guarantees an income to all those individuals capable of working?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am not going to argue for the committee bill, because I am not sold on it, but the committee proposal guarantees jobs, which is different from guaranteeing income.

Mr. COOPER. The committee proposal would establish a work administration. Is that not correct?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. I do not know how many employees that would require. Can the Senator state how many employees that would require?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. No, and that is one of the reasons I gave yesterday for voting for the Roth-Byrd proposal, to test out the committee proposal, to test out the House proposal, to test out the Ribicoff proposal, because I am no satisfied with any of those proposals.

Before we get into vast new programs, we should test them out. That is exactly why I voted as I did, because I think what we ought to do, and I think what the Senate ought to do, is test all these out, and then come back, after the result of those tests is obtained, and have the Senate make a judgment.

Mr. COOPER. First I speak of those who have the ability to work, who are physically able to work. The Finance Committee bill, in effect, says that we will put everyone to work doing something. Is that not correct?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Give them an opportunity for a job.

Mr. COOPER. But they must work at something to be eligible and they must be paid for it, so it does guarantee them some kind of income.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I prefer not to get off the point. I am not one to argue for the committee bill, because personally I am not completely sold on it. I am speaking in opposition to H.R. 1, which is the Stevenson proposal.

Mr. COOPER. Is it correct that those who are not able to work would just remain on welfare in the same condition in which they are on welfare now?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think that the American Government, we in the Congress, and the American people have a deep obligation to help those citizens who are physically and mentally unable to work, and I am willing to do whatever is necessary to help those people and see that they are taken care of; and they are taken care of in the bill before the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. May I respond that the purpose of the amendment offered by the Senator——

Mr. LONG. What have we found in our efforts to put these people to work? Welfare is so much more attractive than work that once you put them on welfare, and they find out that when they work they lose their welfare money, and it is so much more comfortable to have the money flow in without working, there are very few of them you can manage to move off into jobs.

Therefore, the majority of us in the committee felt that, rather than build up the number of people on welfare and then try to get them off, which tends to be a very, very difficult task—and have all the problems that you have where, when the people do go to work and make something, they do not want to report it, but keep it a secret, so that the few that will do some work will do it only on the condition that they are paid in cash with no records kept—we would not put them on welfare to begin with.

The problem of the committee was to try to see that we help the people on welfare by putting them on jobs, so that they will not be on welfare. The committee approach was not to put people on welfare and then try to get them to go to work, as the family assistance plan would do, because even the people on the family assistance plan only estimate that there will be about 2 percent of those people who go to work. Rather than put them on welfare and try to get them to go to work when they find welfare so much more comfortable and more satisfactory, the approach of the committee was to say, "Don't put them on welfare, offer them a job"; so they are not offered a welfare check, they are offered a job.

When people compare the cost of the two proposals, and say it will cost more, they ignore the fact that when you offer them a job you are doing something that will benefit society.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HANSEN. I think it is important that the distinguished Senator from Kentucky understand this one big difference. As I recall, his question to the distinguished Senator from Virginia was, does the committee proposal amount to a guaranteed income?

I say it does not, because as I understand the proposal—and I share the same doubts and misgivings that are held by the Senator from Virginia—the difference is that we want to try out these plans. The comittee's plan does not guarantee that everyone now on welfare will receive a certain level of income. All of those able-bodied persons who have school age children will be given no more than the chance to work. The Government, under this proposal, will guarantee that they will be offered a job, but it does not guarantee that they are going to have a certain amount of income. If a person is able-bodied—and I would like the Senator from Virginia to tell me if I correctly understand the committee's proposal—if an able-bodied person is offered a job, and then choose, on his own volition, not to take that job, he is not going to receive any income. If he wants to sit there and starve to death, that is up to him. But if he is able-bodied and can work, the committee proposal simply says, "We will guarantee you that you will have a job. Either you will find it in the open, free job market, or the Government will offer you a job." Am I right about that?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator from Wyoming is correct; and basically, just as the Senator from Wyoming says, the committee proposal in essence guarantees a job, while H.R. 1 guarantees an annual income. They are, of course, two different approaches.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I think I understand the work plan, but may I say this: There are just so many people who can work, and there are just so many jobs available, for the purposes of the committee bill and the Stevenson proposal.

What the committee bill does, in effect, is to set up a work administration comparable to the old WPA, where they will all have to do some work.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is right.

Mr. COOPER. They must work and you pay them for it, and to that extent it is a guaranteed income. But I would like to make another statement.

What concerns me about the Finance Committee bill is that there will still be hundreds of thousands of people on welfare who cannot work. We know that. And for them, it would continue the same old welfare system, with all the disparities in the amounts that they receive from different States, with the differing eligibility criteria, living under awful conditions.

Moreover, there is no difference between the proposals in that if able-bodied applicants are offered work or training they have got to take it, or they will lose their welfare. The Stevenson bill does provide job safeguards and only under these situations may an applicant not be required to work as a condition of receiving aid.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. What they must do under H.R. 1 is register to work. They do not have to take the job.

Mr. COOPER. They have to do the same thing, register for work or training, under this proposal.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am speaking of H.R. 1, the proposal by the Senator from Illinois and the proposal which passed the House.

Mr. COOPER. They have to register for work. As I see it, the chief distinction between the two bills is that in the committee bill we just maintain the old welfare system. It would keep millions of people in the same position they are in today, if they cannot work.

As to those who can work, it would set up a vast WPA, and they would be required to work at substandard wages. There are just not enough jobs for those who are able to work.

Our proposal can be called reform. We are not keeping the same system which has continuously brought more and more people into its web and left them without any incentive for work, for education, left them without any incentive to try to move up, and which mortgages the future of America.

I know in my own State—and I am sure the Senator from Virginia knows this, as he knows my great respect for him. Virginia and my State border, and we have the same kind of hill country just across the line from each other—that some of the families there have been on welfare now since the days of the WPA.

Because of the way that America has been pointing to eastern Kentucky so many times as a poverty area, I have traveled it year after year. I know it well, and I know the people there, and I have seen what has happened to them.

Forty years ago they were practically all the same, whatever their station in life was, whether they were rich or poor. There were not many rich people, but they all had a feeling of independence and equality. None felt inferior to the others.

But this system has grown, and they have become a class apart. We have a two-class system in America today, and, they mingle only with each other, an d have lost a great deal of their opportunity.

Some can only talk in a vocabulary of a few words. I am sure it is true also in the inner city.

This is what is happening to this country. It is happening, in my opinion, not because it is not a humanitarian thing to help people who need food, who need clothing, who need medical care, but because we have kept a system which is institutionalized, which has no incentives at all. I do not know of an incentive in the welfare program to cause a person to want to go to work, unless it is in his heart to go to work, and he will never learn to work unless he has the experience of working. It is my opinion, with whatever wisdom I have—and I know the work the committee has done on this matter—that all this has left us with is the old welfare system for millions of people and a sort of WPA for the rest.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I agree with the appraisal of the Senator from Kentucky as to the present welfare program. I think it must be revised. It is outmoded. It must be changed.

The point at which we appear to differ is that H.R. 1 is a welfare reform. I do not see it as a welfare reform. I see it as welfare expansion. There is no work incentive in H.R. 1.

The Senator from Kentucky mentioned the lack of incentive under the present program, and I agree; but there is no incentive in H.R. 1, either, and that is one reason why I am opposed to it. It is lacking in work incentives.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. HANSEN. I agree with the distinguished Senator from Virginia.

Is it not true that what H.R. 1 seeks to do is to reunite the classes? The distinguished Senator from Kentucky spoke about welfare being institutionalized, that it made separate and apart two classes of Americans—those who work and are self-supporting and those who are on welfare. Yet, all I can see that H.R. 1 intends to do is to try to blur and obliterate this very clear line of demarcation, simply by saying that those who do not work, whether they are unable to or not, should enjoy a certain level of income, anyway. I do not think we ought to argue about that. I think we all agree that the old, the blind, and the disabled ought to be taken care of even better than they are now. H.R. 1 proposes to meld these divergent groups into one, simply by saying that those who do not earn anything for themselves should enjoy a certain level of income anyway. On the other hand, I think that realistically the Finance Committee—and I would invite the Senator from Virginia's comment on this point—takes the position that the way to reinstill self-respect is to give all able-bodied citizens an opportunity to earn what they receive.

It makes little difference, in our judgment, whether they may begin their life of work in America as employees for a private corporation or a company or an individual, or whether they begin it in a public work job. There certainly are plenty of things to do in America. It is not true that there are not enough things to do to employ everybody. It is true that with the present welfare system there is little incentive for a great many Americans who are able to do work, who are physically qualified in every respect, who do not have obligations at home which would preclude them from entering the work force, but who simply choose not to work because it is easier to get by on welfare.

Would the Senator comment on that point?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I think the Senator from Wyoming has summed it up aptly and accurately.

What the committee sought to do—I say frankly that I am not 100 percent sold on the committee proposal, particularly because of the cost—what the committee sought to do, and I approve the concept, is to create job opportunities, to encourage people to work, to try to get people off the welfare rolls, to get them into jobs, where they can be self-respecting, where they do not need to rely on the Government. That is the basic approach of the committee proposal. It is exactly the opposite approach from H.R. 1 and the many other proposals that have been advocated. What the other proposals would do would be to put more people on public assistance.

I am taking these figures from memory, and if I am in error, I hope I will be corrected. As I recall, if we go to a $3,000 guaranteed annual income, we will have 40 million people——

Mr. LONG. Thirty-five million people.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Thirty-five million people on welfare. Then, if we go to $4,000——

Mr. HANSEN. Sixty-seven million.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. If we go to a $4,000 guaranteed annual income, it will go to 67 million people. If we then go to $6,500, which has been advocated by one Member of this body and by the National Welfare Rights Organization, we will be approaching the figure of 100 million people on public assistance.

I do not see how the Government of this country can support such vast numbers of people drawing public assistance from the Government, whether it be 35 million, 40 million, on up to nearly 100 million people.

There is not enough money in the Treasury to do it. In my judgment, there is not enough money in the pockets of the wage earners to do it.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. LONG. If this amendment is adopted, in the little State of Louisiana, with about 2 percent of the population, the number of people on welfare would be increased from an estimated 473,000 to 823,000 people. That includes the aged, when you include the family assistance plan, and these are persons eligible under H.R. 1. That is just in Louisiana, one little State.

I say to the Senator from Virginia that I do not know one person in Louisiana who thinks we ought to add another 400,000 people to the welfare rolls. We do not want it—if for no better reason than you cannot get anybody to go to work down there, the way it is now.

I was talking to a State senator who was an old grassroots populist until the welfare got out of hand. He told me that he went out to try to get some hay in, and he got his old father, who was an old share-the-wealth man himself, to help him bring in the hay. The father said, "Son, we can't do this by ourselves. Go downtown and get some young fellows to help us."

The son went to the heart of the town, the main crossroads. He begged and pleaded and could not get a soul to come out to help them bring in the hay. He offered any amount of wage that seemed reasonable.

The father said to the son, "Son, if you go back and vote for any more of this welfare stuff, I'm going to whip you personally, as your daddy, just like I did when you were a little boy, for ruining people. You are having your old, broken-down father help you get the hay in, and you can't get any of those young fellows to help you do anything, because you've made welfare so attractive that nobody will do anything but hang around the beer parlor or sit on the porch relaxing, passing the time of day, while there's work to be done."

Perhaps the Senator has not had that experience in Virginia, but I can repeat it 50 times over in Louisiana, what people say about the frustration of trying to get someone to help with work on the farm or to do ordinary, every day work, when they are willing to pay the minimum wage or the going rate. You cannot get people to work. If that is not bad enough, now they want to add 400,000 to the rolls. Then who is going to do some work?

One would think that Mississippi would be supporting this proposal. In the State of Mississippi, there are an estimated 269,000 people on the rolls. They would increase that to 626,000. One would think they would be tickled pink, getting all that money out of Illinois and Connecticut to put those people on the rolls. But they do not want to do it. They do not want to have anything to do with it. Why would they not want to tax people from all over the country? Goodness knows, Mississippi is a low-income State, so why would they not want to tax all the people and put one-third of the population of Mississippi on welfare? Because Mississippi is trying to move the State ahead, and they could not get anyone to work in the shipyards there, or to work in the factories which they are trying to bring into Mississippi, or to have people move their communities along, or to find people to do the ordinary everyday work that needs to be done to keep the State safe, to keep the State clean, and to improve its economy, as well as to build the public buildings which are needed, the roads and the highways.

We cannot get anything like that done if we are going to load down the welfare rolls with everyone.

Under this proposal, as the Senator knows, when someone does not go to work we put him on welfare, make him comfortable, with a comfortable level of income to do nothing, and then if he goes to work, as the Senator knows, they would then propose to reduce his income by 60 cents for every dollar he makes.

A 60-percent tax rate is a frustrating thing, even for the highly motivated individual who never did anything but work from the day he was big enough to lift a heavy object. As a matter of fact, we recognize that we have fixed it so that on earned income, not even a millionaire pays above 50-percent tax.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD JR. Under this, it would go up to 67 percent.

Mr. LONG. They would start out by putting him on the welfare rolls, and then he would have a 60-percent tax rate or a 60-percent reduction in income when he goes to work by his own efforts, which would amount to a welfare tax that would exceed the income tax on earned income for a millionaire.

It is so frustrating that no one in his right mind wants to have anything to do with it. It could only mean that people would not report the earnings they were making on the side. They would work only on condition that they would get paid in cash with no record made of the transaction.

How would we ever find a jury that would find against one of these people, when one-third of the entire population of the State would be on the welfare rolls along with him? They would complain about harassment if we asked questions about their outside earnings. They would complain about the investigators coming around to find out where the income was coming from, all of which would be necessary, because we put them on welfare to begin with.

It would make a lot better sense to provide someone with a job opportunity. I am in favor of offering someone a job. Call it slavefare if we wish to call it that, but it does not make any sense to me to say that we would pay a person for doing work if he can get by without it.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. This is a free country.

Mr. LONG. Is that not how this Republic began and how it built up its strength, by working to build a strong Nation?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is right.

Mr. LONG. Can the Senator tell me any country on earth that has prospered under a scheme where we load down the welfare rolls with people and then drastically reduce their income by a depressing 60-percent rate?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Secretary of HEW in his formal statement to the committee stated, he put the whole bill, the whole principle, the whole philosophy in capsule form, when he said that this is revolutionary and expensive. They are not the words of the senior Senator from Virginia. They are not the words of those opposed to the bill. Those are the words of the Secretary of HEW who has been advocating this bill for 3 years now.

No other country has been so foolish as to do what is contemplated in this proposal.

Mr. President, Daniel Moynihan is a brilliant man. He is one of the chief architects of H.R. 1. I do not agree with him, but he is brilliant. He is so brilliant that he is able to put into one sentence the whole scope of the bill, H.R. 1, which the Senator from Illinois seeks to have substituted for the proposal just adopted by the Senate as offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and myself.

Here is what Mr. Moynihan said about this proposal:

This bill provides a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

What the Senate is being asked to do today is to pass legislation which its chief architect says will guarantee a minimum income to the people, deserving or not. I repeat, deserving or not.

I just wonder whether that is the way the tax funds of the American people should be treated?

I have not heard the proponents of this $2,400 guaranteed annual income address themselves to the principle of whether, if we are going to guarantee an income, we can justify making it less than the poverty level. If we put it at the poverty level, we will put 81 million people on welfare.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am happy to yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Would the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) tell me how many people are on the welfare rolls in North Carolina? He has the table before him now.

Mr. LONG. The estimate is that—if I may be permitted to tell the Senator—248,000 are on the welfare rolls now in North Carolina. Under the pending proposal, there would be 821,000 people.

Does the Senator think he needs that many people on the rolls in North Carolina?

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. The reason I asked that question—and the Senator's figure is about right—here is an item from a newspaper in Burlington, N.C., last week, from one of the textile plants. I want to read it.

It says:

WE HAVE JOBS

We offer: Vacation bonus, retirement program, free hospital and life insurance, and good working conditions.

Openings on second and third shifts in: Dye House, Finishing Dept., Inspecting Dept., Maintenance.

Apply at: Personnel Office, Glen Raven Mills, Finishing Division.

Mr. President, these plants are begging for help. That is an advertisement from just one. Many others have plenty of room for other workers. It is true all over my State. It is certainly true in Washington, D.C. I know that. Just go out and try to hire anyone to do some work around your house.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, furthermore, if we are going to buy the principle of a guranteed annual income to these people, we cannot, over a period of time, guarantee them an income less than the poverty level. I do not have the poverty level figures for North Carolina. I believe the poverty level is four, but if the level would be three in North Carolina, it would put them up to 1,318,000 people on welfare. Does the Senator from North Carolina believe that his State is in need of another 1 million people on the welfare rolls?

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. We do not need as many as we have right now. What we need is about half of these people who are able bodied to go to work.

There are many businesses in North Carolina that are willing to train people at their own expense and they do not have to have any experience, if they will only take a job and stay there and work.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. What the Senator from North Carolina is saying is that what we need to do, instead of doubling the welfare rolls or to expand the welfare rolls, is to reduce those rolls and get people into jobs.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Mr. President, there are jobs available. And if we increase the incentives to go on welfare, or whatever we choose to call it, we will have less people taking jobs than we have now.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD JR. I think the Senator from North Carolina is quite right. If the people of the United States can understand this proposal and can understand what it would lead to, they would be against it. Suppose that we do start at $2,400, as the Senator from Illinois proposes and as the administration proposes. It is not going to remain there. I think we are all realistic enough to know that it will be a political football in every campaign in every election year. One candidate or another will say, "I am going to raise that level."

As I say, we have already had legislation proposed in this body in far greater amounts than $2,400. Yesterday we had a $2,600 proposal. The Senator from Oklahoma had a $4,000 proposal. The Senator from South Dakota had introduced a $6,500 proposal.

Once we start that principle—that is the point I am trying to suggest; it is not so much the money—once we adopt the principle of a minimum Government-guaranteed income there is no turning back.

As was so aptly said by the distinguished Senator from Idaho at one of the meetings of the Finance Committee—

That is merely an ante in a never-ending poker game.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, is it not true that the proposals now pending would double the number of people that are eligible for welfare over the amount that we now have?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, let me state it a little more precisely than that. When the officials of HEW testified before the committee a year or so ago, they said that as a practical matter it would double the number of people on welfare. I refer to page 421 of the committee hearings.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, in addition to all the billions of dollars it would cost, I think it would be very bad for public policy, because it means that millions of people who at the present time are self-sustaining and are getting along somehow would become welfare clients.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. Regardless of the cost involved, I do not believe that is a good thing for them. I do not think it is a wholesome situation. I believe that the individual and the family that gets along on their own have much more to gain and their children have much more to gain over the family that must be on welfare. And their people are not asking for this. It is a proposal to expand welfare to millions of people that are not asking for it.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator is so right. It is a welfare expansion program. There is no reform in this.

Mr. CURTIS. There is no reform, and there is no possibility of reform, because I think if the proposal is examined, we will find that it has built in it provisions that will prevent the removal of anyone from welfare.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, as the Senator from Louisiana brought out, it is lacking in work incentives because, when a person goes on welfare and then gets a job, he is penalized up to 60 percent or more of what he makes. So, there is no incentive for him to get off welfare.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, would the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I call to the attention of the distinguished Senator from Virginia the hearings that were held before the Finance Committee on the days of February 4, 7, 8, and 9, 1972. The Senator will recall that among those testifying was William H. Shaker, of the Delta Associates International. I think that some of the points he made need to be called to the attention of Members of the Senate.

Mr. Shaker addressed himself to another situation. This man has done a rather considerable amount of research to find out and to extrapolate from the experience of other countries what might happen in America if we were to adopt some of these proposals—I was about to say idiotic proposals—that are made by various people.

I do not say that with reference to anyone in the Chamber. However, some ideas have been advanced that are beyond the realm of reason.

Mr. Shaker points out that if we were to adopt the Javits amendment, which would increase the guaranteed income for a family of four to $4,800, we would find that it proves the very points made by the Senator from Virginia, that once we start on this escalating treadmill, in every successive Congress we will find Members wanting to raise the ante a little higher.

Mr. Shaker points out what would happen under that situation. He said that in the State of New York if we were to guarantee each family of four an income of $4,800 a year, we ought to keep in mind that over three-fourths of a million jobs in New York today pay less than that amount. Eighty-five percent of the manufacturing sectors of North Carolina pays less than this amount of money.

The point Mr. Shaker develops is precisely this. A lot of people in this country who are working today are not making as much money as they would like to earn. However, they are self-respecting citizens, and they are taking care of their families. They are raising their families in the work ethic concept that I think is the very essence of America. And as we know from observation, they move up the ladder.

There is no place in the world today where there is as much social mobility as there is in America. And by that I mean the ability that a person has to begin at a low-wage level or low income and climb that ladder. However, the first thing we have to do to climb the ladder is to put a foot on the first rung of the ladder. One cannot start out with someone guaranteeing an income. That would mean that he would not have one leg on a rung of the ladder. He would have them both on the ground. That would apply to this proposal where we have the Government guaranteeing an income without lifting a finger or doing anything, except to register for work. And we have seen what a futile gesture that is.

All we have to do is to look at the record and we will see that for the past 20 years that idea has proven to be false. This idea has no reference to the fact that there will be a different peer attitude toward those people because they are on welfare, although they are able to work and have a chance to go to work but because of their own choice they have refused to go to work.

Mr. Shaker carries the comparison a little further. He points out that it is worth looking at the experience in South America between the years 1963 and 1968 to learn what happens when we guarantee people money for doing nothing.

I am not speaking about those who are unable to care for themselves—the old, the blind, and the disabled. We all agree that we want to take care of them and do a better job than we are doing now. And I suggest that we can do a better job.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. We are unanimous in that view.

Mr. HANSEN. I suggest that we can do a better job if we can cut out some of the unnecessary expenditures that occur because of the mess our welfare system is in.

But anyway, with respect to those who can work and who have an opportunity so many times to work but who refuse to work, let us look at what happened in South and Central America. Between the years 1963 and 1968 Latin America had inflation, as did many other countries throughout the world. In Latin America the inflation that occurred in that 5-year period of time between 1963 and 1968 was 100 percent. We would all agree that is awfully high. But look further south at the country of Uruguay, one of the most advanced little republics in South America. Uruguay is a country with a very high percentage of literate people, way up in the nineties. People there had talents and skills that not everyone in America has. These were people who could read instrutcions, who could read and write, and who could do things. Yet, the country down there had a high level of income. About 15 years ago it chose to see what could be done about obliterating poverty, about the same as we would do in the proposal now before us for consideration. They passed many, many bills that are similar to the one before us now. What happened? Inflation in Uruguay between 1963 and 1968 increased not only 100 percent, as happened in Latin America, but rather it increased 1,600 percent. The gross national product plummeted; people were out of work because no longer was there any need to work; they were paid a very high level to be certain everyone was taken out of the poverty level.

Mr. Shaker concludes from this that when Government attempts to wipe out poverty through this sort of approach by paying people for doing nothing—recognizing that you do not raise the total productivity of the country by adding to either production or services, but simply by trying to put more money in the taxpayers' hands—you hurt a lot of people you do not intend to hurt. People on fixed incomes and social security are surely going to be hurt by the inflation which inevitably will result.

I think we should heed what Dr. Shaker said as we contemplate the very dubious merits of adopting the proposal before us.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. I think those are very significant figures which he developed and placed in the RECORD. I think inflation is one of the great hazards that faces the American people today. And who is hurt most by inflation? It is the elderly people on fixed incomes, for the most part; it is people in the lower and middle economic brackets. They are the ones who are hurt the most.

This very expensive proposal, H.R. 1, which the Senator from Illinois seeks to have the Senate adopt today, would call for at least $5.5 billion more, according to testimony before the committee, than the cost of the present welfare program.

But as bad as that is, as bad as that cost is, that does not cause me as much concern as does virtually doubling the number of people on welfare; and it does not cause me as much concern as writing into law the principle that every family will be given by the Government a minimum income, a minimum income to every family, united or not, working or not, deserving or not.

That is what this proposal would do. They are not my words; they are not the words of the senior Senator from Virginia. They are the words of one of the chief architects of this legislation, Dr. Daniel Moynihan, who served in the White House for so long.

The proposal offered by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) is a well-intentioned proposal. He wants to help people just as the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from Virginia want to help people. We want to help people, but it is a difference in philosophy and viewpoint.

Mr. President, do you help people by guaranteeing an income to all these people whether they work or do not work? Do you help people by making them more dependent on government?

I say you do not in the long run. I say what you need to do is create job opportunities. We want to put people to work. I think we have too many people on welfare now.

This welfare system, as the conscientious and dedicated senior Senator from Kentucky brought out awhile ago, is in a mess. We need to change it, and I want to be sure that in changing it we go to something better and not something worse.

I submit that this program the Senate is being urged to support today, H.R. 1, the proposal by the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), will be far worse in the long run for the American people than the system we have now.

It virtually doubles the number of people on welfare. It is lacking in work incentives. It would require 80,000 new Federal employees, though many of those will be taken off of local and State rolls and put on Federal rolls. It would require 80,000 new Federal employees; it would write into law the principle of a guaranteed annual income.

I submit that all of those points go in the wrong direction. We need to head in the direction of creating job opportunities, and as much as I am opposed to spending public funds, I am willing to spend to guarantee job opportunities to our fellow citizens who do not have jobs. The Committee on Finance proposal seeks to do that.

I am concerned about aspects of that program, just as I am concerned about aspects of these other two programs. For that reason I feel the Senate acted very wisely earlier today in adopting the Roth-Byrd proposal to have a pilot test of the committee proposal, of H.R. 1 and of the Ribicoff proposal.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. HANSEN. I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. President, let me say that I guess the experience I have had in the Committee on Finance reminds me of the story that was attributed to young Mark Twain, who at the age of 14 felt his father knew practically nothing, and he was amazed how much the old man learned in 7 years.

I must say that the more testimony I have heard and the more witnesses we listened to, the less certain I am in being right about anything.

I think I share the same misgivings held by the distinguished Senator from Virginia in not being certain we know precisely what we want to do, which underscores the good wisdom, in my judgment, in testing out these programs.

I am certain every plan we have had before us has been submitted by conscientious people who desire nothing but the best for this country. They want to encourage people to become self-supporting and to obliterate any stigma which may fall on the shoulders of young children through no fault of their own. These are thoughts shared by all of us but, frankly, I am strongly persuaded by two facts. One is the experience that other countries have had in adopting proposals similar to those that are now before us. Second, I am wary of embarking on uncharted seas we do not know about and writing into the law that, as of a certain date, absent the negative expression of either House of Congress, the law will become effective.

For those reasons, it seems only good sense now to know what we are doing. As a matter of fact, I recall that perhaps 2 or 3 years ago the distinguished Senator from Connecticut, formerly the Secretary of HEW, made the statement—I recall it very, very well—that, as Secretary of HEW, had he known at that time what the true costs of medicare and medicaid would, indeed, develop to be, he would never have recommended that sort of program without first having it tried out.

I am sure the Senator from Virginia will recall that statement by our distinguished colleague.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I recall it very well, and it made a tremendous impression on me. As a matter of fact, it was that comment, which the Senator from Wyoming just quoted, of the distinguished and able Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) that was the genesis of the Roth-Byrd amendment, which the Senate approved today.

I think when we are going into new programs, when we are going into gigantic new programs, before we put them into effect nationally, just as the Senator from Connecticut stated in that committee meeting to which the Senator refers, we had better be sure what we are doing and we had better know a little more about the costs and we had better know a little more how they are going to work. Senator RIBICOFF suggested in that committee session that we pilot these out and get some understanding as to how they will work, rather than, to use the words of the Secretary of HEW, Mr. Richardson, put into effect a legislation that he says is "revolutionary and expensive."

Mr. HANSEN. If the Senator will yield for just one additional comment, let there be no doubt at all that the family assistance plan that has been talked about or proposed would constitute, indeed, a very major change in our country. I quote from the words of the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) before the committee, as they appear on page 2301:

> I think the country must realize that we are basically changing the social philosophy of the United States once we put this into effect. None of us can anticipate the consequences, but we are definitely starting this Nation into a new social program. You put 25 million people into a new social program and you are changing society. We do not know the impact that it will have on the people benefited, on the people outside the program, their concepts, their reactions, and what it will lead to.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator from Wyoming.

Before I yield to the Senator from Mississippi, I just want to read into the RECORD several figures. I refer the Senate to pages 442, 443, and 444 of the committee hearings. They list by States the federally aided welfare recipients under the current law for fiscal 1973 and the persons eligible for welfare benefits under H.R. 1 for the fiscal year 1973.

Let me quote just a few figures. I quote figures for my own State of Virginia first.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, will he tell us what he is reading from?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Pages 442, 443, and 444 of the committee hearings.

In my State of Virginia there are now on welfare 185,000 persons. If the proposal of the Senator from Illinois is enacted there will be 566,000 people eligible for public assistance.

If we go to the State of Texas, it will exactly double the number, from 771,000 to 1,571,000.

Then, if we go to Puerto Rico, Puerto Rico now has 339,000 on welfare, and under this proposal there would be 995,000, almost 1 million people—three times the present number.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator says that under the proposal of the Senator from Illinois—and I happen to be one of the sponsors—these figures will increase by whatever number the Senator has given for Virginia and other States. Is the Senator talking about H.R. 1 as originally proposed by the President of the United States, where, in addition to dealing with welfare people, there would be assistance for the working poor?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am talking about H.R. 1, which the Senator from Illinois emphasized in his comments today is basically the same as H.R. 1, the President's proposal.

Mr. COOPER. H.R. 1 as proposed by the President is not exactly the same as what is proposed by the Senator from Illinois. Senator STEVENSON was comparing the cost of H.R. 1 as passed by the House and the cost of his amendment.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am merely quoting his own words. He said it basically incorporates H.R. 1. The Republican leader, Senator SCOTT, made the same statement to the Senate a few minutes ago.

Mr. COOPER. I am asking about the figures from the committee report. I ask the Senator if he is talking about the original proposal by the President, which dealt not only with welfare recipients but also the working poor.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Yes, I am talking about——

Mr. COOPER. That is different, so it cannot be said that if the proposal of the Senator from Illinois were to be adopted, those totals would go up as quoted from the committee report. I wanted to get that straight.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Well, if I may reply to the distinguished and able Senator from Kentucky, I am taking the exact words of the Senator from Illinois when he presented his proposal to the Senate.

He said this is basically the same proposal as H.R. 1. Perhaps it is not. I do not know. But he said it is and so did Senator SCOTT who supports the Stevenson proposal.

Mr. COOPER. I am a cosponsor, and I know it is not exactly the same.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The two Senators, Mr. COOPER and Mr. STEVENSON, will have to get together.

Mr. COOPER. Those who are able to work and those who are not able to work are in different categories.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Illinois will have to fight that out. I only know that Senator STEVENSON stated and what Senator SCOTT stated. They both agree it basically incorporates H.R. 1.

Mr. COOPER. I know he was saying the cost of his proposal is virtually the same as those of H.R. 1 as passed by the House.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. STENNIS. I thank the Senator for yielding to me, and I shall be quite brief.

I want to compliment the Senator from Viriginia for his work on the bill. All members of the committee have worked hard on it. I especially commend him for sponsoring the amendment that he and the Senator from Delaware were successful in getting adopted this morning. I certainly gave it my solid support.

I know that the welfare problem is a grave one. I will support any reasonable make-work program, but I think, too, that the kind I have in mind will have to be worked out and developed over a period of time by experiments. I want a remedy, like anyone else, of the problem we have, but I do not want us to start down the road now with a guaranteed minimum income, because I believe that is the one road that will lead certainly to a deterioration of our society and cause an increase rather than a solution to the problem. In reality it will eventually seriously imperil the system of government that we have—I mean a representative government, with laws made by those who are elected by the people.

I believe that to embark on such a program—and it makes no difference who recommends it or the policy of what party it may be—would be to change the course of the history of our Nation. We would never be the same people again, if we go into this program.

I think, with great deference to the Chief Executive—and I have supported many of his proposals here on this floor—that it was a mistake, and an unfortunate mistake, when the Chief Executive, in good faith you will understand, made such a recommendation, because when the No. 1 officeholder, the Chief Executive of the Nation, comes out with a solid declaration like that, people pay a lot of attention to it and are inclined to accept it as sound, without full analysis.

As I say, human nature as I have found it in my years in public life—which has been a good long while—and my understanding of the motivations of people, including myself, lead me to believe that when we adopt the principle of a guaranteed minimum income with no work involved, no responsibility, no motivation, when all we have to do to qualify is just be a human being, then we undermine the basic foundation of self-government. I have no doubt about that, and I am deeply concerned about it. And, I have been since I have seen this program grow for years.

These problems are great. We cannot solve them overnight. But we have already moved in that direction. Let me state an actual illustration from my State.

I am not ashamed of the fact that we happen to have 1 percent more of our population on the welfare rolls now than the second highest State. We have had problems in proportion, but as the Senator from Louisiana has said, we are doing something about them. We do not want to be deluged now by a doubling of the welfare rolls and costs, making it impossible to move forward as we are moving forward now.

Let me give this illustration: I came in contact, about 8 months ago, with a very highly respected citizen of my home area. He had lived in the same community all of his life. He was then 77 years of age—honest, upright, respectable, a man of integrity. He was living in the same house where he was born. He had never traveled widely. He was not what we call educated.

I said, "Well, Joe, how are things in the community now?"

"Well," he said, "it is still a good place to live."

I said, "What do you mean, still a good place to live?"

"Well," he says, "we have not had any great violence, but things are not like they used to be."

He was in the car with me. I pulled off to the side of the road and talked with him in great earnest.

I said again, "Joe, tell me what the real trouble is."

Joe said, "Mr. Stennis, the people have stopped working."

There it was. He had never been versed in philosophy or economics, or psychology, although he was a great psychologist. He put his hand right on the soft spot.

I said, "Does that mean just some of the people?"

He said, "Far more than half of them."

Mr. President, I will give another illustration. I know of a little pulpwood cutting enterprise in that same community, where four men—big, stout, and robust, fine workers—with their power saws, were cutting pulpwood; they had a truck to haul it to the railroad station, and got $25 a unit for it. The landowner got only $6 of that amount. They got the rest and that was fine pay.

The county went on food stamps, 3 days later, two of those men stopped working. The other two men could not keep the truck busy, so that threw the other two men out of work, at least temporarily.

Mr. President, I have personal knowledge of those occurrences. Such is the human reaction. But I hope we will keep on trying until we find a way, but we shall never find it through a guaranteed minimum income.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I completely agree with the able Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point pages 442, 443, and 444 of the committee hearings, a table showing the number of federally aided welfare recipients under current law for fiscal 1973 and, in another column, the number of persons eligible for welfare benefits under H.R. 1 for fiscal year 1973.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPORTION OF POPULATION RECEIVING WELFARE UNDER CURRENT LAW AND PROPORTION OF POPULATION ELIGIBLE FOR BENEFITS UNDER H.R. 1 BY STATE, FISCAL YEAR 1973

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate decisively said "no" to the Ribicoff welfare plan. It was an incredibly excessive amendment which, in my State of South Carolina, would have increased the welfare rolls by five-and-one-half times the present level. Now the Senate faces the Stevenson amendment, which is simply the House-passed version of welfare reform. Again, we read the language of "income maintenance"—a very fancy, very cloudy term for guaranteed annual income. This Stevenson plan, or H.R. 1, has two points in common with the defeated Ribicoff plan. First, it increases the Federal financial contribution to welfare by a staggering amount. Second, it would deal the death blow to the concept of eliminating poverty through a coordinated attack on the roots of poverty. It would kill our hopes of serving the poor through institutions instead of by cash handout. Mr. President, we cannot solve a problem simply by throwing money at it. That may seem to be the easiest approach, and it may salve a nagging conscience by telling you that you are meeting the needs of the poor which are presently unmet in this land of plenty. But, in the end, you have not solved the problem and you have done a terrible disservice to the very people who most need help—the hungry, the blind, the old, the dependent children and their mothers—all those for whom welfare reform is desperately serious business. By injecting the issue of the marginal worker into this debate, we similarly lessen the chances of real help for those most in need. Right now we need to get to the core of the problem—and the core is the people I have just listed.

Everyone talks about the welfare mess, but no one does anything about it. The reason: The Congress is kept too busy trying to block the guaranteed annual income plans of the President, Senator McGovern, and the National Welfare Rights Organization. All these proposals for family assistance and welfare reform will, in fact, create a bigger mess.

What is the welfare mess? Most people think: First, too many people are on welfare; second, administrative costs are prohibitive—there is too much time and money spent investigating; third, too many welfare cheaters; fourth, welfare promotes freeloading; and, fifth, welfare imprisons the poor with such a pittance that they can never escape.

Now for the proposals. President Nixon and now Senator Stevenson propose to give every family of four in poverty $200 per month or $2,400 per year. Senator McGovern proposes $4,000 a year and the welfare rights group demands $6,500 a year. President Nixon and the welfare righters would double the welfare rolls from 14 to 28 million recipients. The Nixon proposal costs $11.7 billion. The welfare righters costs $50 billion. The Nixon and welfare rights proposal would require 80,000 more Federal employees and it would be 18 months before the first check could be issued. McGovern says he does not know how many more employees his program would require. It is obvious that these proposals make the welfare mess messier. And once again we have overpromised and underperformed. We tell the taxpayer the welfare mess has been eliminated and we tell the welfare recipient, "Your problems are over." But the problems for both have just begun. None of these plans provides for education, local participation, or for needed institutions. Supposedly, welfare families will get their $2,400 or $4,000 or $6,500, which in theory will not only solve their food problems—but also health, housing, education, and jobs. Not one of these plans provides one more doctor or hospital bed or classroom or a single additional dwelling. Even with money, where will the poor find these?

Without local participation and local administration—with just mailing out that check—where will the money end up? Higher grocery bills because of increased food prices, higher rents because the landlord knows he can get more money, excessive finance costs because the loan shark sees an opportunity for more profit and rising health care costs like we have seen with medicare. Just throwing money at a problem will not solve it. Look at New York City—they have tried it. They give $1 billion each year to their 1 million citizens on the dole—$1,000 a person. And New York has the biggest mess of all.

Today we are heading in exactly the wrong direction. Instead of building up institutions and service programs, the administration is tearing them down. Give them cash, the President says, as he eliminates day care centers and emergency feeding programs, plays numbers games with school lunch statistics while millions go hungry, and phases out food stamp and other feeding programs. A year after the guaranteed annual wage goes into effect, the overburdened taxpayer will be shouting, "Now you have the money—shape up, you bums." And the poor will still be distraught and hungry.

HUNGER

The Supreme Court has just ruled that States may pay families with dependent children smaller welfare benefits than those paid to the aged and disabled. The rationale is that the young are more adaptable than the sick and elderly, especially because the latter have less hope of improving their situation in the years remaining to them. Thus, we have enshrined into American jurisprudence the fallacy that the critical time in life is old age—that dependent children can improve their situation. False. Absolutely false. Forbid that we deny either the aged or the child. But of one thing we are sure: The greatest injury to the human brain is caused by malnutrition at infancy; and once suffered there is no hope of improving their situation in the years remaining to them.

The human brain consists of 13 billion brain cells. Ten of these 13 billion develop the first 5 months in the mother's womb, but as many as 2 billion or 20 percent of the cells never develop in some infants because of malnutrition of the mother. Once lost, these cells never repair. Later, the child can drink milk, take vitamins; body and bones will grow strong but the child will still end up a drone. From birth until 5 years of age the brain continues its rapid development. During this critical period, children born with normal brains can still lose growth from malnutrition and for the rest of life, the brain will not concentrate, it will not assimilate, it will not respond. All the rehabilitation and training you can give it will be just like water off a duck's back. And this injured human will be labeled a lazy bum. Everyone always asks who is going to pay for all this welfare. Already we have been paying through the nose. Those with underdeveloped brains fall behind in school, get out of sorts with their own age groups, resort to mischief and end up in jail. And the retarded suffer illnesses to a greater degree. Accordingly we biuld bigger jails, we readily pay $70 a day for hospital rooms, we appropriate millions for rehabilitation and mental institutions—continuing to treat the result rather than the cause. Hunger is the beginning of poverty. The poverty cycle goes from hunger to poor housing to inferior environment to ill health to faulty training to jail or joblessness to welfare. There are families who have been on welfare for five generations. To me, this is the welfare mess that must be corrected.

SOLUTION

First, the child in the mother's womb must be adequately nourished. Society scorns the expectant mother who cannot identify the father. But rather than penalizing the expectant mother, we should be worrying about breaking the vicious cycle by improving her offspring. Regardless of what we think about the mother's morality or deservedness, the child is not immoral. The child is coming, and it is society's child. This means nourishment for the child during those all-important months in the mother's womb. If the child is denied that, we can forget about he or she ever becoming a fully productive member of society.

Step two—Give the child a hot breakfast.

Step three—Provide a day care center. Then the mother can work, or at least the child can receive training in the proper environment. We voted for this in Congress, but President Nixon vetoed it calling it communal living. It is a cruel joke to look upon the welfare child's situation as a normal home. Rather than communal living, day care centers provide their only chance.

Step four—Complete the food stamp program and school lunchroom program. These have had shaky starts but are now proving their worth. The biggest objection we have to food stamps is that the poor swap the stamps for luxury foods or liquor. We should improve the policing of this but certainly the solution is not to give cash.

Step five—Get at our health needs with comprehensive health centers that have worked extremely well along with our feeding programs but have for all intents and purposes been eliminated in this administration.

Of course, feeding programs for the elderly as well as children would be provided. Thereupon you would have the hunger and health problems being properly treated and you could move on up the line to housing, education, and job training. Poverty must be treated on a case basis. The programs of Government are all there. The elements of local participation and local administration so necessary to the success of any program are all there. We have the categories of hunger care, health care, dependent children, welfare mothers, the aged, blind, sick, and disabled. What adulterates all the proposals before Congress is the attempt to bring poverty families above the poverty line—$4,110 for a family of four. This involves putting millions of marginal wage earners on welfare. It involves massive forced-work schemes costing billions to create jobs and administer, which in turn creates more mess than before. Income maintenance for the marginal wage earner can be supplied by extending the food stamp program to the 15 million that are eligible and have yet to receive them, and putting food services in the 23,000 schools in America that still lack feeding facilities. We can complete the housing program and institute health insurance. But let us hold up on cash until we get some facilities built and these basic problems solved.

I do not believe we ought to tax one man to pay another man who will not work, and I do not think Government should make welfare more attractive than work. But this is no reason why we can't go to the heart of America's welfare mess—hunger. After giving 81,000 complete physicals in 20 States, the National Nutrition Survey found there were 15 million hardcore hungry in America. We were on course and about to solve this problem until Mr. Nixon came along with his grandiose guaranteed annual wage. Since that time we have been squabbling over workfare and welfare. The hungry have gone hungrier, and the taxpayer pays more and receives less.

COST OF SOLUTION

First. The number of people on welfare would remain practically the same—8 million children under the age of 21; 4 million disabled and elderly; 2 million mothers of dependent children; with 126,000 able-bodied men—less than 1 percent on welfare able to work.

Second. The cost for expanded family feeding programs—$3 billion; for an adequate school lunch program—another $1 billion; for a school breakfast system—$500 million; for day care centers—$2 billion; for comprehensive health centers—$5 billion. That is $11.5 billion.

Where do we get the money? Last December, I voted against the $15-billion tax cut. Granting business investment credits and depreciation allowances—these are the tax loopholes that everyone now wants to close.

The cost of 535,000 troops and dependents in Europe is $19 billion a year. Cut this back like President Eisenhower suggested in 1963 to 100,000, saving $12 billion. Spend $2 billion on the Sixth Fleet strengthening defense, and take $10 billion to solve the welfare mess. Eliminate the President's proposed Volunteer Army, saving $3 billion. This is $28 billion for starters—and all we need is 11.5. There is no need to increase taxes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the motion to recommit the bill be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia yield for a motion?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana for the purpose of making a motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STAFFORD). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) to recommit the bill, with instructions. On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. INOUYE (when his name was called). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 35, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, as a member of the Senate Finance Committee, I have long been of the opinion—as I have stated publicly several times—that it is totally impossible to get real welfare reform during this session of the Congress. The Senate Finance Committee has adopted a "workfare" program which discriminates against poor people who are out of jobs and those who cannot work. It would, in virtually every aspect, make worse the present failures in the welfare system.

H.R. 1—the welfare bill adopted by the House of Representatives and generally supported by the Nixon administration—is a punitive and regressive measure. It is not welfare reform.

No welfare bill can measure up to the need for reform unless it guarantees the rights of present recipients, provides for decent pay and jobs and sets an adequate standard of income. Everybody agrees that the present system traps people in poverty, that people need an adequate income if they are to have some chance to escape poverty—decent education, health, housing, and job opportunity.

Yet, most of the proposals—even the so-called liberal compromises—do not meet these standards.

Further, it is clear that, even if the Senate were to pass at this late date an acceptable welfare reform bill, there is almost no hope that the measure would come back from conference in an acceptable form.

I disagree with some well-intentioned organizations and Senators who feel that any bill that recognizes the rights of the "working poor" is better than nothing. I believe that any measure that compromises on basic principles will put off the day when we may have real welfare reform—a guaranteed income of decent level for those who cannot find work or who are unable to work. Furthermore, I vigorously oppose any legislation that would make worse the already wretched lives of present recipients.

Consequently, I believe the best we can do this session of Congress is to act to protect the rights of those already receiving assistance and to give fiscal relief to the States. We must, then, continue to work for such education of the public and the Congress as will allow real welfare reform—not make the present welfare system worse.

Therefore, in line with my long-announced position on this matter, I voted yesterday for the motion to table the Ribicoff amendment, and, during the further consideration of the pending bill, I will continue to vote in accordance with the views I have here expressed.

nounced that the Missouri Division of Welfare had already taken steps to liberalize its old age assistance standards so that the great majority of old age assistance recipients in Missouri, who also receive social security, will not have their old age assistance benefits reduced as a result of the 20-percent increase in social security, effective this month.

In every case, therefore, persons in Missouri now receiving both old age assistance and social security will receive more in total income than they were getting before the 20-percent social security increase passed by the Congress. That, of course, was the intent of Congress.

Both Governor Hearnes and Missouri Director of Welfare Proctor Carter are to be commended for this action which immediately assures a more adequate income for some 68,000 Missourians.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the news release from Governor Hearnes' office, dated September 25, announcing this humanitarian policy in our State.

There being no objection, the news release was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NEWS RELEASE FROM THE OFFICE OF GOV. WARREN E. HEARNES

Governor Warren E. Hearnes today announced that the Division of Welfare will increase Old Age Assistance standards to fully or partially offset the 20 per cent increase in Social Security benefits which becomes effective in October.

"This action will allow the great majority of Social Security recipients who also receive Old Age Assistance to keep the 20 per cent increase without having their Old Age Assistance grants reduced," Hearnes said. He explained that the plan had the approval of the federal Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The Governor said the action was necessary to avoid widespread reductions in payments to Old Age Assistance recipients, since federal legislation providing the 20 per cent Social Security increase did not require states to pass on the increase to welfare recipients.

Proctor N. Carter, State Welfare Director, gave statistics showing the estimated effect of this change on Old Age Assistance recipients.

Of the 93,444 OAA recipients, about 65,000 (69 per cent) also receive Social Security benefits. About 33,000 of those will receive the full 20 per cent increase with no change in their OAA payments. Another 19,000 will receive the Social Security increase and also an increase in their Old Age Assistance grant.

The remaining concurrent recipients will have small reductions in their OAA grants, of $5 or less per month, which will be more than offset by the Social Security benefits. Carter said the limited OAA reductions would be for persons whose Social Security grants are relatively high and who would receive a substantial hike in benefits through the 20 per cent increase.

Both Governor Hearnes and Carter emphasized that all aged persons who receive both Old Age Assistance and Social Security will continue to have more in total income than they are now receiving.

Of the approximately 29,000 Old Age Assistance welfare recipients not receiving Social Security benefits, about 26,000 will have no change in their payments since they are receiving the $85 maximum Old Age Assistance payment.

The remaining 3,000 recipients will receive small increases in their Old Age Assistance payments. According to Carter, these are persons who now receive less than the $85 maximum and who will benefit from the increase in the assistance standard. The increased cost for these recipients will be paid from federal funds and will not affect the state appropriation.

Because the number of concurrent Social Security-welfare recipients in the other categories of Aid to Dependent Children, Aid to the Permanently and Totally Disabled, Aid to the Blind, and General Relief is small, changes in the level of assistance payments will be minor, Carter concluded.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

MISSOURI PASSES ON THE BENEFITS OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY INCREASE

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, on September 29 the Senate approved an amendment to H.R. 1, the Social Security Amendments, which would provide that when there is a general increase in social security benefits there will be a corresponding increase in the standard of need under State public assistance programs.

I am pleased to call to the attention of the Congress the fact that the State of Missouri is in full agreement with that position. In fact, 4 days earlier, on September 25, Gov. Warren E. Hearnes an-

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I move to recommit H.R. 1 to the Finance Committee to report forthwith with the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Beginning on page 689, line 11, strike out everything down through page 863, line 26.

Beginning on page 921, line 2, strike out everything down through page 932, line 24.

Beginning on page 933, line 9, strike out everything down through line 2 on page 936.

Beginning on page 947, line 4, strike out everything down through line 5 on page 954.

Beginning on page 963, line 19, strike out everything down through line 17, page 989 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 540. Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by this Act) is further amended by adding at the end of section 1130 the following new section:

"FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 1131. (a) The Secretary shall, subject to subsection (c), pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, in addition to the amounts (if any) otherwise payable to such State under such titles, such part, section 1118, and section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950, on account of expenditures as cash assistance, an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(1) an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under the State plans approved under such title or such part A (as the case may be), as cash assistance for such quarter (not counting any part of such expenditures which is in excess of the amount of the expenditures which would have been made as cash assistance under such plans if such plans had remained as they were in effect for January 1971, or

"(B) an amount equal to 120 per centum of the amount referred to in clause (2), over

"(2) an amount equal to 100 per centum of the non-Federal share of the total average quarterly expenditures, under such plans, as cash assistance during the 4-quarter period ending December 31, 1970.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter under State plans approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act as cash assistance, referred to in subsection (a)(1), means the excess of—

"(1) the total expenditure for such quarter under such plans as (A) old-age assistance, (B) aid to the blind, (C) aid to the disabled, (D) aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, and (E) aid to families with dependent children, over

"(2) the amounts determined for such quarter for such State with respect to such expenditures under sections 3, 1003, 1403, 1603, 403, and 1118 of this Act and (in the case of a plan approved under title I or X or part A of title IV) under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950.

"(c) No payment under this section shall be made for any quarter to any State on account of expenditures, as cash assistance, under a State plan of such State if the standards, under any plan of such State approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, for determining eligibility for, or the amount of, cash assistance to individuals under such plan have been so changed as to be less favorable, to all (or any substantial class or category) of the applicants for or recipients of such assistance under the plan, than the standards provided for such purpose under such plan as in effect for January 1, 1971, or, if more favorable to any such applicants or recipients, for any month after January 1971.

"(d) This section shall be effective for fiscal years 1972 and 1973 only."

MAINTENANCE OF STATE PAYMENT LEVELS

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (22); and

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (23) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and" and the following: "(24) provide that aid furnished under the plan to a family for any month shall not be less than (A) the amount of aid which would have been furnished for October 1972 under such plan to a family of the same size with no other income, reduced by (B) any income such family may have which is not required to be disregarded by clause (8)."

On page 989, after line 17, add the following new title:

TITLE VI—EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN PROVISIONS

SEC. 601. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, title IV (other than sections 401, 402, and 403) and title V (other than sections 510, 521, 531, and 534) shall be effective at such time as the Congress may determine in subsequent legislation.

Beginning on page 689, line 11, strike out through page 769, line 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"TITLE IV—PROGRAMS FOR FAMILIES WITH CHILDREN

"PART A—TESTING OF ALTERNATIVE PROPOSALS FOR ASSISTANCE TO FAMILIES WITH DEPENDENT CHILDREN

"AUTHORIZATION FOR CONDUCT OF TEST PROGRAM

"SEC. 401. (a) For purposes of this part—

"(1) the term 'family assistance tests' means (A) the programs contained in title IV of H.R. 1, Ninety-second Congress, first session, as passed by the House of Representatives, or (B) the program referred to in clause (A) as amended by amendment numbered 1669, Ninety-second Congress, second session, introduced in the Senate on October 2, 1972,

"(2) the term 'workfare test program' means the program contained in parts A and B, title IV of H.R. 1, Ninety-second Congress, second session, as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance on September 26, 1972, and

"(3) the term 'family' means a family with children.

"(b)(1) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Secretary') is authorized, effective January 1, 1973, to plan for and conduct, in accordance with the provisions of this section, not more than three test programs. One of such programs shall be the family assistance test program defined in subsection (a)(1)(A) of this section, one of such programs shall be the family assistance program defined in subsection (a)(1)(B) of this section, and one of such programs shall be the workfare test program.

"(2) Whenever the workfare test program is commenced, there shall commence, on the same date as such program, both family assistance test programs. Except as may otherwise be authorized by the Congress, no test program under this section shall be conducted for a period of less than twenty-four months or more than forty-eight months, and to the maximum extent practical each such test program shall be conducted for the same length of time.

"(3) Any such test program shall be conducted only in and with respect to an area which consists of one or more States, one or more political subdivisions of a State, or part of a political subdivision of a State, and shall be applicable to all the individuals who are residents of the State or the area of the State in and with respect to which such program is conducted except that no one such program shall be applicable to more than 100,000 recipients.

"(4) During any period for which any such test program is in effect in any State or in any area of a State, individuals residing in such State or the area of the State in which such program is in effect shall not be eligible for aid or assistance under any State plan or program for which the State receives Federal financial assistance under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(5) The Secretary, in determining the areas in which test programs under this section shall be conducted, shall select areas with a view to assuring—

"(A) that the number of participants in any such program will (to the maximum extent practicable) be equal to the number of participants in any other such program; and

"(B) that the area in which any family assistance test program is conducted shall be comparable (in terms of size and composition of population, of average per capita income, rate of unemployment, and other relevant criteria) to an area in which a workfare test program is conducted.

"(c) (1) No test program under this section shall be conducted in any State (or any area thereof) unless such State shall have entered into an agreement with the Secretary under which the State agrees—

"(A) to participate in the costs of such test progam; and

"(B) to cooperate with the Secretary in the conduct of such program.

"(2) Under any such agreement, no State shall be required to expend, with respect to any test program conducted within such State (or any area thereof), amounts greater than the amount which would have been expended with respect to such State or area thereof (as the case may be), during the period that such test program is in effect, under the State plan of such State approved under part A of title IV of the Social Security Act. For purposes of determining the amount any State would have under such a plan during the period that any such test program is in effect within such State (or any area thereof), it shall be assumed that the rate of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan would be equal to the average of State expenditure (from non-Federal funds) under such plan for the twelve-month period immediately preceding the commencement of such test program.

"(d)(1) The Secretary shall, upon completion of any plans for and prior to the commencement of any test program under this section, submit to the Committee on Finance of the Senate and the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives a complete and detailed description of such program and shall invite and give consideration to the comments and suggestions of such committees with respect to such program.

"(2) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Secretary shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any six-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs. Each such report shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(3) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with (A) the Secretary's evaluation of such programs and such comments or recommendations of the Secretary with respect to such programs as he deems desirable and (B) his recommendations (if any) for legislation to revise or replace the provision of part A of title IV of the Social Security Act.

"(e)(1) The Secretary shall—

"(A) in the planning of any test program under this section; or

"(B) in assembling information, statistics, or other materials, to be contained in any report to Congress under this section;

consult with, and seek the advice and assistance of, the General Accounting Office and the General Accounting Office shall consult with the Secretary and furnish such advice and assistance to him upon request of the Secretary or at such times as the Comptroller General deems desirable.

"(2) The operations of any test program conducted under this section shall be reviewed by the General Accounting Office, and the books, records, and other documents pertaining to any such program or its operation shall be available to the General Accounting Office at all reasonable times for purposes of audit, review, or inspection. The books, records, and documents of each such program shall be audited by the General Accounting Office from time to time (but not less frequently than once each year).

"(3) During the period that test programs are in operation under this section, the Comptroller General shall from time to time (but not less frequently than once during any six-month period) submit to the Congress a report on such programs which shall contain full and complete information and data with respect to such programs and the operation thereof, together with such recommendations and comments of the Comptroller General with respect to such programs as he deems desirable.

"(4) At the earliest practicable date after the termination of all test programs authorized to be conducted by this section, the Comptroller General shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report on such programs and their operation together with his evaluation of, and comments and recommendations (if any), with respect to such programs.

"(f) In the administration of test programs under this section, the Secretary shall provide safeguards which restrict the use or disclosure of information identfying participants in such programs to purposes directly connected with the administration of such programs (except that nothing in this subsection shall be construed to prohibit the furnishing of records or information concerning participants in such programs to the Committee on Finance of the Senate or the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives).

"(g) For the purpose of enabling the Secretary to formulate operational plans and to conduct test programs under this section, there are hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year $200,000,000.

"(h) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as a commitment, on the part of the Congress, to enact (at any future time) legislation to establish, on a permanent basis, any program tested pursuant to this section or any similar program.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the instructions contained in my motion would be the following: First, as the amendment of the Senator from Delaware (Mr.

ROTH) that was adopted, it would authorize a series of pilot projects to test out the elements of the Ribicoff welfare reform proposal, the President's proposal, and the Finance Committee proposal. These pilot programs would run from 2 to 4 years. Second, it would authorize an emergency fiscal relief measure for the States. Once a State's welfare costs reached their fiscal 1971 levels, the Federal Government would assume all financing of any additional costs for the State up to 20 percent above the fiscal 1971 levels. Above that level States would receive regular matching. This relief provision would give States retroactive relief for fiscal 1972 and fiscal 1973.

Certainly the administration has evidenced its strong support of this measure. Senator RIBICOFF has indicated time after time his support for it, and the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, though modifying the formula, has agreed in principle that fiscal relief must be granted to the States.

Third, it would require that States maintain benefits at the level they were paying in January 1971 or the level they are paying now, whichever is higher.

Fourth, it would require leaving intact the 10-percent work bonus the Finance Committee proposed. The 10-percent work bonus provides an additional 10 percent of wages covered by social security, up to wages of $4,000. Above that level the bonus is phased out at a 25-percent rate.

Finally and in summary, Mr. President, the Roth amendment retains major features of the Senate Finance Committee's version of H.R. 1 which I think could be considered repressive, and which I feel a great many in the Senate simply cannot live with. The problems I have with the Roth amendment include:

First, the wage supplement portion of the Finance Committee's work-fare program which encourages employers not to upgrade hourly wages even to the minimum wage and does nothing to assist workers in the lowest paying jobs.

Second, it provides for a nationwide system of child care without parental involvement or local control, which duplicates the existing system.

Third, the amendment authorizes so-called 2 to 4-year "pilot" programs which provide:

No articulated goals to be tested;

No specific standards or safeguards;

No limitations on the number of States or individuals which may be involved in the test;

No requirement that the pilot programs be more than very generally related to the programs they are to test: H.R. 1 as passed by the House, the Senate Finance Committee's version of H.R. 1, and the Ribicoff-Administration Compromise.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I am very happy to yield to the Senator from Minnesota whatever time he requires.

Mr. MONDALE. I am very pleased to join in cosponsoring the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois. I think it has great merit, and I hope it will be adopted by the Senate.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware was represented as a proposal which would test the essential elements of the family assistance plan in a series of pilot projects. That was partly correct, but in some respects the Roth amendment establishes major permanent programs, establishes major agencies and major fundamental policies which would be in law on a permanent basis.

Principal among them is a brand new and I think very poorly conceived program to deal with child care in this country. If fully funded, this permanent new agency would be the largest day care program in the country.

It is a bare bones proposition which establishes a new permanent Federal bureaucracy called the Bureau of Child Care, under the control of a director who is virtually without any restrictions on how he proceeds, what standards he establishes, where he allocates the money, what kind of fee schedules he establishes, whether parents are involved, and what kind of minimum requirements may be needed. None of these things are answered in this measure. This proposed agency is contrary to the best advice we have been able to obtain from anyone, anywhere about child care. In my opinion the whole thrust of it would, in the long run, damage children far more than if it were not adopted and were set aside.

We have two major programs in the country today dealing with child care. The first is the Headstart program, which has been in being for some years, but which would be only half the size of this program.

Secondly, we have a series of day care centers set up under existing welfare programs, under title IV-A of the Social Security Act, which amount to about $700 million, but with respect to which there are certain built-in protections. They are established under the direction of the Federal Interagency Day Care Standards; they are established in cooperation with State and local welfare departments; they are subject to the protection of local licensing laws affecting fire protection, sanitation, safety protections, and the rest. There are protections in these existing day care programs dealing with the staff ratios, which are very important. We do not have time to go into it today, but the top experts in this country say it is disastrous to put too many infants and young children under the supervision of a single staff member. The psychological damage of under staffing is enormous. That is why Headstart and title IV-A programs have protections concerning adequate staff ratios and maintain close relationships between the programs and the parents whose children are in the programs.

This pending proposal, in my opinion, is perhaps the worst proposal dealing with children that I have ever seen. I think it is very dangerous. I think it would establish a national program over which State and local governments and parents have no control, in which there are no guidelines, and would permit private for-profit corporations to become involved without any control whatsoever.

I would just like to discuss that prospect for a minute, so that we will realize what will happen unless the Percy amendment is adopted.

First of all, this major new program creates a permanent agency called the Bureau of Child Care, a new Federal bureaucracy unrelated to any existing department or existing programs providing Federal assistance to day care. This encourages further fragmentation and duplication.

The establishment of a new bureau totally ignores the existence of the Office of Child Development in HEW, which was created to bring some coordination to our efforts in early childhood. It bears no relationship to child-care programs authorized in HEW, the Office of Education, or OEO. It does not even relate to the child-care programs in title IV-A and the WIN programs that are already authorized and in operation under the very Social Security Act this bill seeks to amend. It simply gives applicants for assistance one more unrelated source of funding with separate forms, and different requirements.

As such, it runs absolutely counter to the need for coordination and simplicity by adding a new and redundant Federal bureaucracy.

Second, contrary to what this administration and the Congress wants, this would be a totally federally controlled and dominated organization. There would be literally a Federal czar dealing with children who come within this program. There is no role for States or localities whatsoever in the delivery system. Child-care programs would be exempted from State and local housing requirements regarding health, sanitation, and the rest. Let me read the language:

> the Bureau . . . shall not be subject to any licensing or similar requirements imposed by any State (or political subdivision thereof), and shall not be subject to any health, fire, safety, sanitary, or other requirements imposed by any State (or political subdivision thereof) with respect to facilities providing child care.

Unlike existing day-care programs, or the proposed prime sponsorship mechanism in the Comprehensive Headstart, Child Development, and Family Services Act, the proposal has no role for general-purpose government at the State or local level. These public bodies are not designated for involvement in the delivery system at all. Their efforts in child care, health, education, and social services are not tapped. Instead, a totally new Federal bureaucracy, through Federal field offices in major cities, would have complete responsibility for these programs.

This should be a matter of particular concern to the President, who expressed in his veto message last year the fear of "arrogating initiatives to the Federal Government from the States" and "retaining an excessive measure of operational control at the Federal level."

Next the standards in this proposal are totally inadequate. It assures purely custodial care, and while there is a lot of disagreement in the day care and child care field, every person we heard from said the worst thing you can do to children is take them away from their parents and put them into cold custodial care, with no emotional support and no minimum standards to be sure that the quality of support that one expects in the home at least is substituted as fully as possible in these day care centers. Existing standards of HEW set limits on the maximum number of children per adult. This bill sets no maximum—it sets a minimum, just the other way around.

For example, for 3-year-olds in a day care center, existing day care standards require that there be no more than a 5-to-1 child-adult ratio. In the same case, the bureau would require no less than a 10-to-1 ratio, and this is just the minimum. The bureau proposal gives the director the authority to define this ratio so that it could be 15-to-1, 20-to-1, or worse. We could put a thousand kids in the Kennedy Stadium out here, with one custodian, under this proposal. Mr. President, that is no way to treat children.

Adequate adult-child ratios are absolutely essential to quality child care. That point was emphasized time and time again during the hearings the Labor and Public Welfare Committee held on day care and child development over the past 3 years. It was made over and over again during the hearings the Finance Committee held on child care last summer. And the child-adult ratios in this bill were repeatedly criticized at that time in testimony from the Child Welfare League, the League of Women Voters, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the National Council of Jewish Women, the National Federation of Settlements and United Neighborhood Houses, the Washington Research Project, the Maryland Committee for Day Care of Children, Mary Rowe, and others—yet no improvements were made. The bill retains absolutely no protections in this critical and sensitive area. It remains an invitation for the most damaging kind of custodial warehousing.

Finally, the bills provision with respect to parent participation are totally inadequate. I think every one agrees when you start providing care for preschool children, you had better make certain it is in a way which complements and supports the family. I personally prefer, wherever possible, that the services provided in the home, with the parents, supporting the parents and keeping the family together. But where it is necessary, because the family has broken up, where the mother must work, or where the family is incapable of providing the kind of services that are needed of one kind or another, at least every effort ought to be made to keep the parents as closely involved and, in my opinion, as much in control as possible of the programs serving their children.

What does this bill do? It says that parent participation is limited to a requirement that parents be given the opportunity from time to time to meet the staff and observe the children receiving care in the facility. This is substantially weaker than the current day care standards, which require parental participation in policymaking, staff selection, and the rest. The inadequacy of this provision was pointed out repeatedly in the hearings on this proposal—in testimony from the AFL–CIO, the Child Welfare League, the American Academy of Pediatrics, the Day Care and Child Development Council of America, the National Capitol Area Child Day Care Association, the National Council of Jewish Women, the League of Women Voters, the American Baptist Home Mission Society, the Washington Research Project, the National Federation of Settlements, and United Neighborhood Houses, and others—but again no improvements were made.

Finally, there is no participation in the formula for State-by-State distribution. If the bill passes, we are authorizing the appropriation of $800 million, and no one knows or has the slightest idea how much his State will receive. There is nothing at all to assure that each State will get its appropriate share.

Mr. President, we have letters from the National Governors' Council, the President of the American Academy of Pediatrics, the National Association for the Education of Young Children, the Child Welfare League of America, Inc., the National League of Cities and United States Conference of Mayors and the Day Care and Child Development Council of America—all spelling out exactly what I have said in my remarks.

I am hopeful that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be accepted. That will truly be in the spirit of the amendment which we thought we were adopting, as offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), because it would put this program along with the others on a pilot basis. We would not be establishing willy-nilly what I regard to be one of the least acceptable proposals for day care that I have ever seen. I think it is a bad proposal. I do not think it has been considered seriously. I do not think it has responded to the best advice. I regret saying this. When we start authorizing programs to serve our children in this country, we had better be careful what we are doing.

One of the key reasons, therefore, that I hope the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will be adopted is that we need a program that really does the job. The Senate has twice adopted such a program. On two occasions we have adopted child development acts which deal with all the issues with which this measure fails to deal. If that were adopted and fully funded, in my opinion we would be proceeding on the course that this country—but more important—our children and our families require.

I sincerely hope that the amendment offered by the Senator from Illinois will be accepted.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the letters to which I have referred be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHILD WELFARE LEAGUE OF AMERICA, INC.,
October 2, 1972.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Children and Youth, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: The Child Welfare League of America is very concerned that child care programs will be adversely affected by the actions about to be taken in the Senate. Specifically, we are opposed to the enactment of those provisions of Title XXI of H.R. 1 which would establish a Bureau of Child Care in the Department of Labor.

We testified at length before the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate regarding our concern and some of that testimony may be of interest to you. In that testimony we said the following.

"We believe that there should be adequate provision for the availability of child care in order that women on welfare who seek employment may take jobs without detriment to their children's welfare. In this sense, we agree with Senator Long that the "availability of child care is a key element in welfare reform." We do not believe it essential, however, to include legislative provisions for the establishment of child care programs in the welfare reform bill. Separate child care legislation which provides for comprehensive programs for all children needing child care, including those receiving welfare assistance, would be preferable. A welfare reform bill might, however, include authorizations to pay for the needed child care of welfare families.

"Child care is not, in our opinion, a proper function of the Department of Labor. Child care should not be viewed primarily as a manpower device. It must be child and family-oriented to ensure that the child's welfare comes first. Therefore, the Department of HEW is the more logical department to administer child care programs. Expertise with respect to the services required for these programs is, or should be, in that Department. The HEW experts in the areas of child welfare, child development, health, education and nutrition, etc., are needed to establish and administer sound child care policies.

"It also seems unnecessary, as well as administratively and economically unsound, to have duplicate systems of child care in two departments.

"We believe that child care legislation now before the Senate Finance Committee should have much in common with the comprehensive child development program passed by the Senate and House but vetoed by the President. We hope that programs of the same scope and quality of the vetoed bill will become part of all child care legislation, although there may be differences in plans for the administration and financing of these programs.

"In closing, we wish to stress the need for quality child care to help all children achieve their maximum potential so that they may emerge from childhood as healthy, secure, and productive adults. They are, indeed, the future of this nation."

The Child Welfare League of America favors those parts of Title XXI which would increase the authorization for child welfare services and which would establish a National Adoption Information Exchange System. We hope that the Senate will agree with these provisions, and that appropriations will be made to enable these worthwhile activities to expand services to the nation's children.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH H. REID.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE EDUCATION OF YOUNG CHILDREN,
Washington, D.C., October 3, 1972.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: The National Association for the Education of Young Children (NAEYC) wants to register its concern for the potential harm that we see evidenced in some of the child care proposals incorporated into H.R. 1. Specifically, we are concerned about the possible reduction of standards for child-teacher ratios for children in group settings. The voting membership present at NAEYC's November 1971 conference passed a resolution which states a commitment to environments which permit, "maximum development and growth of children", specifically that all child care programs for young children must at least meet the minimum standard requirements as stated in the 1968 Federal Interagency Guidelines for Child Care, particularly those concerning child-teacher ratios, staffing patterns and parent involvement. The '68 Guidelines state that in day care centers, the total ratio of children to adults should not be greater than 5 to 1.

NAEYC is gravely concerned over the possibility of child care provisions being passed as a part of H.R. 1 which would set standards for 3-year-olds in group care centers at a level of at least 10 children per adult. The implications are obvious—inadequate supervision, dehumanization, and no possibility of providing quality experiences for children.

We call on you to act strongly to protect the children of this nation from such circumstances.

Sincerely yours,

MARILYN M. SMITH, Ed. D.,
Acting Executive Director.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: The American Academy of Pediatrics wishes to express its concern with Section 431 of HR 1 which would establish a Bureau of Child Care. The Child Care Program provided under this section represents the same approach to custodial care to which the Academy objected and the Senate agreed at the close of the last Congress. In a letter to Senator Long of December 18, 1970, the Academy urged the deletion from the Social Security Amendments of the provision establishing a Federal Child Care Corporation. In February, 1971, the Academy presented testimony to the Finance Committee specifying our reservations regarding this proposed approach and we offered positive alternatives for Committee consideration.

Section 431 will not provide for the establishment of child care programs of high quality. The minimal standards prescribed in the proposed legislation will result in mere custodial projects which will severely neglect the intellectual, social and developmental needs of children. State and local licensing will be superseded thereby negating much of the planning and program developing underway at the state and local level.

The Academy urges that the duplicative structure of child care as provided in Section 431 be struck from HR 1.

Sincerely,

JAY M. ARENA,
President, American Academy of Pediatrics.

NATIONAL GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE,
Washington, D.C., October 4, 1972.

Senator WALTER MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: I appreciate your request for an analysis of the impact on States if the provision, as contained in the Senate Finance Committee's version of H.R. 1, to establish a Bureau of Child Care is enacted.

The National Governors' Conference has adopted the following policy statement regarding child care programs as related to welfare reform legislation:

"Provide for adequate day care programs for children of parents who are working or in training programs with provisions for a central state role and a comprehensive state plan, and which would not bypass States in the administration of such programs."

In analyzing the Senate Finance Committee's proposal in establishing the Bureau of Child Care, we would like to make the following comments:

1. We seriously question whether there is sufficient federal level knowledge of state or local conditions or the desirability as related to other licensing activities to justify the proposed federal preemption of all state or local health, fire, safety, sanitary, or other requirements with respect to facilities providing child care.

2. There is a total lack in the proposal of a presumed role for States in planning and administering child care programs. This is a serious deficiency in the proposal and is totally contrary to the policy position of the National Governors' Conference.

I hope that these comments will be useful to you.

Sincerely,

ALLEN C. JENSEN,
Special Assistant.

MAJOR WEAKNESSES IN BUREAU OF CHILD CARE

1. Creates a new Federal Bureaucracy, unrelated to any existing Departments or existing programs providing Federal assistance to day care. This encourages further fragmentation and duplication.

2. Creates a system of total Federal control. No role for states or localities in delivery system. Child care programs would even be exempted from State and local housing requirements regarding health, sanitation, etc.

3. Inadequate Standards. Assures purely custodial care. Existing standards set limits on maximum number of childlren per adults. This bill sets minimum. For example, for 3-year-olds in a day care center, existing Interagency Day Care Standards require that there would be no more than a 5–1 child-adult ratio. In the same case, the Bureau would require no less than a 10-1 ratio. And that is just the minimum. The Bureau proposal gives the Director the authority to define this ratio so that it could be 15–1, 20–1 or worse.

4. Parent Participation. Parent participation is limited to a requirement that parents be given the opportunity from "time to time", to meet the staff, and observe the children receiving care in a facility. Substantially weaker than existing Interagency Day Care Standards which require parental participation in policy making, staff selection, etc.

5. Licensing. Any facility in which the child care services are provided by the Bureau "shall not be subject to any health, fire, safety, sanitary or other requirements imposed by States or localities."

6. Distribution of Funds. No formula for State by State distribution.

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF CITIES,
U.S. CONFERENCE OF MAYORS,
October 4, 1972.

Hon. WALTER MONDALE,
U.S. Senate,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: We urge you to oppose any attempt to retain Title XXI, as currently drafted, in the welfare reform bill (H.R. 1). A federal child care corporation is an inadequate vehicle to assure quality services to the nation's children or to meet local needs and priorities. The policy of both the NLC and USCM mandates local government involvement in the delivery of child care services. Local governments must have the opportunity to plan, coordinate and operate their individual programs.

Sincerely,

ALLEN E. PRITCHARD, JR.,
Executive Vice President, National League of Cities.

JOHN GUNTHER,
Executive Director, U.S. Conference of Mayors.

DAY CARE AND CHILD DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL OF AMERICA, INC.,
Washington, D.C., October 4, 1972.

Hon. Senator WALTER F. MONDALE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: In the recent fervor to complete Senate deliberations on H.R. 1, it is with great concern that the Council sees the direction being taken as one which will not emerge in the interests of the child care we advocate in our Statement of Principles.

We enclose a copy of our statement of September 24, 1971 before the Senate Finance Committee on this matter. Needless to say, the Council's thinking in this area has not wavered over the course of the past year.

We think that a review of this Statement by you and other Congressmen concerned about the direction of child care in our country would be beneficial.

Very truly yours,

THEODORE TAYLOR,
Executive Director.

STATEMENT BY MR. JOHN H. NIEMEYER, PRESIDENT, THE DAY CARE AND CHILD DEVELOPMENT COUNCIL OF AMERICA, INC., BEFORE THE FINANCE COMMITTEE, U.S. SENATE, SEPTEMBER 24, 1971

Mr. Chairman, distinguished members of the Committee: My name is John H. Niemeyer. I am President of the Bank Street College of Education in New York City. It is my honor to serve as President and Chairman of the Board of Directors of the Day Care and Child Development Council of America, and it is in this capacity that I speak to you today.

The Day Care and Child Development Council of America which I represent is a broad and inclusive organization. The Council brings together more that 4500 civic groups, public and private agencies, schools, churches and individuals. Our membership extends to every state in the union, and reflects a full spectrum of involvement in the care of children—from parents who are day care consumers, to practitioners whose daily work is the care of children, to professionals whose research and writings influence the field of child development.

The Council is a common effort by people who are working to achieve quality child care at all levels: local, state, regional, and national. It includes day care entrepreneurs; low, middle and high income parents; Blacks, Whites, Chicanos, Puerto Ricans, Indians, Orientals—professionals and laymen from all walks of life. What brings us together is a shared concern for the well being of our nation's children.

The purpose and priorities of the Day Care and Child Development Council are closely described in a Statement of Principles adopted in 1970 by the Board of Directors. Since this Statement bears directly on the concerns of the Committee, I will quote it in full.

THE STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

The Day Care and Child Development Council of America believes that quality child care services are a right: of every child, of every parent, of every community.

The goal of the Day Care and Child Development Council of America is to promote the development of a locally controlled, publicly supported, universally available child care system through: Public education—to mobilize public opinion and resources in support of children's programs; social action—to assist in formulating public policies which will result in well-planned, adequately funded, and well administered programs responsive to local needs and aspirations.

Assistance to local committees—to help citizen action groups and service agencies in meeting their community needs. Society is obligated to support the realization of human potential. Child care services are a fundamental right for: The child—they provide children with opportunities to develop their full capacity as human beings during their crucial early years; the family—they provide parents with real choices about employment and other activities outside the home; the community—they provide one of the essential elements for improving the quality of life of the community.

We believe that America needs a coordinated network of child care and development services which:

Are available to children of all ages from conception through youth, to families from every kind of economic and social background and to every community, with priority to those whose need is greatest.

Are available through a wide variety of different types of programs and during all of the hours of the day and time of the year that children, families and communities need them.

Have the full range of components required to promote the intellectual, emotional, social and physical growth of the children they serve.

Insure parents a decisive policy role in the planning, operation and evaluation of programs which determine the environment in which their children live.

Place the major responsibility for planning and operating child care and development services at the local level.

Reflect and build on the culture and language of children, families and communities being served and enhance the distinctive features of the child's culture.

We believe that child care services should be publicly supported. The financing of quality child care services is a costly undertaking but the most prudent of long-term investments. The Nation's priorities must be reordered to provide the resources necessary for universal services.

We believe that child care services should be a public, social utility whose cost must be shared by the entire community much as we now pay for essential police, fire and public school services.

It is my purpose today to use the perspective of this Statement of Principles as a basis for analyzing a selection of major issues included in legislation related to child care pending before this Committee. This legislation includes:

S. 2003, the Child Care Services Act of 1971.

H.R. 1, the Social Security Amendments of 1971.

Amendments to H.R. 1 proposed by Senator Ribicoff.

I will also include in this analysis Title V, Child Development Programs, of S. 2007 which passed the Senate on September 9.

As a matter of initial summary, let me say that each of the specific issues discussed below is seen by the Council as a variation of the fundamental issue: The guaranteeing of quality, not just quantity in the care of our society's most precious resource, its children.

This is one of the truly basic enduring questions with which the American people and their representatives must grapple today. It finds expression regularly in many forms of policy decision. We believe that the ability to recognize this issue in its several variations and to deal wth it directly is essential to any creative consideration of child care proposals today.

The following analysis will clearly reveal the Council's historic concern for quality child care programs. But this concern has never—and cannot now—relieve the Council of its profound sense of urgency to meet the growing quantitative need for child care services in America.

The issues which we have selected for analysis are elements in a system which we regard as indivisible. We begin from the premise that a desirable universal child care system must include:

(a) clear and meaningful local control.

(b) an assurance that parents will have the decisive policy-making role in planning, operating and evaluating programs.

(c) a full-range of components required to promote the intellectual, emotional, social, and physical growth of children.

To this we would add and underline—that it must also include financial resources commensurate with the job to be performed.

From the Council's point of view the absence of any one of these elements seriously calls into question whatever positive value may flow from the presence of the others.

Thus, in the legislation pending before your Committee today we find ourselves applauding features which facilitate the delivery of much needed child care services. We are glad to welcome measures which increase the supply of day care centers, and raise the federal government's level of financial support for day care services to a responsible point.

However, in the interest of quality, we have serious reservations concerning the manner in which S. 2003 and H.R. 1 deal with the inherently inter-related questions of local control, parental involvement, and comprehensiveness of services. For this reason, we strongly recommend that both of these bills be modified substantially in the course of their consideration by this Committee.

Now let me turn to the specifics of our analysis.

1. Local control

By "local control" we mean a mechanism by which an organization or person at the community or program performance level can be held accountable for program performance and can be designated as an operator of child care programs which receive public funds.

In S. 2003, the Federal Child Care Corporation is mandated to "take into account any comprehensive planning for child care which has been done." This wording seems to us only a perfunctory bow to local planning units, and is clearly unsatisfactory.

H.R. 1 provides that grants or contracts for service delivery may be made to or with any agency designated by appropriate elected or appointed official in the area and which demonstrates capacity to work with the area manpower agency. Local Educational Agencies are designated to deliver care provided on a group or institutional basis for children attending school.

The language of the bill provides very broad discretion for federal administrators and minimal apparatus for advice from local communities.

Senator Ribicoff has bolstered the role of community representatives in his proposed amendments to H.R. 1. He has proposed in addition to the stipulation that the Federal Child Care Corporation "take into account comprehensive planning . . ." the creation of "local, state, and regional councils as necessary to insure that child care services are appropriately located, that full utilization is made of existing resources, that cooperation is obtained from education, health, child welfare, social services, and volunteer groups, and that substantial local community participation (our emphasis) in the establishment, operation, and review of day care programs is obtained." "Furthermore, where the Corporation provides child care services directly, such councils shall administer and operate (our emphasis) such programs."

We find that the Ribicoff approach described here goes further than either S. 2003 or H.R. 1 toward providing meaningful local control. This Amendment could be strengthened by increasing from at least 25% to at least 60% the representation on its councils of parents whose children are presently in, or have in the preceeding five years been enrolled in, a day care program.

However, we urge that, in providing for the delivery of child care resources and services, the Committee give serious consideration to the locally controlled Child Development Councils mandated in S. 2007. These bodies will be composed of persons appointed by the chief executive of the Prime Sponsor unit and of consumer representatives. They will select local project sponsors and be held responsible for federal funding sources for proper conduct of programs.

2. Parental involvement

Increasingly, our Council has been impressed with the contributions which parents—particularly low-income parents—have made toward improving child care programs through their service in policy-making capacities. In addition, parents have made significant the contributions as program volunteers (especially in Headstart programs), as classroom aides, lunchroom helpers, etc., and as program staff members. Our Council itself has benefited enormously from the input of parents, who now serve on all Board committees and lend expertise and extra vitality to Council deliberations.

We certainly share the Committee's desire to provide services in as economical a manner as possible. Therefore it is important to note our experience that the involvement of parents in the entirety of the educational experience of their children generates dividends even beyond those accruing to the involved parents' own children. The children of participating parents experience firsthand the commitment to democratic participation and the intimate concern evidenced by their mothers and fathers. But additional ripples of benefit accrue to other family members and other community adults and children who now have a familiar model to emulate. The process is one of self-realization. Through involvement, parents also exercise latent skills, develop confidence, promote their sense of well-being. This process of enabling parents has resulted in numerous cases of the parent achieving economic self-sufficiency, and leaving behind the stigma of social dependency.

There is a further reason for parental involvement in day care. A synthesis is highly desirable between the insights of professionals and practitioners—and the wisdom, desires, and "mother-wit" of parents for the formulation of child care experience which is neither alien nor contradictory to the family's culture and life-style.

For these reasons, we value significant parent participation on economic, as well as educational, social and cultural grounds.

It is highly distressing, therefore, to encounter in S. 2003 only the requirements that parents have the opportunity from time to time, to meet and consult with staff on the development of the child, and to observe the child, from time to time, while he is receiving care.

By the same token, we see no purpose served by restricting membership on S. 2003's National Advisory Council of Child Care to no more than one individual representing the interests of child care recipients.

While H.R. 1 makes no provisions at all for involvement of parents in child care programs, Senator Ribicoff has provided in his Amendments for a strengthened parental role via a more influential role for Advisory Councils to the Child Care Corporation at the national, local, state and regional levels.

Again, however, a superior provision for parental participation is found in S. 2007. There, at the project level, a Project Policy Committee, consisting of a minimum of 50% of parents of children being served, wields approval power over project planning, operation, and evaluation. At the Prime Sponsor level, 50% of the Child Development Council membership is drawn from representatives of existing projects to be served. Here program consumers exercise a decisive influence over programmatic policy as well as the selection of project sponsors and constituencies to be served first.

3. Comprehensiveness of program

The fundamental reason for establishing child care programs needs to be identified again and again as the development of children as human beings. As a human being, a child has physical, social and emotional needs. A child needs and deserves a surrounding in which he can exercise his body, can play, can reflect, can socialize with other children. A child needs nutritious food and rest. A child deserves attention and remedy for any physical deficiencies. A child needs recognition and affection from adults as well as peers. A child deserves the opportunity to learn about the world around him, to have his attention called to events and everyday factors which influence how he fares in the future. A child will be called upon to discipline his faculties and develop skills in order to increase his capacity to function adequately and independently in the world.

It is the responsibility of those who have been entrusted with the care of children to identify and provide resources which can meet such needs as these for all of America's children. And this is what we mean by comprehensiveness of services.

Last winter, the Child Care Forum of the White House Conference on Children issued a call for a diverse national network of comprehensive developmental child care services. It warned against a monolithic day care institution for children, and the Council shares this concern. No one type of program is right for all children. Programs should be designed for the varying needs of different children rather than children being molded to fit available programs. Allowance should, therefore, be made for the establishment of a wide variety of programs including where appropriate, group day care, family care, and home care; evening care, 24-hour care and emergency care; and covering all age groups from infancy through school age.

However, all of these programs need to provide comprehensive services, including educational, nutritional, health and social services to assure each child the opportunity to grow and develop to his full potential.

The Council is currently studying the whole issue of federal day care standards, especially as this relates to assuring comprehensiveness of developmental services. A distinguished task force drawn from the Council's membership will report to the Board of Directors within the week. A carefully considered position will be issued by the Council shortly thereafter.

It will be a pleasure for us to share our findings with this Committee at that time, for we consider the matter of standards a very urgent one.

In the absence of the results of this Council study, it may be helpful nevertheless for me to comment briefly on what appears in both S. 2003 and H.R. 1 as the raison d'etre of child care—and which, from the Council's point of view—is a totally inadequate basis on which to establish a system of comprehensive developmental services. Both S. 2003 and H.R. 1 specify child care programs as a response to the need for parents to be drawn into the labor force. But there is a fundamental difference between creating a program as a social good for the benefit of children—and creating a program to free parents for labor force participation. The former treats children as ends in themselves. The latter treats children as a means to some other end. The latter needs to be rejected, however attractively it may be cast.

It is for this reason that the Council hopes this Committee will not waiver in the need to thoroughly re-think and re-write the conceptual basis on which it is proposing that Child Care Services are to be provided for the children of America.

To this point, the tone of our analysis has been critical, particularly of the child care sections of H.R. 1 and S. 2003. We have been critical on our judgment that the weak provisions for parent involvement and local control augur ill for quality, comprehensive programs.

On the positive side, we applaud the efforts of the sponsors and supporters of these legislative proposals to address the raw inadequacies of facilities and monies to finance child care. We support a maximum allocation of resources to meet children's needs, and commend the provisions of the Long bill, S. 2003, which provide loans for construction of facilities and operation of program. As the Committee has determined, previous efforts to encourage states to utilize federal funds to finance child care for past, present, and potential public welfare recipients have faltered because of the difficulties over raising the 25% non-federal share under Title IV–A. The importance of 100% financing federally under this title, as provided in S. 2003, cannot be understated. We propose that the Committee consider a synthesis of the desirable elements of the proposed legislation, amending Title IV–A of the present Social Security Act to provide 100% federal financing for past, present, and potential welfare recipients and mandate the Office of Child Development, HEW, to administer the programs utilizing the delivery mechanism established in S. 2007 for that purpose. This would serve to avoid duplication of responsibility within the government for child care program administration and would be consistent with the philosophy of the Administration in severing eligibility for welfare assistance from the provision of social services.

Subsidization of low-income families for child care expenses

Objection has been raised in the past to the charging of fees for child care for low-income families who require child care to accept employment. The Council supports the provision of child care services as a public, social utility whose cost must be shared by the entire community much as we now pay for essential police, fire and public school services, and certainly deems it inequitable that low-income people carry an extra financial burden for child care services.

Though the Council under present circumstances approves of subsidization of low-income families for child care expenditures—a welcome addition to the Long bill in principle—we have reservations about the practical applicability of the approach to subsidization included in the bill. Rather, a clear-cut statement that "the Secretary is authorized to meet the full cost of child care services for low-income families, those below the Lower Living Budget of the Bureau of Labor Statistics, to enable an adult member of such family to engage in employment" would be preferable to the existing proposed language. Such persons could simply be defined as eligible for coverage under the Title IV–A program.

Further, we commend the importance of the provision of free child care services for OFF participants during training and for one year following commencement of full-time employment, as proposed by Senator Ribicoff. And the sums authorized by Senator Ribicoff—up to $1.5 billion for planning and establishing new facilities ($100 million); evaluation, training of personnel; technical assistance and research and demonstration projects begins to approximate resources for quality programs.

Mr. Chairman, as you know, our organization has appeared before the Committee in the past to present our views on earlier child care proposals. Rather than repeat in toto points made earlier and considered in the formulation of the present proposals, I would like to summarize some views expressed in earlier testimony:

(1) In any child care bill, we prefer language which emphasizes the intent of providing (a) a strong education program geared to the age, ability, temperament, and interest of each child; (b) adequate nutrition; (c) health program and services where needed; (d) opportunity for social and emotional growth, including a balance between affection, control, and the joy of meeting new challenges; group experience, and, as appropriate time for solitude and internalization of ideas and experience; (e) opportunities for parent education, participation and involvement; (f) social services as needed by the child and his family; and (g) adequate continuing training of personnel.

(2) We view with favor provisions in the various legislative proposals to provide 100% federal payment of the costs of child care, including program planning, operation and evaluation; construction of facilities, provision of training and technical assistance; and research and demonstrative projects.

(3) We oppose requiring any mother of minor children to take work or training as a precondition to the receipt of welfare benefits, and oppose any mechanism which places her children in a care situation without her full consent. Mothers should be free to choose the appropriate type of care situation for their own children. In this respect provisions in the Opportunities For Families Section of H.R. 1 should be revised.

(4) H.R. 1 provides that care provided on a group or institutional basis for children attending school shall be provided through arrangement with appropriate local educational agency. We feel that day care for school age children should offer a variety of program options. The use of school facilities and the operation of programs through contract with local education agencies should be one of many alternate arrangements that might be made for this service. However to limit out-of-school group programs to education agencies would result in an extremely narrow base of operational potential. Voluntary social service agencies, community action programs, recreation departments, churches, libraries, and a variety of other community resources should be utilized in the planning and operation of programs that will meet the social, recreational, educational, and protective objectives of care for children 6–14 years of age during the time that they are out of school.

(5) In conjunction with the environmental conditions in which a child is raised, the Council remains concerned about the income provisions in H.R. 1. We strongly endorse the principle of a minimum income for all families and recommend that it be established at the level of the lower living standard of the Bureau of Labor Statistics—now $6960 for an urban family of four.

(6) With respect to services financed currently under Title IV of the Social Security Act, we support the exclusion of the provision of social services from the "statewideness" requirement, as proposed by Senator Ribicoff. The statewidness requirement not only disallows flexibility in meeting the varying needs of different locales within the state, but it has been a major hindrance to the development of new services. States can often find resources to meet pressing needs in specific areas, but are unable to provide services to all people throughout the state. The result is that the services are provided nowhere!

Finally, my organization commends you and your colleagues over the serious efforts you have exerted in the interest of our nation's children.

If we can assist you in any way, we stand available and eager.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois has the floor.

Mr. PERCY. I recognize the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object.

Mr. PERCY. Does the distinguished chairman of the committee want to speak first?

Mr. LONG. My impression is that the Senator is not the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois yielded to the Senator from Minnesota such time as he might consume.

Mr. LONG. Are we under controlled time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No.

Mr. LONG. Then, the Senator can yield for a question, or I would like to be recognized.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I have no objection at all to the distinguished chairman speaking.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is correct. The Senator from Illinois can only yield for a question without losing the floor, if the point is raised.

Mr. LONG. I make the point, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois can continue, but he cannot yield, except for a question.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a series of questions?

Mr. PERCY. Yes; I am happy to yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I ask the distinguished Senator from Illinois whether his amendment would provide $1.2 billion of fiscal relief of the States in the first year?

Mr. PERCY. No, it does not.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Fiscal relief to the States.

Mr. PERCY. My fiscal relief amendment will not cost $515.6 million for fiscal year 1972, as opposed to $1.2 billion for the Bellmon amendment.

Mr. RIBICOFF. As I understand the Percy amendment, it knocks out all of title IV and parts of title V. Is that not correct?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the Percy amendment, which includes the language of the Roth pilot program, also provides fiscal relief and requires maintenance of benefits at the January 1, 1971, level or any higher level?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the Percy fiscal relief amendment provides that once a State's costs reach 100 percent of the calendar 1971 level, the next 20 percent of cost would be borne by the Federal Government?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

I want to point out specifically that it does provide for a ceiling. In other words, we do not want to have the sky as the limit. The States have an incentive to hold the costs down, and that is why the 20-percent ceiling was put in.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the fiscal relief in the Roth-Long measure just pours 20 percent extra matching into the States to subsidize the AFDC mess?

Mr. PERCY. That is true. As a matter of fact, the States could use that money for things other than welfare. It provides for a 20 percent Federal reimbursement regardless of whether or not they need it.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true, also, that the 10 percent work bonus in the Finance Committee bill is left intact?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true that the proposal leaves much of the Finance Committee bill intact, in addition to the work bonus proviso?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Does not the Senator believe that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) exposed the weaknesses and the dangers in the bureau of child care now in the committee bill?

Mr. PERCY. Very grave weaknesses.

I might indicate that one of the original bills I introduced years ago was to provide construction money for day care centers.

I felt that when the distinguished Senator from Minnesota said that the Roth-Long measure destroyed the value of day care, he was certainly speaking for what my amendment was designed to correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true, also, that the Roth proposal would leave intact the weight subsidy and work bonus provisos of the committee bill?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. And the stringent child support and deserting fathers provision in the committee bill?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. So, instead of being a true pilot test, as in the Senator's amendment, we have some tests, to be sure, but at the same time freeze in many of the objectionable features of title IV of the committee's proposal.

Mr. PERCY. The Senator certainly has brought out exactly the thrust and intent of this amendment and what it is designed to correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true, as well, that the Roth proposal retains many of the repressive features of the Finance Committee version of H.R. 1?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not true, also, that the amendment of the Senator from Delaware, authorizing the so-called pilot program, provides no articulated goals to be tested?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No specific standards or safeguards?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No limitation on the number of States or individuals which may be involved in the test?

Mr. PERCY. You could take the whole State of New York, or the whole State of California.

Mr. RIBICOFF. No requirement for the pilot programs to be more than very generally related to the programs they are to test. Is that not correct?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Is it not also correct that the weight supplement portion of the Finance Committee's workfare program, which encourages employers not to upgrade hourly wages even to the minimum wage—and there is nothing to assist workers in the lowest paying jobs—still remains as part of the bill we are now considering?

Mr. PERCY. That is correct.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I thank the distinguished Senator for his understanding and his clear responses. Again I commend the Senator from Illinois for his deep concern in this problem.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment is a proposal to rewrite titles III, IV, and V as the Senator thinks they should be written. I would point out a number of things we would find objectionable to the Senator's proposal for titles IV and V. In the first place, the State welfare directors sent a group to discuss their problems with me some time ago, and they proposed a solution to it which is at the desk right now as the Long amendment to which the Roth amendment has been added. That provides that the Federal Government shall make a grant during the next 2 years of an additional 20 percent over and above what the Federal Government is providing the States with today for the cash welfare programs. By providing an additional 20 percent, they would have the relief they felt they needed to take care of the increases in their caseloads and to take care of the cost-of-living increases which occurred since that time.

The Senator's proposal would provide up to an additional 20 percent measured by the entire amount of Federal and State funds. So if the State puts up $100 million and the Federal Government puts up $100 million in matching funds, he would increase this by up to 20 percent of the overall.

It would, therefore, seem to me that instead we should give the welfare administrators what they are asking for, and they would be satisfied with that.

Further, we have heard a lot about the child care problem. I believe, as I recall, that I voted for the Mondale child development bill. The bill was vetoed by the President. That is not my fault. The President had his reasons which had to do with the fact that the bill would cost $2 billion at the beginning and then go up from there—some said as high as $20 billion. I do not know how high, but about $2 billion it would start out with.

I was aware of the administration's objection to it while the bill was on its way through the legislative mill. The point was whether it would cost too much and the administration did not feel they could afford it and that played a part in the veto, I am sure.

If we had enacted that bill for child care, the committee would not now be trying to provide more. We would be satisfied to drop out the child care provision in here. But we faced this situation: A lot of people would like to work but cannot find work because they cannot find anyone to take care of their children while they worked. So we said we would provide $800 million for child care as best we knew how, from the information available to us, from hearings we have held, and with the people who put together the Bureau that will assume responsibility for providing child care to working mothers or welfare mothers who want child care so that they can seek a job.

We provided $800 million. It had a chance of getting through for the reason that it is not a too ambitious figure. They sent to the President a bill that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) favored. We would think that perhaps with this lower figure we might be able to prevail.

The Senator is totally in error when he says there are no standards. We provided in the bill, and the Senator can turn to page 443 of the committee report and pages following and find that:

Under the committee bill, the Bureau may not require more adults than are needed to achieve a ratio of:

1. Eight children per adult, if child care is furnished in a home;

2. Ten children per adult if care is furnished in a child care center; and

3. 25 to 1 for recreational programs.

Although the Bureau may not require a lower number of children per adult, it may arrange for care in facilities with less children per adult.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD pages 443 through 446 of the committee report, describing the child care standards.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHILD CARE STANDARDS

Of the millions of children who are not cared for by their parents during the day, well under one million receive care in licensed child care facilities. One of the major goals of the committee bill is to insure that the facilities providing care under the Bureau's auspices meet national child care quality standards which are set forth in the bill.

Many persons have argued that State and local licensing requirements are all too often overly rigid and restrictive—to the point where instead of protecting children, they relegate them to unsupervised and unlicensed care, if indeed any care, while their parents work.

The committee bill includes standards requiring child care facilities to have adequate space, adequate staffing, and adequate health requirements. It avoids overly rigid requirements, in order to allow the Bureau the maximum amount of discretion in evaluating the suitability of an individual facility. The Bureau will have to assure the adequacy of each facility in the context of its location, the type of care provided by the facility, and the age group served by it.

To promote the healthy development of children, parents should be actively involved in their children's progress. The committee bill sets as a Federal standard the requirement that every child care facility provide the parents with an opportunity to meet and consult with the staff concerning the child's [illegible]nent, and an opportunity to observe the child while he is receiving care.

Under the committee bill, the Bureau may not require more adults than are needed to achieve a ratio of;

1. Eight children per adult, if child care is furnished in a home;

2. Ten children per adult if care is furnished in a child care center; and

3. 25 to 1 for recreational programs.

Although the Bureau may not require a lower number of children per adult, it may arrange for care in facilities with less children per adult.

To assure the physical safety of children, the bill requires that facilities (other than homes) must meet the life safety code of the National Fire Protection Association. Homes in which child care is provided must meet requirements adopted by the local area that are applicable to general residential occupancy. This will provide protection for those many children today who are being cared for in unlicensed facilities, the safety of which is unknown.

One of the major administrative tasks of the Bureau will be the monitoring of child care facilities to insure that they meet the Federal standards. The committee bill requires the Bureau to establish an Office of Program Evaluation and Auditing to fulfill this function. Unfortunately, experience under the medicare and medicaid programs has shown that some individuals will abuse Federal programs for personal gain. It will be the job of the Office of Program Evaluation and Auditing to do their utmost to prevent this from happening.

In other provisions of the bill, penalties would be set for fraud or misrepresentation concerning the conditions and operation of a health care facility in order to be certified for participation under the medicare or medicaid programs. The penalty was set at imprisonment for up to 6 months, or a fine of up to $2,000, or both. To discourage individuals from fraud or misrepresentation concerning a child care facility, a similar penalty is included in the committee bill with respect to child care facilites. In addition, the facility involved will be ineligible to participate in any federally funded or assisted child care program for 2 years following conviction.

Any facility in which child care was provided by the Bureau, whether directly or under contract, would have to meet the Federal standards in the law, but it would not be subject to any licensing or other requirements imposed by States or localities. If any individual, group, State, or locality feels that the fire and safety standards are less protective of the welfare of children than those imposed by State and local ordinances, a hearing procedure is provided.

Requiring facilities to meet only the Federal standards will make it possible for many groups and organizations to establish child care facilities under contract with the Bureau where they cannot now do so because of overly rigid State and local requirements. From the standpoint of the group or individual wishing to establish the facility, this provision would end an administrative nightmare. Today, it can take months to obtain a license for even a perfect child care facility, by the time clearance is obtained from agency after agency at the local level. Under the bill, persons and groups wishing to establish a child care facility would be able to obtain technical assistance from the Bureau; they would have to meet the Federal standards and they would have to be willing to accept children whose fees were partially or wholly paid from Federal funds, in order to contract with the Bureau.

CHILD CARE AND EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION

An emotional and controversial issue frequently raised in the discussion of child care concerns the position taken by some persons that all child care should provide an early childhood education experience. Without being too specific about the nature of this experience (for example, the Federal interagency day care requirements only state that "the daily activities for each child in the facility must be designed to influence a positive concept of self and motivation, and to enhance his social, cognitive, and communication skills"), early childhood education advocates contrast it with "mere custodial care" that is, care like that provided by mothers in their own home to their own children.

Effectiveness of early childhood educational programs.—Though advocates of early childhood education programs cite the immediate intellectual gains children realize as a result of their participation, evaluations of the programs have been virtually unanimous in agreeing that the gains are short-lived. For example, in a summary of recent research on early childhood development issued by the National Institute of Mental Health in 1970, the authors noted the "consistent findings of a dropoff of the gains achieved in the short-term programs when these programs are terminated. . . . Almost all the studies in the literature show a decline in performance after the short-term programs are ended for the children. . . . The evidence is fairly clear that the gains of programs that are of a short term are gains that fail to last. . . . There is no evidence . . . that pre-school instruction has lasting effects upon mental growth and development."

In an article entitled "The Environmental Mystique" that appeared in the magazine Childhood Education in 1970, Dr. Edward Zigler, Director of the Office of Child Development in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, stated:

"Learning is an inherent feature of being a human being. The only meaningful question, therefore, is not "Why do children learn?" but, "Why is it that some children do not learn?" Approached in this way, the problem is not one of getting intelligence into nonlearners but rather of determining the conditions and attitudes that interfere with the natural process of learning. We are all aware that children learned before cognitive theorists told us how and before the invention of talking typewriters. Indeed, children learned before schools of any sort existed. How could this learning have been possible without the formal programing of experiences which we have come to associate with the formal educational process? The answer, I think, is that in his natural state the child is a much more autonomous learner than adherents of the pressure-cooker approach woud believe. I am convinced the child does most of his learning on his own and often the way to maximize it is simply to let him alone. He accomplishes some of the most significant learning in his every day interaction with his environment. Learning for the child is, thus, a continuous process and not one limited to the formal instruction and whizbang remedial efforts that have recently captured our attention. . . . Whatever the nature of cognitive development has been overemphasized in our current society."

Thus it has been repeatedly found that by the third or fourth grade there is no difference between children who have had preschool educational experience and those who have not. Professor Carl Bereiter, who has devoted his career to the education of young children, drew the following conclusion in a paper presented at Johns Hopkins last year:

"It appears that the main thing wrong with day care is that there is not enough of it and the main reason there is not enough of it is that it costs too much. At the same time, those who are professionally dedicated to advancing day care seem to be pressing continually to make it more costly by setting certification requirements for day care workers and by insisting that day care should be educational and not just high-quality institutionalized babysitting.

". . . Producing a measurable educational effect in young children is far from easy; . . . it requires as serious a commitment to curriculum and teaching as does education in older children. I cannot imagine day care centers on a mass basis carrying out educational programs of the kind needed to produce measurable effect. If they cannot do so then it will prove in the long run a tactical blunder to keep insisting that day care must be educational. Sooner or later those who pay for it will begin demanding to see evidence that educational benefits are being produced, and the evidence will not come forth.

"It would seem to me much wiser to seek no more from day care than the sort of high quality custodial care that a child would receive in a well-run home, and to seek ways to achieve this level of care at a cost that would make it reasonable to provide it to all those who need it. One should not have to justify day care on grounds that it will make children do better in school any more than one should have to justify a hot lunch program that way."

Educational services for school-age children.—It is anticipated that most of the children receiving child care under the guaranteed employment program in the committee bill will be children who are in school most of the hours of the day for nine months of the year, and who will require supervision only during the hours they are not in school and during vacation periods. There appears to be no reason to require that educational services be provided to a child who already spends six hours a day in school.

In testimony before the Finance Committee, Dr. Zigler stated that for $80 a year per child an enrichment program could be provided for children receiving child care in family day care homes. Another approach suggested would have children receiving care in family child care homes go to a child care center several times during the week for a more educationally oriented experience at a much lower cost than if they spent full time in the day care center. Thus it should be possible with some imagination to enrich the experience of children who receive care in a home setting while at the same time not adding prohibitively to the cost of child care.

Committee bill.—In view of the considerations discussed above, the committee bill does not require that all child care arranged for by the Bureau of Child Care be educational in nature, nor does it require a formal educational component. However, in arranging for a child's care the Bureau would first have to see if a place is available under a child development program under other legislation if the parent prefers this type of care. Furthermore, educationally oriented child care could be arranged for by the Bureau if fees are available to pay for this kind of care.

Any educationally oriented child care arranged for by the Bureau would have to meet any applicable State or local educational standards, in keeping with the general philosophy of State and local control over education.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, there is a great deal of detailed language spelled out in the committee report. One point that strikes me particularly about the Senator's statement is that he says we do not require that we go by State fire hazards or State fire codes. That has been one of the big problems. Some of the local groups have provided standards for fire hazards and matters of that kind, building code standards, and so forth, that cannot be met. So that we have some antiquated standards on the one hand and standards put there because the manufacturers of a particular product lobbied to get State and local governing bodies to put their particular proposal into effect, and in many cases people cannot provide the child care because of completely unrealistic building code requirements.

In order that this could be made available to everyone, we said that in the case of facilities that are not homes, they must meet the standards of the Life Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association, 21st edition, 1967, would provide.

So as far as we know, if we are willing to adopt a uniform code that everyone will meet in providing for fire safety for day care centers, that is as good as any. If anyone knows of anything better, I would like to know about it. We would be willing to consider it.

This is the same Life Safety Code we require that nursing homes meet. I point out that the fire standard we provide for nursing homes is where patients are not ambulatory so that if this is a safe enough standard for them, where they are not able to get out of bed and move around, it should be safe enough to provide for child care centers where children are able to move about under their own power under the guidance of someone, if something of that sort should develop.

So these things have been considered. It has been suggested by some that because of the cutback in the social services programs, that was a part of the revenue-sharing bill, there is not adequate money for child care.

It is sort of hard to satisfy some of our liberal friends, coming or going. They complain on the one hand that we do not provide enough money for child care and then, when we do provide it, they take us to task because the safety codes we provide are only those of national standards required for nursing homes, where the patients are bedridden and cannot get out and walk under their own power.

It is sort of hard to satisfy all of the demands they impose on us. I would be happy for the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to provide child care for all these working mothers, for all these welfare mothers who would like to seek jobs so that they can have it. We did provide that this child care would be in addition to child care that working mothers would be provided and what other facilities could be made available by these other programs. I regret the Senator from Minnesota and those who join in him are not able to work out a bill and get together with the President to provide adequate child care for these welfare mothers or these working mothers.

But since they were not able to do it, we found ourselves with the burden of trying to provide child care for people who would like to work.

There are good provisions in this bill that the Senator would seek to strike. For example, his proposal would strike the child support requirement in the bill. I have grave difficulty in believing that he is being urged to do that by this administration, because even Mr. Richardson and Mr. Veneman and all those in the administration who spoke to us took the view with respect to every one of these provisions that they would recommend that these fathers ought to be required to support their children. They are now seeking to duck that responsibility.

We ought to pursue them across State boundaries, and the Federal authorities ought to try to help in this matter.

We have yet to find the first objection to this. Those representing the administration said that anything we wanted to do along that line, they would recommend. It seems strange that those who would agree with the Department of HEW keep trying to strike these provisions where we would encourage the district attorneys and the U.S. attorneys to get these fathers to support their children.

This is about the third effort that has been made now to strike the provision in the bill that would catch these runaway fathers and make them do their duty.

I do not know why the Senator and those who do not like the committee's handiwork keep trying to strike out the child support provisions.

We had the overwhelming endorsement of all women's organizations interested in the matter. When they saw that we had provided in our bill an effective way to make these fathers support their children and give the mothers lawyers, at Government expense if need be, and pursue them at Government expense wherever we had to and make them pay for the support of their children, even if they were Federal employees, or make them pay something for the support of their children, as far as I know, every organization representing women supported the proposition.

I do not know why the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) wants to strike it. The senior Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) wants to strike it. The junior Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON) wants to strike it. We cannot find anyone in the Nixon administration or in HEW who will publicly admit that he is against child support, even though they have not offered us any direct suggestions as to how it could be done. However, they have indicated that if we wanted to do something about it, they would go along with it.

The Senator would strike the child support provision.

I come now to the provision having to do with people working at low-paid jobs. In our bill we do not in any way modify the minimum wage law. We respect the jurisdiction of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare. However, the law permits people to pay less than a minimum wage in a great number of situations. One example is when a person goes to work in a home as a domestic. That employment is not covered by the minimum wage, and the wage that person might receive might be only $1 or $1.50. A person might be able to make a little money to help increase the family income by taking a babysitter's job so that a workingman and his wife may go out for a night and enjoy themselves and leave their children in the care of someone they could trust.

If they take such a job, that is not covered by the minimum wage. If it happens to be a welfare mother who is trying to do what she can to aid her little family, and she goes into the home of a working family and babysits for 6 hours while that man and wife go out for an evening's entertainment, and she makes $1 or $1.50 or $1.20 an hour—to gear it in with the present minimum wage—I do not know why our friends are against our paying an additional 30-cents-an-hour increase in the income of that welfare mother who takes her children with her and does some babysitting to help earn money for her family.

Here are some other situations where a working mother could be expected to earn some money that is not covered by the minimum wage: recreation aide, swimming pool attendant, park service worker, environmental control agent, sanitation agent, library assistant, police agent, fire department assistant, social service aide, family planning aide, child care assistant, consumer protection aide, caretaker, home for the aged, work in the agricultural pursuits: jobs picking, grading, sorting, or grading crops; fertilizing, and other preparatory work; milking cows; caring for livestock.

In small retail stores: sales clerk, cashier, cleanup man.

In small service establishments: beautician assistant, waiter, waitress, busboy, cashier, cook, porter, chambermaid, counterman.

In domestic service: gardener, handyman, cook, household aide, child attendant, attendant for aged or disabled person.

When people take any one of those jobs, just going into a home where there is an aged person and helping to cook and helping with some of the housework, if the person doing that is comes off welfare, what is wrong with the Federal Government subsidizing or supplementing the income that such a person can make in that way? Is it not better to add something to what they might make, than keeping them on welfare?

Mr. President, it makes better sense to me. And if we do it the way the committee suggested, when that person goes to work and makes some money by helping to look after some person in the old folks home, for example, it is to their advantage to report it so that we can add something to it for their benefit. However, proposals are made to strike that out of the bill. They would like to have it so that when a person goes to help grandpa or grandma cook the food and pass the time of the day with grandpa or grandma, the person would be encouraged to be a cheater, because every time that person would make a dollar, Uncle Sam would reach in and take 60 cents away from him. That is the approach they recommend. Under this amendment, as a matter of fact, if a man makes over $30, Uncle Sam would take 67 percent of that money away from him.

Mr. President, that makes people want not to report their income. We on the committee propose to encourage people to do the honest thing rather than to encourage them to do the dishonest thing. We say, "If you get a job cooking, as a maid, a library assistant, or a swimming pool attendant, tell us about what you made and we will add something to it." What is cruel or oppressive about this? The only thing I can find about it—and that is not objectionable—is that it tends to defeat this silly system under which we encourage people not to report their income and we put them on welfare. We on the committee would encourage them to be honest people and reward them for doing this.

It is just the opposite approach. It is a divergent point of view. If we want to encourage the people of this Nation to be honorable and reward them for hard work, we should agree with the committee proposal. We do not want to encourage them to get on the welfare rolls and not tell us that they are working.

Do we want to move in that direction, or do we want to do the things that are right? Furthermore, we on the committee would provide a tax advantage to a businessman who hires someone who is on welfare.

Let us analyze this for a moment. Here is a businessman who is in a position to hire someone at a job which pays the minimum wage or better.

He has two people available to him. One of them has four or five children to support, and that person is on welfare because he does not have a job. The other person does not have any children to support. If you want to help the little children and you would like for that family to get off welfare and help papa or mama get a job so they can earn their way rather than be on welfare, you would hire that man. They would strike the provision to encourage those people to hire the poor person on welfare who has children to support. We must recognize that these people on welfare, for the most part, do not have skills, training, or work experience. You need to give someone an advantage or some incentive to hire this poor fellow or lady who does not have the skill, the experience, or the training.

That person must be helped to get off of welfare and into workfare. But they would strike that provision. I do not know why.

Put all these people on welfare and then when they go to work, take two-thirds or 60 percent out of their checks, which encourages them to work and not report their income.

It is not right for people to talk about welfare reform when they encourage people by the tens of millions and provide them with the incentive to do the wrong thing, when we could just as well take the same amount of money to encourage people to do the right thing.

The Percy amendment would cost more money in fiscal relief than we are proposing. It would prevent the Senate——

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, would the Senator clarify that statement? I want to be sure I heard it correctly. My fiscal relief amendment would be more costly? As I understand the Bellmon amendment the cost would be $1.2 billion, against $515 million for the Percy amendment.

Mr. LONG. The Senator's proposal would be permanent legislation and it may be after a couple of years that they will not need this big increase. For example, starting in 1974 the provisions we have in this bill would take virtually all aged people out of poverty, and a State would either need to have no program for the aged or they would need very little. After all, when a businessman is provided a tax advantage in terms of investment tax credit, the cost to us is $2.5 billion. I voted for that and so did the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. Would the Senator yield for a clarification?

Mr. LONG. I will in just a moment. When we provided a businessman, not for his advantage but for the good of the country, a 7-percent investment tax credit, it will cost us $3 billion a year and more in future years to do that, to encourage a man to buy new machinery, because it provides new employment.

It will not cost that much to give that same businessman a tax advantage to hire a person on welfare rather than to hire a person who would not need to apply for welfare assistance.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. I am very pleased that the distinguished chairman raised this point of open-ended fiscal relief because it gives me the opportunity to clarify this point. Because, as the distinguished Senator from Utah thoughtfully said on this floor, try to be fiscally conservative in every way I can. In this amendment I have limited my fiscal relief provisions to fiscal 1972 and 1973.

So I ask the question again. In view of the fact that the Bellmon amendment costs $1.2 billion in the first year, and more in the second, and the Percy amendment costs $515.6 million the first year, and $704.5 million in the second year, can it not be said that the Percy amendment is more fiscally sound and less costly than the Bellmon amendment, which has been accepted?

Mr. LONG. The Bellmon amendment has not be voted on at this point. I hope it will.

Mr. PERCY. I accept something as tantamount to being accepted if the chairman expresses himself and says that it will be accepted. But I want a clarification here now that the Percy amendment is far less expensive than the Bellmon amendment.

Mr. LONG. It might be somewhat less expensive.

Mr. PERCY. Somewhat? $515 million as opposed to $1.2 billion?

Mr. LONG. I was informed, and if the information I was given was wrong I stand corrected, but I was informed it went on indefinitely in the future.

Mr. PERCY. That is not true.

Mr. LONG. Then, my understanding is, and what I am posing here, would cost $1.2 billion in fiscal 1973, and it would be about $1 billion in fiscal 1974. That is what the welfare administrators came to me asking for. This does at least have the advantage of encouraging them to economize on their own systems because if they can save some money this would be something they could be use as they felt it should be used. I would think between the two figures in this regard I would rather go to conference with what they are asking for, and if we find what they are asking for is too much we could go to the figure the Senator is suggesting, rather than to go with the Senator's figure and find that is not adequate. I think what the Senator wants to do in this respect is pretty much or about the same thing that I want to do.

But I cannot agree to these proposals to strike out things in this bill we think would do a great deal to help the poor, when we want to help them. With regard to the test proposals the Senator made, it was the thought of the Senator from Louisiana that the Secretary of HEW should try to work out his test for the family assistance plan in a fashion that the Ways and Means Committee would agree that would be a fair test because they recommended the family assistance plan to us.

Mr. PERCY. Will the Senator yield for a brief comment?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. PERCY. I accept absolutely the Senator's statement that he wants to help those people on public welfare who really need it, for whom there is no alternative, and he does not want to see them discriminated against when they have no other way to maintain themselves.

But certainly the Bellmon amendment does not protect welfare recipients from benefit reductions. It is for that reason States are required and should be required to maintain benefit levels when we provide this kind of relief to them. We are not trying to have another disguised revenue sharing bill. We are not trying to provide additional funds so that they can use it for whatever expenditures they want.

It should not be looked upon and regarded by the States as another way of having revenue sharing.

I really feel the Bellmon amendment is far too expensive. I cannot imagine how a conservative can support it, when it provides a flat 20-percent Federal reimbursement regardless of need for every single State in the Union.

Mr. LONG. In the first place, we do not think there should be a maintenance-of-effort requirement here, for many reasons. The Senator is trying to strike the child-support requirement, but we feel that by providing that requirement, a State will reduce its caseload at least by 15 percent, and we think it possible to reduce it by more than that. By the requirement we have provided that fathers must support their children, and by providing incentives for district attorneys to prosecute fathers who are denying their responsibility toward their children or escaping them, and by requiring that U.S. attorneys participate in those efforts, it is our judgment that where this has been done it results in about a 15-percent saving. We think the saving would be that much.

If a State is going to save that much, I do not see why we should require the money to be spent, when the whole purpose is to make the father do his duty.

We have provisions in his bill which provide that where a father is not paying for the support of his children, his check can be garnished. Even though he may be working for the Federal Government, his check can be garnished. In other words, we propose to reach across State boundaries to get those people, even though they may be Government employees, and make them pay for the support of their children and their families.

When the welfare rolls can be reduced in that fashion, there should not be a maintenance of effort requirement to make them spend more.

In the State of Nevada, to give an example, where somebody made an effort to purge the rolls of people who did not belong there, that Governor reduced the welfare rolls by about 20 percent and he also reduced payments to the extent that over 50 percent of those people who were being paid too much because they were not reporting income that was available to them.

After the welfare rights people and others fought it and made the State go through hearings and different delays, and one thing and another, the Governor reported that, after having been forced to go through hearings, the expense came to just about the same magnitude.

Governor Reagan reported that he had had significant success in reducing the welfare rolls by eliminating people who are not eligible and by requiring fathers to be honest toward their families and by trying to make people work.

By the Roth amendment, which the Senator is seeking to resist, for example, New York State and California would be permitted to do things which they have been seeking to do and have had some success in doing, and that is requiring some of these people to work for their welfare money. By doing that, they will be able to reduce their welfare rolls, because welfare will not be that much more attractive than working.

If we followed that principle, Governor Rockefeller would like to do it, and so would Governor Reagan. If they do it, they are going to reduce their costs of welfare. Why is the Senator going to make them spend more money?

One of the biggest justifications for getting them to spend money is the argument, "Go ahead and waste the money. Put people on who do not belong on the rolls. Do not be strict about the rolls. Let them have the run of it and let them have their say, because, in the last analysis, Uncle Sam pays 50 percent or Uncle Sam pays a great deal of it. Therefore, just go ahead and pour the money down the rat hole."

A while back we had the story of what happened, under the maintenance of effort position, in Missouri, which was locked into a situation in which it was in fiscal straits. The officials asked for relief from the maintenance of effort requirement, and we finally got it for them. Some of the bureaucrats had objections, but we finally got relief for them. A State ought to be encouraged to save money.

I would have proposed—and it would be no longer in the bill because of its being stricken by the amendment—that in the future we should not pay money on an open-ended basis to the States, because it does not encourage economy; that we provide cash amounts, so that if a State found its money was being wasted and it tended to find ways to eliminate that waste, and eliminated from the rolls people who should not be on the rolls, the State would benefit in that way and at the State budget level, and those people would have the incentive to take ineligible people off their rolls. That provision would be eliminated, because they would be forced to spend the money even though they might not think it necessary.

For those reasons, I do not think the proposal should be agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I would like to respond. Then I shall be very happy to yield to my distinguished colleague to cover the day care portion.

I have been very sympathetic with the Finance Committee, with its chairman, and with the ranking Republican member on the Finance Committee in trying to do everything we conceivably can to get at the problem of welfare deadbeats. There is no one that I know of who would in good conscience vote to provide money for people who are abrogating their responsibility, who are refusing to work, who are refusing the training and education necessary to provide them with skilled job opportunities. Certainly, to the extent that we are going after legitimate welfare deadbeats, I sympathize with the committee and will cooperate with it.

We know also that there is a certain amount of fraud. We do not know exactly how much. It is like the old adage about advertisements—"half of the money is wasted." It is true of General Motors, and it is true of other big corporations. The problem is, Which half? They try to cut out expenses which provide the least return on investment. We try to provide welfare systems that cut out as much fraud as is possible. Very often fraud is due to the administrative setup. There are not a sufficient number of caseworkers. They are inundated with paperwork and do not have time to provide the necessary services. That is why we have excessive costs.

We all agree that we want to do something in this area. As to fathers who want to escape responsibility, every reasonable effort should be taken to find them, but I maintain that while we are looking for the fathers, we cannot penalize the children. They are, after all, innocent. They are going to be the welfare recipients of the future, and they are going to be on welfare the rest of their lives unless they have adequate care at this time.

So while we are looking for the deadbeats, we should not be punishing those who need help.

Those are factors on which we do not disagree at all. We just disagree on whether this fraud is the overwhelming pattern or whether it is a exception to the rule. One can say that all business is corrupt, or he can say that all labor unions are corrupt, but we are probably talking about a 3- to 5-percent factor. Survey after survey has been conducted to ascertain whether welfare recipients are just a bunch of deadbeats. The findings have shown that to be false. We have to have an understanding on this point.

As far as fiscal relief is concerned, I only ask my distinguished colleague, is it not only fair to require States to maintain benefit levels if they are to receive additional Federal help?

As we establish a fiscal relief program, should we not prevent States from further reducing their present benefit levels which are already low? The State of Connecticut is the only State in the Union to provide a benefit level that is higher than the poverty level.

I am sure that the distinguished Senator, when he indicates his compassion for the poor—and his record through the years has evidenced that, time after time—would want that kind of a safety valve feature in a fiscal relief measure. The Percy amendment provides that safety valve, and the Bellmon amendment simply does not provide it.

I am not offering another revenue-sharing bill here. We do not need to provide, under a welfare bill, money to States that do not need it.

I do feel it is quite necessary to set it right. As far as I am concerned, I believe my colleague, the chairman of the Finance Committee, agrees with many of my feelings on this. We all have compassion for the needs of the elderly, especially the elderly poor. There are 5 million impoverished people 65 and over in this country. There is no stigma to being poor, particularly when you are old and poor and there is no way for you to get a job. And it is not a crime to be poor. But it is a crime when a society with the means of our society does not make provisions to care adequately for its low-income poor.

The Percy amendment is designed to provide some relief for that type of situation, and it is far less costly than the Bellmon amendment. I feel that the direction we are taking is the right direction, and I would urge the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee to let us vote this amendment up or down. And I would hope that it would receive his support because it embodies a principle which he has supported time after time on this floor. He agrees with the principle of fiscal relief. This is one of the few opportunities we have to provide the fiscal relief that I think the States need in this respect.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PERCY. I am happy to yield.

Mr. CHILES. I understood the Senator, in his colloquy with the chairman of the Committee on Finance awhile ago, talking about the Bellmon amendment, which would cost $1.2 billion and to say that the Percy amendment would cost roughly $500 million. Would the Senator explain to the Senator from Florida why the Bellmon amendment is more expensive, and where the additional cost comes in?

Mr. PERCY. The Bellmon amendment costs more because it would provide States with a flat 20-percent Federal reimbursement over their fiscal 1972 welfare expenditures. My amendment, on the other hand, would provide States with up to a 20-percent Federal reimbursement, based on the States increases in welfare expenditures over and above what they spent in fiscal 1971.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, let me explain this in a slightly different way, so that the Senator from Florida can understand it.

The idea is that some States, such as Illinois, find themselves in a financial tight spot, and other States have managed their programs so that they are not in the same financial difficulty. The Percy amendment would save money by providing it to the States that are in the financial bind, and not make money available to the States which are not in the financial bind. It would provide money to Illinois because Illinois is in a tight situation at the moment. If Florida is not in that kind of situation, Florida would not get anything.

The welfare administrators of this country did not think something of that sort should be agreed to by the Senate, for the simple reason that they do not see why Senators who come from States which have policed their programs so as to stay within cost should have to have their people pay taxes to send their money to States which have not kept their programs within cost, so that States which have let their programs run out of bounds and become very costly would get a substantial amount of help, and those which have not done it would not receive help.

The proposal I am recommending to the Senate, which is a proposal that the welfare administrators have recommended to this Senator and that the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON) was recommending, is one which all welfare administrators think is fair, because it would treat all the States the same and say, "All right, we will provide 20 percent more Federal money to all the States," and that the State which has closely policed its program would get 20 percent more Federal money, and the State that has done the opposite would get 20 percent more as well.

That makes better sense. As far as the so-called maintenance of effort is concerned, the reason we are providing this money to the States is so they can provide the additional amounts that they want for additional benefits to their people, but if we provided some additional funds to help Florida, for example, and Florida did not want to raise their benefit level and did not want to expand the eligibility, I would assume that Florida would spend the Federal money in their program, and they might reprogram some of their State money to spend it on something else, where they thought it was needed more.

But I would think the Senator from Florida, the Senator from Louisiana, or a Senator from any State would be a little reluctant to provide additional money for Illinois, because Illinois let their program expand until it has them in financial difficulty, and deny his own State its proportionate amount of funds merely because his State has kept its program within the budget.

If we want to do justice among all the States, I would think we would treat them all alike and provide a flat, across-the-board increase for all, and that is what I suggested, because the welfare administrators suggested it to me.

The Senator has offered his proposal. It is not identical with the one he suggested before, but the one thing they all had in common was that they took very good care of Illinois. Some of the proposals I have seen, as I recall the previous Percy amendments, would provide zero for Louisiana, but provide a great deal of money for Illinois. I do not see why Louisiana should be penalized because it has tried to keep its program within its estimated cost, any more than any other State ought to be penalized for that reason. It sems to me they ought to be treated the same.

Furthermore, let me say this: While there may be merit to some of the Senator's proposals of what he would seek to do here, this is a blunderbuss attack on this bill. This bill has incentives for people to go to work. They would be stricken. This bill has incentives for people to hire those who are on welfare. They would be stricken. This bill has strong, effective provisions to seek and require a father to support his children. They would be stricken. This bill has money for child care, and arrangements to provide for child care. That would be stricken.

Those things, Mr. President, should not be stricken in any such blunderbuss fashion as this. If they are to be changed, they ought to be changed by the Senate looking individually at each one of these individual items.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I wonder if the distinguished Senator from Florida, in response to his question, would really like some facts. Because I cannot accept the fact that in the State of Illinois, the State of Ohio, and the State of Indiana, all our problems are created by poor administration. We have one of the best administered programs in Illinois by any measurement test.

But let me just tell the Senator why we have these problems, and why we need fiscal assistance and help.

First of all, the State of Illinois pays, though the poverty level is around $4,000 for a family of four, $3,276 to a family of four. Contrast that with Alabama, which pays $972; Arkansas, $1,272; Mississippi, $720; and the State of Texas, which pays $1,776.

Let me give the figures as to what has happened in the way of migration into the State of Illinois—and these same figures are available for many other States in the Union that have been recipients of migration. Minnesota certainly has been the recipient of migrants from the South and other parts of the country where people cannot get a job. They cannot make do. The problem is that we in Illinois do provide, though not even at the poverty level, benefits at something closer to the poverty level than many other States.

In 1972, we had an increase in our welfare rolls of 770 families from the State of Mississippi. They came to Illinois in 1972 and went on the Illinois welfare rolls. From the State of Missouri, 682 families; from Puerto Rico, 474 families; from Tennessee, 361 families; from Arkansas, 302 families; from Texas, 209 families. In the most recent 12-month period, an average of 580 families a month were added to the Illinois welfare rolls after living there less than a year.

What should the State of Illinois do—put a barricade at the State entrance and say, "You can't come into the State"? We must receive these people. We must take them in. They use public transportation facilities. They come by bus or jalopy, by every means of transportation, and somehow the State has to provide for them. We are not going to let them starve.

That is why we have the problem. It is not the result of faulty administration. The administration is thorough and done under an able, tough Governor. It has been good administration under several Governors, Democratic and Republican, and the problem is the same. These are the facts. This is not fiction.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I can comment to the distinguished Senator from Illinois?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I have listened to the Senator from Illinois response to the Senator from Florida.

From long experience as a Governor and as Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and from following the problems of welfare, I know that the State of Illinois, for many years, under Democratic and Republican Governors, has always had one of the most able, imaginative, and best administered welfare programs in the United States. The State of Illinois was a bellwether State, where other States came to observe and tried to understand what the State of Illinios was trying to do.

The Senator from Illinois explanation of the situation in Illinois is correct, from my personal experience and knowledge; so it has nothing to do with misfeasance or bad management of the welfare program in the State of Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. I thank the Senator. He has had an overview that very few in the Senate have had.

Of all the States in the Union, only Connecticut provides a family of four with a benefit payment over the poverty level—$4,020.

No wonder, then, that its need for fiscal relief is greater than a State which, by its unconscionably low payments, drives people out of the State.

I have seen evidence that this is in other States.

I have seen evidence that this is true in other States. They would be willing to offer a one-way bus ticket to get people out of the State and shift their problem to the State of Illinois, the State of Florida, the State of Connecticut, whatever State it may be. I think that welfare is a national problem, not one that can be blamed on poor administration in Illinois or any other State.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the point about this matter is that the reason why the fiscal relief provisions cost less in the Percy amendment is that it is provided for the so-called needy States, and for the purpose of that amendment, Illinois is a needy State.

I do not know whether Florida would be a needy State, but Illinois would get $41 million of the $515 million that the Senator would provide. Because of the generous program they have in Illinois, the State finds itself in financial straits, so Illinois would get $41 million. Some States would get a great deal, and some would get nothing.

In Louisiana, if we are forced by a court decision to add people to the rolls that we did not think belonged there, we would perhaps have a cutback across the board in order to manage the budget, the increased caseload that the court pushed onto us. If you have done that and you are well within your budget, then you would not be a needy State.

Proceeding with that standard of need, some States—Illinois in particular—would receive a great deal of help and other States would not receive any help. I do not think that States that would appear not to be needy, just because they have carefully administered their program or have kept it within the amount of money they have appropriated and budgeted for their program, ought to be denied their share of the fiscal relief money, simply because they have prudently and carefully managed their program.

I can sympathize with Illinois and people who have migrated to that State. I point out that it is not the fault of this Senator, and it certainly is not the fault of the Finance Committee, that the courts have stricken down all the residency requirements. We have affirmatively provided by law that States could have residency requirements. As the Senator knows, the Supreme Court says we cannot authorize a State to have a residency requirement if it is imposed by the State.

When States such as New York and, to a lesser degree, Illinois have very high levels of benefits, they do attract people, and it creates a problem. That is one reason why I would urge that they do some of the things we ought to be doing here, to try to put some of these people to work, so that welfare would not be all that attractive.

I do not think the Senate would want to vote for a kind of relief that gives a great amount of advantage to some. I do not think the Senate would feel that, on the motion of a single Senator, we ought to let him strike all the provisions that provide incentives to go to work, or strike out all provisions that provide incentives for employers to hire people who otherwise would be on welfare, or strike out the provisions against which I have yet to hear the first argument—that U.S. attorneys and district attorneys ought to be encouraged to pursue runaway fathers; that we ought to have stronger laws to act against those fathers; that we ought to have the power to garnishee their income from the employer, so that when these fathers move from place to place, they can be pursued and made to do the honorable thing.

I do not see why those provisions should be stricken, but that is what the Senator would do with his instruction to recommit this matter to the committee and report back and to write the bill the way he would like us to write it.

I would hope that such suggestions Senators might make would be offered individually, if they wish, so that we could consider them on their own merits. But I do not think the Senate would want to proceed with the kind of blunderbuss attack the Senator makes.

Also, the Senator provides in his amendment that States cannot reduce payment levels. That is about the only way up to now that some States have been able to keep going at all or to defend themselves against completely unpredictable court decisions. For example, in Louisiana, when the court said we could not attribute the income of anyone living in the home to the family living there with him, they could not have any kind of a man in the house rule of any sort whatever, and could not have a residency requirement, the caseload in Louisiana at that point was increased 50 percent. How are we supposed to comply with the court decision if we cannot reduce the level of the payments? That is a problem created by the court decisions which so far as many were concerned was an error. But, after all, that is their function to rule on those things. Sometimes the States have to have the power to make reductions in order to continue to stay fiscally solven and comply with court decisions.

So that all these different things, the bunderbuss attack the Senator would make on the provisions in the Roth amendment, or in the committee bill, I would say, should not be agreed to. If he wants to come back and offer separate amendments, perhaps we could consider them better.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a clarification of one point? Did he not say that under the Percy amendment——

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, has not the Senator yielded the floor? I would like to seek recognition.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator had yielded the floor. The Chair will recognize the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES).

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I have been on the floor for about two and a half hours now trying to corner everyone I could corner, the staffs of committees, the staff of the Senator from Illinois, and everyone else I could find, to try to understand what the amendment of the Senator from Illinois does, what the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma is, and where we stand on this particular bill.

I can tell you, Mr. President, that I do not understand it now. I do not know whether anyone else in here understands it either. But I know that every other Senator who is off the floor does not understand it. What we are talking about and what the Senate thinks is whether we will adopt a pilot plan and, if so, what kind of pilot plan will we adopt.

I find that we are dealing with things well beyond the pilot plan, that we are dealing with the provision that the committee worked on, workfare, which a number of States had recommended support for. We are dealing with a provision of $500 million in one of them and $1.2 billion in another.

When we come in to vote on a motion to table or on an amendment, everyone will walk in that door thinking they are voting for a pilot plan, the Percy pilot plan as opposed to the Roth pilot plan. Certainly this is complicated. There are over a thousand pages in the bill. But when we are having this kind of debate in the closing hours of this session, dealing with $500 million or $1.2 billion and I cannot even find out from the staffs what they are, as they are not printed, and I cannot find out what they are, we begin to see how we are doing business here. It is ridiculous that we can come in here and cannot find out what is going on. We would think that we are going into this pilot plan and look at everything about it. Are we not going to pass on something in title IV, being a study. That is not true. All kinds of things in addition to a study are contemplated. All kinds of major changes in the present plan are contemplated in addition to the study.

Mr. President, I will bet that 80 percent of Senators do not understand that, and they do not understand what we are talking about and what you have been talking about, and what I have been trying to listen to. I wonder how many Senators on the floor right now understand it. Your staffs do not. I have been trying to talk to those to try to find out whether they understand it, what we are dealing with here, we are dealing with a major question of reform, but we are dealing with it in the 11th hour of this session, and we are dealing with it when we are talking and we cannot get anyone on the floor to understand it when we talk about dealing with pilot plans and then get off into a change of a major formula, and then providing money for the States—whether to give 20 percent to every State whether they need it or not, or 20 percent to such of those States who would like to get additional money, or whether they need it—either one of which I am not sure of. I have no way of trying to determine whether we are dealing with that kind of question when we think we are studying going into a pilot plan.

I walked outside a minute ago and I was approached by Common Cause, and the League of Women Voters, and they said they are supporting the Percy pilot plan, that they were for that pilot plan because they think it is a better pilot plan than the Roth pilot plan, but they do not know that this amendment changes the major cost factors. They did not understand that. They did not understand the Bellmon amendment, and that is one that will be adopted, yet we talk on the floor as though it were an existing part of the Roth plan already—tantamount to being accepted because we have discussed it. Yet I cannot find a copy of the Bellmon amendment. It has not been reduced to writing. Yet it is such an integral part of this debate, already assuming that the amendment is a part of the Roth amendment and has already been adopted.

Mr. President, this is a heck of a way to do business. This is a heck of a way to say that we are making headway with major reform in welfare, especially when we generally can pick up the newspaper and read that we have already decided to scrap title 4 and there is just going to be a study—a study of the workfare plan by the committee and the distinguished chairman, that there will be a study of the Ribicoff plan, and that there will be a study of the administration's plan.

I thought that was the direction in which we were going but I find that is not true. We are not talking about just a study, we are talking about adopting many major items that the committee had in relation to reform. Now we are talking about a change in the formula and how we will distribute the funds, but there will be one or two different amendments.

Senators will walk in that door and feel that they are voting either on a motion to table or this pending motion. They are no more going to understand the provisions in that than anything in the world.

The Senator from Louisiana said one valid thing and that is, he thinks that we should work on this in some kind of pieces, to try to determine, will we deal with a pilot plan, will we deal with a distribution of the formula, or will we deal with separate things? Are we going to say that we are adopting parts of a major reform as proposed by the committee in the workfare proposal, or are we talking about just a pilot study?

Mr. President, if you will tell me some of the ground rules, then I will make up my mind how I want to vote. I should like to be able to know what amendment I am voting on because I have to be responsible for my vote to the people of Florida. I cannot understand it now.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Florida will yield, I can answer that. I can answer it in 1 or 2 minutes. Because the States did not get welfare reform as scheduled, and because they did not get revenue sharing as originally scheduled, 22 Governors contacted me to say that they were in a fiscal crisis. I therefore put in an emergency welfare relief amendment, with White House agreement, which would hold harmless the States up to a maximum of 20 percent in welfare costs over their June 30, 1971, expenditures. Several reimbursements have been made to insure welfare cost control. At the same time, also, to protect the welfare recipient by requiring the States to maintain a benefit level as a condition to receiving the interim fiscal relief. Federal reimbursement under my amendment would be calculated strictly according to the welfare costs of the case needs of each State.

The HEW studies show that Florida would be eligible to receive $6.6 million for fiscal 1972, and $6.6 million for fiscal 1973.

I cannot tell the Senator how much the Bellmon amendment would provide for the State of Florida because those figures are not available for Florida, Illinois, or for any other State. But I can assert that the chairman's statement that the Percy amendment would not permit the State to reduce its welfare benefits is simply not accurate. Any State can reduce its welfare payments down to zero if it wants to under the Percy amendment. All that happens is that it is not eligible to receive the extra Federal relief payment which would make the whole half of the fiscal year 1972. So that is as clear and concise an explanation as I can give. It is very simple, and it is exactly what the amendment would do.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, that is very clear, but that is only one part of the Percy amendment. I want to know something else about the Percy amendment. I want to know about the reform. I want to know what it does with regard to child care. I want to know what it does with respect to striking the welfare portion of the bill. I want to know all about the amendment. The Senator has explained just a little part of the Percy amendment.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, in no more than 1 minute I can explain its other provisions.

Mr. President, if the Senator will yield me 1 minute, I might precisely explain the language.

My amendment knocks out title IV, the workfare plan. It accepts a work bonus and tax rebate for the elderly.

Second, it authorizes three pilot programs. No one program is allowed to test more than 100,000 participants.

That is as simple an explanation of the amendment as I can make. We do not have a great deal of time remaining. If the Senator from Florida would yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Minnesota, we could complete our total explanation and could get into the aspects which the chairman of the committee wants to discuss.

Mr. CHILES. I would be delighted to yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I have a good deal of sympathy with the points made by the Senator from Florida. I think that most of my colleagues when they voted on the Roth amendment felt that they were voting in effect on a series of pilot tests for the principles involved. They did not feel that they were establishing a major program on a permanent basis.

Embodied in the Roth amendment is the establishment of a massive, new program of child care which is different from the program adopted twice by an overwhelming margin in the U.S. Senate.

It would establish a totally federally controlled, permanent, massive, new agency in which the States and local communities would have no say whatsoever, in which the parents would have no say-so whatsoever. It would authorize in the first year $800 million and then such sums as necessary in following years. It is sort of like the old foreign aid. No one knows where it will end. It violates every principle that I have been able to determine to be essential for decent child care.

It is opposed by virtually every organization that has shown any interest in this matter in the whole Nation with respect to child care.

I think the cosponsors of the amendment—and I would suspect that many of our colleagues—may not have been aware of the fact that it was not a pilot program, but was a permanent, massive, new, and, I assume, a multimillion-dollar program which among other things could seriously tamper with families.

It is too bad that not every Senator is present when we discuss this matter. However, I have a great deal of sympathy with what the Senator says.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Minnesota that I feel a majority of the Senate felt when they were voting on the Roth amendment that they were voting on a test of the different proposals. Again, I think the same thing can be said when they come in to vote on this matter and on the motion to table. They will not understand what is in the amendment.

We are going back to try to take out the child care program. We are going back to try to take out some of the workfare proposals. We are changing the distribution monetary formula or trying to change it, and the Bellmon provision is coming behind it or in front of it.

We are dealing with all of these frustrations. It is a complicated issue to try to make a decision on one of these matters at a time. We did not hear the testimony or participate in the hearings. And I know how many hours the Finance Committee has worked. It is hard enough for me to try to decide these things one at a time. And when they throw them all in at once and when I do not know they are in here, it makes it twice as hard.

This is a deliberative body. We are not making our decision in the right way.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I want to compliment the Senator from Florida for throwing some light on the operations of the U.S. Senate. The Senator from Florida has pointed out very clearly that the U.S. Senate has been confused here today. The Senator from Florida has a just complaint.

The reason that the parliamentary situation developed this way is so that the Roth amendment would be voted on first for the exact purpose indicated by the Senator from Florida. Everyone thought we were going to pass a pilot program.

Everyone thought that if they voted for one pilot program they would have accomplished what they wanted.

What I tried to do this morning in the motion to recommit was to open up this bill to some sunshine, the sunshine that the Senator is trying to bring to bear on the processes of Government.

Under my amendment to recommit, we would have been in a position to debate and discuss each and every proposal and facet of title IV. This motion failed by a vote of 44 to 41.

Now we have voted for a proposal that is not a true pilot program. The public thinks that we will have a true pilot program. While I do not have much sympathy with the way the Administration has handled this whole welfare situation since its inception, I have the utmost sympathy for the Secretary of HEW when he tries to put into effect what was accomplished by the Roth amendment and the Roth vote.

The only thing that will bring order out of this confusion is the commonsense of WILBUR MILLS, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee when this bill gets to Conference.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I would like to point out to the Senator from Florida that the Senator from Delaware sent to every Member of the Senate on October 2 a letter explaining exactly what this amendment contains. I know that this is a complex situation. However, advance notice was given as to what was contained in the amendment. And of course, this morning when the so-called Roth amendment came up we outlined what was included. So an effort was made to notify everyone what was included in my proposal. It is only fair for everyone to recognize he was given the information. I realize time is limited and it is difficult to catch up with things, but it is not because those sponsoring the legislation did not put the Senate on notice.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, if I may comment briefly, I have the utmost respect for the Senator from Delaware. He was a constructive Member of the House and he is a most constructive Member of this body.

I tip my hat to the Senator from Delaware because no one has been as much in the forefront as he has in helping people understand the Federal bureaucracy. But I am sure that he will admit that no one this morning had the slightest idea that the amendment in the first degree that would be presented would be the Bellmon amendment to which your amendment was attached. The Senator did make clear what he intended to do with his amendment, but the Senate was not aware what the vehicle was.

It is not the fault of the Senator from Delaware, or the Senator from Louisiana, or me that there is poor attendance in the Senate when matters of such importance are discussed.

Here we are disposing of matters of grave import, affecting millions of people, and involving billions of dollars and confusion surrounds the issue. That is why I compliment the Senator from Florida. What he said today should be required reading for all of us.

Mr. CHILES. The concern of the Senator from Florida is that I am here voting and I do not understand what I am voting on. I think we are entitled to get to these questions before us in pieces so we can understand them and so that it will not be reported to be a pilot plan or one thing, when, in effect, it is another major issue the other way.

The amendment of the Senator from Illinois covers many items. It is said this is a pilot plan. The amendment of the Senator from Delaware certainly covered extensive items. I reiterate the thing I am interested in is trying to see if we can break these things down so that we know what we are voting on. If we are voting on a pilot plan we know that is what we are voting on, and if there is a difference in those plans, that we understand the difference, and if we are voting on workfare, we know that; and if it is on a permanent basis or a study basis, we will know that; we will know if we are creating a new agency for child care. All of those matters need to come before us issue by issue and that is the only way the Senate would be able to address itself to them and make a proper determination on the issues involved. This amendment fails to do that and I think the other amendment fails to do that.

Mr. MONDALE. The Senator's point is well taken. The Senate is supposed to handle these matters issue by issue. But regretfully, the Roth amendment was adopted in the nature of an amendment in the second degree so we have no way to modify it. It is true that the Senator from Delaware sent us a letter explaining this, but we thought when it was proposed we would have a chance to debate it and discuss critical items in the amendment, but it was put to us in the form of an amendment in the second degree and no amendments were in order. So all we have left is the Percy amendment, and I am deeply interested in that amendment. The Percy amendment preserves the status quo the question of child care, while the Roth amendment establishes a mammoth new agency dealing with child care, which I think violates every principle I have seen that makes sense in child care.

Mr. RIBICOFF. The difference is this. If the Percy amendment is tabled or defeated, then the Senator and all of us are stuck with the Roth amendment. If the Percy amendment prevails the entire subject matter is open for discussion and amendment. At that stage the Senator from Florida or any other Senator can introduce individual amendments and vote on every provision of title IV. But if the Percy amendment goes down or is tabled, these issues are closed to us. That is the situation that faces the Senate.

Mr. CHILES. What provision would keep the Percy amendment from being modified, and dealing with this subject matter by subject matter?

Mr. RIBICOFF. The Percy amendment to recommit with instructions puts the entire subject matter of welfare reform on the table before this body for amendment and for discussion. The Senator can discuss or amend any part of title IV.

At the present time the Senate has before it the Roth amendment which cannot be changed and will prevail if the Percy amendment is tabled. This will probably happen and that is why I say the only hope on this issue is the common sense of WILBUR MILLS in conference.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, those of us who serve on the Committee on Finance have been working on this bill for the better part of 3 years, and much of even the House language in this bill was written in the Committee on Finance during the previous Congress.

It was not the idea of the Senator from Louisiana that the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) should offer his proposed amendment to titles IV and V; but it was a subject he was privileged to offer. He wrote to every Senator and told them he was going to offer the amendment, so we had some idea what his amendment was going to be, and some of us had a chance to talk to him about it and say, "If you want to offer an amendment of that sort, I hope you will not want to strike from title IV and title V provisions which as far as we are able to determine not a man in the Senate has any objection to. And it would seem to us if you are concerned about the cost of something, you are concerned about the work program in this bill."

So the Senator drafted his proposal, which any Senator in this body, including the Senator from Florida, has a right to do. He did not try to fool the Senate or make any sort of end run on anybody. He wrote to every Senator in this body and said, "I am going to offer this amendment. Would you like to be a cosponsor. I hope you will vote for it."

The Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) had every right to do what he did. He proposed a substitute for the entire Roth amendment.

If that substitute had been agreed to, then that would not have been subject to amendment. We could not have amended it, because it was in the second degree.

If it was agreed to, we could not amend it; we could only vote up or down on that amendment.

Apparently the Senator from Connecticut saw nothing wrong about substituting an amendment for the other amendment, where his would not be subject to amendment, either before or after. He had every right to do it. I find no criticism in that.

Yesterday evening we were notified there was another amendment to be offered in the second degree, in the nature of a substitute for the Roth amendment. That was the Stevenson amendment. There appeared every prospect that the Roth amendment would not get to a vote; that every time, some Senator would call up his family assistance plan or other proposal, and they would write another substitute for the Roth amendment.

They do not have to do business that way. If the amendment were agreed to, they could amend the bill at the end of the bill. They could add an amendment which would read that "notwithstanding what appears elsewhere in the bill, thus and so shall be the case." They could offer a substitute for the entire bill even if it had become law. They could change the Roth amendment anyway they wanted to. But Senators have had their amendments voted on, either directly or on motions to put them aside, so we could vote on the Roth amendment.

So facing an interminable series of substitutes for the Roth amendment, the Senator from Louisiana offered an amendment, because, if we are going to strike out the work programs then the States are going to have to have fiscal relief that does not appear elsewere in the bill. That was not suggested by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), so I offered an amendment that would strike titles IV and V, well understanding he was going to offer an amendment in the second degree, so he would have a chance to have a vote on it.

I do not know why it should be thought that every Senator should have a chance to have a vote on his amendment except the Senator from Delaware. I guess the only reason for that is that he appears to have a majority, so it appears it is not going to come to a vote.

So when we faced a parliamentary situation where they could not vote on the amendment or offer an amendment to it, then those who are opposed to it started offering motions to recommit, to redraft the bill back to the way they want it. They have had this in common. Whereas we on the Finance Committee spent years working on what is in titles IV and V, individual Senators who are not even on the committee have moved to recommit and report back after striking out provisions that would pass by unanimous vote, save perhaps for themselves. I think they would even vote for provisions they were striking out.

I was led to believe that we were confronted with a situation where someone else would offer a substitute for titles IV and V, and having an amendment offered to that, it would be in the second degree and would not be subject to amendment.

I personally believe the Roth amendment should have come to a vote. That is why the Senator withdrew it, so he could offer it in the second degree. If it is not going to be done, we are going to have interminable motions to recommit or to write the bill according to what individual Senators think should be in it.

Mind you, Mr. President, motions to recomit are not being offered by the Senator from Delaware; he says, "Senator, here is my amendment. Here is what I am going to propose. Would you like to join as a cosponsor?"

The proposals made are not even in print. Take the Percy proposal. I was told, "Senator, you mean you cannot tell me anything about it?" Of course not. I did not see what was in there until the Senator from Illinois offered it. How could I know? I did not know, and neither did my staff.

Under the Percy amendment, Florida would receive $6 million. Under the formula I offered, which the State administrators agree is fair, how much would Florida get? $44 million.

Suppose Senators had voted for this when it was offered. Why could not we offer information on it? Because nobody told the committee staff or anybody else what it was all about. This would be a substitute for what the Senate would be committed to, where presumably it would not be changed, in which Florida, which the welfare administrators think it fair, including the Senator, would be getting $44 million, and under this proposal he would get $6 million. Nobody was informed about that proposal.

What I have proposed relates to how the money would be divided between the various States.

I think I understand the Roth amendment. What the amendment would do is strike from titles IV and V those provisions about which he has very serious doubts and feels should be tested. It is directed toward the item in the bill that the administration says would cost $4.1 billion. We do not think it would cost that much. We think it would cost about $2.6 billion. But he would strike that part of the amendment. He would also leave out the part which provides that benefits would not be paid to strikers. Generally speaking, he would keep these other provisions which would try to make a father do his duty toward his children.

I have yet to hear anybody stand here and make the first argument about what is wrong with our child support provision, which would seek to make a father do his duty toward his children and prosecute him for not doing it. Yet we have had a vote today on three motions whereby each Senator would, by his motion, rewrite titles IV and V, leaving that provision out.

That was also in the Percy motion today. It would rewrite titles IV and V and leave this section out.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator has informed the Senator from Florida on something. That is what I have been trying to get information on for 3 or 4 hours. For the first time I have been able to get a figure. I would like to check the figure. It was brought out that under one proposal, which is the Bellmon amendment, which has not been adopted here, but we talk like it has been adopted—and that is a little confusing to the Senator from Florida; I do not know how that works.

Mr. LONG. It is right at the desk.

Mr. CHILES. We assume it is already part of the Roth amendment when we talk about that.

Mr. LONG. I have never assumed it was, because I have never said that. I have stood on the floor and said that was the difference between the Roth proposal and my proposal. That was a part that was not stricken by the Roth proposal. After the vote on the Roth proposal, I stood up and said that the Senate ought to know that was my proposal and the Roth proposal did not substitute that part of it. I am sorry the Senator did not hear it, but if he reads the RECORD tomorrow, he will see it is there. I explained it to the Senate, because it is a very important item.

Mr. CHILES. It is very important, because in the discussion it was suggested that under the Roth proposal, Florida would get $44 million, and under the Percy amendment it would get $6 million.

Mr. LONG. This is what the welfare administrators recommend. I have been recommending it for more than a yaer.

They recommended that to relieve the situation for the remainder of this year and for next year, up until January 1974, the simplest way would be to provide a 20-percent increase in the Federal grants to the States.

It may be that Florida may not need all that money in that category of programs, and if so, if they want to spend it for social services, for example, they could spend it for that, or for whatever sort of things they want to spend it for, or they could reduce some of their State contribution, if they wanted to, and use the State money for something else.

Mr. CHILES. Again, the Senator from Florida would like to be able to face that test clearly, as to whether I want to go under one formula or the other, without feeling I am being influenced, in what I am going to do on child care, workfare, and all these other provisions all lumped together, because I would like to be able to determine how I want to vote on those others on their own merits, rather than with something that directly affects dollars to the State. Perhaps the Senator can add that as a sweetner or kicker and influence my vote on the other matters, but I do not think he should. I think I ought to be able to decide on each of those other items without having it all lumped together.

Mr. LONG. I can assure the Senator that as far as the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, I do not want to deny anyone the right to have a vote on anything in this bill that he is interested in. Insofar as the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, before we are through voting on this bill, the Senator will have that opportunity.

I noticed that the Nader people wrote something up very critical of the Finance Committee. They say we operate with no rules, or practically none.

Generally, the way this Senators tries to do business as committee chairman is to try to see that on everything we do, on every semicolon, every comma, every period, any member of the committee can have a vote on anything he wants to vote on, as many times as we want to vote, so that one member cannot bar another from having his item considered; so that no matter in what order we take the thing up, when we are through the thing we are voting on is not only what the majority wants, but so far as possible what everyone wants. And I am confident that by the time we get through with this measure, we will have done that.

But at the moment we are confronted with a blunderbuss proposition.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I think we are confronted with a second blunderbuss proposition. We have already been hit by one today, and this is a second one.

Mr. LONG. But the Senator can offer, if he wants to, an amendment which attempts to rewrite 100 pages of this bill. If he wants to do it, he has that privilege. That is what the Senator from Illinois has done. So now we have a proposal to rewrite it in a different fashion. I just hope that the Senate will see fit to let us vote on the Roth amendment, and then, having done so, proceed to do whatever the Senator wants done. Even if he wants to change it, it can be done; and I think I can show the Senator how to do it. All he needs is 51 votes to bring it about.

Mr. President, I move that the pending motion be laid on the table.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, before he does that, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the vote on the motion to lay on the table the pending motion, the Chair receive a message from the House of Representatives with respect to the President's veto message, and that the time in connection with the veto message then begin to run.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the pending motion to recommit and report back be laid on the table.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAVEL). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana to lay on the table the pending motion to recommit. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 49, nays 32, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State Public Assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the Long amendment as modified by the Roth amendment and ask that it be stated. For the benefit of my colleagues, I shall be very brief in the presentation of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment to the amendment, as follows:

H.R. 1

EMERGENCY FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

SEC. 560. Title XI of the Social Security Act (as amended by sections 221 (a), 241, 505, 542(10), and 512 of this Act) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"EMERGENCY FISCAL RELIEF FOR STATES

"SEC. 1180. (a) The Secretary shall, subject to subsection (c), pay to any State which has a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or Part A of title IV, of this Act, for each quarter beginning after June 30, 1971, through the quarter ending December 31, 1972, in addition to the amounts (if any) otherwise payable to such State under such title on account of expenditures as cash assistance, an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

(1) an amount equal to the lesser of—

"(A) the amount of the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under the State plan approved under such title or such part A (as the case may be), as cash assistance for such quarter (not counting any part of such expenditures which is in excess of the amount of the expenditures which would have been made as cash assistance under such plan if such plan had remained as it was in effect on June 30, 1971) or,

"(B) an amount equal to 120 per centum of the amount referred to in clause (2), over

"(2) an amount equal to 100 per centum of the non-Federal share of the total average quarterly expenditures, under such plan, as cash assistance during the 4-quarter period ending June 30, 1971.

"(b) For purposes of subsection (a), the non-Federal share of expenditures for any quarter under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, of this Act as cash assistance, referred to in subsection (a)(1), means the excess of—

(1) the total expenditures for such quarter under such plan as, respectively, (A) old-age assistance, (B) aid to the blind, (C) aid to the disabled, (D) aid to the aged, blind, or disabled, and (E) aid to families with dependent children, over

"(2) the amounts determined for such quarter for such State with respect to such expenditures under, respectively, sections 3, 1003, 1403, 1603, and 403 of this Act and (in the case of a plan approved under title I or X) under section 9 of the Act of April 19, 1950.

"(c) No payment under this section shall be made for any quarter to any State on account of expenditures, as cash assistance, under a State plan of such State if—

"(1) the standards, under the plan, for determining eligibility for, or the amount of, cash assistance to individuals under such plan have been so changed as to be less favorable, to all (or any substantial class or category) of the applicants for or recipients of such assistance under the plan, than the standards provided for such purpose under such plan as in effect on June 30, 1971, and

"(2) the amount of the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under such plan, as cash assistance for such quarter is less than 150 per centum of the non-Federal share of the expenditures, under the State plan, as cash assistance for the quarter ending June 30, 1971."

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, this amendment is the so-called Percy amendment, which has been discussed at great length over a period of many, many months. The administration clearly supports it, and they have just reaffirmed their commitment to me.

I believe the Senate will remember that when I first introduced the welfare fiscal relief measure last November 17 as an amendment to the Revenue Act of 1971 we had considerable debate at that time. At that time I agreed to withdraw the amendment, provided that it would be put on H.R. 1, and that it would then receive administration support.

The distinguished Senator from Louisiana, the chairman of the Finance Committee, at that time indicated he supported the amendment in principle for the States.

Such an amendment was absolutely necessary because we did not enact revenue sharing, as soon as planned, and we did not enact welfare reform, as planned, and the States were and are in a fiscal crisis.

Twenty-two governors contacted me, urging that I press for this amendment. So, at this time, to honor the commitments that were then made—and I am grateful to the administration for honoring its commitment—this amendment would eliminate the Bellmon amendment, which is a part of the Roth amendment—and provide this sorely needed fiscal relief. Mr. President, I am happy to yield for a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous-consent that there be a time limitation of not to exceed 20 minutes on this amendment, to be equally divided between Mr. PERCY and Mr. LONG.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

How much time does the Senator yield himself?

Mr. PERCY. I yield myself such time as I may require.

The pending amendment would cost a maximum of $515.6 million in fiscal year 1972 and a maximum of $704.5 million in fiscal year 1973.

The schedule of benefits, which would be received by the States, as provided to me by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, has been clearly laid out. As for the Bellmon amendment, its cost is estimated to be $1.2 billion just in the first year. I do not have an estimate for the second year.

We do not have any official breakdown of the Bellmon figures as to how it would affect the States.

But, on my amendment—and this is the reason why the administration specifically committed itself to support this amendment—I feel that we must provide Federal reimbursement to the States retroactive to fiscal 1972 for that portion of their welfare expenses that exceeded those in fiscal 1971 up to a maximum increase of 20 percent. That maximum ceiling of 20 percent is imposed so that the States could have every incentive to have tight controls over welfare costs.

Given the administration and Finance Committee support for fiscal relief last November, the States have gone ahead and incorporated their potential fiscal relief reimbursements in their welfare budgets. The administration, concerned with the financial plight of the States, included a $1 billion line item in its fiscal year 1973 budget request to allow States to borrow 1 month's welfare reimbursement from fiscal year 1973 funds for use in fiscal year 1972. According to HEW, all States, with the exception of only Kansas and Nebraska, have taken advantage of this advance funding position. And, in March 1973, all the States that have borrowed will have to pay back their debt.

In all fairness, we cannot leave the States holding the bag. We all owe the States an obligation to fulfill our commitments to them so that they can pay back what they have borrowed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The amendment which is pending, which I offered, and which was referred to as the Bellmon amendment, because it was introduced as separate legislation by the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), was a result of all the welfare departments of the Nation asking for a uniform basis which they think woull be fair to all the States to meet their welfare financial problems.

What it would do would be that for 1973 and for 1974, up until the States get big relief that they are going to get under the bill for the aged, where we in effect take the program for the aged off their hands and provide for the aged by a Federal program, which will give the States much relief, up to that time when they will get a big windfall and probably will not need relief, we provide an additional 20 percent. In other words, if they are putting up $100 million, we would add $20 million, so that a State would have $120 million in order to take care of the cost of living increases under the welfare program, and take care of the increased case load that has been forced on them by court decisions and other findings that have been made. The proposal I have made is a flat, cross-the-board increase for every State.

It does not have anything to do with whether a State is spending more than before or whether a State is spending less. It simply increases the funds available to each State, and this is what the welfare administrators think would be fair.

The Senator's amendment would work on a different formula. It would take care of the States which have run themselves into extreme financial difficulty, and it would do much less for States that have been more prudent in managing their programs, so that those States really do not need to come to Washington, but they would get their share based on the Federal commitment.

It may be, Mr. President, that the administrators have asked for more than is really necessary, but if that is the case, it is something we can trim back in conference when we have the administration people to advise us about it. But what sense does it make to provide relatively a great deal more for one State than for another State, when, after all, all the States are having to pay for it?

The Percy amendment would cut back on every State, and very drastically on some of them. I think, Mr. President, we would be much better advised to vote the amount that is asked for here, which is an amount that would adequately care for every State, and an amount which the State administrators felt would be fair, would be equitable among the States, and would treat them uniformly, without rewarding one State or another State because they had a particular problem within the State.

We do not look at the problem, which is a crisis, I might say, in Illinois, or a particular problem that might exist in Oklahoma, where they have a very severe crisis, by the way. We simply say that we treat all States uniformly, and if a State has prudently run its program, it would get the same 20 percent as everyone else, and if they do not need the money to pay additional welfare benefits, it would not require them to do that. Let them use it for what they think they need to use it for. If they think their program is adequately financed, and that they are going as far as they need to go with benefits, they can put the money into State funds for something else.

It has been said that we cut back too drastically, for example, in social services. We have had a lot of complaints, I know I have, about cutting back what is a meritorious program in social services.

The amendment that I have at the desk, which was initially the Bellmon amendment, would permit those States to put the money into social services if they think they could better use it there than by putting it somewhere else. It is their money; they can put it where they want to put it. That is far better than to force them to spend it on welfare categorically, if they think they ought to spend it on something else.

I do not think Senators would want to vote for the drastic cutback that would be entailed by the Percy amendment, compared to the amendment which I have at the desk, unless they have had a chance to clear it with their welfare directors, and find that their welfare directors think that the reduction in funds recommended by Senator PERCY would be appropriate, and that they could stand it.

Under the Roth amendment we would save a great amount of money. By our committee estimate we estimated the Roth amendment would save the Government about $2.6 billion. By administration estimates, they estimate that it would save $4.1 billion. It would save a great deal of money.

But one problem is that it would also leave the States with a fiscal price to pay in trying to maintain the existing level of their programs while we were testing and seeing whether we wanted to go to a family assistance program, and prior to the time relief be available to them otherwise under the generous benefits provided in the program for the aged would go into effect.

I think we have met the problem about the best way we can at this time. If it should be proved that we have been too generous to the States generally, we can reduce that in conference. As Senators know, you cannot in conference raise any figure, you can only cut back. I would think we would be in a better position to take what the welfare administrators think they need and what they feel would be fair and would treat them equitably, rather than the proposal the Senator has offered, which is tailored, I am sure, to meet the problem in Illinois, but not necessarily to meet the problems in other States.

So I hope, Mr. President, that the amendment of the Senator from Illinois will not be agreed to.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I just simply cannot see how anyone in good conscience, anyone who has any sense of fiscal responsibility, can vote for the Bellmon amendment and give this windfall to States that have demonstrated they are not using the money and do not need it. The Bellmon amendment is not geared to welfare needs at all. It gives every State, whether it has welfare cost increases or not, a 20-percent increase across the board—a terrific inducement to get votes, but not to put the money where it is needed. The demonstrated need is where the States are paying the money out in hard cash right now.

Second, it does not protect welfare recipients from benefit reductions. States do not have to maintain benefits to qualify for relief. A State could just drop its welfare program and take the money and use it for anything else.

Mr. President, this is a welfare bill, it is not another revenue-sharing bill. We have just passed a $5.3 billion revenue-sharing bill. The cost of the Bellmon amendment is exorbitantly high—about $1.2 billion—and that is why the administration is so adamantly against the Bellmon amendment, which was run in on the Roth amendment.

I wonder if we are going to realize some day what we approved in that whole Roth amendment. We certainly do not realize the consequences now. It certainly could be a windfall for a State whose welfare needs do not require relief, and could allow the State to use that welfare money for other purposes.

I have listened to a great deal of this debate. I think now we should deal with the problems of the people we intend to try to help. There have been a great many distortions and a great many fictions presented on the floor of the Senate today, where we should be dealing with facts. I am not going to take the time of the Senate to deal with those facts this evening, but will insert them in the RECORD. I ask unanimous consent that my comments on this score, showing the number of indigent people in this country, who they are, the best calculations we could make as to their ability to work, whether they are independent or not, and whether these generalizations we hear about the shiftless, lazy, poor, have any foundation in fact whatsoever, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY MR. PERCY

Let me begin by saying that there is no one in this room who believes, more strongly that I in the American work ethic. Work—hard work—has allowed me to achieve the position I hold today. Work incentives and work requirements are needed in our welfare system. As President Nixon said, "A welfare system is a failure when it takes care of those who can take care of themselves." Those who can work must work, but what about those who cannot work and who cannot take care of themselves?

Let us look at the facts. How many of those on welfare can really help themselves? There are some 14 million welfare recipients in this country today. Of the 14 million, 8 million are dependent children; 3.1 million are disabled and elderly; and 2.7 million are mothers of dependent children. Less than 1 percent, or fewer than 200,000, of our welfare population are able-bodied men.

Let us look beyond our welfare population. Let us look at our total poverty population. According to a recent publication from the Office of Economic Opportunity, titled "The Poor in 1970," there are approximately 25 million poor people in this country. Children and women constitute the greatest percentage of the poor in America. They, together with the elderly, represent from 83 to 85 percent of all the poor.

We all agree that those who can work should work. But what about the children, the elderly, the disabled, the blind, and the mothers of dependent children? Do they deserve punishment because they are poor? In this great country of ours, can we not find the means in our hearts, minds, and resources to help those who cannot help themselves?

Let us look further at the facts. Contrary to what many believe, no one is getting rich on welfare. The average family on welfare today is receiving far less than what the government calls a poverty-level income ($3,900 for a family of four). Connecticut is the only state in the union with a benefit level higher than the poverty level—$4,020 for a family of four.

And contrary to what many believe, the poor do want to work, and they do work. According to OEO's "The Poor in 1970," nearly 25 percent of our poor are employed full-time; 84 percent work full-time half of the year; and another 41.1 percent work on a part-time basis.

The OEO study is not alone in its findings. In 1969, HEW conducted a study of the AFDC program by surveying 35 counties—10 urban and 25 rural—in 10 states. The survey, employing a structured questionnaire, interviewed over 11,000 respondents. The data showed that 58 percent of the respondents were employed for some of the three year period studied; 9 percent worked throughout; and 33 percent depended solely on welfare. Poor health, domestic responsibilities and inability to find work, in that order, were cited as the three main reasons for unemployment. Few of the respondents believed that getting help from welfare would result in a better life. Most felt being on welfare was the major meaning of "the worst life."

In a Washington, D.C. study, unemployed black men indicated that they valued work, but after repeated failures in the work world due to lack of education and training, they sought self-fulfillment in other activities and spurned new responsibilities for fear of failure.

In a California study of male heads-of-households, results showed that affluent white men, affluent black men and poor black men all had about the same preference for work over unemployment. Poor blacks indicated the same willingness to make special efforts to find successful job opportunities as did nonpoor blacks and whites.

In a New York City AFDC study, 70 percent of the AFDC mothers interviewed said they would prefer to work. Nationally, more than 80 percent indicated a preference for work over welfare.

Various studies of poor young people across the country showed that more than 72 percent would prefer work to welfare. Their hopes were for white-collar jobs and middle-class material wealth.

And recently the Brookings Institution, a non-partisan research organization, published the first comprehensive study of poor people's life aspirations and work orientation. This study, titled "Do the Poor Want to Work?" made the following findings:

"All groups of women, ranging from long-term welfare to outer-city white, give equally high ratings to the work ethic, but show a wide difference in beliefs about the effectiveness of their own efforts to achieve job success. Long-term welfare women lack confidence in their ability while outer-city white women feel much more secure.

"Teen-age males who have spent virtually their entire lives on welfare have certain positive orientations toward work. Having no working parent in the home has made the sons' identification with work no weaker than that of sons from families with working fathers. Welfare youths from fatherless homes show a strong work ethic, a willingness to take training, and an interest in working even if it is not a financial necessity. Their mothers favorably influence these positive orientations. The welfare experience has not destroyed the sons' positive orientations toward work.

"The picture that emerges is one of black welfare women who want to work but who, because of continuing failure in the work world, tend to become more accepting of welfare and less inclined to try again."

If the poor want to work; if they do work; and if they do not prefer welfare as a way of life to working to support their families; why is there such underemployment of the poor; and why have our work training programs for welfare recipients failed so miserably?

Let us look at the history of our work training programs. The first program—the Community Work and Training program—was started in 1962 and discontinued on June 30, 1968. The second program—the Work Experience and Training Program—was started in 1964 and discontinued on June 30, 1969. Both programs failed because providing effective assistance to welfare recipients required a much greater effort than was possible under the program designs.

The performance of the current Work Incentive Program, WIN, has been sufficiently poor to demonstrate the improbability of placing any substantial number of the more than 2.7 million mothers currently receiving welfare in the regular job market. WIN, in its first two years of operation, reviewed about 1.6 million welfare cases eligible for the program. Only about 10 percent of the 1.6 million eligibles were considered suitable for enrollment. Of all those who had been terminated from WIN in 1970, only about 19 percent had jobs. WIN was successful in getting jobs for only about 2 percent of the total eligible welfare population.

Like work training programs, mandatory work laws have also not been successful in moving welfare clients into jobs. New York's work relief law which took effect last July 1, requires employables in home relief and AFDC categories to pick up their semi-monthly relief checks at state employment offices and to take available jobs or training. If not otherwise placed in 30 days, those on home relief must work for city agencies in return for their relief allotments.

A joint Federal-New York State study of the effect of the law found that 50 of every 100 clients referred to job offices were unemployable, placed in training, or refused service. Of the other 50, 34 were referred to jobs, of whom four were placed. This was roughly the placement rate in all nine areas studied.

Moreover, of the 455 clients placed, nearly a third—or 140—no longer had the jobs after the first week; only a third—150—were still employed three months after their placement. Including those no longer on the job, 154 had quit and 151 had been laid off. In the layoffs, 40.1 percent were for lack of work; 26.1 percent were for lack of qualifications; 20.4 percent were for absenteeism or illness; and 4.2 percent were for misconduct. In all, only 1.3 percent of the original 11,472 referrals were still on the job three months after their placement.

Work training programs and mandatory work laws have failed in the past because their success is largely determined by the state of the economy and the availability of jobs for welfare clients. Given times of high unemployment, the AFDC mother, responsible for dependent children, lacking in work experience, skills and education, facing possible discrimination because of race or welfare status, is, perhaps, the poorest of employment risks.

These programs and laws have also failed because they were conceptualized and designed without any understanding of the poor. As the Brookings Institution study concluded:

"Poor people—males and females, blacks and whites, youths and adults—identify their self-esteem with work as strongly as do the nonpoor. They express as much willingness to take job training if unable to earn a living and to work even if they were to have an adequate income. They have, moreover, as high life aspirations as do the nonpoor and want the same things, among them a good education and a nice place to live. This study reveals no differences between poor and nonpoor when it comes to life goals and wanting to work.

"To be effective, welfare and manpower policies for the poor must be based on knowledge of how poor people view life and work."

Mr. PERCY. The point has been reiterated time and time again by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Finance to eliminate fraud in the welfare system. I will back any measures to get rid of fraud. I will back any measures to get rid of deadbeats. I will back any measures to find people who are abdicating their responsibility to their children, or their wives and do, whatever we need to do to find them.

But you cannot take it out of the hides of those little children. You cannot take it out of the hides of the women who have been offended in this way.

We must be sure that the measures that pass this body, Mr. President, are humane measures that deal with the facts and realities of life as it exists in the major urban areas today. I reiterate, as I stated earlier on the floor of the Senate today, the number of families that have migrated to Illinois this year. I named the States from which they came, 500 or 600 families from Mississippi, from Alabama, from Georgia. They have come up to our State because some of those States pay a family of four, as I indicated, as low in the case of Alabama as $972 a year for welfare relief for a family of four. Another State, Mississippi pays $720 for a family of four for welfare. For the cost of one bus ticket, which some of those agencies offer to get them out of the way, they send them up to Illinois, to Ohio, to New York, or to California, and they are financially breaking the backs of our States. The States are doing everything they can. We have imposed taxes on every kind—heavy property taxes, sales taxes, income taxes—and they are still unable to find the money to pay the welfare costs.

I weep at the thought that we are going to walk away from this legislation once again, and not have a true welfare reform bill. Since it looks like we will not have true welfare reform, let us not walk away from all the Governors to whom we have pledged that we are not going to pass a welfare reform measure, let us put welfare fiscal relief in there to relieve those States of the problems created when we did not enact revenue sharing earlier.

I think we are imposing a terrible burden on ourselves if we enact the Bellmon amendment, which is a grab bag, a gift box to every single State, whether they need it or not. Can we afford to add a little old amendment here costing $1.2 billion, when that obligation can be met by the expenditure of $515 million, which is a great deal of money, but which is much less than $1.2 billion this year and next year?

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, under the Percy amendment, if a State has been doing business in such a fashion that it was able to keep its welfare expenditures for this year at the same level as last year, they would not get $1. If it is found, for example, that they had to tighten up on their program, to eliminate some people who are ineligible, and perhaps even to reduce the level of benefits to stay within the funds available, they would not get a dollar of help. If they did as Illinois did, if they set their benefits well above the national average, they would not get any help.

Illinois pays $3,300, then $1,400 for public housing, $900 for medicaid—$5,600 of benefits for a family of four. It is very generous. It is more than they can afford, so the State is in deep fiscal trouble. The State that gets the most help under the amendment is one that creates the problem, because it has overspent. So the more irresponsible you are in handling your problems, the more help you get from the Percy amendment; and the more you keep your expenditures within your budget and keep them down to within what you spent before, the less you get.

Under the Percy amendment, some States would get great benefits, because they overspent and put into effect a program they could not afford; and other States that did not do that would get very little. I do not think the Senate wants to do business they way. I think the Senate would prefer, if there is going to be a formula, to have one that looks at all the States uniformly and on some basis treats them uniformly.

It may be that we have provided a little too much. We have provided more than the Percy amendment would provide even for the State of Illinois. But at least under this approach we have enough funds in there so that States are not going to be left distressed when this bill is passed or goes to conference. If fiscal stress occurs to States, it will not be because the Senate imposed it upon them. The Senator's amendment, while it is tailored to the Illinois problem, is not tailored to anybody else's problem, to my understanding, and I think the Senate would be foolish to adopt it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a table showing the difference between what the Percy amendment would provide the States and what the Long amendment—which was the Bellmon amendment prior to the time I offered it—recommended by the welfare administrators of this country, would provide to each State, so that Senators can see that every State would get the worst of it under the Percy amendment.

Perhaps Alaska would get $10( )00 more under the Percy amendment.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator has expired.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Illinois.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now occurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BROCK), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 29, as follows:

So the Long amendment as amended by the Roth amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. EDWARDS). The Senate will be in order. Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate H.R. 1, which the clerk will state.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State Public Assistance programs, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Madam President, will the Senator yield, without relinquishing his right to the floor?

Mr. LONG. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that, without losing my right to the floor, I may yield to the majority leader for a unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask that during the consideration of H.R. 1, my assistant, John Scales, be granted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would hope that during the next few minutes Senators would show some consideration to those who have important engagements and will be required to leave the city. If Senators have an amendment or two that are not controversial, which we believe we could accept on behalf of the committee, perhaps they can offer them now. For example, the Senator from Texas has an amendment which we believe we can accept. Also, I believe the Senator from Alaska has an amendment he wants to offer, and I think we can accept it.

If we could dispose of the few matters that can be agreed to almost unanimously, then we could go ahead and debate and decide some of the more controversial matters that must be decided before the Senate can pass on this matter.

I hope that the Senator from Texas can be recognized, because he has other pressing commitments, and that we can consider his amendment and the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MONDALE. This is fine, but I asked to be recognized some time ago on an amendment I have, which I think is very important; and I would not want to agree to a situation which might result in interminable delay.

Mr. LONG. I would think we could take up the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota within an hour.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following members of the Subcommittee on Health have the privilege of the floor: Stanley Jones, Larry Horowitz, Lee Goldman, and Philip Caper.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1700

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank the distinguished chairman of the committee.

Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1700.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENSON). Without objection, it is so ordered, and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

On page 338, line 21, strike "December 31, 1972" and insert "June 30, 1973".

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the name of the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) be added as a cosponsor of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I shall be brief. Section 227 of H.R. 1 establishes a new method for reimbursement under the medicare program for supervisory physicians in teaching hospitals. Under present law, as the committee report states, hospitals are reimbursed under part A of the medicare program for the costs they incur in compensating physicians for teaching and supervisory activities and in paying the salaries of residents and interns under approved teaching programs. In addition, reasonable charges are paid under the medical insurance program—part B—for teaching physicians' services to patients.

The committee bill changes the criteria for reimbursement. Under the committee bill services of teaching physicians would be reimbursed on a costs basis unless the patient is bona fide private or unless the hospital has charged all patients and collected from a majority on a fee-for-service basis.

For donated services of teaching physicians, a salary cost would be imputed equal to the prorated usual costs of full-time salaried physicians. Any such payment would be made to a special fund designed by the medical staff to be used for charitable and educational purposes.

Mr. President, I do not intend to discuss the merits of the committee amendment, although I have some serious reservations about the merits.

Section 227 would go into effect on December 31, 1972, less than 3 months from the time we pass this bill.

Whatever the merits of the new provision, that target date does not allow sufficient time for the States and the medical schools to provide for the new arrangements and funding that will be required.

I am informed that hospitals and medical schools in San Antonio, Dallas, and Houston, may face the loss of up to $20 million. These are funds which would have to be replaced by the State.

The thrust of my amendment is to extend by 6 months—until the end of the fiscal year—the time when this amendment will go into effect.

I believe this is a reasonable amendment, one which will allow for the adjustments necessary by hospitals, the schools, and the State.

I have talked over my amendment with the chairman of the Finance Committee, and I hope that he will find it possible to accept it during this colloquy.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment would change an effective date in the committee bill which, as I understand from the Senator's argument, would create a problem in his State. I would be willing to accept the amendment. I think the ranking member of the committee would also be willing because I have had a chance to discuss this matter with him.

I would hope, therefore, that the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. BENTSEN. I thank the Senator from Louisiana very much.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1700—of the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I understand that the distinguished floor manager of the bill would like to accept some noncontroversial amendments and I would therefore be willing to yield for that purpose with the understanding that when they have been handled I will be recognized for the purpose of calling up my amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

On page 575, change lines 3 and 4 to read as follows: "person's household and receiving without reasonable payment therefor, support and maintenance in kind from such person, the dollar amounts".

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have had a chance to review the amendment and I think it is meritorious. In fact, it is what the committee intended anyway. The Senator from Iowa has clarified what I think we had in mind. He seeks to say that there would be no reduction for the value rent where the aged, blind, or disabled were paying for their rent.

Mr. MILLER. It is not only rent, it is also room and board. The way the bill now reads, if a person wanted to move in with another older person who said, "Fine, come on in, but you will have to share expenses," and the person did share the expenses, they would still get cut back.

I am advised by the director of our State social program that if this is not amended as I have composed it in my amendment, there will be a tremendous increase in the load on nursing homes, although people would much rather live with individuals and they would be cut back. This is in accordance with the best approach to this. I understand that the Senator has checked this, and the distinguished Senator from Utah has, too.

Mr. LONG. It was my understanding that the committee bill sought to do what the Senator seeks to achieve by his amendment, but to be sure of the language, we will be happy to accept the amendment.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. I yield back the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Iowa (Mr. MILLER).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1653

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1653 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered, and the amendment will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

On page 963, between lines 18 and 19, insert the following:

ALLOWANCE OF DEDUCTION FOR CERTAIN EXPENSES NECESSARY FOR GAINFUL EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 535. (a) Section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to trade or business expenses) is amended by redesignating subsection (h) as (i), and by inserting after subsection (g) the following new subsection:

"(h) CERTAIN EXPENSES NECESSARY FOR GAINFUL EMPLOYMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an individual who maintains a household which includes as a member one or more of the following qualifying individuals—

"(A) a child or stepchild of the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 152) who is under the age of 15,

"(B) a dependent of the taxpayer who is under the age of 15 or who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself, or

"(C) the spouse of the taxpayer, if he or she is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself, the deduction allowed by subsection (a) shall include the reasonable expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year for household services and for the care of one or more individuals described in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), but only if such expenses are ordinary and necessary to enable the taxpayer to be gainfully employed.

"(2) MAINTAINING A HOUSEHOLD.—For purposes of paragraph (1), an individual shall be treated as maintaining a household for any taxable year only if over half of the cost of maintaining the household during such period is furnished by such individual (or if such individual is married during such period, is furnished by such individual and his or her spouse).

"(3) SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) MARRIED COUPLES MUST FILE JOINT RETURN.—If the taxpayer is married at the close of the taxable year, the deduction provided by subsection (a) shall be allowed only if the taxpayer and his spouse file a single return jointly for the taxable year.

"(B) GAINFUL EMPLOYMENT REQUIREMENT.—If the taxpayer is married for any period during the taxable year, there shall be taken into account employment-related expenses incurred during any month of such period only if—

"(i) both spouses are gainfully employed on a substantially full-time basis, or

"(ii) the spouse is a qualifying individual described in paragraph (1) (C) of this subsection.

"(C) CERTAIN MARRIED INDIVIDUALS LIVING APART.—An individual who for the taxable year would be treated as not married under section 143 (b) if paragraph (1) of such section referred to any dependent, shall be treated as not married for such taxable year.

"(D) PAYMENTS TO RELATED INDIVIDUALS.—No deduction shall be allowed under subsection (a) for any amount paid by the taxpayer to an individual bearing a relationship to the taxpayer described in paragraphs (1) through (8) of section 152(a) (relating to definition of dependent) or to a dependent described in paragraph (9) of such section.

"(E) REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN PAYMENTS.—In the case of employment-related expenses incurred during any taxable year solely with respect to a qualifying individual (other than an individual who is also described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of paragraph (1) of this subsection and who is under the age of 15) the amount of such expenses which may be taken into account for purposes of this section shall be reduced—

"(i) if such individual is 15 or older and is described in subparagraph (B) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, by the amount by which the sum of—

"(I) such individual's adjusted gross income for such taxable year, and

"(II) the disability payments received by such individual during such year, exceeds $750, or

"(ii) in the case of a qualifying individual described in subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, by the amount of disability payments received by such individual during the taxable year.

For purposes of this subparagraph, the term 'disability payment' means a payment (other than a gift) which is made on account of the physical or mental condition of an individual and which is not included in gross income."

(b) Section 62(c) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to trade and business deductions of employees) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(E) CERTAIN EXPENSES NECESSARY FOR GAINFUL EMPLOYMENT.—The deductions allowed under section 162 which consist of expenses allowable by reason of the application of subsection (h) thereof, paid or incurred by the taxpayer in connection with the performance by him or by her of services as an employee."

(c) Part VII of subchapter B of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to additional itemized deductions for individuals) is amended—

(1) by striking out section 214 (relating to expenses for household and dependent care services necessary for gainful employment), and

(2) by striking out the item relating to section 214 in the table of sections for such part.

(d) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, the amendment I offer today will, if enacted, amend the Internal Revenue Code to allow a business deduction for household and childcare expenses incurred by working mothers and certain other individuals to enable them to be gainfully employed.

The time is long overdue, Mr. President, to remove the inequity in out tax laws which enables business men to deduct "ordinary and necessary" business expenses, yet denies to working mothers a deduction for the most "ordinary and necessary" business expense they incur—the cost of maintaining their households and assuring safe and responsible care for their children while they work.

In 1971, 42 percent of the mothers in the United States worked outside the home. Of the approximately 12.5 million mothers with children under 6, more than one in every three is working today. That means there were more than 4.3 million mothers with children under 6 who were in the labor force last year. Of those mothers, 650,000 of them were single parents holding down a job.

If a businessman can deduct the cost of hiring a secretary to improve his effectiveness in working—if he can treat his entertainment expenses as a tax deduction—if a retailer can deduct the expenses of a store manager to keep an eye on things while he is away generating new business or promotions—how can it be said to be fair and just that a working mother should not be allowed the same sort of deduction for expenses which are vitally related to her work?

It cannot be denied that the expense we are talking about is fundamental in enabling a parent to work to the full extent of her capacities.

These child care expenses are not personal expenses, like doctors' bills. They should not be classified with charitable contributions as they now are. They are ordinary and necessary expenses incurred to enable an individual to be gainfully employed.

The parents who would benefit from my proposal simply cannot avoid paying for the care of their children and for other household expenses if they need or desire work. Very often, they have to relinquish a sizable portion of their income in order to secure these services. Yet they are not allowed to take these considerable costs as a business deduction.

There are many reasons why mothers go out to work. At the lower income levels, it is a matter of compelling financial necessity. Whether or not they prefer to be full-time mothers devoting all their care and attention to the family and the home, they do not really have the choice. They must work, they must produce a second income to keep their family out of poverty and provide even the basic necessities.

Others wish to work to improve their standard of living, to withstand the cutting edge of inflation. And there are those who wish to work as a matter of self-fulfillment, to use their capabilities to the fullest extent possible.

And for the single parent who must work to provide sustenance for herself and her children, the nature of these expenses is crystal clear. Whereas there may be doubts about many of the expenses businessmen take as tax deductions, especially in the area of entertainment, the expenses dealt with by my amendment are absolutely necessary for those families to be viable, self-supporting economic units.

There are other income earners, both men and women who must provide care for a spouse or other dependent who is incapable of caring for himself. The amendment would extend to the expenses incurred in providing such care as a necessary adjunct to employment.

Apart from the objection of principle that genuine business deductions should be treated as business deductions and not as personal deductions, there is a much more practical objection to leaving the existing provisions as they are.

This arises from the fact that some 68 percent of the families with earnings of $10,000 or less use the standard deduction form and do not itemize their personal deductions. As a result, they do not get the benefit of the existing child care deduction. Yet these are often the people with modest to moderate incomes. They are people who are doing their best to be self-reliant and to improve their lot. They are often the people who need a second income in the family to ward off the effects of inflation which others can bear with greater ease. They are people who need help and support, not discrimination against their efforts in the tax structure.

My amendment does not create another loophole in our income tax laws. It is not a soft subsidy for those who do not need it. It simply is a correction of a basic inequity whose burden often falls heavily on those who have small capacity to bear it.

Last November, I offered this amendment to the Revenue Act of 1971; it passed by a vote of 74 to 1 but the amendment was eliminated in conference.

When I reintroduced it as a bill, S. 3227, on February 24, 1972, 23 Senators joined me in cosponsoring it and many others expressed their support. I am therefore, resubmitting it now and asking that the Senate reaffirm its belief in fair treatment for working mothers.

Frankly, Mr. President, given the provisions already contained in H.R. 1, I think it would be a monstrous inequity if we do not enact this deduction.

With that having been said, I am prepared to yield to the distinguished chairman of the committee for his views.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENSON). The Chair is informed that part of the bill to which this amendment addresses itself has been stricken from the bill and therefore the amendment will have to be redrafted.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be added at the end of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the women's organizations have made a strong case that it is not fair to let the businessman deduct the expenses of someone who helps him in his business, and at the same time to deny them the opportunity to deduct the expense of hiring someone to help them with child care or domestic work so that they can take work outside the home. The more one thinks about it, the more discriminatory and unfair it seems to be.

For example, a woman author points that she can be productive and write a good book and do good work, but if she cannot have someone available to look after her children while she is working on the book, it is totally impossible for her to do that. She would contend that the secretary that Mr. Rockefeller has to have so that he can do his job as president of the Chase-Manhattan Bank is not so essential to him as a babysitter is to her so that she can write that book.

I really believe that one of these days we will realize this argument is such that we should extend it even beyond that the Senator is urging here.

When the matter came up before on last year's tax bill, the Treasury people said that something of this sort should be on this bill, H.R. 1, and not on that tax bill. And notwithstanding the Treasury argument, this matter was voted upon by the Senate, and as I recall it was agreed to by an overwhelming majority on the tax bill that was before the Senate.

In the area where we are trying to provide a tax opportunity for poor people, it serves a useful purpose. It helps a housewife who is productive to be free from household responsibilities so that she can go to work and do something that benefits society as a whole, and at the same time it tends to provide an opportunity for a person to come into a home and have a job. So it both helps a playwriter or a professional woman to realize her ambition and be productive, and it also helps a working mother who might happen to have that same skill to do something to add to her income. I point out that this would be something which would be to the overall benefit of society.

I am persuaded that the argument in favor of the amendment is as good now as it was at the time the Senate considered the tax bill last year.

I hope very much that the Senate will permit us to accept the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I would have to object to the amendment because I think it is very loosely drawn. It is so loosely drawn that if a rich woman has a maid and is making a fine living writing books, she can decide that she can deduct all of her household expenses.

The language of the amendment reads in part: "shall include the reasonable expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year for household services."

It does not say for child care. It says "household services."

I continue to read from the amendment: "and for the care of one or more individuals * * * only if such expenses are ordinary and reasonable to enable the taxpayer to be gainfully employed."

Mr. President, if she is presiding over a household with half a dozen servants, to her those may be ordinary and necessary expenses. There is not a thing here about child care. For the first time we are allowing individuals to deduct personal expenses as business expenses. This drives a hole into the Internal Revenue Code that a lot of things can be driven through in the years ahead.

I think the amendment should be rejected. If the author of the amendment wants to tighten it down, that might make it more palatable. However, I think this is a dangerous amendment. It does not benefit only the members of the public who are on or near welfare, because there is no limit.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I am afraid I would have to disagree with the distinguished Senator from Utah. The whole thrust of my amendment is to assist a working mother. Section (h)(1) reads as follows:

> In the case of an individual who maintains a household which includes as a member one or more of the following qualifying individuals—
> (A) a child or stepchild of the taxpayer (within the meaning of section 152) who is under the age of 15,
>
> "(B) a dependent of the taxpayer who is under the age of 15 or who is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself, or
> (C) the spouse of the taxpayer, if he or she is physically or mentally incapable of caring for himself or herself,

When it talks about household services, we are obviously referring to the care that is given to that dependent so that the mother can go out and work. It is not intended to provide for a staff of servants for the working mother. It is to provide for the care for that dependent and provide services that are necessary for that dependent so that the mother can work.

Mr. BENNETT. If that is the intention, it does not come through in the language. A millionaire could meet the qualification if she has a child in the house. A person would not have to be on welfare.

May I point out also that it does not say, "expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year for household services or for the care of one or more individuals." It says "household services and for the care."

So, it can cover any expense that this woman can relate to her earning a living, no matter what her income is or how she earns it.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah has served on the Finance Committee long enough to know that the Internal Revenue Service would not allow a staff of servants as ordinary and necessary expenses for a working mother, whether or not she is a millionaire. Ordinary and necessary expenses means exactly what it says. It means ordinary and necessary for the purpose of taking care of that dependent. And the same thing is true with a millionaire that hires a secretary. That is an ordinary and necessary business expense. If it is not an ordinary and necessary business expenses, then that businessman cannot take that deduction.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, may I say most respectfully that a millionaire has a tax attorney to get around anything we are trying to do here in the Senate. We are not talking about millionaires. There are not too many of them anyway. We are talking about a working mother who wants to go out to try to earn a living and who wants to work on a clerical staff and who needs to have someone in the household to take care of dependents.

That is what this amendment is all about.

May I point out to the Senator that if one is in business, he will find a way to get almost all of these people taken care of.

I submit that those of us who serve in this body have had to sign a little book when we came into somebody's place or we have had to sign a little book when we went on somebody's boat. Why is that? Is it because they want our autograph? Baloney. They want our signatures for the Internal Revenue Service. It is not a compliment. But that is why it happens.

Why do we not treat these people that do not have certified public accountants or tax attorneys the way we treat those who do? This amendment is designed to help someone work downtown, write a book, work in the dramatic arts, or whatever it might be to be able to deduct that expense as an ordinary business expense.

It is a good amendment. We should not worry about the millionnaires. Perhaps we could include in the amendment something that says, "If you have a million dollars, it does not apply."

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I want to point out that the amendment reads, beginning on line 21 of page 2:

> The deduction allowed by subsection (a) shall include the reasonable expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year for household services and for the care of one or more individuals . . . only if such expenses are ordinary and necessary to enable the taxpayer to be gainfully employed.

That does not mean a maid or a half a dozen servants in the house. It means having someone to take care of a dependent who is mentally incapable of taking care of himself or a child under the age of 15.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator's yielding.

I want to add one or two points. I point out to my colleagues that I have the privilege of being chairman of the Constitutional Subcommittee. I suppose that that committee has held more hearings on the subject of equal rights for women than any other committee. I am the principal sponsor of that Senate measure. I have studied this matter with great care.

I would like to make two points. First of all, I thing there is a great disparity involved if we worry about millionaires, we discriminate between millionaires who are men and millionaires who are women. One can write off the expenses if he takes his clients off to lunch and fills them up with martinis if he is a man. However, if it is a woman who is the millionaire and she is at home, we do not allow her to claim any expenses covered by the Senator from California. That is point No. 1.

Second, the hard fact is that if a woman is a working mother and has to work to help support the family, she is not allowed to deduct those expenses that are necessary.

Today 40 percent of all the women who are working are the sole support of their children. They are the sole support of their children, so we are concerned about the impact of this amendment. We should be concerned about not just the woman involved but the children at home for whom she is the sole support.

I supported the Senator earlier on the other measure and I am happy to support him again on this measure.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I point out to the Senator and to the Senate that we put in the tax law, in order to try to help provide jobs, and that is the only excuse for his, a $3 billion investment tax credit to encourage them to go out and buy new equipment. If one wishes to talk about a loophole, that is the biggest loophole in the tax law. It is an incentive for somebody to do something; we gave them a $3 billion tax credit; a tax advantage justified solely because you would like them to buy more equipment and modernize, in the hope they would put more people to work, even though many times by the time they get through improving their machinery they have less people working rather than more people working.

Sometimes a tax credit is given to put people out of work rather than to provide jobs, but they were calling it a provision to provide jobs. I have seen cases where a man tells me they have a modernization program going on and that they are going to spend $100 million improving the plant. I ask, "How many more jobs will be provided?" By the time they get through they will have one-half of the jobs that they had before but they will have a better plant.

But here we are talking about providing a deduction for a housewife who is helping support a family so that she can go out and take a job and someone can come in the house to help her. I do not think anyone disagrees that the ordinary working mother should be able to deduct the child care expense that is paid. Even the House is willing to agree with us on that. But the way it used to be, when the mother brought someone in to the house when she went out to be the breadwinner, the tax service would say, "How much time did the woman spend washing dishes?" So they reduced the reduction for the time the woman spent washing dishes and separated it from the time she went around the house with nothing to do but care for the children.

Then they asked, "How much time was spent using the vacuum cleaner?" Then they deducted the time for the use of the vacuum cleaner. Then they were asked, "How much time did she spend cleaning up the bathroom and putting things in order around the house?" They reduced the deduction for the time spent there.

Now, when a businessman rents a strongbox down at the bank we do not go into that strongbox and say, "How many of these papers are business papers and how many of these papers are personal effects?" We do not do that to him.

I understand the Senator is not trying to extend this to working mothers without children to support. Is that correct?

Mr. TUNNEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. LONG. It would apply only to working mothers with children to support, and she is not privileged to leave the dishes dirty until she gets back home because she has a child that must be cared for in that home; and if she is going to bring someone in to look after the home they might as well look after the whole place rather than be idle.

Mr. TUNNEY. That is correct, and I would like to point out that we have tightened the amendment of last year. Initially, I was not sure if I wanted to see it tightened down as much as we did. But later on, I thought that, in order to expedite consideration on the floor, it would be appropriate to allow the deduction only if both spouses are employed substantially on a full-time basis. I put that provision in with great reluctance, but was persuaded by the people at the Treasury Department that it was necessary. They felt it was essential. I put it in to expedite consideration of my proposal. I wish at times I had not, but I did put it in to give that working mother an opportunity to get that deduction.

I feel it is absolutely essential that she be given this right. We have been speaking during the last few days of this debate about how we want welfare mothers to work. The Senate now has a perfect opportunity to give welfare mothers an opportunity to go to work, make a decent living, and not have to pay all of her earnings to someone to take care of the children.

Mr. LONG. If the Senate's view prevails on the minimum wage bill, we will have extended coverage under the minimum wage. In a great number of such places people will no longer be able to afford domestic help so they will have to let domestic help go and thereby put people out of work; this will happen unless we provide them with the deduction which might make it possible to retain the help they have.

Furthermore, if the Senator's amendment prevails, and I am confident it will since the Senate voted for it before, then we will encourage mothers who are capable of finding jobs to find more remunerative jobs that pay $4 or $5 an hour. Those mothers will be paying taxes on their income, and if it a case where the husband is also working, that puts them in a higher tax bracket, and that will increase the overall tax being paid and the overall income the country is receiving. Those same people you would be hiring to help this mother take the job may well be people you will be taking off of welfare rolls.

Mr. TUNNEY. Exactly.

Mr. LONG. So that you tend to do what this Senator thinks you should do by making work more attractive than welfare, and doing it in the most dignified fashion, by allowing a working mother a deduction which has a parallel exemption in all sorts of businesses.

In the case of a businessman who has a secretary who prepares personal business letters for him as well as business affairs, we do not allocate to the extent that the secretary took dictation and sent out a personal letter, so why should that rule be applied to working mothers? The only way to justify that is on the basis that the Treasury Department cannot afford the tax loss. But in this bill we do so much for family people it is hard to say you should provide for the other situations that are provided for in this bill and deny a working mother that type consideration. As the Senator knows, I did support his amendment when it was offered on the tax bill. I think it is even more appropriate that it be offered on this bill. However, I do not speak for the committee.

Mr. TUNNEY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, this colloquy has created the impression that now there is no relief, no tax relief for a woman who has to go out and work. The tax law now provides that if the net income of the family is less than $18,000, she may deduct the cost of child care.

That privilege is available to her now. This bill takes off the $18,000 limit, so it raises it, not necessarily to the millionaire class, but to everybody with an income above $18,000.

It does, also, one other interesting thing. It says that in addition to taking the standard deduction, the mother may take this deduction on top of it, so she can double her deduction. She can use as much of that cost for the standard deduction as she needs, and then put it on top of that.

I realize that I am on the wrong side of this issue emotionally, but I think to create the impression that the people who are going to go off welfare are going to move immediately to an income above $18,000, and that, therefore, the existing law does not give these employers a chance to deduct that from their income, is fallacious.

The chairman and I do not disagree very often, but I do not agree with the argument that under the present law the Internal Revenue Service has to inquire into the activities of the person who is doing the child care in order to determine the amount of the deduction that will follow under this law, because the law does not say that this person would come in and do anything that is assigned.

So I think the basic question here is, Do you want to take the $18,000 limit off and let anybody with an income above that deduct for child care, and do you want those people to get a partial double deduction for the money they spend for child care?

It is that simple, and I am not at all impressed by the argument that under the present law a person who came off welfare would not be able to do that.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I am prepared to have a vote on this amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, permit me to say that people who have higher incomes, to whom the Senator refers, do not take the standard deduction anyway. It is immaterial as far as those people are concerned. They itemize, anyway. As a practical matter, it is somewhat unfair to deny this benefit, if we are going to allow this deduction, to the low-income people who take the standard deduction.

Mr. TUNNEY. Sixty-eight percent of the people who have incomes of $10,000 or less take the standard deduction, and as a result they are not able to take any advantage of the law which now exists to deduct the costs of child care. By making this a deductible business expense—and that is exactly what it is; they would be able to take advantage of this deduction.

I just do not understand how the Senator from Utah can advocate disallowing the deduction for a mother who goes out to work and needs a babysitter to take care of her child, and yet allow it for a millionaire businessman who hires a secretary, in part to take personal dictation, in part to pour him his drinks after he has had a tough day at the office, and in part to do his business affairs.

I am prepared to yield back my time.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I would like to make one more comment, and then I will sit down. The inference is that these thousands of people who have an income under $10,000 who use the standard deduction are deprived from being able to use anything else. They have the same right as the millionaire does to itemize their income tax forms. So what we are really talking about now, since the law provides this deduction for couples or individuals whose earnings are under $18,000, is to open this up to anybody with an income above that to have the same privilege.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TUNNEY. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, my staff and the staff of the Senator from California have discussed this amendment, and I am pleased to be a cosponsor of the amendment.

I would like to call attention to one problem that is not covered by the amendment, and hopefully secure an agreement to modify the Senator's amendment along the line of an amendment that I had intended to send to the desk, which is to amendment 1653 offered by the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY). Amendment 1653 is a highly beneficial amendment which will permit the business expense deduction of certain expenses, those incurred for household services and dependent care. It accomplishes this by the addition of a new subsection (h) to section 162 of title 26.

There is, however, one small group of individuals who need similar care for themselves. These are those taxpayers so disabled either physically or mentally that they must incur expenses for the hiring of attendants, the purchase of special equipment, and similar items in order that they may be gainfully employed. These individuals are among the most courageous of our society. They refuse to become public burdens but insist upon paying their own way through life.

The identical policy urging the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) also strongly argues for the inclusion of my amendment to assist these people. Just as we wish to assist taxpayers who must incur reasonable expenses for household services or for dependent care, so should we assist those people who must incur reasonable expenses for their own care in order to be gainfully employed. This amendment will permit the deduction of ordinary and necessary business expenses, such as special equipment and medical attendants, if the taxpayer must incur these costs to be gainfully employed. The purpose is to insure that these costs are deductible under this section as business expenses.

For instance, I know of one young lady who is entirely incapacitated from the shoulders down, as a result of polio. She has a brilliant mind. She has, in fact, written books. Although she types with a wand that she keeps in her mouth, she hires someone to get her out of bed in the morning, take care of her home, type her final manuscript, and she is doing quite well. She does not want to be on welfare. She has the capability of producing, but she must hire three people to enable her to do her job.

The amendment I had intended to offer would permit the deduction of certain expenses for the physically or mentally disabled, along with the people the Senator has suggested would be included in the Senator's amendment, which I have cosponsored.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I have seen the amendment of the Senator from Alaska. I agree with him that a person who is disabled and who can only work if she or he is attended is deserving of the same of business deduction, because it is for that person an ordinary and necessary business expense.

So I accept the amendment, or if the Senator prefers, I will modify my amendment to include his language.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I am quite agreeable to having that done, and I send the amendment to the desk. It would extend the deduction to people who are disabled physically or mentally and who cannot work unless they can hire people to do necessary work, such as is true in the case of the young lady to whom I referred, who must hire people in order to be able to do her work at home.

I am most gratified that the Senator from California has agreed to accept my amendment. My staff and I have been in contact with groups representing disabled taxpayers and I am informed they strongly support this amendment. I know they will be most grateful also.

I ask unanimous consent that Senators GRAVEL and HUMPHREY be added as cosponsors to amendment No. 1653, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I modify my amendment by the language of the amendment offered by the Senator from Alaska.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The modification is as follows:

On page 5, line 19, strike the closing quotation mark. On page 5, between lines 19 and 20, insert the following:

"(4) Expenses of individuals physically or mentally disabled.—In the case of an individual who is physically or mentally disabled, the deduction allowed by subsection (a) shall include the reasonable expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year such as for the services of attendants if such expenses are ordinary and necessary to enable the taxpayer to be gainfully employed."

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in order to expedite the business of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that the yeas and nays be ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? If there is no objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 71, nays 8, as follows:

So Mr. TUNNEY's amendment (No. 1653), as modified, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

At the bottom of page 615, insert the following new section:

DISREGARD OF 20-PERCENT-INCREASE PROVISION ENACTED IN PUBLIC LAW 92-336

SEC. 306. (a) In determining the annual income of any person for purposes of determining the continued eligibility of that person for, and the amount of, pension payable under the first sentence of section 9(b) of the Veterans' Pension Act of 1959, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall disregard, if that person is entitled to monthly benefits under the insurance program established under title II of the Social Security Act, any part of such benefits which results from (and would not be payable but for) the general increase in benefits under such program provided by section 201 of Public Law 92-336 or any subsequent cost-of-living increase in such benefits occurring pursuant to section 215(i) of the Social Security Act.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in the case of any individual who is entitled for any month after August 1972 to a monthly benefit under the insurance program established by title II of the Social Security Act, any part of such benefit which results from (and would not be payable but for) the general increase in benefits under such program provided by section 201 of Public Law 92-336, or which results from (and would not be payable but for) any cost-of-living increase in such benefits subsequently occurring pursuant to section 215(i) of the Social Security Act, shall not be considered as income or resources or otherwise taken into account for purposes of determining the eligibility of such individual or his or her family or the household in which he or she lives for participation in the food stamp program under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, for surplus agricultural commodities under any Federal program providing for the donation or distribution of such commodities to low-income persons, for admission to or occupancy of low-rent public housing under the United States Housing Act of 1937, for subsidized mortgages or rentals under title II of the National Housing Act, or for any other benefits, aid, or assistance in any form under a Federal program, or a State or local program financed in whole or in part with Federal funds, which conditions such eligibility to any extent upon the income or resources of such individual, family, or household.

(c) The amendments made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply with respect to annual income determinations made pursuant to sections 415(g) and 503 (as in effect both on and after June 30, 1960) of title 38 United States Code, for calendar years after 1971. The amendment made by subsection (b) shall be effective with respect to items furnished after August 1972.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, this is a simple amendment, which says this: The 20-percent social security increase that we granted recently cannot be taken away from senior citizens who are public housing tenants by rent increases, nor can food stamp eligibility be affected by the increased income derived from the social security increase.

On Thursday, September 28, I introduced a somewhat longer amendment to the social security bill to guarantee that the elderly receive the full benefit of the 20-percent social security increase.

Part of this serious problem was solved on Friday, when the Senate accepted modifications to the social security bill to prevent drastic cuts in old age assistance and medicaid—as a result of two programs—the 20-percent raise.

The amendment I am calling up today is meant to complete the work of protecting the 20-percent increase. It does this by preventing housing authorities from raising rents and the Department of Agriculture from cutting food stamp benefits as a result of the 20-percent increase.

We have all heard the terrible stories of how many of the poorest of our senior citizens are being cheated out of their long overdue social security raise. They are losing this raise because as their social security income goes up, other benefits—which they desperately need—are being reduced.

I am proud that I was a cosponsor of the 20-percent social security raise. I know that the Congress intended the full raise—every penny of it—to go to everyone receiving social security.

Because I think these elderly people should get every penny of this raise, I think our action to protect the raise should cover all benefits. We should protect the elderly who receive food stamps and public housing benefits as well as those receiving old-age assistance and medicaid. It is unjust and unfair that any of these other benefits should be reduced because of the 20-percent social security increase.

On Friday the Senate acted to meet the danger that old-age assistance and medicaid benefits would be lost as a result of the 20-percent increase. Senator CRANSTON's amendment, which was accepted by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), will protect these types of benefits. Under the terms of the amendment, almost all social security beneficiaries in Minnesota will continue to get their old-age assistance benefits and will retain medicaid eligibility. This is very important.

But the Cranston amendment does not protect 15,000 elderly Minnesotans against an increase in public housing rents. Only passage of the amendment I am offering today will do that.

There is also a major problem of the erosion of food stamp benefits. Approximately 35,000 Minnesotans could either lose eligibility for food stamps or find their food stamp benefits cut, because of the 20-percent social security raise. For many of these people, this could be a disaster. A large chunk of their small social security raise would be swallowed up immediately by the rampaging rise in food costs.

My colleague from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) raised this food stamp question on the floor of the Senate when the Cranston amendment was accepted. The amendment on this subject which we are offering today would take care of this problem. I hope it can be accepted immediately.

Taken together, the rent increase, the loss or erosion of food stamp eligibility, and the loss of other benefits which may follow the 20-percent increase could make the whole 20-percent raise largely meaningless for many among the elderly. This must not be allowed to happen. My amendment completes the work of the Cranston amendment which was accepted on Thursday. It will guarantee full protection for the 20-percent increase. I urge that the whole of this package be approved by the Senate.

Now I am going to yield to the Senator from Connecticut in a moment, but, first, I ask unanimous consent that there be a time limitation of 1 hour on this amendment, to be divided equally between the proponents and the opponents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I commend my distinguished colleague for this amendment.

I wonder whether I could ask a few questions.

Do I correctly understand that the purpose of this amendment is to assure that as a result of the 20-percent social security increase, the recipient of that 20-percent increase is not worse off under the food stamp program, public housing program, and veterans programs than if he or she had not received that increase?

Mr. MONDALE. That is correct. But my amendment also goes further and insures that the 20-percent social security increase which Congress voted to protect the elderly from inflation—to give them a needed improved income—will actually go to those social security recipients and not be diverted to public housing rent increases in a sort of peculiar and cruel revenue-sharing program.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I wonder whether the Senator has some examples of situations in which the recipients could be worse off with a 20-percent increase than if they had not received it in the first place.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I will submit for the RECORD an article published in the Minneapolis Star of Thursday, September 1, and other articles which demonstrate how much people all over the country on social security were looking forward to this 20-percent increase. Instead they found that all or most of it is being taken away from them in many ways, and many times they end up worse off than they were before the increase.

This article in the Minneapolis Star cites one example. Mrs. Mary Freed will get a 20-percent increase in her social security on October 3. "Big deal," says the reporter.

Mrs. Freed's monthly check will go up $27, to $162, but because of that increase, her rent will rise from $26 to $33 on her efficiency apartment administered by public housing. Her disability payments of $32 a month will decrease. She will be over the limit set by the State as a maximum financial aid level. The medical assistance program will drop her. She will be reinstated, however, as soon as she spends $60 in medical costs. Then she would go on Medicaid again, but only for 6 months. She should spend that amount quickly, because she takes medication. In any event, her total expenses are going to run at least $42 a month because of a $27 incerase in social security. That is the kind of example referred to by the distinguished Senator from Connecticuit.

Mr. RIBICOFF. I am sure it was not intended—I know that in voting for the 20-percent increase in the Finance Committee and on the floor, I certainly did not intended—that the receipients of other social services or other programs should be deprived and be worse off as a result of our 20-percent increase in social security. This is certainly a situation we have an obligation to remedy, and I commend the Senator for bringing it to the attention of the Senate. I certainly shall vote for the Senator's amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the article to which I have referred, together with an article published in the New York Times of October 3, entitled "Social Security Rise Becomes a Nightmare to Many Elderly."

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY RISE BECOMES A NIGHTMARE TO MANY ELDERLY

(By David K. Shipler)

Like millions of other aged Americans, Marie Nashif of Denver will receive a 20 per cent increase in her Social Security check this month. But unlike most, she will not welcome the extra cash.

Mrs. Nashif is among the 187,000 or so elderly for whom Congressional election-year generosity has become a nightmare. The Social Security rise, voted by Congress June 30, has pushed her income just high enough to make her ineligible for the welfare and Medicaid benefits that she needs so desperately.

Mrs. Nashif, a smal, alert, 72-year-old woman, suffers badly from arthritis. Until now, her heavy medical bills have been paid fully by Medicaid. But when her monthly Social Security check rises from $138.40 to $166.10, it will surpass the $147 figure that Colorado uses to divide those who are eligible from those who are not.

In exchange for her $27.70 additional from Social Security, Mrs. Nashif will have to pay $5.80 a month in medical insurance premiums, 20 per cent of all doctors, bills, the first $68 a year in hospital expenses, $17 a day after 60 days in the hospital, and the total amount of prescription drugs.

Further, she will lose $7 a month in welfare payments, she will probably become ineligible for food stamps, and her rent will rise, since she lives in Federally subsidized housing where rents are tied to income.

"When I take all this into consideration," she said. "I'll be a darn sight worse off than I am now."

Congressional action could eliminate such hardships, and several bills addressed to the problem are now pending. Last Friday, the Senate voted a solution for welfare recipients by passing a measure that would force states to raise the eligible income limits for welfare by the same dollar amount as the Social Security increases. Prospects for the bill in the House are uncertain.

Even if the bill becomes law, it will not help people who now collect Medicaid and are not welfare recipients, and there are thousands of those in New York City alone who risk losing their medical benefits. The bill addresses itself only to welfare recipients.

ACTION BY STATES

Some states have already taken action on their own. Gov. William T. Cahill of New Jersey has ordered Medicaid benefits continued for 4,000 elderly who would otherwise become ineligible.

Delaware has allocated $1-million to raise the eligibility income maximums. Gov. Winfield Dunn of Tennessee has changed administrative regulations to keep 7,500 people on the welfare rolls. Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, Florida and Wyoming are among the states that have increased the income levels that determine eligibility.

No action has been taken in New York. The state's Department of Social Services contends that it has no power to make the necessary changes without approval from the Legislature, whose regular session begins in January.

New York City has already sent letters informing 6,000 elderly people that their welfare benefits will be halted. This means that they will have to begin paying 20 per cent of their medical expenses.

In addition, many aged New Yorkers who are not on welfare and are not addressed by the Senate bill will be hurt by the Social Security increases.

The city's Office For the Aging estimates that 14,696 persons who now receive 80 per cent of their medical expenses from Medicaid will be cut off altogether. In addition, 22,434 who are not on welfare but are fully covered by Medicaid will have until they have spent all their income above the welfare maximum on medical bills. At that point Medicaid will pick up the full burden again. This totals about 43,000 elderly affected adversely in New York City alone.

The figures elsewhere are smaller, ranging from about 10,000 in California to 400 in Vermont. The United States Department of Health, Education and Welfare calculates that nationwide, 187,000 people will become ineligible for welfare and 93,000 will lose Medicaid.

Even many who do not lose will not gain from the Social Security increase, since some states apply Social Security income against welfare payments. As Social Security rises, welfare decreases; the beneficiary is not the individual, but the state.

"I'm all for the increase," said John Maros, administrator of the Wyoming Division of Public Assistance. "The more Social Security they get the less public assistance is needed." The State of Washington estimates that it will save $2.3-million in welfare payments by next June 30.

"The average pensioner in Alabama won't gain a dime as a result of the increase," said Ruben K. King, Alabama director of pensions and security.

BAN UNDER SENATE BILL

"This is a form of psychological deceit practiced upon senior citizens," said C. Christophor Brown, head of the law reform unit of the Baltimore Legal Aid Bureau. "The government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other."

This cannot happen if the bill passed by the Senate is approved by the House and signed by President Nixon; Under the measure states would be prohibited from reducing welfare payments in response to the Social Security increase.

The bill would also cost the states additional money by requiring them to raise the income limits for eligibility, not merely for those welfare recipients who are on Social Security, but for all disabled, aged and blind. In New York, many in the disabled category are narcotics addicts.

In most states, elderly people on Social Security receive only small amounts of money from welfare, and their removal from the rolls is less of a hardship in terms of direct welfare payments than it is in terms of the services that are corollaries to a welfare status.

In many states, for example, Medicaid—whose cost is shared by the Federal and state governments—is available only to those whose incomes are low enough to qualify them for welfare, even though the Federal guidelines allow Medicaid benefits for those with incomes up to 133 per cent of the welfare maximum.

Other benefits, such as food stamps, legal help and home-making services, are also often tied directly to welfare.

BRONX WOMAN HIT

Mrs. Elesabeth Miles of 1365 Finley Avenue, the Bronx, for example, faces the loss of a valuable homemaker because the Social Security rise will make her ineligible for welfare. She is 62.

"The letter came last Wednesday," she said, "and now I have nothing. I have been a widow for 29 years and am completely blind in the right eye and partially blind in the left eye. My son is unable to take of me because he has eight children of his own."

Her monthly Social Security check, to rise from $133.10 to $159.70, will have to cover her $70.40 a month rent, as well as her food and other expenses.

"They say that they are giving me a 20 per cent in crease, but they been taking everything back and all I get is nothing," Mrs. Miles said. "We worked hard to take care of ourselves and they just don't care if we live or die."

In a small, sad room on West 86th Street, Joseph Wolfson, 80, a frail, asthmatic man spoke with fear. "Most of the time I am in the hospital because of asthma," he said. "I feel all right now, but who knows what can happen next week? I just can't live with that little amount of money and no Medicaid."

Eva Estelle Jackson, 70, lives alone in Montgomery, Ala., and has suffered from tuberculosis and ulcers. She now receives $132 a month in Social Security and $24 in welfare, but she has been told that the Social Security increase will raise her a few dollars above the welfare maximum she will therefore lose Medicaid, which paid several thousand dollars for three weeks she spent in hospitals last year.

"It's gonna hit me hard," Miss Jackson said. "If they'd just left me with a pension of $1 or $2, and Medicaid, I'd have been a lot better off. If I had some illness, I just don't know what I'd do. I'd just be in bad shape, because I've got nobody to fall back on."

Miss Jackson discovered that she will also have to pay a $2-a-month garbage collection fee to the City of Montgomery. Only those on welfare are exempted from the fee.

Another Montgomery resident, Emily Shepherd, 75, is now in the hospital, being treated for emphysema. When her $137-a-month Social Security check rises to $164, she will lose $66 in welfare from the state, ending up with $39 less a month than now, and no Medicaid.

At that point, her choices will be "either to go into a convalescent home or just go back to my apartment and die," she says. "It's the most ridiculous thing I ever heard of. They should have had a little forethought. They're just a bunch of meatheads in Congress."

In Las Vegas, the Social Security check of Henrietta G. Oberg, 78, will rise from $153 to $183 a month, but her $23 welfare payment will be eliminated as a result, leaving her $7 ahead, but without Medicaid. She is being treated for cancer. "What am I going to do?" she asked.

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mary Wright also lost Medicaid. "It will take it all away from me," she said of the Social Security increase. "I can't afford it. I'm having it all canceled. I got to pay my rent, clothes and feed myself. There's nobody else to do it for me. You can't get any glasses, can't get any teeth—anything you need you can't get."

The difficulties have also affected some younger people. Lennell Frison, 40, a father of 10 in Portland, Ore., is a former foundry worker whose arthritis put him out of a job two years ago. He and his wife, who has diabetes, were told recently that the Social Security rise would mean the end of welfare and the end of medical payments.

"Without that aid to the doctor, man, I don't know how we're going to make it." His wife, he says, works sometimes as a janitor at night, making about $100 a week. They had planned to try to buy the six-room house they now rent, he said, "But we're probably gonna lose it."

Mr. Frison has considered sending his 17-year-old son to work, but he is torn by powerful doubts. "I hate to take my oldest boy out of school, because then he'd be where I am I think I'd go back to work and punish myself instead. I can't stand up too long. My legs won't hold me. But it gets you. A man ain't nothing if he can't feed his children."

In Hazelwood, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis, Mr. and Mrs. Russell French face similar difficulties. Mr. French suffers from heart disease and diabetes, she from arthritis and rickets. Two of their children, Charles, 15, and Lorraine, 12, have rickets, and a third, Russell, is diabetic.

"It's the Medicaid that counts," said Mrs. French. "I figure it would cost us $100 a month just to keep my husband supplied with medicine." Neither she nor her husband can work; their Social Security comes to about $400 a month.

The family's physician, who asked not to be identified, confirmed that the French family needed constant medical attention. "Of all my families, this is the one that is probably the most in need," he said.

When Mrs. French was 10 years old and living in Corning, Ark., she recalled, her mother died because she could not get medical help. "If anyone thinks things have changed, they haven't," she said, "because the same thing probably will happen to us."

Social Security: When a Raise Is Not

(By Joe Blade)

Along with 29 million other Americans, Mrs. Mary Freed will get a 20-percent increase in her Social Security payments Oct. 3.

Big deal!

Mrs. Freed's monthly check will go up $27 to $162.40. Because of that increase:

Her rent will rise from $26 to $33 on her efficiency apartment administered as public housing in an old building at 1706 Stevens Av.

Her aid-to-the-disabled payments of $22 a month will cease. She will be over the limit ($78 plus rent) set by the state as the maximum financial aid level.

The medical assistance (Medicaid) program will drop her. She will be reinstated, however, as soon as she spends $80.40 on medical costs. Then she would go on Medicaid again, but only for six months.

She should spend that amount quickly because she takes medication for diabetes, a heart condition, pains in her legs, a steel ball in her shoulder and, not surprisingly, "nerves." Her total expenses are going to run at least $42.80 a month more because of that $27 increase in Social Security.

"Why in hell when a person gets to 65 and no good don't they take a person out and shoot him instead of torturing him to death?" she said. "I would if I was running things."

Mrs. Freed is a 65-year-old widow. She is one of millions of Americans who will benefit only slightly or not at all from the largest Social Security increase in history.

The reason: When an electioneering Congress approved the 20-percent boost with an eye on the elderly vote, it failed to make adjustments in other assistance programs.

It is the poorest of America's elderly who face tragedy as a result. It is they who most need extra income from Social Security as well as aid from other programs.

But because those benefits are based on income, they will lose much—or all—of that 20-percent boost. Some will lose the other assistance as well. It works like this:

Old Age Assistance such as aid to the disabled and to the blind must be cut virtually dollar-for-dollar as the recipient's income increases.

In 1970 Congress exempted $4 of that year's Social Security raise from cuts in Old Age Assistance. There was no such action this year. And that $4 exemption expires on Dec. 31 of this year.

Food stamps will be lost by 1,269 of Hennepin County's 4,359 Social Security recipients who now purchase them. Their income will rise above the maximum of $180 for a single person and $245 for a couple.

Another 2,297 persons will pay more for their stamps. For example, one 72-year-old man whose Social Security is going up $30 to $178.50 a month will pay $26 for $36 worth of stamps. He had been paying $24.

Public-housing rent is fixed at 25 percent of income after deductions for certain expenses. When a tenant's income goes up, a quarter of the increase is added to the rent.

Some tenants may be pushed above maximum incomes of $4,300 for single persons and $5,200 for couples, again figured after certain deductions.

But the extra income will not be a basis for eviction until the tenant's regular two-year eligibility review, promises James Lemley, director of management at the Minneapolis Housing and Redevelopment Authority.

Medicaid, or medical assistance for the poor, will be lost by about 700 of 1,700 Hennepin County Social Security recipients who now receive it.

Almost all of these persons will be returned, welfare department officials believe, after a "spend-down." If six months' income over maximum levels—$145 for individuals and $202 for couples plus a $4 "pass-through"—goes for medical expenses, they become eligible for the next six months.

Veterans pensions for impoverished veterans and their dependents also are reduced as income increases. However, the reduction is less than dollar for dollar and is least for recipients with the lowest incomes.

Furthermore, none of these pensions will be changed until the end of the year, giving Congress time to act.

The buck stops with Congress if the rules are to change. The state Legislature could raise the outdated standards in Old Age Assistance, but the Legislature does not convene until 1973.

A variety of bills have been introduced in Congress to eliminate taking back money through one program that was handed out through another.

Minneapolis Rep. Donald Fraser is one of 55 co-sponsors of a bill that would require the entire Social Security increase to be disregarded by other programs.

The problem is that the November election, which was a major cause of the problem, now is so near that Congress may adjourn before cleaning up the conflicts.

Social Security

(By Robert T. Smith)

Well, for those on Social Security we have good news and bad news today. First the bad news:

As you may know, President Nixon, who is up for reelection, ordered a "rent watch" the other day on housing of senior citizens on Social Security.

He said he wanted to make sure rents were not "illegally" raised because of the 20-percent increase in Social Security benefits that was to show up in checks Tuesday.

But it doesn't affect the 9,679 older people who live in public housing in the Twin Cities. Housing controlled by federal, state, or local governments is specifically excluded from the "rent watch."

Those in public housing, the poorest of the senior citizens, will have to live with the raise in rent that went into effect with their first check that included the raise in Social Security.

It doesn't make any sense, but those in public housing are in the minority and, therefore, aren't going to tip any elections one way or another.

Now for the good news:

It does affect the 106,000 elderly who live in private housing in the Twin Cities. That is 65,000 in Minneapolis and 41,000 in St. Paul.

If any of you feel your rents have been raised illegally, you can complain to the Internal Revenue Service (IRS). Just call: 725–7124.

The IRS has been ordered to check any rent complaints of Social Security people throughout Minnesota. Said Richard C. Voskull, IRS district director.

"We are urging landlords not to raise rents unless they are certain such increases are legal. In many cases landlords already have raised rents this year and must wait until 12 months have elapsed since that increase before raising rents again."

This does not include landlords with less than four units.

Landlords cannot raise rents beyond a maximum of 2.5 percent a year, unless there are improvements or increased taxes or services. A tenant must receive a detailed 30-day notice of any increases.

So what can the IRS do? They can order that illegal rents be stopped, that overpayments be returned and that the landlords be fined. The fine can be up to $5,000 under earlier wage-price stabilization guides.

Although anyone can be the victim of an illegal rent increase, the IRS is giving priority to those on Social Security.

Sen. Walter Mondale, who's also up for reelection has proposed a bill to Congress to prevent rent raises for Social Security recipients in public housing. But that may take some time.

Daphne Krause, director of the Minneapolis Age & Opportunities Center, long a fighter against giving the elederly raises and their taking them away, said:

"It's excellent that something is being done to protect those in private housing. Now let's get to work on the public housing. All a raise does for those people is help catch them up on the rising cost of living" Amen.

Mr. MONDALE. I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a series of pathetic letters from Minnesotans that show the cruelty of a situation in which elderly people expected the social security increase and then found that because of the way the law is written public housing rents went up, the food stamp entitlement disappeared, veterans pensions were reduced, they became ineligible for medicaid, and old age assistance was reduced. In one way of another, they found that all or most of the increase was taken away from them; and many found, as in the example I cited, that they end up losing a great deal of money through this increase. It becomes the cruelest form of revenue sharing—the money going through the hands of these old folks and being siphoned off by local governments.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,
July 28, 1972.

SENATOR MONDALE: I am very thankful to get our raise in Social Security. But I think when we get this raise that some of us will not be able to buy any more food stamps, and I think the Minneapolis Housing will raise our rents.

So I don't know if the raise will do some of us senior citizens any good. And the young people that are working will have to pay so much more taxes from their wages and I do not think they should have to pay any more taxes.

Let some of the rich people pay more taxes. Why all the loop holes for some. And I want to ask you some questions please answer these. Where do you stand on amnesty? The rights of the homosexual? And what do you think about the people who want to legalize marihuana? Please answer soon.

Sincerely,

MRS. E. M. HAND.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., August 17, 1972.

Mrs. E. M. HAND,
Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR MRS. HAND: Thank you for your message concerning the DFL platform.

As you may know, I have expressed my reservations about this platform on several occasions. In addition, I am concerned that because of the struggle over the controversial planks, the DFL was unable to take a position on many of the vital issues affecting most Minnesotans and most Americans. For example, I believe the Convention should have focused its attention on such crucial issues as tax reform, health care, environmental protection, housing, jobs, preservation of the family farm, financial security for the elderly, and consumer protection.

When the DFL Central Committee meets in the near future, I am hopeful that we will clearly state our party's position on these and other crucial issues.

In the meantime, I will continue to speak out on what I believe to be the most urgent concerns and needs of the people of Minnesota.

I am proud to have been a cosponsor of the 20 percent increase in Social Security benefits, which passed the Senate on June 30th and has now become law.

This measure, which also provides for regular cost-of-living increases to protect social security recipients from the destructive effects of inflation, should greatly improve the situation of elderly and handicapped citizens in Minnesota and throughout the nation.

With warm regards.

Sincerely,

WALTER F. MONDALE.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,
September 1, 1972.

SENATOR WALTER MONDALE: I have already read my notice. That my rent is to be raised $8.00 a month starting Oct. 1st. So I will have to pay $41.00 a month for my one room efficiency. I would be better off with out the Social Security raise. I have been getting $122.90 SS less $5.80 for Medicare. Then I need $34.53 pension. Now I will be receiving $147.20 SS.

That is what the Minneapolis Housing wrote in my letter when they wrote to tell me my rent would be raised and I will receive my $34.53 pension but I will be losing my food stamps. As one is only allowed an income of $78.00 a month to be able to buy Food Stamps. So the way I figure it I would be better off without the raise when I moved into this building. I paid $30.00 rent. Then when we received our last SS raise my rent was raised to $33.00 and now to $41.00. At first I paid $18.00 for $28.00 worth of Food Stamps. Then I paid $22.00 for $32.00 worth I think it was. But the last time I paid $22.00 and received $36.00 in FS. And I can do the same for Sept. But I don't think after Oct. that I will be able to buy F.S.

Sincerely,

MRS. E. HAND.

Hon. WALTER MONDALE,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: To identify myself. My husband was known in Crosby-Ironton. as "Charlie" the Telephone Man. He passed away Sept. 8th 1970. We had four daughters. Minnie. Annie. Evelyn, Fern, who attended school & graduated from high school there except Fern.

I am writing you concerning the increase in social security. Which actually is no increase at all. It was a great shock to me to be informed that the increase would be deducted from my old age assistance.

I have been receiving $115.10 in social security. And $30.00 in old age assistance. Giving me a total of $145.10.

My expenses is rent $80.00. Telephone $7.13, groceries $25.00, personal needs $25.00, insurance $5.00.

I understand that there is just one phase that. Makes this necessary to deduct from old age assistance. Or a veteran's pension.

This makes the most rediculous joke of something that is so vital to the life line of our elderly. Who are in need.

Respectfully,

Mrs. LYDIA M. TRIERWEILER.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,

Senator W. F. MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

HONORABLE SENATOR W. F. MONDALE: Why when you get a raise in Social Security does housing or "welfare" takes it from you, or if housing leaves your rent, off it comes from welfare. As it stands now I'm worse off than before the Social Security gave the 20% raise. I'm on A.D.

Figure up 70.40 and 58.00 leaves 128.00. Have been paying 45.00 rent. Takes most of the $58.00 "stamps." Clothing shoes are so expensive. I don't get a paper, no TV. No Radio. No Phone. I can't afford them. Housing offers trips to Duluth, Winona. I can't go they are to expensive. I hope and pray you can stop welfare from taking the 20% off. God Bless you, if you can work out some way to prevent the taking away of the small amounts we get in Social Security.

I thank you most kindly,

Miss CORNELIA M. ELLIOTT.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,
August 8, 1972.

SENATOR MONDALE: Thank you for answering my letter. The raise we will get in S.S. will do some Senior Citizen some good but for me I am not so sure. As I think it will put me just a few dollars over the limit for buying food stamps or our rent will be raised again I am sure. Please do not write to the Mgh. Housing but the last raise we got in SS we had our rent raised. My rent was only raised $3.00 a month but this $36.00 a year would buy me a new dress. And I sure wish I could buy Food Stamps after we get the Oct. raise in SS. But thanks anyway.

Sincerely,

Mrs. E. M. HAND.

CAMBRIDGE, MINN.,
September 17, 1972.

SENATOR MONDALE: I am much disappointed with what is taking place with our raise in S.S. My husband is 90 yrs. and a patient at a nursing home. I am 80 and living in a small apt. at public housing. Our S.S. for the two of us will amount to $310.30. I was paying $60.90 to the home in order that he would get some medical assistance. Beginning Oct. 1st I'll be paying $100.30. I am now paying $55.00 rent here and will be raised $11.00. So when I used to have $147.00 left I'll have $136 left if my figures are correct. What is the government doing to us old people? I appreciate what you are trying to do for us.

Sincerely,

ELLEN BIRCH.

Sen. Walter Mondale this week sent a letter to President Nixon urging the federal government to quit taking back "with one hand what we have given with the other." Specifically, Mondale called for release of $130 million authorized by Congress to meet the operating costs of public housing. The delay in releasing such funds has forced local public housing agencies to raise the rent of housing for the elderly.

But the biggest problem is lack of coordination among the agencies that are nibbling away at the elderly. Medicare, Old Age Assistance, the Minneapolis Housing Authority, the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development, state medical assistance, all are more or less operating as if the others didn't exist.

It's a terribly complicated mess, and there's no wonder that the elderly are confused and disappointed when they see their raises eaten up before they can buy an extra can of soup.

CUSHING, MINN.,
September 5, 1972.

Senator WALTER MONDALE.

DEAR SIR: I am enclosing the notice we got from the Morrison County Social Service office, Little Falls, Minn. Our social security checks are, Mr. Oothoudt $90.60, mine $61.90 and we each get $40 from welfare. Now we are advised that our Oct. payment will be reduced in the am't equal to the increased benefits. Senator I just haven't been able to keep up as it is and now to get a cut in our checks. Living is so terrible high, every thing is so very high, we pay taxes, insurance. We have payments.

We don't begin to have what is needed. Mr. Oothoudt is 79 yrs. old. A cripple from arthritis, can not do one thing, with a walker and wheel chair all to gather, for myself I am 69 yrs. and have a heart condition which means we have to hire so much work done and far more expense than one planned or expected. We have a 1961 Ford which is our only means of transportation and the car too needs repairs. Every week I take Mr. Oothoudt into Little Falls for shots for his legs which is added expense, instead of a decrease we need an increase in our checks.

I just cannot make the checks reach, not through no fault of ours. I am behind on my bills. We are two people that just don't like to beg or be on welfare, we have no other income, just our Soc. Sec. checks and welfare. I understand by this enclosed notice it would do us no good to go to our county welfare board about this matter.

I am taking this way in writing you for advice and what can be done, if our soc Sec checks were more in the first place and than a raise but we are in lower paym't of Soc Sec & I just don't know how I can manage—for us we aren't getting no raise give more on Soc Sec checks & taking less on Welfare—I would like to have this notice returned to us.

Thanking you so very much for your time & would appreciate any help you can give us.

Sincerely,

Mrs. V. A. DOTHFUDT.

IMPORTANT NOTICE, AUGUST 31, 1972

If you are receiving a Social Security payment, this Notice is to inform you that your October Public Assistance payment will be reduced in an amount equal to the increased benefit you receive from Social Security.

Public Law 92-336 which increases the Social Security benefits does not provide that these benefits can be passed along to the recipients of Public Assistance.

The County Welfare Board has no authority in this matter and must reduce Public Assistance payments in the amount of the Social Security increase.

JAMES A. ATKINSON,
Director, Morrison County Social Services.

ST. PAUL, MINN., September 15, 1972.

President RICHARD M. NIXON,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

MR. PRESIDENT: I am a 67 year old handicapped widow subsisting on Social Security and a railroad pension. My husband worked for 38 years for the Northern Pacific Railway and paid a high price for what he believed would be our nest egg, our guarantee that we would be comfortable and self-sufficient in our later years. This was to be separate and in addition to Social Security. My husband died at age 51.

When I became old enough to apply for Social Security, I immediately took a 33⅓% cut in my railroad retirement benefits. Now we are to receive a 20% increase in Social Security. Because of this increase, I am to be penalized by a further cut in my railroad retirement benefits. I understand that this raise in Social Security does not have the same effect on other pension plans such as that received by the telephone workers.

Should we who believed our wages were being taken for our own benefit and welfare, now be penalized again? Is this to happen again and again until our hard worked for nest egg is entirely gone?

It is a meager living as is with rising taxes, medical expenses going up all the time and promised rent raises. The 20% increase is eaten up and I will certainly not gain, but lose again!

Sincerely,

Mrs. PEARL LAGERSTEDT.

DULUTH, MINN., September 23, 1972.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: With the increase in Social Security we thought we would be able to keep up with the rising cost of grocery, fuel, garbage, and other necessities, but now we get a letter my husband's Old Age Assistance will be cut—maybe entirely—because of the raise in Social Security.

My husband gets a low social security. We sold our home years ago and live in an old trailer on some land we had left.

I am 61 but too ill to work anymore.

We do hope our democratic lawmakers will help us. A person hates to say too much—they might take everything away. I'm sending this clipping from the paper.

We hate charity, but we have worked hard all of our lives and paid our bills.

This social security boost was to help pay for the increase in living. I can't understand what they are trying to do to old people.

I trust you, Mr. Mondale and hope you will try your best to see that they won't cut us off this help.

Sincerely,

Mrs. HAROLD STARK.

KARTH SAYS ELDERLY BEING SHORTCHANGED

(By Lee Egerstrom)

WASHINGTON.—A 20 per cent increase in social security benefits approved by Congress this summer and a 10 per cent increase approved a year ago will mean no increased income for the elderly under several state welfare programs, a Minnesota congressman charged this week.

Rep. Joseph Karth, D-Minn., and fellow members of the House Ways and Means Committee have been besieged by senior citizens wondering what went wrong.

"All too often the Congress has found that when it raised the level of benefits for senior citizens the increase was eliminated by reduced state benefits," he said.

"It is totally contrary to the will of Congress and the will of the people for state legislatures to require their state welfare departments to reduce old age assistance benefits as the federal government raises them."

States that have de-escalating old age assistance benefits pull back state services as federal payments increase. In several states, including Minnesota, senior citizens can actually lose more in state benefits than the federal increase Congress intended to provide.

Karth said Minnesotans have informed him that the additional income from this summer's 20 per cent increase has pushed elderly people into higher income brackets, causing them to lose food stamp and state assistance benefits.

It has also required elderly persons to pay higher rents in federally assisted housing, he said.

"This is contrary to the purpose of the 20 per cent increase," Karth added. "Minnesota, I regret to note, is an unfortunate example of this kind of irresponsible action."

Karth and Rep. Donald Fraser, D-Minn., have introduced legislation with others that would direct both state and federal assistance programs to ignore the new social security hike.

The intent of the new legislation was to improve social security benefits and not offset other state or federal assistance reductions.

The Ways and Means Committee will hold hearings on the legislation next week, and committee members are confident that Congress will hurriedly pass correcting legislation before adjournment sometime this fall.

Aides of Chairman Wilbur Mills, D-Ark., are currently compiling a list of states where the 20 per cent increase is resulting in a reduction of state benefits and increased charges of other federal assistance programs. The list, as the committee checks around the nation, is growing longer.

Most states with old age assistance programs that are a prerequisite for medicaid benefits will jeopardize medicaid payments to senior citizens whose incomes are increased by the hike.

A Minnesota Welfare Department spokesman said his state's program, more liberal than in most states, won't jeopardize the medicaid benefits for most senior citizens on old age assistance.

But he acknowledged that Minnesota, like many states with county-administered old age assistance, will reduce county payments of assistance in ration with the social security increase.

"The unjust part is that persons with incomes high enough so they aren't on old age assistance will in fact get a social security raise," he said. "But persons on old age assistance, who really need the increase, will find that their total income has stayed the same."

Karth said his proposed legislation would require states to maintain current levels of assistance to senior citizens.

This provision would be, in governmentese, a "hold harmless" or "pass through" provision "grandfathering" in state benefits similar to program grants protected in the newly-passed federal revenue sharing bill.

A second part of the Karth legislation would protect the elderly from losing benefits or having increased charges in federally assisted programs.

Karth, who is as outspoken as Chairman Mills, said the senior citizen "is given an increase by one hand and has it taken away by another."

In a slap at Minnesota state legislators, he said that "many states apparently cannot be trusted to pass on the same level of benefits to their senior citizens when federal benefits are raised."

While Karth was unhappy about the effect on the social security increase in his state, the Ways and Means Committee reports that checks with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare (HEW) would indicate states that do not have medical programs would most adversely affect senior citizens.

RICHFIELD, MINN., September 25, 1972.

Hon. RICHARD M. NIXON,
White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR PRESIDENT NIXON: I am enclosing the column of Robert T. Smith, Minneapolis Tribune, dated September 15, 1972.

As many others are, I am greatly concerned over the plight of the senior citizens in our great country—you will note, John Stenen, referred to in the article, received a $9. a month raise in Social Security benefits about a year ago—then living in public housing his rent went up $5. a month—Medicare cost rose $1.40 a month—The Old Age Assistance people gave him $5. less a month—they would have eaten the whole $9.00 but for the "pass-through" law that prevented them from taking the first $4. of the raise. You will note the article further states "it didn't prevent the other from taking it, however."

Further—this man ended up paying $2.40 more than the $9. raise for the same benefits.

We are now on the threshold of another raise in the Social Security benefits—please, for goodness sakes, let everyone have the proper compassion for our elderly citizens and let them experience the joy of having a RAISE—people in Government employ get their substantial raises without having it systematically taken away from them—with all the pious attitudes of doing more for Social Security recipients—let those in the position to do so make it possible for them to keep the little extra—in some cases it is perhaps the only joy they have.

Sincerely,

DORA M. KNUDSON.

ST. PAUL, MINN., September 25, 1972.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: I read in the St. Paul Dispatch of the bill you were introducing to assure that all Social Security recipients received the full benefit of the 20 per cent increase in benefits. I certainly commend you for this.

That same day my mother who is receiving a small monthly allowance of $9.00 from Old Age Assistance, received a letter from their office stating her monthly allowance would cease as of October 1st as her income would otherwise be increased.

I hope you will be successful in getting this legislation passed.

Sincerely,

MRS. ROBERT O'BRIEN.

Hon. SENATOR WALTER MONDALE,
Washington. D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I would like to call your attention how Senior Citizens are being treated now that we get a 20% raise on Social Security. Other benefits are cut off, now, why do you not watch that the other benefits are kept up, we need much in our old age, as we are on a fixed income. Of years back our expenses and living is in this bracket. How do you think we keep going? If we would have an income like you folks high wages, we would not complain at all. Now in my own case I was in the hospital this spring about 3 weeks. Medicare cut me off on some of what they should pay because it was based on 1971 scale. This was a doctor's bill that raised their charges in 1972. But Medicare only paid on 1971 bases, so it cost me an extra $75.00. Now why can the doctor charge more after the scale was set.

See how we get beat! Hope you will look into this matter.

Sincerely,

EDWIN MANZ.

ALBANY, MINN., September 9, 1972.

Hon. WALTER MONDALE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. MONDALE: This is urgent! Unless Congress acts at once, those Senior Citizens on Old Age Assistance who get the 20% increase in Social Security on their October 3rd. check, will have that amount taken off their October 1st. Welfare Check. This is a deplorable situation for our elderly!

Unless the law is changed during this session, the Veterans on pension will also lose this 20% increase on their pension checks in January, 1973.

Any help you can give our Senior Citizens in regard to this, will be greatly appreciated.

My sincere thanks for all you have done for our elderly. Best wishes for your success in the coming election, I am,

Sincerely,

MRS. WARREN WEBER,
Stearns County Coordinator on Aging.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., August 1972.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
U.S. Senate, Old Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SIR: Will our grants be lowered when we receive our 20% increase in Social Security. They have always taken away before, was wondering if they will now—I hope not.

Also I'm in a Mpls Housing Project for Senior Citizens and I'm paying more than ¼ of my Total Income for Rent. I thought ¼ was the limit. Can anything be done to correct this. Thanking you kindly for your trouble.

I remain,

Miss CORNELIA ELLIOTT.

COON RAPIDS, MINN.,
September 13, 1972.

Mr. MONDALE: Will you help with the bill Don Fraser introduced in Congress to help us keep the small emergency help & our small S.S. raise we'll get Oct. 1st, Anoka Co. welfare wants to cut off my $12 assistance, my State & County Health card (food stamps), snow removal from my roof & drive way in winter. I fell off my roof trying to repair space between chimney block and tile. I hurt my left arm badly. Then last Feb. I fell on Anoka St. & injured my right arm. It ached all last nite. Medicine for my aching arms are very expensive & I need my health card for this. Nixon asked for this cut on the older people (I'm over 72) who can lease afford these cuts. With S.S. raise I'll be getting $156 which isn't enough to keep up home pay high taxes & taxes on my fuel oil light bill & many of Life's necessities. I hope you, Fraser, Frenzel & Humphrey will get busy & pass Fraser's bill so we can keep the little assistance ($12). I get & our small S.S. raise too. I'm writing these other Congressmen. Will you answer the $164 question for me? If the Fed Gov't donates ½ toward my assistance, the State gives ¼ & Anoka Co. donate only ¼ of assistance, why are they allowed to put a lien on my home for the full am't.?

My home is badly in need of repairs; I haven't had a refrigerator for 3 yrs, have no kitchen light or a decent bed to sleep in, they (A.C.V.) knows these facts but won't go over a certain State budget. This budget is so miserably low one can hardly exist on it. It's sub standard living. I have to hitch hike 5 miles to Anoka to get groceries.

Why can't we have a home program here like Sargent Schriber was head of to get people here to go help people, all over the world. I can't think of name of it right now. Why couldn't something like this be organised here to help older Sr. citizens keep their homes repaired and help them in many ways they can't afford to pay for this? This help has to pass and reach us before Oct. 1st.

When an older person needs to buy a home under Federal Housing program what, are some of the requirements to buy one? I'd rather be dead than live here this winter, the house is damp. Plaster or wall board is off ceiling of both bedrooms & heat goes out thru roof. I use too much fuel oil. Have no heat in kitchen so can't use bathroom.

Water pipes in kitchen froze up twice in last two years.

Please work with Frazer's bill, with Humphrey & Frenzel to help us forgotten Sr. citizens keep this little help we get & our S.S. too. Pres. Roosevelt said were all entitled to freedom from want & worry & agree with him.

That was Peace Corps which Sargent Schribber head. He was asked to give up his job opportunity position as he held two-Govt. jobs and he refused & kept both jobs for a long time.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,
September 20, 1970.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: Why does every one write to you, because you at least try to do something about things.

Here's my problem. The 20% increase to old people. Because of it many are forced to pay it right back, plus losing perhaps benefits from old age assistance or medical.

I plead with you to try to do something about it.

My Mother is one, she had security till now knowing her medicines and all her Doctor & Hospital would be taken care of by Medical Assistance. When she went on it she had too, as her savings of around $9,000.00 were all gone. She had liver cirrhosis was tapped around 85 times by Dr. Proshek. Medical records show this. She desperately needs all her medicines, pain pills, ucler & etc. She lives with us and thank God my Husband is good to her, but I only have an upstairs room no bathroom, meaning a commode to take care a necessity. She's on a special diet which means special food, so this totally runs to quite a bit.

We charge her $100.00 now but she was going to give us $125.00 which hardly takes care of her needs. The druggist totaled her acct. it runs around $25.00 or $28.00 a month. So she is to get $152.00 deduct that theres nothing, she was told to drop Minn Blue Cross when assistance took over. Now she doesn't even have that. She has around $225.00 in a saving after my Dad Died. What can she and other do.

Because she is $7.76 over she can not get medicine. I think this very unfair. Please bring this up and do something for these Dear old Senior Cits, and Country folks.

Certainly Congress could do something besides let them worry themselves to death. Ive had to give her nerve pills every day and thank God Im here or I dont know, but what of those that are without any one to love them.

It seems the young get all and old get nothing but bare necessities.

Please ans. somehow.

Sincerely,

MRS. S. ANDERSON.

SEPTEMBER 18, 1972.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: You know I got the letter receiving a increase in Social Security which is real good, but also they raised my rent & food stamps are less.

Now Saturday I received a notice from the finance Department of Welfare which I'm on Medicare. I was just getting ready to have my teeth extracted on account of when I had the cardiac arrest my mouth was so closed so tight that they broke off all my bottom teeth & my upper are nothing but roots.

Now they say I won't be eligible for Medical assistance & my case will be closed starting Oct. 1, 72 & I have heart medicine which is I suspect & asthma water pills & valium I got to take protein on account of clogging in my blood.

Also certain Medicine from the Dermatologist for my legs that my vein's broke & itch & I have had blood clots & ulcers. I need this medicine badly. If I pay for all this I won't be able to eat. I need boots & shoes so badly for winter. Also I have a bad upper respiratory trouble & Christian Weber describes which at the time is no cure. What are they trying to do to us? We get a little raise & all this comes up. I don't know what to do.

I have to have my medicine. I carry it where ever I go in case if I get short of breath & can't breath.

This raise does not seem to help matters its going to make things worse.

President Nixon should be in some of our shoes. Please tell me what to do.

Thank you so much. God bless you & I hope we go all the way I mean democratic way in Nov.

Please as soon as possible. I haven't had any rest just worrying what is ahead of us. from Mae E. Nulsen, 2728 Franklin 55406 over apt. 2003.

I'll get $151.10 in Oct. My rent raised 6.00 & less food stamps. I also pay for like aspirin & vaper rub, Listerene & all other medicines except what the Dr. prescribed & it has upset my health.

I'm so nervous which hasn't helped my asthma any.

My medical bill runs pretty high especially the heart medicine. I'll have less money then I ever did to get along on.

Thank you for listening.

Hon. WALTER MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: The Minneapolis Senior Worker's Association, a group of profession Social Workers serving the elderly of greater Hennepin County, wish to express our wholehearted support of the current efforts to disregard the recent Social Security increases when computing eligibility for and benefits from other Federal programs.

We can't believe the intent of the recent Social Security increase was to work to the detriment of the poorest and most needy of our population.

Please exercise whatever influence you can to right this injustice being perpetrated against those who built this great Country.

Sincerely,

MINNEAPOLIS SENIOR WORKER'S ASSSOCIATION,
(Representing over 50 agencies providing services to older adults).

SEPTEMBER 23, 1972.

DEAR SIR: I think the elderly should be able to buy Food Stamps because of the increase in S.S. lot of people won't be able to buy them.

And on medicare they should get glasses and dentures, also reduced rates on travel like the students get they have these whole life ahead of them.

The unwed mothers get A.C.D. all medical bill paid and care buy food stamps.

Sincerely,

F. A. NIVALA.

CITY OF MINNEAPOLIS,
September 28, 1972.

Hon. WALTER F. MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. MONDALE: The Minneapolis Board of Public Welfare, at its meeting September 22, 1972, unanimously concurred in the attached resolution adopted by the Minneapolis City Council September 22, 1972, urging the Congress of the United States, the Minneapolis Housing Authority and other involved agencies to change any policies which tend to negate the recent increase in Social Security benefits.

Further, the Board of Public Welfare directed its Secretary to communicate this Board action to all U.S. Congressmen from the State of Minnesota and to the members of the Minneapolis Housing Authority.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT S. ERVIN, Secretary.

RESOLUTION

Urging the Congress of the United States, the Housing Authority and other involved agencies to change any policies negating the increases in Social Security benefits.

Whereas, Social Security benefits were recently raised to help keep pace with the higher cost of living; and

Whereas, as a result of these small increases in Social Security the rent in public housing is being raised; and

Whereas, a large number of persons receiving the higher Social Security benefits will lose other benefits such as Medicaid and Aid-to-the-Disabled; and

Now, therefore, Be it Resolved by the City almost exactly the same amount as the income was raised by Social Security; and

Whereas, the end result is that a great number of Social Security recipients will actually lose more than they gained from the recent "increase";

Now, therefore, Be it Resolved by the City Council of the City of Minneapolis:

That the Congress of the United States, the Housing Authority in and for the City of Minneapolis, and any other involved agencies be strongly encouraged to take immediate action to change their policies which would unfairly negate the small increases in Social Security which were intended to keep step with the cost of living.

Be it Further Resolved that a copy of this resolution be sent to each member of the U.S. Congress from the State of Minnesota and to the members of the Minneapolis Housing Authority.

Adopted by the Minneapolis City Council, September 22, 1972.

Re: Program for aging.

Hon. WALTER MONDALE,
U.S. Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: I am writing to urge you to do what you can to assist the elderly Social Security recipient in realizing a real gain in his most recent increase.

Currently, the increase will have an adverse effect on many who are borderline eligible for food stamps, Medicaid and O.A.A. They will also have their rent raised if they reside in subsidized housing.

Please do what you can to enact legislation to prevent this injustice.

Sincerely,

RICHARD A. FLESHER, ACSW,
Coordinator, Program for the Aging.

Senator WALTER MONDALE,
U.S. Senate, Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: Much has been written in the newspapers recently regarding the inequities experienced by our senior citizens as a consequence of a raise in their social security benefits. In our practice we have many such patients. Enclosed is a copy of a letter written on behalf of one such patient. She will be penalized by being deprived of certain benefits and thus this so-called raise turns out to be no raise at all.

I would like to add my voice in protest against this injustice and I hope that the members of the legislature will tackle this prickly problem now and not postpone it until after the elections.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM B. TORP, M.D.

Re: Mrs. William (Ellen) Hall.

HENNEPIN COUNTY WELFARE DEPARTMENT,
Minneapolis, Minn.

DEAR SIR: Mrs. William Hall told me that she recently received a letter from you stating that her medical assistance for drugs will be discontinued as of October 1st. She states that this letter indicated an increase in social security was the reason for this. I do not know the amount of money involved in her increase in social security but I do know that along with this she is also getting an increase in her rent.

Mrs. Hall uses a large amount of medicine each month, the amount of which exceeds the amount of her social security increase.

I respectfully request that you reconsider the patient's case as I think she should be eligible for aid to cover her prescription drugs.

Yours truly,

WILLIAM B. TORP, M.D.

Senator MONDALE.

DEAR SIR: Please work hard to defeat any bill that will deprive lower income senior citizens of their right to receive low income housing, food stamps, medicare, etc., etc., which they now have.

Thank you,

Respectfully,

MRS. HORACE SHELDON.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.,

Senator WALTER MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: I am a World War I veteran's widow, which allows me a widow's pension according to my income.

As you are aware, beginning October 3 there is an increase in Social Security which I desperately need in the face of the inflationary cost of living; and naturally have been happily anticipating.

But there is a cloud over the picture, because of the underlying fear that much of that increase will be lost unless the income allowance for veterans widows is increased accordingly.

I will be most grateful if you will please give this matter your attention.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

MRS. HAZEL E. BRUHN.

Rudy Boeser, being first duly sworn, deposes and says the following:

My name is Rudy Boeser and I live at 3125 Grand Avenue, South Minneapolis, Minnesota. I am 65 years old. I believe I am affected by the recent 20% increase in social security benefits in the following way:

Gross income before increase, $143.00; after increase, $171.00.

Rent before increase, $108.00; after increase, $118.00.

State Medical Assistance Program before increase, yes, all medical bills paid; after increase, none, until I spend down $26.00 per mo.

Estimated medical expenses per month before increase, $63.00; after increase, $63.00.

Net income, before increase, $35.00; after increase, $27.00—net loss, ($8.00).

In addition I have been notified that I will lose my Medical Assistance identification card that assures vendors of medical goods and services that they will be paid. I fear I will have difficulty obtaining some medical goods and services in the future without this identification card.

The social security increase as it now operates will take money away from me, not give me more money. The increase under these circumstances constitutes a taking of my property without due process of law. I therefore request the Social Security Administration cease and desist from taking money from me by giving me this increase.

EFFORT TO ASSIST SENIOR CITIZENS

Daphne Krause, being first duly sworn, deposes and says the following:

I am the Executive Director of the Minneapolis Age and Opportunity Center, Inc., located at 1715 Stevens Ave., Minneapolis, Minnesota 55403. Our organization's purpose is to assist Senior Citizens to remain living independently by providing to them medi-supportive services. Our services are presently classified in eleven elements:

Home Delivered Meals Program;
Employment Services;
Homemaker Services;
Chore Services (Handyman);
Transportation Services;
Legal Services;
Counseling Services;
Information and Referral;
Volunteer—Social—Education; Health Services; and Advocacy.

Virtually all the Senior Citizens we serve have gross incomes below recognized poverty levels under both State and Federal standards. This being so they have qualified for assistance under various assistance programs including the Federal food stamp program, the State old age assistance program, State and Federal subsidized housing programs, Aid to the Disabled, and Aid to the Blind, and the State medical assistance program.

Many of the poorest Senior Citizens will be adversly affected by the 20% increase in social security benefits the Social Security Administration proposes to force upon them. The eligibility requirements for the above mentioned programs are not the same nor do they dovetail. This being the case the present 20% increase will in many instances make individuals no longer eligible for some programs and reduce benefits from others resulting in a net raise in income of less than 20% or no net change in income at all—a dollar given by one hand, a dollar taken away by another hand—or an actual loss in net income.

Those Senior Citizens receiving State Old Age Assistance grants are finding that the State law requires the amount of the raise in Social Security benefits be deducted from their Old Age Assistance grant starting October 1, 1972. In addition, the $4.00 Senior Citizens were allowed to keep (exempt from State determination of gross income) from their last Social Security raise through the "Pass-Through" bill will also be deducted after December 1972 when the effect of that bill expires. It should be noted that the standard of need of this assistance is now two years old, in spite of the increase in the cost of living.

Because of the Social Security raise Senior Citizens living in Minneapolis Housing and Redevelopment Authority highrises or other subsidized housing are now receiving notices that their rents will be increased by slightly less than one-quarter of the Social Security raise effective October 1, 1972.

There are approximately 4,200 Senior Citizens receiving Food Stamps in Hennepin County. With the Social Security raise approximately 1,400 of those Seniors already on Food Stamps in Hennepin County will find they are no longer eligible.

The State Medical Assistance program is available to Senior Citizens with incomes of less than $145.50 a month for a single person or $202.00 for a couple. Medicare does not cover many of the costs of obtaining health care, and in effect prevents many Senior Citizens from seeking all the health care they need because of its requirement that Senior Citizens pay the first $68.00 of hospital costs and the first $50.00 of doctor's and out-patient costs in any given year and to pay percentages of other costs. For Senior Citizens without the ability to pay these small, but to them significant sums, this becomes a barrier towards obtaining medical care. The result of the social security increase is to make many Senior Citizens now ineligible for medical assistance.

The state administered aid to the blind and aid to the disabled programs have their own requirements. These social security increases will raise the income of some persons so as to make them ineligible for these programs.

A typical Senior Citizen who will actually lose money as a result of the social security increase has the following circumstances. He lives alone in subsidized housing. His previous income (social security only) was $140 per month; his rent was 25% of that or $35.00; he qualified for medical assistance and all his medical bills were paid thereby; his medical expenses were about $23.00 per month. With the 20% social security increase his income will be $168.00; his rent will be $42.00; he will not qualify for medical assistance until he has "spent down" his gross income over a period of time to below $145.00. His net cash situation since he now is "able" to pay all his medical bill is worsened by $2.00.

Aside from the harsh blow this decrease in net income has to Senior Citizens in general, those who lose their medical assistance eligibility will lose their identification cards that enabled them to obtain medical goods and services from vendors without question as to payment. Now many vendors will be wary of providing goods and services knowing the Seniors may not be able to pay and knowing they have no legal recourse if that turns out to be the case.

Since these increases have the effect on some individuals of actually reducing their net incomes and in decreasing the availability of medical assistance to others we feel there is a taking of property without due process of law.

DAPHNE H. KRAUSE.

Dated: September 22, 1972.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I associate myself with what the Senator has said.

Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senators MONDALE and HUMPHREY in cosponsoring amendment No. 1675 to H.R. 1, the "Social Security Amendments of 1972."

On June 30, the Congress upheld its obligation to 28 million Americans who had found that social security was not providing them security. We rightly spunoff the social security increase from the measure before us and enacted a 20-percent across-the-board social security benefits increase.

Those who benefited have expressed their gratitude in thousands of letters I have received and I think in the hundreds and thousands of letters that many of my colleagues have received.

Yet many beneficiaries rightly point out that the Federal Government is taking away with one hand what it is providing with the other.

Elderly beneficiaries who need old-age assistance to supplement their meager social security check, find that their OAA payments are cut back proportionally to this increase. The intent of Congress to provide additional security was thus threatened, but last Friday we headed off this threat with the adoption of Senator CRANSTON'S amendment—for those who live in public housing and, as my colleague from Minnesota has just pointed out, who pay rent under the so-called Brooke amendment formula who find that their increased benefits are eroded by upward revision in their rent. Senators will recall that that amendment set a 25-percent limitation on rents, as we found persons who had been paying as much as 50 to 60 percent of their income for rent.

Enlightened legislation was reported by the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, on which my colleague serves as a very distinguished member and who is very much interested in and has performed a great service in this field, to protect those paying more than 25 percent of their income for rent. But now, social security recipients are being assessed more money as a result of the increase in social security, which certainly is contrary, I think, to the spirit if not the letter of the law.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, we have had many examples of such rent increases where housing authorities have been under heavy financial burdens, partly because the funds appropriated under the Brooke formula have not been released by the Office of Management and Budget to the housing authorities who produce the housing. As a result, the housing authorities rush to raise rents and many of the public housing recipients receive notices increasing their rent before they receive the check increasing the social security. This is the cruelest form of revenue sharing that I have ever heard of, to take money from the poor that way. As the Senator knows, they use the Brooke amendment as an excuse to take the maximum rent rather than the minimum, which is totally wrong.

Mr. BROOKE. The Senator is right. Many charges are made in the mail that I receive, and I am sure the same is true of other Senators in this field, that we are giving with one hand and taking back with the other.

Let me say that I commend the administration for initiating its "rent watch" to prevent landlords from taking advantage of the social security increase. Should not we in the Congress conduct our own rent watch and make sure that local housing authorities do not take advantage of the few extra dollars their elderly tenants are now receiving? The answer is clear: I think that we should.

For veterans, who now receive assistance based on their service to our country, the dilemma is the same. What extra income they receive under social security will be undone by a decrease in their veterans' pensions.

Those who now receive food stamps are threatened with a loss of eligibility for this essential assistance. In effect, they may lose more than they have gained by the increase in social security. So it is a net loss to them rather than a gain, as we had expected when we voted the social security increase.

The amendment proposed by the Senators from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE and Mr. HUMPHREY), which I am privileged to cosponsor, expands on the earlier amendment of Senator CRANSTON. It simply seeks to carry out the previously expressed intent of Congress to increase the monthly cash incomes of social security beneficiaries. Our amendment proposes to disregard for the purposes computing veterans' benefits, Brooke amendment rent levels, and food stamp eligibility, the individual income derived from the social security increase. That is a simple amendment which I think is clear and should be well understood.

Mr. President, this amendment is consistent with and necessary to carry out our intent to increase the incomes of 28 million Americans. Without this amendment, millions will find the widely acclaimed benefits increase was, in effect, an empty promise. I urge Senators to favorably consider this amendment, and I commend the distinguished Senators from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE and Mr. HUMPHREY) for proposing it.

Mr. MONDALE. I appreciate the very fine comments of the Senator from Massachusetts. They are most helpful.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Minnesota yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. HARTKE. Is the provision for the veterans still in?

Mr. MONDALE. I will shortly move to modify my amendment to delete that provision because, as the Senator knows, under the leadership of the Senator from Indiana, the Veterans' Committee has reported an alternative measure. With that in mind, I will modify my amendment accordingly.

Mr. HARTKE. I want to pay my respects to the Senator from Minnesota for bringing this up. The only reason the Veterans Committee preferred to work in a different fashion referred to the administration of veterans pensions, where the method by which we will provide is somewhat different.

Let me address myself to the basic concept. The whole reason for the 20-percent increase in social security was to provide more money for those on social security.

Mr. MONDALE. Precisely.

Mr. HARTKE. It was not the intention at this time to penalize anyone. In fact, it was not the intention to put anyone in a worse situation. We were trying to make sure that everyone would be adequately provided for and that we would have the increase in the cost of living also taken care of.

Now here we find a paradoxical situation, which recurs time and time again, because of a worn out welfare system, and a worn out housing approach. The whole system of social programs created in the 1930's are now out of date and worn out. They do not serve their purpose any more. They are not breaking the welfare cycle. Here we see a situation where a social security amendment is being utilized to put these people back further behind than they were before.

I want to congratulate the Senator and all those who have joined in this measure. There will be some opposition to it because they will say we are amending some other law. The law needs a lot more amending than being amended by this amendment, including our housing laws and food stamp laws—and anything else.

What we should do is that those people in charge of these projects should review the situation and come back at the next Congress and give us an up-to-date system which makes those who are presently on welfare, against their wishes, have some dignity.

The trouble with this bill—and I repeat it to the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee—H.R. 1, is that it does not break the welfare cycle. No wonder people are fed up with it. The people paying the bill, they are mad at it. The people receiving the money under the bill, they are mad at it. That is just about everyone. When everyone is fed up, it is very much time for a change. So I endorse the Senator's amendment and commend him for his efforts.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator from Indiana for his leadership on this issue.

I now yield to my colleague, Mr. HUMPHREY.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, this amendment is simple, elemental justice. The case for it has been stated brilliantly and poignantly by my colleague, Mr. MONDALE, and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE).

What we did in the interest of social security was to offer with one hand a 20-percent increase and what we believed would be cash benefits for literally hundreds of thousands and millions of Americans. We took out the 20 percent and more by denying them under present rules and regulations benefits which they could get under medicaid, benefits which they could get under public housing, benefits which they could get under food stamp programs.

Congress has no intention of doing that. As has been stated here, this whole series of assistance programs for the needy needs to be reviewed.

Social security comes to people as a right.

It is an insurance program, and that insurance program ought not in any way to diminish the assistance which we give the needy, the sick people, the people that are disabled.

I joined the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) in his amendment which applied to those on old age assistance, to the disabled, the blind, and the deaf, so that benefits that they deserve would be coming to them without having those benefits diluted or removed because of rules and regulations in the fields of medicare, medicaid, housing, and food stamps.

What we are seeking to do here is to help those on social security, as distinguished from those on old age assistance, to see to it that those who are to get the 20-percent increase that was legislated by this Congress will get it and that they will not lose in the process.

Frankly, I got to the point where I thought, in view of what was happening, that we ought to give people who are on social security a choice as to whether they want the 20-percent increase or whether they want to reject that increase. The fact is that many who would get the 20-percent increase would be much worse off than if they had never received it at all.

My senior colleague has made the case. He has called our attention to several articles and has had them printed in the RECORD, so I shall not ask that it be done.

The New York Times article to which my colleague referred is very revealing as to what the 20-percent increase has done to so many older Americans. The article in the Minneapolis Star reveals a story of hardship and of disillusion that took place in the State of Minnesota when our people thought they had a 20-percent increase in social security and ended up by being worse off.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, in the case of Mrs. Freed, who received a 20-percent increase in social security:

> Her total expenses are going to run at least $42.80 a month more because of that $27 increase in Social Security.
> "Why in hell when a person gets to 65 and no good don't they take a person out and shoot him instead of torturing him to death?" she said. "I would if I was running things."

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I cannot help feeling that the Senate will overwhelmingly support the amendment. I realize that there is a jurisdictional problem. Some will say that it should have gone to another committee. The public does not care about that. What the public wants is simple justice. The public wants us to do what is right and does not want us to worry about committee jurisdiction.

I compliment my senior colleague on the diligent work he has done with respect to this matter as he has with respect to so many other matters that are related to the needs of our people.

Mr. President, last week I offered my amendment that would exclude the 20-percent social security increase given to recipients of both social security and food stamps from being counted as income when calculating the amount of bonus stamps a recipient can receive. In order to expedite action on this important matter I have joined with my colleague Senator MONDALE in cosponsoring the amendment.

Mr. President, when I was back home in Minnesota, some of my constituents contacted me about the social security increase—an increase that faded away due to rules and regulations that consumed every dollar of increase in social security payments. Here is why:

Rent increased;

Disability and old age payments were dropped;

People became ineligible for food stamps, because they now had too much money;

Some tenants in the public housing and elderly housing were pushed above the maximum incomes;

Medicaid assistance would be lost; and Veterans pensions reduced.

Mr. President, no matter how you cut it—getting a social security increase for some and then seeing overall benefits reduced for others is wrong and cruel.

The least we can do is to provide that the social security increase will be passed through—without affecting eligibility for other critical programs.

Mr. President, many newspaper articles in recent days have described the predicament of older Americans resulting from this so-called social security increase. These articles clearly show the plight of our elderly. For example, just in Hennepin County alone, 1,269 of the county's 4,359 social security recipients who purchase food stamps will lose the right to purchase these stamps. Another 2,297 elderly persons will pay more for the stamps.

I am aware that the Senate Finance Committe's bill has a social security disregard provision—increasing the benefits to old age, blind, and disabled recipients. I applaud the committee in taking this step. And I also joined with the distinguished Senator from California, Senator CRANSTON, in an amendment that provides for increasing the standard of need for aged recipients of both public assistance and social security.

However, we are faced with a hard, difficult problem. The social security increase goes into effect now—the Senate Finance Committee's bill and the Cranston-Humphrey amendment will come into being at a later date—sometime after the first of next year.

Mr. President, I believe that we simply must act now—to preserve the recipients rights to purchase food stamps, to protect the reality of his social security increase, and to show our faith and trust in elderly Americans.

Some have argued that it is inequitable to have different standards of food stamp purchase prices for social security old age recipients, and other welfare recipients. Mr. President, that is a problem. But, it is a problem that I believe can be solved easily by the Department of Agriculture if they would only use a little imagination and move with speed to meet a serious problem.

The Department of Agriculture can adjust its purchase requirements—it does so all the time. And, we here in the Congress have just given the Department a boost in its food stamps budget. So I say, take some of that money, and make the necessary adjustments to cover the elderly, the blind, and disabled I am talking about here.

Mr. President, I say that we must do this. We should ask ourselves—if we do not do it, then we at least ought to give those social security and old age assistance recipients the right to refuse a social security increase.

After all, it is not their fault that we passed a social security increase. It is not their fault that we are penalizing them.

How ironic it would be—an increase that really is not. An attempt to lift some of the financial burden off the elderly only puts more of a financial burden on them.

I say let us place the burden on the agencies that can and should respond. Let us place the burden in the departments that have the means and ability to solve this problem.

I ask that the Senate support this amendment to allow older Americans to keep their food stamps.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I am most grateful to my colleague.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maine and will then yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I compliment the distinguished Senator from Minnesota for offering this amendment. I have listened to the debate. I think the issues have been eloquently and fairly covered. I suspect, from the examples that each of these Senators has brought to the attention of the Senate, as well as the examples which exist in my own State, that what we are talking about are not isolated cases. We are talking about the results of this increase that spreads across the country and hits tens of thousands of elderly people.

Three basic points have been made this morning that bear repeating. First of all, it was the intent of the Congress to increase the income of these elderly people. The increase resulted, in many instances, in a decrease. The second point that needs to be made clear is the point raised by the distinguished junior Senator from Minnesota, namely that these people are given no choice as to whether they will get the benefit of an increase that results in a net increase. I think that is unconscionable.

I would then like to touch upon the other point. It is said that this amendment will be opposed, and I gather that it will be opposed because of the legislative and statutory action and the jurisdictional problems involved.

While we preoccupy ourselves with this problem of legislative neatness and work out all the entangled jurisdictional lines that result from the social security increase, thousands of elderly people will suffer. That was not the intent of Congress. Why do we not act together to straighten out these tangled legal and jurisdictional lines with a view to doing that which was expressed by the Senator from Minnesota. We need to take all possible steps to assure justice for the elderly who have been disillusioned by the action of a generous Congress.

The article in the New York Times to which the Senator referred has this statement:

"This is a form of psychological deceit practiced upon senior citizens," said C. Christophor Brown, head of the law reform unit of the Baltimore Legal Aid Bureau. "The government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other."

Yesterday I visited briefly in a community center in Buffalo, N.Y., where I spoke with many senior citizens. All of them looked forward to the social security increase which Congress has legislated. Many of them will now be bitterly disillusioned by the consequences of that generous act of the Congress. I say it is the responsibility of Congress to right this injustice which has been unwittingly and unintentionally visited upon so many thousands of our elderly citizens.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MUSKIE. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, we are not talking about welfare recipients. We are talking about people who have worked all of their lives and put aside some little portion of their income as savings in the hope that as they got older they would be able to enjoy some of the necessities of life. They had no idea that we could be in a period of inflation, as we are at present.

What has happened is that as prices have increased, the cost of food, rent, clothing, and other things has escalated, while at the same time the value of a dollar has gone down. So the people who are most affected by this are those who are living on fixed incomes, mainly social security, pensions, and the rest.

So we in Congress recognized that we did not have any way to provide a built-in cost-of-living increase. So we finally came up with a 20-percent increase in social security. These people had every reason to believe that if they got a 20-percent increase in social security, it would mean that they would have a little more money to pay for the increase in rent, food, clothing, and the other things.

These people never really get the luxuries of life, because they have precious few, if any, luxuries of life. They are barely living.

We come along and say, "All right. We will give you a 20-percent increase in social security. However, at the same time we will increase your rent and cut back on the other benefits that you can possibly get." As has been well pointed out time and time again, this results in a net loss rather than in any increase.

I am sure that when the junior Senator from Minnesota suggested that he was even thinking of an amendment which would give them an opportunity to accept or reject the 20-percent increase, he thought it would be a good suggestion, because at least those who would lose by virtue of receiving a 20-percent increase could reject it. That suggestion was not facetious at all. It makes a lot of sense. Unless we correct these inequities, we are compounding the problem for the very people that we have been trying to help by the 20-percent increase. Is that not basically what this is about, no more, and no less?

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, what we have done—unwittingly as I said before—is not to realize that there will be an inflationary pressure that will now explode because of this increase and there will be an increase in the cost of housing and food, against which we were hoping to insulate them by our action. The Senator is so right. I can see that there is not a neat legislative answer to the problem. However, there is an answer, and that answer is the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I have a committee meeting that I am scheduled to attend.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I had promised to yield next to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. That is all right. The Senator may proceed.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, it seems to have been my day to be Don Quixote. And I know that I will probably get run over again on this amendment. However, I think the RECORD should show that the amendment has a very interesting effect. Even though public housing rent under the present law is increased as a person's income increases, since the rent paid for public housing is determined not by the space a person occupies, but by the relation of income to that value, this amendment provides that if a person is in public housing on September 1, then this social security increase of 20 percent cannot be reduced to reduce the rent, which would be possible under present law. That is very interesting, and I can understand the humanitarian reasons for supporting it.

But if one was not in public housing on September 1, but moved in on September 2, then the present law applies.

Those who were in public housing on September 1 are forever free of any increase in their rent because of an increase in social security; and since there will be automatic increases in social security, there will be no decrease in their rent because of food stamps.

So we are setting aside one group of people in public housing because they were lucky enough to be there on this date and we say, "Your rent cannot be reduced, but if you moved into public housing thereafter, the present law applies and your rent can be reduced."

This has another interesting side effect. There are not enough public housing units to go around for everyone. This is going to say to those lucky people, "You stay in there, no matter how high your income goes, so long as it comes from these two sources you will not be required to leave public housing because your income exceeds the maximum." But the man who was not there that day and his income does exceed that amount. he can be required to move out.

So we will be saying these people who were so fortunate to be in public housing that day will be able to stay there, while others who have not been able to get into public housing, and their need may be much greater, and there is no room, can be kept out.

Mr. President, that is the statement I want to make. I know the amendment will be accepted, but the RECORD should show it is creating an interesting situation for a very fortunate group of individuals, who were fortunate to be in public housing on that date.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I must say that is not my understanding of the amendment. I have a different understanding of the meaning of the amendment. The amendment states:

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in the case of any individual who is entitled for any month after August 1972 to a monthly benefit under the insurance program established by title II of the Social Security Act, any part of such benefit which results from (and would not be payable but for) the general increase in benefits under such program provided by section 201 of Public Law 92-336, or which results from (and would not be payable but for) any cost-of-living increase in such benefits subsequently occurring pursuant to section 215(i) of the Social Security Act, shall not be considered as income or resources or otherwise taken into account for purposes of determining the eligibility of such individual or his other family or the household in which he or she lives for participation in the food stamp program under the Food Stamp Act of 1964, for surplus agricultural commodities under any Federal program providing for the donation or distribution of such commodities to low-income persons, for admission to or occupancy of low-rent public housing under the United States Housing Act of 1937.

It is clear this amendment applies not to date of occupancy of a public housing unit, but the treatment of money given by way of a social security increase.

Mr. HUMPHREY. If the Senator will yield, and the date of increase in social security. From that time, the 20 percent and cost of living shall not be considered for other public assistance programs provided under the law. That is the point of the amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. In other words, it is not the date of public housing occupancy. That date is in there solely to identify increased social security money that cannot be taxed for public housing rent increases, or to reduce food stamps.

So I disagree with the Senator.

Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 3 minutes remaining.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it was once by privilege to serve on the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, and to serve on the Subcommittee on Housing. Back at that time I suppose I could be expected to be an expert on housing problems. I regret that was some time ago. It was at least 10 years ago and probably more like 20. This Senator has not had the opportunity to be an expert on housing problems, as are those who serve on the committee. From time to time he protested to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs when they were proposing to act on something that appeared to come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance; and he has protested to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare when they proposed to go into a matter that appeared to come under the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance.

In this case, if I had my preference, or as the saying goes, if I had my druthers, I would like to stay out of the jurisdiction of other committees.

In other words, I would say, "If you will get your committee together and your people on the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs and agree what you think should be done about a housing problem, for lack of a better answer I will agree to it on the face of it, with the prima facie presentation," such as has been made here. In the case of the Committee on Agriculture, which initiated the food stamp program and would like to get it agreed to on a bill from the Committee on Finance, I would say, "Just tell us what you want to do about food stamps." If they want to come back on top of our bill, that is all right. "Tell us what your committee wants to do about this, and we will try to cooperate with you. If you want to use the Finance Committee bill to solve that problem, we will cooperate." For lack of a better answer I would say the same thing with respect to the Veterans' Committee, whose jurisdiction once was in the jurisdiction of the Committee on Finance.

Here is our problem, Mr. President. When we undertake to raise the income of people under social security, of course, a great deal of the purpose is to eliminate poverty and to lift people out of need, so they will not find it necessary to seek public welfare assistance, and so they will not find it necessary to seek some of the other need-related programs for the poor.

For example, it was the Senator from Louisiana who proposed to the committee that we should say for all the old people who have been working under social security coverage that they would get at least $200 a month. Just because they were poor all of their working years does not mean they have to be poor all of their lives. Many people live a long life between now and the time that God calls them home and hopefully they would be out of poverty at some point. Hopefully a man and his wife would be able to get $300 a month. Sometime before the good Lord calls them home the grandfather should be able to take the grandmother out to a steak dinner, or in some other area perhaps a lobster dinner or perhaps a chicken dinner, the Senator from Arkansas suggests. The Senator from Arkansas seems to think that is the best of all.

But in any event, provide enough income so that even if someone never did have a job providing good wages, at some point in his retirement years he would be able to live beyond the poverty level and enjoy those things we would like to have for all Americans at a minimum. When we do that we lift people out of poverty, and we do that in this bill.

Included in this bill are people 65 years of age and over. We will move almost all of them out of poverty under this bill, and leave it to the capability of every State in the Union if they want to, with the windfall they will have under their State budgets, to take care of the small proportion that we failed to move out of poverty with this bill. With their windfall that the States will receive when this bill is in operation, there is no reason why any aged person in America should be left in poverty. It costs a lot of money to do that.

But then we get into other problems that arise. For example, here is a family in public housing. We proceed to lift that family up to the point where they are no longer eligible for public housing. But if we are going to disregard their social security increases, they will remain eligible.

When we do that, then we are being asked to disregard the income that those people receive by the additional social security and social security-related benefits to the point where they would remain in the public housing area and would continue to get food stamps, even though they are no longer in poverty.

Up to now, for example, we do have people who cannot get public housing benefits even though they are entitled to them, because there is only so much public housing to go around. There are not enough public housing units to go around, and it is only the relatively fortunate who are able to get public housing.

One of the problems this would tend to create is that of increasing the benefits of the needy and increasing the benefits of the low-income beneficiaries. It would ignore those increases so that those who would be eligible because they do not have that much income could not move into public housing units because those who have more income will stay there, even though their income has been advanced to the point where they no longer need it, by the definition of the law. In other words, we would be asked to disregard the income of these people.

This is a matter that I would cheerfully relinquish to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, which has the jurisdiction to solve this matter. How would the distinguished Senator from Alabama, chairman of that committee, for example, solve it? If he and his committee can get together, even by a margin of one vote, I, for my part, would be willing to go along with the answer the Senator's committee would suggest.

Would the Senator care to comment?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I was just getting up to say that this is a complicated problem. I do believe that something ought to be done, but just what it ought to be, I do not know. However, let me say that I have had many complaints, and I am sure all Senators have, to the effect that the 20-percent increase in social security really did not help because it was immediately taken away in other charges. It is true that it increases the income measured by dollars, but, as a matter of fact, if I understand it correctly, most of the increases in social security—I think this applies to the 20 percent; certainly it applies to the cost of living—have been put in because the cost of living has gone up, and it does not become an increase in income if immediately these benefits that have been extended to them in other programs are taken away or if the charges are increased.

I do not know what the solution is, but I have had a great many complaints. I have had some people tell me—I am sure they were not correct, but nevertheless they had the feeling—that they would be better off without the 20 percent increase. I do not think that that is correct.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me just finish.

I am not sure that the Senator from Minnesota has the solution, but I do think there is some good in what he proposes. I just wonder if it could be possible for the manager of the bill to take this amendment to conference and get his experts to try to work out these complications and decide on it in the conference committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if that is what those on the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee want us to do, I suppose I will go along with that, but all I want to say is, please understand, Senator, this is a matter in your committee's jurisdiction.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Only in part. That is what I say it is so complicated, because it involves so many different things.

Mr. LONG. I just want to to be understood, if we accept the amendment—and I cannot speak for the Senator from Utah; I think he maybe opposed to it—as far as I am concerned, if we agree to the amendment and the Senate goes along with it, that there is at least a mild protest on the part of those of us who do not have jurisdiction of this matter that those who have jurisdiction have not studied it and have not found the answer and are asking us to take it and for us to try to find the answer for them. Ordinarily, as committee chairman, I would oppose having someone else take a matter over which we had jurisdiction and try to find an answer for us.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Let me say, as chairman of the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, that I certainly am not raising the question of jurisdiction. I am not protesting. I think the Finance Committee has jurisdiction more than any other one, because that committee has complete jurisdiction over social security payments and social security benefits.

I repeat, it is complex, it is complicated, but I should think that the very able staff that is available to the Finance Committee and to the House Ways and Means Committee can work out something that will be fair.

Mr. LONG. Let us be clear that, as far as I am concerned, I am willing to go along with the amendment and try to work this matter out in conference between the Senate and the House; but I want to make it clear that this is a housing amendment. If this were introduced as separate legislation, it would not go to the Finance Committee. It would go to the Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs Committee, for a very good reason—that committee has jurisdiction over public housing legislation and over legislation that would provide terms and conditions under which a person would be eligible under the public housing program. If they were to bring out a bill, the Senator from Louisiana probably would not even ask a question. He would probably ask the chairman of that committee what he intended to do, and it would not even be on the record, but in a private conversation, and he would go along with it, because there have been many conferences on this matter. The Senator from Louisiana once served with the Senator on the Housing Subcommittee, long before the Senator served as chairman of the committee, and he knows how fair the Senator from Alabama is on these matters, and he would be happy to accept his judgment.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I would like to say that our committee has brought legislation to the floor from time to time that has dealt with rental payments in public housing. We adopted an amendment, which was sponsored by the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE) that provided for a payment of not more than 25 percent of the income of those low-income people in public housing. But now comes another phase we do not have jurisdiction over, and that is welfare payments. Undoubtedly, there are others. I did not follow all that the Senator from Minnesota included. That is what has complicated the matter.

I want to make it clear that I shall be very glad to abide by what comes out of the joint conference on this matter, because I know the Senator has experts there to work that matter out, and that it can be worked out by them on a fair basis.

Mr. LONG. I wish I had as much confidence as the Senator has in those of us who would try to work this matter out in conference, but as far as the Senator from Louisiana is concerned, if those who have jurisdiction of this matter seek to do this, I would be willing personally to agree to the amendment and hope that we could work it out. I want it clearly understood that I do not guarantee that we can work it out. I would cheerfully suggest to the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs and to the members of it that they ought to assume jurisdiction of this matter and look into is as expeditiously as they can, and try to provide us the best answer that they can to the problems that have been discussed here, because those on the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs have jurisdiction that I do respect. I respect the competence, the ability and integrity, and the devotion to public service of those Senators, and their interest in these people.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MONDALE. I have just heard from the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs (Mr. SPARKMAN) and the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE), who is one of the key members on the Housing Subcommittee, on which I serve. I think it is clear that we all believe action must be taken now on this bill.

I do want to say one other thing: I have been around my State a great deal recently, and I have not heard anything that has caused more comment, more resentment, or more bitterness than this problem we are discussing. These social security receipients who are public housing tenants are being preyed upon and their few dollars of social security increase is being cut up. That is what is happening. Senators ought to read the letters. Here is a lady who writes and says:

> I don't get a paper, I don't have television, I can't afford a radio, I don't have a phone, I can't afford any of it . . .

And we are going to say, "Let's take eight bucks from her."

I say we certainly have the ingenuity to act now to help these people, and that if we cannot hold this kind of measure in conference with the House of Representatives, if we cannot keep the respect of decent Americans like that, trying to live off their social security checks in those pathetic circumstances, then I do not know how we explain our situation.

I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. First, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added as a cosponsor of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. I just want to make one observation: I do not think anyone in either House of Congress has addressed himself more thoughtfully and with more dedication to the problems of children and youth and the problems of the elderly than the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE). I want to commend him for his thoughtful proposal here, which seeks to do something about a very serious problem.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator. I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators MONTOYA, RANDOLPH, KENNEDY, CHILES, MUSKIE, MCINTYRE, and TUNNEY be added as cosponsors of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. MONDALE. I had promised that I would modify my amendment, and if the Senator from Louisiana will yield me a minute, I will do so.

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, did the Senator include my name as a cosponsor?

Mr. MONDALE. I thought the Senator had already asked. I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Wisconsin again be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I modify my amendment by deleting the language appearing on page 2 between lines 3 and 15, inclusive, dealing with veterans' benefits, and the language appearing on page 3, beginning on line 17 and ending with the period after "1971" on line 21. That is the veterans' pass-through amendment, which we are deleting reluctantly, but because the Veterans' Affairs Committee has acted and has an amendment pending.

Second, I modify my amendment by deleting the language appearing on page 3, beginning with the phrase "or for any other benefits" starting on line 11, and ending at the end of line 16. This is a "catch-all" phrase which might create confusion so I want to take it out.

I modify my amendment to that extent. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNEY). The Chair informs the Senator that to modify his amendment requires unanimous consent.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 1 minute?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON) spoke to me in reference to modifying the amendment on page 3, line 5, by adding the word "or" at the end of the line, so as to make it read "or for surplus agricultural commodities," and so on.

Mr. MONDALE. Yes. I accept that modification, and I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment accordingly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays. Have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays have not been ordered.

Mr. MONDALE. I withdraw the request.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. LONG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MONDALE. I also ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) be added as a cosponsor of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield back the remaider of his time.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNEY). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1675) of the Senator from Minnesota, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDALE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. We have an amendment which was to precede the Mondale amendment. I would like to have unanimous consent that ours may follow the Kennedy amendment. I refer to our amendment No. 1676, as modified. I ask unanimous consent that the consideration of that amendment follow the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, that we have a half-hour time limit, to be equally divided between the Senator from Louisiana and myself, and that that limitation apply to all amendments, and that no amendment not germane to our amendment be considered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not believe we can agree to that at this point, because there may be a proposal to amend the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. I will be happy to agree to any time limitation, but I want an agreement that we have our amendment follow that of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. LONG. I am happy to agree to that, but what would the Senator do about amendments to the amendment?

Mr. STEVENS. I would leave it to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Then I would suggest that there be a half-hour on each amendment to the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have been standing here for an hour and a half waiting to have a brief colloquy. I object to Senators walking in here and taking up their amendments ahead of me, when I have been waiting an hour and a half. So I ask unanimous consent that my 3- or 4-minute colloquy may precede the request of the Senator from Alaska, at least. I do not care when, but I do not want to wait another 2 hours on top of the time I have been waiting around here.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator has an amendment, can we agree on a time? Does the Senator want to offer it after this amendment?

Mr. NELSON. That is all right with me, but I have been here an hour and a half, and everyone is coming in, in succession, and getting the floor, and getting agreements for consideration of their amendments. I object to that. I want to get the floor a few minutes at some point. It will only take about 4 minutes, and I do not want to spend another 2 hours around here while another amendment is debated waiting for 4 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator tell us what amendment he wants to offer, and, if so, ask that that amendment might be considered next?

Mr. NELSON. Yes, I have an amendment on the 20-percent full payment requirement on behalf of those who get health care and are not required to go to the hospital for 3 days. I believe the Senator has looked at that amendment, and has no objection to it.

Mr. LONG. Well, could we gain unanimous consent that the Senator could offer his amendment?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I would be glad to—I know the Senator from Wisconsin has been here. I was in here right after the cloture vote, too, when Senator MONDALE had indicated that they had some amendments that were supposed to be agreeable. Then Senator MONDALE was here, and I think all of us were trying to get the floor. But I will be glad to yield.

I have probably three amendments, each cosponsored by 15 or 18 Senators. I would be glad now to let the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Alaska proceed. Since my amendments are related, I would like to take them one after the other, I will be glad to do that and try to gain the floor in 45 minutes or so and then take up those amendments, because they are related, rather than take up one and then proceeding to another Senator's amendment.

If it is acceptable to the membership, I would like to do that, rather than hold up the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. Ours was one of the two amendments to precede the Mondale amendment; but because of something that developed, we stood aside to let Senator MONDALE proceed.

I want an understanding. I understand that the amendment is going to be accepted. I say to the Senator that I have been waiting 3 days to have this amendment called up, and we have worked it out with the manager of the bill. I just want to get in line. I will be happy to arrange any circumstance that the two Senators want to arrange. I think we have an agreement with respect to unanimous consent on time and everything else.

Mr. LONG. I suggest this: I believe that the Senator from Massachusetts has indicated that he would be willing to let us take up the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, and we could do that, and then we could agree that after the Kennedy amendment has been disposed of, we could consider the amendment of the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. STEVENS. That is perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. NELSON. I just do not want to stand here as other agreements are reached and wait here 2 or 3 hours, when I can do something else. I do not mind proceeding after the Senator from Alaska, if we are going to have unanimous-consent agreements.

(At this point Mr. ROTH assumed the chair.)

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield to the Senator, without losing my right to the floor.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I have noticed that during the course of the day there has been a sign-up for recognition at the Chair, and there are quite a few names of Senators who have signed up, asking to be recognized in a certain order. When I was occupying the chair, I read the list, and the reason why I recognized the Senator from Massachusetts is that his name came up on the list.

If we are going to start asking unanimous consent to be recognized, it would be my hope that we would recognize that other Senators also have a desire to have the Chair's recognition in order to offer amendments, the Senator from California being one of them.

I do not know why the regular order could not be that if Senators have amendments they want to offer, they go to the Chair and indicate to the Chair that they have such a desire, and sign up, and then we can proceed on an orderly basis.

Mr. STEVENS. We relied on the statement made on the floor that we would precede the Mondale amendment, and we did not put our name on the list.

When the Senator from Minnesota told me that a question had been raised about our amendment, we agreed that he should go ahead and that we would eliminate the question. We have now eliminated the question; it is now a noncontroversial amendment.

I did not go to the desk to put my name on a list. I relied on the arrangement we had with the manager of the bill. I just want to see that we get back in order somewhere, in terms of having this amendment called up.

Again, I am willing to enter into any kind of unanimous-consent agreement as to order, but I wish to see that we get back in order. My colleague and I from Alaska, as the chairman of the Finance Committee knows, have been working with him and the staff for at least 3 days on this matter, and it has been worked out.

I am grateful to the Senator from Massachusetts for allowing us to get into this colloquy. I again renew my request. I ask unanimous consent that following the amendments of the Senator from Massachusetts, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin be taken up, and that following the Senator from Wisconsin's amendment, our amendment No. 1676 be in order.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I probably will not object, because the Senator from Alaska has stated that he had some sort of understanding with the Senator from Minnesota regarding the Senator from Minnesota's amendment—it would seem to me to be far more orderly procedure, if Senators choose to be recognized, to sign up at the desk, and not come in with unanimous-consent requests and move ahead of Senators who have been on the floor since the Senate went into session this morning.

Mr. STEVENS. I have been here every minute since the Senate went into session this morning.

Mr. TUNNEY. I will not object, but I will object in the future.

Mr. STEVENS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I will wait until the end of the bill to call up my amendments.

I should like to make this response to the Senator from California: The rule is that the Senator who is first on the floor is recognized. The list at the desk means absolutely nothing. We cannot run the Senate by having Senators come in here at 9 or 10 in the morning and putting themselves on the list. The first Senator up on the floor is the one to be recognized.

Mr. TUNNEY. I would agree with the Senator on that point. However, when several Senators are seeking recognition at the same time, it seems to me that a Senator who has been on the floor for 4 or 5 hours deserves to be recognized before a Senator who has just come in from lunch.

Mr. NELSON. I was standing there longer than anyone else.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Alaska make his request?

Mr. STEVENS. I thought we had an agreement to my unanimous-consent request that following the amendments of the Senator from Massachusetts, the Senator from Wisconsin may call up his amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. As I mentioned, I would much prefer to let the Senator from Alaska call up his amendment. I understand that his amendment is going to be accepted. I have three amendments which are related to each other, and I would like to consider them one after the other. I would prefer to proceed that way, and I am prepared to wait, if that is agreeable.

Mr. STEVENS. That is a very gracious offer. It is agreeable.

Mr. KENNEDY. Do I correctly understand that it is the intention of the Finance Committee to accept the amendment?

Mr. LONG. It is the intention of the manager of the bill to vote for the Stevens amendment, if I understand the amendment correctly. The Senator said that he had modified it. He has not modified it drastically.

Mr. STEVENS. The modification was checked out with the staff.

Mr. LONG. Then, the answer is "yes."

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the consideration of the amendment of the Senator from Alaska, the Senator from Massachusetts be recognized.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 1676

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TUNNEY). The Senator from Alaska is recognized.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1676, as modified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The amendment, as modified, was read, as follows:

SAVINGS PROVISION REGARDING CERTAIN EXPENDITURES FOR SOCIAL SERVICES

SEC. . (a) In the administration of section 1130 of the Social Security Act, the allotment of each State (as determined under subsection (b) of such section) for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, shall (notwithstanding any provision of such section 1130) be adjusted so that the amount of such allotment for such year consists of the sum of the following:

(1) the amount of the total expenditures, not to exceed $50,000,000, incurred by the State for services (of the type, and under the programs to which the allotment, as determined under such subsection (b), is applicable) for the period commencing July 1, 1972, and ending on the date of enactment of such section 1130, plus

(2) an amount which bears the same ratio to the allotment of such State (as determined under subsection (b)), but without application of the provisions of this section as the remaining period (as defined in subsection (b)), bears to a period of twelve months. Provided, however, That no State shall receive less under this section than the amount to which it would have been entitled otherwise under section 1130 of the Social Security Act.

(b) The term "remaining period" means a twelve-month period reduced by a number of days equal to the number of days in the period commencing July 1, 1972, and ending on the date of enactment of section 1130 of the Social Security Act.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the Senator from Massachusetts finishes his three amendments, I be permitted to call up my three amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the modification we have made in this amendment, which is a proposed amendment to the social services sections pertaining to the revenue-sharing bill, will make certain that the effect of this amendment will not decrease the amounts that have been expended by any State prior to the date of the Social Security Act amendments in the revenue-sharing bill, and at the same time it will protect those States who are entitled to more.

This matter has been discussed with the staff of the Finance Committee, and I am hopeful that the chairman of the committee will be able to accept it.

What this amendment does is this: It says that in terms of the impact of the limitations in the Revenue-Sharing Act on social service, those States that have in fact spent more money than they would be allocated under the bill—the new bill—would be treated fairly, and they would be permitted to obtain 75 percent matching funds for those services up to the date of the new revenue-sharing bill. After that date they will be entitled to a pro rata share of the amount they are entitled to under the population formula. This, we think, is a matter of equity in dealing with a State such as ours in this field. Our State, for instance, has spent in excess of $6 million of the quota preceding adoption of the new act. Our allocation under the new act is $314 million. We would actually owe the social services fund administered by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare money. We would not be entitled to anything until that accrued indebtedness had been theoretically repaid. We have a limitation in this, that no State will receive in excess of $50 million under this concept, except that no State will be reduced from the amount they are actually entitled to under the new formula.

The Presiding Officer now in the chair, the distinguished Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) is from a State that is entitled to more money under the formula than $50 million. That provision in the revised amendment as we have modified it is to protect States such as California and New York, so that their amounts allocated are not reduced by the amount we are seeking to put a limitation on, so that any small State could come in and all of a sudden spend more money. I am hopeful that the chairman will accept this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators BOGGS, GURNEY, and ROTH be added as cosponsors of this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. I am most pleased that my colleague (Mr. GRAVEL) and I are able to present this amendment.

I yield now to my colleague (Mr. GRAVEL).

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, my colleague, Mr. STEVENS has put the case very well. It is not the intention of the committee or any Member of this body to impose an unfair burden upon any State in the area of social services. But the result of the action taken in the revenue-sharing bill does hurt Alaska. The immediate impact would be to terminate 100-plus programs now in existence and to lay off immediately 2,000 people. I know that is not the intent of the bill, and I am very happy that the chairman of the committee will accept the amendment. I realize that it does no harm to any other State.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several letters which I have received on this subject.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska, September 21, 1972.

Hon. MIKE GRAVEL,
U.S Senate, New Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MIKE: Please be advised that the current understanding in Alaska of the social services provisions of the revenue sharing bill leads us to the conclusion that its impact on social services in this State will be disastrous and amount to destruction of almost one hundred programs throughout the States related to actual current social services needs.

Alaska has not abused the Title IV-A and Title XVI Social Security Act provisions. If any state has done so, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare can promulgate Federal regulations to correct any program abuse, but it is eminently unfair to sacrifice good programs which are helping people improve their lives as a purely expedient means of also eliminating the bad. Alaska has proceeded in good faith to develop and provide a manageable number of expanded social service programs always in consultation with Health, Education, and Welfare Region X staff to keep within Federal guidelines.

If the present Revenue Sharing Conference Committee provisions are adopted allowing Alaska $6 million plus $3.7 million for social services, this will represent a net loss or cutback of over $16 million in State-provided social services in an immedate, abrupt, and extremely damaging manner. The present utilization level of $22 million for social services would be substituted only with the presently proposed $2 million to the State and $4 million going to local governments under revenue sharing, and $3.7 million to the State for social services. There are no requirements nor indications that the $6 million revenue sharing money on state or local levels would be used for social services. The impacts of the Metcalf Amendment and the Alaska-Hawaii Cost-of-Living Amendment, if accepted by the Conference Committee, are not clear as yet or assured.

Paraded and alleged fiscal relief to this State would be, in fact, only actual fiscal pain and suffering for Alaska. The $6 million would only represent substituted money and the State of Alaska will wind up with a net loss of over $16.25 million in current program funding. Within the limited funds available to Alaska under social services provisions of $3.74 million, current staff matching apparently would come out as well as mandated services under current Federal regulations such as legal services, homemaker services, self-support services, information and referral services as well as other mandated services. The amount made available for Fiscal Year 1972 will barely cover expenditures already made in the first quarter of this year.

I cannot recommend that you support the final passage of the present version of the revenue sharing bill which is so misleading to the public, which again under the guise of being a help to a state actually withdraws aid to, and damages, tens of thousands of Alaskan citizens, closes 100 qualified major social services programs such as day care, family planning, homemaker services, alcoholism rehabilitation projects and scores of other social service programs and creates additional unemployment and suffering for approximately two thousand Alaskans whose jobs will be removed with the proposed action.

As you know, our strong recommendation has been to separate the basic revenue sharing fiscal relief measure from the Social Security social services under Title IV-A and XVI issue. This would have allowed public debate and hearings on the problematical, open-ended aspects of an appropriate ceiling for social services costs. As a minimum, the Governors' Conference position of a ceiling of $3.6 billion with hold harmless at current levels should be provided for the social services portion of the act if the two measures are to be combined.

The Congress should await receipt from the states of information as to the adverse impacts of this harmful measure before enacting it. Already states have been harmed by the veto of the Health, Education, and Welfare appropriations bill. We should not continue a pattern of shutdown of programs for assistance for the health and well-being of citizens actually in need. Please contact Illinois and New York delegations as to steps their state officials plan to take. We stand ready to assist in any way we can. Your strongest opposition to the current effort will be appreciated and in the best interests of Alaskans.

Sincerely,

WILLIAM A. EGAN,
Governor.

STATE OF ALASKA,
Juneau, Alaska, September 25, 1972.

Hon. MIKE GRAVEL,
U.S. Senate,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GRAVEL: The Governor's Commission for the Administration of Justice has noted with deep concern recent action on the part of a Congressional Conference Committee to limit expenditures for social services programs through amendment to the Revenue Sharing Bill now before the Congress. Under the provisions of the Amendment, Alaska would be forced to impose a cutback of over $16 million in social services programs. Many of these programs are providing direct and indirect benefits in areas in which this Commission is vitally concerned. Child care centers, delinquency and child abuse prevention programs, and alcohol and drug abuse programs have all benefited from the funding available through Titles IV and XVI of the Social Security Act. Withdrawal of more than $16 million in Federal funding from these programs will signal their termination. The local and state initiative which led to the orderly and responsible development of the programs will be destroyed and the short and long-range benefits which would have accrued to the criminal justice effort in Alaska will be lost.

The Commission strongly supports any effort to regain the funding necessary to continue these social services programs and urges Alaska's congressional delegation to vigorously seek restoration of these funds.

Very truly yours,

JOHN E. HAVELOCK,
Chairman, Governor's Commission for the Administration of Justice.

NATIONAL COUNCIL ON ALCOHOLISM,
Anchorage, Alaska, September 28, 1972.

Hon. MIKE GRAVEL,
U.S. Senate,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GRAVEL: I know that you are doing everything possible to assist in the Title IV crisis, but I hope to add some ammunition to your arsenal.

I am aware that you have kept yourself well-informed on the dramatic progress of the National Council on Alcoholism, Alaska Region, in the past eight months, in spite of extremely trying finanical handicaps. However, you may not have been properly informed as to the scope of these handicaps.

Our so-called $10,000 "advance" payment, designed to tide us over until program billings began to roll, should have been paid the first of February but did not arrive until the end of the first week of April. All other payment of funds due have been constantly delayed in the "bureaucratic jungle" on an average of two months.

Bill Saville has done a yeoman's job of putting together a skilled and trained staff, directing the organization and gearing up to provide the increased services to the community as outlined in our contract, and providing these services on an escalating scale. All the while, he attempted to keep our head above water by obtaining advances on our Community Chest funds, using up a small savings account of the old Anchorage Council, obtaining temporary loans to meet payroll from the Greater Anchorage Area Borough, plus asking our creditors to continue to have faith in our integrity and the integrity of our government that the "snafus" would soon be straightened out and the cash flow would be running smoothly. As of this date, we are still waiting for funds billed for July services.

In other words, all personnel . . . office manager, secretary, counselors, volunteers, etc. . . . have pitched in, doing their own work, and more, to make the transition from a simple office which could provide only a few pieces of literature and a sympathetic ear to the few who were aware of our existence to the present organization of eight people which is providing out-reach counseling upon request for other financially struggling programs . . . public information through the media in news releases, public service announcements, speakers at schools, clubs, churches, a Newsletter, etc. . . . DWI Court School . . . and services to doctors, hospitals, other alcoholism councils and agencies throughout the state . . . to name a few of our major services.

Requests for help have increased fantastically since we have been able to publicize our referral counseling and information services. We have a variety of help resources available to which we could refer people seeking assistance, thus allowing the counselors to select a specific program best suited to the individual. Unfortunately, most of these resources are also dependent upon Title IV and have gone through the same growing pains as we have experienced and will undoubtedly have to close completely.

We are now in an excellent position to carry out our mission efficiently and had even made plans to further expand and refine our services next year . . . only to learn it might all go down the drain.

It seems to me that to scrap the various inter-related integrated alcoholism programs just after they have really begun to function and to provide the intended services would be a waste of public monies of the greatest magnitude. If any of the programs are allowed to die and are later reinstated—as they must be—these programs would, in the main, have to begin from scratch thus duplicating all of the necessary start-up cost and time.

Naturally, I may be accused of bias, since my own job is in jeopardy. However, I have never been out of work for longer than two weeks in my life and I feel certain I could find something in my field in a relatively short time. Therefore, my prime concern is what I consider a waste of my money as a taxpayer and the tremendous social and economic damage this will inflict upon the State of Alaska.

Thank you for your concern and for all of your efforts in our behalf.

Sincerely,

EDWIN G. BEU, JR.,
Public Information Director.

DEAR SENATOR STEVENS: It is indeed frightening to hear of the proposed retroactive cancelling of the Title IV and Title XVI funds for our State of Alaska.

We are deeply concerned in our Bristol Bay region, where we have already suffered a disastrous 1972 commercial fishing season.

Please reconsider within your powers to keep these funds available.

Juneau, Alaska, September 22, 1972.

Subject: H.R. 16654.

Hon. SENATOR GRAVEL,
U.S. Senate, Senate Office Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR GRAVEL: Will you help Alaska's aging men and women and Alaska's aging men and women and Alaska's children to remain in their own homes with the assistance of Homemaker-Home Health Aides and Home Helpers?

Our Agency, which serves the aging, ill, disabled and children from Metlakatla to Point Barrow has received a thirty-day notice to discontinue service under state contracts that involve Titles IV and XVI.

Discontinuance of service will result in the removal of many aging, and children, from their own homes in the villages to nursing homes and institutions. Also, it will result in unemployment of approximately 200 men and women, chiefly Natives, in the villages.

Our Agency has applied for Title IV and XVI money to match Model Cities money appropriated to us for Senior Citizens services. The loss of the Federal matching funds for Model Cities programs will mean the loss of jobs for about 1,450 men and women in Juneau.

Do all in your power to save service to troubled human beings under these Titles. Certainly our Senators and our Congressmen have a moral obligation to review the agencies that serve under Federal money; but they have an equally important obligation to see that America's aging and children are served with loving care in their own home and that thousands are not unemployed at the beginning of winter.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

U.S. Senate,

DEAR SENATOR GRAVEL: As an employee of the local Alcoholic Rehabilitation program, I urge you to do your utmost to fight for Alaska's retention of Title IV and Title XVI funding. The proposed cancellation can only result in grievous social and economic stress for nearly a tenth of Alaska's entire population.

If cancellation cannot be averted. I would plead circumvention at least until Alaska has an opportunity to develop other sources of funding.

Even with present funding, Alaska is in dire need of yet more and BETTER facilities to aid the alcoholics within her borders. To be forced to abandon efforts presently in effect will be disastrous. The social disruption, the human misery which will result is incalculable.

Respectfully,

MELVIN J. MURPHY.

Title IV funding slated for rural Alaska was to be controlled by indigenous groups who were utilizing innovative methods to deal with crippling social problems. Over $500,000 was scheduled to impact on alcohol problems, provide badly needed pre-school programs, and to finance native planning efforts in human services. The backlog of health and social services needs remains staggering. Neither the State nor the land claims settlement can finance a program to meet these problems. We urge that funding be allocated on the basis of need rather than population. Your support amendments to that effect is required.

The Greater Anchorage Area Management Group on Drug Abuse is charged by the Borough Assembly with the responsibility of development, implementation, and coordination of all drug and drug related programs within the Anchorage Borough. The Management Group is appalled by the proposed cuts of Title 5 and 16 on the SSA. These cuts mean that needed services in our community will be virtually eliminated. Services which have just recently begun in the area of drug abuse will have to be closed. Additionally services which were being provided to individuals and families which in many ways serve to prevent other sociological and psychological difficulties from becoming drug abuse problems will also have to be discontinued. As a broad based community group which accurately reflect these sentiments of the citizens of the Anchorage community and which is involved and the development of much needed service, implore you to utilize the full resources of your office to prevent the projected discontinuation of vital social services within our community.

The Alaska Federation of Natives, Inc., on behalf of its constituent regional natives associations, hereby goes on record strongly protesting the inclusion of a distribution system of H.E.W. title 4A and 16 monies on a per capita basis, in revenue sharing bill currently pending before the congressional conference committee.

To prevent a statewide chaos and crucial effect on the recipients of the services of the current and pending contracts under the current title 4A and 16, a concerted effort by all parties concerned to prevent such a bill passing in the conference committee is not only necessary, but a must. The passage of such legislation is contrary, to the national goal of improving human needs.

Impact on 90 day care centers disastrous. Do something to assure present contracts or funded services to 50,000 are at stake.

The Alaska consortium on early childhood education urge reconsideration of title 4 and 16 funds to Alaska. Reductions will drastically affect many needed programs that serve our bush areas. Bethel population 2,500 and approximately 40 outlying villages will dramatically feel results of negative discussion through elimination or reduction of alcoholism programs, day care centers, preschool programs.

The Association for Retarded Children of Anchorage objects strenuously to the cutback in title IV funding. The immediate result of discontinuation of these funds will be that fifty adults of all handicapped will be cancelled out of our various rehabilitation programs during the last thirty day period. Twelve handicapped persons were taken off state subsidies and placed in employment in the community. It is reasonable to assume that a portion of the fifty persons discontinued would also be successfully rehabilitated. The proposed cutback will be of little significance in terms saving monies as these people will undoubtably return to state and federal subsidies. In Alaska rehabilitation costs are much higher than in other states. A outback based on population rather than on actual need shows little consideration for the handicapped.

DEAR SENATOR GRAVEL: The proposed amendment to Title III of the Revenue Sharing Bill which seriously curtails funding available for social services under the Title IV and XVI of the Social Security Act will cause Alaska Homemaker-Home Health Aide Service, Inc. to drastically reduce service to the ill, disabled, aging and children of Alaska. With winter coming this reduction of service will be very hard on Alaskan Natives we serve in the villages, as well as the people we employ as Homemakers and Home Helpers.

Mr. JAMES L. YOUNG,
Chairman, Federal Inter-Agency Regional Council, Seattle, Wash.

DEAR MR. YOUNG: I am writing to express my concern over the Health, Education, and Welfare revenue sharing bill pending before Congress and the effect it would have on the total Juneau Model Cities program.

As you are aware, this legislation would seriously curtail present funding levels of Title IV–A and of Title XVI of the Social Security Act. The Juneau program depends upon these sources for approximately $500,000, or about ninety percent of the total federal funds generated by our Model Cities Supplemental Fund grant. If the funds are not available, the Model Cities effort in Juneau would be severely crippled and many programs would have to be phased out completely. This could leave the poor and disadvantaged of the area with almost no resources since the OEO-sponsored programs in Alaska, such as Rural Alaska Community Action Program and Legal Aid, have used Model Cities funds to supplement effort they would otherwise be required to expend in Juneau to operate a balanced and equitable program throughout the state.

Because of this potential funding crisis, I am requesting that you immediately call an emergency meeting of the Federal Inter-Agency Council task force concerned with Juneau Model Cities.

I would ask that this task force render whatever technical assistance necessary to reprogram our efforts if Congressional action limits availability of Title IV–A and Title XVI funding. I would further request that the task force assist us in locating alternate sources of funding.

I appreciate your efforts on our behalf, and I will look forward to hearing from you on this matter at your earliest possible convenience.

Sincerely,

JERRY L. MADDEN,
Director, Juneau Model Cities Agency.

ANCHORAGE, ALASKA,
September 26, 1972.

Senator MIKE GRAVEL,
Washington, D.C.

A resolution urging relief for Alaska from reduction of title IV funds by pending Federal legislation.

Whereas, the Federal Revenue Sharing Act reported by the free conference committee will affect Alaska by reducing funds available under title IV and title XVI of the Social Security Act from $24 million to $3.74 million; and

Whereas, the consequences to the greater anchorage area borough would cause cancellation of 18 contracts totalling $3,593,300; and,

Whereas, this loss of funds will deny benefits to at least 26,000 individuals and deny employment to over 150 persons, many of whom are already employed in the various programs.

Now, therefore, be it resolved that the greater Anchorage area borough assembly urge the governor to use all possible persuasion with the Alaska Congressional Delegation and Congress to provide relief for Alaska and other States whose family services will be eliminated or drastically cut; and that the governor be urged to communicate with governors of other States similarly affected and join with them in an appeal to Congress.

Be it further resolved that the assembly appeal directly to the Alaska delegation to use all means to assist in obtaining hold harmless provisions to assure Alaska the funding it needs to continue these programs.

Passed and approved by the assembly of the greater Anchorage area borough on this 25th day of September 1972.

BENJAMIN MARSH,
Presiding Officer.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I understand the problem involved here, that some States would be adversely affected by the abrupt cut in funds for social services. I want to make it clear that there is in the bill $800 million for child care. I believe that if it needs it, that could could be modified to make sure that the States would have thhat $800 mililon available to them to use as best they knew how. The bill provides additional relief for the future in the social services area, but this provision here is aimed at what the conference committee on the revenue sharing bill will seek to bring back before the Senate and House of Representatives, assuming that they would be agreed to, so that this amendment would be needed by Alaska and the other States similarly affected.

It does not help Louisiana because we do not have that problem, but I will be glad to cooperate and adopt what the Senator has suggested here.

Mr. STEVENS. We had discussed, through representatives of some of the smaller States, and through members of the Ways and Means Committee in the other body concerning this problem, and were led to believe they would accept this concept to prevent this inequity, for it really would stop the social services program and we would have no assistance whatsoever.

I am indebted to the Senator from New York. I understand that he has got a massive problem and this amendment has modified it so that it does not harm California or New York. It does not give them relief from their major problems, but we are indebted to the chairman of the committee for his approach, and I hope the amendment will survive in the conference.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall not stand in the way of this amendment which, as the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) has stated, is a harmless provision which does not affect New York either way, with the modification he has made.

That is true of California. Had the amendment remained not modified, with the 50 million in it, it would have been a material loss to New York—we estimate 10 percent or more of the funds. The same would be true for California and other urbanized States. But we have no desire and have never had any desire to intrude upon the opportunity of the smaller States to enjoy the full benefits of this program.

So I am very much pleased that the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) is cooperating with the two Senators from Alaska. I want to express my appreciation to the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) for accepting the modification which keeps us in the same position we were—although it is not a very good position, I might add.

I also express my appreciation to him for taking the initiative here, on behalf of his own State, but which is so important to all the States in a matter of such great importance to them as well as to us.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from New York. I had the same problem with the original draft of the amendment as offered by the distinguished Senator from Alaska. I appreciate the fact that he has modified the amendments so that it will not do violence to any of the other States. It is a good amendment for Alaska as written now, and it does not hurt California.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I do not wish any implication to be made that I am happy about the division of the money for the social services or the limitation by stating that I am not standing in the way of this amendment for the reasons I have stated.

I wish to make it clear that I still reserve whatever rights I may have to deal with this question in some other context and in some other way, but for the purpose of this amendment and what the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) has done, and I think he rightfully asks for, and what the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) has agreed to, I interpose no objection.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to have this opportunity to support and cosponsor the amendment of the senior Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS). While it is necessary to impose some sort of ceiling on social services spending, I consider it grossly unfair to penalize States which have obligated themselves in reliance upon the existing law.

As it is now drafted, the social services spending ceiling in the revenue sharing bill would impose an expenditure limit of $2.5 billion each year, with the money allocated among the States on the basis of population. Essentially, I consider these provisions sound and reasonable. However, at the same time, I believe it is grossly unfair to impose these spending limits retroactively. Many States, including my home State of Delaware, have relied upon the congressional authorizations and obligated themselves beyond their respective population allocations. This has occurred simply because some States were astute enough to recognize the potential of the social services program before some other States.

But as presently drafted, the revenue sharing bill would penalize these States for having taken advantage of a program enacted by Congress, continued by Congress, and expanded by Congress. Although Congress is finally awakening to its responsibility, the spending ceiling in its present form would make these States the scapegoats for congressional inaction. This I cannot accept.

As many of you know, I have supported attempts in the past to impose a ceiling on social services spending; I have, as a matter of fact, led two of those attempts. But in those instances, the proposals would have protected the States that were utilizing the social services program. In not one of those proposals—the $2.5 billion spending ceiling of June 27, the $2.5 billion ceiling of August 10, and $3.15 billion ceiling of September 12—would any State have received less than it did in fiscal year 1972. I personally ensured that these "hold harmless" provisos were contained because I thought Congress should temper action with justice. I believed that in June, and I believe that now.

The amendment of the senior Senator from Alaska would merely reinsert an element of equity—contained in earlier proposals, but absent now—in the social services spending ceiling. Its only effect is to make the ceiling prospective, rather than retroactive, thus allowing State governments to fulfill their contractural obligations. I see no need to elaborate further on the commendable explanation by the senior Senator from Alaska. I would only say that I wholeheartedly support his amendment and I hope that other Senators will do the same.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). All time on this amendment has been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the amendment was agreed to be reconsidered.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. President, I commend the senior Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) for the initiative he has shown in preparing and introducing this amendment to ease the severe pinch that States such as Alaska and Delaware will feel as a result of the social services ceiling in the Revenue Sharing Act.

I am pleased to join my colleague, Mr. ROTH, and both Senators from Alaska in this effort, which I think deserves the favorable consideration of the Senate on the basis of equity alone.

The Congress has now become well aware—somewhat belatedly, of course—that a ceiling of some sort is necessary on skyrocketing social services spending. I have supported such a ceiling in the past and I think, realistically, we must place a limit on what we can spend on these programs, necessary though they are.

But I do not think the Congress should penalize those States which, acting in good faith, have availed themselves of a program that Congress has authorized, and have entered into firm contracts under that program.

In my own State of Delaware, an abrupt cutback, as would be required by title III of the Revenue Sharing Act, would be a severe blow to the operation of many ongoing programs.

A few weeks ago, Dr. Herbert M. Baganz, Secretary of the Department of Health and Social Services of the State of Delaware, advised me that Delaware now has firm contracts totaling $30 million and requiring a $22.5 million Federal match. Yet, under title III of the Revenue Sharing Act, Delaware would be restricted to but $6.7 million for fiscal year 1973.

According to Secretary Baganz, actual ongoing expenditures will require some $9.6 million of Federal funds in 1973. If the $6.7 million limitation holds, he continues, Delaware will be forced to immediately cut back by $2.9 million of current spending and cancel or reduce contracts totaling $26.2 million.

The Stevens amendments would restore a needed degree of justice to the effort to control spending on the social services program. It would provide funding for those State programs already under contract from the beginning of the current fiscal year until the date of enactment of the Revenue Sharing Act.

It would, in short, remove the penalty of retroactivity which has been imposed on Delaware and other States by title III of the Revenue Sharing Act. I think simple justice requires that the Senate adopt this amendment; and I again commend the Senator from Alaska for the work he has done on this proposal.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, under previous agreement, I believe I am to be recognized. However, the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL) has three relatively noncontroversial amendments that will not take a great deal of time. The amendments I intend to call up will take rollcall votes, and I will be glad to yield to him at this time for the consideration of his amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES). Without objection, it is so ordered.

AMENDMENT NO. 1674

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, both my colleague from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) and I thank the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) for his graciousness in this regard.

Mr. President, I understand that all three of my amendments are acceptable to the distinguished chairman of the committee, so at this time I call up No. 1674 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

At the end of title II of the bill, add the following new section:

DETERMINATION (FOR MEDICAID PURPOSES) OF PER CAPITA INCOME OF ALASKA AND HAWAII

SEC. . (a) Section 1905(b) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding, immediately after the first sentence thereof, the following new sentence: "The term 'per capita income', as used in the preceding sentence, means, in the case of any State in which civilian employees of the United States Government receive an allowance under section 5941 of title 5, United States Code, the per capita income of such State (as determined without regard to this sentence) multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is the per capita income of such State (as determined without regard to this sentence) and the denominator of which is such per capita income plus a per centum thereof equal to the per centum applicable, for the period in which any promulgation under this subsection is being made, in determining the amount of the allowance payable under section 5941 of title 5, United States Code, to Federal employees serving in such State."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be applicable to promulgations (under section 1905(b) of the Social Security Act) made after the date of enactment of this Act.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I think I can explain this amendment very briefly. It applies to the cost-of-living differential in the payment on the medicaid formula in the States of Alaska and Hawaii. This is nothing more than what the Senate accepted a week ago in the revenue-sharing bill with respect to housing. The cost-of-living differential is something that is generally accepted in legislation.

The cost of this new, calculated formula would be $640,000 for Alaska. Our commissioner of health and social services happens to be in town. And we just computed the cost.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment. I have conferred with the distinguished chairman of the committee and the ranking minority member of the committee.

The amendment would make an exception under the medicaid provision in existing law and would permit a State that now is receiving an allowance under the United States Code for—

The per capita income (as determined without regard to this sentence) multiplied by a fraction the numerator of which is the per capita income of such State (as determined without regard to this sentence and the denominator of which is such per capita income plus a per centum thereof equal to the per centum applicable, for the period in which any promulgation under this subsection is being made, in determining the amount of the allowance payable under section 5941 of title 5, United States Code, to Federal employees serving in such State.

The Finance Committee is perfectly agreeable to taking the amendment to conference to try to get the House to agree to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1695

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1695.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 938, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following:

STUDY BY SECRETARY AS TO FEASIBILITY OF RELATING BENEFITS UNDER THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT TO PREVAILING COST OF LIVING IN VARIOUS AREAS

SEC. 522. (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary") shall conduct a study of the various programs established by and pursuant to the Social Security Act with a view to determining the feasibility of relating the various dollar amounts set forth therein (whether in the form of benefits, deductibles, conditions of eligibility for benefits, or otherwise) to the prevailing cost of living in the various States (and localities within States) in which such programs are operative.

(b) In carrying out such study, the Secretary shall—

(1) develop a comprehensive cost-of-living index which reflects the average cost-of-living for each State as a whole (and not just the urban or other areas therein;

(2) include an evaluation of the effects which would be produced among the various States, including the advantages to recipients, if the benefits (and other dollar amount related criteria) in the Social Security Act were adjusted in accordance with differences in the average cost-of-living in the various States;

(3) give consideration to the feasibility of applying such a cost-of-living adjustment only in those States where the cost-of-living is significantly higher than the cost-of-living in the Nation as a whole; and

(4) analyze existing sources, within the Federal Government, from which data relating to the cost-of-living is available, with a view to determining the need for improved sources of such data, within the Federal Government, under which such data would be made available on a regular basis and in a more analytical, comprehensive, and suitable form.

(c) The Secretary shall complete such study and shall submit to the Congress a full and complete report thereon, together with the recommendations of the Secretary with respect to the matters included in the study, not later than January 1, 1974.

(d) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this section.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I modify that amendment so that it is in line with the changes affected in H.R. 1 as of yesterday. At the end of page 1, I add the following language, "at the end of part (B) of title IV, insert the following new section."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, this amendment simply asks that a study be made of the cost of living as it affects the entire United States. We in Alaska are sometimes criticized for asking for something more than other people because of the cost of living we have in Alaska.

This problem is not a unique one that applies to Alaska alone. It is something that we should focus national attention on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that the amendment is not properly directed. It is placed in a part of the bill that has already been stricken. There is a substitute for it. It is, therefore, not open to amendment.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I was under the impression that the modification I just stated to the Chair would have taken care of that problem.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Parliamentarian informs the Chair that if the Senator from Alaska modifies his amendment so as to place it at the end of the bill, it would be acceptable.

Mr. GRAVEL. I so modify the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, that is the intent of the amendment. I understand that the chairman of the committee is in agreement with it.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment and have conferred with the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking member of the Finance Committee.

This amendment simply directs the Secretary of HEW to make a study of the feasibility of relating the social security benefits to the cost of living differentials.

Under those conditions, we are perfectly willing to take the amendment to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska, as modified (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, on the prior amendment, amendment No. 1674, I had modified the language but I failed to read or secure a modification. Could I get a ruling from the Chair as to whether that amendment is in order with respect to the stricken portion of the bill?

The modification I would have made was at the top of page 2 of that amendment. I would have added the language, "At the end of title II, add the following new section."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is drafted properly.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, then I need not ask for a modification of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I thank the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 1696

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1696.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 579, line 24, strike out "and".

On page 580, line 4, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

On page 580, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following new paragraph:

"(5) in the case of Natives of Alaska, shares of stock held in a Regional or a Village Corporation, during the period of twenty years in which such stock is inalienable, as provided in section 7(h) and section 8(c) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act."

On page 699, line 2, strike out "and".

On page 699, line 10, strike out the semicolon and insert in lieu thereof a comma.

On page 699, between lines 10 and 11, insert the following new paragraph:

"(D) in the case of Natives of Alaska, shares of stock held in a Regional or a Village Corporation, during the period of twenty years in which such stock is inalienable, as provided in section 7(h) and section 8(c) of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act; and".

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I modify this amendment because of the changes that occurred in the legislation on yesterday. I modify it on page 2, to strike all of the material from line 8 to the bottom of the page. That would be to strike out lines 8 through 17.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I will just explain the amendment very briefly. In determining eligibility for payment under H.R. 1, there are certain items excluded in calculating the resources of an individual. We have added one other item to these exclusions. It relates to the ownership of the stock that the natives of Alaska have as a result of the Native Land Claims Settlement. This stock is not transferrable for 20 years. And in point of fact, the stock has no liquid value to the person who holds it. We propose to exclude that stock as a resource to determine eligibility.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I understand that the Natives of Alaska receive no income from the ownership of this stock at the present time, but merely hold it for 20 years.

Mr. GRAVEL. The Senator is correct. The Natives cannot receive income from the sale of this stock for the 20 years during which it is inalienable.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I have examined the amendment and have conferred with the distinguished chairman and the distinguished ranking minority member of the Finance Committee. This amendment simply exempts from income to the aged, the blind, and the disabled, certain stock held in trust by Alaskan Natives to which they will not have access for a period of some 20 years.

Under those circumstances, we have no objection to the amendment and are perfectly willing to take it to conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts. I indicated that it would take me 5 minutes to dispose of these amendments. I have taken 6 minutes. I thank the Senator.

AMENDMENT NO. 1703

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I call up amendment No. 1703.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Before getting into these amendments, I want to indicate my high regard for many of the excellent provisions of H.R. 1 in the area of health care. The extension of medicare to the disabled under medicare and the coverage of drugs for the chronically ill are great steps forward, and respond to particular glaring needs.

There are also excellent provisions in the bill aimed at controlling costs and assuring quality of care under medicare. The public disclosure provisions throughout title II will also help assure quality.

I commend the committee on these provisions, as well as on the clarification of nursing home benefits and waiver of beneficiary liability in certain situations. I could name a long list of excellent provisions as well.

My purpose today is to raise some basic policy issues in the medicaid area which I feel the entire Senate should vote on.

Mr. President, I offer this first amendment, No. 1703, on behalf of myself, Mr. MOSS, Mr. PERCY, Mr. BROOKE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. HART, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. JAVITS, and Mr. TUNNEY.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 348, strike out lines 4 through 8.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, if I might have the attention of the Senator from Georgia, I intend to talk about two amendments that I hope the Senate will agree to. These are to strike section 230 and section 231, both of which are related. The question here revolves around the development of comprehensive health programs for the medically needy. Hopefully we will get to the consideration of one or both of these amendments shortly.

Mr. President, both amendments merely return to existing law.

Current law requires that the States develop a comprehensive medicaid program by July 1, 1977. Each year States were required to move toward that goal.

Section 230 of H.R. 1 would strike the requirement that States move toward the development of comprehensive health programs. I think it is important that we continue to have the States across the length and breadth of this country move ahead on the development of comprehensive medicaid programs.

The amendment I just sent to the desk would return to existing law and assure continuing progress toward the development of comprehensive programs. The related amendment concerns section 231 and would also merely return to existing law. This would assure a maintenance of effort on the part of the States who would only be permitted to cut back on services after meeting conditions designed to assure the State made every effort by efficient management to stretch Federal and State dollars and to cover the critical range of services.

Neither of these amendments require any additional expenditures of resources. It is my understanding from reading their report that the Committee on Finance does not believe that the several States are going to cut back their medicaid services. What we would be doing here is to go back to the existing language which would permit the States to cut back, but only after there is a utilization review by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

So what we would do with both amendments is to go back to existing law. Neither of these amendments, if adopted, would require any additional expenditures. The acceptance of both amendments would assure that the States continue to move in the direction of developing comprehensive medicaid programs. It would also assure a maintenance of State effort in the medicaid program and would only permit a reduction of services for the State after a finding by a management or utilization review board.

I would hope that both amendments would be accepted by the committee. I think they are important. I think they are essential in the march toward providing more comprehensive health care for the American people.

Finally, we are attempting to relieve some of the financial burdens on the States. Title III frees up $1 billion, and the revenue-sharing bill would return even more money.

Both amendments are important and move toward the goal of achieving comprehensive health care for the American people.

One last note on the proposal to strike section 231: We have to realize that when the States have had the option of cutting back on their medicaid programs, a number of them have taken advantage of that option. These States have been successfully brought to court and blocked from cutting back because of the existing law. Many people believe that if we strike out one section that requires maintenance of State efforts, a number of States would cut back, as 12 States tried to do; there would then be a serious reduction in the range of services available under medicaid.

Mr. President, I would be interested in the reaction to these amendments.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I will rise in opposition to the pending amendment. I understand the pending amendment is amendment 1703, is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, when Congress voted the medicaid bill back in the 1960's in that bill we mandated certain services to become effective by 1975. Growth of the proposal was progressive and became more and more expensive each year. It must be recalled that the Medicaid program is a joint program financed by the States and by the Federal Government. It does not come under social security provisions. It is a matching program whereby the Federal Government matches the States in accordance with a certain formula. A number of years ago we had hearings with Governors of the respective States. They said they were unable to balance the budget; that the mandate of Congress was requiring so much in the way of medical services that they could not provide the services; they did not have the resources to do so; that their legislatures were rebelling about raising new taxes, and they did not have adequate funds to do so.

I remember particularly the State of New Mexico and others that complained bitterly about Congress putting them in a strait-jacket and requiring the States to do things they had no particular desire to do.

It will be recalled that we never did go to conference with the House on the welfare reform bill in 1970. The House conferees refused to go to conference with the Senate in the last days of a dying session. But this year, in H.R. 1, the House sent us the identical provisions that the Senate Finance Committee had agreed to some 2 years ago. They sent to us the identical provisions that the U.S. Senate agreed to some years ago.

The question which this body must decide is simply this: Does the Senate of the United States want to require the 50 sovereign States to maintain programs at the expense of those States that the State Governors and the State legislatures might not want to maintain for themselves?

Any medical program, of course, is vastly popular with the people. No Governor, no legislator of the 50 States, would like to curtail and restrict health care and medical programs if that could possibly be avoided, but the States are crying for help. They are crying for aid. This year we passed a 5-year revenue sharing bill, providing more than $30 billion, on the theory that the States, the municipalities, and the county governments did not have the revenue to carry on programs they are carrying on at the present time.

So why should we, under those conditions, come in and mandate the States to do something that the States themselves do not want to do? That is simply put, but that is the issue facing the Senate at the present time, and it is a matter of such grave importance that it will be necessary to have a yea and nay vote on this particular amendment.

I, therefore, suggest the absence of a quorum, and notify the attachés to request that enough Senators come to the floor in order to have the yeas and nays ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that request?

Mr. TALMADGE. I will withhold that request temporarily.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would like to direct the attention of the Senator to page 201 of the report. It refers to section 230 of the bill, but it is under section 1093(e). It reads:

Section 1903(e) of the Medicaid statute requires that each State make "a satisfactory showing that it is making efforts in the direction of broadening the scope of the care and services made available under the plan and in the direction of liberalizing the eligibility requirements for medical assistance.

All we are asking is that the States do continue existing law, which was a recognition by and a finding of the Congress that what we were really attempting to do was work in partnership with the States to establish health services in the medicaid and medicare field.

That has been part of the act until this year. The Congress is either interested in developing a comprehensive program for health services or it is not.

So I ask the Senator what he finds objectionable. I would be interested in learning why it is so objectionable to him when it was accepted in the past. Why was it not objected to in the past? I would be interested in knowing why the Senator finds objectionable the words "a satisfactory showing that it is making efforts in the direction of broadening the scope of care and services."

Mr. TALMADGE. As the Senator knows, this is a Federal statute that mandates the States to do certain things. It requires them to increase their programs of aid for medicaid year by year, getting more expensive with each succeeding year. Originally there was a target date that this must be done by 1975. In 1969 Congress postponed it from 1975 to 1977.

The problem involved here is that we are requiring the States to do more than they have the revenue to do, and the committee thought we ought not to mandate the States to do things that they themselves do not desire to do. I read from a portion of the committee report:

The committee has been concerned with the burden of the medicaid program on State finances.

I will point out that when this program was originally adopted, the estimated cost was $238 million above the existing cost at that time, and in 1 year's time that was the exact cost increase—but for six States only. My recollection is that the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare underestimated the cost of this program, and that has concerned the Senate Finance Committee.

I continue reading from the report:

The expansion of the medicaid program and liberalization of eligibility requirements for medical assistance which is required by section 1903(e) could increase this burden and may result in States either cutting back on other programs or their considering dropping medicaid.

After we passed this program we found some States were so irresponsible that they actually permitted families with incomes of $6,000 a year to get free medical treatment. If my memory serves me correctly, the States of New York and California were two of them. We found that burden was so excessive and such a drain on the Federal Treasury that it was necessary for Congress to step in and to set some ceiling on such an open-ended authorization.

I continue reading from the report:

The committee agrees with the action of the House repealing section 1903(e). When the operations of the State medicaid programs have been substantially improved and there is assurance that program extensions will not merely result in other medical costs inflation, the question of expansion of the program can then be reconsidered.

The medicaid cost, I will point out to the Senator, for the fiscal year 1973 is $5 billion on the part of the Federal Government and $4 billion on the part of the State governments, making a total cost of $9 billion a year; and if these programs continue to increase in cost, that will be just a drop in the bucket compared to what it will be in 1977.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. Could the Senator tell us what he thinks the cost of this amendment is? There is no financial cost either in this amendment, which repeals section 230, or section 231. The committee's proposal to remove that requirement will not result in large-scale cutbacks.

We all agree that the cost of medicaid is exceedingly large, but I do not see why the Senator thinks that is affected by these amendments. That certainly does not apply to either one of these amendments. The only requirement would be the development of a plan under section 230. The committee does not believe that the removal of the maintenance of effort requirement will result in large-scale cutbacks in expenditures. I want to make sure that what the Finance Committee says is written in the law.

The Senator from Georgia can talk all afternoon about the increased costs of medicaid and medicare. We are not talking about the increased costs. We are talking about the conclusions of the Finance Committee. My next amendment is closely related to this one, but it assures that there are not any further cutbacks.

That is why I ask the Senator from Georgia why we are talking about increased costs when neither of these amendments will result in increased costs.

Admittedly we will not achieve a fully effective and equitable health program unless we enact a national health insurance. But all we are asking under the amendment introduced here is that we continue toward the goal that has been a part of this health care system up to this year by requesting the States to meet the deadline of 1977 with respect to the provision of comprehensive services. If that is too soon, I would be glad to modify it to the year 1979, or 1980. I think it is just important that we continue in the direction we are moving and not retrench.

But I fail to see, in either of the two amendments I am talking about as to section 230 and 231, why these amendments will cost the Government any additional money. I find the case to be quite the contrary.

Mr. TALMADGE. There is no way to put a firm dollar cost on what the future will bring. What this amendment addresses itself to is the fact that the States would be mandated both by Federal law and HEW regulations to improve their medical services under medicaid each year, to make it more and more costly. All we need do to consider the future is see what has happened in the past.

If my memory serves me correctly, when they came before the Finance Committee to testify on the cost of medicaid for the first year, the figure was some $200 million to $400 million, above the then current costs as an estimate. Mr. President, the first year alone, we found they were off base. Now we have seen that figure progressively increase year after year. The original cost was trivial compared to the cost for this fiscal year. The cost for this fiscal year, on the Federal level, is $5 billion. The cost for this fiscal year on the State level is $4 billion. The combined total of the two is $9 billion, and if we continue to require the States to provide more medicaid than they can finance, the cost will escalate still further, and instead of coming in and asking us to pass a $30 billion revenue-sharing bill, the next revenue-sharing bill may be $60 billion, $90 billion, $100 billion, or no one knows what.

The issue, to me, is very fundamental. The U.S. Government ought not to pass a law compelling States to do things in providing functions for their citizens that the legislatures of the States themselves do not want to provide. That is what this issue is all about.

We have had Governors come before our body and testify that they cannot finance these provisions: "The legislature will not finance these provisions, for God's sake, give us some relief."

That is what the Senate Finance Committee, on two separate occasions, has provided. That is what the Senate, by an overwhelming vote, in 1970, voted. That is what the Ways and Means Committee in 1972 voted. That is what the House of Representatives in 1972 has voted. That is what we are asking the Senate to vote on right now, not to compel the States to do it. They say they cannot afford it, and do not want to do it. That is what this issue is all about.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that?

Mr. TALMADGE. I withdraw it.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the point that I think has been missed in this discussion is the fact that what we have done here in Congress and in the Senate in the passage of medicare and medicaid has increased the demand for services without increasing the supply. The point of the Senator from Georgia is well taken about the even increasing cost of medical services, but the only way we will ever get a handle on that, I believe, is to have a comprehensive health security act that, for the first time, will put a ceiling on the cost of health services. That is what we really have to do. That is what we really need.

All we are asking, in these two amendments, is that while Congress considers that legislation, the States not go out and cut back on services for people who are poor, disabled, disadvantaged, old, lame, and blind. That is what we are talking about. All we are asking here in section 231 is that the States do not cut back any farther. We are not mandating that they increase it. We are just saying, "Don't cut back any farther." And it is the conclusion of the Committee on Finance, at least they believe, i tis their judgment, the most of the States will not cut back.

I say if it is their judgment that the States will not cut back, we ought to make sure they do not cut back on these services for people who are in desperate need.

The only other requirement under section 230 is that we develop a comprehensive plan and program of health services for the poor people, that we establish that as a goal.

That was recognized as a principle and a concept back in 1969. If it is not a good idea to mandate the States in 1972, why was it a good idea in 1969? If this argument about States rights is good in 1972, why was it not good in 1969?

We know about the whole question of the crisis in health. This is something that our health committee has been interested in and concerned about for some period of time. But you do not get around trying to meet the crisis in health by cutting down on services to the poor and disadvantaged people of this country. If we want to do something about it, we should try to do something about the profits of the health insurance companies which are escalating.

To hear the talk on the floor of the Senate this afternoon, it sounds like all our problems have been put on our backs by the poor and disadvantaged people of this country and that they are the ones who are exploiting us. But we had better realize now that the ones who have really been reaming the taxpayers are the insurance companies, and that is what we ought to be doing something about, and not cutting back on the services to the poor and disadvantaged.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, just a brief reply, and then I shall suggest the absence of a quorum.

The entire matter of public health is one of the things that the Congress of the United States must deal with next year, and it will be one of the highest priority items. The Ways and Means Committee has already held some public hearings in this field. Chairman MILLS of that committee has announced that it will be one of the highest priority items of the next session of Congress. I agree with that. It will be one of the highest priority items of the Senate Finance Committee, and of the Congress, next year.

All of the States have had problems with this matter. In 1969, the Senator's own State of Massachusetts had to consider a $120 million bond issue to meet the cost of medicaid and the welfare operating deficit. And Massachusetts was not an isolated case. All the States have had the same problem, and that is the reason why they have asked the Finance Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, and Congress to give them some relief.

The Ways and Means Committee has responded in the affirmative. The House of Representatives has responded in the affirmative. The Senate Finance Committee, on two separate occasions, has responded in the affirmative. And just 2 years ago, this body, by an overwhelming vote, responded in the affirmative.

We ought not to be mandating States to do more and more when they cannot do what they are undertaking at the present time, and come up here to this body on bended knee, begging for a $30 billion revenue-sharing program, which we have given them simply because they cannot carry out the functions of Government that we have already assigned and requested that they do.

Under those conditions, it seems absolutely intolerable to me that the U.S. Senate will say, "Yes, we know you are broke. We are broke, too. Our budgetary deficit for 4 years has been over $100 billion. The taxpayers are crying for relief; they cannot pay the taxes. But even under those conditions, we are going to make you do more and more and more," instead of letting the 50 States say for themselves what they want to do.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. MOSS. Is it not true that the Kennedy amendments do not call for any more efforts from the States; they simply restrain the States from cutting back?

Mr. TALMADGE. The existing law that the Senate Finance Committee repealed, the Ways and Means Committee repealed, the House repealed, and the Senate repealed 2 years ago, requires them to do more and more and more and more, and we are seeking to repeal the law that requires them to do more and more.

Mr. MOSS. I understand, from reading the amendments and listening to the Senator from Massachusetts, that the purpose of this is simply to inhibit the States from cutting back on their efforts, repealing the requirement of maintenance and the maintenance of effort; and it seems to me it would be ill-timed now to repeal any requirement on the States, especially as the Senator from Georgia, as did the Senator from Massachusetts, has pointed out that this body and the House of Representatives will be debating further a health care and health maintenance bill next year. Certainly, we ought to await that, to see whether we are going to repeal what is required now.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is addressing himself to another amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts which is at the desk and is not the pending business. The pending business is amendment No. 1703, to which the Senator from Georgia has addressed his remarks, and that is a provision in the medicaid bill that makes States do more and more and more sucessively each year, until the target date 1977.

Mr. MOSS. Does the Senator from Georgia have any estimate as to the cost of the amendments? I think the Senator from Massachusetts has been talking about two amendments.

Mr. TALMADGE. I responded to that earlier, to the Senator from Massachusetts. There is no way to estimate the cost, because we do not know what will be required. We do not know what the HEW regulations will be.

But we know that the cost to date has been going up at such a fantastic rate that the cost to the Federal Government this year is $5 billion and the cost to the State governments this year is $4 billion, for a combined cost of $9 billion for fiscal 1973 only.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. The point of the Senator from Utah is that there is no clear cost in the two amendments we are considering, if we follow the conclusions of the Finance Committee on 230.

The Finance Committee has concluded that the States are not going to cut back. So there really is not a cost factor.

With respect to the second amendment, No. 231, the conclusion of the Finance Committee is that the States are not going to cut back their programs. We want to write that into law.

I am curious why the Senator from Georgia, rather than talking about increasing costs of medicare and medicaid, as a whole, talks as if there are cost implications to either of these amendments.

Mr. TALMADGE. This amendment does not address itself to medicare in any manner whatever. Nothing the Senator from Georgia has said relates to medicare. This is the medicaid program entirely.

There is no way of estimating the cost, because it will depend upon the zeal of HEW in compelling the States, year after year, to progressively increase the cost. That is why the Finance Committee, the Ways and Means Committee, the House of Representatives, and the U.S. Senate have heretofore taken action in this regard—to mandate HEW, "Please don't go out and make these States spend more money that they don't have." If this provision of the Finance Committee is agreed to, HEW cannot go out and mandate the respective States to spend more and more and more each year. That is what the States have requested us to do. That is what the Senate has done. That is what the Finance Committee has done. That is what the House has done. That is what the Ways and Means Committee has done. They have responded to the pleas of the 50 States: "Please save us from having to spend more money that HEW bureaucrats are making us spend."

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. MOSS. Presumably, if people are getting medical care, they have some need for the medical care. Are we compelling States to squander, to throw away, medical care?

Mr. TALMADGE. HEW has been doing that. They have been compelling and mandating States to spend money they do not have to spend, money that the legislatures do not want to spend, money that the governors do not want to spend. HEW is saying, "But you must."

Mr. MOSS. But what about the little fellow who has a liver ailment or a crooked back or some other disease and needs help and cannot get medical help? We say, "We will take it out on you and let the States save the money."

Mr. TALMADGE. Every indigent citizen in America is covered at the present time under medicaid. We are now spending $9 billion a year on medicaid.

Mr. MOSS. I would still like to know how all the medical service is wasted, then, if there is no illness that it was directed toward.

Mr. TALMADGE. Before the Senator came into the Chamber, I stated that New York State was at one point mandating free medicine to families earning $6,000 a year. The Finance Committee had to step in and correct that. What we are trying to do now is to protect the States from spending money they do not want to spend; and HEW bureaucrats have been roaming the country and making them spend it, whether they like it or not.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TALMADGE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. I ask the Senator if this type of situation does not seem to be the problem: We put a program into effect that provided that we would match the States at the Federal level, so that States could provide a generous program of medical care for people, even those not eligible for welfare cash payments. Then the States, seeing this generous Federal matching, went ahead and put on people, as New York did, who were making more than $6,000 a year. Having done that, they run into court decisions and into great numbers of applications for benefits that they never anticipated. So we find the costs bankrupting them on their share. The Federal Government is matching them; but those who would provide the greater benefit would like to assume that the finances of the Federal Government are limitless, that all we need do is run off more money on the printing presses to pay for these programs.

Those who would proceed on that assumption then find that the State, having been overly generous and having attracted far more business than they thought they were going to attract, cannot put up their end; they are broke. Meanwhile, they are confronted with a provision in the law that requires that every year they provide even more services than the year before.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator is eminently correct.

Mr. LONG. The only thing that makes any sense at all is that, having been generous far beyond one's own ability to be generous, a State whose services are far more liberal than the other should cut back toward the common level. Instead, we have a provision in the law so that, having been generous to the extent of being absolutely foolhardy, the State cannot come back to the point of common sense and get their program back within costs.

Various welfare administrators have approached the Senator from Louisiana and have said, "What can you do to protect us against this billions of dollars of further increases in the cost of medicaid?"

One of the things we can do is to give the States the authority and the power to back away from some of the unjustified generosity they could not afford in the first instance. There are all kinds of ways that a State could reduce the cost of the program back to something they could afford.

If we are not going to pay for it, the option should be left to the State, so that they can reduce some of the generous benefits.

With regard to the idea of going ahead and spending on the theory that the Federal Government can pay for everything, I should tell the Senate I am on notice that if the bill includes the spending which the Senate has already put in and it reaches the President's desk, he will probably have to veto it because it so greatly exceeds what the President estimated the bill would cost when he sent it down here to begin with.

Mr. TALMADGE. The Senator from Louisiana has stated it superbly. In 1966, the first year, the medicaid program cost $1 billion. The second year it cost $2.5 billion. The third year it was $3.7 billion. The fourth year $4.3 billion. The fifth year $5.4 billion. Next year $6 billion. It has been compounding at the rate of more than 20 percent a year. We know that compounding interest escalates rapidly when we compound it at the rate of 20 percent a year.

Mr. LONG. The provision the Senator from Massachusetts seeks to keep in the law, that provision that says notwithstanding the fact that the State may already be broke they have to have an ever more elaborate program. It goes up and up.

Mr. TALMADGE. More and more and more. That is the tenor of it.

Mr. LONG. It goes ever upward and onward higher and higher——

Mr. TALMADGE. Exactly.

Mr. LONG (continuing). Hoping that the State might survive until 1977, at which point we might have some money left to keep it pyramiding.

Mr. TALMADGE. No matter higher prices, no matter what, let it go higher and higher. That is what it would mean.

Mr. President, I now ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, finally and briefly, if we are to follow the line of argument urged on us by the Senators from Louisiana and Georgia, we will not have more and more; we will have less and less. We should recognize that at least 50 percent of the cost of medicaid programs is financed by the Federal Government. What we have been attempting to do under medicaid is work toward Medicaid programs that provide minimum standards of good health care in every State, so that it would not depend on being born in Georgia, in Alabama, or in Massachusetts. Why should the accident of birth determine whether one can be treated for sickness or illness? We want to work toward a basic standard for everyone. The only thing we are talking about, so far as these two amendments are concerned, is that we are not going to set aside this goal, or cut back any further than where we are now.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that John Steinberg of my staff may have the privilege of the floor throughout the consideration of H.R. 1 today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we on the committee recognize that there are additional costs involved in medicaid and we will have to find ways to provide more health care for people. We know that. The Senator has his health insurance ideas which would cost far more than what has been recommended—several times more. But even health insurance that this Senator would recommend would increase the cost $3 billion at the minimum over what we have in the bill now. This is about a $20 billion bill now, I think. We know that the cost of medical programs will increase in the next Congress. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee has announced that it will be a priority item with them to be considered in that committee, and his members expect to fashion a proposal in the health care area which will provide for more health care.

We on the Finance Committee expect that we will be recommending legislation providing for additional health care. But this is not the answer, to pass an act of Congress to force the States to bankrupt themselves. If we are going to provide——

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. In 1 minute—if we are going to provide proper health care for people, we should provide it and provide funds ourselves here to pay for it. It is no answer to pass an act of Congress requiring the States to go into bankruptcy because the people refuse to put more taxes on themselves.

I would think we will undoubtedly find other ways for providing more health care and paying for it next year. But the Senator from Massachusetts does not provide for that. All he provides for is to force the States to bankrupt themselves and that is something that should not be forced on the States of this Union by an act of Congress.

I am happy now to yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. I am wondering what provision the Senator is talking about. He is not talking about the two amendments I have been discussing about bankrupting the country, because I have drawn upon the conclusions of the committee, contained within its report on the bill. And it has been the conclusion that there should not be any significant cutback in services. So, obviously, he is not talking about my two amendments.

Mr. LONG. The Senator has several amendments here. I think probably the Senator is referring to the one not presently pending. We are talking about amendment No. 1703. That is the one that would threaten to bankrupt the States. The Senate and the House and both committees on both sides, having studied it, decided we should not require the States to provide more benefits next year than they provided this year, more benefits the following year than they provided the previous year, and so on.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is not talking about my amendments. All mine apply to is the development of a comprehensive plan for services, but there is no requirement placed on any State. All it does is, it reverts back to the language of the act put in in 1969 requiring the States to develop the plans and programs.

Mr. LONG. Under section 1903(e), which is what we are talking about, HEW has required the States to move ever onward and upward with benefit requirements. That is the section the Senator would retain as is.

Mr. KENNEDY. It says a satisfactory showing, that is, making an effort. There is no requirement that they do more than make a satisfactory showing. It has existed in the act up until this year, just a satisfactory showing.

Mr. LONG. HEW, under that provision, says:

> What are you doing? Give us a satisfactory showing that you are moving ever onward and upward, that it is a more expensive program.

That is what 1903(e) is being used to say. So far as they are concerned, it is not a satisfactory showing you are thinking about, but a satisfactory showing that you are spending more money and providing more services to the people than you had the year before. So it is that provision in the law which HEW is relying on to force the States as a condition of receiving any Federal matching funds to make a satisfactory showing that they are spending more money this year than last.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ROTH). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as I understand the parliamentary situation, the yeas and nays have been ordered on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am prepared to vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG), are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE), is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) is paired with the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS)

If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is paired with the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS). If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea" and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 45, as follows:

So Mr. KENNEDY'S amendment (No. 1703) was rejected.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment, on behalf of myself and Senators MOSS, PERCY, BROOKE, CRANSTON, HART, HUMPHREY, JAVITS, and TUNNEY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 348, strike out lines 20 through 22.

The language proposed to be stricken out is as follows:

REPEAL OF SECTION 1902(D) OF MEDICAID

SEC. 231. Section 1902(d) of the Social Security Act is repealed.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that minority counsel from the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, Mr. Cutler, be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, for the benefit of Members of the Senate, I do not think this amendment will take very much time. I intend to take only 3 or 4 minutes. We have had an opportunity to talk about this amendment with the chairman of the Finance Committee and also with the Senator from Georgia during his absence from the debate on the previous amendment. There are just a couple of points I would like to make at this time.

First of all, the amendment really does not cost anything at all. The thrust of the amendment is to require that the States not cut back on providing services that they are already providing, and, as reflected in the committee's report on page 245, the Finance Committee does not feel that there will be a reduction of services by States under medicaid. I read the language of the committee report:

The committee does not expect that removal of the maintenance of effort requirement will result in large-scale cut-backs in benefits under the Medicaid program.

All this amendment tries to do is to take that idea and make sure that the effort will be maintained. We are not writing anything new. The provision has been in effect since 1969. All we are trying to do is go back to the existing law, which is to require that the maintenance of effort be maintained and that we do not get the kind of large-scale withdrawal which I fear will come to hundreds of thousands of persons, most in need of health services.

The Finance Committee does not think there will be a significant withdrawal, but it is really to guard against the possibility of States withdrawing that we have offered this amendment.

Finally, let me say that if a State is able to demonstrate to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare that, as a result of utilization review, that there will be an undue burden on it, it will be able to receive the waiver for which it would have been eligible under the act as previously drawn. So this proposal provides definite flexibility for those States that feel the kind of program that has been developed is particularly burdensome to them. They will be able to have studies made and go to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and be granted a waiver. But the thrust of this amendment is to assure that there will not be further cutbacks by the States in the range of services that are being provided.

It seems to me it is important that we continue these efforts, particularly when we recognize that approximately $1 billion is being returned to the States under title III of the bill, and also that resources will be returned to the States under the revenue-sharing program, and health care certainly is one of the areas of priority under that program.

So I hope the amendment is adopted.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the amendment the Senator is offering was offered before the Senate in 1970, and the Senate voted against the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts in 1970, and I think it would do so now for reasons I would like to explain.

As the Senator has so well said, we do not anticipate that the States will make significant cutbacks in their medicaid program, but we have seen situations when Senators from certain States come to us pleading for relief to help the State's fiscal situation. For example, a Governor of a State might think it desirable to provide particular benefits and raise the eligibility requirements so that people making $10,000 or $12,000 could enjoy the benefits of medicaid. And when they do those things, far more people than they anticipated come in asking for the benefits, and then the State finds they cannot afford it.

Without the maintenance of effort provision we could say, "Simply cut back on your generosity," and everything would be fine.

It was the Senator from Louisiana who started this maintenance of effort thing. In years gone by, I used to advocate a $5 or $10 increase in grandma's old-age pension check, and then the State would economize and only pass half of it through to them. So this Senator formulated the theory that when the Federal Government would make an increase we would require a maintenance of effort, so that we could guarantee the people would get the benefit.

Then that procedure was, you might say, perfected by the Department of HEW by what is now known as the maintenance of effort provision, which works out in some instances as Congress never intended—so much so that one would wonder whether we had our sanity when we passed it.

A situation occurred in the State of New Mexico, and we had to pass a law to allow them to retreat, the only alternative being that the Federal Government pay for an unwise decision on the part of the State from which the State would like to retreat.

The same thing happened in the State of Tennessee, where the very liberal former Senator from that State, Mr. Gore, himself had to come before Congress and plead for us to relieve Tennessee from the generosity which they could not afford to continue.

If we are going to make them continue for all time to come to maintain an effort and a burden once they assume it, then it inhibits and prevents the Governor from doing something for the benefit of his people which he believes would be a good idea, for fear that he will not be able to keep it up.

All the welfare administrators are telling us right now that they are very fearful of what will happen to their States' budgets when we pass this bill, because they will be under pressure to make large numbers of aged and disabled people eligible for medicaid who are not eligible today, because we have expanded the cash benefits program for those people.

They say they are going to be confronted with a real fiscal crunch, you might say, and they want to know where the help is going to come from to pay for it. Undoubtedly the help will come from here.

We in Congress will provide a more generous set of benefits in terms of health care next year than this year. That will be one of the main items of consideration in the next Congress.

The most inexpensive thing along that line that I know of is one that is being proposed by me. It would cost about $3 billion extra. The Senator from Massachusetts has a proposal that would cost about $50 billion extra. Others have proposals varying in between. In any event, we are going to provide for a lot of additional health care next year, somewhere between $3 billion and $50 billion worth of it, and, if a State needs some help to carry this burden, we will provide it.

But meanwhile, if the States find they have been more generous than they can afford, and cannot keep it up, why should they not be permitted to cut back somewhat in what they were providing, especially when a court decision or a decision of HEW makes them provide benefits for more people than they felt they would have to provide for?

I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I am glad the Senator mentioned New Mexico, because there is another chapter in the New Mexico story which I think this amendment would affect.

The New Mexico doctors organized a review organization, and reviewed all the medicaid cases, and they discovered that about 20 percent of the service provided were either unnecessary or could be provided more economically. Under this amendment, they would have to go on throwing money out when, as a matter of fact, they might not have the need, and the Governor would not be allowed to save the money that the review made possible. This saving was not going to hurt anyone.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator is not talking about my amendment. The Senator has completely misinterpreted and misconstrued it, and is not referring to my amendment at all.

Of course they would be able to save money or resources by any kind of investigation which showed error or fraud. Of course they would. The Senator distorts the thrust of the amendment by his explanation.

Mr. BENNETT. If maintenance of effort means spending the same amount of money, and that is the way I understand it, then I do not see how the Governor could save the money. He has got to spend it on medicaid, even though he does not have the demand for services that he thought he had before the matter was reviewed.

Mr. LONG. That is a part of the problem. Under careful professional standards review, as called for in the amendment developed by the Senator from Utah—which I think is a tribute to the statesmanship of the Senator from Utah where the State of New Mexico used the approach recommended in this amendment and carried out a proper review, so that they could provide more medical service and better service at less cost—in New Mexico they did exactly that. By using the kind of review the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) had been recommending, they thoroughly reviewed what they were doing, and they were able to save lives and provide better, higher quality health care, and save money all at the same time.

Now, under the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, they would be required to go ahead and spend the money even though they do not need to. In other words, if they find they can save money and provide better service to these people all at the same time, they have to go spend the money anyway. That is an utterly ridiculous fiasco, I say to the Senator as the man who started this whole maintenance-of-effort thing to begin with. That was initially my amendment, to require that they have a maintenance of effort. At that time, we passed the Long provision so that, when we would provide more benefits at the Federal level, the States would not retrench at their level to offset the additional Federal generosity.

I say, as the one who originally sponsored that proposal, that it is an utterly ridiculous result when you take it to the point that when a State finds that by good administration and careful review of patient care, and they can give better care at less cost, that they can save money and save lives at the same time, the money must be wasted anyway.

When the States find they can save money by good administration and careful review, on the one hand, and it results in providing better care and savings at the same time, to require them to pour money down a rathole, so to speak, is an utterly ridiculous result, and I hope, Mr. President, that the Senate will not reverse its previous decision.

The Senate voted on this on a previous occasion, and voted that in a situation of this sort, the States could make some reductions.

We are going to provide, as I say, a lot more money for medical care next year, and we are going to look at the problems the States have in trying to finance what they are doing because of the expanded rolls we make necessary under this bill. But I would hope the Senate would not require the States to spend money, under the theory of maintaining of effort, that might not be appropriate in some situations.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, we are not expanding any rolls by this amendment. We are not increasing any costs. All you have to do is read through the report of the Finance Committee, where they indicated:

> We do not expect that the removal of the maintenance of effort requirement will result in cutbacks in benefits.

If they do not believe it will result in cutbacks in benefits, why not just write that into the legislation? It is in there now.

It is important that the Senate understand where we are with respect to this amendment. The last amendment was to provide professional planning for future services by the States under medicaid. This amendment is just a maintenance of State effort by the States, with escape procedures which can be available to the States that are able to make a good case for the use of that particular provision. I hope the Senate will accept the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the principal result of the Senator's amendment would be that the States would be denied the flexibility that some of them will need to make some changes in their programs to meet temporary pressures of cost and other considerations that might occur. I suppose the best example as to what occasioned the committee position, which the Senator seeks to strike, is a situation in New Mexico, where the State found it necessary for a short period of time to cut back somewhat in benefits in one area or another, so as to meet the financial pressure on the program. Once they got their adjustments made, they were able to restore the same level of benefits they had before. In fact, they not only restored it but also moved to an even larger level of benefits for the people.

Senator Anderson was an early sponsor of the medicare program, back in the days when it used to be called the King-Anderson bill.

We are seeking to preserve the same flexibility New Mexico had to resort to.

I have heard no one contend that any State expects any major cutback or reduction in any of the things they are doing, but they do need flexibility in their program to take care of the crises that may arise from time to time, until we can provide more help to them.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it is important that we realize that half the money we are talking about in the Medicaid program comes from the Federal Government. We are trying to establish some rather basic and fundamental services. Once they are established, we want to make sure that they will not be cut back.

Under this provision, we are going to find—contrary to the findings of the Finance Committee—children, women, and others under medicaid who are receiving doctors' services, hospital services, and other services this year who will not receive them next year. That is the plain truth.

We are trying to insure that those who are getting the services now will be able to continue to receive those services.

The women, the children, the blind, the disabled, all those who are receiving these services, should not lose them next year;

Mr. President, I am prepared to vote at this time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as a political matter, the States are not going to deny health care they are providing to the aged, the blind, and the disabled, unless the pressure on the States is such that they must make some adjustment.

This amendment was offered back in 1970, and was rejected by a vote of 18 to 44.

Senators might like to have their memories refreshed as to how they voted when they had the same question before them in 1970, just 2 years ago. The following Senators voted in favor of the amendment: Messrs. BAYH, BROOKE, CASE, CRANSTON, HARRIS, HARTKE, HUGHES, JACKSON, JAVITS, KENNEDY, MATHIAS, MCGOVERN, MONDALE, MOSS, RIBICOFF, SCHWEIKER, SCOTT, and WILLIAMS of New Jersey.

Voting against this proposal, as I propose to vote on this occasion, were the following Senators: Messrs. AIKEN, ALLEN, ALLOTT, BAKER, BELLMON, BIBLE, BOGGS, HARRY F. BYRD, JR., ROBERT C. BYRD, CANNON, COOK, COOPER, CURTIS, DOLE, Ellender, FANNIN, GRIFFIN, HANSEN, Holland, HRUSKA, JORDAN of North Carolina, JORDAN of Idaho, LONG, MAGNUSON, MANSFIELD, MCINTYRE, METCALF, MILLER, NELSON, PACKWOOD, PEARSON, PELL, PERCY, Prouty, PROXMIRE, RANDOLPH, SMITH, SPARKMAN, SPONG, STEVENS, SYMINGTON, TALMADGE, THURMOND, and Williams of Delaware.

There were 38 not voting.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the rollcall vote be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the vote was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[No. 453 Leg.]

YEAS—18

Bayh, Brooke, Case, Cranston, Harris, Hartke, Hughes, Jackson, Javits, Kennedy, Mathias, McGovern, Mondale, Moss, Ribicoff, Schweiker, Scott, Williams, N.J.

NAYS—44

Aiken, Allen, Allott, Baker, Bellmon, Bible, Boggs, Byrd, Va., Byrd, W. Va., Cannon, Cook, Cooper, Curtis, Dole, Ellender.

Fannin, Griffin, Hansen, Holland, Hruska, Jordan, N.C., Jordan, Idaho, Long, Magnuson, Mansfield, McIntyre, Metcalf, Miller, Nelson, Packwood.

Pearson, Pell, Percy, Prouty, Proxmire, Randolph, Smith, Sparkman, Spong, Stevenson, Symington, Talmadge, Thurmond, Williams, Del.

NOT VOTING—38

Anderson, Bennett, Burdick, Church, Cotton, Dodd, Dominick, Eagleton, Eastland, Ervin, Fong, Fulbright, Goldwater.

Goodell, Gore, Gravel, Gurney, Hart, Hatfield, Hollings, Inouye, McCarthy, McClellan, McGee, Montoya, Mundt.

Murphy, Muskie, Pastore, Russell, Saxbe, Stennis, Stevens, Tower, Tydings, Yarborough, Young, N. Dak., Young, Ohio.

Mr. LONG. I would think, Mr. President, that Senators would be well advised to remain consistent and decline to agree to this amendment, just as the Senate declined to agree to it in 1970. I think there is even more logic to recommend against it now than there was then.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, it should be a part of the record that of the 12 States that tried to get out of this program, none of them had tried to get out prior to the vote in 1970. They tried to get out subsequently. That is additional information, and that should be weighed in each Senator's final judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea"; if I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "nay." I withdraw my vote.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) is paired with the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS).

If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is paired with the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS). If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea" and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

Also, if present and voting, the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 40, as follows:

So Mr. KENNEDY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment reads as follows:

On page 467, strike out lines 15 through 17, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(b)(1) Subject to the provisions of paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall be effective with respect to services furnished after June 30, 1973.

(2) The Secretary is authorized and directed to conduct a full and complete study to determine the advisability of inclusion of chiropractor services under Medicare and to postpone the effective date of the amendments made by this section upon a finding that such services should not be so included.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I do not expect to take too much time on the amendment. It is not very complicated. It is important that we have it discussed here this afternoon.

In the pending legislation, chiropractors are included as eligible providers under medicare. My amendment would leave chiropractors eligible. However, it would require that there be a study made of chiropractic and that it be done by an independent body and be completed by June 30 of next year, and that the study be available to the Secretary of HEW so that he will be able to use it to develop regulations as a result of the study if he deems it necessary.

This amendment is important. I urge you to agree to the amendment.

Mr. President, today there are hundreds of thousands of American citizens being treated by chiropractors. They are being treated for a variety of different diseases. During hearings before our Health Subcommittee we have seen many instances in which people who have had various illnesses, initially go to a chiropractor and only later go to a physician. In too many instances, their sicknesses have advanced to the point where the patients died.

Mr. President, I have included in my more complete statement some examples reported in the Reader's Digest and in some of the medical journals concerning treatment of illnesses beyond the scope of their training by chiropractors.

I draw attention to page 3107 of the hearings of the Finance Committee on H.R. 1. That page reproduces a chiropractic research chart. It lists all the various kinds of diseases that chiropractors feel qualified to treat. Included in these is anemia. They then list the percentage accepted for treatment, the percentage that are well or much improved, the percentage that are slightly improved, the percentage that are same, and the percentage that are worse.

For anemia, they have 81.5 percent reported well or much improved.

For gall bladder disorders, they list 80.9 percent being well or much improved.

They even treat high blood pressure. For high blood pressure they list 88.2 percent being well or much improved. For low blood pressure they list 73.6 percent being well or much improved.

For migraine headaches, they list 86.6 percent being well or much improved.

For ulcers they list 80.2 percent being well or much improved.

We know that under the provisions of the legislation all that is required is a high school diploma and 18 months of training in addition to that. They can then go out and treat, as they do, many of our senior citizens and others for a wide variety of different illnesses and diseases.

Mr. President, I have before me one of the textbooks that is printed for the Parker School, by the Parker Chiropractor Research Foundation. And in the textbook they give the kinds of procedures that should be followed and the kind of things that should be said by the chiropractor when patients are treated.

They list the things that one must say to patients during the first 10 visits.

On the first adjustment, a chiropractor is supposed to say: "Your spine is certainly rigid, but that adjustment took well."

On the second adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better"?

Then if the patient states that nothing is better and restates his trouble, he should say, "Yes, I know; that is on your patient record card, but the adjustment took so well yesterday some improvement should have been noticed. Think hard now—is not something better?" If a patient tells him of conditions that are better, say, "Wonderful. Great. Good for you. I am proud of you. I appreciate your getting well." It states that one should give patients: First, attention; second, acceptance; third, approval; and fourth, recognition.

On the third adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? Your eyes are brighter."

On the fourth adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? I hope you are feeling as good as you look."

On the fifth adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? You are getting a spring in your step."

He is also supposed to give the patient a "twin scale" pamphlet for someone else.

On the sixth adjustment, a chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? You are getting in fighting trim."

On the seventh adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? Your body and mind are getting more rest in each hour that you sleep than ever before."

On the eighth adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? Did you know you will live longer as a result of these adjustments?"

Then they are supposed to give them a 5-day "inner cheap diet" if indicated.

On the ninth adjustment, a chiropractor is supposed to say: "What is better? Did you know you will have fewer colds, sore throats, et cetera, as a result of these adjustments?"

On the 10th and final adjustment, the chiropractor is supposed to say, "What is better? Did you know you will do better work during the time you are having these adjustments?"

Then the book continues to go into the procedures concerning how to get compensation, or as the book puts it, "collect examination fee."

It tells the chiropractor how to collect. That section reads:

a. "That will be $27.50 for today. Will that be cash or check?" or

"That will be $27.50 for today, Mrs. Jones. Do you prefer to pay by cash or check?" or

"Mrs. Jones, that will be $27.50 for today. Do you have your own checkbook or would you like one of our counter checks?"

Under (c) on that page it says: "Don't look up."

Then it gives the reasons for collecting on the first visit. They are as follows:

a. Determine ability of patient to pay.
b. Hold the patient.
c. Establish habit pattern.
d. Just good business.

It then lists as an additional reason for collecting on a cash basis. "Patients who pay cash get better results."

Mr. President, then, later on, they have a section which shows a one-a-day plan for building a $25,000 a year practice. It gives a list about how many X-rays the chiropractor should give; what the income will be based on the number of X-rays, the treatment, and the rest.

This really is not a laughing matter. The amendment that is proposed here is a very modest amendment. All we are requiring is that a study be made by an independent agency, hopefully by the National Academy of Sciences; that this be made available to the Secretary of HEW; that he consult it if he wishes and draft regulations.

I think we have a responsibility in the Senate when we establish programs in the whole area of quality health care to assure that programs we do pass are going to be meaningful and helpful to the American people.

I am certain there are some practices the chiropractor can perform to relieve pain and suffering in individuals, but from the documents which have been submitted to the Finance Committee we can see they go far beyond the type of diseases and illnesses and disorders that should be treated by them. There are signs and symptoms here, such as anemia, high blood pressure, and ulcers, that can signal the beginning of cancer and many other diseases.

I think we should have the kind of skilled practitioners who have gone through courses of study and met requirements in the respective States in performing those services.

Mr. President, I hope the Senate will agree to the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the committee did not have an opportunity to consider the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts in regard to chiropractors. The committee amendment simply takes the view that it is the duty of the State to decide what it wants to do about this matter—if they want to license chiropractors, certain chiropractic services can be made available. The chiropractors are not entirely satisfied with it, but they would rather have it than the Kennedy amendment.

The Senator makes a strong and eloquent argument. I would leave it to the judgment of the Senate as to what they would like to do about this matter. Personally, I am willing to abide by the judgment of the Senate.

I know that some Senators are more decided about the chiropractor amendment than are others. This would postpone the date when the provisions that affect chiropractors would go into effect. I would be willing to abide by the judgment of the Senate in this matter.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I am happy to yield the floor.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, can the Senator from Massachusetts tell us whether or not he has read the committee report language on page 253 of the report?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes, I have.

Mr. MILLER. I would like to read a part of the language in the committee report because I heard the Senator make some comments which I do not believe would be responsive to the language of the Committee on Finance in the report on this section. The language in the committee report was most carefully drafted by the staff of the Committee on Finance and it constitutes important legislative history for the section of the bill the Senator's amendment refers to.

This would be used by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare in its regulations to implement the section.

I wish to read very important language in the committee report, which is legislative history. The language is about the middle of the second paragraph under "Coverage of Chiropractic Services Under Medicare" on page 253.

The committee believes that at least uniform minimum standards of the following kinds should underlie licensure: satisfactory evidence of preliminary education equal to the requirements for graduation from an accredited high school or other secondary school; a diploma issued by a college of chiropractic approved by the State's chiropractic examiners and where the practitioner has satisfied the requirements for graduation including the completion of a course of study covering a period of not less than three school years of six months each year in actual continuous attendance covering adequate courses of study in the subjects of anatomy, physiology, symptomatology and diagnosis, hygiene and sanitation, chemistry, histology, pathology, and principles and practice of chiropractic, including clinical instruction in vertebral palpation, nerve tracing and adjusting; and passage of an examination prescribed by the State's chiropractic examiners covering said subjects. Moreover, the committee does not intend that the practice of operative surgery, osteopathy, or administering or prescription of any drug or medicine included in materia medica should be covered by the practice of chiropractic. Such standards would also be applicable to coverage of chiropractic services under medicaid.

I suggest that all of this language is what the committee intended to be included in the regulations to be promulgated by the Department. I am quite confident there are a good many States that will not be able to meet these requirements at the present time. It would be hoped they would raise their standards so they could meet them. I would guess they would meet them rather rapidly with the incentive that they are not going to be covered unless they meet them. I believe the committee did a pretty careful job of setting standards to be included in the regulations; otherwise I do not think the committee would have gotten the provision the Senator seeks to amend.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, just above the language the Senator from Iowa read there is this statement:

The Committee on Finance believes, however, that further study of chiropractic services is not required to support coverage of the services of chiropractors under the supplementary medical insurance program.

Mr. President, I believe the point raised by the Senator from Maryland that I had intended by my amendment to continue the provisions of the Senate bill, but to have an independent study done that hopefully would be done objectively, by a group such as the National Academy of Sciences, to report before June 30, 1973. The Secretary be authorized upon the completion of the study to draft regulations to reflect the findings. I think we would get the kind of comprehensive study that should be done. I think this provides the kind of protection for the people who use chiropractors that is necessary. I believe this would be the most prudent way to proceed.

I would like to ask a question of the Senator from Louisiana. As I understand it, there are two States that do not have licensing procedures for chiropractors. I understand that Louisiana is one such State. I did not have the opportunity to mention that to the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, as I understand it, we in Louisiana can be completely neutral about the matter. We do not license chiropractors in Louisiana.

I think the chiropractors actually erected a sign on one of the main highways in Louisiana reading something like this: "Louisiana, shame, the only State that does not license chiropractors." Apparently that did not change their minds; they do not license them yet. The State medical society there strongly opposes it. Its members have contended, as the Senator probably knows—and, incidentally, the Senator from Massachusetts at this moment is taking a position on something which is one of the few things that I think he would be strongly supported on by the American Medical Association; they might even forgive him for his national health insurance bill.

It is contended by some people that there are patients who ought to be going to doctors, because they really have cancers or have terminal diseases, but, instead, are going to chiropractors who tell them they can help them by straightening their spines when, according to the doctors, it is not going to do any good. It is a hard-fought issue in Louisiana, but Louisiana is not directly affected by this proposal, because we do not have licensed chiropractors in Louisiana.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I have had the opportunity to listen to the Senator from Massachusetts and, with others, was amused by the excerpts he read from some manual on how to greet patients and how to collect fees. It is unnerving to realize that a school of chiropractic instruct its students how to collect fees. But it would not surprise me in the least if they had gotten their basic text from medical schools, perhaps from some form of a department of economics of the AMA. People go to all kinds of doctors—M.D.'s, O.D.'s and chiropractors. Some patients benefit. Some find that there is no change in their conditions. And others die.

If chiropractors overprescribe, they are not the only kind of doctors in this country who overprescribe. If chiropractors join together in organizing a drug repackaging firm and then write prescriptions on their trade name, they have learned this from some of the medical doctors. We are not doing anything here to correct these practices which we know have been engaged in by certain doctors.

As far as I am aware, the licensing procedure in the State of Michigan is adequate to insure that doctors of medicine, M.D.'s, doctors of osteopathy, doctors of chiropractic, and so on, have met established examination requirements.

Licenses are issued after examination in each of these fields. Occasionally we hear of incompetent performance by a licensee, but this is true of M.D.'s and O.D.'s, as well as chiropractors.

There are weaknesses in all of these licensing boards of examination, as malpractice recoveries confirm. But there just happen to be a great many people in this country who feel that treatment by a chiropractor is of benefit to them. I must acknowledge a personal bias in this. My father was one of those people. My father was not an uninformed person. He did elect to go to a chiropractor when certain symptoms, including, if you will, head colds, bothered him. With other symptoms, he went to our family physician. If he had needed surgery, he would have gone to a surgeon. I would not want, by any vote or silence on my part, to suggest that I think his judgment now is to be questioned. He was in the care of a medical doctor when he expired, not a chiropractor, and I do not blame medical doctors for that, but I know my father did benefit from certain treatment from "Doc" Mac Nealis. He was a chiropractor and he was a good one.

I think nothing we say here should suggest that they are all bad, any more than any passing reference I have made to M.D.'s should be interpreted as indicating I feel that they are all bad, either, just because some of them engage in practices which I think are reprehensible, such as oversubscribing, owning pharmacies, being incorporators and participants of drug repackaging firms. Many Americans know that benefit, satisfaction, and relief have resulted from chiropractic treatment. I am one who has been thus benefited.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HART. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. I must say I listened with great interest to the Senator's comments. With respect to regulation and qualification in my own State, chiropractors are regulated. We have a Chiropractic Licensing Board, and it is determined by the legislature of our State as to how they qualify and how they are regulated. They do so. They license them to do business and to do certain things.

The question raised in my mind is whether we should set up a standard separate and apart from the States.

I listened with interest to the reading from the almanac from the Parker School by the Senator from Massachusetts. It reminded me of a medical school that used to advertise over the radio from Mexico and it beamed all over the Southwest ready cures. I note that they have a big building down in Texas, so I am not at all sure that it might be related to it. But I also noted, in examining the book, that the first edition of it was back in 1951. This is 21 years ago, so I think perhaps the procedures may have been changed or modified over that period of time.

My point is, I myself find it very difficult to explain to some why they are not covered under Federal legislation when the States see fit to license and regulate them. If Louisiana does not see fit to do so, obviously that is the prerogative of the State of Louisiana. I venture to say that Michigan probably does license and regulate them very closely. So it may be difficult to explain to one's constituents.

Mr. HART. I thank the Senator from Nevada. He is quite correst in stating the situation that applies as far as I know in Michigan. He voices the same concern and uneasiness I had. I did want to express my position.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, there is not a single scientific study available to any Member of the Congress or to the American people that would show the benefits of chiropractic. There may have been individuals who benefited and got relief from pain under certain circumstances. But should we include chiropractors under the medicare program and let them go ahead and treat for anemia, for example? Anemia can be one of the first indications of cancer, and we know of case upon case of people who have gone to chiropractors because of pains and other illnesses, and were treated by them and then, by the time they showed up in hospitals, had terminal illnesses and cancer. To think that we in the U.S. Senate are going to be able to sanction that kind of treatment when we know of these cases.

There is not one bit of scientific evidence, not one, to support chiropractic theory. I rise to ask anyone here who can to contradict that statement. There are none. And particularly not concerning their competence to treat the kinds of illnesses identified on page 3107, which include high blood pressure, gall bladder disorders, general weakness, ulcers, stomach disorders, nervousness. Chiropractors feel that they can treat those diseases. By including them under this program, we are insuring that they will be reimbursed by the Federal Government for doing so.

All my amendment proposes is to obtain an independent judgment, have independent scientific information assembled and made available to the Secretary of HEW, and for him, on the basis of that independent study done by the Academy of Sciences or some other scientific group that will be truly independent, to develop the kind of regulations to govern this program. That is all we are asking. We are not even attempting to strike chiropractors from the program. We will let them in. We will be guided by the judgment of an independent study group, and I think we will be fulfilling our responsibility to the people.

I do not question that there are those who have back problems or pains who have had that pain and suffering relieved to some extent by chiropractors. I am not questioning that. But we would, by including them in Medicare, be endorsing them from the Federal point of view, and reimbursing them for a wide range of services, when there is no scientific evidence, either as a part of this record or elsewhere, which would indicate they are particularly competent to handle them.

I refer the Senate to page 3108 of the hearings, the chart entitled "Chart of Effects of Spinal Misalignments." They show the whole spinal column, with arrows going off to different sections. On manipulation of the first lumbar vertebra, they say they can relieve colitis, dysentery, constipation, diarrhea, and hernias. That is their statement.

It is interesting to note that one of the first signs of cancer of the colon can be diarrhea. But chiropractors feel, if a person comes in to them for treatment, that by manipulating the first lumbar vertebra, they can do something about it, when that person could have cancer of the colon.

That is not scientific evidence, to me. All I am saying is, let us get some independent judgments on this question. I am prepared, as our amendment says, to take any independent group and let them make the recommendation, so that we will know. If that independent study group comes forward and says, on the basis of extensive scientific work, they ought to be qualified to do it, at least we will have independent judgment and study as a basis for that. We do not have that now, and I think it is important, when we talk about providing benefits under this program, that this body understands that.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. BURDICK. As the Senator knows, many States, I think the great majority of them, have authorized the practice of chiropractic in their States. I have talked with a great many workingmen, I recall postal workers in particular, and they seem to swear by the treatment, and they want it.

The question I ask the Senator is, could they not be given that freedom of choice?

Mr. KENNEDY. I believe they should be given freedom of choice to be able to go and receive that treatment. But I do not think that the Federal Government should reimburse chiropractors for the kinds of treatment which are clearly out of the area of their training, experience, and background, until more evidence is available

We are really interested in this issue in terms of the total health care crisis. When a person goes to a doctor, he goes by good faith, because he knows the doctor and has confidence in him, and puts himself completely in the hands of that doctor.

I do not believe we ought to permit chiropractors to be treating illnesses of the colon, the gall bladder, the throat, the heart, and other illnesses that they are not trained for. I do not feel that we are justified in providing taxpayers' funds to compensate them for that.

Mr. BURDICK. Does the testimony show there is any great deal of treatment by chiropractors of the things the Senator has referred to? It is my understanding that the great bulk of their treatment is for back injuries, where they seem to do some good. Is the Senator talking about exceptional cases or general cases?

Mr. KENNEDY. Let me say at the outset that our Health Committee has not done an extensive study. The information we have been able to gather, since we found out this was part of the bill, was on the basis of studies done by various groups. Some of those studies have been done by doctors, who have a different view about it, quite naturally. That is why I believe that our approach of just saying, "Let us get an independent group to collect the information, do the study, and make the recommendations," makes sense, because I cannot assure the Senator from North Dakota that our Health Committee has done it.

What I have been saying is that the chiropractors themselves believe they can treat many kinds of illnesses. I can give the example of a tumor of the eye of a child at the UCLA Medical School, that a chiropractor tried to treat, and the parents thought the chiropractor could. The matter was delayed too long; they could have removed the eye earlier and saved the life of the child, but after the delay, the child died of cancer.

Other examples where patients have been treated for tuberculosis with diets, and then, after the patient had wasted to some 80 pounds and was brought into the hospital, he died.

I am not suggesting that there are not chiropractors in this country who are remarkably well trained and can provide relief of pain in some cases, and I think that is marvelous and that is good. But I would like to distinguish between compensating them for those functions and for treating individuals for high blood pressure.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. BAYH. I listened with great concern to the quotations from that pamphlet, which I think pointed out one thing: There probably are some very poorly qualified chiropractors.

My personal experience in the Indiana Legislature, where we established licensing procedures, was that there were some chiropractors who performed a service and some who did not.

The matter that concerns me, that I would like to address to my friend from Massachusetts, is as to the content of this unbiased scientific panel. Who does the Senator envision would be sitting on that panel to compile the evidence?

Mr. KENNEDY. The amendment does not specify the Academy of Sciences, but I would hope it would be an independent group like the Academy of Sciences, in which I have confidence.

Any group that would be able to give us as clear and unbiased a view as possible.

Mr. BAYH. The thing that concerns the Senator from Indiana is this: Cancer and other conditions have been alluded to, and there are good examples where some chiropractors are not well enough trained and they perhaps unintentionally misrepresent their capacity to heal. I, for one, would not want to be recorded as not feeling that there are some chiropractors who can provide significant service to patients who have certain types of ailments.

My concern is that, whether it is the Academy of Science or whatever, the panel that is relied upon to make this report will be comprised of doctors; and I have yet to find one doctor who thought one chiropractor had the capacity to provide any healing qualities. If that is the case, then I do not know how in the world the Senator from Massachusetts is going to reach the goal which in good conscience he wants to reach.

There are not going to be any chiropractors on the panel, are there?

Mr. KENNEDY. Quite frankly, I think it can be an independent board of scientists and trained personnel. I do not thing it has to include chiropractors or physicians. I think it can be very knowledgeable people generally, scientists and others, in the health area who draw together the various information that is available. I feel absolutely confident that the Academy of Sciences or other nonpartisan groups could develop this.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I say to the Senator that a number of us feel that this is a matter we would like to have the Senate vote on. I think the Senator has made his case very well. Those who have some doubts about the matter have expressed their doubts. So far as I am concerned, I will do whatever the Senate decides.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. I note on page 467, with regard to section 273, that there is a limitation with respect to the authorization under which the Secretary of HEW can prescribe standards for the purpose of the section. Also, there is a limitation that it shall be "only with respect to treatment by means of manual manipulation of the spine which he is legally authorized to perform by the State or a jurisdiction in which such treatment is provided."

The question I have for the Senator from Massachusetts is whether the Secretary of HEW does not already have, under this rulemaking power, the authority to go out and get such evidence or such expert opinion as he needs to prescribe the minimum standards involved. I see no reason why the amendment is necessary in order to get the standard.

The only purpose of the amendment, it seems to me, is to put this entire matter off for another year. It has been considered many times before, and the committee has finally decided—I think correctly—to go the route of saying that anything the States licenses and anything that meets the minimum standard that the Secretary authorizes should be given the freedom of choice, as the Senator from North Dakota has mentioned.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. Would it be possible to reach an agreement on this matter by amending the amendment by putting a period at the end of the word "Medicare," and thus have the study made, but in effect reserve to Congress the power to postpone any further coverage?

What I am getting at is that what we are doing here is to say that licensure to the States shall prevail. I think it is going pretty far to have the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare supersede that.

I am suggesting that Congress shall determine whether or not it ought to be postponed or superseded, and let the Secretary make the study that the amendment calls for, and then leave it to Congress to decide what it wants to do about the study.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this argument was made on other occasions. Obviously what would be most useful would be if we had the report developed and had hearings and then enacted the legislation. But we have established a precedent. We did so recently in the DES amendment, S. 2818, where we permitted the FDA to do a study and report back, and they were to make a finding as to whether they would ban the implanting the synthetic hormone DES in cattle. We passed an HEW appropriations bill last evening to permit the Secretary extraordinary discretion to be able to cut 10 percent on all the HEW appropriations without legislative action.

This is a troublesome matter. I can give assurance to the Senator from Iowa that if we can move ahead on this amendment, our health subcommittee will take a hard look at this matter, with the result of this study, and make recommendations to the Senate on the basis of the study as well. We will not just be satisfied with the Secretary doing so. I am prepared to let the Secretary draft the recommendations and follow those recommendations. I give assurance to the Senator from Iowa that we will review this information and make recommendations very shortly after the study becomes available.

Mr. MILLER. I appreciate that offer, but I am still not sure that it meets the problem I have; because the Senator's amendment, without change, in effect lets the Secretary supersede the licensure of all the States. All I am saying is that if the Senator would agree to modify his amendment by not giving the power to the Secretary, and have the study made, and after the study is made he can go through these hearings and let Congress decide whether or not it wants to supersede these State licensure proceedings, I think it would be much more in accord with the realities that are now present.

Undoubtedly, literally thousands of people find it impossible to understand why, when the State has provided for licensure, when the bill provides for a very narrow area of service, Congress lets the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare supersede that.

I think we could satisfy almost everybody here if the Senator would have the study made, and if the study is sufficiently persuasive, then let Congress act on it, rather than do it beforehand and give the Secretary all that power.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask that the amendment be accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY).

The noes appear——

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I have no special ability to make a decision about chiropractors. This kind of study has been made ever since chiropractic came into existence and the medical associations have always found, in their view, that chiropractic had no value or, if any, very little.

Thus, if we have another study made, even if done by the American Medical Association, I am sure they will find the same thing. But, again, I go on the findings of the judgment of thousands and thousands of people that they have received some help from chiropractic. That is the judgment of thousands of people, else they would not be practicing today or be licensed in the respective States.

This debate has been going on for years. I recall in 1928, when I was a member of the State Legislature of Kentucky, I was one of the sponsors of a bill which permitted their licensing. So, year after year, we have gone through this kind of debate.

For myself, I believe that the committee has reached a position which leaves it to the States in a narrow field and that to postpone it I do not think will accomplish anything.

I hope that the Senator's amendment will be rejected.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, H.R. 1, now pending before the Senate, contains a provision which would make 15,000 to 17,000 chiropractors in this country eligible providers under medicare. The costs of providing such services would be, according to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, at least $100 million, or $5,000 per year per chiropractor.

A great deal of controversy has surrounded the role of the Federal Government in paying for chiropractic services on behalf of the beneficiaries of Federal health insurance programs. Attempts have been made since 1965 to include chiropractic services under medicare. Chiropractors are currently reimbursed on a matching basis under medicaid programs in 18 States. Despite this, I believe the Senate has an obligation to both the public treasury and the public health in determining, on the basis of scientific evidence, which providers should be eligible for Federal health insurance payment.

Chiropractic is an art, based upon the theory that all human disease is fundamentally due in part or in whole to interference with the transmission of nerve impulses, arising from the pressure of displaced vertebrae on nerve roots as they emerge from the spinal column. Chiropractic theory maintains that conditions as diverse as deafness, hives, diarrhea, migraine, and heart disease can be treated through spinal manipulation. No scientific evidence exists to attest to the validity of such a theory.

In addition to lack of proven effectiveness, chiropractors may have the detrimental impact of delaying medical diagnosis of an illness beyond the point it can be treated. Symptoms such as backache or diarrhea can often be the first indication of diseases as serious as cancer. A delay in the diagnosis of such illnesses could be fatal. In addition, vigorous spinal manipulation can result in spinal fractures in elderly persons with brittle bones, and aggravation of preexisting conditions such as a ruptured spinal disc.

According to a recent Reader's Digest article, one New York chiropractor attempted to treat a tuberculosis patient with diet alone. When the patient had finally wasted away to 80 pounds, he was sent to a hospital where he died a few days later. The chiropractor involved was convicted of manslaughter in 1964.

In a similar case in California, a chiropractor attempted to treat a tumor in the eye of an 8-year-old girl, despite the fact that the diagnosis had been made at a medical center. The girl's distraught parents, in attempting to save her eye, sought the services of the chiropractor who assured them he could treat the tumor. By the time they realized that his treatment was ineffective, the tumor had progressed to the point where it was too late for medical treatment. The girl died shortly afterwards. The chiropractor was finally convicted, in 1968, of second degree murder.

Mr. Creed Black, then Assistant Secretary for Legislation, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, sent a letter to the Honorable WILBUR D. MILLS, chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House of Representatives, dated November 11, 1969. In that letter he outlines his concerns about the inclusion of chiropractic under the medicare program. I would like to ask unanimous consent that the letter be included in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH,
EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
Washington, D.C.

Hon. WILBUR D. MILLS,
Chairman, Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: At the current hearings of your Committee on social security and welfare proposals, representatives of the two national chiropractic associations urged the coverage of chiropractic services under the supplementary medical insurance part of the Medicare program and requested that Chiropractic's White Paper be entered into the record. Since this paper was prepared in response to a report by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare on Independent Practitioners Under Medicare, I herewith submit copies of the Department's report and an analysis of the Chiropractic White Paper and request that, if such action has not already been taken, these documents be included in the printed record of the hearings.

As you know, the Department's study was prepared at the request of the Congress and submitted in December 1968, by the former Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. Secretary Finch has reviewed it and concurs with the findings and recommendations.

In the over-all conduct of the study, which was concerned with nine other disciplines in addition to chiropractic, the Department had continuing advice from an ad hoc consultant group which included knowledgeable Medicare beneficiaries as well as persons of high standing in the health sciences. The consultants recognized the manipulative skills of chiropractors and the fact that their treatment can provide relief for patients with certain conditions. However, they were gravely concerned by the scope of diseases and conditions treated with these techniques. They came to the following conclusions:

1. Chiropractic theory and practice is based upon the role of the subluxation as a casual factor in disease, the "spinal analysis" as a diagnostic technique, and the "spinal adjustment" as a therapeutic measure. None of these has been demonstrated to be valid through acceptable, scientifically controlled research.

2. Restriction of chiropractic services to "musculoskeletal," conditions, with which they are commonly associated in the public mind, or to spinal analysis and adjustment, would in effect be no restriction at all, since according to chiropractic theory the spinal subluxation has a central role in all departures from a state of good health, and all diseases and conditions therefore involves the spinal column.

3. Exclusion of specific diseases from the scope of chiropractic practice would be similarly ineffective because its effectiveness would depend upon accurate diagnosis, and diagnosis is deemphasized in chropractic theory.

4. In addition to the deemphasis of diagnosis, the quality of chiropractic education and supervised clinical experience is inadequate to prepare chiropractic practitioners to perform an adequate differential diagnosis and to institute appropriate therapy or refer patients to the appropriate source of therapy.

5. Although chiropractors state that they refer patients, the all-inclusive scope of their practice, as evidenced by the numerous disease categories they treat, indicates that chiropractors recognize very little need for referrals. Appropriate referrals are further rendered impractical by the isolation of chiropractic from other health care resources to which they should logically make referrals.

6. Because of these factors, State licensure laws are ineffective in assuring the health and safety of recipients of chiropractic services.

In view of these conclusions, the consultants could not determine that there was a "need" for chiropractic services and strongly recommended that these services not be covered under the Medicare program.

Sincerely yours,

CREED C. BLACK,
Assistant Secretary for Legislation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, a great deal more well documented concern about the efficacy and safety of chiropractic services exists. For example, a 1968 report of consultants to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, stated:

Chiropractic theory and practice are not based upon the body of basic knowledge relating to health, disease, and health care that has been widely accepted by the scientific community. Moreover, irrespective of its theory, the scope and quality of chiropractic education do not prepare the practitioner to make an adequate diagnosis and provide appropriate treatment. Therefore, it is recommended that chiropractic services not be covered in the medicare program.

In addition, I would like to read from the report of the National Advisory Commission on Health Manpower:

Chiropractic education and training are appallingly inadequate as has been well documented by both independent and chiropractic studies. There are currently 12 schools of chiropractic recognized by the two chiropractic associations, but none is accredited by an agency and recognized by the National Commission on accrediting or the United States Office of Education, and no school has full accreditation even by the American Chiropractic Association or the International Chiropractic Association. The facilities of these schools are poorly qualified, and the ratio of faculty to students is extremely low. Admission requirements, although also low, are dubiously enforced. A study of actual admission applications shows the chiropractic schools do not observe their own admission rules and admit students with less than a high school education and questionable credentials.

Mr. President, I would like to offer an amendment to H.R. 1, which would require that a study be done, to be completed by June 30, 1973, by an independent body such as the National Academy of Science under the aegis of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, intended to ascertain the validity of chiropractic theory and the effectiveness of chiropractic treatment. Furthermore, the amendment would authorize the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to restrict the reimbursable activities of chiropractors, or to eliminate them altogether, if the study thus warrants such restriction.

Mr. President, I think the Senate has an obligation to take safeguards such as this before putting Federal sanction on the services of health professionals by including them as eligible providers in Federal health insurance programs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr.

CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN), and the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), and the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) would each vote "nay."

Also, if present and voting, the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 66, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENS). The clerk will report the amendment.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 232, line 16, strike out through page 233, line 14.

On page 968, line 11, beginning with "and" strike out all before the quotation marks on line 17.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this amendment is offered on behalf of myself and Senators MOSS, PERCY, BROOKE, CRANSTON, HART, HUMPHREY, JAVITS, and TUNNEY.

Mr. President, H.R. 1 makes some 3.5 million new people eligible for the welfare program; but these same people will not all be included under the medicaid program. I think this is a dangerous precedent to establish.

My amendment would give these 3.5 million Americans medicaid coverage at a total expense of $2.6 billion—$1.4 to the Federal grant, $1.2 to the States.

This is an expensive provision. However, the alternative is a dilemma in which people in one State will receive medicaid benefit and yet the people in a neighboring State, with the same problems, would only get welfare help and would not be eligible for medicaid.

This causes a dilemma. And I know that it has been trouble some to the members of the Finance Committee. However, I would be interested in the reaction of the Senator from Louisiana concerning this particular problem. I think it is unique and would set a dangerous precedent. I know that if a person is on welfare, he needs medicare. And after providing these kinds of resources to individuals for welfare—and these resources will be eaten up by the requirements to pay adidtional health bills because, tragically, it is generally the poor that have the greatest number of health ailments.

I am interested in the reaction of the Senator from Louisiana on this problem. I think it is a dangerous precedent to be established and a troublesome one, and it will provide a great sense of inequity to a great many people where a person living on one side of the street gets welfare and medicaid and the person living on the other side of the street is not eligible for medicaid.

As I said, I would be interested in the opinion of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this problem arises because in the bill the committee makes a lot more people eligible for benefits; by providing a $50 disregard of social security income from the income that is considered for welfare purposes, and by providing additional benefits under the welfare program for the aged.

So by virtue of raising the standards and the benefits the committee makes a lot of additional people eligible for cash benefits and that, in turn, makes a lot of additional people eligible for medicaid benefits.

If the States were to cover all these new people under medicaid it would require the additional expenditure of about $2.6 billion in medicaid expenditures. Recognizing the fact the States do not have the $1.2 billion, nor can we afford in this bill the $1.4 billion which would be added as an expense on the Federal end, the committee would simply say that where an aged person spent a certain amount of money, referred to as a "spend down," he would become eligible for the medicaid benefits, but States would not be required to provide medicaid benefits without a spend down for those newly eligible under the law.

We would like to see medicaid benefits extended to these people, but it costs a great deal of money and we do not know where the States would find it. The States do not know where they are going to find it, even with the revenue sharing we have voted on.

We think we have provided about the best we can for now, but we do recognize this is part of the health problem we should be looking at next year, when we hope to find ways to finance and provide the health care that would be indicated for these people. We would like to provide these additional benefits to these people as much as the Senator from Massachusetts would. At this time we do not have the answer. We are satisfied that next year, or at least during the next Congress, we will be able to provide the answer.

For example, if the Kennedy bill for health insurance were to pass, there is no question they would be provided for under national health insurance. If something substantial but much less than the Kennedy bill would provide should pass, presumably this is one of the things it would want to provide for. It is one of the higher order of priorities. So I think a bill that would pass that would provide several billion dollars in the health area would include this, but if we added it on the floor at this time I do not think it would survive in conference.

Frankly, this bill now has more benefits than we may be able to persuade the House to agree to. I am on notice if the bill goes to the President as it is now the President, even with all the conflicts resolved, would be advised to veto it on the grounds that the Government cannot afford what we have in the bill now.

I hope the Senator would not press for this amendment now but bring this up with the health matters he will be pursuing in the next Congress.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I appreciate the sentiments expressed by the distinguished Senator from Louisiana. As he well knows, the 3.5 million people who will benefit now as a result of this bill, the aged, blind, disabled, crippled individuals, the ones really unable to work, they are the ones with the greatest health needs. While we on the one hand provide some assistance to these individuals, I feel we will be taking away from them with the increased health benefits. I am mindful of the votes we have seen this afternoon by the Senate just trying to maintain the existing programs which are in effect in the States. The Senate expressed its will. This would require additional resources both on the State and Federal levels. I am mindful of the expressions of the Senate on these additional expenses, so I will not press for a vote. I am encouraged by the response that the chairman of the Committee on Finance has given to us. This is a matter of high priority in the next session of Congress, that no matter what health bill comes from the Committee on Finance, these 3.5 million people that will not benefit from the health bill will be in a priority position. Regardless of what bill comes out, I would appreciate the opportunity to work with the chairman of the Committee on Finance to make sure we will be able to assure health relief to 3.5 million people that are probably as deserving as any people in this country.

With those assurances from the chairman, I withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 1623

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I send amendment No. 1623, as modified, to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

On page 189, following line 19, insert the following new section:

ADDITIONAL DROPOUT YEARS

SEC. 151. (a) Section 215(b) (2) (A) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting ", and further reduced by one additional year for each 15 years of coverage of such individual (as determined under the last sentence of subsection (a) without regard to the 30-year limitation contained therein)" immediately after "reduced by five".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall be effective for purposes of computing or recomputing, effective for months after December 1972, the average monthly wage of an insured individual who was born after January 1, 1910, and—

(1) who becomes entitled to benefits under section 202(a) or section 223 of such Act after December 1972;

(2) who dies after December 1972; or

(3) who was entitled to benefits under section 223 of such Act for December 1972.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for 30 seconds?

Mr. HARTKE. I yield.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mrs. Kay McElroy of my staff be allowed the privilege of the floor during the debate and vote on this matter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, this amendment will correct a major injustice in the social security law. Under present law, a worker's social security benefits are determined on the basis of his average social security taxable income between 1951 and the year he is eligible for benefits. Each worker is able to delete his 5 lowest income years before figuring his average—the average which determines the size of his benefits during his years of retirement. Most workers, of course, delete the first 5 years of their employment when their wages were much lower than at present.

But this dropout provision which removes these early, very low income years is restrictive and is most unfair for those hundreds of thousands of workers who may be laid off before they are eligible for social security benefits. In this time of rising unemployment, if a man is laid off because his plant closes, it may be almost impossible for him to find new employment at his previous, often highly skilled rate of pay.

In addition, the present provisions for dropping years of low earnings conflict with an increasing number of private pension plans. For example, if a worker is able to receive the benefits of his company's pension plan after 30 years of service and decides to retire at age 55, by the time he is eligible to receive the social security benefits he has earned for 30 years of covered work and 30 years of paying into the fund, he will have to average in 10 years of zero income—thus substantially reducing his monthly social security benefits. This conflict between the provisions of the Social Security Act and private pension plans is placing beneficiaries in a difficult dilemma, reducing mobility in the work force, and causing workers to sacrifice benefit payments they have earned.

The amendment I offer today provides 1 additional dropout year for every 15 years that a person has worked in an occupation covered by social security. Thus, a person who has worked 30 years could drop out 2 years in addition to the 5 now allowed him. Incidentally, this is identical to a provision in the House-passed version of H.R. 1.

Mr. President, this amendment will remove the penalties from which a worker suffers when he is laid off before he is 65 and cannot get commensurate employment because of his age or because he elects to participate in his company's pension plan.

It is clear that the present dropout law works an injustice on those who retire or who become disabled before they attain eligibility for old age insurance benefits. For example, the retirement of an employee for a disability which does not qualify as such by social security standards, may not only deprive the employee of current income, but reduces the amount of his old age insurance benefits by diminishing his average monthly wage. In addition to the adverse effects upon the disabled, a dropping-out of periods of low or no earnings penalizes those employees who have a right to retire voluntarily before they are 65.

The built-in penalty for workers who retire before they can receive social security benefits goes against the present-day trend toward earlier and earlier retirement. This penalty also tends to decrease job opportunities at a time when this Nation should be more concerned with increasing job opportunities. When we contemplate today's ever-increasing emphasis by industry upon automation and utilization of new technology—toward more reliance upon machine rather than man—the need for increasing employment opportunities becomes more urgent.

The failure to drop out periods of low or no earnings is also unfair for another reason. A worker who contributes to the fund for fewer years but delays retirement until age 65 can receive a higher social security benefit than a worker who has paid more into the fund but who retires earlier. I think this is one of the unfair sections of the Social Security Act and I think it flies in the face of today's realities.

Mr. President, I do not believe that workers who have added immeasurably to this country's economic growth and industrial preeminence should be penalized because they choose to take full advantage of private pension plans before they become eligible for social security benefits, nor do I think workers who are thrown out of work because of economic adversity or technological change should be penalized.

I want to point out that in this bill we have provided for people who are in some of the lowest income brackets of America's industrial society. We have provided some social justice for those people. The Hartke amendment makes adjustments for those people who have made their full contribution, as members of a working society.

Estimates made at the time the House of Representatives included the Hartke approach in H.R. 1 indicated that $17 million in additional payments would be made in the first full year of operation of the Hartke amendment.

The fact of it is that probably it should have been as I originally prefer the original Hartke approach of allowing one additional dropout year for each 10 years of covered employment. But in order to conform with the House language, I think it is no more than right that the Senate should at least provide for one additional dropout year for each 15 years of covered employment.

The Hartke amendment will have an eminently fair result. I hope the Senate can work its will and adopt this provision.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment would cost about $1.2 billion on an average annual basis, and would mean that the provision would not be in conference. This provision is already in the House bill, and it was one of the House provisions that we thought claimed the lowest priority.

The Senator is not offering a means to finance his amendment; he is offering an amendment already in the House bill, and when the Committee on Finance undertook to strike that benefit from the bill, we put in its place other benefits, such as maintenance drugs for the aged, a $200 minimum benefit for people who have worked in the program for more than 30 years—and all of those benefits might have to come out if this amendment is agreed to.

We had hoped to have some of those amendments agreed to in conference, but there is one thing we know, and that is that the House of Representatives absolutely will not, and no one in this body has the power to make them, or has any chance to make them, take an amendment that is not financed. So to adopt this amendment means the provision would no longer be in conference, and there would then be no financing left for the drug amendment, the minimum retirement benefit of $200 that people would otherwise have had been made available to them, the liberalizing of the retirement test, which the Senate passed by an almost unanimous vote—all of those provisions, we in the Senate should not make people think we voted to do those things for them, when we know they are not financed and that the House will not consider a measure of this sort that is not financed.

If we leave out this provision, which the committee felt to be one of the lower priority benefits provided by the House, it will mean we can negotiate with the House as between benefits the Senate provided and benefits the House provided. Otherwise, Mr. President, this benefit has been nailed down, and would no longer be subject to conference, and that would mean the other benefits would have to come out.

I wonder if the Senator would be willing to move to strike from the bill the provisions which he thinks claim a lower priority than this one? For example, perhaps he feels we should delete the provision which says that people, if they retire after 30 years of social security, would get $200 a month. Or perhaps the provision that would pay for maintenance drugs which the aged require regularly?

Mr. President, I do not think the Senate ought to vote for benefits without the financing to pay for them on the social security program, knowing in their hearts that these benefits are not going to happen, because the House will simply not accept them. We know that the House will send Representatives WILBUR MILLS, JOHN BYRNES, and the members of that Ways and Means Committee to conference with us, and that not one of those people will budge from the proposition that if a proposal is not financed it is not going to go into the social security law. And they have to run every 2 years. If they can impose that kind of discipline on themselves, they are going to impose it on us, when we have to run every 6 years.

So I say that if we put this item in, it would claim higher priority than other items such as the amendment to enable people to retire on a $200 a month social security check when they reach age 65. Those items would have to go, because we would be voting to nail into this bill this item which the House put in which, in my judgment, rates a lower priority.

Mr. President, I am sorry I cannot vote for the Senator's proposal. Standing alone, I would be for it, just as I would be for almost every other benefit proposed here. The eyeglasses, the hearing aids, the arch supports, the foot massages—any of it would be fine with this Senator in and of itself, if we had the money to pay for it. But to vote for one of these items under these conditions, knowing that we would be depriving the Senate conferees of the opportunity to gain consideration of other matters that in our opinion claim a higher priority, I think is a very misleading thing to do to the American people, and just should not be done.

Mr. President, the committee brought to the Senate a responsible bill, that paid, under social security and medicare, for the benefits it added. But the Senate has added to this bill almost $3 billion of proposed new benefits that are not financed, and the only way that any part of that $3 billion can be added to the bill is to trade off by taking out something the House has put in on their side. But the bill as it stands right now already contains, in the social security and medicare areas alone, about $3 billion worth of benefits that are not financed, and we know that they cannot prevail in conference because there is no tax to pay for it to begin with.

And then to vote this amendment, to put back in what we regard as a lower priority item, means that the higher priority items we thought we voted for cannot be added in conference, because we do not have the negotiating power to discuss them.

This, Mr. President, as social security benefits go, is one of those that is less equitable than some we have voted for already. For example, it treats people with 29 years the same as people who have 15 years of employment. It gives 2 additional dropout years for 30 years of coverage, but only 1 additional dropout year for 29 years of coverage.

As benefits to the merits, in my judgment, it claims a lower priority than those items we have voted; and to adopt the amendment just means that when you voted for the drug amendment and the $200 special minimum under social security by this amendment you will be voting not to finance them. The House will not accept them. You want to take the benefit of the House bill that most of us think would claim a lower priority in terms of that which we could afford and that which we would like to provide the American people.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. HANSEN. Is this not like making a lot of campaign promises one knows he cannot keep?

Mr. LONG. I am not going to pass judgment on others; but for me to vote for this amendment would be the same as a politician promising something to a lot of old people. A businessman says, "How are we going to pay for that?" And you whisper to him, "Don't worry. That is just for conversation purposes. We are not going to do anything for the old people."

That is the way it tends to work out when you vote to add all these benefits without putting any tax in to pay for them, and then vote to keep the benefits the House provided, which they did finance. We would not be able to discuss this in conference. All we could talk about would be the Senate's fiscal irresponsibility. The House would not take it.

Here is the kind of thing that happens in conference—and you would be surprised how firm those men can be when they know they are right. They say:

We sent you a bill that provided for billions of benefits, and we paid for every nickel of it by voting additional taxes. We fellows have to run this year, every one of us. We run every two years. How about you great statesmen? Only one-third of you are running this year. What did you do? You proceeded to load this thing down with billions more of benefits, and you didn't have enough courage to pay for all those benefits.

We'll make you this proposition: The small amount that you found the courage to take out, give us back half of it; and out of the billions that you put in here on a Santa Claus basis, give it all away and don't put a nickel of tax on to pay for any of it. You can spend that small amount you financed however you want to spend it, and that's all.

The result is that, in due course, after you argue about it for a while, you take what the House conferees say, because you have no other choice available to you.

Basically, what voting for this amendment amounts is to unfinance $1.2 billion of benefits for which the Senate has voted. The Senate has already voted for about $3 billion of benefits it did not finance in the social security area alone.

Now the Senate is being asked, by this amendment, to unfinance $1.2 billion for which it did vote. The Senate can do that, if it wishes, but I am not going to deceive the American people by telling them that I voted for a benefit when I voted to take it out.

If the Senator wants to put a tax on to pay for this, I would be willing to consider his amendment and consider voting for it. Without the tax to pay for it, he is unfinancing that for which the Senate voted.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, as always, it is delightful to hear the chairman as he proceeds to pontificate about his great concern for fiscal responsibility. I watched him on the floor of the Senate ask for a 20-percent increase in social security, and he did not even ask for a penny of additional funds.

The social security tax is the most regressive form of taxation the Government levies today on the poor people of America, and I do not see the Senator from Louisiana decrying that type of operation.

The Senator from Louisiana says it is going to cost $1.2 billion. I am going to put into the RECORD at this time, from page 9 of the House report, the dollar cost for the House-passed measure which is identical to the Hartke amendment. It is $17 million, not $1.2 billion. There is no evidence to the contrary. It is $17 million of additional benefits. For the first full year. I ask unanimous consent to have the House estimate printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Dollar payments.—$17 million in additional benefits would be paid in the first full year.

Mr. HARTKE. In addition, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the "Additional Dropout Years" explanation on page 45 of that report.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL DROPOUT YEARS

Under the present law, social security benefits for a worker and his family are generally based on the worker's average monthly earnings in covered work over a period equivalent to the time elapsing after 1950 and up to the year in which he reaches age 65 (62 for a woman), becomes disabled, or dies. (Another provision of the bill would change the ending point for men to age 62.) Up to 5 years in which earnings are lowest are excluded from the computation of the worker's average monthly earnings: This five-year dropout provision helps to lessen the effect that periods of unemployment, illness, and low earnings can have on benefit amounts.

Your committee's bill would provide an additional dropout year for each 15 years of coverage that a worker has. (A year of coverage would be defined as it would be under the new special minimum provision.) The effect of the additional dropout would be to give additional protection against the lowering of average monthly earnings of long-term contributors to the program. In addition, the higher benefits that will result from increases in the upper limit on earnings counted under the program will be more quickly available for these long-term contributors because fewer years when lower ceilings were in effect would be included in figuring average monthly earnings.

The provision would be effective for workers who attain age 62 after 1971 and become entitled to old age or disability benefits or die after 1971 and to workers who attain age 62 after 1971 who were entitled to disability benefits for December 1971. About $17 million in additional benefits would be paid in the first full year.

Mr. HARTKE. One statement about the merits: The Senator from Louisiana said he was going to talk about the merits, and I thought we were finally going to make some headway. Then he said it was deceitful on the part of legislators to go ahead and vote this type of fiscally irresponsible act and mislead the American people. That is calling the House of Representatives deceitful. They voted for it. They voted for this measure.

Mr. LONG. They financed it. They put a tax on. The Senator is trying to unfinance this measure.

Mr. HARTKE. I have the floor, and I will be glad to yield later for a question or for conversation. I know the Senator can outshout me, and I will never try to outshout my chairman, nor go ahead and deal around, as they say, with the nonmerits of the proposition.

The point is that we are not in an adversary position. I hope the Finance Committee would soon come to that understanding. We are in the position of being responsible legislators, to do what is right for the American people. We are not in a fight with the President of the United States. We are not in a fight with the House of Representatives. What we are supposed to do is what we think is right.

The old story is, "I don't know what course other men may take, but as far as I'm concerned, I just want to do what I think is right." If this amendment is right, we should vote for it. If this amendment is wrong, we should not vote for it.

I am willing to finance these measures. I listened to the former Senator from Delaware, who has been succeeded in office by the present presiding officer.

I listened to Senator Williams talk about what we had to do in 1965 and we charged the poor working man until we built the surplus to an astounding figure. We had to increase the benefits because the accumulation of the surplus in the social security fund had become such a staggering amount. Every other department of Government wanted to raid the trust fund. We paid for everything under the sun. Talk about fiscal responsibility, let some of the people yelling about fiscal responsibility on social security deal with the other measures but do not take it out on the working people. Why make them, with the most regressive form of taxation, pay the bill for part of the Government's financing. We have such an accumulation in the trust fund that $17 million is a minor amount. To tell the truth, with the existing accumulated surplus, we would have to spend $6 million every hour of the day, 24 hours a day, for 365 days a year to spend the surplus.

In other words, this amendment, according to the House report, will take out of that surplus the equivalent of less than 3 hours. The Senator from Louisiana knows that. I do not think it is right to go ahead with a regressive form of taxation.

Now, what are the merits? Simply that a person who retires today is faced with a rather unfortunate choice. After the age of 65, he is supposed to retire. But with 30 years' service he can get his private pension benefit. Often at 55. We recognize that many of these people are retired before they draw social security. They do not have a job. They are out of work.

According to a report by HEW, the Social Security Administration, the Office of Research and Statistics, about one in every four are entitled to pensions before they reach 65. Page 22. About 50 percent who currently receive social security benefits are entitled to pensions at 62. Page 27.

The merits are all in favor of the amendment. Talk about low priority. I do not understand how anyone can say it is a low priority for a man to go ahead and say he cannot take his pension benefit simply because the law says that if he does he will be penalized. There are many instances in which workers are laid off.

We worry about providing some opportunity for this man to take care of his needs and to have his income and his social security check somewhat in relation to the final income he receives as an individual. So we discount the first years.

The Senator from Louisiana made only one argument concerning the merits of the Hartke amendment. He said there was a discrepancy to give the same benefits to one who had an additional 15 years coverage as to me with 29.

If he wants to talk about that on the merits, then I say he should modify my amendment and should resubmit my original amendment which gave an additional dropout year for each 10 years which would remove that inequity. So the Senator is arguing in the wrong direction. I think the Senate should do what is right for its people. For $17 million, I think this is a pretty good operation to go ahead and provide a little bit of equity for the people who are retiring.

I wish the Senator from Louisiana had addressed himself to the merits, because I do not see any discussion about how to deal with the man who loses a job at 55. What is he going to do because of those years not covered? Give him a zero income over the year when he needs it most, and discourage him from going ahead and providing for his pension plan? We seem to have pension plans going in one direction and social security going in another.

That is the tragedy of this bill, as I said earlier today, that the social security system and the welfare system are still geared to the 1930's. We are now in the 1970's and we should be dealing with the last third of this century, at a minimum dealing with 1976 upcoming. Instead of arguing on the floor of the Senate as to what item has priority for equity for the aged, we should be saying to the aged, "You do not have long to live in this world, so we are going to give you a chance for decency, honesty, and respect. We are going to give you a chance to go ahead and have what is right."

If it is right for the House of Representatives to pass this and right for the Senate to pass it, it would be a solid recommendation to the President that this is something we would like to do just because it is the right thing to do.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, would the Senator turn that around?

Mr. HARTKE. I am not going to turn it around. If the Senator wants to turn it around, I would like to hear it.

Mr. BENNETT. I would say that the Senator has argued that since the House passed it, the Senate should pass it, and then you would have to take the position that since the House did not pass these other benefits, we have no right to pass it.

Mr. HARTKE. That is a negative argument. I do not think that is true. I do not say that the House did everything that was right, but I think they did what is right here. The Hartke amendment deals with a real need for those people who want to retire. The argument cannot be made simply because the Senate did some things, the House should not do it, or vice versa. I would hope that I would not be in a position where we take the position that adversary operations are the position of the Senate versus the House. We are in this thing together.

Many people are discouraged. Many people who are discouraged the most and feel that society has done the least to provide equity for them, are those that are old. That is what we are dealing with here. The shameful thing is that we have not dealt with this problem earlier.

The Hartke amendment would close a great inequity in the present social security system. It is not expensive. It is only $17 million, so far as overall operations are concerned. So if the Senator from Louisiana is fearful of that, I will be glad to make whatever adjustment the actuary says is necessary to accomplish the financing.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield?

Mr. HARTKE. Just a minute—just a minute—let me finish first—we have consistently financed it to the extent that we have accumulated this gross surplus.

Even the President, who has never been noted for his great generosity in the field of social security benefits, came forth with the statement that he thought the surplus we have accumulated should not be continued in its present fashion. But that is not the argument before us now, because the simple fact is that the chairman of the committee has no argument on the merits against this proposition and therefore had to resort to the financing argument. Since we are willing to agree to the financing of this amendment, this means that the amendment should be adopted, and I would hope that the chairman of the committee would see his way clear to support of this amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator says his amendment will cost $17 million for the first year. The reason for this is that all those on the rolls now would not get any benefits, that they would have to go without, that the benefits would only be prospective, for future retirees. This is what the House suggested and put in their bill and sent to us.

Here it is, on page 130 of the House report. According to the actuaries, as these people retire and we have the full impact of this matter on the social security fund, it would cost 0.19 percent of payroll, which would round out to about two-tenths of 1 percent of payroll. The taxable payroll in the Nation is about $600 billion. So, if we multiply that out, it works out to $1,200,000,000 a year. And that is what the House put in the bill, on the average, as a tax to pay for that.

Mr. President, I have voted for amendments, as have other Senators here, when we knew that the social security fund was financially on a very conservative basis, and that we could finance benefits.

We were able to do that until we agreed to the Church amendment. When we did that, we took advantage of every assumption we could on a reasonable basis to finance the 20 percent across-the-board social security increase. And those who did that responsibly knew that from that time forward we could not pull any more rabbits out of the hat, so to speak, relying on future increases in tax revenues, as the Senator from Indiana is seeking to do today. From that time forward any additional benefits would have to be paid for by additional tax at the time.

Mr. President, this amendment seeks to pull a rabbit out of the hat when there is not any rabbit there and there is not even any bunting there. I suppose the Senator could pretend it is a rabbit, but it is not there. And all that this amendment means is that we would be "unfinancing" or "definancing" or taking away the financing with this amendment the money that would provide for the other things we have voted for.

The Committee on Finance recommended additional benefits such as raising the earnings limit. We recommended providing additional benefits for people who worked 30 years and retired with a very low social security check.

We recommended maintenance drugs for the aged. We recommended additional assistance for widows and others. And having done so, we put in the tax to pay for it.

The Senator from Indiana wants to "unfinance" that which the Senate Finance Committee proceeded to finance. We on the committee do not like to mislead these poor people who are aged into thinking that they are going to get something they will not get, even if someone else wants to do so. And we do not want this amendment.

If the Senator from Indiana wants this amendment, he ought to be willing to put $1.2 billion tax on the people of this country to pay for it. Then we would have a proposition that can be considered on its merit. If the Senate agrees with the merits of his additional provisions, fine. However, even so, it would tend to deny favorable consideration of the other things in the bill because the House might not want to go further.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, does the Senator from Louisiana remember that the day before yesterday we added $5 billion worth of benefits without taxes? We are now $5 billion in the red as far as the current consideration of the bill is concerned. And there is not the $1.2 billion that has been suggested.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would think that in the social security area there has been added about $3 billion on a long-range basis. In addition to that, the Senate in the public welfare area has added additional billions of dollars to the bill—I know the committee did—for the benefit of the aged, which would federalize the program for the aged with additional benefits and fiscal relief for the States. We paid for additional billions of dollars in the welfare section.

Those matters can be considered, because that is not part of the social security program, where it is well understood by the Senate and the House that we have not seen fit to depart from a procedure by which we would finance that to provide for the American people.

Mr. President, I hope the amendment is rejected.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. The determining factor in the amount of an individual's social security retirement benefits is the average of his social security covered earnings between 1951 and the year he reaches 65. "Dropout years" refers to a mechanism whereby he can factor out—or "drop out"—his years with the lowest covered earnings before calculating that average.

The theory behind dropout years is that one's retirement benefits should not be dragged down simply because the social security tax base was at a lower level in past years than in the later working years. For instance, the current social security base is $9,000, while in 1951 it was only $3,600.

Current law therefore allows for the five lowest covered earning years to be dropped out.

But early retirement—that is at age 60 instead of 65—is becoming increasingly common—both because of forced layoff and because of improved provisions in private pension plans. Under this situation, the 5 dropout year rule becomes highly inequitable. The 5 zero income years between ages 60–65 must still be included in the averaging procedure in order to receive full benefits, and all dropout years are therefore used up on those years. The early retiree, then, has no opportunity to drop out preretirement low covered income years, while the age 65 retiree does, despite the fact that both may have identical long-term associations with the work force.

The inequitities are further increased by the fact that current law requires women to compute their average only up to age 62, while men must figure up to age 65.

The House version of H.R. 1 equalized the computation age at 62 for both men and women, and granted an additional 1 dropout year for each 15 years of covered employment. Thus, an early retiree with 30 years employment could drop out his 2 zero income years between ages 60–62—1 for 15 formula—and disregard his 3 zero income years between ages 62–65, and still have 5 dropout years to apply to his preretirement income.

The Senate version of H.R. 1, as reported, also equalized the computation age of 62, but provided no additional dropout years. Thus, under the Senate version the early retiree is still penalized for 2 zero income years.

I have long supported efforts to provide relief to workers who retire or may lose their jobs later in life, prior to age of eligibility under social security. Even though they may have made continuous maximum payments into the Social Security Trust Act throughout their working career, the latter years of unemployment will be calculated into the formula determining their benefits, the result of which will be a decrease in their social security benefits to which they might otherwise be entitled if they had been eligible at the time of severance from work.

The Hartke amendment will rectify this problem by allowing workers additional dropout years for long-time connection with the work force and provide social equity to those workers. This provision is already in the House-passed bill and is a balance to the provision in both the Senate and the House bills which provide social adequacy to those workers at the lower-income levels who will receive a higher minimum benefit than before.

I urge the support of the additional drop-out years amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana as modified. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) is paired with the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS).

If present and voting, the Senator from Connecticut would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

On this vote, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS) is paired with the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS). If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware would vote "yea" and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is paired with the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER). If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea," and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 29, nays 48, as follows:

So Mr. HARTKE's amendment (No. 1623) as modified, was rejected.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1550, as modified, and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 189, between lines 19 and 20, insert the following new section:

PRESERVATION OF RIGHTS TO CHILD'S INSURANCE BENEFITS OF INDIVIDUALS SERVING IN THE ARMED FORCES

SEC. 151. (a) Section 202(d)(7) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding after subparagraph (D) thereof (as added by section 115(a) of this Act) the following new subparagraph:

"(E) In determining, for purposes of this subsection, the age of any child who has been discharged or released from active duty as a member of the armed forces (as defined in section 101(4) of title 10, United States Code) after having performed such active duty for a period of not less than 30 consecutive days nor more than three years which commenced prior to the date such child attained age 22, such child's age shall be deemed to be his actual age minus the number of days in such period."

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Guy McMichel, from the Veterans Committee, be permitted the privilege of the floor during the debate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, section 402(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act authorizes the benefits to natural or adopted children of a parent covered by social security where the parent is either dead, disabled, or retired. The amount of the benefits is one-half of the parent's basic benefit if the parent is retired or disabled; three-fourths of the benefit if the parent is dead. Thus, if a parent is retired or disabled, benefits would be between $35 and $140 per month depending upon the salary level of the parent's job, the length of time covered, and where the family is large, the size of the family. If the parent is dead, benefits would be between $45 and $210 per month. Such benefits were originally available only to children under the age of 18 but a few years ago the provision was amended to permit benefits to flow to full-time students over the age of 18, but below the age of 22.

The difficulty with the existing law is that it discriminates against persons who served in the Armed Forces between the ages of 18 and 22. Their benefits are reduced by the time they spent in service.

Only 40 percent of Vietnam-era veterans are currently making use of their GI bill benefits, as compared with the 50 percent who utilized those benefits after World War II and the 45 percent after the Korean conflict.

Perhaps the most important reason for the poor rate of participation is the lack of adequate funds. Existing GI bill benefits are, by themselves, inadequate and do not provide sufficient support for tuition, fees, and living expenses. Section 1681 of title 38, United States Code, provides that the educational assistance allowance for a veteran is designed to "meet in part the expenses of his subsistence, tuition, fees, supplies, books, equipment, and other educational costs," money provided through the Social Security Act would help fill the gap that currently exists.

To correct this injustice, the pending Hartke amendment proposes that, for the purpose of determining education benefits under social security for a dependent who has served in the Armed Forces, the period of his active duty up to 3 years which was commenced prior to the date he reached age 22 shall be deducted from his actual age. Such a change will put him on an equal basis with the nonveteran in terms of social security benefits received.

Mr. President, the current GI bill does not cover the full cost of education and training for our returning veterans. Indeed, the current pattern of GI bill use appears to be inverse to need. People who attended college before service, use the GI bill three times as often as those who enter the service with only a high school diploma; only 10 percent of high school dropouts take advantage of their GI bill benefits.

The inequity of the draft system had a more profound impact upon persons from low-income families. It is interesting to note that, while families in the upper 25 percent income bracket produce 48 percent of the undergraduates, families in the bottom quarter contribute only 7 percent; the third quartile adds but 17 percent to the total. Service figures, on the other hand, show a much higher number of men from lower-income groups being drafted. These men often lack the family support and orientation to take post-high school education. They return from service to their country at an even greater disadvantage than those who remain at home. If they also happen to be children of retired, deceased, or disabled parents, they can expect little support from their families in pursuing higher education. Certainly, the lack of supplementary family support must be considered a factor in the low utilization of GI bill benefits.

Indeed, the lack of family support is the reason for the original enactment of the Social Security Act education provision. I believe the men who serve their country, should stand on an equal basis with those who did not serve and hence were eligible for social security benefits.

Mr. President, the pending amendment will allow veterans to receive social security education benefits if they are from families of retired, deceased, or disabled parents. In other words, the 2 or 3 years they spent in the service will not count against them with respect to entitlement to these benefits.

The cost of this amendment is estimated at approximately $55 million a year, but if this sum is the difference between the veteran being able to effectively utilize his Federal education benefits or his being sentenced to a lifetime dead-end job, then I say this is an investment we must make.

Mr. President, the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and the National Association of Collegiate Veterans endorse the amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that their endorsements may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the endorsements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN LEGION,
October 2, 1972.

HON. VANCE HARTKE,
Chairman, Senate Committee on Veterans Affairs, Washington, D.C.:

The American Legion believes that when young men and women are required to enter the Armed Forces for extended periods of service, it is in the nation's interest for the federal government, as part of their rehabilitation and readjustment to civilian life, to provide special programs of educational benefits, and thus restore to them opportunities lost because of their service in time of war or national emergency.

On this basis we strongly support your proposed amendment (No. 1550) to H.R. 1, the Social Security Amendments of 1972.

HERALD E. STRINGER,
Director, National Legislative Commission.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., October 2, 1972.

HON. VANCE HARTKE,
Chairman, Committee on Veterans' Affairs, Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Veterans of Foreign Wars is extremely pleased that you propose to offer an amendment to H.R. 1, an Act to amend the Social Security Act, which will have an enormous favorable effect on veterans who are entitled to GI Bill educational assistance as the result of their service in the Armed Forces during the Vietnam era.

Presently, social security benefits are paid to children up to the age of 22, if their parent is dead. For persons who served in the Armed Forces between the ages of 18 and 22, however, social security benefits to which they are entitled are reduced by the time spent in the Armed Forces.

Because of the high cost of education, including books, tuition, and other expenses, it is mandatory that these young veterans receive all possible assistance to help them make a successful readjustment to civil life.

Your amendment will take care of the present inequity whereby time in the Armed Forces actually discriminates against such persons if they are entitled to social security benefits because of the death of a parent. It is noted that your amendment has a maximum of three years which may be deducted, which will take care of those citizens who have been inducted into the Armed Forces and made the extra sacrifice in behalf of us all during this Vietnam war. At the same time the veteran will not be penalized for having served and will be placed in the same status as those who did not serve in the Armed Forces.

Your amendment, therefore, has the full support of the Veterans of Foreign Wars. You are to be commended for offering this amendment, and the Veterans of Foreign Wars urges its approval by the full Senate.

With kind personal regards, I am

Sincerely,

FRANCIS W. STOVER,
Director, National Legislative Service.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF COLLEGIATE VETERANS,
Washington, D.C., October 2, 1972.

HON. VANCE HARTKE,
Chairman,
Committee on Veterans' Affairs,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The National Association of Collegiate Veterans believes that the amendment which you are offering to the Social Security Act will be of major importance to Vietnam-era veterans seeking to further their education. Many of us were drafted because we were from lower income families. Particularly hard hit were sons and daughters of families of persons retired, deceased or disabled.

We feel that your amendment, which would recognize a veteran's service in the Armed Forces rather than penalize him, will make the GI Bill more meaningful to many young veterans. The high cost of education has made it difficult for veterans to return to school. This has been aggravated by the difficult employment market of the past several years, which has made part-time jobs hard to obtain. Particularly burdened is the son or daughter of a retired, deceased or disabled person, whose earnings must go to assist his family.

Therefore, we wholeheartedly support your amendment, which would make such a veteran eligible for Social Security Act benefits for a period of time equivalent to the amount of time he was in the service. If these men and women use this unique educational opportunity, which you and your Committee—as well as the members of the Senate, have done so much to further—then we will be in a better position to effectively compete in American society.

Sincerely yours,

JAMES M. MAYER,
President.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) be added as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK) be added as a cosponsor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may yield to the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) without losing my right to the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to allow Nancy Amidei, staff director of the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, the privileges of the floor during the debate on H.R. 1.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. Who yields time?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment, as I understand it, would say that if a person has been in the military service, he would continue to get the children's social security benefits that are paid to children over 18 who are in school. He would be paid even though by virtue of his military service, he may have passed the age at which these children's benefits would have been available to him. Benefits after age 18 are paid to a child who is going to school, on the theory that he is still a dependent up through age 21.

The problem that this amendment creates is that this person, by virtue of going into the military service, is also entitled to GI benefits, and it would seem, at a minimum, that he ought to take one or the other; he should not have both. We provide very generous benefits through veterans' legislation, and I have always favored that, and I think most Senators have. So where a person has veteran's benefits, and he is not over the age of 21, I do not see why he should have both. I would think he should be required to choose between them.

That being the case, Mr. President, I feel that the amendment, in the fashion that it was offered, should not be agreed to. Although I suppose that if one were offered whereby he would have the privilege of having the social security benefits, if he elected to receive them and found them more useful to him than the veterans' benefits, there would be good logic to support it.

But under the circumstances, Mr. President, since the amendment provides that he could have both benefits, it is really not a good amendment.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. LONG. I yield for a question.

Mr. BENNETT. Under the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Indiana, could a returned veteran stay in school for 15 years?

Mr. LONG. I do not think so. As I understand the amendment, we would add to age 22 the number of years a person had been in the military, and I believe the limit would be not more than 3 years, so he would draw social security benefits up until he is 25. Now a person ceases to draw the benefits for children at age 22, if he goes to school.

The problem here is that while, as far as I am concerned, I would have no objection to his drawing the child's benefits until he gets to be age 25, were it not for the fact that we have a GI program; a GI program which presumably provides more liberal benefits on the theory that he has served in the service, and recognizes that he would be an adult. We provide a generous training program, and with generous educational benefits for veterans, and I certainly want it to be generous. We provide good educational benefits for former servicemen, and I would think, Mr. President, that a person should have the one benefit and not the two.

Therefore, Mr. President, I shall vote against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, just for clarification, in response to the question of the Senator from Utah. If, for example, a person is not a veteran and a parent dies, educational benefits will be paid up to the time that person is 22 years of age.

If he goes into the military service at the age of 18 for 2 years, and then goes to school, he can draw educational benefits under the GI bill. These are not intended to be and never have been fully adequate. And during that period he can also draw social security benefits, while he is under the age of 22. But if the same person undertook a 4-year enlistment at the age of 18, or came out of high school at 19 and entered the service for 3 years, then that person would have forfeited the benefits available under the social security law.

In other words, what we say to that person who voluntarily enlisted or who is drafted, is, "Mister, we are going to give a privilege to that person who stays home, we are going to give him an educational benefit under the social security law, but if you go into the military service, we will take it away from you."

This is a common practice, I will say that. Every Member of Congress, for example, is entitled to count his military service as Government service toward retirement. I do not think we have any hesitancy to claim those years. We add on those years for ourselves. But to that young man, we say, "If your father and source of support dies, and you are not in the service and are a full-time student, we are going to provide an income for you up to the age of 22. But if you are foolish enough to go and join Uncle Sam's service, don't worry, we will take it away from you."

That does not make good sense. It makes no sense at all. Let us provide at least equality of treatment to the veteran for up to 3 years.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARTKE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. CANNON. Is the Senator from Louisiana correct when he says that if the amendment were passed, the veteran would be eligible for dual benefits, one under social security and the other under the GI bill, for the period he is in the service?

Mr. HARTKE. No, let me explain it. What happens at the present time is that if you have a covered deceased individual, if the parent dies, if the child is a full-time student, he can receive social security benefits up to the time he is 22.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. HARTKE. It does not make any difference what his situation is. Under the Hartke amendment, if he goes into military service from the age of 18 until the age of 22, and then becomes a full-time student, he would receive his social security benefits and could draw GI benefits. He could draw them both.

Mr. CANNON. And under the Senator's amendment, if he got out of the military when he was 22 and went to school for 3 more years, he would be eligible to draw the GI educational benefits as well as the social security benefits; is that correct?

Mr. HARTKE. That is exactly right, and that is exactly what the person who comes out under the age of 22 does under the present law. In other words, under the present law, when he comes out, he draws dual benefits.

The GI bill was never meant to be exclusive financing for the individual. As a matter of fact, it is usually below the full cost of an education. The person who does not have parents to look to for any help with his educational benefits turns to social security, that in a way takes the parents' place.

That is the reason we raised the cutoff age to 22. We said it was unfair to penalize that person because he had lost his parents. It is unfair to say to him, "Simply because of that, even though you are going to school and have no earning capacity, we will deny you an education."

The Hartke amendment provides that the same benefit to the person who serves those years in the military.

Mr. CANNON. I understand. What the Senator is really saying is, he is entitled to dual compensation.

We have a dual compensation act that we passed prohibiting that under certain circumstances for people who have been in the military and in Government service. What the Senator is saying is, he would permit him to draw social security benefits, which were intended to substitute in the place of a parent——

Mr. HARTKE. That is right.

Mr. CANNON. So that a youngster could go to school up to the age of 22, and the Senator would give him that and also let him draw the compensation that we have provided under the GI bill, so that a man who has been in the service can go on and get his education. The Senator is really permitting him to do both.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, as an example, let me make this assumption: If a person has a parent who dies, and he goes to school until the age of 22, he can draw those social security benefits for the full time he is in school. Then, if he wants to, at the age of 22, 23, or 25, he can draw full educational benefits. There is nothing to keep him from drawing those.

When we deal with the question of veterans, as is shown in the veteran's law itself, section 1681 of title 38 of the United States Code provides that the educational assistance allowance for a veteran is designed "to meet the expenses of assistance, tuition, and so forth."

In all equity to the veteran, what you are doing in this situation is encouraging people not to participate in military service. If you do not participate in military service, you are going to receive the full benefits; but if you do, we are going to penalize you. You are going to receive the GI benefits, but you will not receive the benefits you would receive in the other payment.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARTKE. I yield.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. If he did not go into the military service, he would not have any military benefits, anyhow.

Mr. HARTKE. That is true.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. So he would be drawing double compensation, under the Senator's amendment, any way we look at it.

Mr. HARTKE. I am not denying that he is going to receive two pay checks; but one can do that today if he gets out of the military service at the age of 20.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. Why does the Senator want to add another one, then?

Mr. HARTKE. I think it is rather preposterous to say to a man in the military service for 2 years, from 18 to 20, that he can draw double compensation for the next 2 years, but if he stays in for 4 years, he cannot.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. He does not start drawing compensation, anyway, until he gets out of the service. He has to go to school.

Mr. HARTKE. If he enlists or is drafted at age 18 and comes out at age 20 and his father is dead, he can get his GI bill and draw his social security benefits for 2 years. But if he enlists for 4 years, from 18 to 22, and is past the age of 22, he gets no paycheck under social security.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. But he gets the GI bill, also.

Mr. HARTKE. He gets that under any circumstances.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. At any rate, he is still drawing double compensation.

Mr. HARTKE. All I am saying is that the man who is drafted at 18 and stays until he is 20 is drawing double compensation.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. The Senator is talking about 4 years. The man is still compensated and is taken care of under the GI bill.

Mr. HARTKE. Every veteran is taken care of under the GI bill.

Mr. HARTKE. Every veteran is taken care of under the GI bill.

The point is that we are dealing with a situation of those who are orphans, in effect. We are dealing with those children whose parents are disabled or died. We are not dealing with the rank and file social security beneficiary. We are not dealing with those people who are drawing social security and have children.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. A man who has been in the service 4 years is sort of past the orphan stage. He is a little past that stage. He is a man; he has been in the Army for 4 years.

Mr. HARTKE. Let me see if I can make it a little more clear. I did not have that easy a time going through school, but I had my parents backing me all the way. This is true in a majority of cases. But take a young man whose father died and who enlists for 4 years at the age of 18. After he comes out, he decides he wants to go to school. The GI bill pays part of his expenses.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. That is correct.

Mr. HARTKE. If he had a parent, the parent would probably help pick up the difference. But this young man, because he went into the service at 18 and enlisted for 4 years, has no parental payments to look to in order to help him financially. So you are saying to him, "I'm sorry, mister. You were foolish enough to stay in the military service during those years. If you had waited and enlisted when you were 22, you would have had all that money and could have gone to school and come back and got the additional GI benefits."

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. In the first place, he does not have to enlist.

Mr. HARTKE. But you do not have to have military service, either.

Mr. JORDAN of North Carolina. In think the Senator is adding one compensation onto another. I am afraid this is overlapping benefits, which I think would be wrong. I am strongly in support of the GI benefits and have voted for every one and voted to liberalize them on many occasions.

Mr. HARTKE. I think it is a shame to say that you are going to treat those people who are in effect both orphans and veterans worse than you do a person who has his parents living and who is a nonveteran.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator did not give the committee the opportunity to act on this It was not submitted to us, even though he is a member of the committee. Therefore. as the manager of the bill, I am not prepared to discuss the amendment in detail. I have tried to find out what it is about while the Senator was talking about it. I think I have some idea of what this is all about.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order to correct a statement of error?

Mr. LONG. Did the Senator offer this amendment in committee?

Mr. HARTKE. It is part of the minority views, and I did submit it on February 17, 1972. It is addressed to the chief counsel, Tom Vail. I have a copy of the letter and a copy of the amendment. If the staff did not give it to the Senator to read, it is not my fault.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have these papers printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FEBRUARY 17, 1972.

Mr. TOM VAIL,
Chief Counsel, U.S. Senate, Committee on Finance, Washington, D.C.

DEAR TOM: I am enclosing a copy of an amendment to H.R. 1 and supporting materials related thereto which Senator Hartke plans to introduce shortly. It is my understanding that he has introduced a similar amendment in 1969 or 1970.

I wonder if I might get your reaction to this amendment after you have had time to study it.

Sincerely,

HOWARD MARLOWE,
Legislative Assistant to Vance Hartke, U.S. Senator.

AMENDMENT TO SECTION 402(d)(1)(B) OF THE SOCIAL SECURITY ACT

STATUTORY LANGUAGE

Section 402(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act is hereby amended to read "at the time such application was filed . . . was a full-time student and had not attained the age of 22, except that veterans of military service in the Armed Forces of the U. S. with other than a dishonorable discharge who have ended their service after August 4, 1964, and have served more than 180 days on active duty or have been discharged because of a service connected disability, and have not received more than a high school education or G.E.D. equivalency degree shall be eligible for assistance regardless of their age while they are full-time students at educational or training institutions for a period of up to 36 months."

SOCIAL SECURITY: AN IMPORTANT NEW WAY TO AID VIETNAM ERA VETERANS

(A Statement in Support of an Amendment to the Social Security Act.)

This amendment to the Childrens' Benefit provisions of the Social Security Act would encourage all covered Vietnam veterans, regardless of their age, to return to school by paying them benefits for a period equal to their GI Bill entitlement, up to 36 months.

Unlike the veterans of past wars, those who served during the Vietnam Era have come home to apathy—not admiration. Instead of respect for the dirty and thankless task they have done, they are often viewed suspiciously because they have served. They know this, and they are angry. Tired of rules, double talk, and empty words, they are turned off by the system.

Currently, the so-called Childrens' Benefits under Social Security represent only one more form of discrimination against veterans. Benefits are provided to full-time students of deceased, retired or disabled parents if the children are between the ages of 18-22. Veterans, of course, suffer because, for most of them, time spent in service reduces the benefits available.

The proposed amendment would give veterans a better deal, and it would also help raise GI Bill wage rates above the present 30%—compared with 50%, after World War II and 45% after Korea.

GI Bill benefits, alone, are often inadequate to support veterans at most institutions, but the combination of the GI Bill and Social Security would provide a satisfactory amount. GI Bill benefits are $175 per month per single veteran and Social Security benefits would add from $35 to $210 per month extra, depending on the salary of the parent's job, the length of time covered, whether the parent is retired or disabled, or deceased, and possibly, the size of the family.

There are currently 610,802 Vietnam Era veterans engaged in full-time education and training under the GI Bill. If veterans utilize Social Security benefits at the same rate as the general population (10%), then the cost of the amendment for the first year (calculated at a cost of $900 per veteran) would be something less than $54,972,000. In any case, we owe it to the veterans to make the effort.

EXPLANATION

Section 402(d)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act describes the benefits available to (natural or adopted) children of a parent covered by Social Security-where the parent is either dead, disabled, or retired. The amount of the benefits is ½ of the parent's basic benefit if the parent is retired or disabled; ¾ of the benefit if the parent is dead. Thus, if a parent is retired or disabled, benefits would be between $35 and $140 per month depending upon salary levels of the parent's jobs, the length of time covered, and where the family is large, the size of the family. If the parent is dead, benefits would be between $45 and $210 per month. Such benefits were originally available only to children under the age of 18, but a few years ago the provision was amended to permit benefits to flow to full-time students over the age of 18, but below the age of 22.

The difficulty with the existing law is that it discriminates against persons who served in the Armed Forces between the ages 18 and 22. Their benefits are reduced by the time they spent in service. The amendment being proposed is intended to remedy this problem and to encourage more veterans to continue their education by offering them additional resources.

Only 30% of Vietnam era veterans are currently making use of their GI Bill benefits, in contrast with the 50% who utilized those benefits after World War II and the 45% after the Korean conflict. Moreover, those veterans with some previous college experience are twice as likely to go back to school after service than those with only a high school education.

There are many reasons for the poor rate of participation, but one of the most important is the lack of money. GI Bill benefits are, by themselves, inadequate and do not provide adequate support for tuition, fees and living expenses. Money provided through the Social Security Act would help fill the gap.

The amendment is focused on those whose need is the greatest, but are least likely to undertake further schooling—those with no more than a high school education. All such veterans who have been discharged during the Vietnam Era (subsequent to August 4, 1964), have other than a dishonorable discharge and have served more than 180 days on active duty or been discharged due to a service-connected disability would be eligible if one of their parents was covered by Social Security and is disabled, dead or retired.

The total annual cost of the amendment is somewhat difficult to calculate because Social Security statistics do not separate out veterans as a distinct category. However, an estimate can be made.

There are currently 610,802 Vietnam Era veterans engaged in full-time education and training under the GI bill. If these veterans utilize Social Security benefits at the same rate as the general population (10%), then the cost of the amendment for the first year (calculated at a cost of $900 per veteran) would be something less than $54,972,000. How much less depends upon the number of veterans already utilizing Social Security. Unfortunately, the number is not known.

Mr. LONG. If the Senator offered that in committee, then I have a very bad memory, because I was there. I was there throughout the consideration of this measure. I was there every day except one, and I will be glad to review the record, but I believe the Senator will find that he did not offer it that day. I do not recall any amendment such as this being offered. If any member of the Finance Committee does remember it, I wish he would correct me. I do not recall this amendment being offered.

I do not know of some correspondence the Senator may have had with some member of the staff; but, so far as I know, this amendment was never offered to the committee. We had no opportunity to vote on it or talk about it in the committee room. I did not know what this amendment was until it was called up today.

This amendment has to do with the problem that Senator Ribicoff has referred to from time to time. We have so many different programs that are supposed to help poor people or to keep people out of poverty that if you were to eliminate the overlapping benefits by which people get double dips, triple dips, and quadruple dips, and put them all in one consistent program, you would have more money than you need to lift everybody in America out of poverty. It is only because you have a hodge-podge of programs, many of which relate to each other in ways that were never considered in advance, then you find that you are spending a great deal more money than it would take to lift everybody out of poverty.

When we get into that, one of the principal examples would be veterans' benefits. We provide a higher level of veterans' benefits than other people. I never knew, until the Senator brought this amendment up, that a young man can go into military service at age 18 and come out of military service at age 20 and that, in addition to receiving his $175 GI bill of rights payment to go to school, can also receive a $60 social security payment. This is on the theory that he is still a child and therefore is dependent upon his parents, even though he is pretty much of a man who has been in the Army for two years. Apparently, on this theory he is still on mama's apron strings, even though he came out as a decorated hero. So that when he comes out at age 20 after going in at age 18, and comes out like Audie Murphy, having killed 550 of the enemy on the field of battle, a decorated veteran, with the Medal of Honor, he is still entitled to be treated as a child and receive a $60 a month payment under the social security law, on the theory that he is still dependent upon his family for support, even though he has proved to be one of the Nation's great heroes.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. He may also be married and the father of two or three children.

Mr. LONG. Yes. By that time he may very well be married and have his own family to support, and still he is regarded as dependent on mama; and since papa has passed away, this person can draw the benefit as though he is a child, still dependent upon his parents for support.

I did not know it but I know it now. That is the law. But I believe it is an unintended benefit. I do not believe anyone ever thought about this when it came to pass. Now the Senator says we are discriminating against people 23 and 24 years old because they cannot do the same thing, because they cannot proceed on the theory that they are still hanging on mama's apron strings, even though they may be married, a combat veteran, a hero of the Nation, with decorations from their country, being paid $175 a month on the GI bill of rights to go to school and then, in addition, we must still treat them as children and let them draw the child's benefit, on the theory that they are still dependent upon mama and papa for support.

It would make more sense if, when this fellow, at 20, having left the service, and being entitled to draw $175 a month under the GI bill of rights, could not draw the $60 under the social security program for the child's benefit. But, that is not before us. If we wanted to say that there is inequity here, the way to solve it would be to say that a man, a veteran, entitled to the more generous benefits of the GI bill of rights, would not draw the child's benefit because we are caring for him more generously under another program.

But now the Senator would go beyond that and extend the child's benefit up to the age of 25. We provided that if a child wanted to go to school, then the child's benefit would continue after the age of 18 up to the age of 22, on the theory that he was still dependent upon mamma and papa while he was still going to school. If he did not go to school, then he would lose the child's benefit, even at the age of 18.

Now the Senator would extend the child's social security benefit to the age of 25 which he would receive in addition to the GI benefits. His net benefit would then be $235 a month by treating him as a child as well as treating him as a veteran.

Mr. PERCY. Did we not just increase GI benefits? Certainly the right way to do this in order to have adequate GI benefits for educational purposes would be to charge it against that account rather than doing it this way?

Mr. LONG. Do it either way, so far as I am concerned. Under social security, do it for everyone, do it for the GI's and do it for everyone. But these overlapping systems, these double tips that people resent, the gimmicks and the angles, so that if someone does not get it he says "I never heard of it" and then the first thing you know everybody wants some other gimmick for himself. "When you do it for this man, you must do it for me," in view of the fact that here is an unintended gimmick that tends to discriminate against someone else who did not have that particular pattern, so we have to give it to him or to someone else who will say "Give it to me."

It would make far better sense to provide it across the board, rather than to start this kind of thing which benefits only a minuscule number but now sets a pattern to bring in somebody else—goodness knows who—who will say that they are being discriminated against because they only got the first bite of the apply and not the second and, therefore, they should have the double benefit. This could lead to all sorts of unintended benefits and all sorts of unintended consequences, it would seem to me.

Mr. BENNETT. Is not the theory of the $60 social security benefit that this person is dependent, dependent on the social security entitlement of his dead father, and it is not that he needs it, it is just that he is a dependent? Who can say that a man with $175 a month is a dependent child. It seems to me a thing full of contradictions.

Mr. LONG. Theoretically he is dependent. But he is a veteran of the war and is still presumed to be a dependent.

Mr. President, I point out that, under the able leadership of the Senator from Indiana, we have recently passed a bill raising the GI bill benefits from $175 a month up to $245 a month. I salute the Senator for his leadership in providing this additional benefit. At least, it is across the board for all GI's.

But in addition to the $245 a month, he would have a special facet of GI beneficiaries who would get the extra $60 a month in social security, being treated as a child, even though they were 25 years of age. I would submit that that is not the way that we should do it.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PROXMIRE). The question is on the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) that the amendment of the Senator from Indiana be laid on the table.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

There was not a sufficient second.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE).

On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered. The motion is not debatable and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. FULBRIGHT), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL).

If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is paired with the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS). If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" and the Senator from Alaska would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD). If present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 24, as follows:

aid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 467, line 18, insert the following new section and renumber subsequent sections accordingly:

COVERAGE OF PSYCHOLOGISTS' SERVICES

SEC. 274. (a) Section 1861(r) of the Social Security Act is amended (1) by striking out "or (4)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(4)" and (2) by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", or (5) a psychologist holding a doctoral degree, licensed or certified as such by a State, but only for purposes of section 1861(s)(1) and section 1861(s)(2)(A) and only with respect to functions which he is legally authorized to perform as such by the State in which he performs them."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply only with respect to services performed on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARTKE. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent—after having consulted with the distinguished Senator and the distinguished ranking minority member of the committee—that there be a 20-minute time limitation on this amendment, to be equally divided between the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, the amendment I have just offered is cosponsored by the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) and the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

Mr. President, medicare contains several built-in limitations which restrict the patterns of care and availability of services for individuals suffering from mental, psychoneurotic, and personality disorders.

While there are provisions for treatment for such difficulties under part B of medicare, they must either be provided by a doctor of medicine or by a doctor of osteopathy or as an incident to their services.

The result of this limitation has been to restrict psychological services to the point where less than 1 percent of the patients served by psychologists are over 65 years of age.

The pending Hartke amendment which has been cosponsored by Senators CRANSTON and HART puts psychologists on an equal footing with psychiatrists for the purpose of providing mental health services for the elderly under medicare.

Mr. President, health is a right and proper health care should be provided to all regardless of age, area of residence, or income. Those in need of health services should have a right to choose from licensed professionals functioning within the scope of their practice. Any legislative limitation which precludes this privilege of free selection is not in the best interest of the patient, prevents innovative approaches to treatment, and is often poor economics.

If any group were to be singled out for having emotional problems concomitant with conditions often outside their control, the poor and aged fit this category.

Psychologists have the training, credentials, and controls to function as independent practitioners to supply this public need. Psychologists are now licensed or certified to function independently as providers of mental health services in 46 States and the District of Columbia. In fact, this very Congress passed the act to license psychologists for independent practice in Washington, D.C.

All laws that have been passed that regulate the practice of Psychologists call for a minimum of a doctorate from a recognized university, internship in an approved setting, and postdoctoral training. We have every evidence to believe that our controls over the profession are sufficient to insure our continued functioning as an independent provider of health benefits.

The effectiveness of the control over our profession and the ethical functioning of psychologists are reflected in the fact that while the cost of malpractice insurance for most medical specialties has continued to rise to astronomical heights as the public has sought redress through the courts—the cost for malpractice insurance for psychologists has continued to decline. At present, a private practicing psychologist can receive professional liability insurance in the amount of $300,000 to $900,000 per year for a cost of $40 per year. In the 15 years that psychologists have had malpractice insurance, there has not been one case that has gone to court.

There is significant evidence that suggests that early intervention in the treatment of mental health disorders reduces overall costs of medical expenses. Studies by Cummings and Follett at Kaiser-Permanente—the group health care plan in California—clearly show that early intervention and utilization of psychotherapeutic services tend to reduce overall medical costs. In this connection, it is probable that many aged people are seeing physicians for a variety of physical ailments which really reflect their need for someone to talk to, someone to listen to them, someone who will give them interest and concern, and many dollars are being spent for purported medical care of diseases that might be treated less expensively and more productively as mental health problems.

Psychology has established itself as an

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medic-independent health profession through its training, public acceptance of its services, and through statutory regulations. Extensive training leading to the Ph. D. degree and experience at hospitals, clinics, and other service facilities has qualified psychologists to provide direct services to the public. Psychologists practice without medical certification, direction, or supervision according to professional practice statutes in 46 States and the District of Columbia. In the remaining four States, psychologists practice without medical direction or supervision using voluntary controls.

State legislatures have recognized the inequities in private insurance contracts which have denied the claims of policyholders for the diagnosis and treatment of mental, psychoneurotic, and personality disorders when the policyholder was attended by a psychologist. Eleven States have enacted laws which require insurance carriers to reimburse their policyholders for the diagnosis and treatment of nervous and mental disorders whether the services are rendered by a psychologist of a psychiatrist. Those 11 States are California, Colorado, Kentucky, Maryland, Michigan, Montana, New Jersey, New York, Oklahoma, Utah, and Washington. To my knowledge, this has not resulted in any additional premiums to the policyholders or exceptional increases in utilization. These laws have been well received by the public. Several insurance carriers—Prudential, Occidental Life, and Massachusetts Mutual—recognizing this inequity, have voluntarily included psychology as a qualified provider of service as a physician for the purposes of their contract for the treatment of mental disorders. Continuing the practice of requiring that mental health services for the recipients of medicare be provided only by psychiatrists causes an unnecessary hardship on the beneficiaries of medicare and creates an artificial shortage of qualified providers of service for nervous and mental conditions. Failure to include psychological services without medical referral, produces a condition of featherbedding physicians' fees. The cost of certification and recertification by doctors of medicine or osteopathy only can require an extra visit to the doctor and produce another fee chargeable to the medicare program.

Utilization control must occur through peer review mechanisms rather than through the source of referral. The profession of psychology has established its own peer review mechanism which is accepted by the health insurance industry. H.R. 1, itself, provides controls through mechanisms such as the professional standards review organization.

For the reasons cited, I ask that H.R. 1 be amended so that psychologists will be listed as physicians for the providing of diagnostic and treatment services for mental, psychoneurotic, and personality disorders as well as for the diagnosis and treatment of mental retardation, vocational rehabilitative services, and child care services.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table depicting some of the characteristics of psychology laws in the United States be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[1] "S" means a specific definition; (P) means that psychotherapy is included (N=25); "D" means a circular definition—a person is a psychologist when he calls himself one and does psychological work.

[2] These 3 columns all refer to post-grandfather provisions; nor do they reflect the requirements under reciprocal endorsement provisions. "P" means post-doctoral (or post-master's in the case of West Virginia). In connection with the examination, "No" is shown if the examining board has any authority in the law to waive it.

[3] The examination under the Arizona law is unassembled, consisting of an evaluation of credentials submitted by the applicant. In Kansas, the examination may be either assembled or unassembled.

[4] 1 of the 2 years must be post-doctoral.

[5] 2 years of experience are required if the field is clinical psychology.

[6] The definition in New York's law is circular; there is a specific definition, including psychotherapy, in the regulations (of the commissioner of education).

[7] The 1 year of experience is required if the field is clinical psychology; no experience requirement otherwise.

[8] Clinical psychologists must have completed an internship or practicum of at least 1 year.

[9] Dmitted again this year ara the 1-time columns headed "Medical Disclaimer," "Fees," and "Residence Required." With the exception of Alberta, Indiana, Saskatchewan, and Wisconsin, all the laws contain a medical disclaimer provision. With respect to fees, it has not been possible to maintain current and accurate data. Residenca is such an individual matter that the previous column was misleading.

[10] "Reciprocity" means endorsement of another State or province certification or licensure, if standards are no lower, to waive the examination. "A" means the examination may be waived for Diplomates of the American Board of Professional Psychology (N=37). In neither instance, however, is the decision to waive the examination a mandatory one; the examining board has the option.

[11] A "Yes" here means a reference to the APA Code of Ethics in the law (N=23), either specifically or by implication (e.g., "code of ethics of a national psychological association"). All laws, of course, make some reference to unethical or unprofessional conduct as a reason for refusal or revocation, and regulations often cite the APA Code. It is not possible in many States to make a reference in law to nongovernmental bodies, such as the APA.

[12] Provision for exemption of the sociologically-trained social psychologist, in accordance with national agreement between APA and the American Sociological Association in 1959. (N=28)

[13] Privilege granted to psychologists' clients in legislation other than the psychology law.

[14] If ABPP diploma was granted by examination; "grandfather" diplomates must take the State examinations.

[15] Waiver of examination for clinical psychologists possible only for holder of ABPP Diploma in clinical psychology.

[16] Clients of licensed clinical psychologists have the privilege.

[17] Includes a separate license for private practice of school psychology for persons with a master's degree in school psychology.

[18] 1 board member is a lay member.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that a statement by Dr. Jack G. Wiggins, a member of the Board of Governors of the Council for the Advancement of Psychological Professions and Sciences, before the Senate Finance Committee in February of this year, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY OF DR. JACK G. WIGGINS

Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee:

My name is Dr. Jack G. Wiggins. I am a psychologist from Cleveland, Ohio and am a member of the Board of Governors of the Council for the Advancement of Psychological Professions and Sciences (CAPPS), and serve on its Executive Committee. One of the objectives of the Council is to insure that there are an adequate number of psychologists available to serve the health and mental health needs of the public and to insure that the public has ready access to psychological services.

In addition, I am Chairman of the Committee on Health Insurance of the American Psychological Association though I am not at present speaking for the APA, which organization will submit statement to the committee consonant with our testimony today. The American Psychological Association has 32,000 members and represents both the science and the profession of psychology. About 15,000 of our members are supplying mental health services directly to the public. The remainder of the membership have teaching positions in universities and medical schools, are conducting research, or serve in an administrative capacity. The APA Committee on Health Insurance strives to assure that high quality mental treatment services are available to the public through their insurance contracts. One of the major objectives of this committee is to remove from health insurance contracts those provisions which interfere with mental health treatment or availability of services. We share this objective in common with the Council (CAPPS).

Medicare contains some built in limitations which restrict the patterns of care and availability of services for individuals suffering from mental, psychoneurotic or personality disorders. While there are provisions for the diagnosis and treatment of mental, psychoneurotic and personality disorders under Part B, they must either be provided by a doctor of medicine or a doctor of osteopathy or incident to his services. The result of these provisions has been to restrict the delivery of mental health services to the point that less then 1% of the patients served by psychologists are 65 years of age or over. In effect, this has excluded the diagnostic and treatment service of psychology to recipients of medicare benefits. The intent of HR 1, according to the House Ways and Means Committee, is to make fullest use of public health personnel. I quote Page 107, Union Calendar No. 86:

"Your committee believes that failure to make the fullest use of competent health personnel is of particular concern because of the shortage of such personnel."

HR 1 does not provide remedy of this shortcoming of the original Medicare Act. Therefore, we are requesting HR 1 amend its definition of the term "physician" to include services of a psychologist for the diagnosis and treatment of mental, psychoneurotic and personality disorders as well as for the providing of diagnostic and treatment services for the mentally retarded, vocational rehabilitative services and child care counseling.

Psychology has established itself as an independent health profession through its training, public acceptance of its services provided and through statutory regulations. Our training leading to the Ph.D. degree and experience at hospitals, clinics and other service facilities has qualified psychologists to provide direct services to the public. Psychologists practice without medical certification, direction or supervision according to professional practice statutes in 44 states and the District of Columbia. In the remaining 6 states, psychologists practice without medical direction or supervision using voluntary controls. The problem in the existing legislation was pointed out elo-quently by Senator Harris of Oklahoma in his comments on the Senate floor on November 23, 1967, when the Senate voted to amend the Social Security Act Amendments of 1965 regarding Medicare:

"The present defects in existing legislation arise from the fact that two independent but equally well-qualified professions, psychiatry and clinical psychology, offer similar and frequently identical services to the public. However, present regulations require that the services of clinical psychologists be reimbursed only if included in a physician's bill or as part of the charges of a clinic directed by a physician. This restriction denies the patient direct access to the many qualified clinical psychologists who are independent practitioners and unaffiliated with clinics or private physicians."

State legislatures have recognized the inequities in private insurance contracts which have denied the claims of policyholders for the policyholder was attended by a psychoneurotic and personality disorders when the diagnosis and treatment of mental, psychologist. Ten states have now enacted laws which require insurance carriers to reimburse their policyholders for the diagnosis and treatment of nervous and mental disorders whether the services are rendered by a psychologist or a psychiatrist. To our knowledge, this has not resulted in any additional premiums to the policyholders or exceptional increases in utilization. These laws have been well received by the public. Several insurance carriers, recognizing this inequity, have voluntarily included psychology as a qualified provider of service as a physician for the purposes of their contract for the treatment of nervous and mental disorders. Please include such companies as Prudential, Occidental, Liberty Mutual, and Massachusetts Mutual. The Aetna Life & Casualty Insurance Company has included psychologists as qualified physicians under the mental health benefits for its federal employees contract. Another form of similar recognition of psychological services was initiated by the Civilian Health and Medical Program for Uniformed Servicemen (CHAMPUS) in July, 1970. Mr. Vernon McKenzie, Special Assistant to the Asst. Secretary for Health and the Environment of DOD, stated before the Senate Post Office and Civil Service Committee on November 23, 1971 that the inclusion of psychological services without medical referral has been well received by the dependents of military servicemen.

At the inception of Medicare, there was considerable concern about overutilization of services and it was felt that one of the cost control factors would be that all services would be at the direction or incident to a physician's services. The experience of private insurance carriers in regard to inclusion of psychological services for the treatment of nervous and mental disorders has indicated that this provision has not materially affected their cost experience. Therefore, we believe that continuing the practice of requiring mental health services for the recipients of Medicare be provided only by psychiatrists causes an unnecessary hardship on the beneficiaries of Medicare and creates unnecessary artificial shortage of qualified providers of service for nervous and mental conditions. In fact, failure to include psychological service without medical referral, in effect, produces a condition of "feather-bedding" physician's fees. The cost of certification and recertification by doctors of medicine or osteopathy only can require an extra visit to the doctor and produce another fee chargeable to the Medicare program.

However, the reality is that because of the cumbersome reimbursement procedure, psychological services are little used and the treatment of the mentally ill becomes a private preserve of organized medicine. In addition to these potential costs it must be noted that by reducing the number of providers of services arbitrarily, you create an inflationary imbalance between supply and demand for services. The present restriction upon the availability of psychological services is such an inflationary procedure because it reduces the access of the public to qualified providers of service. This is totally unacceptable to the profession of psychology. We concur with the American Psychiatric Association that this results in unnecessary delays in treatment which in the long run may be more costly and damaging to the patient. The American Psychiatric Association in their testimony submitted to the House Ways & Means Committee on National Health Insurance in November, 1971 stated as follows:

"With reference to the psychiatric services that should be covered, the APA Board of Trustees stressed its opposition to any provision whereby psychiatric care would be covered under insurance only when such care is received upon referral by the family physician or general practitioner. We based this opposition on the grounds that such a provision is not compatible with early detection of psychiatric illness and easy access to psychiatric care. Experience indicates the necessity for direct accessibility of the patient to such care and for multiple mechanisms of referral. Self-referrel, frequently upon the suggestion of the foreman, teacher, or clergy, or referral by a community agency frequently leads to early diagnosis and treatment, and may prevent or reduce the disability that might otherwise occur."

Furthermore, several studies including those of Drs. Cummings and Follette and the Group Health Association of Washington, D.C. have demonstrated that medical utilization tends to decrease if adequate counseling services are included in health insurance plans. If I may, Mr. Chairman, without unduly burdening the record of these hearings, I would like to introduce, at this point in my remarks, these studies for the record.

To summarize these studies, they demonstrate that short-term intervention and psychotherapeutic counseling not only reduce diagnostic, X-ray, and laboratory studies but also reduce the incident of hospitalization. Thus, the cost of additional counseling services would be more than offset by the reduction of costs of hospitalization and unnecessary laboratory and X-ray studies. This has been clearly demonstrated in Health Maintenance Organization. The cost savings in the Health Maintenance Organizations concept tend to be the result of reductions in hospitalization utilization. We wish to point out that psychological services tend to be outpatient based rather then hospital based services. Thus, the diagnostic and counseling services of psychology could serve as a deterrent to overutilization of medical services which are already in short supply and hospital beds of which there is a chronic shortage. Our crises intervention studies show that the prompt effective counseling with people tends to reduce the number of people entering mental hospitals, as well.

We believe that utilization control must occur through peer review mechanisms rather than through the source of referral. The profession of psychology has established its own peer review mechanism which is accepted by the health insurance industry.

For the reasons ctied, we ask that HR-1 be amended so that psychologists will be listed as physicians for the purpose of providing diagnostic and treatment services for mental, psychoneurotic and personality disorders as well as for the diagnosis and treatment of mental retardation, vocational rehabilitative services, and child care services.

Thank you very much.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, the Hartke amendment accomplishes the following purposes:

First, it assures the aged of quality care. The Hartke amendment improves access by the aged to care by doctoral-level psychologists. The interests of social security beneficiaries are well protected by specific criteria in the amendment which define a psychologist, thus helping to assure high-quality care. As many as six out of 10 medical complaints are instead based on emotional/mental problems which can benefit from prompt psychological attention thus lessening the burden on busy medical personnel and facilities while raising the level of well-being among the aged. Many special problems of the aged are especially amenable to psychological management. For example, problems with self-reliance, communications handicaps, depression, and loneliness. This is also true with those problems of the aged which may be related to disease and injury. For example, heart attack or loss of a limb.

Second, the Hartke amendment recognizes psychology as an independent profession. Clinical psychology has been recognized as an independent profession in public and private programs such as the Aetna Government-wide indemnity plan for Federal employees, the champus program for the military and their dependents, and private programs underwritten by major insurance carriers.

The Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service has recommended "the inclusion of mental health care by qualified psychologists within the Federal employees health benefits program" administered by Blue Cross and Blue Shield

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a section of the committee's report which includes that recommendation be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HEALTH INSURANCE COVERAGE

The committee recommends the enactment of a new section in the provisions of title 5 relating to health insurance to authorize the Civil Service Commission to make binding decisions regarding the coverage of health insurance contracts.

Under existing law, the Commission cannot require an insurance carrier to pay a particular claim if the carrier interprets the contract not to cover such a service or supply. Generally, the numerous health insurance contractors pay claims if the Commission requests payment in individual cases; but Blue Cross-Blue Shield does not abide by that gentlemen's agreement.

Section 3 requires that, beginning in 1973, any contract entered into by the Commission with a health insurance carrier must include a provision giving the Commission the final authority to determine what is included within the contract in individual cases.

Recently, numerous Federal employees have registered complaints with the Commission and this committee regarding the practices of Blue Cross-Blue Shield in narrowly interpreting the coverage of its contract and denying payment for reasons which, to the employees, seem without merit. One particular area has been the question of whether mental health services provided by clinical psychologists are covered and the degree of supervision required by a practicing doctor of medicine over a clinical psychologist. Public hearings were held on November 23, 1971, before the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employment Benefits. Testimony presented during that hearing indicated that

Blue Cross-Blue Shield is the only insurance carrier of significance which does not cover such mental health services without the certification by a doctor of medicine who supervises the treatment. Although the committee pretends no expertise in the practice of medicine, the evidence disclosed at our hearing seems to indicate that there is little if any benefit derived from the practice of supervision of such service other than the earning of money by doctors of medicine and the avoidance of payment by Blue Cross-Blue Shield.

The committee recommends that in its next contract negotiation with Blue Cross-Blue Shield and other carriers, the Civil Service Commission give particular attention to these two problems—correct contract interpretation by the insurance carriers, and inclusion of mental health care by qualified clinical psychologists within the Federal employees health benefits program.

The committee has also noted a significant number of complaints by Federal employees who have been denied payment or who have received a payment which they consider inadequate. In some cases, these complaints have reached the committee and the Commission. The committee has noticed that on such occasions a careful review of the complaint has almost always led to an adjustment of the claim in favor of the employee. This evidence, while incomplete, tends to support the contention that some insurance carriers are not as careful with other people's money as they should be. The committee recommends that the Commission investigate this problem also.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, these facts indicate recognition that both the psychological-behavioral approach and the psychiatric-medical approach constitute valid separate disciplines with neither requiring "supervision" over the other. The HEW report issued pursuant to Public Law 90-248 entitled "Independent Practitioners Under Medicare" also provides a clear basis for recognizing psychology as an independent profession.

Finally, Mr. President, I would point out that in 1967 the Senate passed an amendment similar to the Hartke amendment defining psychologists as physicians. Regrettably, that amendment was subsequently removed in conference.

HEW has estimated the cost of the Hartke amendment at $300 million per year. That cost does not take into account the fact that the present law requires unnecessary medical supervision and referral. The Hartke amendment would eliminate those unnecessary costs thus lowering the net cost of expanding the services of psychologists for the aged.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to give the pending amendment their support.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, there are several substantial and compelling reasons why the proposed amendment should be rejected.

I am glad that my friend from Indiana made it clear that these are not doctors of medicine.

Psychiatrists are physicians so they are prepared, by their training, to treat patients in other ways other than listening to their stories.

Many have expressed concern over the present fragmentation of health care in this country. In general, clinical psychologists today function in organized settings rather than as independent practitioners.

The information I have is that only 7 percent of all psychologists are practicing independently. Under the amendment, there would be the strongest possible economic incentives for clinical psychologists to go into independent fee for service practice. As a matter of fact, with the economic incentives of fee-for-service, it can be readily anticipated that many nonclinical psychologists such as those engaged in research and education and family counseling would succumb to the irresistible siren song of medicare dollars.

If only 1 in 20 older Americans received the services authorized under the amendment, the annual cost to medicare would be $250 million, and if half of them took advantage of that service, the cost would be $2.5 billion.

In a report to the Congress entitled, "Independent Practitioners Under Medicare," it was pointed out by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare that "many patients over 65 have a combination of physical and psychological problems in which it is especially difficult to separate the treatment of physical and mental disease." Despite this strong and obvious relationship of physical and mental disease, the proposed amendment would delete the requirement in present law that the services of clinical psychologists must be provided under a plan of care and treatment developed by a physician. It is difficult to understand how the clinical psychologist can undertake care of the patient without knowledge of and availability of the patient's medical history.

Many older people suffer from mental anxiety and depression—problems which are often alleviated through treatment with prescribed drugs. However, clinical psychologists are not licensed to prescribe. Obviously, patients who might be handled more expeditiously under the care of a physician or where the psychologist cooperates with the physician through use of drugs would, in the absence of that coordination, be called back for avoidable and costly unnecessary follow-up visits to the clinical psychologist.

Finally, a most telling argument against the amendment is contained in an editorial in the Journal of Clinical Psychology, written by its editor, Frederick C. Thorne, entitled "The Great Clinical Hangup." I read a few salient quotations from that detailed, self-searching editorial:

There is a high rate of mobility among clinical psychologists, who tend to shift from one job to another when their professional deficiencies inevitably come to light. . . . The actual dirty work of dealing with patients is being delegated increasingly to psychological technicians and students who are not sufficiently experienced to recognize their inadequacies.

I continue to read from the editorial:

B. During the first 50 years of clinical psychology (1920–1970) there have been almost as many different theories and schools as there were clinicians. Repeated surveys of the theoretical affiliations of APA division (Am. Psychological Assn. of Clinical Psychologist) 12 members continue to show almost all permutations and combinations of systematic "positions" ranging from behaviorism to Zen Buddhism. The need of individual clinicians to "do their thing" has resulted in inconsistent practices whose invalidity must be obvious.

Mr. President, into that morass and into that thicket of confusion we are asked to plunge the medicare program at the expense of the taxpayers.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the editorial entitled "The Great Clinical Hangup" appear at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. BENNETT. It is quite obvious that there is a great deal of confusion as to the appropriateness and qualifications of clinical psychologists to serve as independent practitioners under medicare. There is no question but that to cover them as independent practitioners at the present time would be an extremely costly experience of uncertain value to older people.

If the service of a clinical psychologist is needed, it can be obtained upon the recommendation of a physician who properly would know the physical condition of the patient before he refers him or her to a clinical psychologist, particularly in the case of an older patient.

For all these reasons, the committee urges that the amendment be rejected.

Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana has commented on the floor about the fact that malpractice insurance for clinical psychologists is much lower than that for practicing physicians.

I do not know how one can obtain a malpractice case by proving that the clinical psychologist injured the person mentally. It is very simple to prove the presence of mental disorder, much easier, on an individual. However, I do not know how one can prove any damage that the clinical psychologist might do. I can realize therefore, that there is practically no chance that there will be malpractice suits brought.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. ANDERSON. Was this amendment considered in the committee?

Mr. BENNETT. The committee considered this very carefully and rejected it by a rollcall vote.

As I say, the committee recommends that this amendment be rejected by the Senate as it was rejected in the committee.

EXHIBIT 1

THE GREAT CLINICAL HANGUP

(By Frederick C. Thorne, Editor, Journal of Clinical Psychology) (1971)

OUR SAD PREDICAMENT

At a time when societal demands for clinical psychological services are rising geometrically, the field of clinical psychology finds itself oversold and unable to deliver what it traditionally has been expected to provide. Suddenly, as the result of facts uncovered by a host of clinical judgment studies that question the validity and competence of what the average clinical psychologist is doing, clinicians find their very integrity at issue. From within our own ranks, the challenge was thrown in the form of studies of clinical vs. statistical predictions whose results seemed to indicate that since the computer always did better than the clincian, the clinician should be thrown in the ash-can.

The cat first got out of the bag with the classical study of Kelly and Fiske (1951) demonstrating that the greatest clinicians and methods hardly could do better than chance in predicting training outcomes. Meehl (1954) and later Sawyer (1966) seemed to be making the clinching argument when they tabulated research investigations comparing the use of clinical vs. actuarial methods of data processing and reported that almost without exception actuarial methods were superior to clinical judgment. Holt (1958, 1970) severely criticized the Meehl-Sawyer conclusions on the grounds that defects of research design and the actual incomparability of many studies in question rendered the Meehl-Sawyer conclusions premature and invalid, since definitive studies on the issue have yet to be done. Unfortunately, Holt's rebuttals seem to get lost in the shuffle, and more hopeful evaluations of the situation such as Korman's (1968) findings concerning the superiority of clinical judgment in the prediction of managerial performance tend to be overlooked. Nevertheless, we cannot evade the fact that much remains to be desired in the area of clinical judgment.

The profession of clinical psychology that started out so hopefully suddenly finds its whole theoretical background, personnel and methodology under severe attack from many sources, both external and internal, as to validity and justification. Several studies indicate that other professionals do not make much use of psychological reports which are filed away, never again to see the light of day. There is a high rate of mobility among clinical psychologists, when tend to shift from one job to another when their professional deficiencies inevitably come to light. There is evidence that many clinicians tend to escape from actual clinical work to higher administrative and teaching jobs where competence is not so readily called into question. The actual dirty work of dealing with patients is being delegated increasingly to psychological technicians and students who are not sufficiently experienced to recognize their inadequacies. Worst of all, psychological practices have become the subject of Congressional investigations and patterns of local rejection as clinical actualities do not live up to pretensions.

Our great hangup stems from the fact that the profession of clinical psychology is stuck with itself at its present embryonic state of evolution. The public has been sold on the idea that all it has to do is to raise the money to secure psychiatrists and psychologists and a long list of social problems will be solved. This expectation simply has not been fulfilled. Psychological science has not achieved a state of development that enables it to provide knowledge and techniques that are as valid and relevant as has been taken for granted. The whole problem is more complex than originally conceived. In the meantime, individual clinicians are struggling to keep their heads above water, are stuck with the deficiencies of their training, and are hung up on something that doesn't really work but which they can't yet afford to abandon because nothing better seems to exist.

PROFESSIONAL INSECURITY AND GUILT

An entirely human reaction to being professionally defrocked and shown to be wanting in competence and clinical judgment has resulted in a wave of soul-searching and hair-tearing on the part of clinicians trying to justify their existence. Doleful predictions are being made that clinical psychology is dead. It is alleged that as many as 40% of APA Division 12 members regret they became clinicians and would not repeat the choice. Many seem to want to abandon the ship completely.

An even more potentially destructive outcome lies in the increasing alienation of pure and applied scientists extending at all levels from the internecine struggles of experimentalists vs. clinicians in the APA to the grass roots of clinical practice. The profession is literally split down the middle by the rift between the "nothing-buts" and the "something mores," with the former group in danger of winning out via their tight control of academic and organizational resources. Clinicians are in real danger of becoming scientific "untouchables," whose activities are regarded as being beyond the pale of pure science and therefore should be legislated out of the profession.

Fortunately, the situation is not as grave as might first appear. Anyone familiar with the development of clinical science must know that its evolution proceeds slowly with entirely predictable pauses and seeming regressions. As was the case with clinical medicine during its great transformation from proprietary schools in 1880 to modern objective medical center practices in 1915, clinical psychology is experiencing growing pains incident to discovering which of its classical theories and methods are valid and which not, and no one should be dismayed to find that most prescientific methods are both illogical and invalid. These are inevitable steps of evolutionary development that had to be worked through, no matter how painful the results to the egos of practitioners of the "art." Let us waste no more time hung up in soul-searching and rationalizations.

Even more critical is the issue of exactly what psychological science can contribute to human welfare. Miller (1969) assumes the position that psychology has revolutionary potential in two paradigms involving the conflicting objectives of (a) control through behavior modification, and (b) making greater self-development possible by disseminating psychological knowledge where needed. Miller correctly warns against the dangers of a scientific elite authoritatively manipulating populations through control of behavior reinforcements. Behaviorism and behavior therapy both imply authoritatarian control of those incapable of deciding for themselves.

Much more hopeful is the goal of making psychology available to those who need it. The crucial question, however, concerns whether contemporary psychological knowledge has much validity and/or relevancy in its applications. In the traditional "team" approach, psychologists operated in a truncated role, being expected to choose and interpret appropriate tests. In broader roles involving wider aspects of case handling, clinical psychciogists are being confronted with much expanded decisions concerning the client's everyday living. Here again, the critical question relates to how much psychology actually has to offer in solving real life problems.

If we consider the two basic problems as involving how to help the client to cope with and modify inadaptibility and disability, the question becomes one of how psychological knowledge can help the person to get along better. This involves entirely new diagnostic issues of what the person is doing wrong and how to correct it, i.e., how better to run the business of his life in the world. Of course, psychology really does not have much to offer to the solution of many real life problems that involve factors outside the realm of science, and here the psychologist operates only as a consultant with a broader background. Nevertheless, the clinician makes a contribution if he can do even 1% better than the naive layman, particularly in areas in which actuarial solutions are not available.

One way in which te psychological scientist can make a contribution is simply by protecting the client from misguided case handling on the part of ignorant laymen or even incompetent colleagues. In the midst of current waves of discouragement and loss of morale attendant upon learning that many psychological techniques are either obsolete or invalid, we must not lose sight of the fact that we have made a great positive advance simply in learning what does not work and therefore what not to do. A very valuable contribution can be made simply by protecting the client from well-intentioned mishandling.

Most children and many adult clients need reassurance, support and protection from the clinician as basic conditions for case handling, i.e., to have someone to understand them and represent their interests against environmental forces that threaten to overwhelm them. The clinician often has done his job when he merely supports the client through periods of stress until the client can reintegrate his own resources.

Another area in which clinicians need make no apologies relates to the conditions of psychological case handling, where the contributions of Rogers (1942), Truax and Carkhuff (1967), Thorne (1968) and others have differentiated the basic dimensions of facilitative relationships. The last 25 years have witnessed great advances in objectifying the necessary conditions for facilitating clinical processes. But here again, the essential step is to objectify the diagnostic assumptions on which decisions are based. It is not sufficient to depend upon standard rules for case handling (such as in nondirective case handling), because even these involve implied assumptions whose valid applications to specific cases must be established. The basic fact is that all clinical decisions must be based on accurate psychodiagnosis if they are to be valid.

THE INVALIDITY OF THEORIES, SCHOOLS, MODELS AND METHODS

The agonizing birth struggles of any new field inevitably are associated with the disillusioning results of separating the wheat from the chaff. During the first 50 years of clinical psychology (1920–1970), there have been almost as many different theories and schools as there were clinicians. Repeated surveys of the theoretical affiliations of APA Division 12 members continue to show almost all permutations and combinations of systematic "positions", ranging from Behaviorism to Zen Buddhism. The need of individual clinicians to "do their thing" has resulted in inconsistent practices whose invalidity must be obvious. Incidentally, "pure" scientists are not Simon-pure in this respect either; as witness the variety of identifications to which they admit.

Fortunately, operational methods of analysis provide a solution to the dilemma of so many conflicting schools of theory and practice. When the methods and data of each "school" are analyzed operationally, it becomes possible to identify their contributions and limitations.

One outcome of systematic operationism has been the rise of eclecticism, which is surviving a pelting with sticks and stones from those who seem to feel more secure when identified with a more limited position. In our opinion, very few contemporary psychologists understand the position of eclecticism or its true power and potentialities. A variety of half-true and even totally erroneous criticisms of eclecticism are being bandied about in a sort of psychological parlor game by those who do not show much appreciation of the real underlying issues.

Perhaps the most convincing validation of the eclectic position is provided by the statistic concerning how many members of APA Division 12 actually identify themselves as eclectic clinicians. In 1935, practically no one was describing himself as eclectic. By 1970, more than 50% of Division 12 members identify themselves as eclectic. What better criterion than what the majority of recognized clinicians believe?

THE CLINICAL TRAINING HANGUP

Everybody now seems to be admitting that traditional clinical training has not turned out very well and that something must be done about it. The whole training program is hung up on the fact that much of what is being taught is known to be invalid and/or irrelevant at the very time it is being taught! Current curricula in even the best universities consist largely in training the student in invalid or obsolete theories and practices. And the basic science experimentalists are in no position to smirk over this situation, because it is the irrelevance of much of "pure" psychological science that is to blame for the fact that students are given very little that is valid with which to work.

Something is gravely the matter when highly selected intelligent students cannot find much to learn that turns out to be of much value to them. In fact, an increasing number of studies such as those of Carkhuff and Berenson (1967) seem to indicate that with really relevant brief training, novices can do better than professionals encumbered with classical psychological knowledge. Many of us are reaching the conclusion that just the standard liberal arts training may be better preparation for clinical work than the clinical training programs at some universities (I dare not cite which).

Our recommendation is that the whole problem of clinical training could be resolved quickly, simply by using the field of clinical judgment as the ultimate criterion for all clinical training activities. Clinical psychology is clinical judgment is clinical judgment is clinical judgment. The field of clinical judgment provides most of the valid knowledge in clinical psychology—it gives us the indications and contraindications for what we can and cannot do. Although the systematic study of theories and schools is historically important, and it is also necessary to have courses to teach what may be done, the real crux of training is clinical judgment evidence concerning what is valid and relevant in clinical practice.

Unfortunately, the clinical training problem is hung up over commitments to the scientist-clinician paradigm and to various academic vested interests that claim authority in stirring the clinical pot. Actually, nothing is very valid in clinical training programs that does not have demonstrated relevance to case handling outcomes, which are the real payoff in all clinical science. A pox on all the contributors who insist on their prerogatives even though it has yet to be demonstrated that they have anything valid to contribute!

It is regrettable that too many clinical training programs are assigned to the youngest Ph.D.s with insufficient experience to discriminate what is invalid and/or irrelevant in their own training, who go through the motions of teaching the same misinformation that is responsible for their own incompetence.

Both clinical psychology and clinical psychiatry largely have failed to face the implications of what is now known in the field of clinical judgment concerning the relative competence of individual practitioners, i.e., the fact that only a few clinicians are doing valid work and the fact that the average clinician cannot do better than chance in his predictions, no matter how prestigious his academic/professional record may be. Our dire necessity is to discriminate who the valid practitioners are, to study them intensively to discover what cues they are using and what errors they are not making, and then to put these most valid practitioners in the real positions of authority in clinical training and professional organizations. It requires only historical contemplation to recognize how wrong many of the "great" psychologists have been.

THE HANGUP OVER PSYCHODIAGNOSIS

Part of the disillusionment in clinical psychology and psychiatry relates to the uncertain status of diagnostic methods; classification systems and nomenclatures adopted by official organizations that are now somewhat belatedly recognized as being invalid, obsolete or irrelevant. Imagine the consternation of clinicians suddenly confronted with the fact that their trusted diagnostic methods and tests were suddenly demonstrated to have no or only limited value! The historical reasons for the invalidity of classical diagnostic systems are too complicated to review here. Suffice it to state that their shortcomings could have been predicted by those familiar with the evolution of clinical sciences in general.

Unfortunately, the predominant reaction to the defrocking of classical psycho-diagnostics was one of nihilism and rejection of the whole business. First came C.R. Rogers with his pronouncement that diagnosis is not only unnecessary but is actually contraindicated in nondirective case handling. Another clamorous school of dissidents led by T. S. Szasz, whose book The Myth of Mental Illness (1961) really shook the foundations of the psychiatric establishment, have mounted a wide-ranging denunciation of the entire classical approach to behavior diagnosis and modification on the grounds that the medical model of mental disease is neither valid nor relevant. Clinical psychologists jumped quickly into the fray led by Marzolf (1947), Adams (1964), Albee (1966), Sarbin (1967) and Sharma (1970). Attacking the establishment has become a contemporary fad that is rapidly bringing the whole clinical operation to a standstill.

Another development that militates against psychodiagnosis is the rising influence of the behavior therapists, who adopt an ahistoric approach and proceed to treat symptoms solely as if historic and situational data were irrelevant.

Unfortunately, in the excitement of the fray and in the dregs of disillusionment, little attention is being given to the problem of not throwing out the baby with the bathwater. Thorne (1966) offered a rebuttal of Szasz and the mental illness myth on the grounds that many of his contentions were either invalid or farfetched, and besides most psychiatrists go far beyond the medical model anyway, so why all the contention?

If we can make any predictions at all about the future of clinical psychology and psychiatry, it is that the entire field of psychodiagnosis is long overdue for reevaluation and reworking, starting right from the beginning and building up a more comprehensive system of psychopathology from which more valid psychodiagnosis must naturally stem. We are absolutely confident of the prediction that valid diagnosis constitutes the necessary foundation for valid clinical practice, so that the more quickly we return to fundamentals and develop a really valid psychodiagnosis, the more quickly we will develop more valid case handling in general.

Clinical training programs must concentrate again on the whole issue of psychodiagnosis as inevitably underlying sound clinical judgment. If it takes an entirely new clinical training model to accomplish this, then let us proceed with the greatest possible speed to reorganize our professional schools. Students seem to recognize the issue more acutely than their teachers. It is to be hoped that new training ventures such as the California School of Clinical Psychology will get back to fundamentals and concentrate on the base issue of psychodiagnosis. Personally, I look aghast upon clinical training programs in which the key slots are filled either by anti-clinicians or by diagnostic nihilists. Imagine clinical training programs where the staff is split down the middle concerning the value of diagnosis! Is it any wonder that students find themselves confused and ill-prepared for finding valid bases for clinical decision processes?

Paradoxically, efforts to develop the field of psychodiagnosis largely have collapsed at the very time when they are most needed in the field of psychotherapy. Disillusioned by the inadequacies of traditonal psychodiagnosis concerned mostly with classification and chastened by revelations of their own diagnostic inadequacies, too many clinicians have washed their hands completely of psychodiagnosis. This trend was enhanced by the dictum of Carl R. Rogers to the effect that psychodiagnosis is contraindicated and even deleterious for nondirective methods, which can be practiced by novices having no formal diagnostic training whatsoever. Here, again, is an example of a whole field being prematurely abandoned because some of its applications turn out to be invalid.

The key consideration is that every clinical act inevitably must be based on some sort of diagnostic decision, whether implicit or explicit. Every clinical act should have a logical rationale based on the etiological equation of what is to be modified. Even behavior therapy must involve diagnostic decisions as to what and how to modify. Newer concepts of clinical process diagnosis greatly expand the area of decisions based on some sort of diagnostic rationales. Once diagnostic decisions have been reached, it is easy to know what to do.

Our basic contention is that we must reconsider the whole field of psychodiagnosis to reestablish its validity and relevance. Rather than being dismayed over the inadequacies of the state of dependable knowledge in clinical psychology during its first 50 years, we must return to the beginnings and discover where the errors are being made. This will be accomplished quickly only through a cooperative project on the part of the whole profession, which must subject all of its theories, methods and practices to rigorous validation and clinical judgment studies which, hopefully, will result in future generations of truly competent clinicians.

INTERDISCIPLINARY CONFLICTS

A large number of clinical psychologists appear to be hung up over issues of interdisciplinary relationships and conflicts. Historically, psychologists gained their entree into clinical fields through two routes. The field of education gave psychometry and assessment its start. The field of psychiatry gave psychologists clinical opportunities, and an uneasy partnership was established following the "team" model, in which clinical psychologists operated in ancillary roles.

For medical and legal reasons, psychiatry always has controlled the mental health field, much to the resentment of individual clinical psychologists, who often claimed equal competence in some areas. Perhaps due to feelings of professional insecurity, many clinical psychologists repeatedly have shown paranoid feelings towards psychiatry in particular and medicine in general, claiming discriminatory practices. However justified such feelings may be in individual cases, the fact remains that clinical psychology and psychiatry should cooperate as partners rather than competitors.

Clinical psychology properly is a basic science to psychiatry. Clinical psychology can contribute research finesse and special skills that psychiatry direly needs. Psychiatry can contribute clinical opportunities and a broad medical background that psychologists direly need. It is undignified and mutually defeating for interdisciplinary conflict to impair the necessity for all clinical sciences to work together in pooling knowledge and skills wherever competence can be demonstrated. We should not allow the unreasoning firebrands to create problems and conflicts that need not exist.

Because I hold both the Ph.D. and M.D. degrees, my own position has been strategic in that I am able to understand the fears, insecurities and genuine concerns of both camps that have led clinical psychology and psychiatry to misunderstand and mistrust each other. I know from my own experience just how important both the experimental-statistical training of psychologists and the broad medical training of psychiatrists can be. In general, many clinical psychologists have been deficient in truly broad clinical experience, and many psychiatrists are deficient in a genuine research orientation. Instead of allowing fears and insecurities to jeopardize a potentially great clinical partnership, both parties need to be very realistic about their own deficiencies and how they can complement each other. Truly mature clinicians in related fields should have no difficulty working together.

The current controversy over the validity of the medical model in psychiatry in which both psychiatrists and psychologists are participating could be largely resolved by cutting through some semantic and theoretical issues causing needless conflict. The basic issues relate to dangerous inadaptability and socio-economic disability, no matter in what other terms the underlying behavior phenomena may be described. Undoubtedly the medical model of disease validly applies to some cases of inadaptibility and disability, and undoubtedly other models apply to other cases. Why all the fuss? Most experienced clinicians, whether in psychology or psychiatry, understand the ramifications of the problem, even though redress usually lags far behind historically. These are matters to resolve cooperatively rather than to create Quixotic conflicts over presumed errors of omission or commission that are actually simply manifestations of the evolutionary development of clinical science at any time and place.

The basic issue is clinical competence no matter how achieved. There are many roads to Rome, and just as many to clinical competence. Let us stop feuding with neighboring professions and start working together to solve the gigantic problems facing us.

THE REAL CLINICAL PAY-OFF

The ultimate objective of all clinical practice is treatment, i.e., what actually can be accomplished on behalf of clients and patients. Although of basic scientific importance in their own right, psychopathology and psychodiagnosis ultimately are validated by their therapeutic outcomes. The answers that the teachers and basic scientists provide ultimately are validated by how well they work in practice.

Unfortunately, many teachers and basic scientists tend to look down on practitioners as being the failures who could not make a go of it in academia or research and who represent a sort of inferior caste. Actually, teachers, researchers and practitioners should coexist in a mutually interdependent partnership, all with equal status, and all contributing to the final result. Many of the most valuable leads for teaching and research have come from practitioners, and it is the practitioners who ultimately can validate the work of the teachers and researchers.

We need to abandon permanently the "one-way street" attitude that regards scientists and teachers as the font of all learning with the practitioners inevitably in pupil roles. However indispensable the teaching and research roles may be, the real clinical pay-off is the ability to practice the "art" competently and validly. Assuming that teachers know how to teach and researchers to do research, it still does not follow that either group automatically has clinical competence.

In the same manner as it is necessary to identify potentially great teachers and researchers and let nothing interfere with their work, so we must set up mechanisms for identifying great practitioners (no matter whether they are great teachers or researchers) and then not interfere with their work.

Instead of becoming neurotically frustrated and/or paralyzed by professional hangups, there are some very positive steps that can be taken to clear the roadblocks and differentiate new pathways toward more valid practices.

1. Let us be completely realistic about the embryonic phase of development of clinical psychological science and not become unstrung by the discovery that most pre-scientific practices inevitably must be invalid.

2. As a preliminary step to more valid clinical practices, all known methods and techniques should be identified, analyzed operationally, classified and evaluated as to validity. What is invalid should be abandoned immediately as obsolete and irrelevant. What is valid should be retained as the foundations of scientific practice.

3. Valid clinical judgment is a precondition for all valid clinical practice. Clinical judgment research and applications should have the highest priority.

4. Let us forego nihilistic reactions of insecurity and guilt upon discovering the extent of our incapacities and get back to fundamentals and study first things first.

5. The bewildering complexity of psychological theories, schools, models and methods must be evaluated as to validity and reliability of contributions, separating the wheat from the chaff, adopting what is valid and rejecting what is invalid.

6. Eclecticism is the most valid foundation for clinical science. Current misconceptions to the contrary, only eclecticism makes possible a genuinely wide spectrum approach to clinical practice.

7. Classical clinical training methods have been notoriously ineffectual. The scientist-clinician paradigm has been totally effective. Other methods need to be explored.

8. Any return to fundamentals must involve renewed research concern with psychodynamics and psychopathology, which are the basic subjects for all clinical science.

9. Psychodiagnosis is the crux of all valid clinical decisions upon which case handling depends. Let us return to psychodiagnostic fundamentals, enlarge the concept of what diagnosis involves, and develop a far-ranging clinical process diagnosis.

10. Let us eschew interdisciplinary conflicts. Clinical psychology is the basic science to psychiatry, and the two fields must work together in mutual trust and cooperation.

11. The real clinical pay-off of valid psychodiagnostics will be more valid psychological case handling.

12. Every clinician must accept the continuing responsibility for self-evaluation as to clinical judgment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I have asked for a rollcall vote on this amendment. Unless I get the yeas and nays for a rollcall vote I am going to go for a live quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator object?

Mr. HARTKE. I object unless I have the assurance that I can get a rollcall vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order during the quorum. There has been an objection. The quorum call will continue.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROLE OF PSYCHOLOGIST UNDER MEDICARE

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor with the distinguished Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) amendment No. 1533 to H.R. 1, which will give full recognition to the role of the psychologist as an independent practitioner under medicare. This amendment will provide for coverage of the services of a psychologist who is licensed or certified in a State and who holds a doctoral degree from a program accredited by the American Psychological Association.

CURRENT MEDICARE PROVISIONS

A substantive deficiency in the medicare system is its failure to recognize the psychologist as an independent practitioner. Current regulations permit direct reimbursement to the psychologist only for diagnostic services and then only when ordered by a physician.

The HEW report to Congress in 1968 entitled "Independent Practitioners under Medicare," outlined clearly the limited extent of participation of psychologists in services covered by medicare:

Currently, the Medicare program covers diagnostic and therapeutic services of qualified clinical psychologists when they are performed as part of the services of a Medicare-approved hospital, extended care facility, or home health agency. Such psychology services may be provided by an employee of the provider or by an independent practitioner through a contractual agreement with the provider. Reimbursement for services must be made to the provider on the basis of reasonable cost.

A psychologist's diagnostic and therapeutic services also may be covered as services "incident" to physicians services. This type of coverage commonly occurs in physician-directed clinics. Reimbursement is made to the physician or to the clinic on the basis of reasonable charges.

In addition, diagnostic psychological testing services of an independent practitioner may be covered as "other diagnostic tests" when performed in accordance with the written order of a physician. Reimbursement for diagnostic services of independently practicing psychologists is based on reasonable charges. Payment may be made directly to the psychologist upon the beneficiary's assignment of payment to him, or the psychologist may bill the beneficiary who then may seek payment from Medicare. Therapeutic services performed by an independently practicing psychologist are not covered.

This current procedure places the psychologist in a position dependent on the supervision of a physician for any service he performs and fails to recognize the major contributions made by psychologists to the provision of mental health care. It also fails to recognize the professionalism of the psychologist and the very high standards of training and practice imposed by the Code of Ethics of the American Psychological Association.

THE ROLE OF THE PSYCHOLOGIST

During the past 25 years, psychology has taken steady and constructive steps to become an independent profession which works closely with, but not under the supervision of, other professions. Standards for graduate educational programs have been set and programs are evaluated for accreditation by the American Psychological Association which is the recognized national accrediting agency. These graduate programs include a year of clinical psychological work in an institution which also is required to meet standards for accreditation established by the APA. The APA has also developed and published a code of ethics governing relations with patients, clients, colleagues, and members of other professions. Violations of the code are grounds for suspension or expulsion from the APA. Close collaboration with other health professions is stated as official APA policy. The APA has also promoted certification and licensing laws for regulation of psychological practice in 46 States and the District of Columbia.

These activities have borne fruit. Recognition of the psychologist as an independent practitioner by insurance companies and by CHAMPUS as well as their licensing and certification in almost all the States is evidence of the status they have achieved as independent mental health professionals. Psychologists serve as superintendents of State mental hospitals, directors of Veterans' Administration mental hygiene clinics, and directors of community mental health centers.

The clinical psychologist who has been licensed and certified has demonstrated his ability to provide high quality diagnostic and therapeutic services to patients. The psychologist also has specialized skills, such as psychodiagnostic testing, specialized treatment techniques such as behavior modification, and a social flexibility that allows him options that sometimes are not available elsewhere. Clinical psychologists have contributed much of the basic research and clinical experience in group psychotherapy and behavior modification.

It would appear that medicare provisions are not in step with the rest of the Nation in not recognizing the psychologist as a practitioner in his own right, but rather requiring him to practice under a physician's plan of treatment.

I recognize the diligence and the intensive examination which the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and the other members of the Finance Committee have devoted to the study of H.R. 1 and of this issue. I was delighted to note that the committee has removed the limitation which required organized settings which provided clinical psychologist services, to be physician directed. This is an important step toward alleviating the severe physician shortage and toward recognizing the competence of professionals other than physicians. However, the committee has not lifted the requirement that services would have to be provided in an organized setting, or, if on an outpatient basis, would have to be provided under a plan of care and treatment established by a physician.

For that reason, I do not believe the Finance Committee's recommendation goes far enough. I do concur with the view that as a matter of policy, a physician should be involved whenever a psychologist provides care in order to insure that the patient's problem is not of a medical/physical nature. But I do not believe that the psychologist's care should be under the physician's direction or control.

I personally would like to see all health care provided in an organized setting, and I think it is interesting to note that currently some 80 percent of psychologists are practicing within an organized setting. This is obviously the preferred mode of practice for psychologists.

I believe an organized setting will foster the use of the team approach to the provision of health care and will result in the greatest utilization of the special skills of each health care member of the team. I believe the patient benefits in receiving total health care, both preventive and therapeutic, at one location, and that the health care personnel who provide for the patient can provide better care by being closely associated with others who are also providing care for the same patient and are in a position to advise each other of relevant factors in treating the patient.

However, the need for mental health services under medicare is great. By severly narrowing the full utilization of the psychologists skills by requiring a physician to supervise treatment, medicare provisions create a heavy burden upon the physician whose skills are already greatly in demand and where there has been a serious shortage of manpower for many years. As a member of the Subcommittee on Health of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee, and as chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Hospitals of the Veterans' Affairs Committee, I have continually urged that statutory incentives be included in legislation developed by those committees to encourage the development of new types of health personnel and to expand the roles of existing personnel so that the skills of the highly trained scarce professionals will not be underutilized in tasks which could be handled by those who had had specialized training to perform such tasks.

Mr. President, I think it very significant that I have consulted with some very comment physicians including psychiatrists, on this question and have received substantial support for this amendment.

I believe the amendment I have cosponsored will serve to further the more effective use of health manpower skills and at the same time recognize the role the psychologist has earned as an independent practitioner.

I urge the Members of the Senate to support this change in H.R. 1's provisions.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, this section of our amendments would require the Secretary of HEW to add to the series of demonstration projects he is required to develop, one which would provide much-needed psychiatric assistance to patients in nursing homes and in other long-term care facilities. This new demonstration project would better enable our long-term care facilities to meet a crying medical need for the elderly, the need for adequate psychiatric care and treatment in nursing homes and on other long-term health care facilities.

There is a severe misunderstanding of the emotional problems of senior citizens. Myths abound, such as: "Senility is a natural stage for the aged" and "emotional disorders of the elderly do not respond to treatment."

Mr. President, it is long past time that the American people and the Federal facilities which serve them reject useless and counterproductive myths such as these.

The overriding questions which remain unanswered properly with regard to long-term care facilities are: What kinds of care and services are required for people who need psychiatric assistance? What kind of facilities will best serve their needs?

This amendment will provide us with the opportunity to answer constructively and effectively those questions.

Many States are emptying their State mental hospitals first of geriatric patients and later of younger patients.

It is argued that these patients are being "returned to the community." In reality, most are being returned to nursing homes. While some persons claim that the elderly who are discharged unconditionally are so discharged for humanitarian reasons, persuasive argument can be offered that the real reason is cost. For example, I have learned that it costs the State of Illinois $550 per patient per month to keep an individual in a State hospital while that same patient can be placed in a nursing home for $230 per month.

Unfortunately, however, the people so discharged are frequently better off in the State hospital than in the nursing home. The staffs of nursing homes are often untrained in the problems of mental health and cannot cope adequately with the problems of the infirmed elderly and the addition of mental patients creates an intolerable burden.

The mental health needs of the infirmed elderly can be demonstrated in a variety of other ways, Mr. President. Suffice it to say at this point that their needs appear to be desperate. Sometimes old houses or hotels are used to house geriatric patients from State hospitals. These facilities need not meet any Federal or State standards—and recent scandalous fires in some of them have demonstrated poignantly the urgency and severity of the matter. And to the extent that the results are in with regard to the community mental health center concept, it is evident that those centers do not serve the needs of the elderly. Regardless of their general merit, only 4 percent of the 250,000 admissions to the community mental health centers in 1969 were over 65.

Mr. President, at least as demonstration projects, I believe very deeply that psychological facilities must be explored further. I urge my colleagues to accept this new demonstration section of H.R. 1.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE). The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) would vote "yea."

Mr. SCOTT. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN) is detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 57, as follows:

So Mr. HARTKE's amendment was rejected.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I call up an amendment, which has been modified from the printed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with reading of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendments offered by Mr. Moss for himself Mr. PERCY and Mr. TUNNEY are as follows:

On page 294, line 21, strike out "and".

On page 295, line 11, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon and the following:

"(H) to establish an experimental program to provide day-care services, which consist of such personal care, supervision, and services as the Secretary shall by regulation prescribe, for individuals eligible to enroll in the supplemental medical insurance program established under part B of title XVIII and title 19 of the Social Security Act, in day-care centers which meet such standards as the Secretary shall by regulation establish.

"(I) to establish an experimental program of subsidization of families who agree to care for their dependents who are 65 years of age or older and who would otherwise require, because of physical and mental infirmities, the services of a skilled nursing facility, in their own homes, and to pay such subsidies directly, in the form of grants, to families who are determined (in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary) to be eligible for such subsidization.

"(J) to determine whether payments for psychological and psychiatric services to residents of skilled nursing facilities and intermediate care facilities (which are receiving payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act) are adequate and provide sufficient financial resources to meet the mental health needs of such residents and (upon a finding that such expenditures are inadequate) to recommend programs for adequate psychological and psychiatric assistance to such residents; and

"(K) to develop methods and programs designed to expedite and improve the rehabilitation of patients in skilled nursing facilities or other institutions for long-term health care; and to develop appropriate alternatives to institutional care (in skilled nursing facilities, intermediate care facilities, or similar facilities for long-term health care) for patients in need of rehabilitation or long-term health care (including, but not limited to, the use of day-care, night-care, or full-time care centers, and the use of voluntary cooperative centers which are organized for the care of patients by their relatives).'

Beginning on page 342, strike out lines 3 through 6 and insert in lieu thereof:

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) and any regulations adopted pursuant to such amendment shall apply with respect to plans of care initiated on or after January 1, 1973, and with respect to admission to extended care facilities and home health plans initiated on or after such date.

Beginning on page 393, line 3, insert "(including an institution located on an Indian reservation within such State)" after "institution".

On page 393, line 8, insert before the period the following: ", and to the extent that the Secretary finds it necessary, he may certify, that an institution located on an Indian reservation within such State qualifies as a skilled nursing facilities".

On page 393, line 11, insert "(or by him)" after "him".

At the end of title II of the bill, insert the following new section:

CERTIFICATION OF INTERMEDIATE CARE FACILITIES LOCATED ON AN INDIAN RESERVATION

SEC. —. Section 1905(c) of the Social Security Act, as added by Public Law 92-223, is amended by adding after the penultimate sentence thereof the following:

"The term 'intermediate care facility' also includes any institution which is located on an Indian reservation within the physical boundaries of a State and is certified by the Secretary as meeting the requirements of clauses (2) and (3) of this subsection and providing the care and services required under clause (1)."

Beginning on page 500, line 3, insert "AND COSTS OF OPERATION OF" after "OF".

On page 500, line 13, strike out "paragraph:" and insert in lieu thereof "paragraphs:".

On page 500, line 11, strike out "'; and'; and" and insert in lieu thereof "a semicolon; and".

On page 501, line 2, strike out the period and insert in lieu thereof "; and".

Beginning on page 373, line 16, strike out "extended care" and insert in lieu thereof "skilled nursing".

On page 387, line 6, strike out "(14); and" insert in lieu thereof "(16);".

On page 387, line 11, beginning with "having" strike out through "facility," on line 13, and insert in lieu thereof "who has any direct or indirect ownership interest of one percent or more in such skilled nursing facility or who is the owner (in whole or in part) of any mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other obligation secured (in whole or in part) by such skilled nursing facility or any of the property or assets of such skilled nursing facility".

On page 388, line 15, strike out "and,".

On page 388, between lines 15 and 16, insert the following new paragraph:

"(14) Unless otherwise submitted in accordance with requirements under the Social Security Act, submit, not later than 120 days after the close of any fiscal year of such skilled nursing facility, effective with respect to accounting periods beginning on or after December 31, 1972, to the Secretary a full and complete certified report disclosing all costs incurred for such fiscal year by such skilled nursing facility; and";

(4) by adding at the end of paragraph (16) (as redesignated by paragraph (3) of this subsection) the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all information concerning skilled nursing facilities required by this subsection to be filed with the Secretary shall be made available to Federal or State employees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under titles 18 and 19 of this Act.".

On page 501, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following new paragraph:

(37) Unless otherwise submitted in accordance with requirements under the Social Security Act, effective with accounting periods beginning on or after December 31, 1972, provide (A) that any intermediate care facility receiving payments under such plan must submit, not later than 120 days after the close of any fiscal year of such intermediate care facility, to the State agency a full and complete certified report disclosing all costs incurred for such fiscal year by such intermediate care facility, and (B) that all information concerning an intermediate care facility receiving payments under such plan which is required to be filed with the State agency shall be made available to Federal or State employees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under titles 18 and 19 of this Act.

Beginning on page 523, line 25, add the following new section:

GRANT PROGRAM FOR TRAINING OF NURSES' AIDES AND ORDERLIES

SEC. 299 G (a) The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare is authorized to make grants to public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, and organizations to assist them in conducting (or establishing and conducting) programs for the training of staff members or nursing homes and for training and retraining of personnel as nurses' aides or orderlies for nursing homes, with special emphasis on in-service training. The Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall enter into arrangements with the Secretary of Labor designed to assure that participants in the work incentive program (established by part C of title IV of the Social Security Act) who desire to work in nursing homes will be encouraged to participate in programs receiving financial assistance through grants made under the preceding sentence.

(b) For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, and $5,000,000 for each of the next three fiscal years.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MOSS. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we propose to agree to the Senator's amendment, so I hope he will be brief, so the Senate can move to the next one.

Mr. MOSS. I assure the Senator that I intend to be very brief. The Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) has some brief remarks to make, and that is all it will amount to.

First of all, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) be shown as a cosponsor of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments, which are contained in one document, be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Long-Term Care of the U.S. Senate Special Committee on Aging, I have conducted 20 hearings on nursing home problems in the last 3 years. Although our report to the Congress based on these hearings is not yet complete there are several recommendations which I intend to offer today as amendments to H.R. 1. I am pleased to have joining with me the distinguished Senators from Illinois, Mr. PERCY and from California, Mr. TUNNEY, who have their own amendments included with mine in this omnibus package.

The purpose of this amendment is to patch up loopholes in the existing law, to test new and important approaches to the problems of long-term care, to prohibit retroactive denials, provide training for nursing home personnel, and to make it possible for nursing homes on Indian reservations to participate in medicare and medicaid. The staff of the Senate Committee on Finance is familiar with these amendments which I believe are noncontroversial.

Taking up my amendments in the order in which they appear in the bill, my first amendment relates to section 222 of the bill with other demonstration projects funded from the Federal hospital insurance trust fund and the Federal supplementary medical insurance trust fund. My first proposal would provide authority for an experimental program of day care for senior citizens under such regulations as the Secretary shall prescribe.

Day care for senior citizens is not a new idea, it was proposed repeatedly by advocates of the elderly at our hearings. I believe that an effective day care program for senior citizens would provide a less expensive alternative to institutionalization.

More and more we are finding that working families are unable to care for their elderly loved ones. Working family members are fearful of leaving their elders in the house alone by day particularly if the seniors are frail or slightly feeble. The fear that seniors may cause harm to themselves if left alone and the lack of suitable alternatives has caused much anxiety and in some cases early institutionalization.

It is very clear to me that a day care center for older Americans is a suitable answer to this problem. The working family could leave their loved one in a protective environment by day and return them home after working hours to share dinner and the events of the evening with the family.

Most importantly for those who are budget conscious, the day care program would save money as well as prevent premature or unnecessary institutionalization. I am told that day care can be provided for about $3 a day as compared with nursing home care which ranges from $10 to $30 a day.

I had originally proposed the day care concept in the form of S. 3267 which would have been available to all medicare beneficiaries but I believe this concept has to be tested before we enact it on a wider basis. In the interim I hope to be able to study the British "day-hospital" system.

My second amendment authorizes a demonstration project to subsidize the families to care for their elderly in their own homes. This amendment is not intended to lessen the responsibility of family members for their elders. However it is a concept that is being tried by several of our States once again to prohibit early or unnecessary institutionalization.

A program such as would be authorized by this amendment would allow some of the very poor members of society to help maintain their elders in their own homes. This amendment received wide support in our recent hearings on the access of minority groups to nursing homes. At those hearings we learned that nursing homes are an anathema to some minority groups—notably Mexican Americans. Among these minority groups there is a long tradition of caring for parents in the home. Pride and tradition require that the elderly be maintained by the younger family members.

Most of these minority group members rank with the poorest members in our society. Because of language barriers, we were told they found medicaid of limited use—and once again medicaid would only provide care in a nursing home.

It is for these reasons that I ask for this demonstration project. I believe that it is time that the Government took into account the social and cultural differences of our people. I hope this approach can be tested for its feasibility to benefit the low income elderly.

Two more demonstration projects are contained in this omnibus amendment, one to help determine appropriate psychological and psychiatric assistance to the residents of nursing homes, residents to which Senator TUNNEY will speak and another which offers a new approach to rehabilitation which was introduced by Senator PERCY.

My third amendment is an effort to prohibit the onerous practice of "retroactive denials" which describes the situation where new rules are announced for participants in the medicare program in 1972 and are given retroactive effect so that claims paid in 1971 are reevaluated with nursing home providors being required to pay back sums now deemed to have been improvidently granted.

The committee's proposal in section 228 is an effort to prohibit the uncertainty of medicare nursing home coverage by authorizing the Secretary to establish presumptive periods of care. Under this proposal, for example, an individual with a broken hip or other ailment would be "presumed" to be eligible for a certain number of days in a medicare nursing home.

The committee's proposal is only a partial answer to the problem. My amendment would require that all new regulations for the medicare nursing home program to have prospective and not retroactive effect.

My fourth amendment relates to the inability of Indian tribes to provide nursing home care for their needy elders. There are several Indian tribes which would like to provide nursing home care for their people. One facility has been built in Arizona and others have been proposed in New Mexico and in my native State of Utah. In every case there is one insurmountable obstacle. Because Indian reservations are Federal enclaves, States have not been willing to license nursing homes on such reservations. Since State inspectors also certify nursing homes for purposes of medicare and medicaid, inability to get a State license has meant they have been barred from participating in medicare and medicaid.

My amendment addresses this problem and the failure of other agencies to consider the needs of the Indian elderly. It would allow the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to certify nursing homes meeting appropriate standards to participate in medicare and medicaid as skilled nursing homes and as intermediate facilities.

I have no firm cost estimates for this amendment but I do not believe the cost will be substantial given the comparatively limited number of Indian elderly. However, those tribes that seek assistance in providing nursing home care under medicaid or medicare should be assisted.

My fifth amendment is intended to clarify one of the so-called Moss amendments of 1967. My amendments to the Social Security Act of 1967 had the intention of arising nursing home standards and constitute the law upon which HEW is relying for its recent enforcement effort. One of these amendments required anyone with a 10-percent interest or greater in a nursing home to file and disclose such interest with the State.

In recent hearings by my subcommittee it was discovered that nursing home operators were using a variety of techniques to avoid the disclosure requirement. It became impossible for us to find out from disclosure lists submitted to the State the true identity of nursing home owners. Using other records such as corporate directories and State land efforts, my subcomimttee learned that a small group of individuals controlled an incredible number of nursing home beds. This conclusion was verified in several States. The public has a right to know who owns these facilities but the information is curerntly disguised. One technique is to list a 9-percent interest in the name of each of one's children, another is to establish two corporations, one to run the facility and another holding the land in trust.

The Governor's commission on nursing home problems in Maryland recently learned to their chagrin that it was impossible to tell who owned the State's nursing homes. They called for the enactment of my bill S. 2927 which I now propose in amendment form. It also has the support of HEW.

My bill would require that any ownership interest direct or indirect in a nursing home over 1 percent be disclosed to the State including that of an owner—in whole or in part—of any mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other obligation secured—in whole or in part—by the nursing home or any property or assets of such facility.

This information would be made available to appropriate Federal and State employees including members of congressional committees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under titles 18 and 19 of the law. By action of the Finance Committee in the present bill such data would be required to be filed with the State by owners of intermediate care facilities.

Another part of this same amendment requires that owners of titles 18 and 19 skilled nursing homes file certified financial statements with the Secretary. Almost 90 percent of the nursing facilities in this country are organized for profit. Studies by my subcommittee indicate a lack of accountability. After paying nursing home operators their flat fee under medicaid most States make no effort to ascertain how the money is being used. This allows each individual operator to allocate as much to patient care as he so desires and as much as he pleases to profit.

Even with generally inadequate reimbursement rates some nursing home operators, paradoxically, have been able to make high profits. One operator in Chicago made $185,000 profit on a medicaid income of $400,000 yearly, while spending only 52 cents per patient per day for food.

Other indications such as the Connecticut study which showed an average 44 percent return on investment for the States nursing homes, caused our committee to look further into this question. The committee discovered great reluctance on the part of nursing home administrators to disclose their financial data. Despite several letters over a 6-month period only 20 of 75 nursing homes returned a questionnaire relating to their cost and financial data to help the committee with its inquiry.

Since the taxpayer contributes more than $2 out of every $3 in nursing home revenues the Government has a vested right to this information. Once again this information would be made available to Federal employees for purposes consistent with the effective administration of programs established under titles 18 and 19.

The last amendment in this omnibus package provides training for nurses' aides and orderlies and has been introduced by Senator PERCY. I support this measure as well as the other proposals in this package. This amendment is similar to my bill, S. 3556 which I feel is greatly needed to combat one of the major problems in the field of long-term care—the reliance on untrained personnel. Nursing home personnel are for the most part hired literally off the street and paid the minimum wage. It is difficult work and I can understand why there is a turnover rate of 75 percent among nurses' aides. I urge the adoption of all of the amendments in this package.

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator Moss in calling up amendment 1685 to H.R. 1. This legislation, similar to a bill I introduced last February, would establish pilot projects designed to generate alternatives to long-term, institutionalized nursing home care and provide subsidies for families who care for their aged and infirm relatives in their own homes.

This legislation would also establish a grant program for the training of nurse's aides and orderlies for nursing homes.

Over the next 4 years $17.5 million would be authorized for these grants.

Mr. President, in the long time that I have been working in the field of long-term care, my committee has conducted 20 hearings on nursing home problems in the last 3 years. These problems can appropriately be dealt with in this bill, which has to do with medicare and medicaid, and nearly all of our elderly citizens are financed in that way for their care in nursing homes.

Therefore, I strongly urge that these amendments be adopted at this time.

We must begin to look at our entire system in light of increasing evidence that the care provided for our elderly citizens is inadequate, demeaning to human dignity, and a waste of tax dollars.

Nursing homes as they are operated today are a self-perpetrating system that assures that the elderly will have a chronic need for chronic health care. Our extended care institutions all too often reduce our elderly citizens to a state of permanent dependence on the institution, rather than providing varying levels and types of care and services that would encourage the elderly to remain a part of their community.

At least 15 to 20 percent of those elderly citizens presently institutionalized are absolutely misplaced according to the Levinson Gerontological Policy Institute of Brandeis University. In Massachusetts, for example, where intensive studies of nursing home disability evaluations have been made, it was found that only 37 percent of the nursing home residents in the State require full-time skilled nursing care. Fourteen percent needed no institutional care whatsoever for medical reasons. Another 26 percent required minimal supervised living, and 23 percent needed limited or periodic nursing care that might, for some, be provided on a home visit basis.

Approximately, $2 billion is expanded annually for nursing home care, one-fourth to one-half of which is now spent for patients who do not, medically, need such care. A more flexible use of funds now narrowly channeled into traditional nursing home settings would encourage the development of more imaginative and innovative forms of care for the elderly.

Our proposal authorizes a series of pilot projects to explore new methods of providing care for the elderly. The purpose of these demonstration programs would be to generate alternatives to long-term, institutionalized nursing home care. Such programs would include maintenance and care services provided in noninstitutional, neighborhood settings; increased use of home health and maintenance care; continuing care at various stages of illness through a coordinated program utilizing acute care hospital facilities, extended care facilities, "day" hospital services and home care; and ongoing community responsibility and involvement in such programs.

These pilot projects would provide field testing of differing solutions in varied demographic and health care delivery areas. Other issues to be explored in field tests would include the administrative issues involved in setting up innovative personal care organizations, definition of the optimal population to be covered, testing of alternate quality control measures, analysis of manpower alternatives, and measurement of cost levels.

The costs of providing adequate care for the elderly are rising dramatically. We cannot continue to waste and misallocate the limited resources we have to devote to this problem. More effective programs must be developed. Working with such programs in action is the only way this can be done.

This proposal would also establish an experimental program of subsidization of families who agree to care for their dependents who are 65 years of age who would otherwise require, because of physical and mental infirmities, the services of a skilled nursing facility, in their own homes.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I rise in support of the pending amendment, which I cosponsor. This comprehensive nursing home package incorporates two of my nursing home amendments.

The first would authorize $17.5 million in Federal grants to public or nonprofit private agencies, institutions, and organizations, to assist them in establishing special training programs for nurses aides and orderlies in nursing homes. The amendment stresses the importance of inservice training, which is generally regarded as highly desirable by health professionals. The grants shall be administered by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, who shall have the option of carrying out training programs under the auspices of either the Health Services and Mental Health Administration or the Bureau of Health Manpower Education, which forms part of the National Institutes of Health.

The $17.5 million authorized under this amendment shall be allocated in the following way: $2.5 million in fiscal year 1973, and $5 million in each of the next 3 fiscal years.

The need for this legislation became apparent during a series of hearings on nursing homes conducted by the Subcommittee on Long-Term Care of the Senate Special Committee on Aging. The subcommittee found one of the major problems to be a lack of qualified, trained nurses' aides and orderlies. In hearing after hearing, witnesses impressed upon the subcommittee the importance of these personnel, and their current lack of adequate training.

It is unfortunate that the nursing home personnel who work most closely and directly with the patients bring the least to their jobs in terms of qualifications and training. Aides and orderlies typically have no more than a high school education, and they lack specialized skills. Reports of patient abuse on the part of these personnel are commonplace.

The pay of aides and orderlies is low. In 1970, the average wage was $1.53 an hour. It has not risen much since.

The pay is low and the work is hard. Aides and orderlies must lift, bathe, feed, and console patients who are depressed, lonely, and often demanding.

There is little glamor in this line of work. Nursing homes rank low in prestige as health care institutions, and aides and orderlies fall at the bottom of the health care personnel hierarchy.

The low pay, hard work, and lack of job prestige combine to create a high turnover rate. The turnover rate for employees in the nursing home field as a whole is high—60 percent a year; for aides and orderlies, it is even higher, 75 percent.

With these conditions, it is little wonder that nursing homes cannot or do not attract good help. This is why it is possible, as the Chicago Tribune has reported, for a person to walk into a nursing home with no experience or training whatever, give phoney character references, and find himself working as an aide or orderly within hours, dispensing drugs—about which he knows nothing—and ministering to chronically and gravely ill patients. One home was found hiring its aides through a Chicago skid row hotel, where a maid received kickbacks for sending new employees to the home. This is why individuals so lacking in education and skills as to be unable to find employment elsewhere end up working as aides and orderlies in nursing homes.

In theory, all nursing homes train their aides and orderlies. In fact, although some homes do provide excellent training, many make not the slightest pretense of doing so. This is true despite the fact that, as one study explained—

> The difference between a competent and an incompetent aide can mean everything in terms of a patient's adjustment to the nursing home. The intimate and daily nature of the aide's contact with patients makes it inevitable that he or she will have a tremendous effect on the mental and emotional health and, directly or indirectly, on their physical health as well.

The importance of teaching aides how to handle patients properly cannot be overstated, and yet training programs in this area are virtually nonexistent. The Department of Labor trains aides and orderlies, but it trains the bulk of them for hospitals, not nursing homes. Other agencies operate health manpower training programs, but not for nursing home aides and orderlies.

Perhaps the program which comes closest to doing this job is the one initiated recently by President Nixon as part of his eight-point program on nursing homes. One of his proposals authorizes funds for the short-term training of approximately 20,000 nursing home personnel. I am pleased with this initiative on the part of the administration, but it must be recognized that even this program aims primarily at the higher echelon employees—physicians, nurses, administrators, and activity directors—rather than at the aides and orderlies.

Unless we undertake to upgrade the skills of the 215,000 aides and orderlies who work in nursing homes, patients will continue to suffer from inadequate and improper treatment.

In the State of Illinois, there is a modest effort now underway to upgrade the skills of these personnel. That effort goes by the name of the Rehabilitation Education Service—RES—a free service to nursing homes desiring it, and a program which has been in operation now for 14 years.

Because of limited funds, the State is able to provide only two RES teams, who must cover the whole State. Many homes, therefore, do without this service.

It is in the interest of encouraging such ongoing programs to expand, and establishing new programs to upgrade the skills of nurses aides and orderlies in nursing homes, that I offer my amendment.

Mr. President, I am certain my colleagues are well aware of the urgent need to improve nursing home conditions in this country. Anyone who has actually gone into the homes to visit patients can only view this as a matter of the highest priority.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment offers us an excellent opportunity to bring about an improvement in the quality of care given to the old and chronically ill persons who now reside in nursing homes, and I urge its adoption.

Let me now comment on a second amendment of mine that was incorporated into this package.

The need for more rehabilitation programs for elderly nursing home patients became apparent during the hearings on nursing homes held in Chicago in April and September of last year by the Subcommittee on Long-Term Care of the Senate Special Committee on Aging.

We found in those hearings that few efforts are being undertaken to rehabilitate nursing hom patients. More often than not, patients enter nursing homes where bona fide rehabilitation programs are nonexistent. Or if they do exist, they consist of little more than bingo games and TV watching. Few opportunities for social and physical activity exist. A scene found all to frequently in nursing homes across the country was vividly portrayed in one of the Chicago Tribune's articles on this subject:

They (nursing home patients) sit in rooms where the paint is peeling from the walls and the windows are covered with grime and they stare.

Conditions vary, of course, but there is substantial evidence to warrant fear that this dismal atmosphere prevails in too many homes.

Entry into a nursing home is invariably a traumatic experience. One of the major reasons the experience is so traumatic is that the patients cannot look forward to being rehabilitated or to recovering from their illnesses. Thus, patients sometimes equate entering a nursing home with walking into a "waiting room to die." If rehabilitation programs were more common and more promising, then nursing home patients could look forward to recovering from their illnesses, and the experience of entering a home could become considerably less traumatic.

It is commonly assumed that if a person is so ill as to necessitate nursing home care, then there can be little hope for ever making him self-sufficient and independent. Unfortunately, it is frequently the patient's attitude toward himself—and most especially that of others toward him—more than his physical condition, which causes his condition to deteriorate. A patient's overpowering sense of uselessness and lack of self-confidence, rather than his physical condition per se, might cause the deterioration in his overall physical and emotional status.

To illustrate what can happen when rehabilitation efforts are undertaken, let me relate a story told to me by the world renowned psychologist, Dr. Karl Menninger, at the hearing held in Chicago last September.

The story concerns 88 aged patients who had been diagnosed as hopelessly senile and psychotic, and placed in a geriatric award at the Topeka State Hospital in Kansas. The patients had been vegetating in the gloomy ward for about 10 years—and one of the patients had been there for 58 years. The situation changed dramatically, however, with the arrival of a young doctor and his team of aides. They transformed the cheerless atmosphere of the ward into one of hope and raised spirits. They did this by bringing in such things as music, television, bird cages, and potted plants. The doctor set up a social program, and the patients responded by beginning to paint and sand furniture, and to work with leather and play bingo. A measure of the patients' improved spirits was found in their construction of a ramp over a difficult flight of stairs, and in the painting of a shuffleboard court on the floor.

Three weeks following the initiation of this program, one patient was discharged and sent home to live with his relatives. A year later, only nine patients were still bedridden, and only six were incontinent. Twelve more returned to live with their families, six left the ward to live by themselves, and four found comfortable nursing home provisions.

Mr. President, this proposal is a very simple one which would not cost a great deal of money. The Secretary of HEW would merely be authorized, in addition to testing the concepts already listed under section 222 of the bill, to develop or demonstrate programs intended to rehabilitate or remotivate elderly nursing home patients. This proposal does not call for specific authorizations, but rather, it gives the Secretary flexibility in determining appropriate amounts. I believe we could learn a great deal by testing new concepts in this field, and that we might even discover ways to decrease Federal expenditures through developing alternatives to long-term care. I urge adoption of this provision in the comprehensive nursing home amendment as one promising way to better the lives of the elderly.

I urge acceptance of these amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the manager of the bill favors the amendments. I hope the Senate will agree to them.

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, I would like to compliment the staff and the members of the Senate Finance Committee for their constructive work. H.R. 1 contains many long needed reforms including the consolidation of medicare and medicaid standards. It makes sense that there be only one set of Federal standards with which nursing homes have to comply.

It is also important that H.R. 1 incorporates cost related reimbursement as the Federal standard. For too long nursing homes have suffered with inadequate rates. If we continue to insist on higher standards then we must pay for them.

There are many other improvements contained in H.R. 1. Again I compliment those involved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Utah.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 581, line 22, before the word "unable" insert "18 years of age or older and"

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this amendment is necessary to correct an obvious and manifest error in the bill. The committee report correctly reflects the committee's intention. Unfortunately, the bill fails to correctly include the words referred to in the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Louisiana.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota is recognized.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I realize that, based on the order in which we requested to be recognized, I am next. I would like to yield the floor to the Senator from Wisconsin, who has been waiting to propose an amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think it is about time we followed the rules of the Senate, or changed them. There is no rule that I know of that says the Chair should recognize someone who has put his name on a list at the Chair. The rules are that the Chair recognizes the first person who rises and asks for recognition. I would suggest to the leadership that after all this foolishness all day long, we ought to abolish that list up there and follow the rules.

This has been a charade all day long. I stood here for an hour and a half today, canceled a luncheon appointment, but because I was not on the list, a Senator comes in and he is here 30 seconds and gets recognition.

If that is to be the rule, I am coming over at 9 o'clock every morning and put my name on the list every day, then I will be entitled to walk in when someone else has been waiting 2 hours, and get recognition.

Mr. President, this is sheer nonsense, contrary to the rules and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Without relinquishing my right to the floor.

Mr. MONDALE. I agree completely with the Senator from Wisconsin. I was a victim of the same sort of circumstances, and I learned the hard way. Yesterday I stood here as a gentleman for 4 hours, watching people get recognized in front of me, and then I yielded, to be a gentleman, and I got the floor back in an hour and 45 minutes, on a noncontroversial amendment. So I could not agree with the Senator more. And I thought, in the light of my predictament yesterday, the lateness of the hour, and my admiration for the Senator from Wisconsin, this was the best way to do it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON). The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized. Does he desire to offer an amendment?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I would like to have the attention of the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee in order to propound to him a couple of questions.

For the benefit of the Senators who are here, I shall try to be as brief as possible. I intend to ask for a rollcall on two amendments. The purpose of the two amendments I am going to offer is to raise the money to pay for some of the additional cost of the increased social security benefits in H.R. 1.

The reason I do that is that these are not really wage-related benefits. Over the years, for 30 years, the Advisory Council on Social Security from time to time has suggested that when people who are retired receive substantial benefits of the kind that are included in H.R. 1, we should not tax the current employer and the employee to pay for those benefits.

I am offering two amendments. Both have been considered here before. One is to raise the minimum tax to one-half of the normal tax rate on income that is not subjected to any tax. The other one is to repeal the ADR.

These two proposals together would raise about $42 billion between now and 1980, and would pay almost all of the increased cost required by the provisions of H.R. 1.

I would suggest that everyone, before he votes, ought to take a look at the chart that tells what kind of a tax the 20 percent increase and the additions in H.R. 1 are going to impose upon the workers in this country.

I call attention to one example: The man who is making $12,000 a year is going to have his social security tax increased by 54 percent by 1974. In fact, if you count the total increase since 1971 it totals 75 percent.

Now the worker in the $12,000 wage bracket is not only going to have his tax increased 54 percent, but let me spell it out to you in dollars and percent. His tax is going to be increased $252 between now, today, and 1974, a year and a half from now. That is $21 a month. So when we get through passing this bill, if we are going to load the cost of all these benefits on the current worker and employer we are going to get a tax revolt from the overtaxed worker and employer. These increased benefits are needed and justified but they ought to come out of general funds. For the taxpayer who earns $12,000, it means we are going to raise his taxes $21 a month in a year and a half.

I do not know of anyone in this country with a $12,000 income who has very much money left over if he has a family to support, and when he sees that we have taxed him $21 a month, he is going to be justifiably outraged, and we are going to get a revolt against it. We are asking him and his employer to pay for an increase which ought to come out of the general fund.

I shall speak on that a little further in a moment, but I would like to have a brief colloquy with the distinguished chairman of the committee, the Senator from Louisiana, for the purpose of clarification. I think he is familiar with this. I will go through it very quickly.

It is my understanding that the Senate Finance Committee's provision covering HMO eligibility for medicare requires that prepaid group plans: First, have been in operation for at least 2 years; and second, have a minimum of 25,000 enrollees, not more than one-half of whom are age 65 or over. Exceptions may be made for HMO's in smaller and rural communities: these must have demonstrated, through at least 3 years of successful operation, that they have the capacity to provide health care services of proper quality on a prepaid basis, and have at least 5,000 members. Is that correct?

Mr. LONG. That is correct.

Mr. NELSON. The greater Marshfield Health Plan, in Marshfield, Wis., has been in operation as an HMO for more than 1 year, but the Marshfield Clinic and St. Joseph's Hospital have been providing quality health care in a rural town for more than 60 years, as a group practice with salared physicians. In addition, the Marshfield HMO plan has enrolled more than 13,500 persons in the prepaid plan. Does this mean that the Marshfield HMO would qualify for medicare eligibility under the exceptions provided in the Finance Committee's HMO provisions?

Mr. LONG. It is my understanding that they could and would qualify.

Mr. NELSON. Now I would like to propound another question to the chairman of the Finance Committee.

The Finance Committee authorized demonstration projects—in section 222—to determine an equitable reimbursement formula for medicare coverage of physicians' assistants services, performed independently of supervising doctors.

HEW, the AMA, and physician assistant organizations are now drawing up standards for training and certification of these personnel, in an effort to unify and define their role and qualifications.

While HEW on one hand is paying out money to train physicians' assistants, medicare, under existing law, cannot reimburse for their services unless they are performed in the immediate presence of a supervising doctor. This precludes coverage for such things as house calls and nursing home visits carried out by physicians' assistants.

There is a controversy over what medicare should pay for such services when performed by physicians' assistants. Doctors are concerned that the reimbursement levels cover the expenses of hiring these paramedical personnel. Others are concerned that doctors will use paramedics to increase doctors' income but cut down doctors' services.

Is it the Finance Committee's intention to request HEW to conduct a wide variety of studies on physician assistant reimbursement levels, ranging from fee-for-service downward, in order to determine what reimbursement levels cover the costs of the employing physicians' assistants, while at the same time, encouraging use of this new manpower resource?

Mr. LONG. More or less, yes. Yes, it is correct.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this amendment eliminates the 20-percent copayment required of those who receive home health care under medicare part B.

Under medicare part A, those receiving home health care, after hospitalization, pay no coinsurance. This amendment would make home health care coverage under medicare consistent for both parts A and B. It is inconsistent to require copayment for the same service that a beneficiary receives at 100-percent coverage under part A.

More importantly, it is one step toward encouraging home health usage instead of more costly institutionalized care.

The Finance Committee has taken another small step toward that end, by authorizing demonstration projects to determine whether the 3-day hospitalization requirement prior to part A eligibility is necessary.

Home health care visits average about $25 a visit. The copayment of $5 per visit for long-term home health care can be a financial burden to many elderly persons living on marginal incomes. In addition, since the same care is covered 100 percent under part A medicare, there is an incentive by the physician to order costly hospitalization under part A, in order to ensure that his patient does not have to pay the coinsurance.

In her study on "Home Health Services in the United States," a report to the Senate Special Committee on Aging, Brahna Trager recommends:

> Changes in the system must be made which eliminate entry into home health services through an institutional bed in Part A and which will eliminate coinsurance payment for home health services in Part B.

She further reports:

> Utilization of home health services in the medicare insurance system has remained at less than 1 percent of insurance expenditures and appears to be diminishing. Institutional utilization and expenditures are increasing.

A medicare beneficiary will already have paid the $50 deductible required for part B eligibility.

The Bureau of Health Insurance in the Social Security Administration advises me that it approves of this amendment. They also advise that overhead costs of processing and billing for the individual copayments will be removed, at an administrative cost savings. Many of the copayments are never collected, and part B swallows the cost anyway, on top of the billing expense.

The cost of eliminating this copayment is estimated at $3 million by the Social Security Administration—a nominal sum for encouraging ambulatory, less costly, noninstitutional care.

Some 245,000 people received home health services under both medicare parts A and B in calendar year 1971. Total home health medicare costs for that year were $54,984,000, of which $15,824,000 was paid out for medicare part B coverage of home health care. Twenty percent of that figure is $3 million—the cost of this amendment.

The peer review provisions called for in H.R. 1 will insure that such home health services are medically necessary and monitored for quality and utilization.

Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the chairman of the Finance Committee is familiar with this amendment. I will explain it briefly and ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of title II of the bill, add the following new section:

ELIMINATION OF COINSURANCE PAYMENT WITH RESPECT TO HOME HEALTH SERVICES UNDER PART B OF MEDICARE

SEC. —. (a) Section 1833(a)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "80 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "with respect to home health services, 100 percent, and with respect to other services, 80 percent."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to services furnished by home health agencies in accounting periods beginning after December 31, 1972.

Mr. NELSON. As the Senator knows, there is a 20 percent copayment required for those who receive home health care under medicare part B. Charges for home health care are now as high as $25 for a nurse's visit.

On the other hand, if the doctor sends an eligible patient to the hospital for 3 days and then they come back home and have home health care, there is no required copayment.

This amendment would remove the required copayment for those under medicare part B. The result of this distinction is that frequently doctors feel they have to send their patient to the hospital in order to get the 3 days in, so that they will qualify for service without the copayment because they cannot afford it. That unnecessarily loads the hospital, and those who do not go are getting discriminatory treatment. The purpose of the amendment is to eliminate that discrimination.

I understand that the cost would be in the nature of $3 million a year. Is the Senator willing to accept the amendment?

Mr. LONG. I am willing to take it to conference. Personally, I think the Senator is right.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1609

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1609.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

TITLE VI—INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

SEC. 601. MINIMUM TAX FOR TAX PREFERENCES.

(a) Section 56 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to imposition of the minimum tax for tax preferences) is amended by redesignating subsections (b) and (c) as (d) and (e), respectively, and by striking out subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new subsections:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In addition to the other taxes imposed by this chapter, there is hereby imposed for each taxable year, with respect to the income of each person, a tax equal to the sum of—

"(1) the tax on such person's category I tax preference income (computed under subsection (b)), and

"(2) the tax on such person's category II tax preference income (computed under subsection (c)).

"(b) CATEGORY I TAX PREFERENCE TAX.—For purposes of subsection (a)(1), the tax on a person's category I tax preference income is 10 percent of the amount (if any) by which—

"(1) the sum of the items of tax preference set forth in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), and (10) of section 57(a) in excess of the category I exemption, is greater than

"(2) the sum of—

"(A) the taxes imposed by this chapter for the taxable year (computed without regard to this part and without regard to the taxes imposed by sections 531 and 541) reduced by the sum of the credits allowable under—

"(i) section 33 (relating to foreign tax credit),

"(ii) section 37 (relating to retirement income),

"(iii) section 38 (relating to investment credit),

"(iv) section 40 (relating to expenses of work incentive program), and

"(v) section 41 (relating to contributions to candidates for public office); and

"(B) the tax carryovers to the taxable year.

For purposes of this subsection, the category I exemption is $30,000 minus the amount of the category II exemption that the taxpayer elects to use.

"(c) CATEGORY II TAX PREFERENCE TAX.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2), the tax on a person's category II tax preference income is—

"(1) in the case of a corporation, 24 percent of the amount (if any) by which the sum of the items of tax preference set forth in paragraphs (6), (7), (8), and (9) of section 57(a) exceeds the taxpayer's category II exemption, and

"(2) in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation, a tax on the amount (if any) by which the sum of the items of tax preference set forth in paragraphs (6), (7), (8), and (9) of section 57(a) exceeds the taxpayer's category II exemption equal to one-half of the tax which would be imposed under section 1 by treating the amount of such excess as the taxable income for the taxable year.

For purposes of this subsection, the category II exemption is the amount, not exceeding $12,000, that the taxpayer elects (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate prescribes by regulations) to use for the taxable year."

(b) Section 56(d) of such Code, as redesignated by subsection (a) (relating to deferral of tax liability in case of certain net operating losses), is amended to read as follows:

"(d) DEFERRAL OF TAX LIABILITY IN CASE OF CERTAIN NET OPERATING LOSSES.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If for any taxable year a person—

"(A) has a net operating loss any portion of which (under section 172) remains as a net operating loss carryover to a succeeding taxable year, and

"(B) has items of tax preference taxable under subsection (b) or (c) for the taxable year, then an amount equal to the lesser of the tax imposed by subsection (a) or 10 percent (or such percent as may be determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) of the amount of the net operating loss carryover described in subparagraph (A) shall be treated as tax liability not imposed for the taxable year, but as imposed for the succeeding taxable year or years pursuant to paragraph (2).

"(2) YEAR OF LIABILITY.—In any taxable year in which any portion of the net operating loss carryover attributable to the items of tax preference described in paragraph (1)(B) reduces taxable income, the amount of tax liability described in paragraph (1) shall be treated as tax liability imposed in such taxable year in an amount equal to 10 percent (or such percent as may be determined under regulations prescribed by the Secretary or his delegate) of such reduction.

"(3) PRIORITY OF APPLICATION.—For purposes of paragraph (2), if any portion of the net operating loss carryover described in paragraph (1)(A) is not attributable to the items of tax preference described in paragraph (1)(B), such portion shall be considered as being applied in reducing taxable income before such other portion."

(c) Section 56(e) of such Code, as redesignated by subsection (a) (relating to tax carryovers) is amended—

(1) by striking out paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) the sum of the items of tax preference set forth in paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), and (10) of section 57(a) in excess of the category I exemption for the taxable year,"; and

(2) by striking out "subsection (a)" in the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof "subsection (b)".

(d) Section 58 of such Code (relating to rules for application of the minimum tax) is amended—

(1) by striking out "$30,000 amount specified in section 56 shall be $15,000" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000 and $12,000 amounts specified in section 56 shall be $16,000 and $6,000, respectively";

(2) by striking out "$30,000 amount" in subsections (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000 and $12,00 amounts";

(3) by striking "$30,000" in subsection (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$30,000 or $12,000, as the case may be,";

(4) by striking out subsection (g); and

(5) by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) ELECTION NOT TO CLAIM TAX PREFERENCES.—In the case of an item of tax preference which is a deduction from gross income, the taxpayer may elect to waive the deduction of all or part of such item, and the amount so waived shall not be taken into account for purposes of this part. In the case of an item of tax preference described in section 57(a)(9), the taxpayer may elect to treat all or part of any capital gain as gain from the sale or exchange of property which is neither a capital asset nor property described in section 1231, and the amount treated as such gain shall not be taken into account for purposes of this part. An election under this subsection shall be made only at such time and in such manner as is prescribed in regulations promulgated by the Secretary or his delegate, and the making of such elections shall constitute a consent to all terms and conditions as may be set forth in the regulations as to the effect of such election for purposes of this title."

(e) The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1971.

SEC. 602. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the rate of tax (in the tax schedules in section 1401(a), section 3101(a), and section 3111(a), of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) shall be reduced so as to cause the total revenues raised by such tax schedules to be reduced, for any calendar year (commencing with the calendar year beginning January 1, 1974), by an amount equal to the amount of the revenues which the Secretary of the Treasury determines, in the case of any calendar year, will be produced by reason of the application of the preceding amendments made by this title. The Secretary shall make the determination required by the preceding sentence, for any calendar year, not later than the close of the month of September of the year immediately preceding such calendar year.

(b) In addition to the moneys authorized by law to be appropriated, for any fiscal year, to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, and to the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to each of such funds, an amount equal to the revenues produced for such fiscal year by reason of the amendments made by the preceding sections of this title, apportioned between each of such funds in the same ratio as moneys appropriated thereto under title II of the Social Security Act.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I send to the desk a correcting amendment to amendment 1609.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be read.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the modification.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the modification be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the modification will be printed in the RECORD.

The modification is as follows:

Strike out line 21 of page 3 of amendment No. 1609 through line 15 of page 4 and substitute the following language:

"(c) CATEGORY II TAX PREFERENCE TAX.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2), the tax on a person's category II tax preference income is an amount equal to one-half of the tax which would be imposed under section 1 (in the case of a taxpayer other than a corporation) or section 11 (in the case of a corporation), computed as if the taxpayer's taxable income for the taxable year were the amount by which the sum of the items of tax preference set forth in paragraphs (6), (7), (8), and (9) of section 57 (a) exceeds the taxpayer's category II exemption. For purposes of this subsection, the category II exemption is the amount, not exceeding $12,000, that the taxpayer elects (at such time and in such manner as the Secretary or his delegate prescribes by regulations) to use for the taxable year."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the following Senators be added as cosponsors of the amendment: Senator BAYH, Senator CHURCH, Senator HARRIS, Senator MCINTYRE, and Senator CHILES.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as I stated previously, the purpose of these two amendments is to raise the funds to pay the benefits that have been added in H.R. 1. This amendment would raise the minimum tax.

The minimum tax levied in the 1969 act was 10 percent. I am talking about the minimum that we require to be paid on income which is sheltered or privileged, or whatever name one wishes to use. That is the income on which no taxes are paid whatever.

This amendment proposes to require that a minimum tax be paid at the rate of one-half of normal tax, one-half the rate that would be paid if it were received as salary. Moreover, we provide that there is a $12,000 deduction from this sheltered tax before any tax is imposed.

So, for example, if an individual has a salary of $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 or $30,000 or $40,000—it does not matter—he pays on his salary his normal tax with his allowed deductions.

Let us assume that one of the items involved in the privileged income is capital gains, and let us assume that he has a capital gains of $24,000 a year. Under my amendment to the minimum tax, there would be no change from the present law whatever, because we allow a $12,000 credit, or deduction, in the first instance. So he can have an income of $20,000, $30,000, or $40,000—whatever it may be—pay his normal tax, as everybody else does, on his salary or on the income which is not sheltered. He can receive a capital gain as high as $24,000, and he pays no increase in taxes under this minimum tax proposal.

However, as to any capital gains in excess of $24,000—let us say it was $10,000 more than that; let us say it was $34,000—what we would say to that last $10,000 is that he would pay a tax on the last $10,000 equivalent to one-half of what he would pay if it were received as ordinary income and he had no other income.

This provision would raise approximately $2 billion. I think that anybody who looks at this minimum tax will agree that it imposes a modest tax imposition. Therefore, I would hope that the Senate would agree to the amendment.

I yield the floor, for the time being.

FAIR FINANCING OF SOCIAL SECURITY

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I rise to support amendments 1609 and 1610 offered by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON).

The pending bill, H.R. 1, makes urgently needed improvements in our social security law—improvements which will help our retired and disabled citizens to live in dignity.

Among its most important provisions, the pending bill would:

Increase from $1,680 to $3,000 the amount an elderly person on social security can earn without losing social security benefits;

Increase a widow's benefits from the present 82½ percent of her husband's benefits to a full 100 percent;

Render disabled workers under 65 eligible for medicaid benefits;

Raise minimum social security benefits to $200 a month for low income workers who have been employed at least 30 years;

Extend medicare coverage to urgently needed prescription drugs—so-called "life prescription" drugs—for chronically ill elderly persons who are not hospitalized.

Mr. President, decency demands that we make adequate provision for elderly and disabled citizens. Their welfare should be the concern of all Americans.

But all Americans do not contribute on an equitable basis to our social security program, or to the increased benefits provided under the pending bill. Social security benefits are financed through an unfair and regressive payroll tax. A heavy and disproportionate share is borne by low and moderate income working families.

And the pending bill proposes to increase their burden by $6 billion a year.

The payroll tax is our most rapidly growing Federal tax. It has risen from 10 percent of Federal revenues in 1954, to an estimated 30 percent of Federal revenues this year.

The social security tax rate has been raised 10 times in the last 13 years. And in 1969 social security taxes eclipsed corporate taxes as the second largest source of Federal revenues, after the Federal income tax.

Just last June, in connection with the 20 percent increase in social security benefits, the Congress adopted a social security payroll tax increase of $7 billion. The tax rate was raised from 5.2 percent to 5.5 percent effective next January. And the wage base on which the tax is paid from was raised from the current $9,000 to $10,800 effective in January 1973, and to $12,000 effective a year later.

The pending bill proposes to raise the tax rate still further, to 6 percent effective in January. This amounts to an aggregate 15 percent increase next year.

Under the pending bill, social security taxes paid by employees with incomes of $7,000 will rise from $364 a year in 1972 to $420 in 1973. Social security taxes for employees earning $10,000 a year will rise from $468 in 1972 to $600 in 1973. And social security taxes for employees earning $12,000 a year will rise from $468 a year in 1972 to $648 in 1973.

At the rates proposed in the pending bill, payroll taxes will exceed income taxes in 1973 for families of four with incomes under $13,900.

And the burden of these taxes falls most heavily on those who can least afford them.

Increasing the social security tax rate from 5.5 percent to 6 percent would increase total Federal tax for a family of four earning $4,000 by 9.1 percent. It would increase the tax for a family earning $10,000 by 3.4 percent. But it would increase taxes for a family earning $100,000 by only one-tenth of 1 percent.

And although the burden falls heaviest on low-income families, the burden on moderate income Americans will be great as well. If the pending bill is adopted in its present form, total social security taxes for a wage earner with a $12,000 annual income will increase by $181 in 1972—a 38-percent increase. By 1974 his social security tax would increase by $252—another 16 percent. And in the 4 years from 1971 to 1974 he would absorb a 75-percent increase in social security taxes.

I strongly believe that we must find a more equitable method of financing social security benefits for elderly and disabled Americans.

Dignity for our elderly and disabled is a national concern. A larger share of social security financing should be supported from the broad Federal tax base.

And I believe a fair share of the burden should be carried by corporate taxes, which in 1971 received a tax cut which will amount to $74 billion over 10 years.

It may be said that employers presently contribute half of social security taxes. But most economists agree that the employer's half, as well as the employee's, is subtracted from real wages.

Reform of the financing of our social security laws must be a major concern of the Congress as we confront the need for broad tax reform.

But the amendments opposed by the Senator from Wisconsin give us the chance to adopt a partial remedy now.

These amendments would raise roughly $4 billion by closing clearly unjustified tax loopholes. They would reduce the increase in tax rates under the pending bill by three-fourths, to one-tenth of 1 percent. They are not an answer to the problem of financing social security, but they are a beginning.

Amendment 1609 would strengthen the minimum tax on income otherwise exempt from tax under four major tax preferences—gain from employee stock options, bad debt reserves of financial institutions in excess of the amount justified by experience, depletion, and the untaxed half of capital gains.

The present minimum tax on these provisions is a flat 10 percent, with an exemption of $30,000 plus the amount paid in income tax.

This amendment would reduce the exemption to $12,000, and change the tax from a flat 10 percent to half the tax which would be paid on that amount of ordinary income if the taxpayer had no other income. The rate would begin at 7 percent and reach a maximum of 35 percent for those with otherwise tax-exempt preference income of over $112,000 or $212,000 for married couples filing joint returns.

Amendment No. 1609 will raise an estimated $2.1 billion in 1973, $3.1 billion in 1977, and $4.1 billion in 1980.

The second amendment proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin, amendment No. 1610, would repeal the asset depreciation range, adopted in the Revenue Act of 1971.

ADR permits superaccelerated depreciation of assets over only 80 percent of their useful lives. An asset with a Treasury guideline life of 10 years, for example, may be completely depreciated over only 8 years, with no showing that the asset will then require replacement.

Repeal of this unjustified gift of tax revenues will yield $1.8 billion in 1973 and $26 billion between now and 1980.

Mr. President, amendments 1609 and 1610 point the way to fairer financing of our social security system. I urge their adoption by the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if this Government, which is about $40 billion in the red this year, is going to increase the income tax, we should use it to reduce the deficit we have now, rather than to change the whole concept of the social security program. The social security program is based on the theory that those who are working will pay a tax which will provide for their retirement in the future.

The Senator is seeking to use the Robin Hood approach that would tax the well to do more than those who are not well to do, because they are better able to pay for their retirement than those who are less able to pay.

Admittedly, the social security tax is a regressive tax but the benefits paid out are progressive because they are paid out in such a fashion that the person who receives a low income receives a proportionately higher benefit while the person who receives a higher income receives relatively less compared to what he contributed to help support the system.

This amendment would change the whole financing approach and also tend to eliminate discipline and tax-consciousness in the system.

At the present time, when we increase social security benefits, the public knows that they will have to pay for it. All the proposed future beneficiaries will have to pay more taxes to help pay for higher benefits. The Senator would change that concept and would move to the theory that we are going to have more and more social security benefits but do not have to pay for them because we can tax that well-to-do person who is better able to pay. That is a whole new concept which changes the whole basis of social security financing.

The Senator has offered his proposal and I do not believe the Senate wants to agree to it. Even just as a tax measure it is unacceptable because it would impose a heavy tax increase on many people who are entitled to be heard, to present facts and figures, and to document their case. I do not believe that the Senate would want to prejudice that matter by doing this to them, without according them a hearing, consideration for the arguments which they can marshal, and to consider all the evidence that can be presented to support their position. The Senator is offering a tax increase which we will be thinking about and talking about next year and then voting on. It is premature to do it now.

Because of the lateness of the hour, I am not going to debate the matter further. I think the Senate is ready to vote now. If it is, we will find out. I think I should move to table the Senate's amendment.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold that for a moment while I respond?

Mr. LONG. The motion is not debatable. I will be glad to withdraw it for a while.

Mr. NELSON. I hope that the Senator will. I wish to respond to it.

Mr. LONG. Can we agree on some time limitation? I will be glad to withhold my motion, due to the lateness of the hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON). The motion to table is pending. Unless the Senator withdraws it, it is not debatable.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may withdraw my motion to table so that I might inquire of the Senator from Wisconsin would it be all right with him to limit himself to another 5 minutes.

Mr. NELSON. Ten minutes, and I will probably give back 5 minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be a 20-minute limit and I propose to surrender back my time, to be equally divided between the Senator from Wisconsin and myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I should like to point out that the concept of paying for unearned benefits out of the general fund is not new. It has been recommended since 1935. The Committee on Economic Security made this recommendation in principle in 1935.

In recommending a Government contribution the 1938 Advisory Council said:

> Since the Nation as a whole will materially and socially benefit by such a program, it is highly appropriate that the Federal Government should participate in the financing of the system. With the broadening of the scope of the protection afforded, governmental participation in meeting the costs of the program is all the more justified since the existing costs of relief and old-age assistance will be materially affected.

In 1948, the Advisory Council on Social Security made the following statement:

> The Council believes that old-age and survivors insurance should be planned on the assumption that general taxation will eventually share more or less equally with employer and employee contributions in financing future benefit outlays and administrative costs. Under our recommendations, the full rate of benefits will be paid to those who retire during the first two or three decades of operation even though they pay only a fraction of the cost of their benefits. In a social insurance system, it would be inequitable to ask either employers or employees to finance the entire cost of liabilities arising primarily because the act had not been passed earlier than it was. Hence, it is desirable for the Federal Government, as sponsor of the program, to assume at least part of these accrued liabilities based on the prior service of early retirants. A Government contribution would be a recognition of the interest of the Nation as a whole in the welfare of the aged and of widows and children. Such a contribution is particularly appropriate in view of the relief to the general taxpayer which should result from the substitution of social insurance for part of public assistance.

In a minority statement, appended to the reports of the 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security, five Council members expressed the following views:

> There are compelling reasons why a contribution from general revenues should be made to the cash benefits program. In order to make the program fully effective in its early years, full-rate benefits have been and are being paid to people who were already along in years when their work was first covered under the program. That is to say, workers retiring in the early years of the program, generally speaking, get the same benefits as they would get if the program had been in existence and they had been covered under it throughout all of their working life. Only a small part of the actual cost of the benefits being paid to these older people is met by the contributions they and their employers paid. The remainder is paid out of the contributions of current and future workers and their employers. The cost of paying full-rate benefits to older workers is about one-third of the cost of the program. This means that future workers and their employers will pay contributions which are about 50 percent higher than the benefits payable to these future generations. Thus a substantial part of the contributions to the program goes to meet the cost of getting the program started. If this cost were to be met by a Government contribution, all of the contributions paid by future generations of workers and their employers would be available to furnish protection for them. The adoption of a financing policy calling for a general revenue contribution equal to the present employers and employee contribution rates—thus meeting one-third of the cost of the program through general revenues—would make possible an improved social scurity program without increasing payroll contributions. Such a general revenue contribution could finance nearly a 50-percent benefit increase.

Mr. President, just what are we doing here?

We are asking today's worker and his employer to be taxed to pay for unearned benefits for retired employees when such costs should be borne by the general fund. No one quarrels about increasing the payroll tax to pay for the 20-percent across-the-board increase. That increased tax is from 5.2 to 5.5 percent. However, H.R. 1 benefits require an additional tax increase from 5.5 to 6 percent.

These benefits which are needed and justifiable provide for an increase in the minimum benefits to $200 a month for low income workers employed for 30 years. We have decided as a matter of policy, that long term workers with low earnings will be provided on income of $200 per month and that the current worker will be taxed to pay it. What we are really saying to today's worker is, that "we are going to tax you and your employer to pay for increased retirement benefits for those who have already retired but not contributed to payment of that benefit."

Under this bill we are making disabled workers under 65 eligible for medicare. And that should occur. But I do not think the worker in the plant today should pay for medicare for someone who is retired. We are going to extend medicare coverage to include life prescription drugs for older folks, and I agree with that, but we should not tax the current worker to pay for them. We have increased the widow's cash benefit from 82½ percent to 100 percent of the husband's benefit and I agree with that but we should not tax the worker who is working today to pay for these benefits. The Advisory Council has been suggesting since 1938 that such benefits for retirees ought to be paid out of general funds.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move to table the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been asked for?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered. The motion is not debatable, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), and the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL).

If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE) would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD). If present and voting, the Senator from Texas would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 47, nays 28, as follows:

So the motion to table the Nelson amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1610

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1610.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

TITLE VI—INTERNAL REVENUE CODE AMENDMENTS

SEC. 601. REPEAL OF ASSET DEPRECIATION RANGE SYSTEM.

(a) Section 167(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to the Asset Depreciation Range System) is repealed.

(b) Section 167(a) of such Code (relating to a reasonable allowance for depreciation) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Such reasonable allowance shall be computed, subject to the provisions of Revenue Procedure 62-21 (except for the provisions for the reserve ratio test) as in effect on January 1, 1972, on the basis of the expected useful life of property in the hands of the taxpayer."

(c) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to property placed in service after December 31, 1972. The amendment made by subsection (b) shall apply to taxable years ending after December 31, 1972, but shall not apply to property placed in service by the taxpayer during the calendar year 1971 if an election has been made to have the provisions of section 167(m) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 apply to such property.

SEC. 602. (a) Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, the rate of tax (in the tax schedules in section 1401(a), section 3101(a), and section 3111(a), of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) shall be reduced so as to cause the total revenues raised by such tax schedules to be reduced, for any calendar year (commencing with the calendar year beginning January 1, 1974), by an amount equal to the amount of the revenues which the Secretary of the Treasury determines, in the case of any calendar year, will be produced by reason of the application of the preceding amendments made by this title. The Secretary shall make the determinations required by the preceding sentence, for any calendar year, not later than the close of the month of September of the year immediately preceding such calendar year.

(b) In addition to the moneys authorized by law to be appropriated, for any fiscal year, to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund, and to the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated to each of such funds an amount equal to the revenues produced for such fiscal year by reason of the amendments made by the preceding sections of this title, apportioned between each of such funds in the same ratio as moneys appropriated thereto under title II of the Social Security Act.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this is my last amendment. I will be very brief because obviously there is not much interest in this body in introducing some equity into the tax structure respecting social security. But I will make this wager: there are not 20 Members of this body who have taken out a chart and looked down the list to see the tax we are imposing upon workers in this country to pay for these benefits, for people who retired in previous years. The benefits are justified. The Advisory Council has been recommending and suggesting for 30 years that some of this money come from the general fund when we grant nonearned benefits to retirees. I am certain that not more than 20 Senators have looked at the tax schedule or they could not vote against these amendments.

I want to see the Member of this body who can go before any group of workers in America, in his district, and tell that worker who is making $12,000 that you came down here this year and that you increased his taxes $21 a month.

If any Senator came onto this floor with a proposal to increase the taxes on a man making $12,000 a year by $21 a month, he would be laughed off the floor of the Senate; and anyone who voted for it would be voted out of the U.S. Senate, and that is what should happen.

What the Senate is saying to that man is that this year he is paying $468 in social security, but a year and a half from now the U.S. Senate, with its vote, is going to make him pay $720 in social security taxes, a $252 increase in a year and a half; a 54-percent increase in his social security tax, just in 2 years; a $21 a month increase in social security taxes, and a 75-percent increase since 1971.

Well, if he does not revolt against those who voted for that he will not revolt against anything, and half of it is to pay for the benefits of people who retired years ago and who did not make the contribution to pay for it.

We all agree the benefits here are justifiable, desirable, and urgently needed. But we should go to the general fund, which is a more equitable tax system, and ask the general fund to pay for it, or pass legislation and pay for it, but not pay for it through the pocketbook of the overloaded working taxpayer in this country.

Have Senators looked at the schedule which shows the inequity in this social security tax schedule? Let us take a look at it. If a worker has an income of $3,000 a year the social security tax is 9.1 percent of his gross income. If he has an income of $7,500 a year it is 4.1 percent. If he has an income of $100,000 it is one-tenth of 1 percent. That is the regressivity built into this system.

So you are going to tell that worker that you are going to load $21 a month on him if he is making $12,000 a year. He has a wife and two children and he cannot make ends meet now, and all of a sudden you hit him with an additional $21 a month. I want to be present when we find the genius in this body who can go before any group of workers in this country and get applause for that marvelous increase. I want to hear his answer when the worker says, here is a man who has $100,000 in income and he computes his tax on that salary. Then, he has $60,000 in capital gains and you allow him to deduct the $31,000 he will pay on his $100,000, if he has a 15 percent deduction, and subtract that from his $60,000 capital gains, so now he has only $30,000. Then, the law provides he can subtract another $30,000. So what does he pay on that $60,000? Zero. It is all privileged untaxed income.

I want to see you stand up, any Member here, and defend that exemption, and tell the worker, "However, we are going to stick you with $21 a month," while the man making that $60,000 in capital gains does not even pay $21 a month on it; he does not even pay $21 a year on it. I want to see any Member here defend that kind of tax system. That is what we are doing here.

I hope every single Member here has to answer out loud to his constituents on that rollcall, and I wager you will because it is a question of ethics, honesty, and fairness with the American people and the American taxpayer.

We sit here allowing millionaires to pay nothing and we load the hard-working man in the factory with regressive, unfair taxes.

I cannot defend that; maybe you can. I hope the story is told all across the Nation. We represent the rich and the powerful. I do not know who represents the poor, but it is not this body.

I give up the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the whole approach to the social security program is that you pay taxes for what you are going to get. You pay taxes now and you receive benefits later on. The more you pay in taxes the more you can expect to receive in benefits.

Admittedly, the fellow paying in the highest bracket does not get the benefit of the fellow in the lowest bracket. It is computed so that the fellow in the low bracket gets more benefit for what he pays than the person in the higher wage bracket gets. It is based on the theory if you pay more you are going to get more. That is how we justify tax increases for social securty. We consistently have done that.

In theory and in practice the people paying more overall will get more because they are paying more. We raise the taxes and the benefits too. The additional benefits provided here will be shared in and participated by those paying taxes.

The Senator from Wisconsin made an eloquent argument to the effect that we should tax the wealthy in order to reduce the tax on these future beneficiaries. Of course, that is an appealing argument but it defeats the purpose of social security, and causes one to raise a question, with the Government $40 billion in debt, if we can do it by raising the income tax. That is the tax that has been the principal support of Government. With the Government $40 billion in the red, if you are going to raise that income tax on people should we put that increase of $2 or $3 billion into replacing or reducing the tax of a program that is financing itself or should we put it into the General Treasury where it has been going, trying to reduce that $40 billion deficit we have? Some of us think, whether we like it or not, we may be forced to vote for a tax increase some day as a responsibility to this Nation to pay for defense and other things in the national interest, including public welfare, which is being increased to the tune of many millions of dollars in this bill. So if one wants to think of benefiting the poor, how about the poorest of all, those who would not be getting social security benefits? Why not take some of this money from the very wealthy and use it to help those who would not get any of these benefits, rather than reduce taxes for those who presumably are going to draw from the social security fund everything they put into it?

So, even though I agree with the general philosophy of taxing those best able to pay and providing help to those least able to provide for themselves, that is not what the Senator is doing here. If he did that, he would put money into the general funds to pay people who are not drawing social security benefits because they were not fortunate enough to participate in the program in their earning years.

I suggest that we have an up-and-down vote on the amendment.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I would like to comment briefly on this matter. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana is always so persuasive, even when he is on the wrong side, but I am puzzled, because the distinguished Senator from Louisiana proposed general fund moneys to pay for his catastrophic insurance under the health care program, parts A and B. I want to commend the Senator, who took exactly my position at that time——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, is he talking about the Hartke amendment or the Long amendment? I proposed a catastrophic illness amendment which would be paid for by raising social security taxes.

Mr. NELSON. Well, I hope that my staff's research has not been inaccurate. Their research indicates that in the course of the Senate Finance Committee's consideration of the Social Security Amendments of 1965, Senator RUSSELL B. LONG proposed an amendment which would substitute a single and much broader system of health care aimed at covering catastrophic costs for the two complementary health care plan—parts A and B—contained in the House-passed bill, and in the legislation as it was finally enacted. Two-thirds of the cost of this program would have been paid from payroll taxes and one-third from general revenues. In a press release describing the amendment the Senator said:

My plan would also utilize, to a greater extent, general revenue financing. This is in recognition of the fact that workers who will enter the labor force in the future (and their employers) would have to pay at least 40% more in payroll taxes than would be necessary to finance their own costs if the benefits of the presently retired and current workers were paid for wholly under the payroll system.

Mr. LONG. I think, if we can understand each other, at one time I did propose that. I realized I was in error, and if the Senator will look at the 1970 version, I had proposed paying for the whole thing in social security taxes.

Mr. NELSON. Let me say to the Senator I think he was right the first time.

I just conclude by saying that there are two proposals here. One is simply to repeal the ADR. I do not think any businessman, in the privacy of his office, would try to defend having both the ADR and the investment credit and a number of distinguished businessmen have said that publicly. Now we are saying we are willing to load down the low- and middle-income people with a heavy tax, but we will not consider going to the general funds and levying a modest tax on those who can afford to pay and who are being treated preferentially.

I think that says something quite significant about the philosophical bent of the Senate.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, if I may take one moment, I ask unanimous consent that a statement may be printed in full in the RECORD preceding the debate on the minimum tax, together with some supporting documents, and I also ask unanimous consent that some supporting documents, statistics, and charts, be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROPOSAL TO PAY FOR INCREASED SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS THROUGH TAX REFORM

Unless Congress comes to its senses, the average American wage-earner will be faced with a monstrous increase in federal taxes. His wages frozen, inflation eating away the purchasing power of his dollar, the American worker can now expect a demoralizing cut in take home pay—almost $200 a year for some people—starting in just a few months.

H.R. 1 as reported by the Senate Finance Committee presents a $6 billion tax bill to the American worker. This tax boast would be in addition to a $7 billion tax bill rise already scheduled to go into effect January 1 to pay for the 20 percent across-the-board social security benefit increase voted by Congress in June. The earlier approved tax increase scheduled to go into effect January 1, 1973, would raise the payroll tax from 5.2 to 5.5%, and the wage base on which the tax is paid will rise from $9,000 to $10,800 with still another wage base increase to $12,000 a year later. The additional $6 billion tax increase approved by the Senate Finance Committee would come entirely from a rise in the tax rate from 5.5% to 6% effective in January. Just the Senate Finance Committee action in increasing benefits in H.R. 1 represents a 10% increase in the social security tax.

For the individual worker, this dramatic increase in the payroll tax means substantial reduction in his take home pay. For example, for a wage-earner with a $12,000 income in wages, his social security tax would increase in one one-year period from 1972 to 1973 by $252—a 54% increase. This wage earner will have undergone a 75% increase in social security taxes in the four-year period from 1971 to 1974.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that table showing the amount of increase in social security taxes from 1972 to 1974 for various levels of wage-earners be inserted in the Record at this time.

Congress must face what is being proposed. Congress can no longer mindlessly approve more and more increases in the payroll tax.

The effective social security tax rate has been raised 10 times in the preceding 12 years.

Small in its first years, the payroll tax has now became one of the largest components of the federal tax system. Social Security taxes are now the second largest source of federal revenue, having passed corporate taxes in fiscal 1969. Indeed it produces more federal revenue than any tax other than the individual income tax.

The payroll tax achieved its present importance in a very short time. It is the most rapidly growing federal tax. In 1950, it produced only 5% of federal revenue. Next year it is scheduled to produce about 30%.

Indeed the most striking feature of the federal tax system over the last ten years has been the drop in the corporate income tax and the precipitous rise in the payroll tax. In the period 1961–72, the corporate income tax declined from 22.5% of federal revenues to 18.0% while the payroll tax rose from 19.1% to 30.0% of federal revenue.

The shift from taxes on corporations to taxes on individuals can be seen in the accompanying table. This gives the percentage of national income raised by different federal taxes—the personal income tax, the social security tax, the corporate income tax, and sales and excise tax. The comparison is between 1961 (before the Kennedy tax cuts) and 1972. The table shows that there is no change between 1961 and 1972 in the share of national income raised by the personal income tax, a significant drop in the corporate tax share, and a large increase in the payroll tax share.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the table I have been discussing appear in the RECORD at this time.

PERCENT OF NATIONAL[1] INCOME RAISED BY FEDERAL TAXES

	Personal income tax	Social security tax	Corporate income tax	Sales and excise taxes	Total Federal taxes
1961	8.7	3.9	4.6	2.7	20.4
1973	8.6	6.0	3.6	1.8	20.0

[1] National income at full employment.

Since the corporate income tax is one of the most progressive taxes, the net effect these changes is a much more regressive federal tax system. The social security tax is one of the most regressive taxes because the tax is levied on wages up to a given level without exemptions or deductions. The social security tax violates the fundamental principle of sound tax policy; the tax bears no relationship to ability to pay.

Because the burden of the payroll tax is focused on the low- and midde-income worker, increases in the payroll tax in recent years have largely eliminated the tax relief Congress attempted in 1964 and 1969 to extend to these taxpayers. At rates proposed by H.R. 1, the social security payroll tax burden will be larger in 1972 than the income tax burden for the average family of four with an income of $10,900 or less.

It is now proposed that we increase this highly regressive tax even more. Additional increases in the payroll tax would be financially crippling to the middle- and low-income wage earner. Increasing the tax rate from 5.5 to 6 percent would mean for a family of four with one wage earner in the $3,000 or $4,000 tax bracket a 9.1 percent increase in Federal taxes. The following table shows that the proposed increases place a disproportionate tax burden on the low- and middle-income wage earner. I ask unanimous consent that the table be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this time.

Percentage increase in total Federal taxes paid by increasing the social security tax from 5.5 to 6 percent.

Tax bracket:
$3,000	9.1
4,000	9.1
5,000	6.7
7,500	4.1
9,000	3.6
10,000	3.4
10,800	3.3
12,500	2.8
15,000	2.2
20,000	1.5
50,000	.4
100,000	.1

The excuse for imposing such a regressive tax so financially crippling to middle and low-income wage-earners is to finance needed and justifiable improvements in the social security and medicare programs. I strongly support these improvements. The problems of American elderly are real and tragic.

One out of every four elderly persons lives in poverty. Sixty percent of this nation's elderly who are living alone are also living in or near poverty. They are three-fifths of a generation who heard a promise made and now see that promise falling short. For them retirement is not a just reward for a life of effort but a sentence of punishment in a constricting cell of poverty. These are some of the improvements in the social security and medicare program contained in H.R. 1:

Raising the minimum benefits to $200 a month for low income workers who have been employed at least 30 years;

Making disabled workers under 65 eligible for medicare;

Extending medicare coverage to certain prescriptions, the so-called "life prescription" drugs used by the chronically ill older persons who are not hospitalized;

Increasing the widows cash benefits from the present 82½% of husband's benefit to a full 100%;

Increasing from $1680 to $3000 the amount an elderly person on social security can earn without loss of any social security benefits.

These are all meritorious, humane and justifiable benefit improvements for the elderly.

But I believe that it is not necessary to levy this dramatic tax increase on the American worker to provide for a just retirement for the elderly American. Our senior citizens deserve a decent retirement income, but it is not fair to place the whole burden on the low and moderate income wage-earner.

I propose that we pay for the social security improvements in H.R. 1 by correcting some of the major distortions and gross injustices that have crept into the federal tax system.

The well-known loopholes of the present system can send the wage-earning, taxpaying householder right up the dining room wall with a fistful of unpaid bills. How can we justify raising this man's tax by 54% when he and we know:

(1) that the tax levied on the wealthy in bold letters is frequently taken away in the small print;

(2) that there are paper paupers who live in mansions and pay no taxes.

I propose that Congress pass two tax reform measures—repeal of the asset depreciation range and strengthening the minimum tax provision—which would raise almost $42 billion between now and 1980. $42 billion would meet about 70% of the cost of the social security program arising from H.R. 1 and automatic increases by 1977. Passage of these tax reform amendments would allow dropping the proposed payroll tax rate increase from 6.0 to 5.6%.

Both the ADR system and the existing minimum tax have been recently considered by the appropriate committees and by Congress—the minimum tax in 1969, and the ADR only last December. They are fully eligible for present consideration.

THE ASSET DEPRECIATION RANGE SYSTEM

The ADR system seeks to encourage investment by permitting corporations to deviate by as much as 20 percent from a true depreciation schedule for certain investments in plant and equipment. It cost the taxpayer some 2.5 billion dollars in revenue in FY 73.

Economically sound investments are made regardless of tax concessions. The ADR allows corporations to relax their strict profitability standards and invest in areas which offer only marginal return. This is clearly not the kind of investment which is likely to build back a strong economy. As James Roche, the chairman of the world's largest corporation, said about tax measures intent to stimulate the purchase of plant and equipment:

"It should be understood that most companies of any size determine their purchase of equipment by the needs of the business and not by any short-term tax advantages."

Our plants are currently operating at substantially less than full capacity; still corporate profits rose to a record annual rate of 93.1 billion last quarter; and unemployment continues at 5.6 percent.

There is thus no good reason for retaining the ADR system. It should be repealed, and the money regained allocated to the elderly.

THE MINIMUM TAX

The minimum tax was enacted in 1969 to insure that wealthy individuals with substantial income from tax loopholes do not escape tax altogether. It imposes a 10 percent tax on the aggregate amount of tax preference income in excess of the sum of $30,000, plus the regular income tax imposed on the taxpayer.

The minimum tax has not been effective. Only $117 million was collected from individuals last year under this add-on tax. A total of 394 people with incomes of over $100,000 paid no Federal income taxes at all. Of the 18,646 who were affected, an effective tax rate of only 4 percent was paid, less than half the percentage paid by the average wage earner.

In the interest of both equity and revenue, the minimum tax obviously needs to be tightened up. This amendment would reduce the exemption from $30,000 to $20,000, and eliminate the regular income tax deduction. It would raise the rate to one-half of the regular income tax rate for certain items of "preference income."

The minimum tax has little impact on productive investment, and no discernible effect on consumer demand.

By enacting these two tax reform measures, Congress can improve the lives of elderly Americans; restore some equity to our tax system; and save the American worker from an additional tax burden.

Of course, what I am proposing is general revenue-financing for some of the increases in benefits for social security or medicare.

H.R. 1 represents the most massive revision of the social security laws that the Congress has ever undertaken. When combined with the 20% social security benefit increase enacted into law July 1 of this year, the bill would increase Federal expenditures by 22 billion. Under these extraordinary circumstances, some form of general revenue financing is called for.

General revenue financing is not without precedent or logic. General revenues are now being used to finance some aspects of the social security program. For example, the special payments being made to people age 72 and over who have not worked long enough in employment covered under social security to qualify for reguar cash benefits are being paid from general revenues. In addition, the cost of providing hospital insurance protection for people who are age 65 and over and who are not eligible for regular social security cash benefits and one-half of the cost of the supplementary medical insurance program are being paid from general revenues.

There has been considerable interest in Congress in providing general revenue contributions for regular social security cash benefits. Several bills have been introduced in the Congress over the years calling for some general revenue financing of cash benefits, generally in connection with proposals for benefit liberalizations. Furthermore, there have been many sugggestions that parts of medicare be financed by general revenue financing. A most interesting example was the suggestion of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee.

In the course of the Senate Finance Committee's consideration of the Social Security Amendments of 1965, Senator Russell B. Long proposed an amendment which would substitute a single and much broader system of health care aimed at covering catastrophic costs for the two complementary health care plans (Parts A and B) contained in the House-passed bill, and in the legislation as it was finally enacted. Two-thirds of the cost of this program would have been paid from payroll taxes and one-third from general revenues. In a press release describing the amendment the Senator said:

"My plan would also utilize, to a greater extent, general revenue financing. This is in recognition of the fact that workers who will enter the labor force in the future (and their employers) would have to pay at least 40% more in payroll taxes than would be necessary to finance their own costs if the benefits of the presently retired and current workers were paid for wholly under the payroll system. This 'social' cost of establishing the system, I believe, is more appropriately borne by federal revenue."

Many of the advisory councils that have been appointed to study the social security program have recomemnded the use of general revenue financing.

In 1935, the Committee on Economic Security, in explaining its plan for contributory annuities, made the following statements in its report to the President:

"The allowance of larger annuities than are warranted by their contributions and the matching contributions of their employers to the workers who are brought into the system at the outset, will involve a cost to the Federal Government which if payments are begun immediately will total approximately $500,000,000 per year. Under the plan suggested, however, no payments will actually be made by the Federal Government until 1965, and will, of course, be greater than they would be if paid as incurred, by the amount of the compound interest on the above sum."

In recommending a Government contribution the 1938 Advisory Council said:

"Since the Nation as a whole will materially and socially benefit by such a program, it is highly appropriate that the Federal Government should participate in the financing of the system. With the broadening of the scope of the protection afforded, governmental particiaption in meeting the costs of the program is all the more justified since the existing costs of relief and old-age assistance will be materially affected."

The Advisory Council of 1948 made the following statement in its report:

"The Council believes that old-age and survivors insurance should be planned on the assumption that general taxation will eventually share more or less equally with employer and employee contributions in financing future benefit outlays and administrative costs. Under our recommendations, the full rate of benefits will be paid to those who retire during the first two or three decades of operation even though they pay only a fraction of the cost of their benefits. In a social insurance system, it would be inequitable to ask either employers or employees to finance the entire cost of liabilities arising primarily because the act had not been passed earlier than it was. Hence, it is desirable for the Federal Government, as sponsor of the program to assume at least part of these accrued liabilities based on the prior service of early retirants. A Government contribution would be a recognition of the interest of the National as a whole in the welfare of the aged and of widows and children. Such a contribution is particularly appropriate in view of the relief to the general taxpayer which should result from the substitution of social insurance for part of public assistance."

The 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security, although it did not recommend the use of general revenue financing for the cash benefits of the social security program, it did recomend their use for the medicare program. In a minority statement included with the Council's report, five members of the thirteen member Council recommended that one-third of the cost of the cash benefits program should be paid from general revenues.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the views of the 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security appear in the Record at this time.

In recommending a Government contribution for the Medicare program, the 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security stated:

"The combined Medicare program should be financed with a general-revenue contribution equal to one-third of total program costs, with such share being lower than one-third at first and gradually increasing over a period of years to the one-third level.

"The Council believes that the cost of health insurance protection for workers who pay contributions that are less than the value of their benefit protection, should be met in part by the Nation as a whole through general revenues. If this cost is not met through general revenues, the regular worker and his employer, particularly the higher-paid regular worker, will be paying contributions in excess of the value of his protection in order to subsidize those who do not pay their own way.

"If there were no Medicare program, it is likely that the cost to the Government of necessary health care for the aged would be substantially increased, and these increased costs would have to be borne by all income-taxpayers. Since the Nation as a whole benefits from the Medicare program, the saving in general revenues that comes about from having such a program should be used at least in part to finance health insurance protection for those whose contributions do not cover the full cost of their protection."

In a minority statement, appended to the Reports of the 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security, five Council members expressed the following views:

"There are compelling reasons why a contribution from general revenues should be made to the cash benefits program. In order to make the program fully effective in its early years, full-rate benefits have been and are being paid to people who were already along in years when their work was first covered under the program. That is to say, workers retiring in the early years of the program, generally speaking, get the same benefits as they would get if the program had been in existence and they had been covered under it throughout all of their working life. Only a small part of the actual cost of the benefits being paid to these older people is met by the contributions they and their employers paid. The remainder is paid out of the contributions of current and future workers and their employers. The cost of paying full-rate benefits to older workers is about one-third of the cost of the program. This means that future workers and their employers will pay contributions which are about 50 percent higher than the benefits payable to these future generations. Thus a substantial part of the contributions to the program goes to meet the cost of getting the program started. If this cost were to be met by a Government contribution, all of the contributions paid by future generations of workers and their employers would be available to furnish protection for them. The adoption of a financing policy calling for a general revenue contribution equal to the present employers and employee contribution rates—thus meeting one-third of the cost of the program through general revenues—would make possible an improved social security program without increasing payroll contributions. Such a general revenue contribution could finance nearly a 50-percent benefit increase."

It seems clear to me that the "social" aspects of the social security program—such as, the weighting in the benefit formula in favor of low-income workers, a high minimum benefit, and the payment of full-rate benefits to people who were already old, or in their middle years, at the time their work was first covered under the program—should be financed through general revenues instead of through payroll contributions because society as a whole benefits from these aspects of the program. Only in this way, we will be able to ensure a decent retirement for elderly Americans without placing an unfair burden on the present working generation of Americans.

Senator Nelson's Proposal To Pay for Increased Social Security Benefits Through Tax Reform

Senator Nelson has introduced two tax reform amendments to H.R. 1 in order to offer an alternative method of financing some of the necessary and justifiable improvements made by H.R. 1 in the social security and medicare programs.

Problem: H.R. 1, by providing for necessary improvements in social security, would impose an onerous increase in federal taxes on the average wage earner. For example, social security taxes for a wage earner with a $12,000 income in wages would increase in one year by $180—a 38% increase. In 1974 his social security tax would have increased by $252—a 54% increase. This wage earner will have undergone a 75% increase in social security taxes in the 4-year period from 1971 to 1974. Following is the amount and percentage of increase in social security taxes for selected wage earners from 1972 to 1974:

Wages	Amount of Increase	Percentage of Increase
$5,000	$40	15
$7,000	56	15
$9,000	72	15
$10,000	132	28
$12,000	252	54

Solution: I propose that Congress pass two tax reform amendments—repeal of the assets depreciation range (Amendment #1610) and strengthening the minimum tax provision (Amendment #1609) which would raise about $42 billion between now and 1980. Passage of these tax reform amendments would allow dropping the proposed payroll tax rate increase from 6.0 to 5.6%

This would involve general revenue-financing for some of the increases in benefits for social security and medicare contained in H.R. 1. General revenue financing has been recommended by many of the advisory councils that have been appointed to study the social security program.

Conclusion: The "social" aspects of the social security program—such as, the weighting in the benefit formula in favor of low-income workers, a high minimum benefit, making disabled workers under 65 eligible for medicare, and extending medical coverage for certain prescription drugs as proposed by H.R. 1—should be financed through general revenues instead of through payroll contributions because society as a whole benefits from these aspects of the program. Only in this way will we be able to ensure a decent retirement for elderly Americans without placing an unfair burden on the present working generation.

Nelson Amendment To Strengthen the Minimum Tax

A. MINIMUM TAX

Congress enacted the minimum tax in an attempt to obtain some tax contribution from wealthy individuals who had previously escaped income taxation on all or most of their income.

B. MINIMUM TAX FAILS

Under the present minimum income tax, it is very easy for a taxpayer to avoid paying any minimum tax or to pay a very small amount of minimum tax. For example, a taxpayer filing a joint return with a regular income of $100,000 and preference capital gain income of $50,000, who happens to have itemized deductions of 15 percent and two exemptions, would pay no tax on his preference income.

C. THE EXTENT OF THE FAILURE

In 1970, 106 individuals with adjusted gross income exceeding $200,000 paid no federal income tax. Three individuals with incomes in excess of $1 million paid no federal income tax. The effective rate on individual income subject to the minimum tax is 4 percent instead of the statutory rate of 10 percent.

D. PROPOSED AMENDMENT

The proposed amendment would make three major changes in the tax treatment of the four major tax preference items—stock options, bad debts, depletion, and capital gain—of the minimum tax. First, it would repeal the provision of existing law that allows regular income taxes to be deducted from these tax preference items. Second, it would lower the present $30,000 exemption to $12,000. Finally, it would increase the minimum tax rate from 10 percent to 50 percent of the regular income tax rate that would otherwise apply. The tax treatment of the other items of tax preference in the minimum tax provision would not be changed.

This amendment would save the Federal Treasury $1.9 billion in 1973 and $21.8 billion between now and 1980. The savings to the Treasury for the rest of the decade would be:

MINIMUM TAX

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1969 should not result in complacency. It was merely the beginning—and a rather poor beginning—of meaningful tax reform. Our tax code, a document of mind-numbing complexity, still enshrines inequities and injustices. It still unduly rewards the rich and punishes the poor.

Perhaps the main reason why a modicum of tax reform was finally achieved in 1969 was the public's rightful outrage when it learned that many wealthy people were paying little or no income taxes. When Secretary of the Treasury Joseph Barr disclosed that in 1967, 155 Americans with income of over $200,000 paid no Federal income tax and, in fact, 21 of them made incomes of over $1 million each and still paid no taxes it was clear that something had to be done. Unfortunately, what was done, was not done well. Although the Tax Reform Act of 1969 adopted a minimum tax on income derived from tax-free preference provisions, it is still possible for the very rich to pay little or no tax. In 1970, 106 individuals with incomes of $200,000 or more paid no Federal income tax. Incredibly, three taxpayers with adjusted gross income of more than $1 million each pay no income tax at all.

As startling as these figures are, they grossly understate the number of wealthy people who, through tax loopholes, escape paying any Federal income tax at all. These figures include only individuals who file Federal income tax returns showing adjusted gross incomes in excess of the $200,000 and $1 million levels. Important tax preferences in the present Internal Revenue Code exclude certain classes of income from the definition of "gross income" altogether. More important than the tax preferences excluding income items from "gross income" are those which result in reduction of a taxpayer's "adjusted gross income" by means of special deductions. The deductions permitted by the percentage depletion allowance is an example of such a deduction. Because deductions of this kind reduce taxpayers' adjusted gross income—the figure upon which the Treasury statistics are based—they can prevent the statistics from including many individuals, who in fact, have large real incomes but pay no tax.

The fact that a millionaire can escape paying any Federal income tax at all, captures our attention, but the problem is much more serious and widespread. For every wealthy person who pays no Federal income tax there are many more who do not pay a fair share of their income in tax. In fact, the tax rate on these wealthy peoples' income is much less than the tax rate of the income of the average American worker.

The statutory rate schedule for the individual income tax has a sharply progressive structure. The tax rates rise from 14 percent to 70 percent. For married taxpayers filing joint returns, the 14 percent bracket applies only to the first $1,000 of taxable income; the 70 percent bracket applies to all taxable income in excess of $200,000.

Data on the rates of tax which taxpayers really pay manifests a marked departure from the statutory rates. Statistics disclosed by the Treasury Department in 1969 indicate that, at 1969 income levels, 28.2 percent of the tax returns showing "amended taxable income" between $500,000 and $1 million paid tax at effective rates of no more than 25 percent: 58.5 percent of the taxpayers in this income range paid tax at effective rates of no more than 30 percent—substantially less than half the top statutory rate. Of taxpayers having amended taxable income of $1 million and over, 62.8 percent paid tax at effective rates of no more than 30 percent.

Comparable data is not yet available for the first year after the Tax Reform Act of 1969 became effective. However, analysis of the data in light of specific reforms contained in the 1969 act suggests that post-1969 statistics would not show substantial deviations from the figures set forth above.

A study recently completed by Joseph Pechman and Benjamin Okner of Brookings affords additional evidence for the conclusion that the upper ranges of the individual income tax system possess very little real progressivity.

Computing the Federal income tax paid under existing law by all classes of individuals as a percentage of so-called "expanded adjusted gross income," the study finds effective tax rates rising from .5 percent—for the first $3,000 of income—to 29.5 percent—for expanded AGI from $100,000 to $500,000, 30.4 percent—for expanded AGI of $500,000 to $1 million, and 32.1 percent—for expanded AGI of $1 million and over. This data is based upon projections of 1972 income levels and computations of tax under the law as amended both by the Tax Reform Act of 1969 and by the Revenue Act of 1971. Here again, one finds clear evidence that the 1969 act did little to improve the progressivity of the upper ranges of the individual income tax. To put the matter somewhat differently, the fundamental goal of the income tax system—to correlate taxes paid with ability to pay—remains unrealized despite the 1969 act.

The purpose of the minimum tax was to make possible the taxation, to some extent, of income which previously through certain special deductions or exclusions allowed by the Internal Revenue Code had not been subject to taxation. Income accorded this special treatment is commonly referred to as "tax preference income." The minimum tax is derived by substracting from the total tax preference income the sum of $30,000 plus the amount of any regular income tax paid and then taking 10 percent of the remainder. Not all income accord preferred tax treatment, however, is subject to the minimum tax. For example, income derived from interest on State and municipal bonds is not subject to any Federal income tax and is not included in the minimum tax as a preference income item. Beside interest from State and local bonds there are other forms of income accorded tax preference treatment that could have been included in the minimum tax but were not. Other examples of preferred income not subject to the minimum tax are charitable contributions of appreciated property and the investment credit.

Minimum or additional tax for tax preferences was effective January 1, 1970, and applied to the following "tax preferences":

First. Accelerated depreciation on real property.

Second. Accelerated depreciation on personal property subject to a net lease.

Third. Amortization of certified pollution control facilities.

Fourth. Amortization of railroad railing stock.

Fifth. Stock options.

Sixth. Reserve for losses on bad debts of financial institutions.

Seventh. Excess percentage depletion.

Eighth. Excluded portion of capital gains.

Ninth. Amortization of on-the-job training and child care facilities.

The Nelson amendment would change the tax treatment for four of these preference income items—stock options, bad debts, depletion, and capital gains—of the minimum tax. First, it would repeal the provision of existing law that allows regular income taxes to be deducted from these tax preference items; second, it would lower the present $30,000 exemption to $12,000. Finally the rates which apply to these four items of preferred income would be changed. The tax rate is changed from a flat 10 percent to half the tax which would be paid on the amount of ordinary income computed as if the taxpayer had no other income. For individuals the new tax rate would begin at 7 percent and reach a maximum of 35 percent for those with otherwise tax-exempt preference income of over $112,000 or $212,000 for married couples filing joint returns.

These changes in the minimum tax are needed because it is not as effective as intended by Congress. When the minimum tax was enacted, it was estimated that it would raise $590 million in Federal revenue. In fact, for 1970 it raised only $117 million in individuals income tax return. Preliminary statistics of 1970 individual income tax returns reveal that the effective tax rate of the minimum tax on the preference income of individuals subject to the minimum tax is 4 percent instead of the statutory rate of 10 percent.

The effective rate of the minimum tax is only 4 percent because it is very easy for a taxpayer to avoid paying any minimum tax or to pay a very small amount of minimum tax.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be inserted in the RECORD at this time three examples of how the minimum tax operates presently and as modified by the Nelson amendment. Furthermore, I would like to insert a memorandum explaining the present minimum tax and my amendment to it in the Record at this time.

There being no objections, the material follows:

Example A, a taxpayer filing a joint return with a regular income of $100,000 and preference capital gains of $50,000 who happens to have itemized deductions of 15 per cent and two exemptions, would pay no tax on his preference income.

1. 15% of itemized deduction of $100,000 regular income is $15,000.

2. Two personal exemptions ($750 x 2) is $1500.

3. $100,000–$15,000–$1,500 is $83,500 of taxable income.

4. In the tax table for married individuals filing joint returns, $83,500 taxable income is between taxable income of $76,000 and $88,000 which pays $31,020 in taxes plus 58% of the difference between $83,500 and $76,000.

5. $83,500–$76,000 is $7,500.

6. 58% of $7,500 is $4,350.

7. $4,350+$31,020 is $35,570 which is the amount of regular income tax paid.

8. The present minimum tax allows a deduction for regular income tax paid. Therefore taxpayers can deduct $35,370 from the $50,000 of his preferred income—$50,000—$35,370 is $15,620.

9. The present minimum tax also allows a deduction of $30,000 resulting in taxpayer A having no preference income subject to the 10% tax rate of the minimum tax provision.

Under the Nelson amendment taxpayer A would pay $5,620 on his $50,000 of preference income.

(1) No deduction is allowed for the amount of regular income tax paid and the $30,000 deduction is reduced to $12,000—$50,000—$12,000 is $38,000.

(2) In the tax table for married individuals filing a joint return, $38,000 falls between $36,000 and $40,000 which pays a tax of $10,340 plus 45% of the difference between $38,000 and $36,000.

(3) $38,000—$36,000=$2,000×45%=$900.

(4) $10,340+$900=$11,240.

(5) One-half of $11,240 is $5,620.

For taxpayer A, there would be the following effective tax rates for different amounts of income:

EXAMPLE A

(1) under present law, this taxpayer would pay on income (minus deduction and exemption) of $133,500 a tax of $35,370 for an effective tax rate of $26.5%.

(2) on total income of $150,000 there would be an effective tax rate of 23.6%.

(3) under the Nelson amendment the taxpayer would pay a tax of $46,610 on $133,500 (income minus itemized deduction and exemption for an effective tax rate of 34.9%.

(4) on total income of $150,000, there would be an effective tax rate of 31%.

(5) if capital gains were treated as regular income, an income of $133,500 (deduction and exemptions) the tax would be $66,220 for an effective tax rate of 49.6%

(6) on total income of $150,000 the effective tax rate would be 44.1%

EXAMPLE B

A financial institution with taxable income of $500,000 and preference income of $250,000 of excess bad debt deductions would pay no tax on that preference income.

(1) Under the federal corporation income corporations pay 22% of the first $25,000 of taxable income; 22% of $25,000 is $5,000.

(2) $500,000—$25,000 is $475,000.

(3) $475,000 x 48% of federal income surtax is $225,200.

(4) $225,200+$5,500=$230,700 total federal corporate income tax paid.

(5) Under the present minimum tax a deduction is allowed for the amount of regular income tax paid—$230,700. This plus an $30,000 exemption also allowed would mean that there would be no preference income ($250,000—$230,700—$30,000) subject to the minimum tax provision.

Under the Nelson amendment taxpayer B would pay $53,870 on a preference income of $250,000.

(1) Deduction for regular income tax is not allowed but a $12,000 deduction is allowed. $250,000—$12,000 is $238,000.

(2) $25,000 x 11% (half the regular rate) is $2,750.

(3) $238,000—$25,000=$213,000 x 24% (half of the 48% surtax)=$51,120.

(4) $51,120+$2,750=$53,870 amount of tax on preference income.

EXAMPLE C

Y is a married taxpayer with $300,000 of long-term capital gains, $100,000 of dividends, $50,000 of salary, $50,000 of tax exempt interest, $200,000 of income from oil and gas production, $100,000 of percentage depletion in excess of cost, $250,000 of intangible drilling and development costs, $100,000 of real estate losses attributable to accelerated depreciation, $25,000 of deductible charitable contribution (including $10,000 of untaxed appreciation), and $25,000 of personal deductions. Under the present income tax law, Y will have no taxable income. He will pay a minimum tax of $32,000 making his effective tax rate 4.5 percent on total real income of $710,000.

(1) $50,000 of tax-exempt interest excluded from gross income.

(2) Gross income:

Capital gains	$300,000
Dividends	100,000
Salary	50,000
Income from oil and gas production	200,000
Total	650,000

(3) Deductions:

Percentage depletion in excess of cost	$100,000
Intangible drilling and development cost	250,000
Real estate losses attributable to accelerated depreciation	100,000
½ of capital gains	150,000
Total	600,000

(4) Gross income of $650,000 minus business deduction and ½ of capital gains leaves $50,000 of adjusted gross income.

(5) $50,000 of adjusted gross income minus $25,000 of deductible charitable contributions and $25,000 of personal deductions leaves a taxable income of zero.

(6) Under the minimum tax, the following items of preference income would be included:

Accelerated depreciation	$100,000
Percentage depletion	100,000
Excluded ½ capital gains	150,000
Total	350,000

(7) $350,000 minus the $30,000 deduction is $320,000.

(8) $320,000 x the 10% of the minimum tax provision results in $32,000 tax paid.

(9) Real income including capital gains, dividends, salary, tax-exempt bond interest, oil and gas income, and untax appreciation on charitable contribution of $10,000 amounts to $710,000.

(10) on a real income of $710,000, the total taxes paid is $32,000 for an effective tax rate of 4.5%.

Under the Nelson amendment taxpayer Y would pay a total tax of $76,990 on his preference income.

(1) The $100,000 of percentage depletion and $150,000 of capital gain would be taxed under the new rate.

(2) $100,000+$150,000=$250,000.

(3) $250,000—$12,000=$238,000.

(4) $238,000 is over the maximum rate. According to the tax table the tax would be $110,980 plus 70% of excess over $200,000 (or $38,000).

(5) 70% of $38,000 is $26,600.

(6) $110,980+$26,600=$137,580.

(7) ½ of $137,580 is $68,790.

(8) The $100,000 of accelerated depreciation would be subject to the old rate.

(9) $100,000—$18,000 (the amount after $2,000 is subtracted from the total deduction of $30,000) is $82,000.

(10) There is no regular income tax to deduct.

(11) 10% of $82,000 is $8,200.

(12) The tax on Category I income is $8,200 and the tax on Category II income is $68,790 for a total of $76,990.

(13) On real income of $710,000 the taxpayer pays at a rate of 10.8%.

EXAMPLE D

(1) Taxpayer with $30,000 taxable income and $50,000 capital gain

(2) $30,000+$25,000=$55,000 taxable income, his tax is $19,650

(3) under the present minimum tax he would pay no tax

(4) under the Nelson amendment he would pay in additional tax $1,255

(5) under the old law—his total tax is $19,650 on an income $80,000 for an effective tax rate of 24.5 percent

(6) under the new law—his total tax is $20,905 on an income of $80,000 for an effective tax rate of 26.1 percent

(7) if his entire taxable income was $80,000 his tax would be $33,340 for an effective rate of 41.6 percent

(8) it should be noted that this analysis is based on an income of $55,000 which comes after all exemptions, deductions and exclusions

The Nelson amendment does not change the present tax treatment of capital gains for any taxpayer, regardless of income, if he has capital gains of $24,000 or less in one year.

EXAMPLE E

(1) Taxpayer with $15,000 taxable income, and $50,000 capital gains

(2) $15,000+$25,000=$40,000 taxable income, his taxes are $12,140

(3) under the present minimum tax, he would pay no additional tax

(4) under the Nelson amendment, his additional tax would be $1,255

(5) under the old law, his total tax is $12,140 on an income of $65,000 for an effective rate of 20.2%

(6) under the new law, his total tax is $13,395 on an income of $65,000 would be 22.3%

(7) if his entire taxable income was $65,000 his taxes would be $24,970 for an effective rate of 38.4%

(8) it should be noted that this analysis is based on an income of $40,000 after all exemptions, deductions and exclusions

The Nelson amendment does not change the present tax treatment of capital gains for any taxpayer, regardless of income, if he has capital gains of $24,000 or less in one year

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, Congress enacted the minimum tax provision in 1969 to achieve the rather simple principle of tax equity that every wealthy person should pay some Federal income tax. It is becoming painfully clear that we failed to achieve that goal. I propose that we try to finish the job. Acceptance of this amendment will not end the need for more thorough tax reform. On the other hand, acceptance of this amendment should not have to wait for a more comprehensive tax reform proposal. The minimum tax provision is by its very nature not an attempt to reform the entire tax code. It merely tries to insure that everyone, who can, pays some percentage of his income in taxes. The amendment I am proposing today has been the subject of extensive debate in recent years. It received detailed hearings in Congress during the Tax Reform Act of 1969. There is no excuse for not doing at least this much this year.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a more detailed legal description of the minimum tax appear in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A. PRESENT MINIMUM TAX PROVISION

The Tax Reform Act of 1969 provided a special minimum tax for certain special deductions or tax favored income, called preference income. The present minimum tax is levied on nine areas of preference income. The taxpayer is allowed a deduction of $30,000 plus any regular income tax paid, and the tax is levied at the rate of 10 percent.

The following tax preference income is subject to the minimum tax: (1) accelerated depreciation on personal property subject to a net lease. Straight line depreciation means that deductions for depreciation are taken in equal amounts over the useful life of the property. Taxpayers have the option of using methods of accelerated depreciation which may allow a larger portion of depreciation to be deducted in the earlier years than in later years. The excess of these larger deductions in earlier years over the amounts that would be deducted under straight line depreciation is preference income subject to the minimum income tax. The provision only applies to individuals, estates, trusts, Subchapter S Corporations (which may elect to be taxed as partnerships), and personal holding companies; they do not apply to other corporations. Personal property of a taxpayer, which is leased with a guarantee of a specific return or a whole or partial guarantee against loss of income, is personal property subject to a net lease eligible for this treatment.

(2) Accelerated depreciation on real property. Similarly, for real property (such as buildings) the excess deductions taken in any year under an accelerated method of depreciation over those which would be taken under the straight line method are subject to the minimum tax. In addition, depreciation deductions for rehabilitation expenditures on low and moderate income housing may be taken in equal yearly installments over a five-year period. This provision allows the deductions to be taken over a shorter time than the useful life of the improvement. The excess of these deductions in any one year over the deduction which would be taken if the expenditure were depreciated over the entire useful life of the property under straight line depreciation is subject to the minimum tax. These provisions are applicable to all taxpayers.

(3) Amortization of on-the-job training and child care facilities. Under present law, expenditures for one-the-job training and child care facilities can be deducted in equal amounts over a period of five years. The excess of these deductions over the deductions which would be taken under allowable depreciation methods (including accelerated depreciation) is preference income subject to the minimum tax.

(4) Amortization of pollution control facilities. Under present law, deductions for the costs of certified pollution control facilities attributable to the first 15 years of useful life can be taken in equal yearly installments over a five-year period. The excess deductions taken under this method over allowable methods of depreciation (including accelerated depreciation methods) are subject to the minimum tax. This provision is applicable to all taxpayers.

(5) Amortization for certain railroad rolling stock. Under present law, the deduction for the cost of certain railroad rolling stock may be taken in equal installments over a period of five years. The excess deduction under this provision over allowable depreciation deductions (including accelerated depreciation methods) are subject to the minimum tax. This provision applies to all taxpayers.

(6) Tax benefits from stock options. Stock options are often granted which allow employees to buy stock at some time in the future for a stated price regardless of the market price. The difference between the option price and the market price at the time the option is exercised, which is not considered taxable income until the stock is eventually sold, is subject to the minimum tax.

(7) Depletion allowances. Present law allows a method of percentage depletion, for recovering the cost of developing a well or mine, which is based on production rather than cost. Deductions for depletion may exceed the actual costs. The excess of the depletion allowance for the year over the adjusted basis of the property at the end of the year is subject to the minimum tax.

(8) Bad debt deductions of financial institutions. Financial institutions are allowed to deduct from their taxable income, reserves against bad debts. These reserves are generally higher than actual bad debt losses. The amount by which deductions for the purpose of adding to bad debt reserves exceed the amount which would have been allowed if a bank were to maintain its reserves on the basis of actual experience is preference income subject to the minimum tax.

(9) Capital gains. Long term capital gains are treated somewhat differently for individuals and corporations. For individuals, one half of net long term capital gains (to the extent they exceed net short term capital losses) are excluded from regular tax. This income is now subject to the minimum tax. For corporations, all net long term capital gains (to the extent they exceed net short term capital losses) may be taxed at the rate of 30 percent instead of the regular corporate rate of 48 percent. Long term gains considered as preference income for a corporation are determined by multiplying total long term gains by a fraction whose numerator is the regular rate minus the alternative 30 percent rate (or 18 percent) and whose denominator is the regular rate (or 48 percent). Thus, 18/48ths of corporate long term capital gains—the difference between the tax at the regular rate and the tax at the lower rate—is subject to the minimum tax.

B. PRESENT MINIMUM TAX INEFFECTIVE

Under the present minimum income tax, it is very easy for a taxpayer to avoid paying any minimum tax or to pay a very small amount of minimum tax. For example, a taxpayer filing a joint return with a regular income of $100,000 and preference capital gains income of $50,000, who happens to have itemized deductions of 15 percent and two exemptions, would pay no tax on his preference income. If his preference income were $100,000 he would pay a tax of $3,463 on that $100,000 of income. To take another example, a financial institution with taxable income of $500,000 and preference income of $250,000 of excess bad debt deductions would pay no tax on that preference income.

C. PROPOSED NELSON/CHURCH AMENDMENT

The proposed amendment would set up two categories of preference income. Category I income—excess depreciation and amortization for real property, personal property subject to a net lease, pollution control facilities, rolling stock and on-the-job training and child care facilities—would continue to be treated as they are under present law. Category II income—preferences due to stock options, bad debt reserves, depletion and capital gains—would be treated differently. For Category II income no deduction for regular income tax would be taken and the exemption would be $12,000 rather than $30,000. The $30,000 exemption for Category I income would be reduced by the amount of the exemption taken for Category II income in the case of a taxpayer who had both types of preference income.

The rates which apply to Category II income would also be changed. In the case of corporations, the rate would be 24 percent or half of the regular corporation tax of 48 percent (normal tax plus surtax). In the case of individuals, the tax on Category II income would be equal to one-half of the tax which would be due if the preference income were considered to be regular taxable income and the taxpayer had no other regular income.

NELSON AMENDMENT TO REPEAL ADR

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, this amendment would repeal the asset depreciation range (ADR) approved by Congress as part of the Revenue Act of 1971.

The major change brought about by the ADR system was a 20-percent shortening of guideline lives. Thus, an asset which had previously had a guideline life of 10 years could now be depreciated over 8 years.

This amendment would repeal the 20-upercent speedup in guideline lives. It would save the Federal Treasury $2.7 billion in 1974 and $26 billion between now and 1980. The savings to the Treasury in each of the next 8 years would be as follows:

Savings to Treasury

[In billions]

1973	$.8
1974	1.9
1975	2.9
1976	3.4
1977	4.2
1978	4.6
1979	4.5
1980	4.1

ARGUMENT

There is now substantial evidence that the ADR has had little or no impact on investment. According to the Commerce Department's Survey of Current Business (June 1972):

There is some evidence that capital spending this year is stimulated by the liberalized depreciation rules and the new investment tax credit enacted last December. According to a survel of spending plans taken by McGraw Hill Publications Company in March and April, businessmen reported that their expected 1972 outlays are $¾ billion higher than they would have been in the absence of these two stimulants. Roughly $500 million of that amount was attributed to the investment tax credit and $250 million to liberalized depreciation.

The ADR is costing the Treasury $1.8 billion in 1972, $2.4 billion in 1973 and increasing amounts thereafter. So the McGraw Hill survey in effect tells us that ADR is increasing investment by 10–15 percent of its cost to the Treasury.

Mr. President, this amendment would repeal the asset depreciation range (ADR).

In January 1971, the Treasury issued new regulations governing the depreciation of plant and equipment. The major change was a 20-percent shortening of guideline lives. Thus, an asset which previously had a guideline life of 10 years could now be depreciated over 8 years.

This amendment would repeal the 20 percent speed-up in guideline lives.

It would save the Federal Treasury $2.7 billion in fiscal year 1974 and $28 billion between now and 1980. The savings to the Treasury in each of the next 8 years would be as follows:

Savings to Treasury

	In billions
1973	$0.8
1974	1.9
1975	2.9
1976	3.4
1977	4.2
1978	4.6
1979	4.5
1980	4.1

The ADR system became law last December as part of the Revenue Act of 1971. At that time, its proponents argued that it was needed to stimulate investment. This argument made little sense then, and it makes even less sense now.

On the floor of the Senate, I pointed out that most economists and many businessmen thought ADR would have little effect on investment in the near term. With industry operating at 73 percent of capacity, businessmen had little incentive to expand plant and equipment. I quoted Chairman James Roche of General Motors:

> It should be understood that most companies of any size determines their purchases of equipment by the needs of the business and not by any short-term tax advantages.

Mr. Roche went on to say that what mattered was consumer spending:

> It must be noted that the tax credit and accelerated depreciation applies only after equipment is purchased and put to use. This, like the other elements of the program, means very little unless we can achieve the improved economy the President has called for.

Today there is overwhelming evidence that the Nixon investment incentives—and particularly the ADR—have had little or no impact on investment. According to the Commerce Department's Survey of Current Business—June 1972:

> There is some evidence that capital spending this year is stimulated by the liberalized depreciation rules and the new investment tax credit enacted last December. According to a survey of spending plans taken by McGraw-Hill Publications Company in March and April, businessmen reported that their expected 1972 outlays are $3¾ billion higher than they would have been in the absence of these two stimulants. Roughly $500 million of that amount was attributed to the investment tax credit and $250 million to liberalized depreciation.

The ADR and the investment tax credit are costing the Treasury about $5.3 billion in 1972 and $6.3 billion in 1973. Yet here is an official organ of the Nixon administration reporting evidence that the effect on investment is negligible—less than 15 percent of the cost to the Treasury.

Of course, some people may have some doubts about the McGraw-Hill estimate. To satisfy any such doubts, we quote another source which should certainly be biased in favor of the Nixon investment incentives—Dr. Pierre Rinfret, President Nixon's principal economic spokesman for the 1972 campaign.

According to press reports, Dr. Rinfret conducted a comprehensive survey of major businesses, and concluded that if the investment credit, the ADR, and the oil depletion allowance were all repealed, investment would be cut by about 5.5 percent or $5 billion in 1973. Since these three tax provisions will cost the Treasury well over $7 billion in 1973, Dr. Rinfret's findings argue rather persuasively for their repeal.

This very point came up at Secretary Shultz' press conference on the McGovern tax program.

> Question: Pierre Renfret, the Administration's official spokesman on economic matters during this campaign, referring to Evans and Novak, conducted a survey among business investment among companies concerning their investment pensions, indicated that if you repeal ADR and investment tax credit, that investment would drop by about 5½ percent next year.
> Well, if you lower business investment by about 5½ percent, wouldn't that come awfully close to equalling, in dollar amounts, just about what you're losing in revenue because of ADR and investment credit?
>
> In other words, my question is this, is it a bargain when you would get about an additional dollar of investment for a dollar of revenue loss?
>
> Secretary SHULTZ. Well, I think the main point of it is to have tax structure be one that stimulates the economy, that leads it to be more productive, that invites investment in better tools for the American worker to use so that, as I said, he is competitive in world markets and is able to produce a rising standard of living here at home. I think that is the main point about it.

The reporter's point gets to the heart of the matter:

> Is it a bargain when you would get an additional dollar of investment for a dollar of revenue loss?

Secretary Shultz' response suggests strongly that he has no answer to this argument.

In any event, whether one accepts the three-quarter of a billion dollar figure from the McGraw-Hill survey, or Dr. Renfret's figure of $5 billion, it is clear that the effect on investment is relatively small—at least when compared to the cost.

True, investment has been increasing in the recent period. Nonresidential fixed investment in the second quarter of 1972 was running at an annual rate of $84.4 billion—in 1958 dollars—or about 9 percent above the 1970 level. According to the Commerce Department's survey, capital spending in the second quarter was running at $87.1 billion, also about 9 percent above the 1970 level.

[In billions]

	Nonresidential fixed investment GNP accounts (1958 dollars)	Capital spending (Commerce Department survey)
1970	$77.6	$79.7
1971	76.8	81.2
1972 1st quarter	82.2	86.8
1972 2d quarter	84.4	87.1

But this growth in investment was relatively modest; and it was hardly unexpected, since the economy as a whole was expanding throughout this period.

Much more dramatic was the growth in corporate profits and depreciation. In the second quarter, after-tax corporate profits were at an annual rate of $52.4 billion—or 30 percent above the 1970 level; and corporate depreciation was running over 23 percent above the 1970 level. The net result was a 26 percent jump in corporate cash in hand from 1970 to the second quarter of this year.

Nor is this result surprising: Since the investment credit and the ADR have had little impact on investment, it stands to reason that they must have served to swell corporate profits and depreciation allowances.

One other administration argument should be mentioned: That these tax subsidies to investment are needed to preserve the international competitiveness of American firms.

In his testimony before the Senate Finance Committee last fall, Secretary Connally presented data showing the effect of income taxes on the cost of capital goods in the major industrial countries. The United States was at the bottom of the list. The Secretary concluded that the U.S. tax structure is biased against capital.

However, the Treasury table failed to show any relationship between the Connally capital cost index and GNP growth or the growth of exports. Indeed, the United Kingdom which had the lowest capital cost figure, also had the lowest GNP growth rate and the slowest growth of exports.

The fact is that the tax treatment of capital plays a minor role in determining a country's competitive position. Other factors—such as inflation and technological change—are much more significant.

Nor is U.S. tax policy unfavorable to business. Thus, if we compare the effective corporate tax rates in the major industrialized nations—taking into account such special provisions of the tax laws as accelerated depreciation, percentage depletion and the like—the U.S. rate is not out of line with those elsewhere. Indeed, it is lower than that in Italy, Canada, Germany, and France.

I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the estimated effort of corporate tax rates in major industrialized countries (1966) be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the table follows:

Estimated effective corporate tax rates in major industrialized countries—1966

[In percent]

Italy	44.0
Canada	43.5
Germany	43.3
France	42.2
U.S.	42.1
U.K.	35.0
Netherlands	25.6
Japan	24.0

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the new depreciation rules—ADR—should be repealed. The investment tax credit and the ADR together represent an excessive corporate tax cut.

Most of the witnesses in last year's hearings on the new economic policy before the Joint Economic Committee took this position. Senator PROXMIRE, chairman of the committee, summarized their testimony as follows:

They (the witnesses) agreed that if there is to be an investment credit, then the ADR should be withdrawn.

Even Pierre Rinfret, now President Nixon's top campaign economic adviser, took a similar position. In testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee on September 14, 1971, he said:

Liberalized depreciation should not be allowed together with the use of the investment credit. Corporations should be given an either/or choice. If they opt for the investment credit, they cannot take liberalized depreciation, or vice-versa.

The issue is one of priorities. The investment credit and the ADR together represent a corporate tax cut of more than 15 percent. These and other measures have brought about a major shift away from the corporate income tax. Thus, in 1960, the Federal Government raised 35 percent of its revenues from the income tax on corporations. Today, the figure is under 27 percent.

This shift raises serious questions about our tax system, and about the way we spend our money. Do we need more plant and equipment as opposed to more schools, more hospitals or more cars and refrigerators?

These are difficult questions over which reasonable men will differ. But even those who believe that we need more plant and equipment—who favor investment incentives—must now recognize one fact: The ADR is simply not working. For every $1 of increased investment, the Federal Government is losing over $2 in revenues.

We cannot afford this waste. I propose that we close this expansive loophole and use the money regained to insure dignity and a full life to our elderly citizens.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin knows I share much of the philosophy that he espouses in this matter. I am concerned about some parts of it. I would feel much more comfortable about it if we could establish a principle that, to the extent that benefits may be paid out under social security that have not been funded by social security taxes on the participants, then the difference will come from the general funds of the Treasury. As the Senator has pointed out, there are people receiving social security benefits who have never paid an adequate amount of taxes to fund them. We are making up the difference by imposing a regressive tax on the present and future taxpayers of America. That does not support my concept of just taxation.

The Senator has taken this matter piecemeal and selected the tax relating to the asset depreciation range system, which has some merit in it. I think that we ought to be more selective. But the Senator has provided, on page 3 of his amendment, that "There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to each of such funds an amount equal to the revenues produced for such fiscal year by reason of the amendments made in the preceding sections of this title," and so forth.

I am not sure, but I think it would be an extremely difficult task for the Treasury Department to make that determination. They would require a massive quantity of returns to be examined, and I am not sure they are equipped to do this, and certainly not in the time range envisioned by that part of the amendment.

I know what the Senator from Wisconsin is trying to do. He is trying to establish a principle, but in the establishment of the principle, it seems to me the Treasury would get bogged down.

I point to a defect that might perhaps be cured by greater study by the staff or the Treasury.

I do not intend this to be an unfriendly comment, because I sympathize with what the Senator is trying to do, but I think we ought to do a better job, and I think we really ought to take money from the general funds and put it into the Social Security Trust Fund to make up the deficit that is now being levied on the present and future workers of this country.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator.

There may be some technical problems involved, but, if we adopted the amendment, it would not be difficult, with all the expertise on the staff and elsewhere, to meet these problems between now and the time of the conference.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin has performed a service to the Senate and the Nation in focusing our attention on this problem, which has been a growing one, which has been visibly growing, which was coming, and I think it is time we came to grips with it.

I am not sure the formula the Senator proposes is ideal, but I intend to support it because it indicates and has as its objective the shifting of this burden from the overworked and overtaxed workers, as the Senator has so eminently described, to a more equitable tax system.

Another approach to it is one I introduced earlier this year with the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE).

Our approach was not to resort to the General Treasury, but rather to reform the social security tax system itself in two very important respects. One was to lift the ceiling on earnings subject to the tax altogether. It makes no sense to me that a man earning $100,000 a year pays the same social security tax as his secretary who earns $8,000 a year. The Senator has pointed that out.

We propose to reform the system in one other respect, and that is to give a credit for dependents to the workingman, in order to make the tax more progressive, in the same way that the income tax is progressive.

The Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) and I introduced this notion about a year ago for the first time, and we have been promoting and developing it, and I hope it will come to hearings next year and will receive attention as what we consider to be a responsible alternative to this problem of the increasing burden of the social security tax.

So I do compliment the Senator from Wisconsin, and I will support his amendment today, in order that we can get an expression of the Senate of concern for this problem and determination to meet it.

If we do not, I share the Senator's prediction that what we may face is a revolt on the part of the workers of this country against this ever-increasing and growing burden of the social security tax.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the distinguished Senator from Maine.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE) and myself, I ask unanimous consent that the text of S. 2426, a bill to improve the social security tax system introduced by Senator MUSKIE and myself last October, may appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the text of the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 2656

A bill to amend chapters 2 and 21 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, and title II of the Social Security Act, to reduce social Security tax rates and provide a new method for their determination in the future, to remove the dollar limitation presently imposed upon the amount of wages and self-employment income which may be taken into account for tax and benefit purposes under the old-age, survivors, and disability insurance system (making allowance for personal income tax exemptions and the low-income allowance in determining such amount for tax purposes), and to increase benefits under such system to reflect the new tax and benefit base

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TAX AND BENEFIT BASE

SECTION 1. (a)(1)(A)(i) Chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to tax on self-employment income) is amended by inserting immediately after section 1401 the following new section:

"SEC. 1401A. DEFINITION OF SOCIAL SECURITY INCOME.

"For purposes of this title, the term 'social security income', in the case of any individual with respect to any taxable year, means the wages and self-employment income paid to or derived by such individual in such year, reduced by the sum of—

"(1) the total dollar amount of any personal exemptions to which such individual is entitled for such year under section 151, and

"(2) an amount equal to the low-income allowance which is determined with respect to such individual for such year under section 141(c) (or which would be so determined if such individual were eligible for and claimed the standard deduction under section 141 for such year); except that with respect to periods before 1972, such term means only the individual's wages and self-employment income as determined under the provisions of sections 3121 (a) and 1402 which were in effect with respect to such periods."

(ii) The heading of section 1402 of such Code (relating to definitions) is amended by inserting "OTHER" before "DEFINITIONS".

(iii) The table of sections for chapter 2 of such Code is amended by striking out the second item and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 1401A. Definition of social security income.
"Sec. 1402. Other definitions."

(B) Section 1402(b)(1) of such Code (relating to self-employment income) is amended—

(i) by striking out "; and" at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and

(ii) by striking out subparagraph (F).

(2)(A) Title II of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting immediately after section 210 the following new section:

"DEFINITION OF SOCIAL SECURITY INCOME

"SEC. 210A. For purposes of this title, the term 'social security income', in the case of any individual with respect to any taxable year, means the wages and self-employment income paid to or derived by such individual in such year; except that with respect to periods before 1972, such term means only the individual's wages and self-employment income as determined under the provisions of sections 209 and 211 which were in effect with respect to such periods."

(B) Section 211(b) of such Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "; and" at the end of subparagraph (E) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or", and

(ii) by striking out subparagraph (F).

(b)(1)(A) Section 3121(a)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to definition of wages) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) that part of the remuneration, received by an individual during any payroll period, which is equal to the number of withholding exemptions claimed by such individual under chapter 24 with respect to such payroll period multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in section 3402(b)(1); except that this paragraph shall not apply in determining an individual's wages for purposes of the tax imposed on employers with respect to wages received by such individual under section 3111(a)".

(B) Section 3122 of such Code (realting to Federal service) is amended by striking out the second sentence.

(C) Section 3125 of such Code (relating to returns in the case of governmental employees in Guam, American Samoa, and the District of Columbia) is amended by striking out the last sentence of subsection (a), the last sentence of subsection (b), and the last sentence of subsection (c).

(D) Section 6413(c)(1) of such Code (relating to special refunds of certain employment taxes) is amended—

(i) by striking out "or (E) during any calendar year after the calendar year 1971, the wages received by him during such year exceed $9,000,"; and

(ii) by striking out ", or which exceeds the tax with respect to the first $9,000 of such wages received in such calendar year after 1971".

(E) Section 6413(c)(2)(A) of such Code (relating to applicability in case of Federal employees) is amended by striking out "$7,800 for the calendar year 1968, 1969, 1970, or 1971, or $9,000 for any calendar year after 1971," and inserting in lieu thereof "or, $7,800 for the calendar year 1968, 1969, 1970, or 1971,".

(F) Section 6654(d)(2)(B) of such Code (relating to failure by individual to pay estimated income tax) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) The term 'adjusted self-employment income' means the net earnings from self-employment (as defined in section 1402(a)) for the months in the taxable year ending before the month in which the installment is required to be paid."

(2)(A) Section 209(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out paragraph (6).

(B) Section 213(a)(2) of such Act is amended by striking out "$9,000" where it appears in clauses (ii) and (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "twelve times the second figure specifically set forth in the last line of column III of the table in section 215(a) (as in effect on the last day of the year)".

(C) Section 215(e)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "the excess of $7,800 in the case of any calendar year after 1967 and before 1972, and the excess of $9,000 in the case of any calendar year after 1971" and inserting in lieu thereof "and the excess of $7,800 in the case of any calendar year after 1967 and before 1972".

(c) The amendments made by subsection (b) (except paragraphs (1)(F) and (2)(A)(ii) thereof) shall apply only with respect to remuneration paid after December 1971. The amendments made by subsection (a) and by subsections (b)(1)(F) and (b)(2)(A)(ii) shall apply only with respect to taxable years beginning after 1971. The amendment made by subsection (b)(2)(C) shall apply only with respect to calendar years after 1971.

"(3) with respect to wages paid after December 31, 1974, the rate shall be the percentage determined (with respect to such wages) under section 3126."

(d)(1) Subchapter C of chapter 21 of such Code (general provisions relating to taxes on employees and employers under Federal Insurance Contributions Act) is amended by redesignating section 3126 as section 3127, and by inserting after section 3125 the following new section:

"SEC. 3126. DETERMINATION OF TAX RATES.

"(a) INITIAL DETERMINATION OF RATES.—On or before October 1, 1974, the Secretary or his delegate and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall jointly estimate and determine (in accordance with subsection (c))—

"(1) the rates of tax under sections 1401(a), 3101(a), and 3111(a) which would be required in current prices, for the five-year period beginning January 1, 1975, and for each subsequent five-year period beginning on or before January 1, 2045, to assure that social security revenues for the five-year period involved will be equal to social security expenditures for such period and that the total amount in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund will not be less at the end of such five-year period (assuming the continuation of the current method of allocation between such Funds) than 90 percent of the estimated amount of the social security expenditures to be made during the first year of the immediately following five-year period; and

"(2) the rates of tax under sections 1401 (b), 3101(b), and 3111(b) which would be required in current prices, for the five-year period beginning January 1, 1975, and for each subsequent five-year period beginning on or before January 1, 1995, to assure that hospital insurance revenues for the five-year period involved will be equal to hospital insurance expenditures for such period and that the total amount in the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund will not be less at the end of such five-year period than 90 percent of the estimated amount of the hospital insurance expenditures to be made during the first year of the immediately following five-year period.

"(b) PERIODIC REVIEW OF RATES.—On or before October 1 of 1979 and of each fifth year thereafter (up to October 1, 2044, in the case of rates specified in subsection (a)(1), and up to October 1, 1994, in the case of the rates specified in subsection (a)(2)), the Secretary or his delegate and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall jointly review the rates of tax determined under subsection (a) for the five-year period beginning on the following January 1. If in their judgment any of the rates as so determined do not give the assurance required by subsection (a) they shall jointly redetermine such rates in the manner provided by such subsection; and such redetermination shall supersede the estimate and determination made with respect to such rates for the five-year period involved under subsection (a).

"(c) METHOD OF DETERMINATION.—The rates of tax determined under subsection (a) or (b) with respect to any calendar year in a given five-year period shall be such that—

"(1) the total revenue received in the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund as a result of the tax under section 3101(a) with respect to wages received during such calendar year will be the same as the total revenue received in such Trust Funds as a result of the tax under section 3111(a) with respect to wages paid during such calendar year;

"(2) the total revenue received in the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund as a result of the tax under section 3101(b) with respect to wages received during such calendar year will be the same as the total revenue received in such Trust Fund as a result of the tax under section 3111(b) with respect to wages paid during such calendar year; and

"(3) the rates of the taxes under sections 1402(a) and 1402(b) on social security income derived in or attributable to taxable years beginning in (or with the first day of) such calendar year are equal to the rates of the taxes under sections 3101(a) and 3101(b), respectively, with respect to wages received during such calendar year.

"(d) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

"(1)(A) the term 'social security revenues' means all amounts appropriated to the Federal Old-Age and Survivors Insurance Trust Fund and the Federal Disability Insurance Trust Fund under section 201 (a) and (b) of the Social Security Act, plus all interest and proceeds from sales and redemptions credited to such Trust Funds under section 201(f) of such Act, plus any other amounts (including amounts described in sections 201(g), 217(g), 218(h), and 228(g) of such Act) which may be appropriated or transferred to or deposited in such Funds in accordance with any provision of the Social Security Act or of any other law;

"(B) the term 'social security expenditures' means all benefit payments made from such Trust Funds (as described in section 201(h) of such Act) under sections 202, 223, and 228 of such Act, plus all administrative expenses incurred in connection with the payment of such benefits or otherwise incurred in connection with the programs involved, plus any other amounts which may be transferred from or expended out of such Funds in accordance with any provision of the Social Security Act or of any other law;

"(2)(A) the term 'hospital insurance revenues' means all amounts appropriated to the Federal Hospital Insurance Trust Fund under section 1817(a) of the Social Security Act, plus all interest and proceeds from sales and redemptions credited to such Trust Fund under section 1817(e) of such Act, plus any other amounts which may be appropriated or transferred to or deposited in such Fund in accordance with any provision of the Social Security Act or of any other law; and

"(B) the term 'hospital insurance expenditures' means all benefit payments made from such Trust Fund under part A of title XVIII of such Act, plus all administrative expenses incurred in connection with the payment of such benefits or otherwise incurred in connection with the program under such part A, plus any other amounts which may be transferred from or expended out of such Fund in accordance with any other provision of the Social Security Act or of any other law.

"(e) ROUNDING.—Each rate of tax determined under subsection (a) or (b) shall be rounded to the nearest .1 percent (or to the next higher .1 percent if it is a multiple of .05 but not of .1).

"(f) PUBLICATION AND EFFECTIVE DATE OF NEW RATES.—Upon determining under subsection (a) or (b) the rates of tax to be imposed under sections 1401, 3101, and 3111 during any five-year period, the Secretary or his delegate (on or before October 1 of the calendar year in which the determination is made) shall publish such rates in the Federal Register; and, if any such rate as so determined for such five-year period is different from the corresponding rate for the year in which the determination is made, he shall also publish in the Federal Register the actuarial assumptions and methodology used in making the estimates and determinations involved. The rates as so published shall be effective—

"(1) in the case of the tax under section 1402, with respect to taxable years beginning in (or with the first day of) the five-year period with respect to which the determination is made,

"(2) in the case of the tax under section 3101, with respect to wages received during such five-year period, and

"(3) in the case of the tax under section 3111, with respect to wages paid during such five-year period."

(2) The table of sections for subchapter C of chapter 21 of such Code is amended by striking out the last item and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 3126. Determination of tax rates.
"Sec. 3127. Short title."

(e)(1) Chapter 2 of such Code (relating to tax on self-employment income) is amended by redesignating section 1403 as section 1404, and by inserting after section 1402 the following new section:

"Sec. 1403. CREDIT FOR TAX ON WAGES.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—The amount of tax deducted under section 3102 from the wages of any individual shall be allowed to the recipient of such wages as a credit against the tax imposed by section 1401.

"(b) YEAR OF CREDIT.—The amount so deducted during any calendar year shall be allowed as a credit for the taxable year beginning in such calendar year. If more than one taxable year begins in a calendar year, such amount shall be allowed as a credit for the last taxable year so beginning."

(2) The table of sections for chapter 2 of such Code is amended by striking out the last item and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Sec. 1403. Credit for tax on wages.
"Sec. 1404. Miscellaneous provisions."

(f) The amendments made by this section shall apply only with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1971, and with respect to wages received or paid after December 31, 1971.

BENEFITS RESULTING FROM INCREASE IN TAX AND BENEFIT BASE

SEC. 3. (a) Section 215(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof (after the table of benefits) the following new paragraph:

"In order to reflect in the computation of benefits any social security income in excess of the maximum amount specifically set forth in column III of the preceding table, the Secretary shall determine, keep current, and publish in the Federal Register a revision of such table, extending columns III, IV, and V in the manner provided in this paragraph. The amounts on each additional line of column III shall be the amounts on the preceding line increased by $5 until the second figure in the last such additional line of column III is equal to the second figure in the last line of such column as specifically set forth in the table plus one-twelfth of $10,000. The amount on each additional line of column IV, up to and including the line on which in column III appears the figure most nearly equalling the second figure in the last line of such column as specifically set forth in the table plus one-twelfth of $5,000, shall be equal to the amount on the preceding line (in column IV) increased by an amount (per dollar of difference between the second figure in column III on such additional line and the second figure in column III on the preceding line) equal to one-half of the amount (per dollar of difference between the second figure in the last line of column III as specifically set forth in the table and the second figure in the next-to-last line of such column) by which the last figure specifically set forth in column IV of the table exceeds the next-to-last figure specifically set forth in such column; and the amount on each remaining additional line of column IV shall be equal to the amount on the preceding line (in column IV) increased by an amount (per dollar of difference between the second figure in column III on such additional line and the second figure in column III on the preceding line) equal to one-fourth of the amount (per dollar of difference between the second figure in the last line of column III as specifically set forth in the table and the second figure in the next-to-last line of such column) by which the last figure specifically set forth in column IV or the table exceeds the next-to-last figure specifically set forth in such column. The amount on each additional line of column V shall be equal to 1.75 times the amount on the same line of column IV. Any amount determined under the preceding provisions of this paragraph which is not a multiple of $0.10 shall be increased to the next higher multiple of $0.10. For purposes of the first sentence of this subsection and section 203(a), and for all other purposes of this title, the extension of the table as determined and published in the Federal Register at any given time under this paragraph shall be deemed to be a part of such table as in effect at such time."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to monthly insurance benefits payable under title II of the Social Security Act for months after December 1971, and with respect to lump-sum death payments under such title in the case of deaths occurring after December 1971.

(k) This section, and the amendments made by this section, shall take effect January 1, 1972.

TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS TO INTERNAL REVENUE CODE OF 1954

SEC. 5. (a)(1) The heading of chapter 2 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to tax on self-employment income) is amended by striking out "SELF-EMPLOYMENT INCOME" and inserting in lieu thereof "SOCIAL SECURITY INCOME".

(2) The table of chapters for subtitle A of such Code (relating to income taxes) is amended by striking out the item relating to chapter 2 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 2. Tax on social security income."

(b) Section 1402(h)(1)(B) of such Code (relating to exemption for members of certain religious faiths) is amended by striking out "wages and self-employment income" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "social security income".

(c) Section 1403(a) of such Code (relating to title of chapter) is amended by striking out "Self-Employment" and inserting in lieu thereof "Social Security".

(d) The amendments made by this section shall take effect January 1, 1972.

Mr. MONDALE. I wish to join with the Senator from Maine in commending the Senator from Wisconsin for what I think is a most creative proposal.

Unknown, I think, to most Americans, since adoption of the Internal Revenue Code in 1954 the proportion of revenues raised through the corporate income tax has dropped almost in half and the proportion of revenues raised through the payroll tax has almost tripled, while the proportion of revenue raised through the individual income tax has stayed about the same.

As the Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out, the amount being charged the wage earner in payroll taxes is rising at an astonishing rate. And I think he has accurately predicted it will soon be noticed by the average worker, when he finds that $40 or $50 will be taken out of that check each month, from money that has been programed and planned for essential expenditures at home.

I am sure that we will shortly be forced by the American public to change this system.

The question is whether those of us who have had a chance to see what is happening, who have seen these dramatic increases, who have seen the regressivity of the payroll tax and the imposition it makes upon hard-working Americans—should not act now, rather than wait a year or two and force the public to force us to face up to something we know is not right.

I think the Senator from Wisconsin is to be commended for leading this fight, making the case, and developing a record which, in my opinion, is unanswerable.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the names of the following Senators be added as cosponsors of amendment No. 1610: Mr. BAYH, Mr.

CHURCH, Mr. HARRIS, Mr. HART, Mr. MCINTYRE, and Mr. CHILES.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has rendered the public a service by focusing attention on the unfairness of the social security tax structure. And I agree with him that the assets depreciated range—ADR—should be repealed and the minimum tax increased. But I also believe social security benefits should be financed with a reformed social security tax structure and not out of general revenues at a time the Federal Government faces a $35 billion dollar deficit. I must therefore vote against amendment Nos. 1610 and 1609.

Mr. NELSON. I yield to the distinguished Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. I compliment the Senator on his amendments and the thrust of these amendments. I think he is putting his finger right on where a great problem exists, especially with respect to the information he has presented to the Senate with regard to some of the increases that are going to come into play with what we are trying to do about the system.

Mr. President, most of us want to do something about the system. Most of us want to increase some of the benefits of the system, and broaden the benefits; but I think we now realize that we are about to break the back of the person who is carrying the load in this country, and has been: the person who is earning up to $12,000 a year.

Prior to the increases we are making now, that working man has already had the feeling that he was paying more than his share. He already knows that this tax is not progressive. He does not understand exactly what it is, but I think when he gets a $21 a month increase in the money that he has to pay, he is going to get the message loud and clear.

We were struggling in Florida one time with a tax, and one sage old fellow stood up—he was not too articulate, but when he was speaking against that tax, which again was going to go on the working man, he said:

Some of you fellows up here that vote for this tax ain't coming back no more 'cept for a visit.

I think we do not get a reform of the system, there is going to be what some people call a taxpayers' revolt by the working man, and the guy earning this $12,000 a year is going to get some new horses. He is going to decide that the horses he has had have been riding him a little too much, and he is going to change the gait, I think, and change the horses.

I think the amendments of the Senator from Wisconsin make a lot of sense. I am delighted to be a cosponsor with him, and I hope the Senate will adopt the amendments.

Mr. NELSON. I thank the Senator from Florida.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1610—of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, have the yeas and nays been ordered?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They have not.

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART). The question is on agreeing to the amendment—No. 1610—offered by the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), and the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) are necessarily absent.

I also announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE) is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL).

If present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER,), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 52, as follows:

So Mr. NELSON's amendment (No. 1610) was rejected.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

SEC.—(a) Section 402 (a)(7) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out the comma and the language which follows "such aid," up to but not including the semicolon.

(b) Section 402(a)(8)(A)(ii) of such Act is amended by striking out "in the case" and all that follows through "such income for such month" and by inserting in lieu thereof the following: "in the case of the earned income of a dependent child not included in clause (i), a relative receiving such aid, and any other individual (living in the same home as such relative and child) whose needs are taken into account in making such determination, the first $60 (or, if such individual is not working at least 40 hours per week, or at least 35 hours per week and earning per week an amount at least equal to 40 times the hourly minimum wages specified in section 6(a)(1) of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, the first $30) of such earned income for such month, plus one-third of the next $300 of such income for such month, plus one-fifth of the remainder of such income for such month, except that (i) reasonable child care expenses (subject to such limitations as the Secretary may prescribe in regulations) will first be deducted before computing such individual's earned income."

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, this amendment would restore a provision in the committee bill dealing with dependent children. There are some cases which the welfare boards would like to get off the rolls. This is recommended by Mr. T. N. Tangedahl, acting executive director of the Department of Social Services of North Dakota. He cites several examples. I will read one case which he thinks should be taken off the rolls, but because of the present law he cannot do so.

Case No. 4 is a mother and three children. She was receiving $300 per month AFDC. She was eligible for food stamps and all medical care. She secured employment paying $927.34 per month. Under present law she continues to be eligible for an AFDC payment of $22 per month, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance.

This is on case of the four cases he cites. I could read on.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, it is not necessary for the Senator to read on. We are persuaded that he is right. We understand the amendment. We agreed to it in the committee, and I feel that it should be agreed to. I do not think there would be any votes against it.

Mr. YOUNG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a portion of Mr. Tangedahl's letter, starting with page 3, "Modification of Federal Statutes Which Require States To Continue AFDC Payments When No Need Exists," together with other related material.

There being no objection, the excerpt and the material were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

3. Modification of Federal statutes which require States to continue AFDC payments when no need exists.

In the last five years both our caseload and expenditures have approximately doubled in the AFDC program. There undoubtedly are numerous contributing causes, such as the dramatic increase in the number of divorces and legal separations in North Dakota, along with a relatively recent decision of the U.S. Supreme Court ruling that all stepchildren are potentially eligible for AFDC. In our opinion, however, the major reason for the increase in caseload and expenditures is the result of a law enacted by Congress which requires us to provide AFDC payments to families where there is no need. Some persons refer to the "earned income disregard" provisions of Section 402 (a) (8) (ii) of Title IV of the Social Security Act as a work incentive; some refer to these provisions as inadequate. We consider them as outrageous in a program based on need.

Some years ago a lack of employment opportunities for mothers with children had a direct affect on our caseload. Since Congress amended Section 402 (a) (8) (ii) of Title IV of the Social Security Act we are unable to close AFDC cases even though the mother secures employment. A conservative estimate places the present number of employed AFDC caretakers, usually the mother, at 900 or 22% of the AFDC caseload. We believe at least half of these cases should be closed. We have selected some cases at random to illustrate the situation, and are enclosing copies of current budgets.

Case No. 1 is a mother and two children. She was receiving $245 per month AFDC. She was eligible for food stamps and all medical assistance. She found employment with a gross salary of $446.33 per month. Under present law she continues to be eligible for $148 per month AFDC, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance.

Case No. 2 is a mother with one child. She was receiving $190 per month AFDC. She was eligible for food stamps and all medical assistance. She secured employment at a monthly salary of $516.53. Under present law she continues to be eligible for an AFDC payment of $102 per month, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance.

Case No. 3 is a mother with three children. She was receiving $300 per month AFDC. She was eligible for food stamps and all medical care. She secured employment paying $548 per month. Under present law she continues to be eligible for an AFDC payment of $175 per month, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance.

Case No. 4 is a mother and three children. She was receiving $300 per month AFDC. She was eligible for food stamps and all medical care. She secured employment paying $927.34 per month. Under present law she continues to be eligible for an AFDC payment of $22 per month, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance.

Prior to the amendment referred to above, which was enacted by Congress, we would have closed these four cases. Under present law we are required to make AFDC payments and as a result this also increases our medical assistance costs. We think this situation compounds inequity. Our only response to comments and criticisms is that the payments must be made according to a law enacted by Congress. Some people still believe that Congress would not enact such laws. To us it seems ridiculous that a mother with three children, earning $927 per month, must be found eligible for an AFDC payment, plus food stamps, plus all medical assistance. We strongly recommend that this Section of the Social Security Act be amended. We have suggestions if anyone is interested.

Sincerely yours,

T. N. TANGEDAHL, ACSW,
Acting Executive Director.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. —. If as a result of the provisions of this section 511 of this Act, the rental charge for a family which occupies a low rent housing dwelling unit assisted under the United States Housing Act of 1937 would be increased, the required adjustment in the family's rental charge will be accomplished as follows:

(1) On the first day of the twelfth month immediately following the month in which this section becomes effective, the family's monthly rental will be increased by an amount equal to one-half the additional amount of rent which would be required; and (2) on the first day of the twenty-fourth month following the month in which this section becomes effective, the family's monthly rental charge will be increased to the full amount of the rental charge required. Notwithstanding any other provision of Federal law or regulations thereunder, a public agency shall not reduce welfare assistance payments to any tenant or group of tenants in low rent housing as a result of the provisions of this subsection which postpone the imposition of the full amount of any increase in rental charge.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we have examined this amendment. It has been studied by the staff and also by the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE) and those of us who are managing the bill and we think it is a good amendment and should be agreed to by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN).

The amendment was agreed to.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART). The Chair recognizes the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON).

The Chair would like to explain that when the Chair got up here there was a list. So, on occasions, it has been convenient but at other times it has been frustrating. Periodic consultations have modified the list. As long as the present occupant of the Chair is here, there is going to be no list. The Chair will respond to the first Senator addressing the Chair.

The Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I should like to say that I have been standing here for quite a long time waiting to get recognized.

I have an amendment at the desk which I ask be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill, insert the following new section:

SEC. — Part D. of Title IV of the Social Security Act, as added by this Act, is further amended, effective February 1, 1972, by adding after Section 458 the following new section:

"SEC. 459. The Child support collection or paternity determination services established under this part shall be made available to any individual not otherwise eligible for such services under the proceeding sections of this part upon application filed by such individual with the Attorney General or, if a State or political subdivision has a program approved under Section 454, with such State or political subdivision as may be appropriate. Any costs incurred by the Attorney General (or by a State or political subdivision) in furnishing such services shall be paid by such individual by deducting such costs from the amount of any recovery made.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator's amendment would allow a mother not on welfare to use the mechanisms provided in the bill to require a runaway father seeking to avoid his duty to his family, to support their children.

The idea of the amendment is, rather than make the mother become a welfare client she could have the assistance of the government in obtaining support from the runaway father.

I hope that the Senate will agree to this amendment.

Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I should like to thank the distinguished chairman for his eloquent explanation of my amendment and would like to congratulate him and his committee for the fine work they have done in helping to stop this business of increasing the AFDC load because of runaway fathers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I call up my two amendments at the desk, and ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc, and that the reading thereof be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; the amendments will be considered en bloc and will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The texts of the two amendments are as follows:

On page 581, line 6, insert immediately before the period the following: "or otherwise permanently residing in the United States under color of law".

At the end of Part A, Title 5 of the bill, add the following new section:

"SEC. —. Meaning of "permanently residing in the United States under color of law"; for the purposes of this act and any provision of the Social Security Act amended by this Act, the term "alien permanently residing in the United States under color of law" shall include an alien refugee who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of the application of the provisions of section 203 (a) (7) or section 212(d) (5) of the Immigration and Nationality Act".

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I introduce these two amendments on behalf of my colleague, Mr. GURNEY, and myself. They simply make clear in the bill that it would not detract from the right to benefits of Cuban refugees, of which 12,000 reside in Florida. They are receiving benefits presently under the existing system, but there has been some question as to whether, under this bill, they would be eligible. These amendments would make clear that they are eligible.

The staffs of the distinguished chairman and the ranking minority member of the committee have seen these amendments. If there is no objection, I should like to have them agreed to.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, these amendments which we are introducing at this time are designed to prevent a great and unintended economic hardship being placed upon the people of Dade County, Fla.

I know that the Finance Committee and its distinguished chairman did not intend this result, however, the effect of the limiting language concerning aliens which appears in the next to the last paragraph on page 466 of the committee report does just that.

Florida has about 12,000 refugees from Communist Cuba within its borders who are either over 65 years of age, blind, or disabled. At my request, HEW has provided an estimate that the payments for these individuals are about $18 million per year.

Mr. President, the Cuban refugee program is one of Federal responsibility and the State of Florida should not be required to bear the cost of that commitment alone. The categories of eligibility must, in all fairness, be amended to include these political refugees.

It was the Federal Government that established, under four successive administrations, the policy of opening this country's doors to refugees from Castro's tyranny. This policy was formalized during the preceeding administration by President's Johnson's personal actions and by international agreement.

Moreover, under international protocols of general application, the United States has agreed to accord refugees staying in its territory equal treatment. If these amendments are not approved, the State of Florida, and Dade County will be forced to pay for programs which ought to be supported by the Federal Government. I am sure that this is not what the Members of this body want.

It is clear where the responsibility for these individuals lies and I urge my colleagues to support these two amendments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we have no objection to the Senator's amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is an agreeing to the amendments en bloc of the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES).

The amendments were agreed to en bloc.

AMENDMENT NO. 1613

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1613 and ask that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, further reading of the amendment will be dispensed with and it will be printed in the RECORD at this point.

The text of the amendment is as follows:

At the end of title V of the bill, add the following new section:

TREATMENT OF CHILD'S SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS UNDER SUPPORT REQUIREMENTS

SEC. . (a) Section 152 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to definition of dependent) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) CHILD'S SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFITS.—For purposes of subsection (a), child's insurance benefits received by or on behalf of an individual under section 202(d) of the Social Security Act shall not be taken into account in determining whether the individual received more than half his support from the taxpayer."

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to taxable years ending after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, this amendment is cosponsored by Senators BOGGS, MANSFIELD, SCOTT, AIKEN, COOPER, RIBICOFF, PACKWOOD, RANDOLPH, STEVENS, MOSS, JAVITS, DOLE, BROCK, TAFT, GAMBRELL, DOMINICK, and BEALL. It is a simple amendment.

Its purpose is to provide that social security benefits paid on or on behalf of a child shall not be taken into account in determining whether such child is receiving more than half the support from the taxpayer. The purpose is to correct what I consider to be a gross inequity in the law.

Under the present law, a parent must contribute more than half the cost of a child to claim the child as a deduction. Social security benefits paid in behalf of children of a widow or widower is considered income of the children. Consequently, the widow must be able to prove that she contributed more to the support of the child than the value of the social security benefits paid for that child. I believe this is grossly unfair to widows or widowers of low income.

Let me illustrate and this is a true case. A widow with four children received $1,900 social security benefits on behalf of the children. She worked and earned $3,000 a year. So she had a total of $4,900 to raise her children. But the Internal Revenue challenged her right to a deduction for the children because she could not prove that she contributed more than $1,900 for the care of her children.

This is a gross inequity because it discriminates against widows with low annual incomes. If a widow has a large annual income she can, of course, pass the dependency test easily. For example, if this widow has a $20,000 income instead of $3,000, she would have no difficulty at all showing that she contributed more than $1,900 for the care of her children. Furthermore, a wealthy family can hire lawyers and be in a position to prove it, but the widow with a low income is handicapped because she is not in the practice of keeping receipts, canceled checks, or the other things which she must do in order to show that she is supporting her children to this extent.

As I say, this is a true case which occurred in Delaware. We will find it is true throughout the country.

I received a letter from the widow who caused me to introduce this legislation, and I should like to read it to the Senate:

MAY 8, 1972.

Senator WILLIAM V. ROTH, JR.,
New Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR ROTH: I am writing in an appeal for help in my problem with Internal Revenue Service. This is my story.

My husband died in 1968, leaving me with four children, ages 17 yrs, 15 yrs, and twins 2½ years. I applied for and received Social Security benefits for these children. However, I still claimed them as dependents on my Income Tax return. The problem is this: They are checking my Income Tax Return for the year 1970, because they say that since they received Social Security benefits I cannot claim them as dependents. Now, this seems a little ridiculous to me because anyone can tell you that Social Security benefits will not contribute enough income to keep an individual alone.

This is all I receive and I have never asked for anything else as far as medical, dental, or anything. I have continued to work every day, which necessitates babysitting money, which I am not wondering if it was a wise choice. My husband, being a heart patient, did not obtain the mortgage fee insurance he should have had. As a result of this, I had to give up the home we had built. I have made personal loans when the going became rough and have done the last and final thing I can do. I have sold my furniture to pay bills. I have nothing else to sell. I have borrowed the limit I feel I can repay.

The Internal Revenue Service notified me that I must substantiate that I had contributed more than Social Security benefits towards the keeping of these children. This I have tried to do as you will see by the enclosed. Cancelled checks are all I have to prove anything, since I had no idea that there was any question that I would claim them for dependents. They will not accept what I have given them as proof. I did not submit copies of cancelled checks for the whole year, but picked different months to try to show them that what I had given them was correct. I do not know what else I can do. I do know that I think I should be allowed some credit for working every day and using this money to keep my family in a home, food, clothing, heat, medication, etc.

There are only a few alternatives that I can think of: No. 1—Send all the bills pertaining to the children's upkeep to IRS, No. 2—Have the children put in a home and let them receive the Social Security on which they must be kept, No. 3—Quit work, apply for additional benefits and let the taxpayers keep all of us, or No. 4—Find the deepest river and highest bridge and take a flying leap and let the State worry about keeping the children. What would you suggest?

I only have ten days to come up with more proof for IRS, but I really at last am at my wit's end. I only know that it takes all I make plus what they receive to keep a roof on their heads, clothes on their back, food in their stomachs, insurance, and medication when they are ill.

The woman was finally able to prove her case, but she has given up claiming the children as a deduction because the burden is too great. But as I say, this part of the revenue code is a gross inequity. Instead of rewarding a woman and giving her an incentive to work, we are encouraging her to go on relief. I might say that I have checked into the amount she would obtain if she were to go on relief and it turned out that she would receive more than $5,000 a year in welfare benefits. And of course she would pay no taxes.

I say this is contrary to the purpose of H.R. 1, that is to get people back to work and taking care of their own children.

I ask the Senate to support my amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) has taken a very fine initiative. As a cosponsor of the amendment I am very grateful to the Senator from Delaware for taking the lead in helping my State and I believe all others.

I hope the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is offering a tax amendment. I would plead with the Senator not to offer it at this time. Under the law, if one wants to claim a deduction for the support for his own child, he has to show that he is providing at least 50 percent of the child's support.

Let us assume that the mother is drawing social security payments for herself and is also being paid the benefits for the child. The child is getting maybe $80 from the social security system and the mother is paying about $40 of her income to support the child. So, she does not meet the 50 percent test.

The Senator would say, "Let us not count social security, so that she can deduct the $40 she is spending to support her child."

He wants to say that Congress provided the deduction and we would not deny them the tax advantage they would have had if Congress had not provided them with social security benefits.

It would not stop here. Someone else would say, "All right, here is a case involving veterans' benefits." And the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) has demonstrated how eloquent he can be in saying that veterans are being discriminated against.

The will say we are not counting the child's income from social security for the tax benefit, but we are holding it against the child so that he will not get the veterans' benefit. They will say that the son should get the veterans' benefit, because the father served his country. They will say that Congress meant to have him receive the benefit and did not mean to penalize him. It will be said that we are discriminating against veterans, and indeed we are.

Then someone comes up with the question of civil service retirement income and the Government insurance program. They will say that we are discriminating against our loyal Government employees and that we have to take care of them, too.

Goodness knows, I do not know where we would go with this, and these are only the examples that I think of offhand.

By the time we get through, everything that has a Government interest or a humane interest is presented to us for consideration. The next thing we know, someone will mention a private insurance plan into which the father has paid for insurance protection. It will be said that we are discriminating against the child and the father who toiled and sought to protect his family with a private insurance plan. It will be said that we do not want to discriminate against thrift and family responsibility and that we should not count the income from the private insurance that is being paid to the family.

It goes on and on and on.

Mr. President, if I thought this was an amendment to which we could agree at this point, I would be willing to do it. However, I hope that the Senator will let us study this matter and see if we can take care of the very meritorious cases without setting a precedent that will come back to plague us again and again and without having the argument made to us that we are discriminating against widows, veterans, and people who work for the railroads and against private enterprise.

If we pass this amendment, some of these things will come back to plague us. It will be said that the Senate voted for this and must have known what it was doing, that the Senate created a precedent for which we should do for all these other people. We would set the stage for it to come back to haunt us and we will be as bad to provide tax advantages for one group or another until it goes on indefinitely. I think the Senate ought to pursue its own orderly processes and give us an opportunity to consider this, which is a tax amendment, as a tax matter. I assure the Senator that if the Senator would respect our position and not be insistent about it at this time, we would consider the amendment and resolve it in a way that would not lead to the consequences that I fear.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I feel that this is a grave injustice. I feel very strongly that it is wrong for us to leave on the books legislation that has the opposite effect of what we are trying to accomplish by welfare reform; that is, to get people to go back to work.

I think it is an unbelievable injustice for social security benefits, under these circumstances, to count as income of the children. And the unreal thing about it is that the widow or widower who has adequate income does not suffer in these kinds of circumstances because she can easily show that she has enough income to provide more than half of the support of the child.

I ask you how can a widow with only $3,000 income of her own demonstrate that she has given more than $1,900 which she receives in social security benefits for the care of her four children.

I believe we are putting an impossible task upon this widow. I think the current law disillusions people as to the equity of our laws; it helps make people lose confidence in the fairness of our Government. In fact, it runs counter to the whole purpose of the welfare reform we all seek.

I understand that 3 or 4 years ago similar legislation was offered and passed the Senate, but it was not agreed to in conference. I am not interested in going through the exercise of trying to make a point on the floor. I am interested in correcting what I think is a fundamental inequity in law. I think it is time that we stood up to this, and not do it on the basis of how it affects other provisions.

It is my understanding, Mr. President, that while other programs such as railroad retirement or veterans' survivor benefits could be in the same category, and frankly I would be happy to accept a perfecting amendment to include them, it nevertheless is my understanding, that veterans' survivor benefits take in consideration social security benefits, so it pretty much washes out.

From the standpoint of cost it will not be as much as some claim because many widows and widowers are not aware that they are not entitled to dependency exemptions because of social security benefits.

I think this is a situation that we should not postpone indefinitely but we should try to correct now in justice to those who are trying to do the right thing and who are willing to work to take care of the children and not go on relief.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Delaware. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. McINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. McGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) is paired with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF). If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Connecticut would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Ohio (Mr. SAXBE), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is paired with the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS). If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" and the Senator from Delaware would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 43, as follows:

So Mr. LONG's motion to lay on the table Mr. ROTH's amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, every Senator who voted against the motion to table I presume would vote for the amendment and, to save the Senate's time, I ask unanimous consent to vacate the order for the yeas and nays, and I am willing to accept the amendment by a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. INOUYE). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Louisiana? Without objection, it is so ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask unanimous consent that its reading be waived.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment offered by Mr. MONDALE, for himself, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. CRANSTON, and Mr. BUCKLEY, is as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

CHILD CARE SERVICES

SEC. —— In order to provide financial assistance under section 403(a)(3) of the Social Security Act for child care services meeting the requirements of section 1130(a)(2)(A) of such Act (in addition to any funds which may be made available for such purposes from the State's allotment under section 1130(b)(1) of such Act), there are authorized to be appropriated $800,000,000 each for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1973, and for the succeeding fiscal year.

(b) From the sums appropriated under subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare shall allot to each State—

(1) an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 per centum of the sums so appropriated as the population of such State bears to the total population of all of the States; and

(2) an amount which bears the same ratio to 50 per centum of the sums so appropriated as the number of children in families receiving payments under title IV of the Social Security Act in such State bears to the total number of such children in all of the States.

(c) The Secretary shall reallot the amount of any State's allotment under this section which will not be required for the period for which such allotment is available to any other State which he determines has need thereof.

(d) For purposes of this section, the term "State" means any one of the fifty States, the District of Columbia, or Puerto Rico.

(e) Not withstanding any other provision of this Act, the provisions of section 431 and section 433(b) of this Act shall not be effective until such date as the Congress shall designate to subsequent legislation.

(f) Section 422 of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(c) The Secretary is directed to establish appropriated procedures to ensure that no child shall be the subject of any research or experimentation under this title (other than routine testing and normal program evaluation) unless the parent or guardian is informed of such research or experimentation and is given an opportunity as of right to except such child therefrom.

(d) Nothing in this Act shall be construed or applied in such a manner as to infringe upon or usurp the moral and legal rights and responsibilities of parents or guardians with respect to the moral, mental, emotional, or physical development of their children. Nor shall any section of this Act be construed or applied in such a manner as to permit any invasion of privacy otherwise protected by law, or to abridge any legal • • •

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, this amendment is offered by myself, the junior Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), the senior Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), and the senior Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the senior Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON).

It is designed to retain the $800 million in this bill for day care but send it through the present delivery system for day care in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, which involves the various State departments of welfare, and in the local government systems.

The amendment would retain the new $800 million child care authorization provided in the bill, but would make these funds available for child care through the existing title IV–A program, rather than through the creation of a new Bureau of Child Care.

Thus, the amendment supports the commitment in the bill for an expansion of day-care opportunities, but proposes that a different and more familiar mechanism be used to deliver the day care authorized.

DAY CARE NEEDED

Mr. President, I want to emphasize my support for an expansion of quality day care in the pending legislation. There is a tremendous need for more day-care opportunities in this country. Half of all mothers with school-age children, and one-third of all mothers with preschool children are working today. Yet, there are fewer than 700,000 spaces in licensed day-care facilities to serve the over 5 million preschool children whose mothers work.

I commend the committee for identifying this need, and for authorizing an additional $800 million to help meet it. The concerns I expressed yesterday were directed not at the objective of expanding day care, but solely at the mechanism proposed to provide this additional day care.

TITLE IV A PROPOSAL

That is why my amendment retains the commitment to authorize an additional $800 million for day care. And that is why it retains unchanged section 432 authorizing grants to States for establishment of model day care. While I believe very deeply that we need comprehensive child development legislation to provide a coordinated approach to day care and child development efforts, I do not believe we can overlook interim steps such as this while we await enactment of a more complete proposal.

Thus, our amendment would authorize an additional $800 million for child care under the existing title IV–A program in the Social Security Act, in addition to the $2.5 billion presently authorized under title IV–A for all social services, including child care. It would distribute these funds among the States according to a formula based 50 percent on population, and 50 percent on AFDC recipients in order to target it on areas of greatest need.

It would provide the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with authority to reallocate funds from States which will not use their entire allocation to States which would use more than their allocation. And it would be subject to the existing standards and requirements for title IV–A programs, including the Federal Interagency Day Care Standards.

Shifting the proposed $800 million authorization from a Bureau of Child Care to the existing title IV–A program—as we propose—would meet the concerns I have raised about the Bureau. By using an existing program, it would not add confusion and further fragmentation to the system of Federal assistance to child care. By retaining the Federal-State-local partnership arrangement in title IV–A it would not bypass the other levels of government or create a system with total Federal control. By avoiding a new and inadequate set of standards with respect to adult-child ratios and parent participation, it would be governed by the existing interagency day care standards now applicable to all federally assisted child-care programs.

Mr. President, I believe this amendment provides a more reasonable and more familiar framework through which to provide the additional and desperately needed funds for day care authorized in the committee bill.

This amendment, it seems to me, is essential——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, would the Senator be willing to agree to a time limitation?

Mr. MONDALE. I think I will in a few minutes. I am waiting for the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY) to arrive. Then I think we can enter into a time limitation, because I am anxious to dispose of this amendment quickly. At this time I yield to the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON).

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the debate on the amendments to H.R. 1 a member of the staff of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, Mr. Basil Condos, be granted the privileges of the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, is the Senator asking for the whole staff or just one member?

Mr. STEVENSON. I named Basil Condos of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. I just want to make sure about this amendment. During the debate on the child care bill having to do with the day care centers, I put in an amendment, as to which I had a big argument with the Senator from Minnesota, and finally prevailed on it, to let them go through the States where they could be prime sponsors, along with everybody else. Do I understand the Senator's amendment, if amended, would make sure this circle would be retained, instead of going directly from the Government to the welfare mother?

Mr. MONDALE. The Senator is correct. My amendment is very similar to the Dominick amendment which the Senator offered some months ago. The Bureau of Child Care which is set forth in this measure establishes a permanent new Federal office, which does not now exist, and permits it to run day care centers anywhere in the country, in any fashion it wishes, with no involvement of State or local government. The Bureau can completely disregard State departments of welfare, and probably will. There is no requirement that they do so. It is not even mentioned in the measure. It can completely disregard county and local governments. It ignores the present system, and sets up an entirely new delivery system. There is no allocation State by State. One State could get all of the $800 million set out in this amendment. In addition to that, there are no real adult-child standards set forth. The so-called standards in this bill require that there can be no fewer than eight or 10 children per staff member. Real standards are just the opposite, require no more than a certain number of children per adult.

I know the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY), who will speak shortly, thinks that this——

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. The Senator's amendment would do what? What would the Senator's amendment be in place of?

Mr. MONDALE. It would provide $800 million to be used in the present delivery systems established with HEW and the State Departments of Welfare, in the present way the day care under title IV-A of the Social Security Act is delivered.

Mr. DOMINICK. I am glad the Senator brought that out. What I do not want to do is set up a whole new agency to take care of that program.

Mr. MONDALE. I would like to make one further comment to the Senator from Colorado. I believe the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) will shortly be reading a letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare in which he very clearly opposes the committee's approach.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would urge Senators to remain on the floor during the debate on this amendment. It should be brief. One of the worst things is for Senators to hear the initial presentation, walk out and not hear the other side of the argument, and then spend years explaining why they did not understand the other side of the argument. This is an important amendment. I do not agree with the Senator's argument. I would like Senators to hear the committee's reasons why this amendment should not be agreed to. I hope Senators will hear both sides of the argument. I think the Senator's argument should be heard, and so should the position of the committee be heard.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. I agree with the Senator from Louisiana and hope Senators will listen to the opinion of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, who ought to know something about this. He says, in a letter dated October 4, of which copies are being distributed to all Senators, the following:

The Committee bill would establish a Bureau of Child Care within the proposed independent Work Administration. The powers and duties of the child care bureau would be essentially the same as those of the Child Care Corporation which Chairman Long offered on the parallel bill in the 91st Congress.

We would oppose these provisions just as we opposed them in 1970. We prefer instead the child care provisions in the House-passed version of Title IV, which would provide the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with the authority to bring together in a single system all federally-assisted child care, with priority to children of families assisted under the workfare provisions of the Family Assistance Plan. As I have repeatedly testified before a number of committees, we believe it is essential to develop a single, primary system for the delivery of all federally-assisted day care and child development services rather than further fragmenting the already highly disorganized and fragmented existing child care resources. In addition, the Administration prefers the House-passed version because it would place in HEW the responsibility for developing national standards for assuring the safety and quality of all federally-assisted child care services. We also favor inclusion of parents of children in such a system in advisory councils.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
October 4, 1972.

Hon. JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: Thank you for your letter of Friday, September 29, requesting the Administration's position on the Child Care provisions of H.R. 1 as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance.

The Committee bill would establish a Bureau of Child Care within the proposed independent Work Administration. The powers and duties of the child care bureau would be essentially the same as those of the Child Care Corporation which Chairman Long offered on the parallel bill in the 91st Congress.

We would oppose these provisions just as we opposed them in 1970. We prefer instead the child care provisions in the House-passed version of Title IV, which would provide the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with the authority to bring together in a single system all federally-assisted child care, with priority to children of families assisted under the workfare provisions of the Family Assistance Plan. As I have repeatedly testified before a number of committees, we believe it is essential to develop a single, primary system for the delivery of all federally-assisted day care and child development services rather than further fragmenting the already highly disorganized and fragmented existing child care resources. In addition, the Administration prefers the House-passed version because it would place in HEW the responsibility for developing national standards for assuring the safety and quality of all federally-assisted child care services. We also favor inclusion of parents of children in such a system in advisory councils.

With kindest regards.

Sincerely,

ELLIOT RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask the Senator this question——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President——

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the Senator has yielded to me and I would like to complete our argument, if I may.

Mr. LONG. Will the Senator yield for just one moment?

Mr. JAVITS. Let me complete the thought, then I will be happy to yield. The Senator knows I would never cross him, but I really want to complete the point.

Mr. LONG. I do not mind the Senator completing any point he wants to complete, but I would like to get a time limitation agreement, so that both sides would have an equal amount of time.

Mr. JAVITS. Can the Senator hold that a minute? That can come after I have completed as well as before.

Will the Senator from Minnesota tell me whether and to what extent, and how, his amendment differs from that adopted by the other body on this subject?

Mr. MONDALE. We do not create a new system. We retain the present title IV system. The letter from the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare makes the same point I made, that this new corporation that would be established under the pending bill goes completely outside the present delivery system, completely ignores the States, completely ignores the local governments, and sets up an entirely new organization with no standards.

I would like to add to the letter the Senator has read a letter which I received from the National Governors Conference, signed by Mr. Jensen, in which he opposes the establishment of this bureau. It says, among other things:

There is a total lack in the proposal of a presumed role for States in planning and administering child care programs. This is a serious deficiency in the proposal and is totally contrary to the policy position of the National Governors' Conference.

Mr. JAVITS. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. How does the amendment conform to the criteria the Secretary has stated?

Mr. MONDALE. In the sense that it turns the administration over to the Department of Health, Education and Welfare under the present delivery system.

May I also add that this proposal for establishing this separate bureau is also opposed, in addition to the administration and in addition to the National Governors' Conference, by the League of Cities, and the Council of Mayors, by the National Association for the Education of Young Children, the Child Welfare League, the Day Care and Child Development Council of the American Academy of Pediatrics, and the Children's Lobby.

I would now like to yield——

Mr. JAVITS. Before the Senator yields, will he yield to me again?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Let us get clear on this Governors' conference proposition. Do the Governors take the same position the Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare does on this subject?

Mr. MONDALE. That is corrcet.

Mr. JAVITS. That is clear?

Mr. MONDALE. Yes. I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the National Governors' Conference opposing the creation of the corporation be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL GOVERNORS' CONFERENCE,
Washington, D.C., October 4, 1972.

Senator WALTER MONDALE,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR MONDALE: I appreciate your request for an analysis of the impact on States if the provision, as contained in the Senate Finance Committee's version of H.R. 1, to establish a Bureau of Child Care is enacted.

The National Governor's Conference has adopted the following policy statement regarding child care programs as related to welfare reform legislation:

"Provide for adequate day care programs for children of parents who are working or in training programs with provisions for a central state role and a comprehensive state plan, and which would not bypass States in the administration of such programs."

In analyzing the Senate Finance Committee's proposal in establishing the Bureau of Child Care, we would like to make the following comments:

1. We seriously question whether there is sufficient federal level knowledge of state or local conditions or the desirability as related to other licensing activities to justify the proposed federal preemption of all state or local health, fire, safety, sanitary, or other requirements with respect to facilities providing child care.

2. There is a total lack in the proposal of a presumed role for States in planning and administering child care programs. This is a serious deficiency in the proposal and is totally contrary to the policy position of the National Governor's Conference.

I hope that these comments will be useful to you.

Sincerely,

ALLEN C. JENSEN,
Special Assistant.

Mr. MONDALE. I have promised to yield to the distinguished junior Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY).

Mr. BUCKLEY. I thank my colleague from Minnesota.

Mr. President, I have become tremendously interested in this whole problem of child care. I did an extraordinary amount of research into the literature and the studies, and have talked with some of the experts, in trying to build up the case for torpedoing the proposal offered by my distinguished senior colleague (Mr. JAVITS) and by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE), because I thought that the child development legislation was too ambitious, going too far, and the system would harm the children.

But I believe that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota and I agree, as a result of what we have read in common, that the experience abroad and the experience and studies at home demonstrate that unless the quality and standards of day care, especially that given to very young children, is of the highest order, the chances for serious, real damage are too large to be ignored.

I therefore have joined in endorsing the amendment we are now discussing, and it includes a couple of provisions that I have recommended, for the simple reason that we have established, in existing legislation, a modus vivendi, we have established procedures for working through the States, we have established safeguards, and I think it would be dangerous to ignore those and to set up this statutory warehousing approach, when we could channel the children of welfare recipients through the existing structure and make sure that we have insured that limitation of the number of children per supervisor which we are told by every expert is critical, especially to those under 4 years of age.

I therefore urge the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator from New York, and I gratefully acknowledge his role in helping us to better understand the potential damage—permanent, disastrous damage—that can be visited upon preschool children if they are placed in environments that are custodial, understaffed, and unsupportive.

First of all, I think we all understand the best place for a young child or infant is with his parents in a healthy home. Everyone agrees with that. But if the parents work, or if the family, for some reason, is broken down so that the normal functions of a healthy family cannot be performed, and there must be a substitute day care program, every expert we heard from said, "For crying out loud, make sure it is a good one, supportive, strong, and when you are dealing with the youngest infants, make sure there is a very low staff ratio, maybe only one staff person to three, in order to deliver the kind of substitute care that offers help."

The Senator from New York has made that point very clear, and I want to say the bureau proposed here has no real standards whatsoever, and no government, not even the State or local government, will be able to intervene to protect the little children.

I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I think the record ought to be very clear that Senators are not discussing the issue of whether there should or should not be child care, or whether anyone in this body would for one moment deny the best possible solution of a very vexing problem. The only question is how to provide the best child care for those who justly, reasonably, and rightly should have it.

What is most persuasive to me, as a Senator, of anything I have heard yet, is to have another Senator, namely, the junior Senator from New York, say that his research at the beginning was devoted to the purpose of finding reasons to oppose this proposal, this amendment, but, having done more research, I suspect, than almost any of us, having pursued all the avenues, he comes out at a different exit from that which he expected to come out, and finds himself, therefore, able to give his full and generous support to the amendment.

That is very persuasive to me, and I thank the Senator for giving me a chance to make this observation.

Mr. MONDALE. I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania.

I should say that if the distinguished floor manager wishes to propose a time limitation agreement, he may do so.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, after those talking for the amendment have used up 25 minutes, if it is all the same, we will just take our turn when we can obtain recognition and explain our side without any limitation.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming. If he cares to have the floor in his own right, I will be glad to yield the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would hope that the Senator would yield and let us speak on the bill's side for a while.

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Louisiana is recognized.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, when we approached this problem of day care 2 years ago, the answer seemed very simple. If you wanted to seek a solution to a situation in which a mother wanted to work, she could be provided day care and could take a job and support the family. It all seemed very simple. Why not do that? Instead of paying the $2,400, for example, to a mother with a family of three, for doing nothing, why not just provide a day care center for the child and let the child be in the day care center while the mother took a job at $2,400 or more than that. Why not just let the mother earn something and put the child in a day care center?

That all seemed fine, and it seemed like a fine answer, until we discovered that these people, in wanting to seek such child development and a fulfillment of all the things that one could desire for the child, had worked it out so that the cost of day care for one child would exceed what the administration was proposing to support the whole family.

For example, the administration was proposing a level of $2,400 for a family of four. How much do you think it was proposed to pay for day care for just one child? $2,400. Now it is $2,700, going to $3,000. So it would cost more to put one child in a day care center than it would to support the whole family of four, which would cause one to say, "Just forget about the day center."

If Senators want to get the other side of the argument, they should just talk to their own secretaries. For example, take the best secretary in my office, a lady who is as well qualified to be a U.S. Senator as I am. She was Scott Lucas' secretary when she came here from the State of Illinois. She was the shorthand champion and the typing champion of the State of Illinois, and she is one of the best secretaries on the Hill. As a mother, she provided for her children when her husband died.

She said:

That cost of day care is ridiculous. I could take you to good day care centers in Washington, D.C., where you can provide day care for your child at a hundred dollars a month while you're working to earn a living for the family. At that rate, you could provide for three children, at the price those people would have you pay for one. That's ridiculous.

Then they passed a bill to establish some standards for day care. They got their standards so high that now the $2,400 is hardly enough to provide the care. They are violating their own standards because to comply with the standards would cost at least $2,400 a year, and they dare not obey the law that has been passed.

They passed themselves a bill for all this kind of child development that they could advocate, with all these lovely garden club groups and one thing and another. The people who advocate this type of care do not have the problem for the most part. They are thinking about how somebody else should do it, and they are going to make full use of all the psychologists, and all the psychiatrists, and all the social workers, and everything the mind of man can think of, to give full development to the child. And what do they achieve? They get a bill worked up in that fashion and get it sent to the White House, and it is vetoed, because it started out costing $2 billion and wound up costing $20 billion. The President sent it back to them with a veto message. They are still at war with the President today for vetoing that day care proposal.

It is all right with me if those who advocate the soup-to-nuts day care approach would spend as much as they can get. But they keep sending their day care proposals down and getting them vetoed and finding fault with the President, as though he is not interested in little children. Meanwhile, the mother cannot get a job because she cannot find day care.

This is what one of our experts in this matter told us. He said it appears that the main thing wrong with day care is that there is not enough of it, and the main reason why there is not enough of it is that it costs too much.

I discussed this problem with Ronald Reagan, who I think is a pretty knowledgeable man on these problems, and this is the way he put it to me:

I wouldn't suggest that you just put a child on a playground, in a sandbox; not at all. I would propose that you provide an adequate number of people to look after the child, have some entertainment, some recreation, some playing for the child to do; and, having done that, that you would provide for the child that way, and it would learn as much that way as in the home with the welfare mother. I would not advocate that you load the place down with psychiatrists, child development specialists, and so forth.

Senators heard the Senator from Minnesota say that he would like to have one person supervising every three children. That is pretty expensive, if you are going to pay a good wage, especially for a person qualified in child psychology, who has a college degree—one for every three children. It would cost a fortune. We cannot afford all that.

So here is our approach. We said, "If you fellows want to provide $2,400, $3,000 or $5,000 per year for a child, more power to you. If you can get your business together with the administration and you can provide all these fine, educational opportunities, great."

I think it is said that a child learns half of what he is ever going to learn before he is 5 years old. He has learned how to find his foot with his hand, and he has learned that this hand can touch this hand; that the fingers are attached to his hand, and so forth—all sorts of things he needs to know. I think it is fair to conclude that if he did not learn that at age one, he would learn it by age three. In any event, he would have found it out before he reached maturity.

Mr. President, our approach was that if you look at what mothers are actually doing—keep in mind that 45 percent of mothers are working to help support their families. Look at what those mothers are doing, those who are paying their own way. They are not enjoying any $2,400 day care or $3,000 day care. Most of them simply pay a neighbor to look after the child while they go out to earn some income.

We had an argument about the Tunney amendment, where a mother pays someone to come in and do some housework and look after the child while she is working. It is true that the person she is bringing in is not a college professor, but she does have someone looking after the child, and it is costing a great deal less than $2,400. They pay a neighbor or they prevail upon a relative to look after the child while they go to work. That is what people who are paying the taxes to support this elaborate day care arrangement provide for their own children.

So our approach was to say, "Great. If you can provide $2,400 a year for day care, or $3,000 a year for day care, or $5,000 a year for day care, more power to you. Go ahead and provide it, and we would advocate that every welfare mother take advantage of it, if you can find the opportunity to use it."

Perhaps it is preferred that she have the elaborate day care centers that the Senator from Minnesota advocates than to have something that costs less than that, but we could find money to provide about $800 million of day care. And we are proposing to do the one thing they have failed to do in talking about all their beautiful standards. We would provide for day care where they do not. If they can provide the $2,400 type of day care, great. The welfare mother will get that, if it is available. But suppose it is not available. We would say, "Take the $800 million; spread it across the country, to try to give every welfare mother a chance to go to work and improve the family income, if that is what she wants to do."

We want to do the best we can for the people with the $800 million. We want to provide day care where there is no day care for the mother—for a needy welfare mother who needs it and cannot get it. It would be great if she could get the $2,400, the $2,600, or the $3,000 day care. That would be great. But she cannot get it. The President cannot come into agreement with Senator MONDALE or with Senator JAVITS. They cannot get together on that. But we provide day care that she can get under this bill.

Now some people say that day care programs must bring all the parents in and they must consult and they must help in the teaching of the educational programs, and so forth. The people we are trying to help are the mothers who are so tired when they get home from work that they are in no position to go to the PTA. Still, we do offer to meet with the parents and for the parents to consult with the staff of the facilities on the development of the child and to observe from time to time the child while he is receiving care in such a facility. What more is needed? We provide in the bill for establishng standards in the day care centers, to assure adequate staffing—for example, the Bureau of Child Care could require at least one person supervising for every 10 children if this is a child care facility or a child development center.

Most States have about a 12-to-1 ratio. Thus, the Bureau could require a more favorable ratio from the parent's point of view than exists in most States today. Then we say, if there is a playground and children are running around playing tag or something of that sort, that on that basis one person can look after 25 children which is a fairly safe ratio. I think most Senators know what it is to be in school and have the teacher take the class out to the playground. You do not have to have more than one teacher doing that for 25 children. This is about the ratio which would seem appropriate.

Then we get into the question of bureaucracy. The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare does not want anyone to upset their control of these programs. And the man over there believes in the $2,400 standard. They are wedded to the situation where they are spending more money than we think should be necessary. Here we provide $800 million to provide for the people as much day care as can be provided, and we require that the day care meet minimal standards.

I was amazed when the Senator said we did not have in this provision any sort of standards for fire safety.

We were concerned about the fact of so many conflicting standards, some dictated by building material people for certain types of gutters, or material for sewage lines, and so forth and that some standards were so ridiculously high that we could not comply with them for that reason or because they were so confusing and contradictory. However, what we did write into the bill was a standard.

We wrote in a uniform standard, the National Safety Code of the National Fire Protection Association, 21st edition, 1967, as the fire standard. Now, why do we have that? Because that is the fire standard required in a nursing home. Many of the older people in those homes are not ambulatory; they do not have the power to get up and walk out of a building under their own power if fire should break out. So that is a very high standard, and a Federal standard.

If we meet that standard, that should be adequate for fire, rather than having to look at all the different local standards that might exist around the country. It should be adequate for day care purposes.

So that this is a matter of providing day care, of providing the $800 million on the basis of where the costs for a single child would not exceed the cost of supporting the entire family. In other words, the average family of four in this Nation under public welfare is getting about $2,400. The standards our friends advocate would make us spend more money than that to provide for a single child's day care. For three children, it would cost three times as much as to provide for a family on welfare, if we are thinking in terms of money—and we on the committee have to think about that. We know we have to raise the taxes to pay for these things and the Government is limited in the amount of money it can raise in the long run. And if we do not have the money we cannot put the program into effect, and the bill now is already in the serious position of probably being vetoed by the President, even though it will hurt the President during this election year, because the cost would break his budget something awful. So when we have to think about the limited resources available, we see that if we want to give mothers a chance to accept a job then we will have to use the $800 million in a program where we will not try to provide such an elaborate program that the children wind up without day care. Here is the $800 million for day care. We are trying to provide that day care for everybody rather than providing it for a favored few. We will take what we have available, establish a reasonable day care standard, and try to provide day care to all those who cannot get it.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. My memory is not too good but it seems to me that the basic welfare allotment in the State of New York for a woman with three children is somewhere between $5,000 and $6,000.

Mr. LONG. Yes. If you include medicaid and public housing.

Mr. BENNETT. What is the money benefit?

Mr. LONG. Roughly $4,000.

Mr. BENNETT. Roughly $4,000 for a woman with three children in New York. I think that is the highest in the United States. But if we put these standards on, even in New York, this woman cannot put her three children in a day-care center unless it will be paid for entirely by Federal money and she makes no contribution to it. This is the basic problem.

I should like to add one other point: The problem the committee is trying to wrestle with is to find a practical way in which women on welfare can go to work and to make it possible for them to go to work. One of the ways, obviously, that first suggests itself is that some women might take care of their neighbor's children while the neighbors are at work and be paid for that service. Now this is with no psychiatrist and no trained nurse, but the children would be approximately in the same atmosphere as they would be if the mother stayed at home.

A lot has been made about the fact that women should not be required to go to work because it is so important that the mother stay home and take care of the children. But we are not willing to let the children live for part of the day in the same atmosphere in which they would be living if the mother stayed at home.

And we have the question fundamentally whether we want to make it possible for these women to go to work or whether we want to carry out the highest possible standard for day care then force the Government to provide that for these women who go to work.

If we expect them to pay for it, obviously they cannot because they do not earn enough to pay really for the cost of the care of one child, let alone three.

So, the effect of the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota, in my opinion, is simply to say that we do not want them to go to work. And the easiest way to prevent them from going to work would be to write the Senator's proposal into law.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will yield in a moment. I will be glad to yield. However, I want to continue for a moment.

This is one more reason why some of the members of the Finance Committee, after studying the plan somewhat, thought it was a complete farce to expect to be able to put people to work under these conditions. We can take the city of New York, for example. From the tax point of view, they could not afford to put her to work. It would cost—even without the liberal benefits in New York—too much money. She would be getting $4,000 a year on welfare, plus the other liberal benefits that are available. However, if we want to put her to work, it will cost $7,200 for child care. It would be an enormous burden on the taxpayers to ask her to go to work.

If we take the average State, where the benefits would be $2,400 a year, it would cost three times as much for her to go to work as it would for her to stay home. So, the States would have to beg her not to go to work.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, the trouble with that argument is that the average annual cost under the proposed program is not $2,400, but about $800. That is what HEW testified, taking into account the fact that two-thirds of those served would be school-aged children, and preschool programs would involve both family day care and day care centers. So, the Senator has built a straw man that he is knocking down.

Mr. LONG. That is exactly the point. As it stands now, the Department has a standard that requires the payment of $2,400. They are only spending $800. They are violating their own law. When we pass a law we should pass a law that we can comply with. The Senator wants us to pass a law that we cannot obey.

I do not know how it would be done. I would hope that we would obey our own law. The point is whether it is better to try to pursue a step that would place us out of the market and force us to violate the law or whether it makes better sense to do what we can afford to do.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MUSKIE). The Senator from Wyoming is recognized.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for yielding. I think we ought to consider several things.

First, in the financial condition that most American families are in, they have to recognize priorities. They cannot have the best of everything if they are going to live well, and most people in America hope to. They have to decide what it is possible for them to do. They cannot have an airplane, a new car, and take a 3-months' vacation. They have to decide what is best. If they are typical, maybe it is important to take care of their children. Maybe it is important to give them a good vacation.

People decide what are the important things.

That is what the Finance Committee tried to do in the overall problem involved here. I certainly defer to my colleagues, the junior Senator from New York and the senior Senator from New York, in recognizing that they would like to impose a high ideal. That is all well and good. We can find all kinds of psychiatrists and psychologists who will testify to the extreme importance of child development before they reach school age. But after all has been said and done, not always do the children of psychiatrists and psychologists turn out to be the best citizens.

It just so happens that tender, loving care is a pretty important ingredient, too. It could be that a child's parent who has a Ph. D. is concerned about this and is giving the child basic instructions in honesty, decency, and fairplay. That child may turn out to be a better citizen than some child who is raised in what some psychologists might feel would be the ideal environment.

We are talking about a situation that would provide enough child care services to make it possible for more Americans to work in order to take care of their families. Some will say that we must have one supervisor for every three children.

If we are to do that, I can do no better than echo the words of my chairman and agree that it is a fine ideal. However, there would not be more than one out of 100 mothers who would be able to afford these services although they might want to go to work. They will not be able to place the child in that kind of an institution. It is too expensive.

I want to say that we went through this same thing when we were talking about homes for old citizens, or as the chairman has said, people who are not ambulatory. I sat on a special subcommittee to consider what we might like to do. If we had incorporated into law all of the ideas that the experts appearing before that Special Committee on the Aging recommended, I can guarantee the Senate that there would have been few deaths from fires; there would have been few deaths from any kind of infection or disease that could have been controlled; there would have been few deaths from accidents. In short, there would have been very, very few people in that kind of home because not one person out of 100 today needing that kind of home would be able to afford to be there.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, would the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HANSEN. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, is the Senator aware of the fact that in our bill we say that insofar as there is day care available as provided for in these other programs initiated by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, that they will seek this care there first and they will only get the day care we are trying to provide here if they cannot get it in some other program?

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, the manager of the bill is precisely correct. Something else occurred to us. If we were to make it possible for the neighbors of mothers to undertake the responsibility of caring for some extra children—not many, but maybe one, two, or three—it would provide an opportunity for employment.

The chairman of the Finance Committee immediately saw the opportunity for a job that would be constructive, that would be productive, that would be helpful, that would free some other mother so that she could take a job. I think that that sort of situation has a great potential.

However, if we are going to impose standards that require one supervisor for every three children, we are going to put the cost up to $2,400. If we have the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare put its finger into this operation, I can think of no better way to make certain that it is going to fail. Why do I say that? I say that because HEW recognizes only one standard. They want to have the same wages apply in Mississippi, Arizona, and Alaska, as apply in New York and Wyoming.

What does that mean? That means that instead of paying salaries that will compare with local conditions and the cost of living in Arizona or New Mexico as contrasted with Alaska and New York, they will have a Federal standard imposed. They will have a Federal grade level. I suppose that the supervisor will get a federally set salary.

A garbage collector in New York City, as I understand it, now starts at $12,000 a year. I would point out that we could hire plenty of businessmen in some of the States in this contry for less than $12,000 a year.

We will run into that situation if we let the HEW run it. They will tell us what standards and wages they will impose. They will impose such standards on us that it will not work. I can think of no better way to defeat this proposal than to say that we should turn it over to the HEW. We will then make certain that it fails.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I have never seen so many strawmen established and then knocked down so successfully. Two-thirds of the children in day care centers are not there on a full-time basis. They cost about $800 and the 1-to-3 ratio that I referred to was only for the most tender aged infants.

Mr. HANSEN. When does the child not become a "tender aged infant"?

Mr. MONDALE. Say, age 1 or 2.

Mr. HANSEN. The Senator says "say, age 1 or 2." I asked the Senator a question.

Mr. MONDALE. That is very tender—1 or 2.

Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I listened to the proponents of this amendment, and as pointed out by the distinguished chairman, the manager of the bill, I have listened to the persuasive arguments of the opponents of the bill. I must say I have not researched it in such depth as my distinguished colleague from New York, but I have visited many day care centers, and it is regrettable that this important piece of legislation has to come before the Senate in the waning days of the session and at 10:21 at night with so many Senators who are tired and so many Senators not in the Chamber, because it is a very vital piece of legislation.

What are we talking about? We are not talking about cars and airplanes, air fare, and all those things that have been mentioned. We are talking about children, and we are talking about children in the most formative years of their lives, the preschool years.

All the arguments that have been made are money arguments. I know we want to retain our fiscal sanity, and we have to be concerned about the cost of these major programs. But we are not concerned with merely putting a supervisor on a playground and watching the children play tag. That is what is wrong in the country today. These children are on the playgrounds, running the streets with no supervision at all, and consequently in the very early years of their lives they develop some of the habits which follow them throughout their lives.

Studies have indicated these children are not able to comprehend, they are not able to learn, they are slow readers, and when they go to school as our committee found out when we had exhaustive hearings on this subject, they fall far behind and they never catch up. They are doomed at birth and it keeps perpetuating itself so that generation after generation we have hundreds of thousands of children who are growing up in the jungle, who are let run loose like wild animals without a real opportunity to learn so that when they get to school they are completely unable to cope with the educational process.

Now, what kind of parents are we talking about? We are not talking about advantaged or educated parents. In the main, we are talking about poor, disadvantaged parents who themselves have not had the benefit of education. So what does that child get when he goes home? He has been in a day care center, with no supervision as he plays tag; some have psychiatric problems, some have psychological problems, and some have grave need for psychiatric and psychological care at that early age. So if we would provide these services it would help us down the road when we do not have to bother with the children who would become dope addicts, criminal offenders, and all the other myriad of social problems that come as a result of unattended children.

Two of the most important programs we have had, and they have been successful, are Headstart and the day care centers. As has been pointed out by the distinguished proponent of this proposal, you talk about $2,400 and going to $3,000, but in the main most of them are getting $800 for the care of two children. What kind of care can you give that one child for $800? It is hardly any care at all. They are sometimes worse off in that situation than they are at home.

Again, we are concerned with children who in many instances come from fatherless homes, so when they go home they have no paternal supervision at all, as pointed out by my distinguished colleague from Wyoming, or the distinguished manager of the bill; the mother has been working all day; she is tired when she gets home, and she has perhaps four or five teenage children to cope with; she does not have the reserve of energy to even give supervision or any guidance to this preschool age child who is in a day care center. So we are talking about something much more than just dollars and cents. We are talking about the future of this country because we are going to continue to have thousands and hundreds of thousands of children run wild in the streets of this Nation, and we are going to perpetuate all the social ills we have today. They are going to be multiplied over and over again, and we are going to compound our problems. We are not adding money to this bill; we are asking for a distribution formula. I wish to ask the Senator from Minnesota if that is correct.

Mr. MONDALE. If the Senator will yield, the difference is this. Under both the committee bill and my amendment the money which will be provided is exactly the same: $800 million. But under my amendment it would be provided under the present system which involves State welfare departments. But under the committee bill it would be provided by something no one can describe, a new bureau, not accessible to the States and not accessible to local government. And all the $800 million authorized in the pending bill could be spent in a single State.

Mr. BROOKE. And HEW made an in-depth study of it. I do not accept the charges that HEW is not knowledgeable. They are experts in the field. They have watched this day care center program and they know its strengths and its weaknesses. I have great respect for the Secretary, Elliot Richardson. He is an able administrator. I am sure he would not support this if he had not done research and if he did not believe this was the best way to do it. I think that is buttressed by the distinguished junior Senator from New York who admits initially he was opposed to the bill and he has come around because of his research.

Mr. BUCKLEY. I want to say that I voted against the bill. I will explain why.

Mr. BROOKE. Very well. That is a stronger case. He voted against the bill, and he did research and now believes this is the best way to handle it.

So I say this is very, very important legislation and I do not want to prolong the Senate on this. I think the debate is important. I have great sympathy with the charman of the committee. We all do. We know he has money problems, but we recognize the need to take care of these hundreds of thousands of young children of preschool age who need training and care, and this treatment, in many instances that they can only get in a day care center where they have these capabilities.

Mr. MONDALE. I would like to say in response that I agree. In light of the hour I wonder if the distinguished floor manager would like to agree on a time agreement of his choosing because I think at this point we are imposing on everyone and I certainly would like to agree, if he would, to a time agreement.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am going to move to table, after awhile, to bring this to a vote, but I shall wait until I obtain recognition.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York (Mr. BUCKLEY).

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, the hour is late. I shall take only 3 or 4 minutes.

I want to point out that I voted against the child development program after I did my homework, because I do not believe in mass produced, even quality mass produced, day care for children. I am talking about children under 4. I think every study and common human experience indicate that the best place for the average child is at home, and I do not exclude women on welfare from being average. The average mother gives the affection and attention which the child needs.

If, for some reason, the mother cannot stay at home, then the next best place is to bring in a relative or place that child with neighbors, where there is a continuity of a single adult the child gets to know, where the bonds of affection are established, and where the surroundings are familiar. I believe child care for children of these ages should be reserved only in a remedial situation, in the rare case where the mother is positively a bad influence, or where she cannot find neighbors to take care of the child.

I believe the parts of the bill which encourage one mother in an apartment with children to take on two or three more is terrific. It is good. But for that situation where a given child has to be taken out of its home and away from a kind relative or a foster home or a day care family and placed in the hands of someone who has no interest in him or abuses him, or is placed in a large group where he is adequately cared for, then, if we are not going to damage that child, we have to have these extraordinary and expensive measures. Given the great danger of psychological, intellectual, and emotional damage to young children from deprived or neglectful care, we cannot afford to scrimp when providing child care arrangements.

That is why I am arguing for standards which take this into consideration, even while begin in a different camp from my distinguished friend from Minnesota and my distinguished friend from Massachusetts, as far as the desirability of day care centers as institutions and the wisdom of a massive day care program for children in general is concerned.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MONDALE. I yield.

Mr. BROOKE. The Senator referred to a statement which was made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming about the mother putting her child for supervision with a neighbor and her children. But now, who is the neighbor in those instances? The Senator from New York has been in those areas. He knows what we are talking about. Is that neighbor any better qualified to take care of the child of her neighbor who is working, with her brood of four or five children, usually, and on an average, who in the main are running the streets themselves? Is that going to be the solution? Can we really in good conscience say the best system is to let the neighbor take care of the child of a neighbor who wants to work?

Mr. BUCKLEY. If that mother is the average mother with the average instincts.

Mr. BROOKE. How do we understand that? We have a problem——

Mr. BUCKLEY. I wish I had my file with me of exhibit after exhibit of people who have studied this situation with the greatest care. I think the most specific answer is in some of the European countries where they had day care centers for children—Czechoslovakia, for example—which are now discouraging it because of the experience they have had. Their experience has been that it is better to leave the mother at home or find a different situation.

Mr. BROOKE. The Senator is talking about children between the ages of 1 and 4?

Mr. BUCKLEY. Yes.

Mr. BROOKE. That is all right. I am not taking away from a mother's instinct, but do we find that in such neighborhoods?

Mr. BUCKLEY. I will credit all average mothers with mothers' instincts.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I yield to the senior Senator from New York.

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. MONDALE. First, Mr. President, I would like to say that I would hope that those Senators who have joined with me in this amendment could agree that we could end our arguments as soon as possible, so the floor manager could make his case and we could come to a vote.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I shall take only 5 minutes. I shall not duplicate what any other Senator has said, but I invite Senators who are here to look at the record.

The Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) has given us no figure for day care under his system. The fact is that, whether HEW is violating its own guidelines or not, it is spending only just about what would be spent under the Senator from Louisiana's plan, or even less, and for this reason: It would provide also for $800 million, but being piped through HEW, and HEW estimated it would provide for 175,000 slots. That is less than $1,000 a slot. That is divided, $219,000 for preschool and $584,000 for after school. So, on the cash expenditure, there is not any real difference.

The second point is that much was said about one employee to three children, but is there any difference in the Long proposal? If one reads the fine print, and I generally do, at page 839 of the bill, line 5, it reads:

> Any child under age three shall be considered as two children.

Lay that beside the items of supervision, and the ratio is 8 to 1. The highest is 10 to 1. That is 1 to 4 supervision of a child under 3, or 1 to 5.

What is the House proposal? From 3 to 8 years, 1 to 5; 4 to 6 years, 1 to 7; 9 to 14 years, 1 to 10.

One other point, again looking at the record: The committee has very nobly and very generously set forth the purpose of its title. Let us see if the purpose of this title sounds any different from the Senator from Louisiana's criticism of the purpose of HEW:

> It is therefore the purpose of this title to promote the availability of adequate child care services throughout the Nation by providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Child Care which shall have the responsibility and authority to meet the Nation's unmet needs for adequate child care services, and which, in meeting such needs, will give special consideration to the needs for such services by families in which the mother is employed or preparing for employment—> and will promote the well-being of all children by assuring that the child care services provided will be appropriate to the particular needs of the children receiving such services.

And here it is—

This child care, I might tell the Senator, under this definition, is likely to be more gold plated than which the Senator is accusing HEW of doing and which it is not.

The whole point is that the committee does not trust HEW. It is not that the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE) and I are in conflict with the President. If we were in conflict with the President, would the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare write us as being for our position and not for the committee's position? That is the whole point.

The reason why we have, with Senator BROOKE's views, with Senator MONDALE's views, and with Senator BUCKLEY's views, proposed this amendment is that it makes more sense to do this through a single agency that is doing it anyway and which is thoroughly experienced. There is every good reason for doing what we propose in the amendment, and not for doing it any other way.

I deeply believe this is one amendment that truly makes sense if we are going to do the job we have to do, and that the Senate ought to adopt it.

Mr. President, I would like now to present a statement of our basic position in respect to this proposal, in terms of the elements involved.

Our amendment would strike from the committee bill section 431 which would add to the Social Security Act a new title XXI for Child Care and establish a new "Bureau of Child Care" to administer the program; the new title contains an authorization of $800 million for fiscal year 1972 and "such sums" for years thereafter.

In lieu of the completely new program contemplated under title XXI, our amendment would provide a special authorization for child care in the amount of $800.0 million for each of the fiscal years 1973 and 1974, to be administered through the existing social services program conducted under title IV A of the Social Security Act.

We submit that now that implementation of comprehensive welfare reform will be delayed it is inappropriate to launch a new comprehensive program through an essentially new agency and that the interim authority which we propose is needed.

THE COMMITTEE PROPOSAL

Mr. President, unlike the Ribicoff and administration backed provision of H.R. 1, the committee proposal is not merely an effort to provide a new quotient of child care to deal with the problem of welfare dependency.

The committee proposal is in fact, nothing less than a comprehensive proposal for child care throughout the Nation for all children.

Section 2101(b) of the proposed new title states as its purpose:

To promote the availability of adequate child care services throughout the Nation by providing for the establishment of a Bureau of Child Care which shall have the responsibility and authority to meet the Nation's unmet needs for adequate child care services, and which, in meeting such needs will give special consideration to the needs for such services by families in which the mother is employed or preparing for employment, and will promote the well-being of all children.

Mr. President, as a comprehensive proposal for child care throughout the Nation it must not be adopted.

Its formulation is inimical to each of the basic criteria outlined by the 1970 White House Conference on Children.

It proposes a plan contrary to the administration's own general criteria for a comprehensive child care system and it is in fact opposed by the administration.

It is duplicative and inconsistent with S. 3617, the Comprehensive Headstart Child Development and Family Services Act of 1972, which passed the Senate only 3 months ago by a vote of 73 to 12 and is now awaiting House action.

THE 1970 WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE ON CHILDREN

The 1970 White House Conference on Children identified the establishment of a comprehensive system of child care as the No. 1 priority and took pains to elaborate on the central elements of any system to be established.

The Conference statement was very explicit:

We recommend that the Federal Government fund comprehensive child care programs, which will be family centered, locally controlled, and universally available with initial priority for those whose needs are the greatest. These programs should provide for active participation of family members in the development and implementation of the program. These programs—including health, early childhood education, and social services—should have sufficient variety to ensure that families can select the options most appropriate to their needs.

Mr. President, the committee proposal offers virtually none of these essential elements.

First in terms of comprehensiveness, it is quite clear that there will be no guarantee that the programs to be provided under the new title will be comprehensive in nature; that is, provide as options early childhood education, health and other essential items.

The statement of purpose refers to the promotion of the well-being of all children and appropriateness for the particular needs of the children receiving such services, but there is little provision for the essential ingredients of health and other services which would insure full attention to the needs of children, as opposed to the needs of working parents.

The committee bill does not indicate that educational, health and other services will be provided by the Child Care Bureau to children whose parents request them; in fact, the report at page 446, goes out of its way to say the educational components will be hard to find under the title.

In view of the considerations discussed above, the committee bill does not require that all child care arranged for by the Bureau of child care be educational in nature, nor does it require a formal educational component. However, in arranging for a child's care the Bureau would first have to see if a place is available under a child development program under other legislation, if the parent prefers this type of care.

Mr. President, this distinction between "child development" and "child care" is false. The fact is that no legislation requires education in any case, but that all authorities recognize education as a component that should be available under any child care program.

President Nixon, commenting upon the child care provisions contained in the House-passed H.R. 1 has said:

The child care I propose is more than custodial. This Administration is committed to a new emphasis on child development in the first five years of life. The day care that would be part of this plan would be of a quality that will help in the development of the child and provide for its health and safety, and would break the poverty cycle for the new generation.

Second, rather than local control, the committee bill envisages a system of child care from the top down virtually ignoring the contribution which the States, counties and cities have made and should continue to make in this essential area.

Section 2103 charges the Bureau with an obligation to arrange for child care services in the various communities in each State.

Virtually no provision has been made for local decisionmaking or involvement.

But even more critically the establishment of yet another agency outside the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—which has been responsible for administration of most child care programs to date—exhausts any hope of integration and coordination of programs at the local level.

At the present time, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—having concern over the Nation's children—administers approximately $800 million in funds for child care programs; through the Headstart program, the social services program, WIN, day care and educational sources.

We should be bringing these sources together and not adding yet another centralized layer to the child care bureaucracy.

S. 3617, the Comprehensive Headstart, Child Development and Family Services Act of 1972 would provide the basis for that kind of consolidation and coordination through its system of State and local prime sponsors and in fact that bill contains coordination provisions which I worked out with the Committee on Finance.

The committee's bill would merely add to the confusion by establishing a new Bureau of Child Care.

In so doing, it would seem to collide with President Nixon's action in 1969 in establishing the Office of Child Development in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare; while all HEW child care programs are not administered by that office, it does provide a possible future basis for coordination.

Mr. President, with respect to family involvement, the committee bill lacks any sense of the participation of parents or even their consent in the running and conduct of child care programs.

We took great care in the comprehensive legislation to meet the necessary concerns of a number of members—including my colleague Senator BUCKLEY, to insure that child care services would be provided only when requested by parents, and then under safeguards of the most careful nature.

This proposal lacks those safeguards—in fact rings of the universal care notion for which we were unfairly attacked—and beyond that fails to provide for parental involvement in programs or in decisionmaking.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S POSITION

Mr. President, for these and other reasons, the administration opposes this measure.

I ask unanimous consent that there be included at this point in the RECORD an exchange of correspondence between me and the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare Elliot Richardson.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH,
EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
Washington, D.C., October 4, 1972.

Hon. JACOB K. JAVITS,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: Thank you for your letter of Friday, September 29, requesting the Administration's position on the Child Care provisions of H.R. 1 as reported to the Senate by the Committee on Finance.

The Committee bill would establish a Bureau of Child Care within the proposed independent Work Administration. The powers and duties of the child care bureau would be essentially the same as those of the Child Care Corporation which Chairman Long offered on the parallel bill in the 91st Congress.

We would oppose these provisions just as we opposed them in 1970. We prefer instead the child care provisions in the House-passed version of Title IV, which would provide the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare with the authority to bring together in a single system all federally-assisted child care, with priority to children of families assisted under the workfare provisions of the Family Assistance Plan. As I have repeatedly testified before a number of committees, we believe it is essential to develop a single, primary system for the delivery of all federally-assisted day care and child development services rather than further fragmenting the already highly disorganized and fragmented existing child care resources. In addition, the Administration prefers the House-passed version because it would place in HEW the responsibility for developing national standards for assuring the safety and quality of all federally-assisted child care services. We also favor inclusion of parents of children in such a system in advisory councils.

With kindest regards,
Sincerely,

ELLIOT RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

SEPTEMBER 29, 1972.

Hon. ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As you know, the Senate is considering H.R. 1, the Social Security Amendments of 1972.

As reported by the Senate Committee on Finance, Section 431 of the bill would add a new title XXI to the Social Security Act establishing a Bureau of Child Care, within a new Work Administration to be formed for the administration of the welfare program contemplated under the Committee bill.

I am aware, of course, of the Administration's opposition to the welfare provisions contained in the Senate Finance Committee bill and its insistence on its own proposal, as passed by the House.

However, I would appreciate very much a statement of the Administration's position with respect to the proposed "Bureau of Child Care" and the other provisions of proposed title XXI as a separate measure.

Sincerely,

JACOB K. JAVITS.

Mr. JAVITS. Thus—while the Department may disagree on certain elements of the comprehensive bill passed by the Senate—and these can be worked out with the House—it opposes this measure as going in a basically different direction than desired.

THE PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE

Mr. President, while we do not consider the committee bill an appropriate comprehensive system, we share with the Senate Committee on Finance a recognition that additional needs should be met through the Social Security Act.

I have consistently supported an element of child care in the context of welfare reform.

The fact that the vehicle which has held this element—welfare reform—appears once again to have stalled along the road does not obviate the necessity of meeting the need which it was designed to reach.

We continue to have a dramatic rise in the number of persons receiving welfare assistance, particularly under Aid to Families With Dependent Children and we cannot merely wait until action on comprehensive welfare reform.

The Department of Health, Educaton, and Welfare estimates that it will pay a total of $7.7 billion in fiscal 1973 in cash payments to 12,479,074 persons on AFDC; this represents an increase of 1.1 billion and 1,486,188 persons above the amounts in fiscal 1972. In New York State alone, the number of AFDC recipients has jumped from 1.1 million to 1.3 million in the last 2 years and the Federal expenditures have risen by $123 million.

And so we must provide adequate child care to meet these real needs, in the interim until welfare reform can be enacted.

We propose that the same quotient of $800 million identified by the Senate Committee on Finance—incidentally only $50 million above that contained in the administration-backed House bill—be made available for fiscal years 1973 and 1974 for child care under title IVA.

Title IVA is focused on former and potential welfare recipients; the same focus generally as the proposed child care provisions under the committee bill.

And it is to be run by the Social Rehabilitation and Services Administration of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare through a system of State plans, with the localities participating, thus ensuring administrative efficiency.

Therefore, we do not have to add a new administrative organization to do the job.

Mr. President, we propose this quotient—the Committee's own quotient—as an amount addition to the $2,500,000,000 which may be available for social services generally, of which child care is a part.

The committee amendments already incorporates that agreement—which is contained in the Revenue Sharing Act—for that limit.

It is well known that under that limitation, it will be necessary for a number of States and cities to cut back on child care efforts under present law; New York City and New York State are among those which would be adversely effected.

I reserve the right to question or modify the overall limitation—as it affects so many social services—but I hope that the Senate will agree that the additional amount for child care which the committee was willing to add to general social service funds available—may best be channeled for now through the social services system under title IV-A and not through a new structure such as proposed.

The $800 million would therefore be an addition to approximately $326 million for child care to be spent in fiscal year 1973 under the social services section generally.

Mr. President, as title IV-A—like the committee proposal—allows for flexibility in the kind of child care provided in terms of family care and other forms and they vary considerably according to cost, there can be no clear estimate of the number of opportunities which would be made available with the $800 million.

However, as a guideline it may be noted that under H.R. 1—which provided a slightly lesser amount—the administration contemplated the provision of 875,000 slots, consisting of 219,000 preschool opportunities and 584,000 after-school opportunities.

Finally, I should note that this is only an interim authority—for 2 fiscal years and thus we do not wish to undermine either the need for welfare reform or comprehensive child development legislation which is still pending.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from the Child Welfare League be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHILD WELFARE LEAGUE OF AMERICA, INC.,
October 2, 1972.

Hon. JACOB K. JAVITS,
Committee on Labor and Public Welfare,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR JAVITS: The Child Welfare League of America believes that a very important principle regarding child care programs may be discarded during the debate of the complicated welfare legislation, H.R. 1, this week. For that reason, we would like to bring to your attention our position on parts of that legislation which relate directly to the well-being of children.

As you know, the Child Welfare League testified before the Senate Finance Committee on a number of occasions over the last months regarding our position on child care and other matters. I am attaching, for your information, a copy of our most recent testimony as it appeared in the Hearings record. Since that testimony runs to many pages, I have selected the following paragraphs from that testimony which is particularly pertinent.

First of all, we believe that there is a need for child care. Second, we believe that there is no need for the establishment of a new Bureau of Child Care in the Department of Labor. Third, we believe that child care legislation should be similar to the comprehensive child development legislation passed by the Senate and the House but vetoed by the President. Fourth, there are portions of Title XXI of H.R. 1—expanded authorizations for child welfare services and language setting up a National Adoption Information Exchange System—which we believe the Senate should pass and that we hope the Conference would retain.

Excerpts from our Feb. 2, 1972, testimony before Senate Finance follow:

"We believe that there should be adequate provision for the availability of child care in order that women on welfare who seek employment may take jobs without detriment to their children's welfare. In this sense, we agree with Senator Long that the 'availability of child care is a key element in welfare reform.' We do not believe it essential, however, to include legislative provisions for the establishment of child care programs in the welfare reform bill. Separate child care legislation which provides for comprehensive programs for all children needing child care, including those receiving welfare assistance, would be preferable. A welfare reform bill might, however, include authorizations to pay for the needed child care of welfare families.

"Child care is not, in our opinion, a proper function of the Department of Labor. Child care should not be viewed primarily as a manpower device. It must be child and family-oriented to ensure that the child's welfare comes first. Therefore, the Department of HEW is the more logical department to administer child care programs. Expertise with respect to the services required for these programs is, or should be, in that Department. The HEW experts in the areas of child welfare, child development, health, education and nutrition, etc., are needed to establish and administer sound child care policies.

"It also seems unnecessary, as well as administratively and economically unsound, to have duplicate systems of child care in two departments.

"We believe that child care legislation now before the Senate Finance Committee should have much in common with the comprehensive child development program passed by the Senate and House but vetoed by the President. We hope that programs of the same scope and quality of the vetoed bill will become part of all child care legislation, although there may be differences in plans for the administration and financing of these programs.

"In closing, we wish to stress the need for quality child care to help all children achieve their maximum potential so that they may emerge from childhood as healthy, secure, and productive adults. They are, indeed, the future of this nation."

Senator JAVITS, we know that the Senate agrees that our children are the future of this Nation; we hope that their votes will reflect this fact.

Sincerely,

JOSEPH H. REID.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think the Senator from New York made clear that the money could not all be spent in one State, because the act provides that day care shall be provided throughout the United States.

It is our proposal, and we require in this committee proposal, that we provide day care where it was not provided by other agencies such as HEW and Headstart. By all means we have to go there if the day care is available. Otherwise, if it is not there, we will provide day care.

What is the big difference in the standards? The big difference is, Mr. President, that we do not have an educational requirement here. We would provide educational day care if we had the money to provide it, but, if we do not have the money, we have to trim our sails according to what is available so that we can fill the need for day care for these mothers.

A point has been made, Mr. President, about the cost. In many cases, States have requirements that you have to have all these additional degrees, college degrees or other degrees, in order for a person to work in a day-care center where, in most instances, what we are trying to do is just provide day care for a child from the time the child comes home from school until the time the mother can pick the child up and take him home with her. School-age children are being educated in the schools, and presumably they are being taught all their little minds can absorb during the hours in school. We are just trying to find someone to look after them and keep them out of harm's way after school, until the mother can come and pick them up at the day care center, wherever that may be.

So the education requirement which many States have and the Senators would require here is totally superfluous, if all we are trying to do is find someone to look after the child after school until the mother can pick him up.

Mr. President, I move that the amendment be laid on the table.

Mr. JAVITS. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARTKE). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. MONDALE). On this question, the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. SPARKMAN (after having voted in the affirmative). Mr. President, on this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF). If he were present and voting, he would vote "nay." If I were at liberty to vote, I would vote "yea." Therefore, I withdraw my vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL). If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is paired with the Senator form Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD). If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 26, nays 47, as follows:

So the motion to lay on the table was rejected.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was rejected.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in view of the fact that the majority of the Senate did not see fit to table, I assume that the majority wants to vote for this amendment, and I would urge that we have a voice vote on the amendment.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, normally I would demand a rollcall vote; but in light of the time and in light of the large margin, I would ask my cosponsors to agree to a voice vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, yesterday evening I voted against the Roth-Long amendment for several reasons, one of which was the administrative problems this so-called test would create and another, the almost unbelievable costs of conducting such a test. Because I thought Senators should have a more detailed analysis of what the effects of this amendment will be if it is enacted into law, I asked the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare to prepare a summary for me.

I ask unanimous consent that Secretary Richardson's letter outlining the reasons for the administration's opposition to this amendment be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF HEALTH, EDUCATION, AND WELFARE,
Washington, D.C., October 5, 1972.

Hon. HUGH SCOTT,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR SCOTT: In response to your request, I would be glad to explain why I oppose the provisions of the Long-Roth amendment added to H.R. 1 by the Senate yesterday.

First, the Administration would oppose a test amendment even if it stood alone. Tests of the kind this amendment would involve would delay real reform for at least five years, as I explained in the letter I sent each Senator on October 2. Results are available from already-completed and ongoing tests. The pattern we see in these tests, which I feel will be duplicated in any additional testing, reflects the inexactness and controversy which inevitably attach to social experimentation.

The Long-Roth amendment, however, goes far beyond testing and contains provisions which would effect substantial permanent changes in this Nation's welfare system, changes which I believe are both expensive and undesirable. Together these provisions would cost at least $5 billion and perhaps as much as $6.5 billion more than current law projections. By way of comparison, the entire family welfare reform contained in the House-passed version would cost approximately $3 billion more than current law.

For example, the Bellmon provision of the Long-Roth amendment for State fiscal relief could cost almost $1.5 billion in fiscal 1973. Beyond this the 10% Social Security rebate will cost over a billion dollars a year. The wage supplement is estimated to cost almost $2 billion a year.

Furthermore, numerous changes which the Long-Roth amendment would make in existing programs would severely restrict the authority of the Secretary of HEW and cause major administrative problems. Some of the provisions concerning deserting parents and child support, while certainly well-motivated, raise serious questions of administrative feasibility and the protection of individual rights. The chld care provisions of the bill would establish a sweeping new system which would further fragment the already high disorganized and fragmented existing child care resources.

In short, the Long-Roth amendment would enact into law welfare proposals broader in scope and more costly than any since 1967. While we have agreed with some of the principles involved, such as coverage of the working poor, we cannot agree with the chaotic and costly manner in which they have been assembled.

With kind regards,
Sincerely,

ELLIOT L. RICHARDSON,
Secretary.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, when the distinguished Secretary of HEW, Eliot L. Richardson testified on July 21, 1970, before the Senate Finance Committee on behalf of the administration's welfare reforms proposal, then called the Family Assistance Act of 1970, he observed that—

> This Administration did not enter office determined to put into effect the specific kinds of welfare reforms which we have proposed. Neither the philosophy of the President nor our currently-restricted budgetary situation would have permitted us to propose such revolutionary and expensive legislative initiatives unless we were convinced that they were inescapably necessary.

And, indeed, since the President first proposed his family assistance plan on nationwide television in August 1969, the American people have been bombarded with accounts centered around the failure of our present welfare system. We have heard that it is not a system at all, but a "confused clutter of many systems" from which has flowed "disparity, inequity, and inefficiency".

We have been told by the administration that the AFDC program with its 54 different programs in 54 different jurisdictions operating without national standards for benefits or eligibility ceilings, has resulted virtually in an uncontrollable drain on the Federal Treasury.

Indeed, the current system has been indicted by the administration for—

Its notorious redtape, paternalism, and endless paperwork, which places social caseworkers in the role of policemen.

Reaching only 34 percent of the poor children in the country.

Making it possible for a man on welfare who does no work at all to be economically better off than a man who works full time.

Providing social tension with ominous racial overtones because current AFDC recipients are about 50 percent nonwhite—while the working poor—those who are excluded from help are about 70 percent white.

Providing wrong-way incentives—incentives which encourage men who are employed part-time to keep their work effort limited and not seek full-time employment—incentives which encourage families to dissolve and couples not to marry.

As a result of all these deficiencies, our society pays a lot—in economic, human, and spiritual terms—but gains very little.

In reporting out its welfare reform proposal, H.R. 1, the House Ways and Means Committee noted the alarming rate at which the AFDC caseloads size and maintenance costs have mounted—32.1 and 36 percent, respectively—less than a year and a half after the President's initial welfare message to Congress was submitted in August 1969

The Senate Finance Committee report on the social security amendments observed further that—

> The number of recipients under (AFDC) program has more than doubled since January 1968, and the need to pay for AFDC has forced states to shift funds into welfare that would otherwise go for education, health, housing, and other pressing social needs.

I also read with great interest the lucid description of our welfare system's failures that the Senator from Connecticut provided last week when he introduced his proposal.

We all know that most of our States are operating at tremendous deficits with public assistance being responsible for a major share. Spending and services are either being cut back or eliminated, funds are being transferred among programs, and our State legislatures are being pressured to provide supplemental appropriations.

There may be many great issues that divide us in the country, but there is one on which we can all agree: our present system of welfare is in abysmal chaos.

For 3 long years, welfare reform has been the subject of intense study and debate in the Congress and our States. We now face decisions on the subject of welfare at several levels. In each of the State capitals, local questions must be answered immediately about the level of welfare assistance in the days immediately ahead. We must decide if we want to bring about a structural reform of the present welfare system; we must decide if we shall provide fiscal relief to our States and cities. As Secretary Richardson stated recently:

> The Nation can no longer afford the luxury of talking about welfare reform but doing nothing about it. Public confidence in government itself requires that we now create a system which taxpayers can support and administrators can administer, and which effectively aids the poor.

We cannot postpone action on this critically important problem. The choices we have before us today may be difficult and unpleasant; however, they must be made. We cannot afford to perpetuate this current mess.

I commend the distinguished senior Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and his colleagues on the Senate Finance Committee for their intensive work on this problem. Their proposal reflects many long hours of thoughtful consideration and hard work. But, I am disappointed with this proposal for it fails to do what we had hoped welfare reform would do. Rather than reform the system, it would set in concrete the defects of the current program by leaving intact the inefficient State-administered AFDC system for those who are unemployable. It fails to represent the kind of decent and humane welfare reform measure that this Congress, the administration, the American taxpayers, and the poor are looking for. Accordingly, I could not support the bill reported out of the committee.

What then do we have left to consider? Frankly, Mr. President, I am perplexed. Here we have the President of the United States in favor of welfare reform, Congress and our States want reform of our welfare system, the American taxpayer is demanding that we do something about this welfare mess, and, of course, the beneficiaries or shall we say the victims of the AFDC system want to see positive changes in the welfare system. Everybody, it seems, stands behind welfare reform. Can I assume, Mr. President, that the distinct possibility of welfare reform being dropped this year has come about as a result of our 1,000 percent backing for welfare reform?

We want welfare reform so badly that we dropped the Ribicoff compromise. Our passionate desire for ridding ourselves of the present system with its "crazy quilt" of standards, disincentives to work, and incentives for family breakup is such that we have dropped the administration's proposal which ironically enough was designed to correct all that.

The distinguished chairman of the Senate Finance Committee and his colleagues on that committee have labored long and hard to find a solution to this problem—in spite of which we shall probably drop their proposal.

The subject of welfare has troubled government for thousands of years. The Romans wrestled with the problem of how much is enough and how much is too much in distributing both general aid to the poor and veterans benefits. It was the decision on these questions that Gibbon felt accelerated the decline and fall of the Roman Empire. And so, if misery loves company, we have a long record of fellow men who have been anguished by the dilemma of the poor and the states' responsibility for them and to them.

Now that we examined in detail these proposals before us, perhaps we should also have thought a little about the purpose, the scope, and the philosophy of welfare. Most people would agree that government has a duty to see that every citizen has a minimum of the necessities of life—at least enough to sustain bare existence. Some would justify this on humane or moral grounds, while cynics would say that it is done in self-interest to prevent riots and violence by the hungry, the unclothed and the unhoused.

Beyond the bare subsistence level is the area of debate. Some envision welfare as an institution in its own right, but I would prefer to think of it ideally as a process. Its goal should be like that of a flood relief program—to go out of business when its work is done.

Welfare beneficiaries should constantly have the hope that they can be liberated from welfare and should constantly be aware of the availability of assistance to learn how to break out. This, it seems to me, must be the focus of welfare.

If we in this body who truly want welfare reform can find some common ground on which we all might stand, let us agree to: Remove the faults and abuses of our present wasteful, destructive and degrading welfare system that victimizes 7 million children;

Help those who can work, find and keep work—work which fosters independence, pride, and a sense of dignity;

Provide fiscal relief for our States and local governments from this awful financial burden—a burden that has more than tripled in the last 10 years with the end nowhere in sight.

I regret that the proposals of the distinguished Senators from Connecticut and Illinois have been tabled. They are to be commended for their efforts at attempting to fashion a decent and humane reform measure.

I believe the American people do want to change the welfare system—it is still up to us to do it.

SOCIAL SECURITY AMENDMENTS OF 1972

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (H.R. 1) to amend the Social Security Act, to make improvements in the medicare and medicaid programs, to replace the existing Federal-State public assistance programs, and for other purposes.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

Insert at the end of section 1131 of the Social Security Act, as added by section 306 of this Act, the following new subsection:

"(c) For the purposes of this section, any increase in the standard of need made by a State after June 30, 1972, and before the certification made by the Secretary pursuant to subsection (b) of this section on account of the Social Security increase contained in Public Law 92-336, may be included in the increase in in the standard of need required by this section."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, let me say, first, without apology, that I have five amendments. Four will take no time at all. They should go very quickly, one way or the other. The fifth will take a little time, but I hope not too much.

Mr. President, earlier this week, Senator TUNNEY and I offered an amendment, No. 1619, which was graciously accepted by the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee (Mr. LONG). I insured that recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled would receive the full 20 percent social security increase intended for them by Congress.

This was accomplished by requiring the States to raise the standard of need used to determine eligibility for aid to the aged, blind, and disabled by an amount commensurate with the social security increase.

It has since been brought to my attention that the $12 increase in aged, blind, and disabled benefits recently enacted in California would not be counted in this commensurate increase—but rather, because of a technical error in the amendment adopted the other day, California would be required to enact an additional 20 percent increase in benefits—on top of the $12 increase.

This was certainly not our intention, and the amendment Senator TUNNEY and I have just sent to the desk would correct this situation.

I believe this to be a noncontroversial amendment. And I would hope the committee could accept this amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this is a necessary modification of an amendment we accepted the other day.

Mr. CRANSTON. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1708

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment, No. 1708.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 574, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following:

CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS DEEMED TO MEET RESOURCES TEST

(g) In the case of any individual or any individual and his spouse (as the case may be) who for the month of December 1973 was a recipient of aid or assistance under a State plan approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, the resources of such individual or such individual and his spouse shall be deemed not to exceed the amount specified in sections 1611(a)(1)(B) and 1611(a)(2)(B) during any period that the resources of such individual or individual and his spouse (as the case may be) does not exceed the maximum amount of resources, as specified in the State plan (above referred to, and as in effect in October 1972) under which he or they were entitled to aid or assistance for the month of December 1972.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment is of a basically noncontroversial nature, and would simply "grandfather" in present eligibility and resources of those receiving aid to the aged, blind, and disabled. This encompasses approximately 1,500 individuals whose resources are presently within the allowable resources in their respective States, but who would be over the maximum resource "disregard" in the Senate Finance Committee version.

I stress that this covers only those individuals who presently receive aid to the aged, blind, and disabled—who resources are, under present State laws, higher than the maximum in the Senate Finance Committee bill. Of particular concern to me are those recipients of said to the blind in my home State of California, which has a resource maximum for couples receiving aid to the blind of $2,600. Under the $2,500 limit now contained in the Senate Finance Committee bill, these individuals would be forced to dispose of $100 in order to be eligible for assistance.

I would hope that the distinguished Senator from Louisiana will accept this amendment designed to help those present recipients who would suffer unnecessary hardship under the committee bill.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I accept the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1693

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1693 and send to the desk a modification. It is a technical modification.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment, as modified.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment, as modified, will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 935, between lines 8 and 9, insert the following new section:

RECIPIENTS OF ASSISTANCE FOR THE AGED, BLIND, AND DISABLED INELIGIBLE

SEC. 513. (a) Section 402(a) of the Social Security Act is amended (1) by striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu of such period "; and", and (2) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(24) If an individual is receiving benefits under title XVI, then, for the period for which such benefits are received, such individual shall not be regarded as a member of a family for purposes of determining the amount of the benefits of the family under this title and his income and resources shall not be counted as income and resources of a family under this title."

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be effective on and after January 1, 1973.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment is designated to prohibit so-called double counting of recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled living in AFDC households.

The amendment prohibits counting of an aged, blind, and disabled recipient, or his or her resources, who live with other recipients of AFDC assistance, in determining the amount of the AFDC assistance payment to such a family. This affects one of every 11 AFDC households, and has been included in almost every welfare reform proposal introduced in Congress.

My amendment would include this provision in title III of the bill, since title IV—the usual place for this provision—now contains the test proposal adopted by the Senate yesterday, and no longer contains the provision I am seeking to amend.

I would hope that the chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. LONG, will be able to accept this amendment as being a necessary provision to prevent excessive assistance payments in some cases, and allow—in cases where there is an aged, blind, or disabled recipient in the household—the resources of that individual to be exempted in the computation of AFDC benefits.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair must interrupt the Senator, due to the fact that the Senator's amendment is not in order.

Mr. CRANSTON. For what reason?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is a part of the bill which has been locked in and is no longer open to amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment might be considered. I ask unanimous consent that it be modified to add it at the end of the bill.

Mr. CRANSTON. I so modify it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is modified accordingly; and, accordingly the amendment is permissible and no longer is out of order.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I have explained the amendment. It is in the chairman's hands.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have some doubts about this amendment; but in view of the lateness of the hour, and rather than have long debate, I would be willing to take it to conference.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1694

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1694.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 569, lines 10 and 11, strike out "Each aged, blind, or disabled individual who does not have an eligible spouse" and insert in lieu thereof "Each blind or disabled individual, and each aged individual who does not have an eligible spouse".

On page 569, line 29, strike out ", blind, or disabled".

Beginning on page 584, line 22, strike out all through page 585, line 5, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(b) For purposes of this title, the term 'eligible spouse' means an aged individual (who is not blind or disabled) who is the husband or wife of another aged individual (who is not blind or disabled) and who has not been living apart from such other aged individual for more than six months. If two such aged individuals are husband and wife as described in the preceding sentence, only one of them may be an 'eligible individual' within the meaning of section 1611 (a)."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment directs that in cases where one or both of the members of a couple receiving aid to the aged, blind, or disabled is blind or disabled, their benefits shall be computed as if both individuals were single.

Mr. President, 80 percent of the individuals receiving assistance under aged, blind, and disabled are eligible for benefits under the the aged category, and would not be affected by this amendment. But in those instances where one member of the couple is disabled or blind, the benefit level would be computed as if both members of the couple were single.

There is general consensus that the expenses of a blind or disabled person are higher—special household items and adaptive devices must be purchased—the opportunities for the other member of the couple to seek outside income are severely limited—and the costs and frequency of medical care are more extensive. The net effect of "couple" benefit levels is to provide one member with full "single" benefits and the other member with reduced benefits—in effect penalizing those people for their companionship.

I realize, of course, that the committee is limited in their ability to expand benefits to the extent that we all would like, and congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. LONG, and the members of the committee for the many excellent benefits they have included in the bill—but I would hope that the committee could accept this extension of benefits to those recipients of aid to the aged, blind, and disabled with the most limited opportunities to earn supplemental income, and with the highest expenses.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I do not think we should agree to this amendment. This would treat the disabled in a fashion better than we would treat the aged. It would then require us to avoid discrimination and do the same thing for the blind as for the disabled. As it stands now, a disabled couple will get $260 whereas under this an aged couple would get $195. But whether aged or disabled, the individual would get the same $130. This would tend to discriminate against the aged and would set the stage for others doing the same thing for the aged which would cost a great deal of money. When two people live together, as we know, the expenses are not so great as it is for people who live in two different households. For that reason, I do not think the amendment should be agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. The blind and the disabled have a greater need. That is the reason for this. I am ready to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARTKE). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) (No. 1694).

The amendment was rejected.

AMENDMENT NO. 1707

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I now call up my last amendment, No. 1707, which I send to the desk with a modification, a technical modification, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated and the clerk will report the modification.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Insert at the appropriate place in the bill the following new section:

"SEC. Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (section 512 and) subsection (c) of section 452 of the Social Security Act, as added by this Act, shall not be effective until such date as the Congress shall designate by subsequent legislation."

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of this amendment Mr. Richard Johnson, counsel to the Poverty Subcommittee be given the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, this amendment which I now submit on behalf of myself and Senator JAVITS and 24 other Senators from both sides of the aisle would nullify two provisions of the welfare reform legislation now on the floor. Both sections of the pending measure which would be postponed indefinitely—section 452(c) in part D of title IV and section 512 in part A of title V, would subvert the OEO legal services program, our system of justice, and the separation of powers among the legislative, executive, and judicial branches of Government, and would result, Mr. President, in destroying the faith of the poor in the fairness of our justice system.

SECTION 452(C)

Section 452(c) would require an agreement between OEO and the Attorney General whereby legal services attorneys would be made available to the Justice Department to serve as prosecutors and collection agents. This would place legal services attorneys in a position contrary to the purposes and intent of the legal services program as set forth by Congress in 1965. The legal services program was created "to further the cause of justice among persons living in poverty." The intent was to provide the poor with access to our courts so that they may redress their grievances peacefully within the legal and judicial system—not in the streets.

The program was founded to provide the poor with legal counsel to represent their interests and enforce their rights. It was founded to counter the image the poor have always had of the law, or as Robert Kennedy said:

> The poor man looks upon the law as an enemy, not as a friend. For him the law is always taking something away.

The legal services program has done much to change that image of the law and the lawyer. If we now turn the program into an extension of the Justice Department, or ever place these lawyers temporarily in the role of prosecutors, much of the substantive accomplishments, much—if not all—of the faith it has restored to the poor, will be destroyed.

This section also raises the most serious ethical and legal questions. Last year, the District of Columbia Court of Appeals held that under the Code of Professional Responsibility of the American Bar Association, two legal services attorneys from the same program could not separately represent both the husband and the wife in a contested matrimonial action—Borden against Borden, 277 A–2nd 89 (1971). This would most likely be true for other types of cases placing legal services attorneys on both sides of a single case. Under section 452(c) such a situation could very well arise where the missing parent is already being represented by the only legal services program in the area and the Attorney General requests the program to prosecute the same parent. This would present an impossible ethical conflict which could well result in depriving poverty clients of essential legal representation.

In addition, this section provides a most cumbersome way of achieving its goals. It provides for the Attorney General to reimburse OEO for the use of legal services attorneys in locating and prosecuting missing parents. Why not appropriate these same funds directly to the Department of Justice for additional staff for the U.S. attorney's office if it is felt desirable to pursue these individuals?

Why encumber both OEO and the Attorney General, as well as hundreds of individual legal services attorneys, with time-consuming, costly, and unnecessary, bookkeeping functions. A straight forward approach of giving the Attorney General the necessary funds to carry out his duties under the act would be more efficient and less damaging to legal services and the rights of the poor, unless, of course, the real purpose of this provision is to tie up the time of legal services attorneys so that they cannot provide counsel and legal representation to the poor.

SECTION 512

The second section this amendment seeks to nullify is section 512, which prohibits the expenditure of any Federal funds for any activity seeking "to nullify, challenge, or circumvent" and provisions of the Social Security Act or, and I stress this, "the purposes or intentions of the Congress in enacting" that act, through court action, unless approved by the Attorney General, who in turn must notify the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee 60 days before any such waiver takes effect.

This section would deprive the poor of a fundamental right—exercised by anyone who can afford a lawyer—that is, to challenge the validity of laws. It also directly interferes with the delicate, but yet unique, balance of power between our legislative, executive, and judicial branches of Government. It seeks to allow the Attorney General, and the Congress, to determine whether court actions should be initiated in a particular case, based upon an incident-by-incident review process. It seems fundamentally unfair—if not clearly unconstitutional—to make the right to seek redress in court dependent on the permission of one's adversary.

If the Senate Finance Committee wishes to restrict the jurisdiction of our courts, let it request the appropriate committee to review that question, and let us consider that issue directly in separate legislation.

Moreover, if the Finance Committee wishes to achieve proper interpretation by the courts of certain substantive provisions of the Social Security Act, let Congress seek to amend those provisions with the precise language to carry out its intent. But to achieve those goals by discriminating against the rights of the poor—and by upsetting the balance of powers among our three branches—is both wrong and unnecessary.

This section also threatens a denial of equal protection and due process to the poor. The constitutional guarantee of equal protection could be violated because only the poor would be so restricted from bringing legal action to enforce their rights or to challenge the constitutionality of this particular act of Congress. Imagine a corporation having to seek the permission of the Attorney General, and waiting 2 months for congressional committees to review that question, before challenging governmental actions it considers damaging to its own existence.

A denial of due process could also be involved when the courts are clearly the only forum for the effective resolution of the matter at hand and an indigent person is denied access to such forum—Boddie v. Connecticut, 401 U.S. 371 (1971).

Finally, the ABA Canons of Ethics and Code of Professional Responsibility would certainly be violated if a lawyer cannot provide adequate and quality legal representation to his client.

Looking at what effect section 512 would have in actual practice might help to provide a better picture of why we must nullify it in this bill.

In a recent legal services case, Carelson v. Remillard, 406 U.S. 598 (June 6, 1972), a mother and her children were denied welfare benefits when the father's military allotments were too low to support them. The father was serving his country in Vietnam. The Legal Aid Society of San Mateo County sued the State of California, claiming the mother was eligible under the Federal law; namely, the Social Security Act. The current Supreme Court unanimously upheld the mother's appeal and warded her benefits. The permission to bring this case might have been denied, since the attorney general had filed an amicus brief in opposition. But clearly the merits of the case are obvious.

This illustration raises another important issue—the vagueness and breadth of the language in the provision. The intent of the committee seems to be to prevent almost all welfare-related lawsuits which it sees as "challenging or circumventing" the Social Security Act. However, not only have the courts considered many of these suits meritorious, but almost all of these suits have actually sought to enforce the act, not nullify it. It seems that the committee provision seeks to prevent only poor people from seeking enforcement of the Federal law and congressional intent by States and local governments under old-age and survivor's disability insurance, unemployment insurance, public assistance benefits and social services under the child welfare program.

The States have not had any reason to fear that Federal law would be enforced by HEW. The Assistance Payments Administration reported that as of March 31, 1972, 33 out of 54 jurisdictions with federally financed public assistance programs had, as of that time, been out of compliance with Federal law for a considerable period of time. Detailed charts were published, but not one State has been notified that sanctions or enforcement was ever being contemplated. It has fallen to legal services lawyers in recent years to enforce Federal law, including the example of the military wife I just described.

If we look to the actual text of the bill, it might seem that only those lawsuits seeking to declare provisions of the Social Security Act as unconstitutional are restricted. I think more than that is proscribed; but that right to ask the courts to interpret the constitutionality of acts of Congress is absolutely basic to our system of government. To deprive the poor of that fundamental right is, to me, absolutely unconscionable.

Clearly, then, these two provisions should not be included in this bill. For reasons I have stated—including questions of constitutionality, the ethics of the legal profession, interference in the balance of power between the three branches of government, the lack of consideration of the effects of such legislation by the appropriate congressional committees, the damage to a successful program for the poor, the cumbersome machinery they would establish involving the Attorney General and two important congressional committees, and finally the denial of equal justice to all of our people—for all these reasons we should vote to adopt this amendment to nullify sections 452(c) and 512.

I urge my fellow Senators to adopt this amendment and in considering it, to give heed to the views of organizations which are familiar to us all and which are greatly concerned with the orderly process of justice in this country. The president of the American Bar Association, Robert Meserve, has urged us to delete these provisions. He said:

American Bar Association urges deletion of Sections 452(c) and 512 of H.R. 1 as reported to the Senate. Former Provision would force upon OEO Lawyers prosecutorial function inconsistent with professional obligations to represent the poor. Latter provision seriously limits access of the poor to courts in areas of significant concern, contravenes lawyer's ethical obligation to client, and raises question of equal protection of the laws for all our citizens. Association endorses the principle expressed by President Nixon in his statement of May 5, 1971, "The legal problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of their attorneys to bring any type of civil suit. Only in this manner can we maintain the integrity of the adversary process and fully protect the attorney-client relationship so central to our judicial process." Urge support of Cranston-Javits amendment to strike Sections 452(c) and 512.

The Association of American Law Schools, the American Trial Lawyers Association, and the deans of many law schools have expressed their strong opposition to the provisions in the bill we are seeking to nullify. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that messages from these groups and individuals and certain materials pertaining to the 1969 "Murphy amendment" be set forth in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TELEGRAM

Nixon in his statement of May 5, 1971, "the legal problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of other attorneys to bring any type of civil suit. Only in this manner can we maintain the integrity of the adversary process and fully protect the attorney-client relationship so central to our judicial process". Urge support of Cranston-Javits amendment to strike secs. 452(c) and 512.

ROBERT W. MESERVE,
President, ABA.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: I am writing to record the encouragement of your efforts to delete from H.R. 1, the Welfare Reform Bill, the restrictions on the performance of legal services by attorneys contained in Sections 452(c) and 512.

The Association of American Law Schools has always been concerned when the proper exercise of legal services has been threatened through restrictive legislation. This concern has most recently been expressed in the letter dated May 1, 1972 from Professor Richard C. Maxwell, President of the Association, to Senator Long, concerning restrictions in this same bill. Such restrictions would affect law students and legal education because of the many programs in law schools that involve law students in the rendering of legal services for the poor and disadvantage. Consequently, we hope that once more the efforts to avoid restrictions of the kind contained in the Sections mentioned above will be successful.

MICHAEL CARDOZO,
Executive Director, Association of American Law Schools.

DEAR SENATOR CRANSTON: The American Trial Lawyers Association endorses your efforts to remove serious restrictions from H.R. 1 which would prevent Legal Services attorneys from providing full and adequate legal representation to the poor.

Sections 452(c) and 512 raise serious questions of due process and equal protection of the laws for all people. Both sections would contradict President Nixon's statement of May 5, 1971, which said, "The Legal Problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of their attorneys to bring any type of civil suit. Only in this manner can we maintain the integrity of the adversary process and fully protect the attorney-client relationship so central to our judicial process."

We urge passage of this amendment so that the poor can receive equal justice under the law.

JACOB FUCHSBERG,
American Trial Lawyers Association.

OCTOBER 5, 1972.

I strongly support amendment to strike sections 452(c) and 512 of H.R. 1, and fervently hope it prevails.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED BY AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION BOARD OF GOVERNORS, OCTOBER 18, 1969

Whereas, the adoption by the United States Senate of an amendment to S. 3016 seeks to place in the hands of the Governors of the various States a power of veto over the activities of Legal Service Programs funded by the Office of Economic Opportunity.

And whereas, such power contravenes the American Bar Association's commitment to secure full and effective legal services to the poor by providing every person in our society with access to the independent professional services of a lawyer of integrity and competence;

And whereas, enlarging the scope and effectiveness of the power to veto legal services programs is highly undesirable because experience has shown that the power to veto may be used to circumscribe the freedom of legal service attorneys in representing their clients to address issues of government action or omission affecting the rights of their clients, and to discourage actions which are politically unpopular or adverse to the views of the majority;

And whereas, such limitations impair the ability of legal services programs to respond properly to the needs of the poor and constitute oppressive interference with the freedom of the lawyer and the citizen;

Now, therefore be it resolved, that the American Bar Association reaffirms its position that the Legal Services Program should operate with full assurance of independence of lawyers within the program not only to render services to individual clients but also in cases which might involve action against governmental agencies seeking significant institutional change.

And, further resolved, that representatives of the American Bar Association be authorized to express the concern of the Association as to the effect of the aforesaid amendment.

LEGAL AID FOUNDATION OF LONG BEACH,
October 22, 1969.

Re Economic Opportunity Amendments of 1969.

Hon. GEORGE E. BROWN, Jr.,
Cannon Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BROWN: I am deeply concerned over the passage of Senator Murphy's amendments to S. 3016 relative to the veto power of governors over legal services programs. This amendment, if it becomes law, particularly without the safeguard of an override, will seriously affect the independence, effectiveness, and even the existence of many important legal aid and legal services programs.

Enclosed is a copy of a press release from Maynard Toll, President of the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, which contains the concerns and position of the legal aid movement and the organized bar.

I strongly urge your opposition to the Senate's action in approving Senator Murphy's amendment.

Very truly yours,
HOWARD M. VAN ELGORT,
Executive Director.

JUDGE OF MUNICIPAL COURT, LOS ANGELES JUDICIAL DISTRICT,
Los Angeles, Calif., October 21, 1969.

Hon. GEORGE E. BROWN, Jr.,
House of Representatives, Cannon Building, Washington, D.C.

DEAR GEORGE: As a member of the National Advisory Committee of the Legal Services Program I wish to call your attention to an amendment passed by the Senate in conjunction with the extension of the Office of Economic Opportunity Act which could result in defeating the purposes of the Legal Services Program under the OEO. This amendment grants the governor of a state the right to veto legal services projects. It was authored by Senator George Murphy of California.

Additionally, the OEO director has been deprived of the power to override a governor's veto of legal services projects. The obvious result of this amendment is to deprive the poor people of legal representation in the states where it is most needed.

You are urged to study this provision when the measure is referred to the House of Representatives and to vote against the provision which will take away the effective legal protection that the poor have been receiving through the Legal Services Program. There is a meeting of our advisory committee in Washington on November 7th and perhaps it will be timely and desirable to have a representative of your office at this meeting in the OEO office to inform you more fully as to the possible consequences.

Sincerely,

PHILIP M. NEWMAN.

VETO POWER OF GOVERNORS OVER THE OEO LEGAL SERVICES PROGRAM

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, on November 13, 1969, more than 80 deans of law schools throughout the United States signed a statement in opposition to the Senate amendment giving Governors a veto over OEO's legal services program. It is their fear that this amendment would not only interfere with traditional independence of the legal profession, but would also have a detrimental effect on legal education.

I am particularly proud of the fact that the organizer of this petition was Dean William B. Lockhart, of the University of Minnesota Law School. Dean Lockhart, who is serving as president of the Association of American Law Schools, has been one of the most outspoken advocates of quality legal services for the poor.

Since law school deans play such a major role in the training of future lawyers, I think that Senators should know of their strong opposition to any effort to cripple the legal services program. I therefore ask unanimous consent that their petition and names be printed in the Record.

There being no objection, the petition and names were ordered to be printed in the records, as follows:

STATEMENT OF LAW SCHOOL DEANS

We concur with the resolution adopted on October 18, 1969, by the Board of Governors of the American Bar Association and the action of the Judicial Conference of the United States at its meeting on November 1, 1969, and voice our opposition to the amendment to S. 3016 which would give State governors a veto over legal services programs.

As law school deans we are concerned with the possibility of interference with the attorney-client relationship and the traditional independence of the legal profession. We are especially concerned with the effect that this amendment may have on legal education and the development of a sense of professional responsibility among law students to participate in programs providing meaningful legal services to the disadvantaged.

[From the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 4, 1969]

STATEMENT BY U.S. COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS VETO POWER FOR GOVERNORS OF LEGAL SERVICES PROGRAMS

The United States Commission on Civil Rights wholeheartedly supports the American Bar Association, The United States Judicial Conference, The National Legal Aid and Defenders Association, as well as local and State bar associations and other interested groups in their opposition to the proposed amendment to the Office of Economic Opportunity authorization bill providing State governors veto power over OEO funded legal services programs. The adoption of this amendment would critically weaken the most successful and fulfilling of all of the OEO programs and undermine the concept of equal legal representation for all. It especially would jeopardize survival of legal services programs that vigorously represent Negroes, Mexican Americans and Indians.

The need for vigorous and aggressive legal representation on behalf of the poor of all races cannot be overemphasized. "Equality before the law," said former Supreme Court Justice Wiley Rutledge, "in a true democracy is a matter of right. It cannot be a matter of charity or of favor or of grace or of discretion." In many areas such as housing, welfare rights and consumer protection, legal services groups have provided the best hope for a system of effective representation for the poor—not just in providing day to day legal counsel on an individual basis—but in attending to those activities which establish legal precedents and law reform affecting large numbers of people.

In a recent speech President Nixon set for the OEO Office of Legal Services the following goal:

"It will take on central responsibility for programs which help provide advocates for the poor in their dealings with social institutions. The sluggishness of many institutions—at all levels of society—in responding to the needs of individual citizens is one of the central problems of our time. Disadvantaged persons in particular must be assisted so that they fully understand the lawful means of making their needs known and having those needs met."

Those legal services programs which have proven most vigorous, resourceful and innovative in the assistance of their clients and which have been responsible for the most far-reaching legal reforms are the very programs which are put in greatest jeopardy by the proposed amendment. The right of disadvantaged groups to have full and effective access to the courts must not be fettered by the political restrictions imposed by the amendment. Such an amendment would be a regressive step that can only serve to discourage the poor from bringing their grievances to the courts rather than to the streets.

URGES DEFEAT OF "MURPHY AMENDMENT"

MR. CORMAN. Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I spoke out against the so-called "Murphy amendment" to Senate bill S. 3016. At that time I brought to the attention of the House Members a resolution adopted by the Los Angeles County Bar Association Board of Trustees strongly opposing the Senate action in including this amendment in its bill to provide for the continuation of economic opportunity programs.

Recently, nine law school deans from the State of California issued a statement urging defeat of the "Murphy amendment" from the Senate bill. These gentlemen belive the amendment is inconsistent with the canons of professional ethics and professional responsibility which are essential to the proper functioning of our traditional system of justice. It should also be noted that these gentlemen oppose any limitation on the legal services program. I fully agree with the statements made by these nine law school deans from my own State.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 12321, to authorize continued programs under the Economic Opportunity Act, comes to the floor for consideration this week. The committee very wisely did not include any version of the "Murphy amendment" in its bill. However, it is expected that an attempt will be made to offer such an amendment to the House bill during floor debate.

As we begin consideration of this legislation, I wish to add the voices of these nine law school deans to the growing opposition to the "Murphy amendment," and urge the atention of my colleagues to their statement:

STATEMENT OF CALIFORNIA LAW SCHOOL DEANS

"We strongly urge the defeat of the amendment to S. 3016 which grants State Governors an absolute veto over Legal Services Programs. The amendment is intended to allow Governors to bar particular types of legal actions.

"As Deans of the law schools educating most of California's future lawyers, we are deeply concerned about the impact of this amendment upon the ideals and practice of law in this State and the Nation. It is inconsistent with the Canons of Professional Ethics which we endeavor to instill in our students. It constitutes a direct infringement upon the independence and professional responsibility which are essential to the proper functioning of our traditional system of justice.

"This amendment has been opposed by most representatives of the legal community, including the unanimous action of the American Bar Association's Board of Governors. It is also opposed by the Judicial Conference of the United States under Chief Justice Warren Burger, by the National Legal Aid and Defender Association delegates and board, by the American Bar Association's Section on Individual Rights and Responsibilities, and by the President of the Association of American Law Schools. We join in opposing the amendment for these further reasons:

"(1) Any limitation on the Legal Services Program threatens law and order by closing a peaceful channel for the redress of the grievances of the poor.

"(2) Preventing poor people from maintaining legal action against their government undermines the American system of a government of law in which no official is beyond legal review.

"(3) Granting State Governors an absolute veto over Legal Services Programs almost assuredly will result in a substantial, or indeed total, denial of legal assistance to the disadvantaged in a number of states."

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CRANSTON. I yield.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, it is nearly a quarter after 11. All of those words the Senator is uttering will appear in the RECORD tomorrow morning. Those of us who are listening are getting more tired and more tired all the time. I would respectfully suggest that the entire statement of the Senator be printed in the RECORD and let us get to a vote.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I will not be very much longer. I will just make one or two comments on things that might not be known.

Mr. President, in closing I wish to make two points. Earlier this evening I spoke with a high administration spokesman. He said the administration opposes the two provisions this amendment would nullify. The administration never proposed them in their legal services corporation bill, and the administration never proposed them or similar restrictions in H.R. 1 or any other legislation.

Finally, I wish to point out that this vote stands for the very future of what I consider the most effective and most important part of all our antipoverty programs. If this gaping hole can be shot through the frabric of legal representation for poor clients, then there will be repeated efforts to exempt one after another Federal statute from judicial review at the behest of the poor. And if this succeeds, there will be no stopping the rest of such efforts. And that will be the death knell of the legal services program.

We cannot, we must not, allow this. We cannot tell the poor that the system of justice is for everyone but them; that when the Congress acts to affect their interest, the resulting statutes are immune from judicial scrutiny. I do not believe this is the message that the Senate wishes to convey to our Nation's poor. I fervently hope we will not do so.

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, I strongly urge the Senate to adopt the amendment to H.R. 1 introduced by Senator CRANSTON, Senator JAVITS, myself and several other Senators. This amendment would nullify section 452(c) and section 512 of this bill.

The enactment of either of these provisions would seriously jeopardize the integrity and independence of OEO's Legal Services program.

Section 452(c) directs the Attorney General and the Director of the Office of Economic Opportunity to enter into an agreement to utilize Legal Services attorneys in prosecuting cases involving nonsupport of dependent AFDC children.

Section 452(c) will mean that these attorneys will be in the position of representing the Government against indigent individuals who they are required to represent under the Legal Services program's legislative mandate. Such a provision is clearly inconsistent with the purpose of this program—which was never intended to be an adjunct to Federal, State, or local law enforcement authorities in prosecuting individuals for violation of the law.

To require Legal Services attorneys to serve as prosecutors will undermine the great confidence which the client community now has in this program. Furthermore, given the program's limited resources, the additional burden imposed by section 452(c) will mean that the legal needs of poor Americans will continue to be unmet. For example, it is estimated that almost 80 percent of the legal problems of the poor are now being ignored because of the insufficient funds available to the Legal Services program.

Even more disturbing in section 512 of this legislation. This section prohibits the direct or indirect use of legal services funds for any attorney or other person who engages in any activity "for or on behalf of any client or other person or class of persons, the purpose of which is—by litigation or by actions relating thereto—to nullify, challenge, or circumvent any provision of the Social Security Act, or any of the purposes or intentions of the Congress in enacting any such title or provision relating thereto." This prohibition can be waived by the Attorney General after 60-days notification and submission to the Senate Committee on Finance and the House Committee on Ways and Means. The Senate Finance Committee report makes clear that during the 60-day period the committee will consider the issues being raised in the proposed litigation and may take legislative action concerning such issues.

This section is totally inconsistent with the clear and explicit mandates of the legal profession. Canon 7 of the Code of Professional Responsibility states:

A lawyer should represent a client zealously within the bounds of law.

Ethical consideration 7-1 elaborates on this canon in the following manner:

The duty of a lawyer, both to his client and to the legal system, is to represent his client zealously within the bounds of the law, which includes Disciplinary Rules and enforceable professional regulations. The professional responsibility of a lawyer derives from his membership in a profession which has the duty of assisting members of the public to secure and protect available legal rights and benefits. In our government of laws and not of men, each member of our society is entitled to have his conduct judged and regulated in accordance with the law; to seek any lawful objective through legally permissible means; and to present for adjudication any lawful claim, issue or defense.

In light of these ethical requirements, a legal services attorney—like any other lawyer—cannot stop and weigh the consequences of contemplated legal action.

These mandates reflect the fact that our system of justice is based on the adversary process—which in turn depends upon effective advocacy. A dilution of the lawyer's independence threatens this adversary process. As former Chief Justice Warren has stated:

A right without an advocate is as useless as a blueprint without a builder or materials.

No attorney can meet his professional responsibilities to a client if there are outside restraints on the types of cases in which he can particpate or the kinds of issues he can raise. No large corporation would tolerate outside interference with their retained attorneys. Certainly the poor should not be expected to tolerate such interference.

Section 512 not only undermines the legal profession's Code of Professional Responsibility, it also raises serious constitutional questions under the equal protection and due process clauses of the Constitution.

In Boddie against Connecticut, the Supreme Court held that access to the courts may not be denied because of a person's indigency, when the courts have been estabilshed as the only forum for the effective resolution of the matter at hand.

In seeking to deprive the poor of legal redress in an area directly affecting their most fundamental interests, section 512 singles out the poor as a class to be denied certain basic rights.

Imagine Bethlehem Steel having to obtain the permission of the Attorney General of the United States and wait 2 months for congressional committees to think about a lawsuit before challenging the seizure of its steel plants by President Truman. Yet under section 512, this is exactly what the poor person will have to do when he claims that the subsistence benefits he needs for his sick wife or small children have been denied to him by an unconstitutional law or by a public employee refusing to obey Federal law.

It is for these reasons that leading spokesmen for the legal profession have consistently opposed such efforts to limit the ability of legal services lawyers to represent their clients.

On May 1, 1972, Dean Richard C. Maxwell, president of the Association of American Law Schools, wrote to the Senate Finance Committee urging rejection of language now contained in section 512. In addition, the American Bar Association, the National Bar Association, the National Legal Aid and Defender Association, and the American Trial Lawyers Association have strongly opposed such a restriction.

On October 3, 1972, the president of the American Bar Association, Robert W. Meserve, wired each Member of the Senate in support of the amendment to nullify sections 512 and 452(c). The text of this telegram is as follows:

ABA urges deletion of Sections 452(c) and 512 of H.R. 1 as reported to the Senate. Former provision would force upon OEO lawyers prosecutorial function inconsistent with professional obligations to represent the poor. Latter provision seriously limits access of the poor to courts in areas of significant concern contravenes, lawyer's ethical obligation to client, and raises question of equal protections of the laws for all our citizens. Association endorses the principle expressed by President Nixon in his statement of May 5, 1971.

"The legal problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of their attorneys to bring any type of civil suit. Only in this manner can we maintain the integrity of the adversary process and fully protect the attorney-client relationship so central to our judicial process."

Urge support of Cranston-Javits amendment to strike Sections 452(c) and 512.

The ABA and other professional legal organizations recognize that under our system, the courts are the forum of last redress. We understand as a people that we must respect the supremacy of law—and the inviolability of recourse to the courts for those who are disenfranchised and for those who have been dealt with unfairly and arbitrarily.

In this decade, it is a singularly small but visible effort which has come to symbolize the possibility of a new period of maturity, of conscience, of self-assurance, for our Nation—the Legal Services program.

I believe that our Government has reached the point where it can admit that it is capable of error, that it no longer need claim infallibility or hide behind sovereign immunity. We are ready to set up mechanisms whereby the people can hold the Government accountable—not only every 2 or 4 years—but can challenge individual acts and specific policies as contrary to law.

This is the genius and historic significance of the Legal Services program—that a government can offer to the powerless the opportunity and the resources needed to challenge improper acts by both private and public bodies.

If the poor and the powerless do not have free access to our legal system, government by law is a failure.

I, therefore, urge the Senate to adopt the pending amendment.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from New York.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I yield very briefly to the Senator from New York.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I object to the Senator getting the floor. I would like to speak.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from California has the floor.

Mr. LONG. He can only yield for a question. He cannot farm out the time.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I will ask a question.

Is it not a fact that the American Bar Association has endorsed the provisions of this amendment? Has not the president of the Bar Association, Robert W. Meserve, president of the ABA, has in fact, wired all Senators of the United States as follows:

American Bar Association urges deletion of Secs. 452(c) and 512 of H.R. 1 as reported to the Senate. Former provision would force upon OEO lawyers prosecutorial function inconsistent with professional obligations to represent the poor. Latter provision seriously limits access of the poor to courts in areas of significant concern, contravenes lawyer's ethical obligation to client, and raises question of equal protection of the laws for all our citizens.

Is it not a fact also that the telegram goes on to say:

Association endorses the principle expressed by President Nixon in his statement of May 5, 1971, "the legal problems of the poor are of sufficient scope that we should not restrict the right of their attorneys to bring any type of civil suit. Only in this manner can we maintain the integrity of the adversary process and fully protect the attorney-client relationship so central to our judicial process." Urge support of Cranston-Javits amendment to strike Secs. 452(c) and 512.

The telegram is signed by Robert W. Meserve, president of the American Bar Association.

Is it not a fact that that telegram has been sent to every Member of the Senate?

Mr. CRANSTON. The Senator is correct. And in addition, the Association of American Law Schools, the American Trial Lawyers Association, and the deans of many law schools have expressed their support for the amendment.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I think that we have heard one side of the matter. Let me now talk about something that one does not have to go to law school to understand. No one that has one ounce of commonsense, that has enough commonsense to find his way out of an insane asylum, would hire a lawyer to sue himself.

I think that is what this amendment to strike our amendment would do. This would hire Government lawyers to sue the United States. It has already cost us billions of dollars.

It would be one thing for the Government to do something like that. And our amendment would provide that the Government could do that. If the Attorney General of the United States, as our chief lawyer, wants to hire a lawyer at the expense of the United States to file a lawsuit to sue the United States for something, that is all right. But we would like to know about it before he authorizes something that will cost us a lot of money.

For example, some of us thought when we voted for poverty lawyers to proceed to go into business under the OEO, that these poverty lawyers were going to do the kind of thing that I did when I was a young lawyer. A woman would come in and say that her husband had deserted her and that she did not have enough money to pay her bills. She would ask me to sue the man so that she could get some money for the children.

I would do my best to sue the father. Sometimes he would get beyond my reach when he got outside the boundaries of the State of Louisiana. However, I did the best I could to help her.

That is not the area that the poverty lawyer works in today. He does not work in the field of family law. Does the Senator think that these poverty lawyers are willing to be the kind of lawyer that I was? Not on your tintype. They have the word out, "We can achieve a great thing for the poor if we can file a certain type of lawsuit and sue the Government. We can get $5 billion in benefits for the poor if we can require them to load these welfare rolls down with all of these people." They circulate among the people and have their people find someone to file that particular kind of a lawsuit that they would like to promote and where they can claim that this is a great victory for the poor. They proceeded to find someone to sue the Government to strike down the man-in-the-household rule.

We had provided in the law that we would take into account all the income that the family had. We thought that in doing that we would take into account the income available to them because a man was living in the house with mama and the children looked just like him, but they claimed that we could not do that even if he is making $20,000 a year and living with mama because he is not the legal father. So they win, and that increases the cost of the program by 50 percent.

Perhaps some of these people who think things were too tight believe we could have acted on that in Washington; HEW could have made suggestions and we could have acted. But where he conducts himself like a papa, and he looks like the papa, you would expect him to support them if he was in the house with them. That was one of their great victories.

We say that if they are going to sue in the future, in view of the fact the Federal Government is going to have to pay 50 percent of the cost, then Uncle Sam should be consulted if he is going to pay the lawyer. It just does not make sense, and we should not do that.

Just look at some of these things. Poverty lawyers have won a decision so that a woman can be on welfare even though she refused to say who the father was. She can steadfastly refuse to say who the father was and stay on welfare. They also won that decision. We will try to do something about it. They have won a great many of these cases. If poverty lawyers try to enforce support orders, we are told that would be horrible, that would be antisocial, and that would not be ethical. No, no; do not have the poverty lawyer do that. Get them to use Uncle Sam. If we are going to let them sue the Government, we should pass judgment on what we want them to do.

Think of the good job the poverty lawyers could do. It costs us 10 times what we appropriate when they win a victory by prevailing in a position that was never intended by Congress. They are doing things that were never intended. They do not sue papa to support his children. That would save money for Uncle Sam. That is all right, since Uncle Sam will pay for mama on welfare.

Which one of you has ever paid a lawyer to sue yourself? You are paying a lawyer to sue Uncle Sam and your own State. That is all right with me, and it is all right with you, provided Uncle Sam knows and the Attorney General has authorized the State to be sued.

Let me explain the situation. I am a member of the American Bar Association. They have different sections. There is an international law section, there is a family law section, and there is a section on this and a section on that. When these sections meet they have a group that decides what the law should be with regard to their specialty of the law. I can only conclude when I see something as ridiculous as this that they must have a poverty law section. The poverty law section meets, and they have one thing in common. Their great claim to fame is that they have cost the Government billions of dollars by obtaining favorable court decisions.

Because of various court decisions which have come about through OEO lawyers, a person by mere delay, and to no inconvenience to himself, can stay on the welfare rolls for as long as 5 months, although he was never eligible the first day to draw all of those payments. Then, if it is found he was not eligible, how much more money can you get back? Not the first red copper cent. But let a veteran who fought for his country be paid one nickel more than he is entitled to receive. How much can he keep? They will sue him and they will make him pay back the last nickel. Let that person be a taxpayer who has some small amount outstanding and he will have to pay every nickel. The poverty lawyer spends his time in suing Uncle Sam and suing the States but not in making the father do what he should by his children.

Mr. President, that is the sort of mischief we have tried to upset. I suppose there is some section in the ABA where young poverty lawyers dominate. I assume they account in large measure for this talk about legal ethics, where we take a practical, commonsense attitude.

I am a lawyer and I say that nobody but a fool would hire a lawyer to sue himself. The poverty lawyers we are paying should do what I thought they were going to do. I thought they should help mama get support from papa, help mama get her business straightened out, or help her get divorced so she could get married to another man to help her support the family, rather than spending all their time in suing us.

If they want to sue us, tell us the basis for the lawsuit and why they think we should be sued, or why the State of Arkansas, the State of Mississippi, the State of Georgia should be sued, or why the State of Tennessee or Missouri should be sued. They do not have to get our consent; just tell us why before they sic all their poverty lawyers on us and load the welfare rolls down with vast numbers of people we do not think should be there.

The Federal Government is not the only one that can hire a lawyer. You have the Ford Foundation with untold millions of dollars; you have the Rockefeller Foundation with untold millions of dollars, and you have all sorts of well-intentioned, although perhaps misguided people, with all their foundation money, so much they do not know what to do with it. All that is available to subsidize someone to sue Uncle Sam. Why does Uncle Sam have to pay someone to sue himself?

So I hope the Senate leaves in this provision that would say the poverty lawyer would be required to help us to do what I thought they were to do in the first place, to help momma get help from pappa.

That being the case, in view of the lateness of the hour, I hope we can dispose of the matter.

Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion to lay the amendment on the table.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, an the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), and the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE), is absent on official business.

On this vote, the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS) is paired with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF).

If present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana would vote "yea" and the Senator from Connecticut would vote "nay."

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS) is paired with the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD). If present and voting, the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea" and the Senator from Oregon would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 38, nays 35, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1662

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TUNNEY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TUNNEY's amendment is as follows:

Beginning on page 588, line 7, strike out through page 589, line 25, and insert in lieu thereof the following new section:

STATE SUPPLEMENTATION

SEC. 1616. (a)(1) In order for a State to be eligible for payments pursuant to title V, VI, XV, or XIX of this Act, with respect to expenditures for any quarter beginning after December 31, 1973, it must have in effect an agreement with the Secretary under which it will (A) make supplementary payments, as provided in this section, to any individual or married couple residing in the State who is (or who, but for his or her income, would be) eligible for benefits under this title, or (B) authorize the Secretary to make such payments on its behalf.

(2) The amount payable under any agreement with a State under this section, to any individual (or married couple) shall be excluded under section 1616(b)(6) in determining the income of such individual or couple, and, subject to the succeeding provisions of this section, shall be not less than an amount equal to—

(A) the sum of (i) the amount of the money payment which such individual or married couple would have received under the plan of such State which was approved under and complied with the requirements of or imposed with respect to title I, X, XIV, or XVI of the Social Security Act and was in effect for December 1973, or any greater amount which such individual or married couple would have received under such an approved plan at any prior time; plus (ii) the bonus value of food stamps for December 1973 (as defined in paragraph (3)); plus (iii) any cost-of-living increase required to be paid under paragraph (4); reduced by—

(B) the benefits payable to such individual or such married couple under this title.

(3) For purposes of paragraph (2)—

(A) an individual or married couple who would not have been eligible for assistance under a plan referred to in paragraph (2)(A), but who is (or would, but for his or their income, be) eligible for benefits under this title, shall be deemed to meet the eligibility requirements of the plan of such State which was in effect for December 1973; and

(B) the term "bonus value of food stamps" in a State for December 1973 (with respect to an individual or married couple) means—

(i) the face value of the coupon allotment which would have been provided to such individual (or married couple) under the Food Stamp Act of 1964 for December 1973, reduced by—

(ii) the charge which such individual (or married couple) would have paid for such coupon alotment if his (or their) income were equal to the amount determined under paragraph (2)(A)(i) for an individual, or married couple, who had no other income.

The total value of food stamps and the cost thereof in December 1973 shall be determined in accordance with rules prescribed by the Secretary of Agriculture in effect in such month. For purposes of this subsection, each individual (or married couple) will be deemed to have been residing in a jurisdiction where the food stamp program was in effect in December 1973.

(4)(a) Any agreement between the Secretary and a State entered into under subsection (a) shall provide—

(1) that in determining the eligibility of any individual (and his eligible spouse, if any) for supplementary payments on the basis of his income, all the provisions of section 1612(b) will apply, except that, with respect to any quarter, if benefits are paid to such individual for such quarter under this title, such benefits will not be excluded from income in applying paragraph (4) of such section,

(2) that the determination of the amount of supplementary payments for which an individual (or individual and eligible spouse) is eligible will be made without regard to any reduction in benefits under this title pursuant to section 1611(f)(1),

(3) that no lien will be imposed by the State against the property of any individual or eligible spouse or his or their estate on account of payments made under the agreement, and that there will be no adjustment or any recovery of payments correctly made under the agreement, and, if the agreement provides that the Secretary will, on behalf of the State (or political subdivision), make the supplementary payments to individuals receiving benefits under this title, shall also provide—

(4) that such payments will be made to all individuals residing in such State (or subdivision) who are (or who, but for their income, would be) receiving benefits under this title,

(5) such other rules with respect to eligibility for or amount of the supplementary payments, and such procedural or other general administrative provisions, as the Secretary finds necessary to achieve efficient and effective administration of both the program which he conducts under this title and the State supplementation.

(b)(1) Any State (or political subdivision), in determining the eligibility of any individual for supplementary payments described in subsection (a), may disregard up to $7.50 per month of any income in addition to other amounts which it is required or permitted to disregard under this section in determining such eligibility, and may include a provision to that effect in the State's agreement with the Secretary under subsection (a).

(2) Any State (or political subdivision) in determining the eligibility of any individual for supplementary payments described in subsection (a), shall disregard any income derived from an increase in Federal benefits under this title under the operation of section 1611(c) in addition to other amounts which it is permitted or required to disregard under this section in determining such eligibility, and shall include a provision to that effect in the State's agreement with the Secretary under subsection (a).

(c) Any payments which are made to individuals by a State to which the provisions of section 344 of the Social Security Amendments of 1950 were applicable on January 1, 1962, and to which the sentence following paragraph (2) of section 1002(b) and the sentence following paragraph (3) of section 1602(b) of this Act, as in effect prior to the enactment of this title, were applicable shall be considered as supplementary payments for purposes of this title only to the extent that such payments would have been included as expenditures for the purpose of payments under section 1003 or section 1603 of this Act, as in effect prior to the enactment of this title.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, the amendment to H.R. 1 I am offering will correct a large gap in title III as reported out by the Finance Committee by requiring mandatory State supplementation of the benefit levels proposed by the committee.

As you know, Mr. President, title III of the bill creates a system of Federal benefits for elderly, blind, and disabled persons. The committee has set basic benefit levels at $130 for an individual and $195 for a couple.

At the present time, some States, including California, provide benefits to such persons at considerably higher levels. In California, for example, the maximum for an individual senior citizen is $218 per month.

But there is nothing in the bill as drafted which prevents a State from cutting back its own benefits and paying nothing additional to these needy persons beyond the minimum levels set by the committee.

My amendment will require the States to supplement the new Federal minimum assistance levels to bring them back up to the present levels in States where benefits are higher than those proposed by the committee. In this way, aged, blind, and disabled public assistance recipients in States such as California will not be worse off after the enactment of H.R. 1 than they are presently.

Mr. President, everyone knows that States—and even cities within States—vary widely in terms of the cost necessary to eke out an existence under conditions other than grinding poverty. In San Francisco, for example, an elderly welfare recipient may receive up to $218 per month. This sum, barely adequate in terms of San Francisco costs, is more than adequate for a more comfortable existence in rural areas of the south. Yet, under the committee proposal, it is assumed that all senior citizens face the same cost barriers to an equal extent no matter where they live.

We all know that the Nation's aged citizens suffer unequal financial burdens according to economic conditions where they live. Yet, under the committee proposal, all qualified recipients are treated equally under the bill with each to receive a maximum of $130 in basic public assistance. Although the figure of $130 per month may be a boon to our southern elderly, it is a figure which deals a painful blow to the already meager straits of California senior citizens.

The committee bill reflects a desire for a nationwide minimum standard for benefits. But in my judgment, it is indulging in fantasy for us to conclude that a sum which is adequate for the elderly in one area of the country has relevance to what is adequate in other area. We all know that living costs are widely different in different parts of the country.

Indeed, in large part, the reason for the patch work quilt-like system encompassing different assistant levels for different States is a mirror reflection of the vastly different economic realities confronting them. It is this fact of life which has caused some States to set benefits levels at rates higher than those existing in other States.

The fear that I have is that unless we amend title III, it may have the unintended affect of lowering benefit levels in many States. Therefore, the amendment I am offering would assume that no elderly, blind, or disabled person would end up with less money than he is now getting.

Although the committee version of title III gives the States the option to supplement the basic Federal minimum benefits, nothing requires them to do so.

Furthermore, I have been advised by some legal authorities in my State that in order for a State to exercise an option to supplement, it will require affirmative State legislative action which, of course, would be subject to the veto of the Governor.

Mr. President, I do not think it is wise for us to assume that States will be anxious or willing to supplement. I believe the issue is clear enough—and the needs of our elderly, blind, and disabled citizens acute enough—to make supplementation mandatory so that the reforms of title III will not become instruments of harshness and deprivation for some of the people we are trying to help.

Under my amendment, all States presently providing higher allowances than title III levels set by the committee would be required to supplement the basic Federal payments so that the total Federal-State payment would at least equal present payment, plus an allowance for the cash value of food stamps, which are being eliminated under title III involves no Federal expenditures.

I urge the Senate to act favorably on it.

With that, I yield to the chairman of the Committee on Finance, to have his opinion on the amendment. I hope it can be disposed of fairly quickly.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this is something that just has to address itself to the conscience of the individual Senator, and I really would urge Senators to think about it and apply it to their own situations.

What the Senator wants to do is say that a State cannot cut back on the benefits that it is paying.

We assume that States are not going to cut back on their benefit levels, and we do not know of any reason to anticipate that they would. We did provide some additional help to them, so we would hope they would not do it. It is conceivable that there might be a court decision or something that might require them to add a lot of people to the rolls that they did not anticipate, and if that were the case, they might need to cut back on benefit levels. So far as we know, we do not anticipate that there would be any cutback.

But the question is, where a State has a high level of benefits and wants to make a reduction, should it be permitted to do so? After all, it is a State plan that provides the money, and where the State is putting up more than half the money, should they be permitted to make a reduction in the level of benefits if they want to do so, if they think it is too generous?

I would say it is up to the conscience of the individual Senator. It does not upset our cost estimates one way or the other. Our estimate would be the same in either event. We assume the States are not going to cut back. The question is, do we want, at this level of government, to require that they not make reductions in the existing level of benefits they pay?

I do not know whether I can, in good conscience, insist on that, because other States like New York and Caliofrnia may be paying a higher level of benefits than Louisiana. I do not know that I can insist, in good conscience, that the other States not cut back if their level is higher than that of my State.

I would say it is up to the conscience of individual Senators. Do Senators think they ought to be able to cut back if they want to, or not? If Senators think they should not be able to make a reduction, they should vote for the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I think what the Senator from California means is that, because of this bounty going to the various States because of the generosity of the Federal Government, he does not feel they ought to be allowed to cut back on their own contribution to welfare.

That is his point. It is not the point that later on, if they had a bad financial situation in the State, the State would be denied the prerogative of deciding what it should do in behalf of its own people. But he means they cannot use the Federal money as an excuse for cutting down on their own contribution to this body of people who are in need. Is that not the point?

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, one thing I would like to point out is that the State of California, for example, is going to save $200 million in the adult categories under the bill assuming they maintain the present benefit levels. This is because the Federal Government's contribution to the State is so much greater under the bill than under existing law.

Mr. PASTORE. This happened in many States, if the Senate will recall, when we raised the benefit for social security, and some States just cut back on the amount of money they were paying on social welfare, so we had to remedy that by adjusting the laws here in the Federal Government.

I think that is what the Senator from California has in mind, and I think the amendment ought to be accepted.

Mr. TUNNEY. I do not want to subject this to a record vote, as the hour is so late, and we know many Senators want to get home. I would just hope that this could be decided by a voice vote.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, just let me make the point that as it would stand without the Tunney amendment, if States wanted to take some of the money they are spending on welfare payments and spend it on social services instead of for these purposes, should they be permitted to do so?

Should they be permitted to reduce their welfare payment levels in order to spend more on education, for example? Without the Tunney amendment, the State would be entrusted with that decision. With the Tunney amendment, it could not make the decision.

I leave it up to the Senate.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. STEVENS. Does the Tunney amendment affect the 20-percent increase under the Long amendment?

Mr. LONG. It has nothing to do with it.

Mr. TUNNEY. It has no Federal budgetary impact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1662) of the Senator from California (Mr. TUNNEY) (putting the question).

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask for a division.

On a division, the amendment was rejected.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

AMENDMENT NO. 1689

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1689.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 523, after line 24, insert the following new section:

LIMITATION ON SPEND DOWN REQUIREMENT UNDER MEDICAID

SEC. 299I. (a) Section 1903(d)(1)(A) is amended by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: "and, in the case of any State which imposes an income limitation that is lower than the applicable income limitation determined under this paragraph, no payment shall be made under the preceding provisions of this section".

(b) Section 1903(d)(1)(B)(i) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "to whichever of the following is greater: (I)" after "equivalent to", and

(2) by inserting "or (II) 100 percent of the highest amount which would ordinarily be paid to an individual without any income or resources, in the form of money payments, under the plan of the State approved under title I, X, XIV, XV, or XVI (or, supplemental security income benefits under title XVI of this Act as in effect after December 31, 1973) of this Act" before the period at the end thereof.

Mr. TUNNEY. Mr. President, a very unfortunate anomaly exists in the Federal law governing State medicaid. Its effect upon aged, blind, and disabled persons in 11 States is to punish financially those persons who are able to remove themselves from public assistance rolls. Today, I offer an amendment to H.R. 1 to deal effectively and fairly with the problem.

Under current law, any State participating in the medicaid grant program must provide medicaid to all recipients of cash assistance. In addition, the States also may, if they choose to do so, provide medicaid services to persons who would, except for the level of their income and resources, be eligible for cash assistance. States which opt for this second type of medical coverage for those whose incomes exceed the cash assistance eligibility standards are said to be providing medicaid benefits to those persons deemed to be "medically needy."

Twenty-seven States, including California have chosen this dual medicaid system. But in at least 11 of those States, including California, the system operates to the considerable detriment of aged, blind, and disabled persons who receive public assistance, and for one reason or another, receive a supplement to their income which takes them off public assistance rolls. Although these persons no longer receive medicaid benefits which accompany public assistance, they are eligible to qualify under the "medically needy" program.

The problem my amendment deals with derives from the fact that the "medically needy" standard is below the cash assistance standard, thereby requiring a "spend down" from the latter level to the former.

The way it works is this. Current law limits the income standard for a "medically needy" program—this medical assistance standard is technically called the "standard of income protected for maintenance—to 133 percent of the payment for an AFDC family, adjusted for appropriate family size. Since payments to AFDC families are sometimes considerably less generous than cash assistance payments to the aged, blind, and disabled, the anomalous result is that persons with incomes only slightly in excess of the cash assistance standard may have to incur a significant amount of medical expense—that is "spend down" their income by this amount on medical expenses—before they can receive medicaid coverage.

Furthermore, even though the "medically needy" income standard has a maximum set by Federal law, States are able to reduce the standard below the Federal limit thereby making the "income gap" even wider.

Let me give an example of how the problem operates in California. A California senior citizen can receive up to a maximum of $218 per month. Let us assume such a person has nonexcluded income of $200 per month and receives $18 per month public assistance. Under current laws, that individual is entitled to Medi-Cal—the name of California's medicaid plan—benefits because he is receiving public assistance. Suppose he receives a supplement to his existing $200 per month income by $25 per month. Since his income is above the maximum benefit level, $218 for an aged person, as a result he will not be on public assistance any longer, nor will he be eligible for Medi-Cal benefits.

However, since California does have a "medically needy" program, our hypothetical person has an opportunity to qualify for those benefits. Unfortunately, though, in order to qualify, our senior citizen whose income has now been supplemented to a level only $7 above the public assistance level must "spend down" to the rate of $158 per month, the highest level California allows.

Thus, the result to this individual of receiving an additional $25 is that he must spend on medical expenses at the rate of $67 per month. He is actually much worse off after his income was supplemented than he was before.

The situation is much worse for an aged California couple. Presently, the relevant maximum old age assistance level is $5,232 on an annual basis. Yet the medically needy standard is only $2,520 on an annual basis, thereby requiring an expenditure of in excess of $2,700 in medical expenses as a prerequisite for qualifying for Medi-Cal benefits once they are off the welfare rolls.

It is this type of situation which has the effect of locking aged, blind, and disabled citizens in California and other States into their present public assistance income level. It operates as a disincentive to pull themselves out of it. Medical expenses for the elderly and the disabled are probably the single largest expenses for them after housing and food. It is no wonder that a person receiving a small assistance allowance would be very reluctant to do anything to supplement his income because of the fear that his medical needs will no longer be provided for.

The system is simply geared to keep those people in their already meager straits.

The amendment I offer today would correct the situation in the 11 States which have lower AFDC payments than assistance levels for the aged, blind and disabled. Its effect would be such that wherever the medically needy standard is below the relevant assistance payment level, the recipient would be required to spend down only to that applicable level, and no lower.

Thus, continuing with my example, my California senior citizen would be required under my proposal to spend only down from the $225 level to the $218 level at which point he would be eligible for Medi-Cal payments.

I think this inequity is long overdue for a legislative response. Now is the time for us to act.

I ask unanimous consent to incorporate at the conclusion of my remarks a chart showing OAA Cash and Medical Assistance Standards, as of January 1972.

There being no objection, the chart was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we are prepared to accept this amendment.

Mr. TUNNEY. Then I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment (No. 1689) of the Senator from California.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 1701

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I have two amendments. I shall be very brief. I have discussed them both with the chairman.

Mr. President, I call up first amendment No. 1701. I ask unanimous consent that the names of Senators WILLIAMS, JAVITS, KENNEDY, and TUNNEY be added as cosponsors.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of title I, insert the following new section:

COVERAGE OF AGRICULTURAL LABOR

SEC. —. (a) Section 209(h)(2) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) Cash remuneration paid in any calendar year to an employee for agricultural labor by an employer whose total expenditures for agricultural labor in the immediately preceding year was less than $500 unless (A) the cash remuneration paid in the current year by the employer to the employee for such labor is $150 or more, or (B) the employee performs agricultural labor for the employer on twenty days or more during the current year for cash remuneration computed on a time basis;".

(b) Section 210(n) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows

"(n) Any person who furnishes 'agricultural labor' and all workers so furnished shall be deemed to be the employees of the operator of the farm on which the agricultural labor was performed, and any person, partnership, organization, or corporation engaged in the business of providing farm-management services, as defined by regulations of the Secretary, shall be deemed to be the operator of the farm: Provided, That any person, partnership, organization, or corporation who specifically furnishes agricultural workers and machine services, as defined by regulations of the Secretary, under a contract with a farm operator shall be deemed to be the employer of such agricultural workers."

(c) Section 3121(a)(8) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(8) Cash remuneration paid in any calendar year to an employee for agricultural labor by an employer whose total expenditures for agricultural labor in the immediately preceding year was less than $500 unless (A) the cash remuneration paid in the current year by the employer to the employee for such labor is $150 or more, or (B) the employee performs agricultural labor for the employer on twenty days or more during the current year for cash remuneration computed on a time basis;".

(d) Section 3121(o) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended to read as follows:

"(o) For purposes of this chapter, any person who furnishes 'agricultural labor' and all workers so furnished shall be deemed to be the employees of the operator of the farm on which the agricultural labor was performed, and any person, partnership, organization, or corporation engaged in the business of providing farm-management services, as defined by regulations of the Secretary, shall be deemed to be the operator of the farm: Provided, That any person, partnership, organization, or corporation who specifically furnishes agricultural workers and machine services, as defined by regulations of the Secretary, under a contract with a farm operator shall be deemed to be employer of such agricultural workers."

(e) This section shall be applicable only with respect to remuneration paid after 1972.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, only one major group of workers is deprived of the full benefits of social security—the American farmworker.

Work in the field is every bit as arduous and important as work in the factory. Yet, farmworkers were completely excluded from social security until 1956. Despite the fact that the farmworker is poorer, sicker, and more likely to be injured on the job than most American workers, the Social Security Act discriminates against farmworkers to this day.

In 1971, the Advisory Council on Social Security, chaired by former HEW Secretary Arthur Flemming, stated, "it is especially important that social security protection of migratory farmworkers and their families be improved" and recommended a specific method of bringing about that improvement. The amendment before us is substantially identical to the Advisory Council's recommendation. I ask unanimous consent that the portion of the Advisory Council report dealing with farmworker coverage be reprinted at this point in the RECORD.

Mr. President, the overwhelming majority of all farmers, including all small family farmers, will not be affected by this amendment. They and their employees will remain exactly where they are under existing law. With respect to large farm operators, including all corporate farms, this amendment makes two simple changes.

It provides that the large farmer—defined as the farmer who pays more than $500 a year in farmworker wages—must report all employee earnings from the first day and the first dollar, just as all other commercial employers must. Under present law, earnings must be reported only if the farm employee receives from the employer more than $150 annually or works more than 20 days annually at an hourly rate.

This means that under present law a farmworker who earns $100 from each of 10 employers—or $1,000 in total—would get no social security coverage. Every other worker employed by a commercial enterprise would receive up to four quarters' coverage in those circumstances. While the change made by this amendment will affect only about 20 percent of all farms, it will mean that 90 percent of all farmworker earnings will be credited toward social security coverage with the result that a half million farmworkers will get coverage for the first time.

The second change made by my amendment is that for social security purposes the large farmer will be deemed to be the employer of all who work on his farm, including the so-called crew leader and those who work under him. The reason for the change is that crew leaders, who are transient and in many cases unscrupulous, often fail to comply with social security requirements, thereby depriving the farmworker of social security coverage he has earned. Under existing law, a person doing farmwork under a crew leader is presumed to be the employee of the crew leader unless there is a written contract of employment between the farm operator and the farmworker. In practice, this creates a conclusive and usually unwarranted presumption that the farmworker is employed by the crew leader. In the case of small farmers, the employment relationship will be established by the familiar common-law test rather than by artificial presumptions.

Mr. President, when the farmworkers are denied the opportunity to earn social security protection, when they get old, sick, or disabled they go on welfare or get medicaid—in each case at the expense of all the taxpayers. The choice presented by this amendment is whether to finance retirement income and medical care from the earnings of the covered employees, or to shift the burden to already overburdened taxpayers. The farmworker should have the same right to pay his own way, and the same benefits enjoyed by all other American workers. If the committee cannot accept this amendment. I would hope that in the next session of the Congress it would give its new serious atention to the plight of farmworkers.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from House Document 92-80, the report of the 1971 Advisory Council on Social Security.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPT FROM REPORT OF 1971 ADVISORY COUNCIL ON SOCIAL SECURITY (H. DOC. 92-80)

COVERAGE OF FARM WORKERS

Social security coverage of farm workers should be improved by providing that employers who have substantial amounts of expenditures for farm labor report all of the cash wages paid to their employees and that the determination of whether leaders of farm labor crews are employers of their crew members be made under the common-law test of whether an individual is an employee.

Under present law, farm wages are covered under social security only if the worker is paid $150 or more in cash wages by the employer in a year or he works for the employer on 20 or more days in the year and is paid on a time basis. Where a farm worker is a member of a labor crew, the crew leader rather than the farmer is ordinarily considered to be the employer.

The present coverage test prevents many who primarily work on farms from getting social security credit for part or all of such work. People who depend mainly on farm employment for their livelihood generally rely entirely on social security coverage for their protection against loss of income through the death, long-term disablement or old age of the worker. These workers have little or no private insurance and rarely are covered under private pension plans; their savings and assets are usually inconsequential. They have need for protection too under Medicare. The Council believes it is especially important that social security protection of migratory farm workers and their families be improved.

Workers on farms which have substantial expenditures for farm labor should have social security coverage on the same basis as employees in industry. Such farms are generally sizable business enterprises—some are large corporations—keeping the same kind of business records that nonfarm businesses do. Most are highly mechanized, with many employees engaged in operating and maintaining farm machines, and are operated in much the same manner as nonfarm businesses—yet many employ seasonal field workers who do not meet the coverage test in present law. Wages paid for farm labor performed on such farms constitute a very large proportion of the farm wages paid in the United States.

The Council recommends that farm employers whose total expenditures in a calendar year for farm wages are substantial, for example $500 or more—report all of the farm wages they pay in the following year. The present coverage test would be continued for individual farm employees when employed by a farmer whose total farm payroll in the previous year was not substantial. The recommended change would not affect the recordkeeping and reporting of the operators of what are essentially family farms with only occasional hired workers.

If the foregoing recommendation is adopted by the Congress, it would be desirable to make an additional change in present law that would further improve coverage for migratory workers who are members of crews. Difficulties in getting crew leaders to report the covered earnings of crew members have contributed to the inadequacy of the social security protection now afforded these workers. Also, there are increasing numbers, of small crews—mostly family groups. In the case of family groups, the family spokesman generally meets the definition of a crew leader in the law and is thus self-employed. These people do not think of themselves as being self-employed and generally do not report their earnings. The Council recommends that (contingent upon extension of coverage to all farm workers hired by employers who have substantial expenditures for labor) the provision in present law under which a crew leader is deemed to be the employer of members of his crew be repealed. Whether a crew leader is the employer of his crew members would be determined under the common-law test. Spokesmen of family groups and members of family groups should ordinarily be considered employees of the farm operators. Nearly all members of crews, most of whom are migratory workers, would have all of their wages covered under these recommended changes since workers who are hired in crews work primarily on farms with substantial annual payrolls.

Under the Council's recommendations (assuming a $500 annual employer payroll test), roughly 40 percent of the farms with farm labor expenditures would report all of their farm employees for social security purposes. The farm wages paid by these farms constitute more than 90 percent of the total farm wages paid. Under the recommendations, more than one-half million employees would have farm wages covered which are not covered under present law.

Mr. STEVENSON. The largest single group of American workers uncovered by social security are the American farmers. Because of discriminatory provisions of the Social Security Act, some 500,000 American farm workers do not get any social security benefits.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, this problem is one we would very much like to look at next year. It does relate to agricutural labor, and it does involve a number of considerations that will have to be looked into.

I would hope the Senator would be willing to withhold this amendment, with the understanding that we will look at it next year and try to give it the best judgment we can. If we can agree with the Senator, we will recommend it. Otherwise, we will suggest what we think the answer should be.

Mr. STEVENSON. On that basis and with that assurance, I will withdraw the amendment.

I do hope that there can be some serious concern and consideration given in the Finance Committee to the farmer. Also, I hope we can receive some assurance that the Senate will not have to wait 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, or 7 years for another social security bill to come to the floor of the Senate before we will have a chance to vote on this question.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. The administration is very much interested in this matter, and they tried to do a complete job of research for the Senator from Illinois tonight, and it was impossible. I am glad he is making this decision. I think it is much better for the cause.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the Senator from New York.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

AMENDMENT NO. 1686

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 1686.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 486, line 20, insert the following: immediately following the word "therapy": ", occupational therapy,".

Section 1835(a)(2)(A)(i) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting ", occupational," after "physical".

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I have a modification which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modification will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the modification.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the modification be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment, as modified, will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 486, line 20, insert the following: immediately following the word "therapy": ", occupational therapy,".

At the end of title II of the bill, add the following new sections:

SEC. — (a) Section 1835(a)(2)(A)(i) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting ", occupational," after "physical.

SEC. — (b) Section 1814(a)(2)(D) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding " occupational," after "physical".

Mr. STEVENSON. The purpose of my modified amendment is to give medicare beneficiaries maximum access to occupational therapy, while discouraging unnecessary use of other covered services.

The Nation's 14,000 occupational therapists perform perceptual testing on stroke patients, testing which helps determine the right rehabilitation strategy. They train amputees in the use of new muscles and prosthetic devices. They provide rheumatoid arthritics with splinting devices. They help the blind learn how to compensate for the loss of sight, to list just a few of the occupational therapies.

Occupational therapy is medically necessary in cases where physical therapy or speech pathology is not. No one disputes that point, yet, if H.R. 1 is enacted in its present form, occupational therapy provided by a home health agency or free-standing rehabilitation facility will not be covered by medicare unless the patient also needs physical therapy or speech pathology or hospitalization. My amendment eliminates that linkage.

Mr. President, if a patient needs physical therapy but nothing else, he can get it under medicare. If he needs speech pathology but nothing else, he can get it under medicare. Unless occupational therapy is put on the same footing, countless medicare patients will be deprived of coverage for vital health services.

I recognize the need to control costs and discharge utilization of unnecessary services, and I applaud the Finance Committee for its efforts to do that. But we should not cut costs by denying the patient access to one kind of service unless he needs another kind. Besides, as matters now stand, patients may receive physical therapy or hospitalization they do not need solely to qualify them for the occupational therapy they do need. This amendment will remove the incentive to provide unnecessary services and thereby bring about cost savings, as well as better health services.

If this amendment is agreed to, I would expect that the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare will promptly issue regulations carefully defining the kinds of occupational therapy services that are covered. In my judgment, such regulations are a fairer and more selective means of controlling occupational therapy services.

I therefore urge that the amendment be agreed to, and I ask unanimous consent that a letter of support from the American Occupational Therapy Association be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE AMERICAN OCCUPATIONAL THERAPY ASSOCIATION, INC.,
Rockville, Md., October 2, 1972.

HON. ADLAI E. STEVENSON III
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR STEVENSON: Thank you for your interest in occupational therapy's alarm about the language in H.R. 1 pertaining to outpatient rehabilitation facilities. We urge that the clause that would make eligibility for occupational therapy services contingent upon a concomitant need for physical therapy and/or speech pathology be deleted. Such a provision would deny coverage for many individuals in need of occupational therapy services. Examples of the kinds of patients that would be denied coverage by the present bill are:

1. Hand and arm amputees who need to learn how to use prostheses;

2. Patients with such debilitating conditions as terminal cancer, diabetes, and cardiac conditions who need evaluation and programs that would enable them to function out of the hospital to full tolerance;

3. Rheumatoid arthritics who need splinting or other adaptive devices as well as training in hand use without overstress to muscles and joints;

4. Wheelchair ambulatory patients who need training in order to care for themselves and manage their personal affairs in their homes; and

5. Blind and visually handicapped patients who need to learn how to cook, work in their kitchens and care for their personal needs with full safety.

Occupational therapy is the professional direction of a patient's use of time, energy, interest and attention toward the learning of new skills or active exercise to overcome illness or handicapping conditions.

We will appreciate your efforts to rectify this oversight in H.R. 1.

Very sincerely yours,

RUTH B. WIEMER,
Chairman, Legislation Committee.
Chairman, Legislation Committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we do find some problems with this amendment, but I would be willing to take it to conference and see what will happen. I hope we can work it out to the Senator's satisfaction.

Mr. STEVENSON. I thank the chairman.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill insert the following:

"SEC. (2)(A). If the Secretary determines that, for any calendar quarter before July 1, 1973 (commencing with the first calendar quarter which begins more than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this section) that the amount equal to one-fourth of the allotment (as determined without regard to this paragraph) of any State is in excess of the total of the expenditures (of the type, and under the programs, to which the allotment under this subsection applies) which will be incurred by the State for such calendar quarter, then the allotment of such State for fiscal year 1973 shall be reduced by the amount of such excess and an amount equal to the amount of such excess shall be available, for reallotment among the States, by the Secretary for such fiscal year but only for social services provided recipients of assistance under State plans approved under titles I, X, XIV, XVI, or part A of title IV of this Act.

"(B) From the amounts made available for reallotment under this paragraph for fiscal year 1973, the Secretary may increase the allotment of any State (but not by more than $10,000,000) which he determines will incur, during such fiscal year, expenditures (of the type, and under the programs, to which the allotment under this section applies) the total of which is in excess of the amount of the allotment of such State (as determined without regard to this paragraph).

"(C) Each State shall, prior to each calendar quarter (commencing with the first calendar quarter which begins more than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this section) certify to the Secretary (in such form and manner and containing such information as the Secretary shall by regulations prescribe) the total amount of the expenditures (of the type, and under the programs, to which the allotment under this section applies) which will be incurred by the State for such calendar quarter; and the Secretary shall conclusively presume for purposes of subparagraph (A), that the amount so certified will be the amount which will be expended for such quarter. If any State fails to make timely certification of such expenditures for any calendar quarter, the Secretary shall conclusively presume, for purposes of this paragraph, that the amount of such expenditures for such quarter will be equal to the amount of such expenditures for the preceding calendar quarter.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, we have discussed this matter with the manager of the bill, the Senator from Louisiana. We are all tired.

The amendment provides a transitional section to carry over the social services contracting for a period of not to exceed the present fiscal year and sets a limit of $10 million within which the Secretary of HEW could allocate the moneys that are to be used by States under their entitlement under the population formula to those States that have contracts which are underway which will have to be terminated if this section is not in the bill.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I have an amendment to the amendment, if it is now in order, and I send it to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line x, insert the following: on the third line from the bottom, strike "$10,000,000" an insert in lieu thereof "$15,000,000."

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I will take just 2 minutes to explain this amendment to the Senate.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I will be happy to agree to the amendment as amended, if the Senator will withhold the explanation.

Mr. JAVITS. I will.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I call up my amendment to H.R. 1, which is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. —. Notwithstanding the provisions of sections 508 and 509 of this Act, the provisions of such sections shall not be effective until such date as the Congress shall designate by subsequent legislation.

Mr. HRUSKA. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President.

What is the number of the amendment?

Mr. CASE. This is an unprinted amendment, and I shall explain its effect.

Mr. President, this amendment would modify the effect of sections 508 and 509 of H.R. 1. Unless modified, thousands of older people, the blind and the disabled now receiving welfare aid will lose their food stamp or food commodity benefits. I do not believe this was the intention of the Senate when it accepted an amendment offered on Wednesday evening by Senator ROTH.

My amendment is cosponsored by Senators AIKEN, BROOKE, CRANSTON, EAGLETON, RIBICOFF, COOK, MAGNUSON, COOPER, CHURCH, ANDERSON, MCGOVERN, HART, HUMPHREY, HOLLINGS, MONDALE, PERCY, MCINTYRE, MOSS, BAYH. KENNEDY, TUNNEY, PASTORE, WILLIAMS, STEVENSON, HUGHES, MCGEE, GRAVEL, HARTKE, RANDOLPH, WEICKER, JAVITS, and MUSKIE.

At the present time those receiving Federal welfare assistance under the aged, blind and disabled categories receive food stamps in addition to cash. While H.R. 1 establishes a benefit floor for these categories where previously the States set their own levels, the welfare bill in section 508 also deletes food stamps for all aged, blind and disabled welfare recipients. Moreover, while section 509 establishes a mechanism for the States to pay out the difference to current food stamp recipients in cash, it does not guarantee that the States will do so, or that the States will maintain their current benefit levels, or that the amount of cash in addition to the minimum floor will be equal to the loss in dollars accrued through food stamp coupons.

In other words thousands of older citizens, the blind and the disabled, will be worse off than before, especially those who are in those States that now pay considerably more than the minimum floor now established.

To my mind this amendment not only legalizes but mandates the existence of hunger, malnutrition, and premature death for an uncertain number of the American people. The problem is a simple one. None of the welfare programs before us will give recipients an income meeting what we call the poverty level.

In passing title III of H.R. 1 just last week, it is true that we raised benefits to the aged, blind, and disabled to $130 per month for single people, and $195 per month for couples. But there are two important points to be kept in mind. First, the Senate action in passing title III did not include a requirement that States now providing higher benefits to the elderly and disabled continue those higher levels; that means that elderly and disabled welfare recipients could be worse off. This is not a small matter. Twenty-four States last year paid more to an elderly individual, and 28 States paid more to an elderly couple. In addition, 26 States paid more than $130 per month to a blind recipient; 22 paid more than that to a disabled recipient.

Second, the levels provided in title III will not bring elderly and disabled persons up to the poverty line. In fact, they will not even bring people up to last year's poverty line. One hundred thirty dollars per month provides yearly benefits of $1,560; the poverty line in 1971, for a single person, was $2,130. Similarly, $195 for a couple provides yearly benefits of $2,340; the poverty line for a couple was $2,790 last year. By 1974, when the provisions of the Roth amendment go into effect, the poverty line will be $2,220 for a single individual and $2,880 for a couple.

I do not debate our failure to provide benefits at the poverty line at this time. But we must understand, Mr. President, that poverty by definition is the inability to purchase a nutritionally adequate diet. An income below the poverty level puts people at nutritional risk. As surely as malnutrition retards the physical and mental growth of the young child, malnutrition hastens the degenerative process of the elderly individual.

In the last 4 years I have been proud to have been a part of this body in its efforts to eliminate hunger and malnutrition. I applauded the President's goal "to put an end to hunger in America for all time" and the President's efforts in "Project FIND" which was designed to inform the elderly of their right to food stamps. While we do not reach every one of the elderly or the blind or the disabled, we have it within our grasp to provide food assistance for the elderly and disabled who involuntarily suffer from poverty-related malnutrition.

We must act now to reverse last night's action prohibiting the elderly blind, and disabled from participating in the food stamp program. Otherwise we shall have told every poor elderly and disabled American that advanced age is to be a penance rather than a privilege. We shall have told blind and disabled Americans that their afflictions win them not sympathy or assistance from the Federal Government, but punishment. Unless we reverse our course, the penance and the punishment we mandate today is hunger. Last night we set America back 5 years in its fight to end hunger. Unless this action is reversed, we make a mockery of the phrase "welfare reform." We shall not have reform: We shall have retreat. A retreat from the most profound moral obligation of an affluent nation—to feed its hungry poor.

I urge my colleagues to retain the food stamp program as it now is for the aged, blind, and disabled. It does not involve an additional expenditure to do so but it does protect these recipients from being far worse off than before.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CASE. I yield.

Mr. COTTON. I thought the distinguished Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) yesterday offered an amendment—I collaborated with him in discussing it—so as to include both States that paid in food stamps and money and States that paid in commodities. It was adopted, and I thought it corrected this situation.

Mr. CASE. That is what I am advised. This is the 20-percent social security problem. It does not relate to the food stamp and commodity program. That amendment does not take care of this particular problem. I do not want to overstate or understate the matter. There is no point in trying to make it something it is not.

I reserve the remainder of my time, Mr. President.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Jersey yield?

Mr. CASE. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. May I ask the Senator, this will not come into effect until the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has considered the matter; is that not correct?

Mr. CASE. That is correct. The food stamp program and the commodity program should be under the control of that committee.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in this bill we have a $3 billion increase in benefits for the aged, blind, and disabled. The bill provides for the largest increases in history which have been provided for the aged, the blind, and the disabled. In providing this increase, we included a cash-out of the food stamps, that is, cash to replace the value of the food stamps. So that if one were receiving $130 and his food stamps came to $20, we would pay him the extra amount in cash, $20.

What the Senator's amendment would do would be to provide food stamps in addition to the food stamp cash-out.

We have been so generous here that we are moving 98 percent of our aged people out of poverty. The 2 percent that would be left in poverty, the States would have all the means they need to move them out of poverty.

We do very well by the aged in the bill. Not quite so well by the disabled, perhaps, because not nearly so many are covered by social security and so do not get the advantage of our $50 disregard.

I do not think that anyone can be heard to argue that we are not as generous as this Government can afford to be to the aged, the blind, and the disabled. Our bill includes a cash-out of food stamps, which means cash which they can spend however they wish.

I have known of no protests against that. But the Senator is proposing that we provide food stamps on top of the cash-out of food stamps.

For example, with regard to the 98 percent of the aged that would be moved out of poverty, a large number would still be permitted to have food stamps even though they are out of poverty. It would raise them up to the higher standard, which we think is justified.

So that I do not think the amendment should be agreed to. We have done as much as can be done at this time, so much so that we maybe in prospect of a veto if we do not hurry up and get this bill to the President before the election.

Because the committee bill is so generous, I would hope that the Senator would not go beyond it, having voted to pay for the cash-out of food stamps and now paying for the food stamps all over again.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, as I recall, when the amendment which the Senator from New Jersey said would eliminate the food stamp program was before this body yesterday, the explanation was inserted in the RECORD but I do not recall that it was made on the floor of the Senate here.

I, for one, certainly would not have voted for it had I known that the food stamp program was to be eliminated.

I do not know what kind of language we should have, but I do think we should accept the Case amendment and let the bill go to conference and be straightened out there, because there are certainly some areas of food stamps which should not be eliminated, even for cash. So I think, to be on the safe side, we had better take the Case amendment.

Mr. CASE. I appreciate what the Senator from Vermont has said. It is precisely because of the uncertainty about the operation of this, which is the real crux of the matter.

Mr. AIKEN. The first time I realized that the food stamps were being jeopardized by our action yesterday was when I read the fine print this morning in the RECORD, but I did not hear it explained on the floor.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, may I point out that the Senate agreed to the Humphrey amendment which said that for purposes of eligibility for food stamps, we would not count the recently enacted 20-percent social security increase. So we are going to disregard the 20 percent social security in determining eligibility for food stamps.

Now it is being suggested that, in addition to having paid to cash-out the food stamps, we should provide for them all over again.

What do we want to do, provide for food stamps three times over? That is what logic would suggest.

Mr. CASE. I think the matter should be gone into by a committee expert in this field who has jurisdiction over the food stamp program, but that would be after, as the Senator from Vermont has said, voting for my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BAYH). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE).

The noes appear to have it.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BENNETT. Why not ask for a division?

Several Senators. Yes, please.

Mr. CASE. There are 33 sponsors to this amendment.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I rise in support of the amendment by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE). That amendment will neutralize the effect of section 508 of the amendment offered by the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) passed by the Senate yesterday. Senator CASE's amendment will assure that those needy persons who are elderly, blind, and disabled will not be refused access to the food stamp program.

Make no mistake, Mr. President, I look for the day when America's poor will no longer need the food stamp program, and I look for the day when America can have true reform of the welfare system.

But until the day that welfare assistance provides an income sufficient to purchase a nutritionally adequate diet, we must be sure that no American, who is elderly, blind, or disabled, is allowed to suffer from poverty-related hunger and malnutrition.

The amendment which the Senate accepted last night prohibits poor elderly, blind, and disabled Americans from receiving Federal food assistance. For what reason? The only legitimate reason for such a prohibition would be the provision to these persons of an income sufficient of itself to prevent them from being hungry.

But that is not the case under the Long-Roth amendment which the Senate passed last night. As H.R. 1 presently stands, America's elderly, blind, and disabled will receive an income far below the poverty level of the Nation. And yet, perhaps due to either an unintentional oversight or a misguided notion of fiscal responsibility, this legislative body now declares the policy of this Nation to be that our needy senior citizens and persons who cannot take a job because of some serious disability shall be unable to participate in the food stamp program—a program which is the only means for many elderly and disabled to combat malnourishment.

Mr. President, we have been on a course in the last 4 years that would lead us to the elimination and prevention of serious malnutrition in our country. I cannot understand the extent of "social" legislation that forbids the use of such desparately needed food assistance by the elderly and disabled. We most certainly possess more than sufficient resources to guarantee that no American will be involuntarily hungry in any State of this Union. We possess the technological and administrative know-how to deliver that food to the Nation's poor. Without the will to do so, however, these resources mean nothing. Today the Senate is able to demonstrate that will by passing amendment No. 1677.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I urge the Members on both sides of the aisle to vote in favor of the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Jersey. His amendment will nullify the effect of section 508 of the amendment passed by the Senate last night.

As Senator CASE stated, that section would prohibit the elderly, blind, and disabled, eligible for cash assistance, from participating in the food stamp or commodity distribution programs.

To allow that provision to stand in the fact of income assistance well below the poverty level would be to mandate hunger for hundreds of thousands of old or disabled poor Americans.

This amendment provides no new benefits and involves no new costs. It merely protects elderly and disabled welfare recipients so that they will not lose food benefits to which they are now entitled.

Mr. BAYH. Mr. President, it is with great dismay that I view sections 508 and 509 of the legislation before the Senate, the amendment offered by Senator ROTH. Those provisions would prohibit adult welfare recipients from participating in the food stamp or the commodity distribution program. This denial asks the Congress and the American people—especially America's aged and disabled poor—to make an insupportable leap of faith. It asks us to believe that food assistance is no longer necessary in America. That is a leap of faith I cannot take. It is a leap of faith the poor cannot take: To them it recreates the hunger gap. For them, this provision turns "welfare reform" into welfare reduction.

Hunger is a reality in America, Mr. President. It is a reality for America's 6 million poor, more than half of whom can now use some form of food assistance. Unless amendment No. 1677 is passed, recipients in the adult categories will no longer be able to use our food programs.

Poverty, Mr. President, means you do not have enough money to purchase an adequate diet—the term itself is defined by one's ability or nonability to purchase a minimally diet. And my experience as a member of the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs has taught me that when the income of the family goes below the poverty level, the first item to go by the wayside is food. You have to pay the rent or you get evicted. You have to pay the utilities so that you will not freeze and your lights will stay on at night. It is always easier to try to spread out the food dollar: There are no bill collectors coming around because your family goes hungry.

Mr. President, I do not believe food stamps are the whole answer to hunger or to poverty. But fighting hunger is, in my mind, an essential prerequisite to ending poverty. So long as the welfare benefits we provide do not eliminate poverty in America, then food stamps and surplus commodities will continue to be a necessary defense.

I support the amendment by my able colleague and the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. CASE).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an article entitled "Social Security Rise Becomes a Nightmare for Many Elderly," published in the New York Times of October 3, 1972.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIAL SECURITY RISE BECOMES A NIGHTMARE FOR MANY ELDERLY

(By David K. Shipler)

Like millions of other aged Americans, Marie Nashif of Denver will receive a 20 per cent increase in her Social Security check this month. But unlike most, she will not welcome the extra cash.

Mrs. Nashif is among the 187,000 or so elderly for whom Congressional election-year generosity has become a nightmare. The Social Security rise, voted by Congress June 30, has pushed her income just high enough to make her ineligible for the welfare and Medicaid benefits that she needs so desperately.

Mrs. Nashif, a small, alert, 74-year-old woman, suffers badly from arthritis. Until now, her heavy medical bills have been paid fully by Medicaid. But when her monthly Social Security check rises from $138.40 to $166.10, it will surpass the $147 figure that Colorado uses to divide those who are eligible from those who are not.

In exchange for her $27.70 additional from Social Security, Mrs. Nashif will have to pay $5.80 a month in medical insurance premiums, 20 per cent of all doctors' bills, the first $68 a year in hospital expenses, $17 a day after 60 days in the hospital, and the total amount of prescription drugs.

Further, she will lose $7 a month in welfare payments, she will probably become ineligible for food stamps, and her rent will rise, since she lives in Federally subsidized housing where rents are tied to income.

"When I take all this into consideration," she said, "I'll be a darn sight worse off than I am now."

Congressional action could eliminate such hardships, and several bills addressed to the problem are now pending. Last Friday, the Senate voted a solution for welfare recipients by passing a measure that would force states to raise the eligible income limits for welfare by the same dollar amount as the Social Security increases. Prospects for the bill in the House are uncertain.

Even if the bill becomes law, it will not help people who now collect Medicaid and are not welfare recipients, and there are thousands of those in New York City alone who risk losing their medical benefits. The bill addresses itself only to welfare recipients.

ACTION BY STATES

Some states have already taken action on their own. Gov. William T. Cahill of New Jersey has ordered Medicaid benefits continued for 4,000 elderly who would otherwise become ineligible.

Delaware has allocated $1-million to raise the eligibility income maximums. Gov. Winfield Dunn of Tennessee has changed administrative regulations to keep 7,500 people on the welfare rolls. Nebraska, Missouri, Iowa, Florida and Wyoming are among the states that have increased the income levels that determine eligibility.

No action has been taken in New York. The state's Department of Social Services contends that it has no power to make the necessary changes without approval from the Legislature, whose regular session begins in January.

New York City has already sent letters informing 6,000 elderly people that their welfare benefits will be halted. This means that they will have to begin paying 20 per cent of their medical expenses.

In addition, many aged New Yorkers who are not on welfare and are not addressed by the Senate bill will be hurt by the Social Security increases.

The city's Office for the Aging estimated that 14,696 persons who now receive 80 per cent of their medical expenses from Medicaid will be cut off altogether. In addition, 22,434 who are not on welfare but are fully covered by Medicaid will have until they have spent all their income above the welfare maximum on medical bills. At that point Medicaid will pick up the full burden again. This totals about 43,000 elderly affected adversely in New York City alone.

The figures elsewhere are smaller, ranging from about 10,000 in California to 400 in Vermont. The United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare calculates that nationwide, 187,000 people will become ineligible for welfare and 93,000 will lose Medicaid.

Even many who do not lose will not gain from the Social Security increase, since some states apply Social Security income against welfare payments. As Social Security rises, welfare decreases; the beneficiary is not the individual, but the state.

"I'm all for the increase," said John Maros, administrator of the Wyoming Division of Public Assistance. "The more Social Security they get the less public assistance is needed." The State of Washington estimates that it will save $2.3-million in welfare payments by next June 30.

"The average pensioner in Alabama won't gain a dime as a result of the increase," said Ruben K. King, Alabama director of pensions and security.

BAN UNDER SENATE BILL

"This is a form of psychological deceit practiced upon senior citizens," said C. Christophor Brown, head of the law reform unit of the Baltimore Legal Aid Bureau. "The government is giving with one hand and taking away with the other."

This cannot happen if the bill passed by the Senate is approved by the House and signed by President Nixon. Under the measure states would be prohibited from reducing welfare payments in response to the Social Security increase.

The bill would also cost the states additional money by requiring them to raise the income limits for eligibility, not merely for those welfare recipients who are on Social Security, but for all disabled, aged and blind. In New York, many in the disabled category are narcotics addicts.

In most states, elderly people on Social Security receive only small amounts of money from welfare, and their removal from the rolls is less of a hardship in terms of direct welfare payments than it is in terms of the services that are corollaries to a welfare status.

In many states, for example, Medicaid—whose cost is shared by the Federal and state governments—is available only to those whose incomes are low enough to qualify them for welfare, even though the Federal guidelines allow Medicaid benefits for those with incomes up to 133 per cent of the welfare maximum.

Other benefits, such as food stamps, legal help and home-making services, are also often tied directly to welfare.

BRONX WOMAN HIT

Mrs. Elesabeth Miles of 1365 Finley Avenue, the Bronx, for example, faces the loss of a valuable homemaker because the Social Security rise will make her ineligible for welfare. She is 62.

"The letter came last Wednesday," she said, "and now I have nothing. I have been a widow for 29 years and am completely blind in the right eye and partially blind in the left eye. My son is unable to take care of me because he has eight children of his own."

Her monthly Social Security check, to rise from $133.10 to $159.70, will have to cover her $70.40 a month rent, as well as her food and other expenses.

"They say that they are giving me a 20 per cent increase, but they been taking everything back and all I get is nothing," Mrs. Miles said. "We worked hard to take care of ourselves and they just don't care if we live or die."

In a small, sad room on West 86th Street, Joseph Wolfson, 80, a frail, asthmatic man spoke with fear. "Most of the time I am in the hospital because of asthma," he said. "I feel all right now, but who knows what can happen next week? I just can't live with that little amount of money and no Medicaid."

Eva Estelle Jackson, 70, lives alone in Montgomery, Ala., and has suffered from tuberculosis and ulcers. She now receives $132 a month in Social Security and $24 in welfare, but she has been told that the Social Security increase will raise her a few dollars above the welfare maximum she will therefore lose Medicaid, which paid several thousand dollars for three weeks she spent in hospitals last year.

"It's gonna hit me hard," Miss Jackson said. "If they'd just left me with a pension of $1 or $2, and Medicaid, I'd have been a lot better off. If I had some illness, I just don't know what I'd do. I'd just be in bad shape, because I've got nobody to fall back on."

Miss Jackson discovered that she will also have to pay a $2-a-month garbage collection fee to the City of Montgomery. Only those on welfare are exempted from the fee.

Another Montgomery resident, Emily Shepherd, 75, is now in the hospital, being treated for emphysema. When her $137-a-month Social Security check rises to $164, she will lose $66 in welfare from the state, ending up with $39 less a month than now, and no Medicaid.

At that point, her choices will be "either to go into a convalescent home or just go back to my apartment and die," she says. "It's the most ridiculous thing I ever hard of. They should have had a little forethought. They're just a bunch of meatheads in Congress."

In Las Vegas, the Social Security check of Henrietta G. Oberg, 78, will rise from $153 to $183 a month, but her $23 welfare payment will be eliminated as a result, leaving her $7 ahead, but without Medicaid. She is being treated for cancer. "What am I going to do?" she asked.

In Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Mary Wright also lost Medicaid. "It will take it all away from me," she said of the Social Security increase. "I can't afford it. I'm having it all canceled. I got to pay my rent, clothes and feed myself. There's nobody else to do it for me. You can't get any glasses, can't get any teeth—anything you need you can't get."

The difficulties have also affected some younger people. Lennell Frison, 40, a father of 10 in Portland, Ore., is a former foundry worker whose arthritis put him out of a job two years ago. He and his wife, who has diabetes, were told recently that the Social Security rise would mean the end of welfare and the end of medical payments.

"Without that aid to the doctor, man, I don't know how we're going to make it." His wife, he says, works sometimes as a janitor at night, making about $100 a week. They had planned to try to buy the six-room house they now rent, he said, "But we're probably gonna lose it."

Mr. Frison has considered sending his 17-year-old son to work, but he is torn by powerful doubts. "I hate to take my oldest boy out of school, because then he'd be where I am. I think I'd go back to work and punish myself instead. I can't stand up too long. My legs won't hold me. But it gets you. A man ain't nothing if he can't feed his children."

In Hazelwood, Mo., a suburb of St. Louis, Mr. and Mrs. Russell French face similar difficulties. Mr. French suffers from heart disease and diabetes, she from arthritis and rickets. Two of their children, Charles, 15, and Lorraine, 12, have rickets, and a third, Russell, is diabetic.

"It's the Medicaid that counts," said Mrs. French. "I figure it would cost us $100 a month just to keep my husband supplied with medicine." Neither she nor her husband can work; their Social Security comes to about $400 a month.

The family's physician, who asked not to be identified, confirmed that the French family needed constant medical attention. "Of all my families, this is the one that is probably the most in need," he said.

When Mrs. French was 10 years old and living in Corning, Ark., she recalled, her mother died because she could not get medical help. "If anyone thinks things have changed, they haven't," she said, "because the same thing probably will happen to us."

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, 2 days ago I joined with the distinguished senior Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE), and several other colleagues in sponsoring an amendment to title V of H.R. 1, as reported, to restore the eligibility of public assistance recipients for Federal food assistance programs.

It now appears that in the context of yesterday's activities we voted to extend the benefits of these programs to those persons who will receive assistance under the so-called aid to families with dependent children category, but to deny them to persons in the adult categories—the aged, the blind, and the disabled.

I consider this an unfortunate and ill-advised act on the part of this body and that is why I am joining with Senator CASE and others to sponsor an amendment which would in effect suspend sections 508 and 509 of this bill until the Congress takes some further affirmative action to implement them.

As a charter member of the Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs and as the ranking minority member of the committee during the 92d Congress, I have witnessed participation in the food stamp program by the very needy nearly quadruple in the last 4 years. I have heard time and time again in testimony before the select committee from both Government officials and private citizens alike that the food stamp program is beyond a doubt the single most powerful weapon we possess in our war against hunger. Though it has been subject to some abuse, it is small compared to the vast amount of good accomplished for worthy and malnourished Americans.

Have we won that war? Have we fulfilled the commitment which President Nixon set forth so eloquently in 1969 to end hunger in America for all time? Or will the terms of the legislation we are now considering be so generous that recipients of public assistance in the adult categories will be assured of a nutritionally adequate diet? The answer to each of these questions is a resounding "no."

I do not believe any Member of this body wants to put in jeopardy the nutritional status of two groups in our population most vulnerable to malnutrition: The elderly and the disabled. This action would fly in the face of years of progressive steps by this body to extend the reach and scope of our food assistance programs and of our unanimous action not more than 6 months ago to set up a nationwide program of hot meals for the elderly.

To allow our action of yesterday to stand is to take a giant step backwards in our war against hunger and malnutrition and to take it at the expense of perhaps the most helpless and defenseless segment of our population. Some may call this reform; I call it a breach of faith with the elderly and the infirm.

I urge my colleagues to reconsider the action of yesterday and to pass the amendment put forward by the very able and dedicated Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) and the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE) would each vote "yea."

On this vote, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) is paired with the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS).

If present and voting, the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea" and the Senator from Louisiana would vote "nay."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would vote "nay."

On this vote, the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD) is paired with the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS). If present voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea' and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

Mr. CANNON (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. GAMBRELL (after having voted in the negative). On this vote I have a pair with the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS). If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "nay." I therefore withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 27, as follows:

So the Case amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CASE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 295, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

"(H) to determine whether the services of clinical psychologists may be made more generally available to persons eligible for services under titles 18 and 19 of this act in a manner consistent with quality of care and equitable as efficient administration."

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I have discussed the amendment with the distinguished chairman of the committee and also with the ranking minority member. It calls for a termination to be made on the question of whether the services of clinical psychologists may be made more generally available to persons eligible for services under titles 18 and 19 of this act in a manner consistent with the quality of care and equitable and efficient administration.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, we support the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Indiana. (Putting the question.)

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to state the amendment.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) Section 402(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraphs:

"(27) provide that eligibility for aid to families with dependent children will not be determined solely on the basis of declarations concerning eligibility factors and other relevant facts by an applicant for or recipient of such aid, and that relevant information will be verified to the maximum extent feasible from independent or collateral sources and additional information obtained as necessary in order to insure that such aid is only provided to eligible persons and that the amounts of such aid are correct;

"(28) provide—

"(A) that aid to families with dependent children shall not be furnished to any individual unless such individual (i) is a resident of the State, and (ii) has resided in the State continuously for ninety consecutive days immediately preceding the application for such aid;

"(B) that such aid shall be furnished under the State plan for a period of ninety consecutive days to any individual who (i) has moved out of such State regardless of whether he has terminated his residence in such State, (ii) was receiving aid under such State plan in the month before the month in which he moved out of such State, (iii) continues to meet the eligibility requirements of such State plan except for residency, and (iv) is not receiving aid to families with dependent children under a plan of the State in which he is present solely because he does not meet the duration of residency requirements imposed under subclause (A);

"(C) that for the purpose of furnishing aid under the State plan to any individual described in subclause (B), appropriate agreements (including provisions for reimbursement) will be made with the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan approved under this part of the other State so that the agency of such other State will determine the continuing eligibility of and make payments to such individual; and

"(D) that the State agency will enter into agreements with the State agency administering or supervising the administration of the plan under this part of other States to carry out for them the functions described in subclause (C); and

"(29) provide emergency assistance to needy families with children (as defined in section 406(e), on a statewide basis, to needy migrant workers with children in the State."

(b) Section 406(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting the words "who has been born and" after "needy child";

(c) Section 406 of said Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(f) Notwithstanding the provisions of subsection (b), the term "aid to families with dependent children" does not mean payments with respect to a dependent child, a relative with whom any dependent child is living, or any other individual (living in the same home as such a child and relative) whose needs such State determines should be considered in determining the need of the child or relative claiming aid under the plan of such State approved under this part—who for any month—

"(1) (other than a member of a migrant family, for purposes of emergency assistance under section 410) has resided in such State for a period of less than ninety consecutive days or, in the case of a child born within three months immediately preceding the application for such aid, is living with a parent or other relative who has resided in such State for a period of less than ninety consecutive days;

"(2) is neither a citizen nor an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence (or otherwise permanently residing in the United States under color of law);

"(3) is outside the United States during all of such month (and an individual who has been outside the United States for any period of 30 consecutive days shall be treated as remaining outside the United States until he has been in the United States for a period of 30 consecutive days);

"(4) is a mother of a child born out of wedlock with respect to whom such aid is claimed and who fails to cooperate with the State agency or with the United States in establishing the paternity of such child;

"(5) is the parent of a child with respect to whom such aid is claimed who fails to cooperate with any agency or official of the State or of the United States in obtaining support payments for herself or such child or in obtaining any other payments or property due herself or such child;

"(6) is medically determined to be a drug addict or alcoholic; and (but only if the State, at its option, so provides in its plan approved under this part) does not include payments to any one or more of the following—

"(7) an individual who is absent from such State for a period in excess of 90 consecutive days (regardless of whether he maintains his residence in the State during such period) until he has been present in the State for 30 consecutive days in the case of such an individual who has maintained his residence in such State during such period or 90 consecutive days in the case of any other such individual;

"(8) an individual who will not agree, as a condition of initial or continuing eligibility for such aid, to permit inspection of his home, at reasonable times and with reasonable notice, by any duly authorized person employed by or on behalf of such State in the administration of such plan;

(d) Section 402(a)(4) of said Act is amended to read:

"(4) provide (A) for granting an opportunity for an evidentiary hearing before the State agency or, if the State plan is administered in each of the political subdivisions of the State by a local agency, before such local agency, to any individual whose claim for aid to families with dependent children is denied, or is not acted upon with reasonable promptness or to any individual who is receiving aid under the plan which aid such State or local agency determines should be terminated or the amount of which should be reduced, (B) that any hearing held at the request of any individual to determine the matter of whether the aid provided to such individual (or to members of his family) under the State plan should be terminated or the amount thereof reduced shall be completed and the agency before which such hearing is held shall make a decision on the basis of such evidentiary hearing with respect to such matter not later than thirty days after the date such individual is notified of the intention of such agency to terminate or reduce the amount of such aid, (C) that the agency before which such hearing is held may put its decision into effect immediately upon its issuance, (D) that if the evidentiary hearing is held by a local agency administering the State plan in a political subdivision of such State, the individual will be provided an opportunity to appeal such decision to the State agency, and (E) if any individual (or family) is determined under a final decision of the State agency (or of the local agency if no appeal is taken therefrom) to have received, prior to such decision, aid under the plan in any amount to which he (or his family) was not entitled, appropriate adjustment or recovery of such amount will be made as required by section 404(e); except that no individual whose eligibility for aid under the State plan is terminated by reason of provisions relating to limitation of duration of eligibility based on any approved application for aid in a State plan shall be entitled to a hearing on account of termination of his eligibility arising from the application of such provisions;"

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, yesterday so many things were happening in such a confused way that some of the important reforms worked out by the Finance Committee kind of evaporated. I am talking about reforms that would make this flexible to the States and enable them to handle welfare problems in a humane way.

I have 10 in one on this amendment to save us all time and trouble.

This would be reinserted in the bill as the result of the amendment. The bill would once again require States to provide emergency assistance for migrant families and children. It would provide that welfare children could not be counted for welfare purposes. It would eliminate eligibility for nonresident aliens. It would eliminate——

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, having looked at the amendment, it can be agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York (putting the question).

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I do not have an amendment. I got my name on the list some time ago so that I could have a discussion with the distinguished manager of the bill about a matter that I would hope would be taken up next year. I will only take about 60 seconds on this matter.

We are faced with a very serious problem that I hope the Senate will consider next year. That concerns an individual under social security who has, let us say, 19 quarters and does not have the additional quarter.

Nothing can be done for this individual except to find some welfare agency that can help him out.

There happens to be a problem, as Senators well know, under the Federal civil service system. If an individual retires before she is eligible to receive any benefits, that individual can draw out everything that she put into the fund plus 2.5 percent or 3 percent interest. They are entitled to that.

I might say that we have a real serious problem. I would like the attention of my colleagues on this matter, because I think it is something that we ought to face up to next year.

We here within our own Federal employees find ourselves in a situation where we have employees in our offices who can build up part of their retirement funds, and then if they want to take a vacation or buy a car, they go off the payroll for 1 day and withdraw everything that they put into the fund, plus interest. They then go back on the payroll the next day and start building up their retirement fund again.

Nobody else in the United States is entitled to do that; nobody under social security is entitled to do that. I can only say to the chairman I hope next year if we get into the field of reform we would do something about the individual who finds himself with 19 quarters or 19-plus quarters and does not have that 20th quarter. He really could withdraw nothing from social security, and yet we sit here and sanctify under the Civil Service System a program whereby if an individual finds himself in the same situation as the person under social security, he can draw all of his money out—and the present interest rate is between 2.5 and 3 percent—and yet the individual under social security finds himself in a different situation. I hope we will consider that next year.

Mr. LONG. We certainly need more answers than we have now. I thank the Senator for having directed our attention to it.

Mr. COOK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I would like to submit an amendment and explain the situation it is designed to help. The Roth amendment struck from the committee bill the arrangement that the committee had provided for fiscal relief to the States. We restored most of the fiscal relief, and in some States perhaps more than provided by the committee bill, except we did not give the States the same oportunity to profit from tight administration of their welfare programs. This would restore that feature, so if they elect to do so they can receive the money under an alternative formula that would be available to them as long as they maintain the existing level of benefits. If the State manages to save money, they can do so. This amendment would seek to reinstate this feature of the bill as reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following new section:

SEC. —. Part A of title IV of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"ALTERNATIVE FEDERAL SHARE OF ASSISTANCE COSTS

"SEC. 411(a). For any fiscal year beginning after June 30, 1972, the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay to any State electing to receive payments under this section an amount equal to 120 per centum of the amount payable to such State for quarters in the calendar year 1972 under section 403 (a)(1) or under section 1118 (but only with respect to expenditures described in section 403(a)(1)).

"(b) Any payment under subsection (a) for any fiscal year shall be in lieu of amounts otherwise payable with respect to expenditures described in section 403(a)(1) or section 560 of the Social Security Amendments of 1972 (but only with respect to expenditures described in section 403(a)(1)).

"(c) The amount payable to a State under subsection (a) for any fiscal year shall be increased or decreased by the same percentage by which the population of such State in such fiscal year is greater or less than the population of such State in calendar year 1972. For the purpose of this subsection the population of a State shall be estimated by the Secretary on the basis of the most recent satisfactory data available from the Secretary of Commerce.

"(d) No payment shall be made under this section to any State with respect to any fiscal year during which the levels of assistance which it provides to families of various sizes are lower than the levels of assistance provided to such families under the State plan approved under this title as in effect in October 1972."

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have no objection to the amendment. I hope it is accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I am glad to yield to the Senator from North Dakota.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota is recognized.

Mr. BURDICK. Mr. President, I would like to ask the manager a question about the bill. Overlooked in the bill is consideration for the citizens of the United States residing in Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

I hastily drew up an amendment I had intended to offer which I discussed with the Senator, and I believe the Senator gave me assurance that early next year the matter would be considered, and by early I mean as early as possible, after we have some data, facts, and figures that we need to correct this matter.

Do I have that understanding?

Mr. LONG. Yes. I told the Senator, speaking as the manager of the bill, that if we could find what would appear to be an appropriate answer to provide equity and justice in those territories, I would be willing to accept such an amendment and take it to conference.

Unfortunately, neither he nor those of us on the committee could come up with an adequate answer.

I assure the Senator we on the committee will be glad to look into it and give our cooperation early in the next session.

Mr. BURDICK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, Senator BUCKLEY and I were apprised unfortunately late with respect to alleged serious deprivation resulting from certain ceilings under the social security laws on money for Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands for welfare programs. We decided it was just too hasty and too complicated to move into now. May I have the assurance of the chairman that that will be looked into?

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, the Senator is familiar with the problem here. There is a difference in the dollar level of earnings, and there are tax considerations, but I would be happy to say that we will seek to look into it next year.

Mr. JAVITS. And Senator BUCKLEY has the same assurance?

Mr. LONG. Yes.

Mr. President, the junior Senator from New York wanted to ask a question, and I will be glad to respond.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. BENNETT. I yield.

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to ask the chairman two questions which will take an aggregate of 43 seconds. I know, because I timed them.

Mr. President, the Roth amendment which we adopted yesterday contained a provision repealing section 204(2)(2) of the Social Security Amendments of 1967.

I would like to ask the distinguished chairman whether my understanding is correct that the effect of this deletion is to restore the opportunity for the States to develop their own community work and training programs independently of the WIN program?

I also would like to ask the distinguished chairman whether the effect of this deletion is to restore the right of the State of New York to develop and enforce the requirements of its work performance program which I have described?

Mr. LONG. Yes, that is exactly what was intended. The committee did that so the State of New York could do what it was trying to do and that is implement a work program to help reform its own welfare program.

Mr. BUCKLEY. So they could pick up checks at the State employment office?

Mr. LONG. That is part of the program of the State of New York to create community work and training opportunities. We applaud that, as well as the efforts of the State of California to reform welfare.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I have two amendments. The first is an amendment prepared by the staff and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) proposes an amendment at the end of title II.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment ordered to be printed in the RECORD is as follows:

At the end of title II of the bill, add the following new section:

DETERMINATIONS AND APPEALS

SEC. —. (a) Section 1869 (b) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b)(1) Any individual dissatisfied with any determination under subsection (a) as to—

"(A) whether he meets the conditions of section 226 of this Act or section 103 of the Social Security Amendments of 1965, or

"(B) whether he is eligible to enroll and has enrolled pursuant to the provisions of part B of this title, or section 1818, or section 1819, or

"(C) the amount of benefits under part A (including a determination where such amount is determined to be zero) shall be entitled to a hearing thereon by the Secretary to the same extent as is provided in section 205(b) and to judicial review of the Secretary's final decision after such hearing as is provided in section 205(g).

"(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) of this subsection, a hearing shall not be available to an individual by reason of such subparagraph (C) if the amount in controversy is less than $100; nor shall judicial review be available to an individual by reason of such subparagraph (C) if the amount in controversy is less than $1,000."

(b)(1) The provisions of subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 1869(b)(1) of the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, shall be effective on the date of enactment of this Act.

(2) The provisions of paragraph (2) and of subparagraph (C) of paragraph (1) of section 1869(b) of the Social Security Act, as amended by subsection (a) of this section, shall be effective with respect to any claims under Part A of title XVIII of such Act, filed—

(A) in or after the month in which this Act is enacted, or

(B) before the month in which this Act is enacted, but only if a civil action with respect to a final decision of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare on such claim has not been commenced under such section 1869(b) before such month.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to make sure existing law, which gives the right of a person to go to court on the question of eligibility to receive welfare, is not interpreted to mean he can take the question of the Federal claim to court. If he did we would never have an end to it. This is to reconfirm the original intention of the law that the courts can determine only eligibility.

The situations in which medicare decisions are appealable to the courts were intended in the original law to be greatly restricted in order to avoid overloading the courts with quite minor matters. The law refers to "entitlement" as being an issue subject to court review and the word was intended to mean eligibility to any benefits of medicare but not to decisions on a claim for payment for a given service.

If judicial review is made available where any claim is denied, as some court decisions have held, the resources of the Federal court system would be unduly taxed and little real value would be derived by the enrollees. The proposed amendment would merely clarify the original intent of the law and prevent the overloading of the courts with trivial matters because the intent is considered unclear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I send a second amendment to the desk and I ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT LEGISLATIVE CLERK. The Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) proposes an amendment at the end of the bill to insert the following new section.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the amendment will be printed in the RECORD.

The amendment, ordered to be printed in the RECORD, is as follows:

At the end of bill insert the following new section:

SEC. —. (a) No participant in any of the three test programs provided in Sec. 401(b)(1) of Title IV as amended who is the father of a dependent child shall be considered to be unemployed for any week in which his unemployment is on account of a labor dispute at the establishment where he was previously employed, unless such individual (1) is not directly interested in and has not participated in such dispute, and (2) is not a member of any group of employees which is directly interested in, financing or participating in, such dispute.

SEC. —. (b) Section 407(a) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking the period at the end thereof and adding "provided that a father of a dependent child shall not be considered to be unemployed for any week in which his unemployment is on account of a labor dispute at the establishment where he was previously employed, unless such individual (1) is not directly interested in and has not participated in such dispute, and (2) is not a member of any group of employees which is directly interested in, financing or participating in, such dispute."

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, another thing left out of the committee bill by the Roth amendment was a problem in the bill that welfare payments could not be paid to striking fathers under aid to families with dependent children. The amendment was drawn so the effect of this would not fall on other employees of corporations or anybody not directly and properly involved in the strike.

I think the chairman is willing to take this to conference.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, this strikes me as very much a labor matter, which we have kept out of. After all, we do not want to delay the Senate. This is the Senator's amendment and with all respect to the Senator from Utah I hope very much that this will not be passed on at this hour. I do not know its implications and neither does anyone else. This deals with labor disputes and we are going to make a special record for fathers under welfare. I hope it can be submitted at a later date.

Mr. LONG. This amendment was included under the committee bill. It was stricken from the bill in the Roth amendment. This Senator made the statement that the provision would be submitted to the Senate for decision. It is up to the Senate to make the decision. Frankly, the Senator from Louisiana feels that the Government should be neutral between labor and management in a labor dispute, and that to pay welfare benefits to people who are on strike is not being neutral. We are not talking about people in a secondary involvement. We are not talking about an instance in which one union goes out, and since that union is out, it is not practical for others to work. We are talking only about those who are actively engaged in a strike.

For example, if there are several unions in a plant, and one union walks out, and therefore the plant cannot operate, the others can receive benefits because they are not on strike, but the strikers themselves could not receive benefits, just on the theory that the Government should be neutral in a controversy between labor and management, and to pay a generous level of benefits while a worker is on strike is, in effect, to place labor in a position to remain on strike indefinitely, while management is not in a position to operate a plant.

This, admittedly, is one about which there can be a difference of opinion. There was in the committee. I am sure there will be in the Senate.

When the Roth amendment was voted, those of us who voted for it promised those who favored this committee amendment that we would offer them the opportunity to vote on this amendment, which I feel is more a welfare matter than it is a labor matter. It is just a question of: Do you think you ought to pay welfare benefits to people who are not working because they decline to work for the reason that they are engaged in a controversy with management, and therefore they withhold their labor?

Since this is a struggle between management and labor, where both will suffer until they come to some kind of accord, we think that under no circumstances should the Government take the side of labor to the extent that it makes eligible for welfare payments and food stamps those who are on strike, and thereby, in one respect or another, tends to aid the side of labor in a dispute between labor and management.

It is the feeling of a majority of those of us on the committee that the Government should be neutral between the two contending forces of management and labor, and therefore, that welfare benefits should not be paid to those who are actively engaged in a strike. This matter, as Senators know, is in contest in the State of Maryland right now. But all of that has to do with: What was the congressional intent? Did we intend welfare payments to be paid to those who are out on strike, or did we not?

It seems to me that it is more appropriate that the Congress tell the Supreme Court what it meant than to have a bunch of lawyers argue what we meant. My guess is that it was not considered at all when the legislation was passed, and as it stands now, the Court is in a position to construe what Congress meant. When I doubt whether any 10 Senators could agree on what we meant on this matter, it seems to me our intention should be made clear: Do you think welfare payments should be payable to those actively engaged in a strike, or do you not?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. President, I think the quickest way to settle this is by a division. I do not think that we should settle it by a voice vote. I ask for a division.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, we are not quite ready yet to vote on it. We have not brought it up; the proponents of the bill have brought it up, and though it is very late, there is no hesitancy in dealing with an amendment which may be serious in its implications because the proponents, the managers, have sought to bring up an amendment at a late hour.

One thing the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) has said is quite proper: The Government should be neutral. But the Government should not hurt children whose father happens to be on strike. That is not being neutral, either.

I frankly do not know the depth of this amendment. It is a matter of first impression, but I beg the Senate to listen to it, because it has not been read. It reads as follows. It applies to two programs, one to the three test programs for income maintenance, and another part of it—both are proposed together—applies to the welfare assistance. It reads as follows:

No participant in any of the three test programs provided in Sec. 401(b)(1) of Title VI as amended who is the father of a dependent child shall be considered to be unemployed for any week in which his unemployment is on account of a labor dispute at the establishment where he was previously employed, unless such individual (1) is not directly interested in and has not participated in such dispute, and (2) is not a member of any group of employees which is directly interested in, financing or participating in, such dispute."

It strikes me that there are two grave deficiencies in this matter. One deficiency is that it is participating in a labor dispute, because it is penalizing a man who is on strike or has joined a union. That is what it says. Second, I believe—and again I submit to the Senate it must, because of how it is submitted, be only a matter of first impression—it affects the eligibility for a particular family or a particular child to receive aid.

I could not imagine much more coercion on any man in going on a strike or being a member of a union which is on strike than denying relief, welfare, or whatever it may be that is agreed to under the law, to this man's child.

For those reasons, I think it is a serious matter, and I hope very much that, in this last moment on a major bill—and I join all my colleagues, and I think the whole country owes a debt of thanks to the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and the Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) for piloting this measure through, which seems to be of some consolation, and at least there will be some legislation that Congress will have created as a result of this enormous effort—but both gentlemen, I respectfully submit, should not ask us to take this amendment, which seems to have very serious and adverse implications, at this late hour. That is asking us, at least me, in all conscience—and I am the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare—to do more than we should do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this seems to me to be a matter which should be considered by the Labor and Public Welfare Committee, and as chairman of that committee, I feel compelled to move to table this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is not debatable. All those in favor signify by saying "aye." Those opposed, "no." The "ayes" appear to have it. The "ayes" have it. The motion to lay on the table is agreed to.

The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senator from New York, with some apology to everybody on the floor, to a matter. I know what Senators think, and I would not be doing this if I had not just been jumped by members of the staff, who, hopefully, know more about what we have just done than all of us here, or most of us here.

Would the Senator from New York advise us whether the amendment that he offered, which was not, as I have been advised, explained, and then was accepted, and hence has been added to this bill—it was an unprinted amendment; it was just recently acted on—reimposes, for example, the residency requirement for welfare? In effect, does it overrule the finding of the Supreme Court?

Mr. BUCKLEY. No, it does not overrule the Supreme Court's finding, but it imposes a uniform residency requirement unless State law requires otherwise. I think the Chairman is in a position to discuss the details.

Mr. HART. What does it do about——

Mr. LONG. The language is right there in the committee report.

Mr. HART. I beg the Senator's pardon?

Mr. LONG. I assume the Senator is reading from the committee report. The language is there. As to the residency requirement problem, it provides that a citizen is deemed a resident of the State from which he departed for 3 months after he left, and he then is deemed a resident of the State to which he moves for the purpose of their welfare program 3 months after he arrives, so that a State that wants to have high welfare benefits, such as New York or Michigan, can do so, and then will be some small impediment to a heavy migration of people from States that have lower welfare payments into their State.

There is an amendment to that that affects a particular problem in the State of Arizona, but the point is to say that 3 months after a citizen leaves the State, that State does not have to make any further payments to him, and 3 months after he leaves the State, the State to which he goes must make payments to him, so that he would be eligible under the laws of one State or the other.

The committee moved in a way to meet the Supreme Court decision which said that Congress cannot authorize a State to impose a residency requirement under the equal protection clause, but the equal protection clause does not prevent Congress from levying a residency requirement, and so it would seek to meet the problem by simply setting a residency definition by saying that you would be eligible for the welfare benefits of a State for 3 months after you left, and then the State to which you moved could make you eligible 3 months after you arrived there.

There is also a provision that the Senator might want to read there, where we went along with what the House of Representatives suggested by prohibiting the thing which we thought was probably the most unwise thing that was done to load the welfare rolls down with people who did not belong there, and that was what is called the declaration method, whereby a person could be put on the welfare rolls by a mere telephone call or by sending in a card by mail. The House of Representatives felt and we feel, that that provision increased the welfare rolls and the number of ineligible people on them by at least 10 percent. So, the House provided that the declaration method would not be used, and we also provided that the declaration method would not be used.

These are provisions that the Roth amendment struck from the bill.

We also provided, for example, that a State would not be required to make persons eligible who are not either citizens of the United States or aliens lawfully admitted to this country. It was also provided that a State need not make eligible a family where the mother declines to cooperate with the State in identifying the paternity of the child. She can say she does not know who the father is, and there is nothing they can do about it, but if she simply refuses to tell you who the father is, it would seem to me and to our committee that she should not be entitled to support from welfare.

Those are provisions that were in the committee bill—I have yet to hear anyone argue that they should not have been there—that were stricken by the Roth amendment. Frankly, I must confess I was not aware that these provisions had been stricken, but I am constrained to agree that they should be restored. The Senator from New York felt that they should be restored, and I agreed that they should be.

I would be happy, if the Senator would like, to vote individually on any one of these proposals which were in the committee bill and were stricken by the Roth amendment. Is there any particular one the Senator would like to vote on?

Mr. HART. I have been asked to obtain some kind of explanation. Unless material was handed in before our vote, we lack—maybe there is material in the RECORD, with the filing of printed material, and we will find out in the morning what it was we did. That is a harsh thing to have to get up and say, but we are all in this boat, and it is not meant to embarrass anyone, but rather in an effort to avoid embarrassment that I ask, for example, if there was included in the unprinted amendments any change with respect to the entry of caseworkers into homes.

Mr. BUCKLEY. There is such a provision. I think it would be useful if the Senator from Michigan would pick up the committee report and turn to page 451, and he will see the various items set out, with a very concise description of the provisions, contained in that index.

Mr. HART. On page 451, there are page references to what, 20 or 25 items?

Mr. BUCKLEY. "Refusal to allow caseworkers in home," 471. If the Senator will turn to page 471, he will find the following:

> The committee bill would codify the Supreme Court's decision in the statute by permitting the States, at their option, to require as a condition of eligibility under the AFDC welfare program that a recipient allow a caseworker or other duly authorized person to visit the home. In doing so, the committee is not endorsing the so-called "midnight raids," which have been generally considered objectionable as a means of enforcing welfare eligibility rules. The bill specifically requires that such home visits must be made at a reasonable time and with reasonable advance notice.

Mr. LONG. That particular provision right in the law is a Supreme Court decision. That is a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States which reversed the lower courts.

Being happy to find a Supreme Court decision with which we could heartily agree, we have decided that it should be written into the law, lest someone should argue that it should be reversed by trying to persuade the court that we did not mean what we thought we meant, and what the court has agreed we meant.

These provisions, Mr. President, that were involved in the Buckley amendment, are all provisions that were in the bill. As a matter of fact, what the Senator from New York suggested when he showed it to me was actually—here is what the Senator showed me, photostated from the bill.

He said, "This is some language that was stricken from the bill, and I think it ought to be restored."

I am familiar with it, of course; we sat there and worked on this for weeks. So as far as this Senator was concerned, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) made no point to explain that this was being stricken when he offered his amendment.

At the time, I was aware there were some things being stricken that I thought should be restored. I did not suggest that the Senator from New York offer the amendment, but when he offered it I was satisfied that these were items that should be restored, and they were.

The Senator from Michigan probably did not know they were in the bill to begin with. He probably did not know, when the Roth amendment struck them, that they were stricken, and when they went back in, he probably did not know that they went back in. But the fact is that there were things in the Roth amendment that were so much more controversial and attracted so much debate and fire in other respects that these items simply were not debated.

I would be happy to vote on each one of them individually if the Senator wants to do so, but I am confident I know what the committee wants to do about it.

Mr. HART. Well, clearly a vote at this time would not serve the best interests of anyone. I am not in a position, since I am not a member of the committee, really to do more than rise here and at least in part make the point, though it is not new, that we have wrought in these last hours changes in legislation that affect intimately the lives of an awful lot of people, generally speaking the weakest and poorest among us, without knowing what we were doing. This is not a charge against anyone; but if anybody wants to disagree with this, that enormous legislative changes affecting an awful lot of people have been made and not very many people knew what we were doing, I would be glad to be corrected.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, while the Senator from Michigan may not understand this bill as well as he would like to, he has sitting beside him a man who understands it better than I do. He is Mr. Peterson, who is the assistant to Mr. RIBICOFF who is responsible for some of the provisions that appear in the bill. He is a very brilliant adviser. I am sure Mr. Peterson knew what these provisions were as reported. I assume he was following it closely enough to know that they were stricken when the Roth amendment struck them, even if I did not, and that they were restored when they were restored.

All I want to do, Mr. President, is what the Senate wants to do about this matter, and I will seek to move accordingly.

We have accepted some amendments here tonight that I do not fully understand; but when the Senate is trying to adjourn 1 week from now, if we do not pass this bill some time soon, we might as well forget about it. It should be resolved soon, and I hope the House will go to conference with us.

I recall the experience 2 years ago when we had a bill that cost half this amount, and the House declined to go to conference with us because they thought it would cost too much money, and they would rather start all over again.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LONG. I yield.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I was tempted to propose an amendment to the end of the bill—I do not know whether it is section 2000 or section 2001—to add a section to the bill sending greetings and sympathy to the Appropriations Committee of the Committee on Health, Education, and Welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendments and the third reading of the bill.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, there are many provisions of this legislation that I strongly support, particularly those affecting social security, old age assistance, and aid to the blind and disabled. Yet, I am forced to vote against passage of H.R. 1 in its final form because it perpetuates our present chaotic, ever-expanding, and inordinately expensive welfare system.

The Senate had a rare opportunity to accomplish a major restructuring of the welfare system. That we were not successful is in large measure due to the opposition of the President who incomprehensibly destroyed his own creation. Having had the foresight to propose far-reaching reform, he apparently lacked the political coverage to support it. He opposed the Ribicoff and Stevenson proposals even though they had the support of his Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and were substantially the same as his original proposal.

The President's opposition has condemned us to a continuation of the welfare mess for the indefinite future. I cannot vote for a program which rewards those who do not work and not those who do, which encourages fathers to desert their families; which is bankrupting the States of our Nation, including my own State of Illinois.

Despite my strong support for many provisions of this bill, I have no choice but to cast my vote against it.

Mr. FANNIN. Mr. President, the committee bill modified the unemployed father provision of aid to families with dependent children so that welfare benefits will not be available for strikers. This disqualification would not apply to any employee who is not participating or directly interested in the labor dispute and does not belong to a group of workers any of whom are participating in or financing or directly interested in the dispute. This disqualification, adapted from the unemployment insurance laws, is designed to prevent the government financing one side of a labor-management dispute.

Senator ROTH's amendment in rewriting title IV of the bill left out the striker disqualification.

The committee, in denying welfare for strikers was motivated in part by a 1972 decision by the U.S. District Court of Maryland—Francis against Davidson—holding that Maryland could not disqualify a family from aid to families with dependent children on the grounds that the fathers unemployment was due to a strike.

Members of the committee and I, personally, were more motivated by the fact that union use of welfare funds to support and prolong strikes has become a national disgrace.

To cite a few examples:

A 1970–71 strike by United Electrical Workers against Westinghouse at Lester, Pa.—During this 151-day strike a total of at least $2,500,000 in public funds, in the form of various welfare benefits, was paid to strikers and their families. The union paid nothing in strike benefit funds.

A recent study conducted by the Wharton School of Finance, University of Pennsylvania estimates that by 1973 the direct and indirect dollar cost of aid to strikers will exceed $365 million a year, or more than $1 million a day.

In the General Electric strike of 1969–70 which lasted more than 100 days and involved 150,000 workers, public welfare benefits to strikers totaled $25 million.

In the 71 day strike of the United Automobile workers against General Motors in 1970, an estimated $30 million was spent in public welfare benefits to the strikers. Of this sum, nearly $16 million was spent in Michigan alone. Since the unemployment insurance fund in New York is funded through a tax on employers, General Motors was forced to subsidize its own striking workers. That company estimates that about $5,250,000 in unemployment compensation was paid by New York to GM strikers.

The principal author of the Wharton study states:

"It seems obvious that if strikes become injurious only to one party (management) because the other party (labor) is being subsidized by the government, a strike will not serve its purpose of inducing a reasonable settlement."

Public policies which permit strikers to obtain welfare have serious financial impacts on Government and the taxpaying public and add additional burdens to our troubled welfare system.

Various case studies related in the Wharton study show that some strikers, thanks to welfare benfit payments, have received almost as much income while on strike as when working.

There is only one remedy. Congress must simply declare strikers ineligible for tax supported benefits. Of course, there will be a few hardship cases, but they will be well within the capacity of organized labor to care for.

The committee bill marked the first attempt by the Senate to begin to strike a balance in union rights and duties in financing strikes. The House of Representatives this year attempted to meet part of the problem by a rider to the agriculture appropriations bill which denied food stamps to strikers. This move failed.

The present situation developed because while the American taxpayer was asleep, the unions were working hard in the welfare area. Back in the World War II days, the unions set up a community service department and worked to get a union man on every community service board throughout the country. He is now the liaison man the union contacts before the strike starts. Consequently, today, when a strike occurs, welfare people are ready with food stamps, aid to dependent children, public welfare, and other benefits. The union makes sure the strikers know of all the various welfare benefits they can collect and procedures are streamlined to make it easy for them to obtain these benefits.

Mr. President, I believe that Congress should take action to stop union abuse of our welfare system. Organized labor is big enough and certainly rich enough today to take care of itself.

This amendment is intended to protect the millions of taxpaying Americans who object to the public financing of strikes. Quite often strikes are not in the public interest, and all too often strikes result in hardship for the general public, not to mention ultimate higher costs for goods and services. It makes no sense for the government to maintain a program which encourages strikes and long work stopages. Tax funds should not be used to finance strikes.

SEVERAL SENATORS. The yeas and nays, Mr. President?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, "Shall it pass?"

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I announce that the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Idaho (Mr. CHURCH), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MCGOVERN), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) is absent on official business.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from Louisiana (Mrs. EDWARDS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. HOLLINGS), the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

Also, the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. YOUNG) are necessarily absent.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. BOGGS), the Senator from Nebraska (Mr. CURTIS), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. ALLOTT) and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 5, as follows:

So the bill (H.R. 1) was passed.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the vote by which the bill was passed be reconsidered.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I have a series of motions to make. First I ask unanimous consent that the bill, H.R. 1, be printed with the amendments of the Senate numbered, and that in the engrossment of the amendments of the Senate to the bill the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make all necessary technical and clerical changes and corrections, including corrections in section, subsection, and so forth, designations, and cross references thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIAMS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill, H.R. 1, and ask for a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. LONG, Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. TALMADGE, Mr. BENNETT, and Mr. CURTIS conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, first, I want to extend my commendation to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG), chairman of the Finance Committee, for the superb job he has performed in handling this most difficult, complicated, and complex piece of legislation.

Of course, we always expect such management on the part of the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, but I think that his forebearance, his understanding, and his consideration of all concerned was outstanding over the past week during which this measure was being debated.

To the distinguished Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT) I want, likewise, to extend my commendation for his patience and for his understanding and cooperation. I think that both Members represented their committee with distinction. Both Members represented the Senate well.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the distinguished majority leader yield?

Mr. MANSFIELD. I am delighted to yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I would like very much to state that I am entirely in accord that this is one of the most difficult measures which could come before us. It has been handled with consideration for all Senators in a very thorough and careful manner. We are all very grateful to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) and the distinguished Senator from Utah (Mr. BENNETT).

WELFARE REFORM: THE END OF THE ROAD

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, there is nothing I can add to the eloquent editorial in this morning's Washington Post which I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WELFARE REFORM: THE END OF THE ROAD

Let us draw an analogy. It will only require a little rearranging of dates and sequences. We will suppose that it is 1964 and that the historic Civil Rights Act is before Congress, having reached one of those unique moments when, after a long and hardfought battle, it suddenly becomes possible to enact legislation that had no chance before. It is one of those rare moments, as well, that is not likely to occur again soon. President Lyndon B. Johnson favors the program and well understands the importance of the moment. But he is running against Senator Goldwater who opposes civil rights legislation, and even though he enjoys an out-of-sight lead over Mr. Goldwater, the President does not care to risk one single vote to the "white backlash" he has been hearing about. So he withdraws his support from the legislation he sponsored and quietly contrives to kill it for the sake of protecting the size of his prospective election victory—not the victory itself, mind you, but merely its magnitude.

That, of course, is not what happened in 1964. It is what happened in 1972. The President was Richard Nixon, not Lyndon Johnson, and the historic program dealt with economic, not racial equity. Thus on Wednesday, with Mr. Nixon's blessing and his help, the Senate laid to rest the innovative and imaginative and—yes—supremely important welfare reform legislation he had himself brought before the Congress three years ago. Welfare - reform—the phrase has become something of a mind-stopper in itself, a couple of hackneyed red-flag words that suggest to some a "dole" for the lazy and to others nothing more than a complicated and boring subject that has something to do with a lot of black mothers of small children who should either be getting more money or less . . . or something. Yet what we were dealing with here was a fundamental reordering of this nation's attitude toward its own poor, toward its own obligations as an industrialized society, toward its own commitment to simple equity. The question—Mr. Nixon raised it in the first place three years ago—was whether we would provide a low but decent income for those among us who cannot work and guarantee as well a decent income for those at the bottom of the economic ladder who can work—and do. Mr. Nixon, relishing the effects of Senator McGovern's initial and clumsy venture into this area and desirous of preserving his own advantage for the short term, decided that the answer was, no.

As has come to be administration custom, he never said so out loud. Rather he rejected the few bills that were within the ambit of his original proposal and had a chance of passage, bills that his own top aides had worked on and/or urged him to support. He clung to one instead that had been gutted of its original purpose by the passage of time and the inroads of congressional alteration, one that he knew was doomed because neither moderate Democrats nor Republicans of practically any variety could in conscience support it. When this signal was given from the White House, it became plain to everyone who has cared about and supported Mr. Nixon's program (as it once existed) that what he wanted was not a bill, but an issue. Who, after all, within the electorate is in favor of welfare recipients? How many divisions do the poor have?

The anti-honor roll should of course be extended. If you were to sift back over the past three years looking for those who had defaulted or otherwise contributed to the final debacle, you would have to mention those Democratic liberals in Congress who, at the beginning, did not pitch in or help at all—even though they provided the bill's principal support in the showdown in the Senate this week. You would give a much more important place to former Senator John Williams of Delaware who, as ranking Republican on the Senate Finance Committee, organized his fellow Republicans and led the fight against reform for the first year. You would save a special award for Democratic Chairman Russell Long of the Finance Committee, who managed to keep the measure locked up for roughly two of the three years it was before Congress. A proper historical accounting would have to take note as well of such disparate factors as the hostility of the National Welfare Rights Organization which declined to support any measure within the realm of fiscal practicality, and the incompetent testimony of former HEW Secretary Robert Finch who, in the spring of 1970, dealt the bill a terrible blow with his inability to explain or defend it on the Hill. His successor, Mr. Richardson both understood the legislation better and fought for it with more conviction. As in other matters of great social moment, he lost. One only hopes to be spared, this time around, the Secretary's eloquent rationalization of what happened and how it's probably all for the best.

But when you have finished accounting for the principal obstacles, human and institutional, that got in the way of genuine welfare reform, you are left with a fairly simple set of facts: That the courage and commitment of some men and women of both parties and in and out of government brought that reform to the point where it could easily have been enacted, that the chance will not soon come again, that the President by refusing to support a passable version of his bill in the Senate killed reform, and that he did so for the sake of a marginal political benefit he did not even need. Mr. Nixon likes "firsts." We will ungrudingly offer him one: Never has anyone in high political office sold out so much for so little.

VOTE ON H.R. 1

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, at 1 o'clock this morning, after much soul searching, I voted against the final passage of H.R. 1.

The Finance Committee has done a world of work. It has been working on the bill for almost a year in endless meetings, and I think there are a lot of good features in the bill. The title IV portion dealing with welfare reform is an exception, however.

I think the committee was forced to come out with the welfare reform section too quickly because we were getting close to the end of the session. Then, too, they had a fight within the committee on different proposals—the President's family assistance plan, Senator RIBICOFF's program which gave more guaranteed income than the President's plan, and committee chairman Senator LONG's workfare proposal.

I have been against the guaranteed income idea because I felt it would kill incentive for people to work whether it was the Nixon or the Ribicoff plan. The workfare concept, I think, would be much better. But the Finance Committee just was not able to work out provisions that fit together, so what the committee proposed to the Senate just would not stand up to scrutiny. As a result, nothing could get a majority of support, and then the Senate moved to what is supposed to be a study program or test plan to try out the Nixon, the Ribicoff and the Long ideas. However, in the pilot approach they put many new changes that were not going to be just tests but would become permanent fixtures in law. The Senate never really discussed most of these provisions: even last night we adopted amendments on which there had not been discussion on the Senate floor and consequently were not understood by most of the Senators.

All this was objectionable to me.

But I guess the major reason I was compelled to vote against the bill was what I learned during my campaign in 1970. As I campaigned, I found more and more that the guy who really was not represented was the wage earner of this country, the man making $3,000 to $12,000 a year. He was and is paying a disproportionate share of taxes, especially payroll taxes, and the bill passed by the Senate just makes that situation so much worse. Rather than addressing itself to correcting that problem, this bill goes the other way. Figures I got just yesterday show that a person earning $12,000 a year is going to have a 54-percent increase in payroll taxes by 1974. In other words, he or she will be paying $21 per month more than now.

This is a terribly regressive tax. And the guy who is shouldering the load in this country does not have the depreciation allowances or the depletion allowances or the charitable foundation or a deferred income plan. All he has is the burden.

Now, there are many good services in this bill, additional benefits that are needed: but I think those benefits should be paid out of general revenue because they come in the category of welfare, not social security. The Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) had two amendments yesterday which would have provided necessary funds for increased benefits—one would have taken away the assets depreciation range; the other would have taxed people who are paying no tax at all—but they were rejected.

So, until we reach the point where we are willing to come to grips with the inequity built into social security taxing, we should not pile on an additional burden.

I talked and talked about this problem in 1970. I introduced my own social security-welfare reform plan to achieve this. I have introduced amendments and I have supported other amendments to this end, but I had to face the fact, as H.R. 1 came to a final vote, that its passage meant that the guy paying all these taxes would continue to get it in the neck. We are going in the wrong direction, and I had to vote "no."

THE ROTH SOCIAL SECURITY SURVIVOR BENEFIT AMENDMENT

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, last evening during considration of H.R. 1, the junior Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) proposed an excellent amendment concerning social security survivors' benefits. It was designed to help thousands of widows in this country who are denied the opportunity to claim their children as dependents on their income tax returns because the social security survivors' benefits these children receive provide more than half of their support. Mr. ROTH's amendment correctly provided that a child's social security benefits will not be taken into account in determining whether the child receives more than half his support from the taxpayer claiming him as a dependent.

The present system—which Mr. ROTH's amendment changes—places a particular hardship on lower- and middle-income families. If a widow has a high income she has little difficulty proving that the survivors' benefits constitute less than half the support of her children, and she can count them as dependents. But if her income is not high, she may be denied the chance to claim her children as dependents. This is one of the most discriminatory provisions in our tax code, and must be changed.

When the rollcall vote was taken on the Roth amendment last evening and I voted in favor of the motion, I was under the enormous impression that the motion was on the merits of the issue. Shortly later I discovered that the motion was actually a motion to table the Roth amendment, and that I should have voted "no."

I support the Roth amendment and voted for it on final passage. It is long overdue. I am delighted that the motion to table was defeated, and the amendment was adopted. I believe this explanation will clarify any confusion about my position on this issue which might arise from the rollcall vote last evening.

EXPLANATION OF BUCKLEY AMENDMENT TO H.R. 1

Mr. BUCKLEY. Mr. President, I understand that there has been some concern expressed last night and in today's press as to what was contained in my amendment yesterday to H.R. 1. The distinguished chairman of the Finance Committee confirmed last night that my amendment merely restored certain provisions that were originally a part of the legislation reported by the Finance Committee, and, further, made it clear in his discussion with the distinguished Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) that he was willing to follow the will of the Senate on each of the several items contained in my amendment and that he would have been happy to vote on each of them individually.

The text of the amendment as adopted appears in today's RECORD. The items contained therein are nothing more than several valuable provisions which were approved overwhelmingly by the Finance Committee and which have been a matter of public record for some time. They were deleted by virtue of the substitution of the Roth amendment for title IV of the committee bill

It was only as a result of the careful examination of the exact provisions of the Roth amendment by two members of my staff that I became aware of the fact that these important reform provisions had somehow been eliminated from the bill reported out by the Finance Committee even though, quite frankly, I was a cosponsor of that amendment. On reviewing the record of the debate accompanying the Roth amendment, I found that it was nowhere mentioned that a side effect of a proposal to provide for experimentation in testing the principle competing proposal for welfare reform that these other provisions would be stricken.

It was therefore my purpose in offering my amendment to remedy what I had concluded to be an oversight; and after having spoken to my colleagues about its provisions and after hearing the debate last night, it was clear to me that most Members of the Senate then present had no knowledge of the fact that the provisions which I was restoring had in fact been deleted. In other words, it was not my intention to—nor did I—introduce new material. Rather, its effect was to correct what seemed to me to be a legislative oversight.

I can deeply appreciate the concern of the Senator from Michigan (Mr. HART) and I am also sure that as he reviews the RECORD he will appreciate that there was no indulgence in legislative sleight of hand. I will say, quite frankly, that I share his general concern when totally novel proposals are introduced in the form of amendments in the late hours when vitally important legislation is being considered—amendments which the members of the committee have not had an opportunity to consider or evaluate. I respectfully suggest that my amendment does not fit such a category. I further suggest that the distinguished chairman of the committee was doing no more, when he accepted my amendment, than accept the opportunity to restore the bill to that form which most of the Members present who had studied the original proposal assumed was in all their State programs, it might as well take them over totally and pay for them as well. But Governor Reagan of California and later Governor Rockefeller of New York doggedly continued to search for an effective approach to the welfare crisis. They both found that, given the original intent of Congress, and with a reasonable amount of flexibility in developing State programs, the States could mount an effective attack against the welfare crisis. By their efforts they have demonstrated that it is possible for the States to institute substantive and salutary welfare reforms which would correct or prevent abuses, result in fiscal savings, and make available additional benefits to those who are truly and legitimately in need.

The bill as finally adopted provides that flexibility and preserves the reforms so carefully recommended by the Finance Committee.

ACTION OF SENATE ON CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF SOCIAL SECURITY ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1972

Mr. MONDALE. Mr. President, before I begin my remarks, I want to comment on one action we took last night as part of the welfare reform bill which is now in conference—an action about which I feel very deeply.

I think that perhaps the most effective program in the whole OEO effort has been the legal services program. It is modestly funded. I think it is something less than $65 million a year. And yet that program has resulted in attracting some of the most gifted, young, seasoned lawyers in the country. And they have brought a whole host of long-overdue lawsuits dealing with legal and constitutional rights—suits that would have been brought years ago had commercial business interests been the ones adversely affected. Before the legal services program was established in 1965, those lawsuits were not brought, simply because the resources did not exist.

We talk about a health crisis, a housing crisis, a social security crisis, a transportation crisis, and many other crises in American society. But there is an underlying legal crisis which exists because the cost of high quality legal representation is beyond the reach of people of moderate means, and is totally beyond reality for people below or near the poverty level. The result is that public bodies, corporate interests and others can disregard the legitimate constitutional and legal rights of poor people almost with impunity, sometimes cruelly.

I recall hearings held a year or two ago in a county with a high migrant population, where a lawyer testified that the only way he could keep the unemployed migrants of that county from starving was to be with them when they applied for food stamps. If he was not with them, they would not get the stamps. If he did not threaten to sue, the authorities would not grant what the law requires to these pathetic people.

Time and time again this remarkable program has in a simple way brought law and order to poor people and poor communities throughout the country. And because it has been successful, powerful interests now want to throw it off.

I have never heard anyone suggest that the right of corporations to sue for their own interests and the right of wealthy people to sue for their own interests, should be restricted in any way—and I do not think they should be. But those lawsuits by and large are publicly supported, because the costs are deducted from income taxes.

I have never heard anyone say that any public body, such as a school board, should be restricted from asserting its rights. However, once again it is the public taxpayers who pay for the cost of those lawsuits.

Of course, the people in America who have unasserted legal rights are the poor. And even with the legal services they have very few rights to assert.

Last night in an action which I thought was unbelievable, the Senate passed a bill which would prohibit legal services attorneys from bringing a suit under the Social Security Act, which would mean they could not participate in any of the welfare fields at all. No matter how illegal, no matter how outrageous the violation, they cannot sue on behalf of poor people.

Mr. President, I would like to have some who voted for that provision go out and tell those poor people about our deep commitment here to law and order and to the Constitution—after we said, in effect, that the courthouse door is slammed shut, bolted, and nailed down as far as their rights are concerned. They better find a rich friend.

I deeply regret that action taken last night, and since it is in conference I hope the conferees will reject it and seek to keep this remarkable program alive. If the provision is kept I think the legal services program is, for all practical purposes, dead. I do not think they are going to be able to get gifted young lawyers into a program that cannot effectively serve the poor, which is why the American Bar Association sent a powerful telegram to the Senate urging that we reject this provision on the ground that it violates, in their opinion, the Canon of Ethics and the whole concept underlying justice in America.

I hope in conference that highly unwise and I think unfair provision will be dropped.

H.R. 1—RECONSIDERATION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the third reading and passage of H.R. 1 be reconsidered and that the Stevens amendment, which was offered for the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), and which was inadvertently stricken from the bill be readopted and that, as thus amended, the bill be read a third time and passed, and that the vote be considered as having been reconsidered and laid on the table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. HART. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not—but I am glad that the very able Senator from Alabama (Mr. ALLEN) is still in the Chamber because I should like to remind him again of the hazards we are in when we proceed before we fully understand what we are doing.

I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ALLEN). Without objection, it is so ordered.
